"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston symphony orchestra with Dr Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert in Boston yesterday. In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the program, Maj Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience that Dr Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr Muck would be a disaster.

DR KARL MUCK

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra

The action of Dr Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience yesterday, Maj Higginson said that Dr Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the program. Dr Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage and when "The Star Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony hall officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

REPUBLICAN

ss: Springfield, M

1 - 191

The city of Providence was ill-served by the committee of women, which insisted that Dr Muck add "The Star Spangled Banner" to the Providence program of the Boston symphony orchestra on Tuesday night. The formal character of the orchestra's programs is never modified, and when the Providence patriots declared that the orchestra must play the national anthem they were merely trying to bait the orchestra's leader, who is a German. They have succeeded, however, in arousing not him, but Maj Higginson, the orchestra's founder and patron and a stanch supporter of his country in the present war, who asserts that if public demonstrations of this kind continue the orchestra may be disbanded. This warning will probably bring light-headed people to their senses.

m UNION

ress: Springfield, Mas

NOV 5 - 19

tant."

ASKS SYMPATHY FOR ORCHESTRA

Maj. Higginson Says Dr. Muck Never Refused to Play National Anthem.

BOSTON, Nov. 4—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star Spangled Banner," from their programs, was made tonight by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Maj. Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made.

Maj. Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Maj. Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Maj. Higginson said tonight:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

From REPUBLICAN

Address: Springfi

Date 5 - 19

DOING AND SHOUTING

To the Editor of The Republican:

Apropos this unseemly controversy over Dr Muck and the playing of what some people call "the national anthem," may I suggest if those wonderfully "loyal" citizens who would not permit a conceit to go on without this tune being played had been as loyal and as enthusiastic in their support of the Liberty loan, and had done as much to promote it, New England would not have had to confess that she did not do her share in subscribing. More time and attention to "doing" things patriotic, and less time in shouting and professing patriotism, would be better for the country if not for the "patriots."

Now let us all sing good old "America."

WINFIELD S. NEVINS

Salem, November 3, 1917

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

NOV 8 1917

KREISLER NOW ASSAILED.

Austrian Violinist, Soon to Play Here, Shares Criticism With Dr. Muck.

When the trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences meet this afternoon to act in the controversy over the Boston Symphony Orchestra, another patriotic musical question may be considered. Capt. Fritz Kreisler, of the Austrian army, now on furlough in this country as the result of a bullet wound in the leg, is scheduled to play in the Academy of Music on November 19, Monday evening, and the criticism directed against Dr. Muck is beginning to strike the noted violinist.

Pittsburgh has barred Kreisler from playing tomorrow and Saturday. The Director of Public Safety directed the Chief of Police to revoke any license issued for the recitals, because of protests that the artist is an enemy alien and is giving the receipts of his recitals to the Austrian cause. The Pittsburgh agent of Charles Ellis, the concert manager, who directs the Kreisler tours, immediately cancelled the engagement. Reports from Morgantown, West Va., and New Castle, Pa., indicate that similar action may be taken there.

Fritz Kreisler is concededly the greatest violinist now on tour in America and has always played to capacity at the Academy of Music. He has not been heard in Brooklyn since war with Germany was declared. He is extremely popular personally and his book describing his experiences in the first year of the war sold well in this city. Friends argued today that the Kreisler case is not similar to that of Dr. Muck as the violinist is not a citizen of a country at war with the United States and did not commit any act similar to Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which aroused public sentiment.

The Muck incident may be closed by the playing of the national anthem by the Boston Orchestra at the concert tomorrow night. The opera house in the Academy is virtually sold out for the entire series of concerts, which, next to the metropolitan opera season, which begins on Tuesday, is considered the musical event of the year. The trustees of the Brooklyn Institute will issue a statement on the controversy tomorrow.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

ss: New York City

DR. MUCK LEADS U. S. ANTHEM HERE

German Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Disregards Previous Attitude at Carnegie Hall.

IS GIVEN HEARTY WELCOME

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts and others in the audience at Carnegie Hall last night heard "The Star Spangled Banner" waved from the staccatto and electric baton of Dr. Karl Muck, whose refusal to conduct the national anthem started an anti-Teuton musical sentiment which was the forerunner of the announcement of a Germanless season at the Metropolitan Opera House.

If there were any hard feelings against Dr. Muck last night they were well under cover. Several subscribers were heard to say that his refusal had been "tactless" and the agitation "unnecessary." But New York's most conservative musical audience gave the conductor a hearty welcome when he stepped on the platform. In fact, he got more applause than he was willing to acknowledge.

The audience of the Boston Symphony concerts is almost entirely sold out by subscription. There were few tickets turned over to the agencies. While there was a long line waiting for standing room the crowd was not greater than on previous seasons. If there were a few extra policemen outside there were also several army officers as listeners in the audience.

The anthem which Dr. Muck branded as "inartistic" was specially orchestrated for the occasion. The string instruments were given elaborate embroidery, not unlike that which quivers over the Pilgrims' Chorus in "Tannhauser."

As for the rest of the program, which was conducted in Dr. Muck's usual scholarly manner, it included the Brahms Fourth Symphony and three compositions by three generations of music makers—Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner.

Dr. Muck is one of the few conductors whose interpretation of Brahms is intellectually clear, emotionally strong and entirely free from any muddy quality. The "Parsifal" prelude was played with remarkable nobility of feeling.

SAVE THE ORCHESTRA, NOT MUCK.

The Boston Symphony concert at Baltimore tomorrow night has been forbidden by the police on the ground that it would incite a public riot. "The Star-Spangled Banner" was written in Baltimore and that town may be perhaps a little quicker to resent disrespect to it than the rest of the country, but now that it has taken the lead the danger of trouble at any concert at which Dr. Muck appears is too grave to be disregarded. The only safety lies in the acceptance of his resignation and the announcement that his leadership is merely provisional until another conductor can be found. Under such circumstances his audiences might say a polite if somewhat frigid goodby to him.

The pity of all this is that the thing which is in danger is the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra, to the upbuilding of which Major Higginson has given twenty-five of the best years of his life and nobody knows how much of his fortune. He has created the best orchestra in the world and now for a moment's bad judgment by mistaken loyalty to an alien enemy who has no place in our musical life in war time, he seems likely to let his life work be pulled down. The Boston Symphony Orchestra should be preserved for a happier day of peace. But patriotism is a stronger motive than love of music and the needs of war time dominate any demands of art whatsoever. There are some who will question whether concerts in war time are not a luxury which should be sacrificed for Liberty Loan or Red Cross subscriptions. Of course, the majority of the subscribers to the Boston Symphony have done what they consider their duty by both those war objects, but that does not alter the fact that music is a luxury which might be suspended in war time as readily as public banquets and social receptions are being suspended.

The way to prevent a demand for the curtailing of such luxuries is to use our concerts to stir our national and patriotic spirit; that they shall "keep the home fires burning" while our sons are giving their lives on the battlefield. An instinctive sense of that need has led the New York orchestras to emphasize the playing of our National Anthem and it has led to a readjustment of the program at the Metropolitan Opera House. It will soon lead to a much greater use of patriotic music, regardless of the question of its artistic value. If Major Higginson will meet that popular demand half or a quarter way, if he will retire his offensive Prussian from sight as soon as practicable, the great orchestra which he has created may be preserved for a happier day for music and the arts. In five minutes you can break a statue with a hammer which it took five years to create. The hammer is raised and it needs tact and skill to lower the arms which hold it.

EVENING SUN

s: New York City

NOV 1917

NOT LIKE DR. MUCK.

Kreisler Not Objectionable, Says Former Maryland Governor.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 9.—Former Governor Edwin Warfield, who organized the movement which prevented Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, will not undertake any effort to prevent Fritz Kreisler from playing here. Kreisler is scheduled to play in Baltimore on November 22.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem, or their flag. On the contrary, he has played at all Red Cross conferences. But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country, I have no doubt, to try to help Germany win the war by his association with aliens here."

Gov. Warfield expressed the conviction that Dr. Muck's unhampered freedom in this land is a menace to the safety of the nation, and he believes Muck's freedom should be curtailed promptly and effectively.

"Not for one minute do I doubt," said the former Governor, "that Muck is using his position to his own ends and

TELEGRAM

New York City.

NOV 9 1917

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

Dr. Karl Muck Plays "The Star Spangled Banner."

THE national anthem will be played as the opening number of the programme." That was the announcement which greeted the subscribers as they took their seats in Carnegie Hall last night for the first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Many were already aware that the "Star Spangled Banner" would be played. In fact a number of patriotic subscribers like Mrs. Charles Healey Ditson had telephoned during the day threatening to have their seats vacant as a protest.

When Dr. Muck, severe as usual, stepped to the conductor's desk, he received his customary welcome. At his signal the entire orchestra rose, save the 'cellists, who are obliged by the nature of their instruments to remain seated while they perform.

And thus, with orchestra and audience alike standing, "The Star Spangled Banner" was played with surprising gusto, and a delighted audience voiced its approval in prolonged applause.

For once the regular programme had taken second place in the interest of the audience. The national anthem loomed large in the interest of the most musically expert audience that gathers in this city.

It is a curious fact that the majority of the players in this famous orchestra are men of middle age. They have probably been in this country many years.

And yet in the artists' withdrawing room in Carnegie Hall the language in common use by these players is not English, but German.

Now and then a French phrase or an Italian one greeted the ear last night, but only rarely.

Meanwhile the guttural speech of our enemy grated harshly on the listener.

Suppose an American musician in Berlin were to act as these men did last night.

He would be interned in a concentration camp and fed on bread made of sand and straw—an actual experience of an English speaking composer in Berlin.

STANDARD UNION

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

"STAR SPANGLED BANNER" IS LAST ON MUCK'S LIST

Programmes for to-morrow's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn have been printed. They contain an insert, which reads:

"The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at the close of the concert."

Karl Muck will conduct.

Refusal of the Pittsburg authorities to grant Frizt Kreisler, a captain in the Austrian army, a license to play a violin recital there aroused considerable interest in Brooklyn musical circles to-day as to how the Austrian violinist will be received here. He is scheduled to play at the Academy on Nov. 19. The directors of the Brooklyn Institute have taken no action and know of no complaints.

om EAGLE

ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date.....

Baltimore Bars Orchestra

Baltimore, November 6—The Board of Police Commissioners here has barred the Boston Symphony Orchestra from giving its scheduled concert in this city on Wednesday night. The board sent a letter yesterday to Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric, prohibiting the concert. The letter was sent after the board had received notification from the Grand Jury that the latter body thought it "unwise, if not physically dangerous," for the orchestra to give the concert.

Mr. Kinsey is trying to arrange with the orchestra to appear without Dr. Muck as leader, but it is thought that the feeling in Baltimore is so strong against this musical organization that the police will bar it under any circumstances.

EVENING SUN

ss: New York City

NOV 9 1917

Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by Dr. Karl Muck, gave its first concert of the season here last night and was received by an enthusiastic audience, which filled Carnegie Hall to capacity, including a fringe of standees, all that could be admitted. After a perfunctory rendering of "The Star Spangled Banner," during which the orchestra and audience stood, the musicians got down to business and gave a superb exhibition of orchestral efficiency, if such a word may be used in this connection.

Dr. Muck seemed well pleased with his reception. Looking very trim and well groomed he was compelled to bow many times to the applause which seemed to be spontaneous and without belligerent rancor.

Speaking from an absolutely American standpoint it is probable that there will not be a more enjoyable orchestral concert heard here this season. Widespread waves of discord may beat around this organization, in the offing, including incidental resignations by its leader, but when it starts to play, all is harmony to say the least, and as many a noted critic has remarked: "You have to hand it to 'em."

Beginning with that beautiful symphony in E minor, of Brahms, the Boston players continued their successful bombardment with the overture to "King Lear" of Berlioz; Liszt's "Prometheus," a symphonic poem, and Wagner's prelude to "Parsifal." It can be seen by the "bill of fare" that not much was left to the Allies, but, on the other hand, it may be truthfully said that a camp of the most roistering rookies would have been reduced to silence and sincere regard by this rendition of Germanic masters. In fact the great audience seemed to hold Berlioz in much less esteem than it did Brahms.

Dr. Muck, who seems to be more diplomatic than various reports would lead us to believe, kept his master stroke until the last number. The "Parsifal" prelude, rendered as it was by this orchestra, would have driven through any barbed wire entanglements of prejudice no matter how strong they may have been ranged against it.

This was harmonic loveliness and strength, served in such a manner as to suit the most exacting searcher for real music. Possibly it disappointed a few of the more belligerent Wagnerites not familiar with its conciliatory discourse. Few salvos from the big guns (in fact, the brass experts are more or less discarded) and few sky ripping screams permeate this great prelude. It holds continuous and searching melodies that grip all hearers.

The length of last night's programme was advertised as one hour and fifty minutes, and it consumed just that time, according to the best available stop watches. Geraldine Farrar arrived just too late to hear "The Star Spangled Banner."

m HERALD
ress: New York City

NOV 9 -

DR. MUCK PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM TO TENSE AUDIENCE

Boston Orchestra, After Nationwide Criticism, Gives Opening Concert Here.

HIS MUSICIANS WERE APPREHENSIVE

Some Seats Left Vacant in Protest Against German Leading "Star Spangled Banner."

After a week and a half of nation wide criticism the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its German conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, came to New York yesterday and opened its annual series of local concerts in Carnegie Hall. All speculation as to whether the national anthem would be omitted as it was last week in Providence and at the opening concert of the orchestrat in Boston, was stopped by an announcement in the programme that "the national anthem would be played as the opening number of the programme."

Nevertheless hundreds in the audience had a presentiment that something unusual would happen. Many were restless in their seats until Dr. Muck, with expressionles face, walked onto the stage. Before he could motion to his men to rise and play "The Star Spangled Banner" he was greeted with applause.

The hall was packed to the doors, as in past seasons, though here and there were pairs of vacant seats, left so in some cases at least, as a protest against the German conductor. But the thousands who did go evidently soon forgot everything but the music.

After the national anthem, during which Dr. Muck gave not the slightest indication of pleasure or displeasure at being ordered to conduct it, everything progressed as in the past. Apparently the severe criticism that the orchestra met was forgotten. The whole body of musicians concentrated their minds on the music and any differences were temporarily put out of consideration.

Musicians Were Apprehensive.

During the intermission one of the members of the orchestra admitted that most of his associates were afraid that something would happen at the concert.

"Some one suggested our wearing bomb proof helmets," he said, "but we decided that that would not be in keeping with the dignity of the orchestra. But when nothing happened, we forgot our fear and played our music in all seriousness."

Asked if Dr. Muck, who sent in his resignation to Henry L. Hissinson last week after conducting the "Star Spangled Banner" in answer to the demands of the Mayor of Boston, who said the license of Symphony Hall would be cancelled if he did not, expected to remain for the season, he said:—

"I think he does. Mr. Hissinson, I understand, will not accept the resignation unless something serious happens. In Baltimore they have cancelled our series of concerts, but the attitude of the public in Philadelphia, in Washington and in New York to-night has been such that we do not anticipate any further trouble. Dr. Muck has said nothing for or against the national anthem or anything else, so far as I have been able to find out. He has always been a silent man."

Both French and German Music.

As for the programme, it contained German, French, American and Hungarian music. There is no need to commend upon the playing of Brahms' fourth symphony. No orchestra in America can ploy it so well. Somehow or other all of the numbers presented were of a sad turn. The symphony was inspired by the reading of the tragedies of Sophocles, and it is thought to picture the tragedies of human life. This was followed by Berloiz's overture to Shakespeare's tragedy "King Lear." The music of the mad king was followed by Liszt's "Prometheus" picturing vultures trying to eat out the heart of the god who gave fire to mortals, and then came the saddest of all the numbers, that "Good Friday" music from Wagner's "Parsifal." But everything, French as well as German music, was played beautifully.

Notes of the Stage

NEW YORKER HERALD
ss: New York City.
NOV 6 - 191

Fürchten Radau wegen Mucks Auftreten.

Baltimore, Md., 5. Nov. Die Grand Jury hat heute die Polizei-Kommission darauf aufmerksam gemacht, daß es möglicherweise zu Ruhestörungen kommen werde, wenn Dr. Muck mit dem Bostoner Symphonie Orchester am Mittwoch hierherkomme. Es sei daher anzuraten, das Auftreten zu verbieten.

Die Polizei hat dann das Konzert verboten.

Fm EVENING MAIL
dress: New York City

NOV 8

The following orchestral conductors of New York had the good taste to make no public comment on a recent breach of etiquette by Dr. Karl Muck, their colleague and competitor: Josef Stransky, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Modest Altschuler, Arnold Volpe, Hugo Riesenfeld, Adriano Ariani, Roberto Moranzoni, Gennaro Papi, Pierre Monteux, Artur Bodanzky, Oscar Spirescu and Max Jacobs.

IBUNE
New York City
NOV 9 1917

Music

Dr. Karl Muck Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the season here at Carnegie Hall last night.

The orchestra's programme consisted of the Brahms Fourth Symphony, which Dr. Muck led with fine effect, the band never sounding more resonant or perfectly controlled. Then came the little heard Berlioz "King Lear" overture and the Liszt "Prometheus," the programme closing with the Prelude to "Parsifal."

It was not exactly an exhilarating programme, but to exhilaration, except that given by perfection of execution, Dr. Muck has never been partial.

The difference of treatment accorded enemy musicians in Germany and America was evidenced at the song recital in Aeolian Hall, given by the former Wilfrid Douthit, who, though an Englishman, prefers now to be known as Louis Graveure, a Belgian. Mr. Graveure devoted his recital to the compositions of Bryceson Treharne. Mr. Treharne is a young Australian composer whom the Germans interned at Ruhleben, feeding him on bread made partly of straw to give it the required bulk, and of sand to give it the required weight provided by international law. After eighteen months of torture his health gave way, and he was exchanged. It is certain that no matter what the fortunes of war may be, Dr. Muck, for instance, will never be submitted to such an experience.

Mr. Treharne's talent as evidenced by his songs yesterday is a genuine one, though scarcely great enough to call for a whole afternoon. Mr. Graveure sang some of them well and some of them not so well. His voice is always a delight, but certain exaggerations of manner are creeping into his work, exaggerations which will do his art no good. He was warmly applauded by a large audience.

Dr. Karl Muck Plays Nation's Anthem Here

Conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra as It Renders "The Star-Spangled Banner"

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who gained much criticism recently by refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at any of his organization's concerts, conducted the national anthem at the opening of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night.

Contrary to the expectations of many, there was no disorder whatever. When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage the audience, which filled the house, with the exception of a few boxes, applauded mildly.

Dr. Muck signalled for the musicians to rise, and at the first note the house followed. At the conclusion of the anthem the applause was warmer and heartier.

New York seemed quite ready to forget the leader's first refusal to conduct the national anthem—more ready than Baltimore, which has refused to allow the orchestra to play there this year.

om TELEGRAM
ldress: New York City.
ate NOV 3 - 1917

DR. MUCK IS OUT.

We do not know how much Mayor Curley's threat to revoke the license of Symphony Hall if the national anthem was ignored had to do with the result, but Dr. Carl Muck led the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston yesterday afternoon and has resigned.

This is as it should be, although Major Higginson's quoted statement that Muck never had refused to play the national anthem requires explanation.

That Major Higginson would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster does not concern the majority of citizens of the United States.

There are a number of luxuries we are about to dispense with, among them German opera.

The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House has decided unanimously to bar German operas and German singers this season.

This is a good beginning. It will save irritating a multitude of loyal citizens. It will prevent enriching an enemy nation through the medium of alien artists whose regard is not for us but for the purses we carry. It will tend to relieve us of the German charge of being "idiotic have s that s who orning list as

SHUT THEM UP.

According to an authority on operatic matters, the decision of the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House to give no German performances this year is likely to cripple the operatic season.

No statement could be more absurd. Eliminating all the German works, there remains a repertory of more than thirty grand operas in Italian, French and English, to say nothing of ten new works to be produced and a new ballet. That gives every indication of an unusually brilliant season.

The elimination of the German singers will not affect the strength of the operatic forces. Less than a dozen singers will be dismissed and none of these is a star of the first magnitude.

The great singers remain, and no operatic season can be dull which gives its subscribers opportunities to hear artists like Mr. Enrico Caruso and Mr. John McCormack, and promises new singers besides.

And if the roster of the company needs replenishing there are a number of American singers in this country who were popular in Germany until they were driven home by the war. They can be engaged to replace those heavy German singers, whose gutterals and garglings should not be permitted beyond the confines of concentration camps, with Dr. Karl Muck as their chief auditor.

m
dress: New York City.
e - 1917

Das „Sternenbanner".

Orchester-Dirigent Muck eröffnet Programm mit nationalem Liede.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 7, 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6, 1917.

Washington, 6. Nov. Dr. Carl Muck, Leiter des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, dirigierte heute seine Musiker in dem Spielen von „Das sternenbesetzte Banner". Mehr, er dirigierte sie zweimal, einmal heute nachmittag und einmal heute abend, in der Eröffnung des Programms mit der nationalen Hymne bei jeder Vorführung. Es gab keine widerwillige Demonstration gegen ihn; das Auditorium applaudierte sein Orchester enthusiastisch.

WORLD
ss: New York City

NOV 9 1917

MUCK LED 'BANNER' BUT DID IT BADLY

And His Men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Played It Even Worse in Carnegie Hall.

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star-Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

Dr. Muck stood with his back to the audience a third of a minute while the handclapping went on. As he showed no signs of unbending, and as the majority of the 2,500 persons in Carnegie Hall seemed in a good-natured mood, the German conductor—who at first had refused to lead "The Star Spangled Banner" and then did so after tendering his resignation—was allowed to begin the evening's programme.

Dr. Muck led the national anthem badly and the orchestra played even worse, a fact not due to their being asked to stand. Third rate orchestras do much better.

But there was no outward show of antagonism by any part of last evening's audience toward the man who has aroused so much hostile feeling and whose professional presence in some cities will not be tolerated.

To speak truthfully, Dr. Muck was most warmly received by at least one-fourth of the Carnegie Hall audience. Perhaps 200 of the orchestra seat smart folk applauded the Prussian musician the moment he came in sight. Three-quarters of a minute later Dr. Muck began his concert.

At its end the auditors rose quickly and departed. There was scarcely so much as a perfunctory hand-clap, which was a bit odd in view of the previous early efforts of a certain group in one part of the auditorium.

The programme was another Muck affair, needlessly dry, lacking in contrast until the end almost had been reached. Just why he should have chosen two such works as the Berlioz "King Lear" overture and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Prometheus," to follow Brahms's Fourth Symphony is a question Dr. Muck can best answer. The "Parsifal" prelude, which closed the programme, was the one work which lifted the hearer from musical heaviness.

The orchestra played this prelude with genuine tonal beauty and served well in other compositions, even if its performance was by no means flawless. Dr. Muck conducted, as he always does, in academic fashion.

No Need of Sharp Action by Brooklyn Institute's Board

As the Boston Orchestra has agreed to play the national anthem wherever and whenever requested, there was little action for the Directors of the Brooklyn Institute to take at their meeting yesterday with respect to permitting the orchestra to give its regular concerts at the Brooklyn Academy, beginning to-day.

President Healy said a committee of thre had been appointed to wait upon Maj. Higginson merely to discuss the situation if need arose. At Carnegie Hall last night a representative of the Boston organization said the concerts would be given in Brooklyn.

The programmes for to-day contain a slip saying "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at the close of the concert.

m HERALD
dress: New York City
NOV 9 -

DR. MUCK PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM TO TENSE AUDIENCE

Boston Orchestra, After Nationwide Criticism, Gives Opening Concert Here.

HIS MUSICIANS WERE APPREHENSIVE

Some Seats Left Vacant in Protest Against German Leading "Star Spangled Banner."

After a week and a half of nation wide criticism the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its German conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, came to New York yesterday and opened its annual series of local concerts in Carnegie Hall. All speculation as to whether the national anthem would be omitted as it was last week in Providence and at the opening concert of the orchestrat in Boston, was stopped by an announcement in the programme that "the national anthem would be played as the opening number of the programme."

Nevertheless hundreds in the audien had a presentiment that something u usual would happen. Many were res less in their seats until Dr. Muck, wi expressionles face, walked onto t stage. Before he could motion to h men to rise and play "The Star Spangl Banner" he was greeted with applaus

The hall was packed to the doors, as past seasons, though here and there we pairs of vacant seats, left so in some cas at least, as a protest against the Germ conductor. But the thousands who did evidently soon forgot everything but t music.

After the national anthem, during which Dr. Muck gave not the slightest indication of pleasure or displeasure at being ordered to conduct it, everything progressed as in the past. Apparently the severe criticism that the orchestra met was forgotten. The whole body of musicians concentrated their minds on the music and any differences were temporarily put out of consideration.

Musicians Were Apprehensive.

During the intermission one of the members of the orchestra admitted that most of his associates were afraid that something would happen at the concert.

"Some one suggested our wearing bomb proof helmets," he said, "but we decided that that would not be in keeping with the dignity of the orchestra. But when nothing happened, we forgot our fear and played our music in all seriousness."

Asked if Dr. Muck, who sent in his resignation to Henry L. Hissinson last week after conducting the "Star Spangled Banner" in answer to the demands of the Mayor of Boston, who said the license of Symphony Hall would be cancelled if he did not, expected to remain for the season, he said:—

"I think he does. Mr. Hissinson, I understand, will not accept the resignation unless something serious happens. In Baltimore they have cancelled our series of concerts, but the attitude of the public in Philadelphia, in Washington and in New York to-night has been such that we do not anticipate any further trouble. Dr. Muck has said nothing for or against the national anthem or anything else, so far as I have been able to find out. He has always been a silent man."

Both French and German Music.

As for the programme, it contained German, French, American and Hungarian music. There is no need to commend upon the playing of Brahms' fourth symphony. No orchestra in America can ploy it so well. Somehow or other all of the numbers presented were of a sad turn. The symphony was inspired by the reading of the tragedies of Sophocles, and it is thought to picture the tragedies of human life. This was followed by Berloiz's overture to Shakespeare's tragedy "King Lear." The music of the mad king was followed by Liszt's "Prometheus" picturing vultures trying to eat out the heart of the god who gave fire to mortals, and then came the saddest of all the numbers, that "Good Friday" music from Wagner's "Parsifal." But everything, French as well as German music, was played beautifully.

Notes of the Stage

NEW YORKER
HERALD
ss: New York City.
NOV 6 - 191

Fürchten Radau wegen Mucks Auftreten.

Baltimore, Md., 5. Nov. Die Grand Jury hat heute die Polizei-Kommission darauf aufmerksam gemacht, daß es möglicherweise zu Ruhestörungen kommen werde, wenn Dr. Muck mit dem Bostoner Symphonie Orchester am Mittwoch hierherkomme. Es sei daher anzuraten, das Auftreten zu verbieten.

Die Polizei hat dann das Konzert verboten.

Fm EVENING MAIL
dress: New York City
NOV

The following orchestral conductors of New York had the good taste to make no public comment on a recent breach of etiquette by Dr. Karl Muck, their colleague and competitor: Josef Stransky, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Modest Altschuler, Arnold Volpe, Hugo Riesenfeld, Adriano Ariani, Roberto Moranzoni, Gennaro Papi, Pierre Monteux, Artur Bodanzky, Oscar Spirescu and Max Jacobs.

IBUNE
New York City
NOV 9 1917

ealth M

Economics

Telephone:

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the season here at Carnegie Hall last night.

The orchestra's programme consisted of the Brahms Fourth Symphony, which Dr. Muck led with fine effect, the band never sounding more resonant or perfectly controlled. Then came the little heard Berlioz "King Lear" overture and the Liszt "Prometheus," the programme closing with the Prelude to "Parsifal."

It was not exactly an exhilarating programme, but to exhilaration, except that given by perfection of execution, Dr. Muck has never been partial.

The difference of treatment accorded enemy musicians in Germany and America was evidenced at the song recital in Aeolian Hall, given by the former Wilfrid Douthit, who, though an Englishman, prefers now to be known as Louis Graveure, a Belgian. Mr. Graveure devoted his recital to the compositions of Bryceson Treharne. Mr. Treharne is a young Australian composer whom the Germans interned at Ruhleben, feeding him on bread made partly of straw to give it the required bulk, and of sand to give it the required weight provided by international law. After eighteen months of torture his health gave way, and he was exchanged. It is certain that no matter what the fortunes of war may be, Dr. Muck, for instance, will never be submitted to such an experience.

Mr. Treharne's talent as evidenced by his songs yesterday is a genuine one, though scarcely great enough to call for a whole afternoon. Mr. Graveure sang some of them well and some of them not so well. His voice is always a delight, but certain exaggerations of manner are creeping into his work, exaggerations which will do his art no good. He was warmly applauded by a large audience.

Dr. Karl Muck Plays Nation's Anthem Here

Conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra as It Renders "The Star-Spangled Banner"

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who gained much criticism recently by refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at any of his organization's concerts, conducted the national anthem at the opening of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night.

Contrary to the expectations of many, there was no disorder whatever. When

om TELEGRAM
ldress: New York City.
ate NOV 3 - 1917

DR. MUCK IS OUT.

We do not know how much Mayor Curley's threat to revoke the license of Symphony Hall if the national anthem was ignored had to do with the result, but Dr. Carl Muck led the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston yesterday afternoon and has resigned.

This is as it should be, although Major Higginson's quoted statement that Muck never had refused to play the national anthem requires explanation.

That Major Higginson would consider Dr. Muck's resignation a disaster does not concern the majority of citizens of the United States.

There are a number of luxuries we are about to dispense with, among them German opera.

The Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House has decided unanimously to bar German operas and German singers this season.

This is a good beginning. It will save irritating a multitude of loyal citizens. It will prevent enriching an enemy nation through the medium of alien artists whose regard is not for us but for the purses we carry. It will tend to relieve us of the German charge of being "idiotic Yankees."

We are slow to get going, but have started and will keep moving.

Thoughtful correspondent suggests that the candidates and their adherents who are left over next Wednesday morning ought to be in good shape to enlist as bomb throwers.

SHUT THEM UP.

According to an authority on operatic matters, the decision of the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera House to give no German performances this year is likely to cripple the operatic season.

No statement could be more absurd. Eliminating all the German works, there remains a repertory of more than thirty grand operas in Italian, French and English, to say nothing of ten new works to be produced and a new ballet. That gives every indication of an unusually brilliant season.

The elimination of the German singers will not affect the strength of the operatic forces. Less than a dozen singers will be dismissed and none of these is a star of the first magnitude.

The great singers remain, and no operatic season can be dull which gives its subscribers opportunities to hear artists like Mr. Enrico Caruso and Mr. John McCormack, and promises new singers besides.

And if the roster of the company needs replenishing there are a number of American singers in this country who were popular in Germany until they were driven home by the war. They can be engaged to replace those heavy German singers, whose gutterals and garglings should not be permitted beyond the confines of concentration camps, with Dr. Karl Muck as their chief auditor.

m Volkszeitu
lress: New York City.
e NOV 7 - 1917

Das „Sternenbanner".

Orchester-Dirigent Muck eröffnet Programm mit nationalem Liebe.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 7, 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6, 1917.

Washington, 6. Nov. Dr. Carl Muck, Leiter des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, dirigierte heute seine Musiker in dem Spielen von „Das sternenbesetzte Banner". Mehr, er dirigierte sie zweimal, einmal heute nachmittag und einmal heute abend, in der Eröffnung des Programms mit der nationalen Hymne bei jeder Vorführung. Es gab keine widerwillige Demonstration gegen ihn; das Auditorium applaudierte sein Orchester enthusiastisch.

WORLD
ss: New York City
NOV 9 1917

MUCK LED 'BANNER' BUT DID IT BADLY

And His Men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Played It Even Worse in Carnegie Hall.

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star-Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

Dr. Muck stood with his back to the audience a third of a minute while the handclapping went on. As he showed no signs of unbending, and as the majority of the 2,500 persons in Carnegie Hall seemed in a good-natured mood, the German conductor—who at first had refused to lead "The Star Spangled Banner" and then did so after tendering his resignation—was allowed to begin the evening's programme.

Dr. Muck led the national anthem badly and the orchestra played even worse, a fact not due to their being asked to stand. Third rate orchestras do much better.

But there was no outward show of antagonism by any part of last evening's audience toward the man who has aroused so much hostile feeling and whose professional presence in some cities will not be tolerated.

To speak truthfully, Dr. Muck was most warmly received by at least one-fourth of the Carnegie Hall audience. Perhaps 200 of the orchestra seat smart folk applauded the Prussian musician the moment he came in sight. Three-quarters of a minute later Dr. Muck began his concert.

At its end the auditors rose quickly and departed. There was scarcely so much as a perfunctory hand-clap, which was a bit odd in view of the previous early efforts of a certain group in one part of the auditorium.

The programme was another Muck affair, needlessly dry, lacking in contrast until the end almost had been reached. Just why he should have chosen two such works as the Berlioz "King Lear" overture and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Prometheus," to follow Brahms's Fourth Symphony is a question Dr. Muck can best answer. The "Parsifal" prelude, which closed the programme, was the one work which lifted the hearer from musical heaviness.

The orchestra played this prelude with genuine tonal beauty and served well in other compositions, even if its performance was by no means flawless. Dr. Muck conducted, as he always does, in academic fashion.

No Need of Sharp Action by Brooklyn Institute's Board

As the Boston Orchestra has agreed to play the national anthem wherever and whenever requested, there was little action for the Directors of the Brooklyn Institute to take at their meeting yesterday with respect to permitting the orchestra to give its regular concerts at the Brooklyn Academy, beginning to-day.

President Healy said a committee of thre had been appointed to wait upon Maj. Higginson merely to discuss the situation if need arose. At Carnegie Hall last night a representative of the Boston organization said the concerts would be given in Brooklyn.

The programmes for to-day contain a slip saying "The Star Spangled Banner" will be played at the close of the concert.

EVENING

NEW YORKER

ress: New York City. NOV 6 - 1917

Furchtbare Unruhen.

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert am Mittwoch wurde verboten.

Baltimore will Dr. Muck nicht

Erbitterung der Bevölkerung gegen Leiter zu groß.

Baltimore, 6. Nov. Das Konzert, welches das Boston Symphonie-Orchester hier am Mittwoch geben sollte, ist von den Polizei-Kommissären verboten worden. Der Geschäftsführer des „Lyric", wo das Konzert stattfinden sollte, wurde demgemäß verständigt. Die Großgeschworenen benachrichtigten gestern die Polizei, daß unter der hiesigen Bevölkerung eine solche Erbitterung gegen Dr. Muck, den Leiter, und sein Orchester herrscht, daß das Erscheinen Dr. Mucks zu Unruheszenen führen könnte. Aus diesem Grunde sei es ratsam, das Konzert abzusagen.

Ex-Gouverneur Edwin Warfield, der von einer alten revolutionären Familie abstammt und einer der Führer der Elemente ist, welches sich gegen das Auftreten des Symphonie-Orchesters auflehnt, erklärte:

„Das Vorgehen gegen Dr. Muck seitens der Kommissäre ist nur im Interesse des Friedens und der Ordnung. Dr. Muck wäre nie soweit gekommen, das Konzert zu dirigieren, da er das Theater nicht erreicht haben würde. Er wird auch nie wieder ein Konzert in Baltimore leiten können. Wir sind nicht gegen das Orchester aufgebracht, sondern hinter dem Preußen her, der gesagt hat: „Zur Hölle mit eurer Flagge und eurer Nationalhymne. Das „Star Spangled Banner" ist nicht geeignet, einem künstlerischen Programm eingefügt zu werden."

Direktor Randolph, vom Peabody Konservatorium für Musik, erklärte: „Die vielen Musikenthusiasten und Liebhaber von Symphonie-Konzerten sind sehr enttäuscht. Man sollte nicht aus den Augen verlieren, daß das Boston Symphonie-Orchester eine äußerst achtbare Organisation ist. Ein Unterschied sollte zwischen Dr. Muck und der Organisation gemacht werden. Die Absage des Konzerts bedeutet nahezu eine Katastrophe."

Baltimore, Md., 6. Nov. Der Schulrat hat gestern nach hitziger Debatte beschlossen, das Studium des Deutschen im Polytechnikum aufhören zu lassen und das Französische dafür zu substituieren.

Soldaten-Medals

From TELEGRAM

Address: New York City.

NOV 8 - 1917

CHARGES DR. MUCK AIDS GERMAN CAUSE

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Thursday.—The Providence Journal says to-day:—

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most violent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston.

By his own statement to the San Francisco courts in cases he was interested in there he has made it apparent that at least a considerable part of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character.

From TELEGRAM

ress: New York City. NOV 8 - 1917

The issue in the case of the Boston orchestra could be met by having an assistant conductor direct the anthem, for nothing would be gained by forcing Dr. Muck to do it.—Mr. Damrosch.

This is dodging, not meeting, the issue. Question is whether we shall continue to harbor an enemy alien and pay him $20,000 to insult the country.

From TIMES

Address: New York City

Date NOV 9 - 1917

In Defense of Dr. Muck.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am writing to protest with all the power that lies in me against hasty and unconsidered attacks which have been heaped upon Dr. Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the last few days. A statement by Major Higginson in today's Boston papers reveals the fact that Dr. Muck has never refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," that it was Major Higginson himself who refused the tardy request of a few Providence ladies and the challenge of The Providence Journal, and that it is Major Higginson himself who assumes the full responsibility for this refusal. No man in America would dare for a single instant to impugn Major Higginson's patriotism or the immeasurable service which he has rendered to his country during his eighty-odd years. It is almost an insult to him to mention them, in this connection.

As for Dr. Muck: He has attended strictly to his business—the interpretations of music which have been an inspiration to many thousands. Analyses of his programs at the end of the musical season have shown his absolute catholicity in the matter of the nationality of the musicians whose works he has produced. There has never been the slightest authentic instance of his ever resorting to propagandizing, or to the expression publicly or private, for aught I know, of whatever opinions he may hold upon the war.

To the La Follettes, the Hillquits, Hylans and Hearsts we should be ceaselessly opposed. But to this great musician, who, though he be an enemy, has never assailed by word or deed the country which has welcomed his art, though irrevocably hostile to the ruling spirit of his native land, it should be the true American instinct to be generous. Or must magnanimity be reserved for the battlefield alone?

STEARNS MORSE.

Woodsville, N. H., Nov. 3, 1917.

110

AMERICAN

ss: New York City. NOV 9 ...

Dr. Muck Leads His Symphony Orchestra in National Anthem

By MAX SMITH.

An audience that rivalled in brilliancy the Monday gatherings of the Metropolitan Opera House gave Dr. Karl Muck last night in Carnegie Hall one of the most cordial receptions ever tendered to a conductor in this city.

As soon as he made his appearance on the stage a storm of hand-clapping swept the house from pit to dome, and after he had mounted his platform the roar of hand-clapping continued until he had bowed dignified acknowledgement half a dozen times.

Then did Dr. Muck, who looked intensely serious, but showed not a quiver of nervous excitement, turn right about face, seize the baton that lay on the desk before him and lead his splendid orchestra of virtuosi through the measures of "The Star Spangled Banner."

Again there was a prolonged demonstration as players and listeners sat down. But evidently Dr. Muck did not feel under obligations to answer the plaudits of the crowd once more. With eyes on the score of Brahm's Symphony in E minor, No. 4, he waited quietly until the noise had subsided, and then gave the signal for the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first local concert of the season.

Nothing occurred after that in marked distinction to similar occasions of the past. The outbursts of approval in the course of the evening—tributes that surely were merited—and the rising of the orchestra in a body, in recognition of these resonant expressions of praise, were incidents to which the public has long since become accustomed.

The new arrangement of the national anthem employed by Dr. Muck's men aroused considerable discussion during the intermission, however; and opinions varied regarding the effectiveness of utilizing the stringed instruments in rapid figurations as ornamental padding for the sustained chords of the wind-choir.

As for the programme proper, if it had an inspiring beginning with Brahms, it ended even more impressively with the prelude to "Parsifal." Other conductors, though surely not many, might have achieved as stirring results in the symphony with so superb an instrument at their command. But what wielder of the baton could have given a reading of the introduction to Wagner's music-drama as exquisitely finished, as beautifully balanced, as pure, as noble, as religiously exalted and as profoundly moving, as that offered by Dr. Muck last night.

Needness to say, that the two other contributions—Berlioz's "King Lear" overture and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Prometheus"—were capitally played. But the music of neither added greatly to the artistic joys of the evening.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date NOV 9 1917

THE ENEMY-MUSIC PERIL.

Baltimore's exhibition of hysteria over the danger to public security in a symphony concert led by an enemy conductor was bad enough. But it has remained for Pittsburgh to discover a new musical menace to the country in a performance by an alien violinist. The police of that city, having suddenly awakened to the fact that Fritz Kreisler is an officer in the Austrian Army, have forbidden him to give an entertainment there on the ground that it would be "unpatriotic."

We are not at war with Austria, and the violinist's bow is technically no more an enemy weapon now than it has been these many years. But to the supersensitive militarist imagination the magic wand has suddenly become invested with direful potency. The spell it exercises is a dangerous spell of some sort since we went to war, and all good citizens must avoid imperilling their patriotism and refrain from lending aid and comfort to the enemy by listening to Kreisler!

Is there any further length to which enemy-music-phobia can go? Will the little German bands be allowed to play "Stille Nacht" when Christmas comes? Are we indeed getting ready to sing our own "Hymn of Hate" against all things German, music and musicians most of all?

The parochial attitude of intolerance manifested would be silly if it were not such a reflection on the American spirit of freedom and fair play. Cabinet officers did not hesitate to attend and applaud the Boston Symphony concert in Washington. Why must local officials magine a vain peril to the Nation in a musical performance?

N.Y. LIFE NOV 13 1917

The row about Dr. Muck of Major Higginson's Boston Symphony Orchestra, who wouldn't play the Star Spangled Banner at his symphony concerts, has filled much space and inspired many headlines. It started among some women in Providence.

Dr. Muck is a German and not addicted to the Star Spangled Banner just now. He said it wasn't a symphony and could not properly be lugged in to a symphony concert. Major Higginson, who is an illustrious, blown-in-the-glass, Massachusetts patriot, supported him in this view, but they had to give in, and Dr. Muck now plays the Star Spangled Banner at all his concerts.

From Pittsburg comes word of a storm that befell because Kreisler, the violinist, was coming there to play to a woman's club. He is an Austrian, and the more urgent patriots among the Pittsburg ladies wouldn't have him, so the concert is off.

Kreisler is an adorable violinist. By all means let him fiddle. It does no harm, but quite the contrary. If it is true, as was reported, that he lost a lot of money going short on Bethlehem Steel at the wrong time two years ago, and is now trying to pay it back, it cannot be true as the Pittsburg ladies supposed, that he is shipping vast sums of concert money home to Austria.

Dr. Muck is an admirable conductor. Let him conduct in peace, if not for the sake of music, then for the sake of Major Higginson. Any German or Austrian who is pursuing a peaceable art ought to be encouraged in so doing. The war is with the Germans whose arts are not peaceable. We won't win the war a minute sooner by making trouble for Germans of the other kind.

And if anybody wants to pray that the Kaiser and his proud friends may come to better and saner views, hire a hall for him!

Fight the fighting Germans to the bitter end! Shoot or hang German bombers, firebugs and other conspirators when caught and convicted. That helps to win the war. But worrying symphony orchestras and baiting violinists doesn't do any good, though there are special war-time proprieties that even musicians must respect.

GERMANS SILENT AS MUCK PLAYS U. S. AIR

Boston Symphony Orchestra Begins Its Carnegie Concert With Anthem.

GERMAN MUSIC ALSO

Prelude to "Parsifal" Among Numbers on Programme Skilfully Rendered.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its season in Carnegie Hall last evening. The principal number on the programme was "The Star Spangled Banner." It was not intended originally that it should occupy this conspicuous position, but it attained it by force of circumstances over which the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, had no control. The records of the turmoil raised in Boston over the refusal of either Major Henry L. Higginson or Dr. Muck—it is not yet clear which was responsible—to permit the orchestra to play the national anthem are fresh in the public mind and need not be repeated this morning.

Since Baltimore arose in its patriotic majesty all concerned have seen a great light and have been enabled by it to discern that "our flag is still there." The house bills last evening said: "The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the programme."

Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian, closely affiliated with the Imperial Government and a personal friend of the Kaiser, was received by the audience with prolonged and hearty applause when he appeared on the stage. Germans in the audience within range of THE SUN observer's eyes violently beat their hands.

Dr. Muck personally conducted the national anthem of his country's enemies with dignity. The audience applauded again with energy. The Germans under THE SUN representative's observation did not applaud at all. Dr. Muck did not bow in response to the approval of the playing of the anthem. And that was the termination of the tempest in a Boston tea pot.

German Music Played Also.

The concert proceeded calmly on its way in the admirable manner made familiar by years of performance in this town by the Bostonians. The numbers following "The Star Spangled Banner" on the programme were the E minor symphony of Brahms, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Liszt's symphonic poem "Prometheus" and the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal." As in other instances no hostility to the German music was shown. The Boston Orchestra again proved itself to be an instrument of supreme beauty and Dr. Muck played upon it with the skill of a master. He is a great artist and from the realm of art the battle of the nations should be barred as long as it is possible.

The occasion, however, should not be permitted to pass without comment on the discreditable and entirely unnecessary situation which lately arose. It is soothing, in a measure, to note that there were evidences of some salutary chastening of spirits. Last winter some fervent adorers of the Bostonian evangelists of art were moved to complainings anent the ponderosity of the programmes. In the announcements of last evening were to be found darkly printed lines telling the duration of each programme. The limit seemingly had been set at one hour and fifty minutes.

There was a time, and that not far away, when Dr. Muck made his programmes without consideration of anything, except possibly those profound artistic principles which, as they were uttered eloquently by the tremulous lips of Major Higginson, the telegraph wires lately flashed across a disturbed continent.

Grand, gloomy and peculiar, wrapped in the solitude of Dr. Muck's originality as a programme maker, their length gave the finishing touch to their power to weary. But one hour and fifty minutes—it is at any rate encouraging Let us hope that the eminent doctor will not stop there, but valiantly cut down the rations by another ten minutes.

Possible Effects of Discipline.

The digestions of all sincere music lovers will be bettered by the curtailment of the feast. All the music that any true listener can receive in one concert may be performed in 100 minutes, including those occupied by applause and the transition from one number to the next.

It is to be hoped that the application of that stern discipline which is given by public opinion may keep all the great men of the Boston Orchestra in a state of silence and reflection for the rest of the season. Most of all it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will not again fall into the lamentable error of supposing that it is time for him to tell the people of the United States that if they are not good he will take their Boston Symphony Orchestra away from them.

In assuming such a posture the beneficent patron of the art of music sets himself squarely beside its practitioners, who as a rule are hopelessly incapable of realizing that anything more important than their pipings and drummings can demand the attention of the world. We really believe that the people of these United States would continue in the enjoyment of the blessings of free democracy and that music would sweeten their daily life, even if the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be disbanded and Symphony Hall draped in funereal black.

It is a pity that the artistic temperament—which we common mortals are expected to tolerate, no matter to what confounding action it incites its possessors—should be contagious and attack the operating department of a musical organization. It has had its [illegible] ter. Now it should be carefully swathed in cotton batting and laid away in a dark closet.

GRAVEURE SINGS HERE.

Programme Limited to Works of Bryceson Treharne.

Louis Graveure, the distinguished barytone, gave a recital of songs by Bryceson Treharne at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. The audience was large and there was an abundance of hearty applause. Several of the songs had to be repeated, and it was evident that most of the time the listeners were interested.

It is always a doubtful experiment to make a programme of music by one composer, even when the works of one of the famous masters are chosen. It is certain that some of Mr. Treharne's songs heard yesterday would have gained by being dissociated from others similar in style and quality.

The composer is ingenious in harmony and often seems to sacrifice spontaneity of melody and fitness of expression to his love of the unusual in modulation. But in such numbers as "Uphill" and "Dirge for a Soldier" he has combined successfully all his characteristics in melody, rhythm and harmony. Mr. Graveure sang his programme with devotion and skill and Francis Moore contributed most artistically played accompaniments.

BAUER-THIBAUD RECITAL

Three of the Beethoven Sonatas Delightfully Played.

The Society of the Friends of Music presented Harold Bauer, pianist, and Jacques Thibaud, violinist, yesterday afternoon at the Punch and Judy Theatre in the first of a series of recitals of the ten violin and pianoforte recitals of Beethoven. The sonatas given yesterday were those in D, opus 12; in G, opus 96, and opus 30 in C minor.

The two distinguished players were in excellent form, and it is safe to say that their ensemble work never has given greater delight here than yesterday. The conditions of intimacy in the surroundings of the auditorium were ideal for their purpose and thus enhanced the sympathy of spirit and clarity and finish of their delivery together of Beethoven's music.

KREISLER AIDING RUSSIAN ORPHANS

Has Sent Money to Austria for Paralytic Father and for Artists.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 8.—Denouncing the press for articles which he says were designed for the purpose of exciting prejudice and public opinion against him, Capt. Fritz Kreisler, Austrian army officer and violinist of note, to-day issued a statement here in which he brands as false reports that he has been sending money obtained in his American concert tour abroad for the comfort of enemy arms.

Kreisler admits he has been sending money abroad, but only for the purpose of caring, he says, for orphans of Russian and Serbian soldiers for whom his wife, when the soldiers were on their deathbeds, promised she would care. He also says he is sending money to Austria to his father, who suffered the loss of his property in the first Russian invasion and subsequently a paralytic stroke which rendered him helpless, and to seventeen artists and their families who were stranded in Austria at the outbreak of the war.

Kreisler denies that he is here on furlough, saying he was wounded while in battle on the Russian front after six weeks service at the outbreak of the war and was discharged as an invalid. Kreisler concerts in Sewickley, Pa.; Youngstown, Ohio; Morgantown, W. Va., and two in this city have been cancelled, and a movement is afoot in New Castle to prevent his appearance there, the result of onposition to the Austrian.

NOT LIKE DR. MUCK.

Kreisler Not Objectionable, Says Former Maryland Governor.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 8.—Former Governor Edwin Warfield, who organized the movement which prevented Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, will not undertake any effort to prevent Fritz Kreisler from playing here. Kreisler is scheduled to play in Baltimore on November 22.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem, or their flag. On the contrary, he has played at all Red Cross conferences. But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country, I have no doubt, to try to help Germany win the war by his association with aliens here."

Gov. Warfield expressed the conviction that Dr. Muck's unhampered freedom in this land is a menace to the safety of the nation, and he believes Muck's freedom should be curtailed promptly and effectively.

"Not for one minute do I doubt," said the former Governor, "that Muck is using his position to his own ends and keeping his Czar and master, Kaiser Wilhelm, informed of all that he learns here."

TIMES
Address: New York City
NOV 9 -

KARL MUCK PLAYS OUR ANTHEM HERE

Boston Symphony Conductor Is Warmly Greeted as He Leads 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'

THRONG IN CARNEGIE HALL

President Healy and Committee of the Brooklyn Institute to Confer with Maj. Higginson Today.

After its exciting experiences of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion thus has gone on concerning the playing the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck, and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way. There were two or three empty boxes, and a very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected, however, with a desire to be civil to Dr. Karl Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage, and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the program. Major Higginson was present.

The house bill stated that "The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the program." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the brass, was wreathed with counterpoint by the strings till the last part, when all joined in the tune roustly. There was much applause and no fault found apparently with the spirit of the whole thing.

The regular numbers of the program were Brahms's E minor symphony, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Listz's symphonic poem "Prometheus," and the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal."

Dr. Muck has more than once played Brahms's fourth symphony, and the beautiful rendering of it that he gives is well remembered—a reading full of life, of sinuous grace in the first movement, of immense vigor in the third and last movements, of lovely sentiment in the andante; everywhere of beautiful color and subtle adjustment of the instrumental voices, of finely turned and pregnant phrasing, of subtle nuancing of tempo. It caused, and very justly, great enthusiasm; Dr. Muck was several times recalled, and made the orchestra rise to share in the applause.

Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is not very exciting. It is difficult to find any interpretation of Shakespeare's hero or of the play in it. There are melodious passages of somewhat more lustre than Berlioz often achieved; there are passages of fine instrumental coloring; but it is not music to touch the imagination. Still less is Liszt's laborious illustration of the fate of Prometheus, one of the least frequently heard of the symphonic poems. The reason why was made plain last evening. The performance of the "Parsifal" prelude was an imposing one.

President A. Augustus Healy of the Board of Directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which runs most of the concerts at the Brooklyn Academy and acts as agent for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's independent series there, was appointed at the regular board meeting yesterday to head a committee to confer with Major Henry L. Higginson of Boston with regard to the concert of the orchestra in the neighboring borough tonight. It has already been announced that Dr. Karl Muck will conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" over there.

Major Higginson, who accompanied his orchestra to New York and was present at its concert in Carnegie Hall last evening, was expected to meet the Brooklyn committee today. He has found the usual subscription audiences in other cities, except only Providence and Baltimore, favorable to a continuance of the orchestra with its existing personnel and present leader. There was no concert in Baltimore last Wednesday, and a sold-out house was turned away.

A proposal has been made to the Boston management that it shall use several open dates now abandoned in the Maryland city by giving extra concerts on its monthly tours here in New York, where some hundreds of would-be subscribers are yet on the annual waiting list. There was no disturbance at Carnegie Hall last evening, though Police Headquarters sent a squad of plain-clothes men to handle the "riot" that didn't come off.

N.Y. LIFE NOV. 13 1917

The row about Dr. Muck of Major Higginson's Boston Symphony Orchestra, who wouldn't play the Star Spangled Banner at his symphony concerts, has filled much space and inspired many headlines. It started among some women in Providence.

Dr. Muck is a German and not addicted to the Star Spangled Banner just now. He said it wasn't a symphony and could not properly be lugged in to a symphony concert. Major Higginson, who is an illustrious, blown-in-the-glass, Massachusetts patriot, supported him in this view, but they had to give in, and Dr. Muck now plays the Star Spangled Banner at all his concerts.

From Pittsburg comes word of a storm that befell because Kreisler, the violinist, was coming there to play to a woman's club. He is an Austrian, and the more urgent patriots among the Pittsburg ladies wouldn't have him, so the concert is off.

Kreisler is an adorable violinist. By all means let him fiddle. It does no harm, but quite the contrary. If it is true, as was reported, that he lost a lot of money going short on Bethlehem Steel at the wrong time two years ago, and is now trying to pay it back, it cannot be true as the Pittsburg ladies supposed, that he is shipping vast sums of concert money home to Austria.

Dr. Muck is an admirable conductor. Let him conduct in peace, if not for the sake of music, then for the sake of Major Higginson. Any German or Austrian who is pursuing a peaceable art ought to be encouraged in so doing. The war is with the Germans whose arts are not peaceable. We won't win the war a minute sooner by making trouble for Germans of the other kind.

And if anybody wants to pray that the Kaiser and his proud friends may come to better and saner views, hire a hall for him!

Fight the fighting Germans to the bitter end! Shoot or hang German bombers, firebugs and other conspirators when caught and convicted. That helps to win the war. But worrying symphony orchestras and baiting violinists doesn't do any good, though there are special war-time proprieties that even musicians must respect.

GERMANS SILENT AS MUCK PLAYS U. S. AIR

Boston Symphony Orchestra Begins Its Carnegie Concert With Anthem.

GERMAN MUSIC ALSO

Prelude to "Parsifal" Among Numbers on Programme Skilfully Rendered.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its season in Carnegie Hall last evening. The principal number on the programme was "The Star Spangled Banner." It was not intended originally that it should occupy this conspicuous position, but it attained it by force of circumstances over which the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, had no control. The records of the turmoil raised in Boston over the refusal of either Major Henry L. Higginson or Dr. Muck—it is not yet clear which was responsible—to permit the orchestra to play the national anthem are fresh in the public mind and need not be repeated this morning.

Since Baltimore arose in its patriotic majesty all concerned have seen a great light and have been enabled by it to discern that "our flag is still there." The house bills last evening said: "The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the programme."

Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian, closely affiliated with the Imperial Government and a personal friend of the Kaiser, was received by the audience with prolonged and hearty applause when he appeared on the stage. Germans in the audience within range of THE SUN observer's eyes violently beat their hands.

Dr. Muck personally conducted the national anthem of his country's enemies with dignity. The audience applauded again with energy. The Germans under THE SUN representative's observation did not applaud at all. Dr. Muck did not bow in response to the approval of the playing of the anthem. And that was the termination of the tempest in a Boston tea pot.

German Music Played Also.

The concert proceeded calmly on its way in the admirable manner made familiar by years of performance in this town by the Bostonians. The numbers following "The Star Spangled Banner" on the programme were the E minor symphony of Brahms, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Liszt's symphonic poem "Prometheus" and the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal." As in other instances no hostility to the German music was shown. The Boston Orchestra again proved itself to be an instrument of supreme beauty and Dr. Muck played upon it with the skill of a master. He is a great artist and from the realm of art the battle of the nations should be barred as long as it is possible.

The occasion, however, should not be permitted to pass without comment on the discreditable and entirely unnecessary situation which lately arose. It is soothing, in a measure, to note that there were evidences of some salutary chastening of spirits. Last winter some fervent adorers of the Bostonian evangelists of art were moved to complainings anent the ponderosity of the programmes. In the announcements of last evening were to be found darkly printed lines telling the duration of each programme. The limit seemingly had been set at one hour and fifty minutes.

There was a time, and that not far away, when Dr. Muck made his programmes without consideration of anything, except possibly those profound artistic principles which, as they were uttered eloquently by the tremulous lips of Major Higginson, the telegraph wires lately flashed across a disturbed continent.

Grand, gloomy and peculiar, wrapped in the solitude of Dr. Muck's originality as a programme maker, their length gave the finishing touch to their power to weary. But one hour and fifty minutes—it is at any rate encouraging. Let us hope that the eminent doctor will not stop there, but valiantly cut down the rations by another ten minutes.

Possible Effects of Discipline.

The digestions of all sincere music lovers will be bettered by the curtailment of the feast. All the music that any true listener can receive in one concert may be performed in 100 minutes, including those occupied by applause and the transition from one number to the next.

It is to be hoped that the application of that stern discipline which is given by public opinion may keep all the great men of the Boston Orchestra in a state of silence and reflection for the rest of the season. Most of all it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will not again fall into the lamentable error of supposing that it is time for him to tell the people of the United States that if they are not good he will take their Boston Symphony Orchestra away from them.

In assuming such a posture the beneficent patron of the art of music sets himself squarely beside its practitioners, who as a rule are hopelessly incapable of realizing that anything more important than their pipings and drummings can demand the attention of the world. We really believe that the people of these United States would continue in the enjoyment of the blessings of free democracy and that music would sweeten their daily life, even if the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be disbanded and Symphony Hall draped in funereal black.

It is a pity that the artistic temperament—which we common mortals are expected to tolerate, no matter to what confounding action it incites its possessors—should be contagious and attack the operating department of a musical organization. It has had its little spatter. Now it should be carefully swathed in cotton batting and laid away in a dark closet.

GRAVEURE SINGS HERE.

Programme Limited to Works of Bryceson Treharne.

Louis Graveure, the distinguished barytone, gave a recital of songs by Bryceson Treharne at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. The audience was large and there was an abundance of hearty applause. Several of the songs had to be repeated, and it was evident that most of the time the listeners were interested.

It is always a doubtful experiment to make a programme of music by one composer, even when the works of one of the famous masters are chosen. It is certain that some of Mr. Treharne's songs heard yesterday would have gained by being dissociated from others similar in style and quality.

The composer is ingenious in harmony and often seems to sacrifice spontaneity of melody and fitness of expression to his love of the unusual in modulation. But in such numbers as "Uphill" and "Dirge for a Soldier" he has combined successfully all his characteristics in melody, rhythm and harmony. Mr. Graveure sang his programme with devotion and skill and Francis Moore contributed most artistically played accompaniments.

BAUER-THIBAUD RECITAL

Three of the Beethoven Sonatas Delightfully Played.

The Society of the Friends of Music presented Harold Bauer, pianist, and Jacques Thibaud, violinist, yesterday afternoon at the Punch and Judy Theatre in the first of a series of recitals of the ten violin and pianoforte recitals of Beethoven. The sonatas given yesterday were those in D, opus 12; in G, opus 96, and opus 30 in C minor.

The two distinguished players were in excellent form, and it is safe to say that their ensemble work never has given greater delight here than yesterday. The conditions of intimacy in the surroundings of the auditorium were ideal for their purpose and thus enhanced the sympathy of spirit and clarity and finish of their delivery together of Beethoven's music.

KREISLER AIDING RUSSIAN ORPHANS

Has Sent Money to Austria for Paralytic Father and for Artists.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 8.—Denouncing the press for articles which he says were designed for the purpose of exciting prejudice and public opinion against him, Capt. Fritz Kreisler, Austrian army officer and violinist of note, to-day issued a statement here in which he brands as false reports that he has been sending money obtained in his American concert tour abroad for the comfort of enemy arms.

Kreisler admits he has been sending money abroad, but only for the purpose of caring, he says, for orphans of Russian and Serbian soldiers for whom his wife, when the soldiers were on their deathbeds, promised she would care. He also says he is sending money to Austria to his father, who suffered the loss of his property in the first Russian invasion and subsequently a paralytic stroke which rendered him helpless, and to seventeen artists and their families who were stranded in Austria at the outbreak of the war.

Kreisler denies that he is here on furlough, saying he was wounded while in battle on the Russian front after six weeks service at the outbreak of the war and was discharged as an invalid. Kreisler concerts in Sewickley, Pa.; Youngstown, Ohio; Morgantown, W. Va., and two in this city have been cancelled, and a movement is afoot in New Castle to prevent his appearance there, the result of opposition to the Austrian.

NOT LIKE DR. MUCK.

Kreisler Not Objectionable, Says Former Maryland Governor.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 8.—Former Governor Edwin Warfield, who organized the movement which prevented Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, will not undertake any effort to prevent Fritz Kreisler from playing here. Kreisler is scheduled to play in Baltimore on November 22.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem, or their flag. On the contrary, he has played at all Red Cross conferences. But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country, I have no doubt, to try to help Germany win the war by his association with aliens here."

Gov. Warfield expressed the conviction that Dr. Muck's unhampered freedom in this land is a menace to the safety of the nation, and he believes Muck's freedom should be curtailed promptly and effectively.

"Not for one minute do I doubt," said the former Governor, "that Muck is using his position to his own ends and keeping his Czar and master, Kaiser Wilhelm, informed of all that he learns here."

bm TIMES
dress: New York City
NOV 9 -

KARL MUCK PLAYS OUR ANTHEM HERE

Boston Symphony Conductor Is Warmly Greeted as He Leads 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'

THRONG IN CARNEGIE HALL

President Healy and Committee of the Brooklyn Institute to Confer with Maj. Higginson Today.

After its exciting experiences of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. The heated discussion thus has gone on concerning the playing the national anthem under the baton of Dr. Muck, and remarks alleged to have been made about it seemed not to have affected the New York audience in any unfavorable way. There were two or three empty boxes, and a very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected, however, with a desire to be civil to Dr. Karl Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage, and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the program. Major Higginson was present.

The house bill stated that "The national anthem will be played as the opening number of the program." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the brass, was wreathed with counterpoint by the strings till the last part, when all joined in the tune roustly. There was much applause and no fault found apparently with the spirit of the whole thing.

The regular numbers of the program were Brahms's E minor symphony, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Listz's symphonic poem "Prometheus," and the prelude to Wagner's "Parsifal."

Dr. Muck has more than once played Brahms's fourth symphony, and the beautiful rendering of it that he gives is well remembered—a reading full of life, of sinuous grace in the first movement, of immense vigor in the third and last movements, of lovely sentiment in the andante; everywhere of beautiful color and subtle adjustment of the instrumental voices, of finely turned and pregnant phrasing, of subtle nuancing of tempo. It caused, and very justly, great enthusiasm; Dr. Muck was several times recalled, and made the orchestra rise to share in the applause.

Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is not very exciting. It is difficult to find any interpretation of Shakespeare's hero or of the play in it. There are melodious passages of somewhat more lustre than Berlioz often achieved; there are passages of fine instrumental coloring; but it is not music to touch the imagination. Still less is Liszt's laborious illustration of the fate of Prometheus, one of the least frequently heard of the symphonic poems. The reason why was made plain last evening. The performance of the "Parsifal" prelude was an imposing one.

President A. Augustus Healy of the Board of Directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which runs most of the concerts at the Brooklyn Academy and acts as agent for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's independent series there, was appointed at the regular board meeting yesterday to head a committee to confer with Major Henry L. Higginson of Boston with regard to the concert of the orchestra in the neighboring borough tonight. It has already been announced that Dr. Karl Muck will conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" over there.

Major Higginson, who accompanied his orchestra to New York and was present at its concert in Carnegie Hall last evening, was expected to meet the Brooklyn committee today. He has found the usual subscription audiences in other cities, except only Providence and Baltimore, favorable to a continuance of the orchestra with its existing personnel and present leader. There was no concert in Baltimore last Wednesday, and a sold-out house was turned away.

A proposal has been made to the Boston management that it shall use several open dates now abandoned in the Maryland city by giving extra concerts on its monthly tours here in New York, where some hundreds of would-be subscribers are yet on the annual waiting list. There was no disturbance at Carnegie Hall last evening, though Police Headquarters sent a squad of plain-clothes men to handle the "riot" that didn't come off.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&D

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 9 1917

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
START.

If Dr. Muck is such a good leader why doesn't he lead the way home to Germany?

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.

CONFER ON DR. MUCK; LEADS HERE TONIGHT

Will Meet Major Higginson Before Symphony Concert at Academy of Music.

NO TROUBLE IS FEARED.

Delegation of Detectives Will Be Present at the Symphony Concert.

The best-advertised concert the Brooklyn Institute has ever arranged will be given tonight, at the Academy of Music. After countless protests and explanations and at least one resignation and one cancellation, the storm appears to be over, and Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Koenigliche Preussicher general music director, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Every seat for the concert has been sold, and the "Standing Room Only" sign will be hung out.

Some time before the start of the concert, A. Augustus Healy, president of the board of directors of the Brooklyn Institute, and a committee of three will meet Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the Boston orchestra, and present to him "the hostile sentiments" of a number of subscribers to the concerts with reference to Dr. Muck.

The object of this conference, as expressed yesterday at a meeting of the directors of the Institute, will be "to aid Major Higginson in arriving at a conclusion that will satisfy public sentiment and at the same time not be embarrassing to him."

Frank L. Babbott, who will be one of the committee to meet Major Higginson, said today that he believed the feeling of antagonism was dying down.

Dr. Muck and his orchestra, which is composed of musicians of many different nationalities, gave a concert last night in Carnegie Hall, Manhattan. Dr. Muck's appearance on the stage was greeted with applause which lasted several minutes, although a few scattered hisses could be heard as the hand-clapping died down. All of the members arose as they played America's National Anthem, and at the close of the number Dr. Muck was again applauded heartily.

In order to prevent the possibility of a disturbance, many policemen in plain clothes were scattered through the auditorium. Their presence proved unnecessary.

It is likely, however, that a heavy plainclothes guard will be sent to the concert in Brooklyn tonight, despite the fact that officials of the Institute have not asked for police protection.

As a result of the controversy the engagement of the orchestra in Baltimore was cancelled. Dr. Muck's resignation was placed in the hands of Major Higginson following the first concert in Boston at which the national anthem was played, but no action has been taken thus far.

Captain Fritz Kreisler of the Austrian army, now in this country on furlough, while recovering from the effects of a bullet wound in the leg, is to give a concert at the Academy of Music Monday evening, November 19, and it was expected that the trustees would discuss his case at the meeting yesterday. It was stated today that no protests had been received against his appearance and the matter was not taken up. The Director of Public Safety in Pittsburg ordered Kreisler's concert there cancelled.

Among the protests presented at the meeting of the trustees was one from the Women's Auxiliary of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, which adopted resolutions Wednesday morning. Mrs. Camden C. Dike is president of the auxiliary.

"STAR-SPANGLED BANNER," AT ACADEMY TO-NIGHT, WITH DR. MUCK LEADING Institute Subscribers Formulate Their Hostility to German Musician.

COMMITTEE SELECTED

Major Higginson's Sensibilities Considered by Brooklynites.

WOMEN MAKE PROTEST

Large Audience Applauds the Initial Performance at Carnegie Hall.

Brooklyn's patriotic fever will not be stifled nor its devotion to country flouted by the Boston Symphony Company, which opens at the Academy of Music this evening. "The Star-Spangled Banner," dear to the American heart, will be played as the closing number, and Dr. Muck will conduct the orchestra.

The trustees of the Brooklyn Institute held their monthly meeting at the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon and, as was expected, one of the principal topics of discussion was the question of Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and "The Star Spangled Banner." Previous to the meeting the annotated programmes had been received from the management of the orchestra in Boston, in which programmes had been inserted printed slips bearing the announcement, "The national anthem will be played as the closing number of the programme." This confirmed the telegram received last week from C. A. Ellis that the orchestra would play the anthem at the Brooklyn concert this evening. At the conclusion of the meeting, the following statement was given out:

"The question of Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given consideration by the board, and on motion duly seconded the president appointed a committee of three trustees to present to Major Higginson the hostile sentiments of a number of subscribers to the concerts with reference to Dr. Muck, the object of the conference being the desire to aid Major Higginson in arriving at a conclusion that will satisfy public sentiment and at the same time not be embarrassing to him. The board also voted to express to Major Higginson their high appreciation of the services he has rendered the musical life of the nation in organizing and maintaining for so many years the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Decline to Discuss Institute Meeting.

Both A. Augustus Healy, the president of the board of trustees, who presided, and Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute, declined to comment further on the results of the meeting, declaring that the foregoing statement exactly covered what had been decided upon and that no further action will be taken until after the conference of the three trustees with Major Higginson, who is expected to be present this evening and may address the audience. Mr. Healy said the discussion at the meeting was dispassionate and not in the least exciting. Mr. Atkins said it was "mild." He said the number of written protests received was very small in comparison with the 2,200 subscribers, and these would be considered by the trustees and Major Higginson.

It was learned from an outside source that the members of the women's auxiliary of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, which met on Wednesday morning, had adopted resolutions of protest at the action of Dr. Muck, and that these were presented to the board of trustees for their consideration yesterday.

Mrs. Camden C. Dike, president of the women's auxiliary, confirmed this statement, but declined to give the text of the resolutions, saying she must await the action of the board of trustees. Mr. Healy also admitted that such resolutions were presented to the board, but said that the action concerning them was entirely covered in the foregoing authorized statement of the very few empty seats. The New York audience was affected with a desire to be civil to Dr. Muck. He received an unusually warm greeting when he first came on the stage, and there was demonstrative applause at various points in the programme. Major Higginson was present.

The house bill stated that "The National Anthem will be played as the opening number of the programme." Dr. Muck conducted it. It was a version in which the melody, intoned by the bass, was wreathed on the counterpoint by the strings, till the last part, when all joined in the tune robustly. There was much applause and no fault found apparently with the spirit of the whole thing.

It is stated that Mr. Higginson has found the usual subscription audiences in other cities, except Providence and Baltimore, favorable to a continuance of the orchestra with its existing personnel and present leader. There was no concert in Baltimore last Wednesday, and a sold-out house was turned away.

A proposal has been made to the Boston management that it shall use several open dates now abandoned in the Maryland city by giving extra concerts on its monthly tours in New York, where some hundreds of would-be subscribers are yet on the annual waiting list. There was no disturbance at Carnegie Hall last evening, though Police Headquarters sent a squad of plain-clothes men.

No Fault Found in Manhattan Concert.

After its exciting experiences of last week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in New York and gave the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall, Manhattan. There was a very large audience, such as has for years attended these concerts. There were two or three empty boxes, and a

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Muck is a German with no intention of becoming an American citizen. As a German, he does not care to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the national anthem of an enemy of his country. As an artist he says the playing of the national anthem has no place on a symphony programme. But it happens that the people who form the audiences to which the Boston Orchestra plays are Americans. They think differently. Patriotism has entered into the matter—and patriotism is a thing which can no more be discussed than faith and honor.—Philadelphia Evening Star.

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 10 1917

NEVER REFUSED TO PLAY ANTHEM

Statement By Major Higginson at Academy.

MEETS THE COMMITTEE OF BROOKLYN INSTITUTE

Dr. Muck Leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner"—Audience Fills Every Seat in the Hall.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after a concert at the Academy of Music, declared last night that neither he nor Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, had ever refused to have the National Anthem played by the organization.

In his explanation of the controversy over the alleged refusal of the orchestra, Major Higginson claimed that the reason the orchestra did not play the anthem in Providence was that Dr. Muck did not know that a request for its playing had been made. He said that the orchestra had played "The Star-Spangled Banner" in at least sixty concerts in May and June, long before they went to Providence.

The explanation came in the form of a statement which was given out following a conference of Major Higginson, A. Augustus Healy, president of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and a committee named by the trustees. The statement follows:

"Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to know the truth and speak it, and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concertgoers and to the orchestra seems but fair and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra.

"The first request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The programme had been made and studied as always, and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' until the concert was over.

"Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star-Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought they cheerfully did as asked.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra.

"Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families.

"The audience in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and had a right to expect the same kind of service by the same man as in previous years. They knew that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received.

"In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit. Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; the orchestra is made up of many nationalities including Americans—some of them are our allies.

"This tempest was raised in Providence and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them.

"Looking at the musicians last evening and recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which they prepare the concerts and with which they play them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

"Once more I ask the public to listen and deep feeling, which found its climax in the fourth part of the symphony.

Finlandia, the symphonic poem of Jean Sibelius, was the second number. From the agitated, almost angry, theme with which the poem begins, to the peaceful and elevating conclusion, the Boston Orchestra interpreted it in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to the composer's sentiments.

"Prometheus," symphonic poem, No. 5, by Liszt, and the overture to "Leonore," by Beethoven, made up the remainder of the programme. The wildly jubilant conclusion of the orchestra made a fitting close for the concert.

Dr. Muck called upon the members to stand immediately after he took his place upon the conductor's platform. Then while the audience stood silently at attention "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played.

As interpreted by Dr. Muck and his orchestra, the anthem sounded somewhat different from what the audience has been in the habit of hearing. Last night a new instrumental setting more complicated than any yet heard in which the bass carried the air and the violins provided the trills, was given.

The rendition of the national hymn finished, the audience applauded. Dr. Muck did not turn to the audience to acknowledge the plaudits, but stood steadily facing the rear of the opera house stage.

That Dr. Muck still has many friends in this borough was evident last night when he mad his entrance upon the stage. The applause which he received was equal in volume to that which was accorded him in former years. His response to this welcome was somewhat reserved. During the entire concert he retained the same manner, accepting gravely the applause which accompanied the close of the various numbers. The audience, as usual, was very large, filling to capacity the opera house.

Contrary to the plan followed in Manhattan, the night before, when the Boston Symphony played at Carnegie Hall no police reserves were on hand to quell any possible disturbances. Several plain-clothes men were stationed outside in the street, but that was all.

The programme, which the orchestra placed at the Academy, was one typical of Dr. Muck.

It was introduced by Tschaikowsky's Symphony in B minor, "Pathetic," with its four divisions, I., Adagio, Allegro non troppo; II., Allegro con grazia; III., Allegro, molto vivace, and IV., Adagio lamentoso.

The number which took up the greater part of the evening's time was played in the characteristic manner of the Boston Symphony, with perfect technique

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 8 1917

Muck Will Conduct Anthem at Academy Concert Tonight

Institute Appoints Committee to Confer With Major Higginson in Controversy Over Prussian Conductor's Attitude.

Three trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will confer with Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, just before the concert at the Academy of Music tonight in reference to Dr. Karl Muck, who will conduct the organization through a program that includes "The Star-Spangled Banner."

President A. Augustus Healy, of the Institute, will appoint a special committee, of which Frank L. Babbott is the first member.

The board voted yesterday to express to Major Higginson their high appreciation of the services he has rendered the musical life of the Nation in organizing and maintaining for so many years the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at a financial loss. It is believed that every effort will be made to smooth over the difficulty aroused by Dr. Muck's refusal to conduct the national anthem, and that the concert will be given without embarassing incident.

Dr. Muck Plays Anthem.

Dr. Muck conducted the national anthem at the opening of the Boston Symphony series in Carnegie Hall last night.

Contrary to the expectations of many, there was no disorder. When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage the audience, which filled the house, applauded.

Dr. Muck signalled for the musicians to rise, and at the first note the audience followed. At the conclusion of the anthem the applause was heartier.

Kreisler Answers Critics.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 9.—Capt. Fritz Kreisler, Austrian army officer and violinist, who is to play in Brooklyn on November 19, today issued a statement in which he brands as false reports that he has been sending money obtained in his American concert tour abroad for the benefit of enemy arms.

Kreisler says he has been sending money abroad for the purpose of caring for orphans of Russian and Serbian soldiers for whom his wife, when the soldiers were on their deathbeds, promised she would care. He also says he is sending money to Austria to his father, who suffered the loss of his property in the first Russian invasion and subsequently a paralytic.

Kreisler denies that he is here on furlough, saying he was wounded while in battle on the Russian front after six weeks service at the outbreak of the war and was discharged as an invalid. Kreisler concerts in Sewickley, Pa.; Youngstown, Ohio; Morgantown, W. Va., and two in this city have been cancelled, and a movement is afoot in New Castle to prevent his appearance there, the result of opposition to the Austrian.

Frieda Hempel Barred.

Youngstown, Ohio., Nov. 9.—Because of the pro-German sentiment of Frieda Hempel, Metropolitan soprano of New York, the Monday Musical Club has cancelled her concert here next April.

Steps were taken today toward cancelling the performance of Fritz Kreisler, the violinist and Austrian army officer, scheduled to give a concert Friday evening.

Youngstown Bars Kreisler.

Youngstown, Ohio, Nov. 9.—Mayor Thornton today issued an order prohibiting Fritfz Kreisler, noted Austrian violinist, playing at a concert here tonight.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 9 1917

DR. MUCK SATISFIES BROOKLYN HEARERS

Leads "Star Spangled Banner" and Stands Immovable as Applause Follows.

CONCERT WELL RECEIVED.

Major Higginson in Audience That Greets Orchestra.

The most widely heralded musical event ever given in Brooklyn, the season's opening concert at the Academy of Music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Carl Muck, late of Berlin, came and went last night without any thrills worthy of the name. From the point of view of patrioism it was satisfying, since it began with the national anthem; from the musical point it was momentous—but viewed from the angle of excitement it might well have been termed a frost.

That this excitement had been anticipated was the fault of nobody save those who started the whole fuss. There has never been, in Brooklyn at least, any necessity for press-agenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For many years every seat for every one of its concerts has been sold in advance. That was true also last night. But certain cities some distance from either Boston or Brooklyn had banned the world-famous orchestra, certain ladies right here in town had passed resolutions about it and rumor had even said that its appearance would be greeted by an audience that included a squad of detectives—think of it, detectives!

So at 8:15 last night Dr. Karl Muck appeared, and the audience was all in a flutter. It was well-disposed, though, and it applauded. Dr. Muck bowed gravely, stiffly. Then he turned his back, and the orchestra, that splendidly co-ordinated band of incomparable musicians, began to play. It was "Star Spangled Banner."

That was out of the ordinary, because the official programme had specified the National Anthem was to come last. The melody was played with spirit and impressive effect, although at a somewhat slow pace, and again although it was an unfamiliar instrumental version.

Applause Goes Unacknowledged.

The anthem concluded, the house applauded mightily. Dr. Muck, standing rigid, inflexible, declined to acknowledge the tumult. The applause redoubled—directed, of course, at the sentiment of the patriotic hymn. Undoubtedly Dr. Muck, late of Berlin, realized this, for he remained outwardly oblivious to the demonstration. His pose, the back straight as any ramrod, the baton upraised, as if impatiently awaiting the opportunity to go on with the music of the evening, was eloquent.

The applause ended and the Tschaikowsky Pathetic Symphony was promptly begun. The incident was over. The thrill had passed over without alighting. Presumably the detectives went home right away.

The programme itself was far out of the ordinary. Tschaikowsky's Sixth has not been in the repertoire of the Bostonians in recent years, but this season it is apparently enjoying a revival after its long period of sojourning on the shelf that belongs to good things overdone. It was given an unusual reading last night by Muck.

The opening movement, the famous tearful adagio, was delicately, sweetly played, instead of with an excess of pathos and passion, as conductors in recent years have led local audiences to expect. The playful allegro in five-fourths time was interpreted in almost the same dainty fashion. The march scherzo was rather more stirring than usual, and when it came to the finale, regarded as the last word in the musical portrayal of the depths of human feeling, the orchestra surpassed in the sincerity of its expression all the manifold interpretations that have come and gone on local platforms. Tone, volume, expression, taste—it all bordered closely on perfection.

"Finlandia" Played.

Next came Jan Sibelius' "Finlandia" tone-poem, a patriotic masterpiece that happened in on the programme at a timely moment, in view of the happenings of recent days in his native Finland. The Boston orchestra's brasses had here a fine opportunity to distinguish themselves. Third was Liszt's "Prometheus," a weak member of that composer's gallery of compositions, and seemingly out of place on last night's programme of heavyweights. Of course it, too, was played with a wealth of satisfying tone, and it led up nicely to the finale, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, familiar for many decades in concert halls here and elsewhere.

The first appearance of the orchestra was as in past years the occasion for gathering an audience of distinguished members of the musical and fashionable sets of the town. Prominent among the auditors was Major Henry L. Higginson of Boston, financial angel of the orchestra, and the focal point of the controversy which still rages concerning the status of Dr. Karl Muck, late of Berlin.

Outsiders Caused Fuss.

Following a conference with A. Augustus Healy and other Brooklyn Institute officials, Major Higginson issued a statement vindicating the course of the famous orchestra and asking for fair play from the public. He said:

"The first request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The programme had been made and studied as always and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' until the concert was over.

"Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps, sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought they cheerfully did as asked.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra."

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 8 1917

Fritz Kreisler, prevented from playing his violin in Pittsburg, has been a most inoffensive enemy alien. If he could declare himself he would probably denounce the military masters of Austria as heartily as we do. In his book, "Four Weeks in the Trenches," Kreisler shows no enthusiasm for the war. By his art he has won for his country more honor than the military men could hope to win by the butchering of women and children. But it is not possible openly to make distinctions and yet we make them every day. The phonograph records that yield enormous royalties to enemy aliens are played here and in all our camps. While Kreisler is being shut out of Pittsburg his pay runs on just the same for his country's enemies are taking him canned. No doubt Dr. Muck gets revenue from the same source. Art and diplomacy are equally insidious.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 8 1917

Trooper Loves German Music; So Does His French Instructor

Deplores Ban on German Opera—Another Correspondent Wants Founder of Boston Orchestra Deported.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

In the Thursday issue of your paper, which reached me in this morning's mail, I read a letter from one of your readers in which he asks the following question: "In the event that German opera be given at that forum (Metropolitan Opera House), should not every American who assists be branded as a traitor?"

I cannot conceive of a more bigoted and narrow-minded point of view. Must we defrain from enjoying music which is really beautiful simply because it is German? I am a music lover, and have studied and heard much music that is worth while. I can see no reason for condemning anything that is worth while, simply because it is of German origin.

Last night I had the pleasure of being with one of the French non-commissioned officers who is in this country to instruct our men in the methods of French warfare. Surely the French, if any, have cause to hate the Germans. Yet last night this Frenchman sang for us some of the wonderful German songs and sang them in German. Is he a traitor to his country for so doing? I think not! His devotion and his three wounds speak for him.

I have no doubt that many people besides the writer of the letter I have mentioned will say that I am not an American at heart. Let them say what they please. My conscience is clear, and I know that I am not a traitor to my country simply because I can see something beautiful in German music.

JAMES A. B. TUTHILL,
Private First Class.
Troop P, Second Cavalry, Fort Myer, Va.

TO HEAR NO MUCK CONCERT

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

How any true American can sit through a concert conducted by Karl Muck, much less listen to his rendering of "The Star-Spangled Banner," after sneering at and insulting it in his gross German fashion, is more than I can understand.

Why is he allowed to go free? Another alien enemy who insulted the American flag and the American people as he has done would be interned without a question.

"It is hard," says Muck. No doubt, but not quite so hard as forfeiting the 20,000 glittering American dollars.

He belongs beside his friend, Withered Arm Willie. Why does he not get out, since it is "Not his desire to be here."

He belongs to the class of whom Colonel Theodore Roosevelt says change their country the same as the beasts of the barnyard change their feeding troughs.

I have been a subscriber to the Boston Symphony, but never again, under Muck's leadership. There are other Symphony Societies that perform exquisite music. Mr. Stransky and our Dr. Damrosch, who is beloved by all his audiences. Both these are quite the equal of Muck.

Would that all our cities follow the attitude of ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, president of the Fidelity Trust Company, and one of Baltimore's foremost citizens; rather than have Muck desecrate "The Star-Spangled Banner" he would see to it that he is mobbed out of town. I hope it comes to pass. A TRUE AMERICAN.

WOULD DEPORT HIGGINSON

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

The matter re Dr. Muck makes my American blood boil.

And who, pray, is Major Higginson? Is he of the same ilk and caliber of Muck, since he indorses Muck's views and upholds him? People of such sentiment and opinions, had I the proper authority, would either be deported where they would be among people of their own ideas or else interned on Ellis Island. They make good money here, more than they can make in their own country, and refuse to abide by its Constitution. Furthermore, make them all take out naturalization papers or be deported.

JAMES H. WILLIAMSON.
23 Kenmore place.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 8 1917

DR. MUCK TO GIVE ANTHEM.

Boston Symphony Will Play It at Brooklyn Concert.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" is to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow night. Dr. Karl Muck will conduct. The programs contained an insert which says: "The Star-Spangled Banne' will be played at the close of the concert." Major Henry L. Higginson is to be present and speak to the audience.

It is not known yet what effect the refusal of the Pittsburg authorities to allow Fritz Kreisler, the violinist who was a captain in the Austrian Army, to play there, will have on his reception in Brooklyn on November 19. So far there have been no complaints against his appearance here made to the directors of the Brooklyn Institute.

COMMON TOPICS
NEW YORK CITY
NOV 8 - 1917

If Dr. Karl Muck, the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, considers it an insult to be asked to play the "Star Spangled Banner," it is quite proper to make another request of him, and that is to take his precious pro-German self back to the land of his beloved Kaiser. The excuse is made for him that the music of what has come to be regarded as our National Anthem is not artistic enough to merit a place in a Boston Symphony Orchestra program. Whatever may be said on this point, there can be no question that the song itself is too patriotic to be left out of any public musical entertainments. It is our song. We revere it and love it and we are not in any temper to submit tamely to a slight put upon it by a hostile musical professor or the band that he directs or the organization that employs him. What we want while this war with Germany lasts is patriotism rather than art. As between the Boston Symphony Orchestra without the "Star Spangled Banner" and the "Star Spangled Banner" without the Boston Symphony Orchestra, there can be but one choice with the American people. Heraus mit Muck!

111 113

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y. ess 5 1917

DAILY

Muck Will Conduct Anthem at Academy Concert Tonight

Institute Appoints Committee to Confer With Major Higginson in Controversy Over Prussian Conductor's Attitude.

Three trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will confer with Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, just before the concert at the Academy of Music tonight in reference to Dr. Karl Muck, who will conduct the organization through a program that includes "The Star-Spangled Banner."

President A. Augustus Healy, of the Institute, will appoint a special committee, of which Frank L. Babbott is the first member.

The board voted yesterday to express to Major Higginson their high appreciation of the services he has rendered the musical life of the Nation in organizing and maintaining for so many years the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at a financial loss. It is believed that every effort will be made to smooth over the difficulty aroused by Dr. Muck's refusal to conduct the national anthem, and that the concert will be given without embarassing incident.

Dr. Muck Plays Anthem.

Dr. Muck conducted the national anthem at the opening of the Boston Symphony series in Carnegie Hall last night.

Contrary to the expectations of many, there was no disorder. When Dr. Muck appeared on the stage the audience, which filled the house, applauded.

Dr. Muck signalled for the musicians to rise, and at the first note the audience followed. At the conclusion of the anthem the applause was heartier.

Kreisler Answers Critics.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 9.—Capt. Fritz Kreisler, Austrian army officer and violinist, who is to play in Brooklyn on November 19, today issued a statement in which he brands as false reports that he has been sending money obtained in his American concert tour abroad for the benefit of enemy arms.

Kreisler says he has been sending money abroad for the purpose of caring for orphans of Russian and Serbian soldiers for whom his wife, when the soldiers were on their deathbeds, promised she would care. He also says he is sending money to Austria to his father, who suffered the loss of his property in the first Russian invasion and subsequently a paralytic.

Kreisler denies that he is here on furlough, saying he was wounded while in battle on the Russian front after six weeks service at the outbreak of the war and was discharged as an invalid. Kreisler concerts in Sewickley, Pa.; Youngstown, Ohio; Morgantown, W. Va., and two in this city have been cancelled, and a movement is afoot in New Castle to prevent his appearance there, the result of opposition to the Austrian.

Frieda Hempel Barred.

Youngstown, Ohio., Nov. 9.—Because of the pro-German sentiment of Frieda Hempel, Metropolitan soprano of New York, the Monday Musical Club has cancelled her concert here next April.

Steps were taken today toward cancelling the performance of Fritz Kreisler, the violinist and Austrian army officer, scheduled to give a concert Friday evening.

Youngstown Bars Kreisler.

Youngstown, Ohio, Nov. 9.—Mayor Thornton today issued an order prohibiting Fritfz Kreisler, noted Austrian violinist, playing at a concert here tonight.

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y. NOV 10 1917

STANDARD

DR. MUCK SATISFIES BROOKLYN HEARERS

Leads "Star Spangled Banner" and Stands Immovable as Applause Follows.

CONCERT WELL RECEIVED.

Major Higginson in Audience That Greets Orchestra.

The most widely heralded musical event ever given in Brooklyn, the season's opening concert at the Academy of Music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Carl Muck, late o Berlin, came and went last nigh without any thrills worthy of th name. From the point of view of patrioism it was satisfying, since it began with the national anthem; from the musical point it was momentous—but viewed from the angle of excitement it might well have been termed a frost.

That this excitement had been anticipated was the fault of nobody save those who started the whole fuss There has never been, in Brooklyn a least, any necessity for press-agenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra For many years every seat for every one of its concerts has been sold in advance. That was true also last night. But certain cities some distance from either Boston or Brooklyn had banned the world-famous orchestra, certain ladies right here in town had passed resolutions about it and rumor had even said that its appearance would be greeted by an audience that included a squad of detectives—think of it, detectives!

So at 8:15 last night Dr. Karl Muck appeared, and the audience was all in a flutter. It was well-disposed though, and it applauded. Dr. Muck bowed gravely, stiffly. Then he turned his back, and the orchestra, that splendidly co-ordinated band of incomparable musicians, began to play. It was "Star Spangled Banner."

That was out of the ordinary, because the official programme had specified the National Anthem was to come last. The melody was played with spirit and impressive effect, although at a somewhat slow pace, and again although it was an unfamiliar instrumental version.

Applause Goes Unacknowledged.

The anthem concluded, the house applauded mightily. Dr. Muck, standing rigid, inflexible, declined to acknowledge the tumult. The applause redoubled—directed, of course, at the sentiment of the patriotic hymn. Undoubtedly Dr. Muck, late of Berlin, realized this, for he remained outwardly oblivious to the demonstration. His pose, the back straight as any ramrod, the baton upraised, as if impatiently awaiting the opportunity to go on with the music of the evening, was eloquent.

The applause ended and the Tschaikowsky Pathetic Symphony was promptly begun. The incident was over. The thrill had passed over without alighting. Presumably the detectives went home right away.

The programme itself was far out of the ordinary. Tschaikowsky's Sixth has not been in the repertoire of the Bostonians in recent years, but this season it is apparently enjoying a revival after its long period of sojourning on the shelf that belongs to good things overdone. It was given an unusual reading last night by Muck.

The opening movement, the famous tearful adagio, was delicately, sweetly played, instead of with an excess of pathos and passion, as conductors in recent years have led local audiences to expect. The playful allegro in five-fourths time was interpreted in almost the same dainty fashion. The march scherzo was rather more stirring than usual, and when it came to the finale, regarded as the last word in the musical portrayal of the depths of human feeling, the orchestra surpassed in the sincerity of its expression all the manifold interpretations that have come and gone on local platforms. Tone, volume, expression, taste—it all bordered closely on perfection.

"Finlandia" Played.

Next came Jan Sibelius' "Finlandia" tone-poem, a patriotic masterpiece that happened in on the programme at a timely moment, in view of the happenings of recent days in his native Finland. The Boston orchestra's brasses had here a fine opportunity to distinguish themselves. Third was Liszt's "Prometheus," a weak member of that composer's gallery of compositions, and seemingly out of place on last night's programme of heavyweights. Of course it, too, was played with a wealth of satisfying tone, and it led up nicely to the finale, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, familiar for many decades in concert halls here and elsewhere.

The first appearance of the orchestra was as in past years the occasion for gathering an audience of distinguished members of the musical and fashionable sets of the town. Prominent among the auditors was Major Henry L. Higginson of Boston, financial angel of the orchestra, and the focal point of the controversy which still rages concerning the status of Dr. Karl Muck, late of Berlin.

Outsiders Caused Fuss.

Following a conference with A. Augustus Healy and other Brooklyn Institute officials, Major Higginson issued a statement vindicating the course of the famous orchestra and asking for fair play from the public. He said:

"The first request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The programme had been made and studied as always and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' until the concert was over.

"Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps, sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought they cheerfully did as asked.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra."

m EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y. 1917

Fritz Kreisler, prevented from playing his violin in Pittsburg, has been a most inoffensive enemy alien. If he could declare himself he would probably denounce the military masters of Austria as heartily as we do. In his book, "Four Weeks in the Trenches," Kreisler shows no enthusiasm for the war. By his art he has won for his country more honor than the military men could hope to win by the butchering of women and children. But it is not possible openly to make distinctions and yet we make them every day. The phonograph records that yield enormous royalties to enemy aliens are played here and in all our camps. While Kreisler is being shut out of Pittsburg his pay runs on just the same for his country's enemies are taking him canned. No doubt Dr. Muck gets revenue from the same source. Art and diplomacy are equally insidious.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
5 1917

om EAGLE ldress: Brooklyn, N. Y. 8 1917
ate.....

DR. MUCK TO GIVE ANTHEM.

Boston Symphony Will Play It at Brooklyn Concert.

"The Star-Spangled Baanner" is to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow night. Dr. Karl Muck will conduct. The programs contained an insert which says: "The Star-Spangled Banne' will be played at the close of the concert." Major Henry L. Higginson is to be present and speak to the audience.

It is not known yet what effect the refusal of the Pittsburg authorities to allow Fritz Kreisler, the violinist who was a captain in the Austrian Army, to play there, will have on his reception in Brooklyn on November 19. So far there have been no complaints against his appearance here made to the directors of the Brooklyn Institute.

Trooper Loves German Music; So Does His French Instructor

Deplores Ban on German Opera—Another Correspondent Wants Founder of Boston Orchestra Deported.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

In the Thursday issue of your paper, which reached me in this morning's mail, I read a letter from one of your readers in which he asks the following question: "In the event that German opera be given at that forum (Metropolitan Opera House), should not every American who assists be branded as a traitor?"

I cannot conceive of a more bigoted and narrow-minded point of view. Must we defrain from enjoying music which is really beautiful simply because it is German? I am a music lover, and have studied and heard much music that is worth while. I can see no reason for condemning anything that is worth while, simply because it is of German origin.

Last night I had the pleasure of being with one of the French non-commissioned officers who is in this country to instruct our men in the methods of French warfare. Surely the French, if any, have cause to hate the Germans. Yet last night this Frenchman sang for us some of the wonderful German songs and sang them in German. Is he a traitor to his country for so doing? I think not! His devotion and his three wounds speak for him.

I have no doubt that many people besides the writer of the letter I have mentioned will say that I am not an American at heart. Let them say what they please. My conscience is clear, and I know that I am not a traitor to my country simply because I can see something beautiful in German music.

JAMES A. B. TUTHILL,
Private First Class.
Troop P, Second Cavalry, Fort Myer, Va.

TO HEAR NO MUCK CONCERT

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

How any true American can sit through a concert conducted by Karl Muck, much less listen to his rendering of "The Star-Spangled Banner," after sneering at and insulting it in his gross German fashion, is more than I can understand.

Why is he allowed to go free? Another alien enemy who insulted the American flag and the American people as he has done would be interned without a question.

"It is hard," says Muck. No doubt, but not quite so hard as forfeiting the 20,000 glittering American dollars.

He belongs beside his friend, Withered Arm Willie. Why does he not get out, since it is "Not his desire to be here."

He belongs to the class of whom Colonel Theodore Roosevelt says change their country the same as the beasts of the barnyard change their feeding troughs.

I have been a subscriber to the Boston Symphony, but never again, under Muck's leadership. There are other Symphony Societies that perform exquisite music. Mr. Stransky and our Dr. Damrosch, who is beloved by all his audiences. Both these are quite the equal of Muck.

Would that all our cities follow the attitude of ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, president of the Fidelity Trust Company, and one of Baltimore's foremost citizens; rather than have Muck desecrate "The Star-Spangled Banner" he would see to it that he is mobbed out of town. I hope it comes to pass. A TRUE AMERICAN.

WOULD DEPORT HIGGINSON

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

The matter re Dr. Muck makes my American blood boil.

And who, pray, is Major Higginson? Is he of the same ilk and caliber of Muck, since he indorses Muck's views and upholds him? People of such sentiment and opinions, had I the proper authority, would either be deported where they would be among people of their own ideas or else interned on Ellis Island. They make good money here, more than they can make in their own country, and refuse to abide by its Constitution. Furthermore, make them all take out naturalization papers or be deported.

JAMES H. WILLIAMSON.
23 Kenmore place.

NEW YORK CITY
ess: NOV 8 - 1917

If Dr. Karl Muck, the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, considers it an insult to be asked to play the "Star Spangled Banner," it is quite proper to make another request of him, and that is to take his precious pro-German self back to the land of his beloved Kaiser. The excuse is made for him that the music of what has come to be regarded as our National Anthem is not artistic enough to merit a place in a Boston Symphony Orchestra program. Whatever may be said on this point, there can be no question that the song itself is too patriotic to be left out of any public musical entertainments. It is our song. We revere it and love it and we are not in any temper to submit tamely to a slight put upon it by a hostile musical professor or the band that he directs or the organization that employs him. What we want while this war with Germany lasts is patriotism rather than art. As between the Boston Symphony Orchestra without the "Star Spangled Banner" and the "Star Spangled Banner" without the Boston Symphony Orchestra, there can be but one choice with the American people. Heraus mit Muck!

REDUCTION RATIO 12x

2.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y. NOV 10 1917

114

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays National Anthem at B'klyn Academy

The Brooklyn protest against the retention of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was registered at the Academy last night in the form of vacant boxes and empty seats in the heart of the orchestra, where the most earnest supporters of this music usually sit. Whether the empty seats made any impression on Major Higginson or not is not known, but Dr. Muck must know that never before has he faced so many empty seats in Brooklyn; two vacant chairs together are an exception at Boston Symphony concerts here—so rare, indeed, that they suggest sudden illness.

Any more stirring protest was avoided by the tact of Director Atkins of the Institute. He asked Dr. Muck to put "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the opening of the concert instead of the close, where it was scheduled, and this was done without any announcement. When Dr. Muck appeared, a little very emphatic applause was heard, and the leader turned to bow to it. Then subdued hisses began and the director turned sharply, brought the orchestra to its feet and started the anthem. With the first bar, of course, the audience arose. They heard the notes and nothing else. The audience applauded vigorously and kept on until the orchestra began that preternaturally solemn opening phrase of Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony.

Thenceforth things went smoothly. The program was one of the best which Dr. Muck has ever offered here, containing three masterpieces whose popularity is well established, the Tschaikowsky Symphony, Sibelius' "Finlandia" and the "Leonore No. 3" overture. The two last of these were separated by Liszt's less familiar "Prometheus," big, garish, bizarre music, whose picturesque cleverness served as a contrast to the throbbing intensity of the Russian and Finnish music which had preceded and as a background for the tragic simplicity of the Beethoven overture. After the troublesome job of the National Anthem was out of the way the performance was all that even devotees of the orchestra could have asked. The bigger the music the better the playing, and the terrible last movement of the Symphony sounded, this time, as if it might stand for a national lament over the dead on the field of battle or as a passionate wail over the chaos in the composer's own Russia. Even Boston Symphony audiences have seldom hear so perfect a performance of the "Leonore." The delicacy of the passages was exquisite and afforded an ideal background for the power without tumult with which the climaxes were given.

There is no immediate prospect that Dr. Muck's resignation will be accepted. The committee of the Institute trustees met Major Higginson yesterday and presented to him the protest of subscribers against the proposed omission of the National Anthem. Major Higginson gave out the following statement:

"Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to know the truth and speak it, and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concertgoers and to the orchestra seems but fair, and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra.

"The first request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket-holders and were unknown to me. The program had been made and studied as always and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' until the concert was over. Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary, the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star-Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps, sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought, they cheerfully did as asked.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers, I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra.

"Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families. The audience in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and had a right to expect the same kind of service by the same men as in previous years. They knew that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received. In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit. Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; the orchestra is made up of many nationalities—some of them are our Allies, as well as Americans. This tempest was raised in Providence and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them. Looking at the musicians last evening and recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which they prepare the concerts and with which they play them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

"Once more I ask the public to listen to the truth and then act accordingly.

'HENRY L. HIGGINSON,
"Brooklyn, November 9. 1917."

Record - Nov. 12, 1917

Bust of Dr. Karl Muck

This bust of the noted Boston musician was made by the late Bela Pratt. It is now on exhibition at the "Guild of Boston Artists."

Advertiser
Nov. 15, 1917-

FULL REHEARSAL BY SYMPHONY CHORUS

The first full rehearsal of chorus and orchestra for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will take place in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, was held in Symphony Hall last evening. The chorus number near 400 than 350 and it has been especially selected.

Dr. Muck conducted and was thoroughly pleased with the rehearsals. The prospect is that the performance of the symphony will be memorable from every point of view.

- AMERICAN -
NOV. 11, 1917 -

BAR KREISLER AND HEMPEL

Artists of Teutonic Birth Refused Concert Dates in Cities of the Middle West.

The nation-wide agitation against opera singers and musicians of German or Austrian birth got fresh impetus yesterday when it was announced that Frieda Hempel, the German soprano, has been barred from Youngstown, Ohio, and that four cities had refused to hear Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist. The latter is scheduled to play at Symphony Hall in Boston next Sunday.

Since the case of Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony was called to the attention of the public by his failure to include the "Star-Spangled Banner" in his program at a Providence recital concert, the "drive" against Teutonic singers and musicians has grown steadily in violence and emphasis.

Dr. Muck has been barred in Baltimore and wherever he now conducts is always preceded by Major Higginson or a letter of explanation from the latter.

Dr. Muck is also being investigated by the Federal authorities, who are looking up his record of patriotism since his arrival in America.

Kreisler, the violinist, is a retired captain of the Austrian Army. He was wounded early in the war by a Russian Cossack, whose lance penetrated his thigh. He was in the hospital for some time and after his recovery came back for a concert tour in America.

Kreisler denies that he is on furlough from the Austrian forces, and declares that he was honorably discharged from the service on account of his wound.

Kreisler has been barred from Youngstown and also from Sewickley, Pa., and Morgantown, W. Va., as well as from Pittsburgh.

-Herald Nov. 12, 1917-

SUPPORTERS OF MUCK CRITICISED

Washington Societies Say That Patrons of Boston Symphony Are Unpatriotic.

PUBLIC STATEMENT ISSUED

HERALD-JOURNAL BUREAU,
WASHINGTON, Nov. 11

The Capital patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are charged with lack of patriotism in giving their support to Dr. Karl Muck in a statement issued by the national committee of Patriotic Socities today.

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities?" reads the statement.

"Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, because of his German associations and interests was received with open arms in the capital city. The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck war barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received at this time. Washington people who support his concerts say that music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war-time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The national committee maintains that the capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question, and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

Advertiser
Nov. 15, 1917-

MUSIC NOTES

The concert in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18, at 3.30, will be Fritz Kreisler's second recital. Mr. Kreisler will play concertos of Vivaldi and Vieuxtemps, and shorter pieces by Friedberg, Tschaikowsky, Godowsky, Schubert, Paganini and himself.

Schumann-Heink's return in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 25, will be very welcome, as it is several years since this popular singer has been able to appear in Boston. She will sing a characteristic program of songs in ancient and modern style, including a group of four songs in English.

The Symphony program this week contains no Symphony. Three pieces appear on it: Debussy's very interesting Symphonic Sketches, "The Sea"; MacDowell's "Indian Suite," in which the American composer's genius undoubtedly reached its highest mark, and Dvorak's "Othello" overture.

The second Symphony concert in Cambridge this evening presents no soloist. The program comprises Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Sibelius's "Finlandia," Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead" and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody.

Herald, Nov 15, 1917-

REHEARSE THE NINTH SYMPHONY BY BEETHOVEN

The first full rehearsal of chorus and orchestra for the performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening was held in Symphony Hall last night. The chorus numbers nearly 400 and it has been specially selected. The soloists will be Frieda Hampel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

TRANSCRIPT
- NOV. 14, 1917.

NEWS OF MUSIC

RUMOR BUSY WITH THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

No Visible Sign That Dr. Muck's Resignation Has Been Accepted—The Variegated Canvass of Possible Successors—The Apollo Club to a Friendly Public — Opera Afresh in New York — More Rulings on the War Tax — Mr. Damrosch's Concerts for Children — Items and Opinions

RUMOR runs about the town that Mr. Higginson has accepted the resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and rumor has already picked his successor—a much easier task for it than for those who have ever sought a leader for such a band or such concerts. Of evidence to bear out the rumor there is none except the war-time gossip that flies from ear to ear and the war-time credulity that eagerly receives it. Dr. Muck himself is proceeding quietly and busily with his usual and unusual work—more particularly with the preparations for the choral concert at Symphony Hall next week, at which he is to lead in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony for the first time in America. No man could for the moment act less than he does as one about to leave his usual employments. The management of the orchestra is equally unaware of any impending change; the entourage o' Mr. Higginson discredits the rumor. In fact, the disposition among those officially concerned with the concerts is to rest content with the calm that has followed recent storms.

Rumor, moreover, is not well advised in the successors that it is picking for Dr. Muck and betrays its ignorance of their present engagements, their quality and of their leanings in the present war—the new test of a conductor's availability. One, Mr. Stokowski, upon whom it likes to dwell is tied by long contracts to the orchestra and the public he now serves in Philadelphia and by a guarantee fund raised especially in his behalf. Another Mr. Gabrilowitsch, of recent and signal rise to praise and promise as a conductor, has in the past, at any rate, made no secret of war sympathies, which are not those of the public that has been loud in outcry and is now busy with surmise. A third, "with a following"—Mr. Henry Hadley—is hardly likely on the strength of his work and experiences in Seattle and San Francisco, to be seriously considered as the conductor of an orchestra of the first rank. A fourth, Mr. Mengelberg, the celebrated conductor of the Amsterdam orchestra, happens to be Jewish, a little past the prime of life and a "specialist" in contemporary German music; while fifth and most curious choice of all is no other than Arthur Nikisch, Hungarian, it is true in blood, but long conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts in Leipzig and of the Philharmonic Concerts in Berlin and fast bound in Germany. So gossip goes a busy and Symphony Hall—and Dr. Muck in particular—a quiet way.

SUN

New York City.

NOV 11 1917

'Star Spangled Banner' Row As Musicians Analyze It

All Agree National Anthem Should Be Played, but Say American Spirit Should Animate Director—Dr. Muck's Case

DR. KARL MUCK is the centre of that war against the music of Germany which has swept over the country because of the fact that "The Star Spangled Banner" was not played at the opening of the Boston Symphony concerts in the American Athens.

The conductor, a Bavarian, and in this country on leave of absence from a German governmental position, finally did play the American national anthem when there were emphatic requests from his audience at the fourth concert of the series.

The question as to whether musical art is above patriotism was raised anew when Dr. Muck appeared in Carnegie Hall in this city last Thursday. He directed the national air, however, and the audience applauded liberally.

On account of the issue involved, which touches on so many phases of our national life, the Sunday SUN has obtained the accompanying interviews with patrons of music and musicians:

Nahan Franko, orchestra leader, when asked his opinion of the occurrence in Boston, first sat down to the piano and played the national airs of ten countries, including those of the United States, Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy and Austria.

"I am prefacing what I have to say in this way," remarked Mr. Franko, "that I may make clear certain distinctions which should be considered in relation to this subject.

"In the first place, is 'The Star Spangled Banner' at work of art? Does not that depend largely upon the way in which we approach the subject? Supposing that as a piece of music or an anthem that it does have certain technical faults. Would not these disappear in the fervor and the patriotism of the musicians who played it?

"Dr. Karl Muck is a Bavarian. He is not a Prussian. He has been in the military service of his country. Shortly after the outbreak of the European war in 1914 he was induced to come here by Col. Higginson of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Even Col. Roosevelt was enlisted in the effort to persuade Dr. Muck to come here. Dr. Muck did not come until there had been many negotiations, and his natural inclination even then would have been to have remained in his own country. If he had his own way I have no doubt that he would have long ago returned to Germany.

"Dr. Muck did not refuse to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' It seems to me, however, that the national anthem conducted by a man whose heart was not in it could have little significance. It would have been better, since 'The Star Spangled Banner' was not a part of a symphonic programme, that the conductor should have given his baton to some member of the orchestra who would not have been influenced by any race question preferably to a native born American or to an American citizen.

Depends on Spirit of Musicians.

"The value of any national air depends so much upon the spirit not only of the conductor but of the individual musicians. I am of Bavarian descent, but was born in New Orleans, and I have made my way in this country. I am at heart a patriotic American.

"Now as to 'The Star Spangled Banner' itself, considered technically, it must be admitted that as originally written it is difficult to sing as compared with other national airs. If one plays it on the piano this fact is at once noticeable. The compass of 'The Star Spangled Banner' is an octave and five-eights, while the compass of other national airs is within an octave, or does not exceed that limit.

"It is difficult for most persons to reach the notes of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and therefore the singing of it requires close attention. As a piece of music our national anthem, for instance, has not the marchlike swing of 'The Marseillaise,' nor has it the sweep of the Russian national air. I may also say that the words are not well adapted to the notes, and this is another reason why the average man or woman finds it difficult to do justice to it as a song.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' has more the character of a church hymn than a national air and to produce the desired effect on the public with it the conductor must lead it with an unusual amount of enthusiasm and spirit.

"As far as Dr. Muck is concerned, I can only say that I know from facts as they are that he has never refused to play our national hymn.

"I have every reason to believe Dr. Muck's own statement. I know him well and had the great honor to be his concertmeister for two seasons at the Royal Opera in London.

"I agree with Col. Henry L. Higginson that it would be a disaster to musical art in America to lose his services as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Dr. Muck, I know, when Col. Roosevelt was President, was asked to consider the work of revising the anthem to increase its singing possibilities."

Stransky Noncommittal.

Josef Stransky, conductor of the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society of New York, said yesterday that for various reasons he did not feel justified in discussing the conduct of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"The facts in this case, however, are beyond dispute," he continued. "Dr. Muck did not refuse to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' for at the request of the management of the Boston Symphony he did direct when the national anthem of the United States was played. I have the highest regard for Dr. Muck as a musician and I know him to be a man of high personal qualities.

"As I am a Czech, and a guest of the country, it would be indeed a very delicate matter for me to discuss this incident. It was eminently proper that 'The Star Spangled Banner' should have been played at the performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It should have been played not only for patriotic reasons but also because it was especially fitting to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' on an occasion of such dignity and importance as the opening of the season of the Boston Symphony. I do not know that it would be considered absolutely necessary to play this national anthem at every one of the concerts, but if the audience indicated that it wished to have the national anthem played the director of any orchestra would consider himself justified in acceding to such a request.

"I do not agree with many Americans who do not admire 'The Star Spangled Banner' as a work of music. Long before the European war there was much discussion regarding the anthem, and many persons in this country even thought that it should be displaced. 'The Star Spangled Banner' is rather difficult to play, and as a song is hard to sing. I have made it a practice, however, to always play it in a slower tempo than the one in which it is written. This gives the effect of a hymn and does full justice to the dignity and beauty of the composition. Many Americans who have heard the anthem played in this way were at first rather slow to recognize it, but when they did they expressed their admiration of the rendition.

"As far as the adoption of a new national anthem is concerned, I think that it is entirely improbable that in view of recent events the American people will ever make such a change. It would not be well that any national air so hallowed by tradition should be displaced."

Mr. Leifels's Opinion.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra," said Felix F. Leifels, manager of the Philharmonic Society of New York, "is an institution of nationwide importance, which has done much for the art and honor of our country. Nobody doubts the loyalty of Mr. Higginson, the founder and supporter of the Symphony Orchestra. His prompt acquiescence to the demands of the public proves that he at once realized the justice and propriety of those demands.

"The desire of American audiences to hear the national anthem on symphonic programmes at a time like this is inevitable and right. Of course, the anthem should be given. The Philharmonic Orchestra has played 'The Star Spangled Banner' in all concerts at home and out of town this season as a matter of course. It is our natural means of expressing the feelings that all Americans share in the present national crisis.

All American Citizens.

"The Philharmonic Society of New York is essentially an American organization. Founded in 1842, it is beginning its seventy-sixth season more strongly American than ever. Fifty per cent. of the musicians in its orchestra are of American birth and every musician in the organization is an American citizen. We have, when giving performances in this city, eighty-seven musicians; on tour we take seventy with us. Of those enrolled with us forty-two are of American birth, fourteen are Germans and Austrians, nine are Russians, and the others are divided among various other nationalities.

"From the windows of our executive offices in Carnegie Hall we display a service flag with four stars. The musicians purchased $14,000 worth of Liberty bonds in the subscription just closed. In addition to this the orchestra has several times appeared at benefit concerts and other entertainments in aid of the American Red Cross and kindred organizations.

"As a musician I was connected with the Philharmonic for many years. I consider 'The Star Spangled Banner' when properly interpreted a majestic piece of music and I consider it eminently proper that it should be played at all assemblages where patriotic Americans are gathered."

A Question of Good Music.

Mrs. William Jay, the only woman member of the board of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, expressed decided views in a current number of the Chronicle.

"Is the relation of music to the American people a very close one?" she asked. "I believe that it is to a certain extent, but it is the hope of all who are truly interested in music that a vital relationship should exist and that the public who support the great orchestras of this country should be educated to a higher standard of musical appreciation.

"It is a fact which is rather discouraging at the present time that when concert programmes are chiefly made up of works of the early composers the box office receipts show that these programmes are not popular with the average audience. As with every other branch of art, the greatest purity and simplicity are found in these early masterpieces. I believe that true musical appreciation can only be cultivated through the study of the works of Bach, Mozart, Haydn and the others. When trained to love and understand these the public will be brought into a closer sympathy with and a more intelligent understanding of all good music.

"That which is emotional in music is readily enjoyed by those with the least musical education, and the concert halls are filled to overflowing when a Tchaikowski or Wagner programme is given. The score of this type of music lover is very limited, however, and it would be well for him to listen to and study the early classics in order to appreciate intellectually all that is finest in music.

"Many people think that during the war no German music should be played either in our concert halls or opera houses. This would be a great hardship and deprivation to music lovers of all nationalities, and I am not of the opinion that there is any reason why the music of German composers should not be given in concert.

"There is nothing in the actual music to arouse the antagonism or to bring to mind the struggle which is raging. On the contrary, in most cases it is the expression of the most poetic, artistic and in every way the finest side of those great masters whose life works also included operas.

Should Drop German Opera.

"On the other hand, I feel that to give the German operas, particularly those of Wagner, at this time would be a great mistake. Given as they must be in the German language and depicting in many cases scenes of violence and conflict, they must inevitably draw our minds back to the spirit of greed and barbarism which has led to so much suffering.

"Loving 'Tristan und Isolde,' 'Die Meistersinger,' the 'Ring' operas as I do, it is almost a matter of self-denial which prompts me to write in favor of the exclusion of German operas during the war. Perhaps gala nights of German operas could be used as political propaganda to imply a division of sentiment in this country, and as the Metropolitan Opera Company is practically a national in[illegible] great Germans in spite of the status of war.

"I was much interested in an article by Signor Campanini in a previous number of the Chronicle in which he tells of the advantage of giving new operas, beautifully staged, alternating with those old ones which he and Heinrich Conried of the Metropolitan revived and which had not been given for many years.

"It shows how different is the problem of the opera impresario from that of the concert manager. The former has to provide variety, amusement, enjoyment, brilliant scenery, beautiful costumes and effective lighting to a mixed audience. The concert audience, on the other hand, composed entirely of lovers of music, asks for the perfect rendition of beautiful compositions. This, unaided by scenic effects, is the hardest of all to produce.

"May the demand be for the best, so that our conductors and the numberless great artists who compose our orchestras shall be encouraged in their interpretation of the masterpieces of all ages."

EVENING GLOBE
New York City
NOV 9 - 1917

Music.

Muck Leads National Anthem—Other Music.

The tempest in a bean pot that has dogged the recent peregrinations of the Boston Symphony Orchestra held aloof from the sacred fastnesses of Carnegie Hall last night. A squad of plain-clothes men detailed to act as life savers was not called on to quell a riot or administer first aid. Its members were treated to nothing more sanguinary than a decorous evening of exceedingly well-played music. The Boston band's first Carnegie Hall concert of the season could not have passed off in fuller accord with all the rules of Turveydrop in the cultured city of its birth.

A note on the hall programme brought immediate balm to anxious hearts. "The National Anthem," ran, "will be played as the opening number of the programme." A "number," observe, no less—not a mere patriotic hors d'oeuvre or a needless sacrifice to war prejudice. When Dr. Muck entered, perhaps five minutes later than the appointed hour, the house was already filled. This audience applauded him loudly and long. Then the doctor applied himself to the task of conducting "the opening number of the programme" as indicated above, the audience meantime standing. At the conclusion of this "number" there was more applause. Through it the doctor held himself stiffly, with his back pertinaciously to the house, interpreting the applause, no doubt, as directed to the "number" rather than to the conductor.

For the sake of the record it may be worth noting that I have never heard another performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" so funereal in pace, so metronomically rigid of beat, so utterly devoid of phrasing and accent as this by the world's premier orchestra. However, it is not the "reading" but the fact of the National Anthem that is important. I cannot myself guess what satisfaction an American can gain from our National Anthem conducted by Dr. Muck, unless it be through the grim justice inherent in the sight of an unrepentant Prussian compelled by public sentiment here to do something unwillingly, after all that Prussians have compelled the rest of mankind to do unwillingly in the last three years and a quarter.

But most of the circumstances in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra versus "The Star-Spangled Banner" remain enveloped in contradiction and mystery. The rank outsider might suppose that every difficulty could have been avoided by graciously acceding to the natural wartime request for the National Anthem, and relieving Dr. Muck of the uncongenial task of leading it by turning that duty over to one of the American members of the band.

To bring up the issue of art is silly. If Dr. Muck at the Royal Opera of Berlin were asked to conduct "Deutschland über alles" before or during a representation of "Götterdämmerung," no one would think of objecting to it as unsuitable to the evening's "programme," or think of it at all in artistic relation to Wagner's masterpiece.

But since some have insisted on raising the issue of art and treating our National Anthem as an integral part of a symphony concert programme, one may submit in all humility that an orchestra which plays habitually Wagner's "Rienzi" overture, the "Finlandia" of Sibelius, and the pieces of Liszt and by Berlioz which figured on its programme last evening has no valid artistic quarrel with "The Star Spangled Banner."

For Dr. Muck as an orchestral conductor my admiration is as ardent as ever and the loss of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, threatened, I believe, under certain conditions, would be a calamity for the whole world. So to the concert proper as an artistic expression, and there the last shall be first! For the prelude to "Parsifal," which ended the programme, was the artistic feature of the evening.

This prelude, one of the loftiest peaks of Wagner's genius, nevertheless loses more than any other of his preludes in the transfer from the opera house to the concert room. But the performance directed by Dr. Muck so far outdistanced any other I have heard that I forgot the need of the darkened theatre, the invisible orchestra, the golden curtain bellying in the light that never was on land or sea, the passion and the mystery of the solemn drama to come. For sensitiveness, for exaltation of mood, for supreme technical finish this performance futilizes comparison.

It proves at one stroke why the future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of Dr. Muck as an artist should not be placed in jeopardy by unworthy and unnecessary squabbles over the National Anthem. Germans have prated much about art and the necessity of preserving it from the contaminating touch of war. Let Dr. Muck, therefore, as a high priest of art put his unrepentant Prussianism in complete abeyance so long as he dwells in America and devote himself whole-heartedly to a cause with which America and her allies are not in conflict.

There was an instance of bad programme-making in choosing Berlioz at his feeblest and Liszt at his most bombastic (the overture to "King Lear" and the "Prometheus" symphonic poem) for the same programme. The only interest in such music is historical. To gratify curiosity either piece is worth an occasional performance, but half a concert of the stuff, no matter how well played, is an inexcusable bore. The concert opened with Brahms's E minor symphony. No conductor and no orchestra are better equipped to bring out all the beauties of the least familiar of the Brahms symphonies than those concerned in the performance last evening. The audience appreciated that performance so much that it applauded until Dr. Muck summoned his men to rise in acknowledgment.

The indefatigable searcher after resemblances may have noticed that Brahms in the first movement of this symphony had a premonition of a work none other than "Tosca," and that Liszt's "Prometheus" similarly foresaw Verdi's "Otello." Moussorgsky, after all, is not the only ancestor that can claim modern music.

PITTS SANBORN

m TIMES
dress: New York City

NOV

BROOKLYN GREETS DR. MUCK

Audience of 3,000 Cheers "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Karl Muck conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Brooklyn last night, at the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual series of concerts in that borough, and an Academy audience, 3,000 strong, rose to the national anthem as enthusiastically as a crowd at Carnegie Hall had done the previous night in New York. The Brooklyn program included music of Tschaikowsky, Beethoven, Liszt, and Sibelius, and the conductor shared in generous applause for the later numbers, German, Russian, and Finnish.

President A. Augustus Healy, who with Frank L. Babbett and a committee of the Institute met Major Higginson before the concert, said they had presented the protests of a number of subscribers against Dr. Muck, first, as a "Prussian," and, second, as having "refused to conduct" the anthem. Mr. Higginson told the committee that Dr. Muck had not refused to lead the American air when so requested, and that he was not a Prussian citizen, having been born in Bavaria.

m EVENING POST
dress: New York City

MUSIC AND DRAMA

A Placid Boston Symphony Concert.

If any one shared the apprehensions of the Police Department that there might be a disturbance at last night's appearance of Dr. Muck to conduct the season's first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he did not know the audience that gathers for the Carnegie Hall concerts of this famous organization. To this audience everything this orchestra, or its conductor, does is absolutely above criticism. Probably ninety-five of every hundred of these good and honest folks, if blindfolded or placed behind a screen, could not, to save their lives, tell whether this particular orchestra was playing or the New York Philharmonic or Symphony, or the Philadelphia or Chicago orchestra; yet to hear their pharisaical or adulatory talk one would think that Boston alone provided us with the real thing, everything else in the country being second or third rate. The Boston orchestra certainly is first rate, and Dr. Muck is an admirable conductor in many ways; yet he was known in Berlin as "the metronome," and his programmes are certainly far from being models.

It is this idolatrous attitude of certain listeners—and newspaper critics, chiefly in New York—that has led to the recent unfortunate row over the American anthem. The malady known as "swelled-head" led certain very estimable persons to suppose that this Bostonian organization could do no wrong, even in war time; and that even if the other orchestras lowered themselves by playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," the exalted Boston band need not stoop to anything so inartistic. Now our anthem is not as great music as the Russian national hymn—just discarded because it glorifies the Czar, or the Austrian, or the French; yet it is far better than "The Watch on the Rhine," which the German orchestras play, but which Wagner justly described as "ein flaues Liedertafel Produkt."

Enough for the present. The Boston Orchestra discovered its mistake, and last night Dr. Muck conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner," in an arrangement which introduced some curious contrapuntal jingling suggesting the Venusberg music. It was good to hear it sound so well, and there was as much applause after it as there had been before it when Dr. Muck first came on the stage.

There was no soloist last night, nor was the programme exhilarating. Brahm's fourth symphony, which opened it, is not a favorite, even with many of the Brahmsites, except as to the charming andante, which makes an irresistible appeal. The whole work was performed with splendid virtuosity, and at the end the players had to share the enthusiastic applause with the conductor. The concert closed solemnly with Wagner's "Parsifal" prelude. Before it came a French work, Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, and a Hungarian symphonic poem, Liszt's "Prometheus." Dr. Muck deserves thanks for producing this Hungarian work, even though it is less inspired than most of Liszt's orchestral works; but the Berlioz overture seemed empty and over-long even as played by the Boston orchestra.

SUN
dress: New York City
NOV 10 191

HIGGINSON EXPLAINS ROAR OVER ANTHEM

In Statement Before Brooklyn Concert Lays Blame on Providence Busybodies.

BAND APPLAUDED HERE

Opens Programme With "Star Spangled Banner"—Never Any Refusal, Says Major.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night made public his first complete explanation of the controversy involving the orchestra in an alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Neither he nor Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, ever refused to include the national anthem in the orchestra's repertoire, according to Major Higginson, who added that the conductor and orchestra did not know the anthem had been requested.

From Major Higginson's point of view the entire controversy is little more than a tempest in a teapot, due to a misunderstanding for which Providence, not Boston, is to blame. The statement followed a conference with A. Augustus Healey, president, and other officials of the Brooklyn Institute, under whose auspices the concert was given last evening in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. It follows:

"Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to know the truth and speak it, and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concertgoers and to the orchestra seems but fair and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra.

Strangers Raised Howl.

"The first request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The programme had been made and studied as always and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' until the concert was over.

"Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought they cheerfully did as asked.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra.

"Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families.

"The audiences in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and had a right to expect the same kind of service by the same man as in previous years. They knew that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received.

"In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit. Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; the orchestra is made up of many nationalities including Americans—some of them are our allies.

"This tempest was raised in Providence and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them.

"Looking at the musicians last evening and recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which they prepare the concerts and with which they play them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

"Once more I ask the public to listen to the truth and then act accordingly."

Audience Applauds Orchestra.

The concert last night passed off without the slightest sign of trouble. In fact there was marked enthusiasm from the audience, which filled every seat and a good bit of the standing room in the back aisles. This enthusiasm was helped along no doubt by the orchestra's early demonstration of Major Higginson's claim that it is without bias in so far at least as the "Star Spangled Banner" is concerned.

The national anthem was the first number given, both orchestra and audience standing. And among the audience were officers and soldiers in olive drab and sailors in blue standing stiffly at salute. The controversy had not kept them away and there was certainly nothing in omission or commission to offend them.

Outside the Academy the Captain of the Bergen street police precinct a police lieutenant and a dozen policemen, all in plain clothes, twiddled their thumbs with nothing to do "till to-morrow." Not a hiss or jarring note disturbed one of the best advertised and best attended

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
ddress: New York City
NOV 12 1917
ate

ASKS WASHINGTON WHY IT AIDS MUCK

Patriotic Societies Committee Condemns Capital's Attitude Toward German Musician.

SAYS PATRIOTISM IS INVOLVED

Insists Nothing Should Be Tolerated That Might Interfere With War Activities.

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., Nov. 11.

The National Committee on Patriotic Societies, which has headquarters in Washington, to-night issued a statement in which it challenges the action of those members of Washington society and musical circles who supported Dr. Karl Muck to the extent of staunchly supporting his concert last week at the National Theatre here.

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities?" the statement asks, and then continues: "This is the inquiry coming into the office of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, according to William Mather Lewis, secretary of that organization. The inquiry is prompted by the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburg because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the Capital City.

"The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received at this time. Washington folk who support his concerts say music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The National Committee maintains that the capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question, and therefore Washington folk who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

EVENING WORLD
New York City
NOV 9 - 1917

Dr. Muck Greeted Warmly Leading Boston Orchestra

By Sylvester Rawling.

DR KARL MUCK led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the first concert of its New York season in Carnegie Hall last night. Moreover he directed the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" as the opening number. There was in the air, before the beginning, an unspoken but tense feeling of anticipation, not unmixed with dread, that something might happen. Nevertheless if there were any sympathy among the house full of subscribers with the protests that had been made in other cities against the conductor it found no articulate expression. As a matter of fact, Dr. Muck got a cordial greeting upon his first appearance and was applauded warmly at every opportunity thereafter.

Brahms's fourth symphony in E minor was the principal number. The beauty of the work is pretty generally acknowledged now. Dr. Muck and his players gave it an illuminating exposition and the whole orchestra was brought to its feet to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience. For the rest, there were Berlioz's overture to "King Lear," Liszt's symphonic poem "Prometheus," and Wagner's prelude to "Parsifal," all finely played. It may be doubted whether the latter should find a place on a concert programme and, if with more insistence upon the doubt, as the last number. In it the solemn, consecrational spirit too much prevails. Neither of the three is overburdened with secular joyousness, but the clamor of the Liszt work would have served better for the home-going.

117

EVENING NEW YORKER
New York City. HERALD

Stimmung
— gegen —
Dr. Muck.

Wie Ex-Gouv. Warfield sich ausgesprochen.

Auf der Tour.

Major Higginson klärt Zwischenfall in Providence auf.

Baltimore, Md., 5. November. Ex-Gouverneur Edwin Warfield, einer der prominentesten Bürger der Stadt, erklärte heute inbezug auf das bevorstehende Gastspiel des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters unter Dr. Karl Muck:

„Karl Muck soll kein Orchester in Baltimore dirigieren. Ich habe den Mitgliedern des Polizei-Board mitgeteilt, daß man diesem Mann nicht gestatten würde, die Bevölkerung des Geburtsplatzes des „Star Spangled Banner" zu insultieren. Ich habe ihnen mitgeteilt, daß, wenn notwendig, das Volk dies verhindern würde, und daß ich gerne das Volk führen würde, um einen Insult meinem Land und meiner Flagge gegenüber zu verhindern."

Herr Warfield hat im Lyric Theater, wo das Orchester konzertieren soll, eine große Protestversammlung inszeniert. Eine Militärkapelle und 150 ausgehobene Rekruten aus Camp Meade werden daran teilnehmen.

Higginson erklärt.

Boston, 5. Nov. Major Henry L. Higginson, der bekannte Förderer des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, hat in einer gestrigen Erklärung Dr. Karl Muck, den Dirigenten des Orchesters, von jeglicher Schuld in der Providencer Affäre des „Star Spangled Banner" entlastet und alle Schuld auf sich selbst genommen. Herr Higginson erklärt, das Ersuchen, in Providence die Nationalhymne zu spielen, sei ihm von einigen unbekannten und nicht zu den Subskribenten gehörenden Damen gestellt worden. Dr. Muck habe aber erst davon erfahren, als das Orchester Providence bereits verlassen hatte.

Boston, Mass., 5. November. Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester ist gestern nach Philadelphia abgefahren, wo es morgen abend unter Dr. Karl Mucks Leitung konzertieren wird. Letzterer wird auch bei der letzten Nummer, dem „Star Spangled Banner", den Taktstock schwingen.

n TRIBUNE
ress: New York City
NOV 10 1917
e

Dr. Muck Plays Anthem

But Refuses to Acknowledge Plaudits in Brooklyn

Dr. Karl Muck again directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra while it played "The Star-Spangled Banner" last night. The orchestra played at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, but he omitted the usual acknowledgment of the applause that followed, although after every other number on the programme he turned and bowed graciously as the audience expressed its approval.

The concert was under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and those who were unable to secure seats formed into three rows in the rear of the auditorium.

While a paster attached to the programme announced the national anthem as the last number, the orchestra, as on Thursday night at Carnegie Hall, played it first. Dr. Muck's back remained turned to the audience as the large gathering broke into spontaneous applause at the end of the number. After the second number, however, the German director turned and with an engaging smile bowed several times in acknowledgment of the expression of appreciation.

There was no evidence of resentment at any time during the concert.

EVENING WORLD
s: New York City.
NOV 10 1917

MUCK GIVES HYMN AGAIN AND JUST AS FRIGIDLY

Refuses to Acknowledge Plaudits for "Banner," but Brooklyn Treats Him Cordially.

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, last evening, quite as coolly as he had led it the night before in Carnegie Hall. But the Brooklyn audience plainly did not mind the director's obvious lack of interest in the anthem and showed by its warm applause throughout the evening that it was glad to see him.

Dr. Muck bowed when he first came out on the stage. He refused to turn and acknowledge the applause that followed the anthem as his first number, but he bowed readily enough after each of the four parts of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 and he had to return to the stage twice before the audience would subside at the intermission.

From TIMES
Address: New York City

METHODS "OVER THERE."

Marteau Jailed, Heifetz "Detained," at Outbreak of the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I add my opinion to the chorus of disapproval of the failure to render "The Star-Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its opening concert in Providence the other night? Does Dr. Muck remember how the Germans treated the French artists who were in Germany at the outbreak of the war? Does he recall the case of Marteau, the famous French violinist, professor in the Berlin Royal Conservatory, who was thrown into prison at the outbreak of the war? Does he recall the case of Jasha Heifetz, the Russian violinist, who was detained in prison in the military camps in Germany for two years?

Mr. Higginson's remark that the programs had been made up during the Summertime and, therefore, should not be amended at this time, is amusing because of its childlike simplicity. Dr. Muck could probably explain to Mr. Higginson that in Germany programs of all concerts and recitals, whether private or public, and even the text of the songs, have to be passed upon by the military censor. In Austria the same regulations prevail. For instance, in Prague the Russian, French, and even Bohemian works are barred from the musical programs. Does Mr. Higginson agree with Dr. Muck that rendering "The Star-Spangled Banner" would reflect upon the musical quality of the program?

The apologetic remark was made by Mr. Ellis that "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played at all the pop concerts during the season. That was certainly a heroic action for the fragment of the Symphony Orchestra which was permitted to play in the good old Summertime. Notwithstanding that Mr. Ellis had charge, he was not able to say that Dr. Muck had ever led the orchestra at any time it played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

ELIZAVETA KALOVA.
Boston, Nov. 4, 1917.

ANTHEM AN "INTRUSION."

As Well Frame All Pictures Here in Red, White, and Blue.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The item in Friday's paper in regard to the demand that the Boston Symphony Orchestra play at its concerts "The Star-Spangled Banner" must make some of your readers impatient with the popular clamor for mechanical tests of loyalty. There is about as much reason in requiring at these concerts of classical music the intrusion of a popular anthem, no matter how significant and sacred, as there would be in insisting that every picture shown in our museums and galleries for the duration of the war have frames of red, white, and blue. Those colors may indeed thrill us, but they certainly have no congruity with the canvases displayed. And we can only be the poorer for reducing everything now to the monotony of a single thought, instead of insisting with added fervor on the value to the spirit of these rare moments of harmony, inspiration, and detachment that give us refreshment and courage to throw ourselves into our struggle for democracy.

MABEL FOOTE WEEKS.
New York, Nov. 6, 1917.

TOWN TOPICS
NEW YORK CITY
NOV 8 - 1917

VERS DE SOCIÉTÉ

THE noise last week created by dissonant Dr. Muck,
Within the realms of music hath produced an awful ruck;
The National Air he would not play, and Boston's Symphony
Symphonic is no longer, e'en the tyro that can see.
The venerable Higginson in doldrums dense and blue
Is rent by disaffection of his great orchestral crew,
While all the public clamors with a strong, insistent yell,
"Give Prussian Muck his passports and let him go to ——."

These things to hear, and hear it did, the Metro much hath stirred;
In fact, it is so deeply stirred that forth hath gone the word
That this year on the shelf shall lie in silence ponderous,
The Valkyrs and the Siegfrieds and the Kundrys with Urlus,
When Mrs. Willie Jay took up the cudgels and denounced
The Teuton opera just now, she very soundly trounced
Pro-German tendencies, and I am sure we all agree,
And feel that we can do without them, just as well as she.

I rub my eyes. I can't believe another year has passed,
Nor that in many ways its predecessor it's outclassed.
So much has taken place, so much the period has done;
So much is yet to do before the victory is won.
And, still, some stipulated things must have their day,
Despite all bellic griefs next week, the Horse Show holds its sway.
We'll journey to the Garden, for we love the equine show,
But more than that we love to see who's new "arrived," you know.

The ides of Autumn now have passed, the hordes have come to town;
The outer set, the dictators of more or less renown.
Among them note the Gilfords, down on dear old Av'nue Lex;
Conditions there are something even you or I would vex.
John goes to market as of yore, and buys a pound of cepes,
While mamma in the window stands lamenting her front steps,
For, be it said, the subway has encroached on their domain,
And through the basement they must go, the parlor floor to gain.

The Ephemeron.

STAATSZEITUNG
ss: New York City.
NOV 9 - 1917

Bostoner erwarten keine Störungen.

Auch kein Einwand gegen Kreislers Auftreten in Brooklyn.

Aller Voraussicht nach wird das für heute abend anberaumte Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie Orchesters in der Academy of Music in aller Ruhe verlaufen. Wie die gestern ausgegebenen Programme besagen, wird das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" am Schlusse des Konzerts spielen. Es verlautet, daß Major Henry L. Higginson mit dem Orchester nach der Kirchenstadt kommen werde, um im Laufe des Abends einige Worte an das Publikum zu richten.

Hetzer benützten die Pittsburger Vorfälle betreffs des Auftretens des gefeierten Geigenvirtuosen Fritz Kreisler, um auf dessen Konzert in der hiesigen Academy of Music in unliebsamer Weise aufmerksam zu machen. Vom Brooklyner Institut wird indessen bekannt gegeben, daß bisher auch nicht ein Einwand gegen das Auftreten des Künstlers in Brooklyn erhoben wurde und auch keiner erwartet wird.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date NOV 11 1917

Discords

Musically Speaking

THE Metropolitan Opera House drops German opera for the season. Simultaneously Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at Providence, R. I., is attacked, and offers his resignation. Its acceptance is withheld pending the attitude of audiences at a coming series of concerts. In Washington the orchestra is warmly greeted, but is warned from Baltimore by a mass-meeting of indignant citizens. Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, is barred from playing in Pittsburgh.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date NOV 11 1917

The Muck Episode

(A Statement by Colonel Henry L. Higginson)

Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to know the truth and speak it and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concert-goers and to the orchestra seems but fair and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra. The first request for "The Star-Spangled Banner" came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The programme had been made and studied, as always, and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for "The Star-Spangled Banner" until the concert was over. Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary, the music was well received.

When the next concert came in Boston "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made a question of patriotism—that was taken as a matter of course—and, whatever the musicians thought, they cheerfully did as asked. Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers, I never threatened to disband the orchestra.

Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families. The audiences in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and have a right to expect the same kind of service by the same men as in previous years. They know that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received. In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit, and I have gladly met the requests for "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck is not a Prussian. The orchestra is made up of many nationalities—some of them are our allies. This tempest was raised in Providence, and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them. Recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which the musicians prepared the concerts and with which they played them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

Once more I ask the public to listen to the truth and then act accordingly.

117

EVENING NEW YORKER HERALD

: New York City.

Stimmung
— gegen —
Dr. Muck.

Wie Ex-Gouv. Warfield sich ausgesprochen.

Auf der Tour.

Major Higginson klärt Zwischenfall in Providence auf.

Baltimore, Md., 5. November. Ex-Gouverneur Edwin Warfield, einer der prominentesten Bürger der Stadt, erklärte heute inbezug auf das bevorstehende Gastspiel des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters unter Dr. Karl Muck:

„Karl Muck soll kein Orchester in Baltimore dirigieren. Ichhabe den Mitgliedern des Polizei-Board mitgeteilt, daß man diesem Mann nicht gestatten würde, die Bevölkerung des Geburtsplatzes des „Star Spangled Banner" zu insultieren. Ich habe ihnen mitgeteilt, daß, wenn notwendig, das Volk dies verhindern würde, und daß ich gerne das Volk führen würde, um einen Insult meinem Land und meiner Flagge gegenüber zu verhindern."

Herr Warfield hat im Lyric Theater, wo das Orchester konzertieren soll, eine große Protestversammlung inszeniert Eine Militärkapelle und 150 ausgehobene Rekruten aus Camp Meade werden daran teilnehmen.

Higginson erklärt.

Boston, 5. Nov. Major Henry L. Higginson, der bekannte Förderer des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, hat in einer gestrigen Erklärung Dr. Karl Muck, den Dirigenten des Orchesters, von jeglicher Schuld in der Providencer Affäre des „Star Spangled Banner" entlastet und alle Schuld auf sich selbst genommen. Herr Higginson erklärt, das Ersuchen, in Providence die Nationalhymne zu spielen, sei ihm von einigen unbekannten und nicht zu den Subskribenten gehörenden Damen gestellt worden. Dr. Muck habe aber erst davon erfahren, als das Orchester Providence bereits verlassen hatte.

Boston, Mass., 5. November. Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester ist gestern nach Philadelphia abgefahren, wo es morgen abend unter Dr. Karl Mucks Leitung konzertieren wird. Letzterer wird auch bei der letzten Nummer, dem „Star Spangled Banner", den Taktstock schwingen.

n TRIBUNE

lress: New York City

e

Dr. Muck Plays Anthem

But Refuses to Acknowledge Plaudits in Brooklyn

Dr. Karl Muck again directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra while it played "The Star-Spangled Banner" last night. The orchestra played at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, but he omitted the usual acknowledgment of the applause that followed, although after every other number on the programme he turned and bowed graciously as the audience expressed its approval.

The concert was under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and those who were unable to secure seats formed into three rows in the rear of the auditorium.

While a paster attached to the programme announced the national anthem as the last number, the orchestra, as on Thursday night at Carnegie Hall, played it first. Dr. Muck's back remained turned to the audience as the large gathering broke into spontaneous applause at the end of the number. After the second number, however, the German director turned and with an engaging smile bowed several times in acknowledgment of the expression of appreciation.

There was no evidence of resentment at any time during the concert.

EVENING WORLD

s: New York City.

NOV 10 1917

MUCK GIVES HYMN AGAIN AND JUST AS FRIGIDLY

Refuses to Acknowledge Plaudits for "Banner," but Brooklyn Treats Him Cordially.

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, last evening, quite as coolly as he had led it the night before in Carnegie Hall. But the Brooklyn audience plainly did not mind the director's obvious lack of interest in the anthem and showed by its warm applause throughout the evening that it was glad to see him.

Dr. Muck bowed when he first came out on the stage. He refused to turn and acknowledge the applause that followed the anthem as his first number, but he bowed readily enough after each of the four parts of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 and he had to return to the stage twice before the audience would subside at the intermission.

From TIMES

Address: New York City

METHODS "OVER THERE."

Marteau Jailed, Heifetz "Detained," at Outbreak of the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I add my opinion to the chorus of disapproval of the failure to render "The Star-Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its opening concert in Providence the other night? Does Dr. Muck remember how the Germans treated the French artists who were in Germany at the outbreak of the war? Does he recall the case of Marteau, the famous French violinist, professor in the Berlin Royal Conservatory, who was thrown into prison at the outbreak of the war? Does he recall the case of Jasha Heifetz, the Russian violinist, who was detained in prison in the military camps in Germany for two years?

Mr. Higginson's remark that the programs had been made up during the Summertime and, therefore, should not be amended at this time, is amusing because of its childlike simplicity. Dr. Muck could probably explain to Mr. Higginson that in Germany programs of all concerts and recitals, whether private or public, and even the text of the songs, have to be passed upon by the military censor. In Austria the same regulations prevail. For instance, in Prague the Russian, French, and even Bohemian works are barred from the musical programs. Does Mr. Higginson agree with Dr. Muck that rendering "The Star-Spangled Banner" would reflect upon the musical quality of the program?

The apologetic remark was made by Mr. Ellis that "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played at all the pop concerts during the season. That was certainly a heroic action for the fragment of the Symphony Orchestra which was permitted to play in the good old Summertime. Notwithstanding that Mr. Ellis had charge, he was not able to say that Dr. Muck had ever led the orchestra at any time it played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

ELIZAVETA KALOVA.

Boston, Nov. 4, 1917.

ANTHEM AN "INTRUSION."

As Well Frame All Pictures Here in Red, White, and Blue.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The item in Friday's paper in regard to the demand that the Bostor Symphony Orchestra play at its concerts "The Star-Spangled Banner" must make some of your readers impatient with the popular clamor for mechanical tests of loyalty. There is about as much reason in requiring at these concerts of classical music the intrusion of a popular anthem, no matter how significant and sacred, as there would be in insisting that every picture shown in our museums and galleries for the duration of the war have frames of red, white, and blue. Those colors may indeed thrill us, but they certainly have no congruity with the canvases displayed. And we can only be the poorer for reducing everything now to the monotony of a single thought, instead of insisting with added fervor on the value to the spirit of these rare moments of harmony, inspiration, and detachment that give us refreshment and courage to throw ourselves into our struggle for democracy.

MABEL FOOTE WEEKS.

New York, Nov. 6, 1917.

TOWN TOPICS

NEW YORK CITY

NOV 8 - 1917

VERS DE SOCIÉTÉ

THE noise last week created by dissonant Dr. Muck,
Within the realms of music hath produced an awful ruck;
The National Air he would not play, and Boston's Symphony
Symphonic is no longer, e'en the tyro that can see.
The venerable Higginson in doldrums dense and blue
Is rent by disaffection of his great orchestral crew,
While all the public clamors with a strong, insistent yell,
"Give Prussian Muck his passports and let him go to ——."

These things to hear, and hear it did, the Metro much hath stirred;
In fact, it is so deeply stirred that forth hath gone the word
That this year on the shelf shall lie in silence ponderous,
The Valkyrs and the Siegfrieds and the Kundrys with Urlus,
When Mrs. Willie Jay took up the cudgels and denounced
The Teuton opera just now, she very soundly trounced
Pro-German tendencies, and I am sure we all agree,
And feel that we can do without them, just as well as she.

I rub my eyes. I can't believe another year has passed,
Nor that in many ways its predecessor it's outclassed.
So much has taken place, so much the period has done;
So much is yet to do before the victory is won.
And, still, some stipulated things must have their day,
Despite all bellic griefs next week, the Horse Show holds its sway.
We'll journey to the Garden, for we love the equine show,
But more than that we love to see who's new "arrived," you know.

The ides of Autumn now have passed, the hordes have come to town;
The outer set, the dictators of more or less renown.
Among them note the Gilfords, down on dear old Av'nue Lex;
Conditions there are something even you or I would vex.
John goes to market as of yore, and buys a pound of cepes,
While mamma in the window stands lamenting her front steps,
For, be it said, the subway has encroached on their domain,
And through the basement they must go, the parlor floor to gain.

The Ephemeron.

STAATSZEITUNG

ss: New York City.

NOV 9 - 1917

Bostoner erwarten keine Störungen.

Auch kein Einwand gegen Kreislers Auftreten in Brooklyn.

Aller Voraussicht nach wird das für heute abend anberaumte Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie Orchesters in der Academy of Music in aller Ruhe verlaufen. Wie die gestern ausgegebener Programme besagen, wird das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" am Schlusse des Konzerts spielen. Es verlautet, daß Major Henry L. Higginson mit dem Orchester nach der Kirchenstadt kommen werde, um im Laufe des Abends einige Worte an das Publikum zu richten.

Hetzer benützten die Pittsburger Vorfälle betreffs des Auftretens des gefeierten Geigenvirtuosen Fritz Kreisler, um auf dessen Konzert in der hiesigen Academy of Music in unliebsamer Weise aufmerksam zu machen. Vom Brooklyner Institut wird indessen bekannt gegeben, daß bisher auch nicht ein Einwand gegen das Auftreten des Künstlers in Brooklyn erhoben wurde und auch keiner erwartet wird.

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

ate NOV 11 1917

Discords

Musically Speaking

THE Metropolitan Opera House drops German opera for the season. Simultaneously Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at Providence, R. I., is attacked, and offers his resignation. Its acceptance is withheld pending the attitude of audiences at a coming series of concerts. In Washington the orchestra is warmly greeted, but is warned from Baltimore by a mass-meeting of indignant citizens. Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, is barred from playing in Pittsburgh.

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Date NOV 11 1917

The Muck Episode

(A Statement by Colonel Henry L. Higginson)

Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to know the truth and speak it and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concert-goers and to the orchestra seems but fair and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra. The first request for "The Star-Spangled Banner" came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The programme had been made and studied, as always, and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for "The Star-Spangled Banner" until the concert was over. Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary, the music was well received.

When the next concert came in Boston "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps sixty times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the management. At that time nobody made a question of patriotism—that was taken as a matter of course—and, whatever the musicians thought, they cheerfully did as asked. Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers, I never threatened to disband the orchestra.

Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families. The audiences in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and have a right to expect the same kind of service by the same men as in previous years. They know that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received. In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit, and I have gladly met the requests for "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck is not a Prussian. The orchestra is made up of many nationalities—some of them are our allies. This tempest was raised in Providence, and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them. Recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which the musicians prepared the concerts and with which they played them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

Once more I ask the public to listen to the truth and then act accordingly.

WORLD
New York City
NOV 11 1917

MUSIC

By Pierre V. R. Key.

IN these days, when patriotism is the foremost thing in the lives of every good American, there has come from the field of music a number of occurrences furnishing proper grounds for public indignation. One of these was the unfortunate incident in which Dr. Karl Muck figured, wherein he plainly showed his state of mind toward the country that is giving him a large monetary income. Dr. Muck at first refused to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner;" then he resigned his post; then he led Mr. Henry Higginson's musicians in a Boston performance of the national anthem—as he did subsequently in other cities.

Baltimore—the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner"—would have made it exceedingly hot for the Kaiser's official musical conductor had he put in an appearance there. So it is just as well for the Prussian music master that he and the Boston Symphony stayed away.

Last Thursday night the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first New York concert of the season; but the Carnegie Hall audience showed no antagonism toward Dr. Muck, even though he refused to acknowledge the applause which came after he had led the musicians in "The Star Spangled Banner," which was announced on the printed programme as the first number.

* * *

Now, the amusing part of the Muck case, so far as New York is concerned, centres in the conductor's attitude on those occasions when he has appeared here in public at the head of the Boston Symphony men. His manner has fairly reeked of intolerance; yet the public here has made no substantial sign of protest, because Dr. Muck's eminence in his profession. They have even endured unnecessarily badly made programmes, some of which have been dry and dreary to a point that prompted more than one written protest from subscribers.

Even if Dr. Muck were a great maker of symphony programmes—which he is not—and even if he were the master conductor in works other than those of severely classical mould, his recent attitude could scarcely be condoned. Regarding him solely as an orchestra conductor, he does not appear to certain experts to be indispensable to the continued artistic maintenance of the Boston Symphony. If Dr. Muck were to disappear forever from the conductor's stand of this organization a successor could be found who would do quite as well as he in most respects and far better in others.

There can be no gainsaying Dr. Muck's musicianly qualifications: he is soundly equipped, his routine is thoroughly developed and in the leading of "pure" music compositions his academic leanings enable him to attain a notably high standard of accomplishment. But one too often misses poetic fancy in romantic works Dr. Muck conducts, despite the director's achievements in securing orchestral coloring from his men. In short, Dr. Muck never permits the sensitive hearer to forget that he is a drillmaster, for he is that, always, to the subordination of all else.

* * *

The time has come, it would seem, to impress upon foreign musicians of all kinds that if they are to be pa enormously for their services th their deportment should be in kee ing. Covert as well as outspoke sarcasm should be stopped. And for insults, they should be treate with the one most effective remed possible—dismissal or a refusal the public to have anything whats ever to do with them.

If America is good enough for foi eign musicians to spend the greate part of each year here it is goo enough to be treated with considera tion. No other land offers the possi bilities, either financially or from a standpoint of prestige, to be had over here. Nowadays the artist who is not indorsed by America is not regarded in Europe as having attained the highest pinacle in his or her profession.

HERALD
New York City
NOV 12 1917

IN DEFENCE OF DR. MUCK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

Is it not high time that the truth on the subject of the Dr. Muck controversy should be published in your pages? Also a protest against such attacks as those embodied in the article in this morning's issue of your paper from a Baltimore paper:—

The facts are as follows:—

First—Dr. Muck has never once refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence or anywhere else. He did not even know that there had been any request that he should play the anthem until his return to Boston after the occasion of the Providence concert.

Second—We have been informed by Major Higginson, whose integrity and patriotism are unquestioned, that he has Washington's authority for the fact that Dr. Muck is working here solely in the interests of his art and of the orchestra of which he is a blameless, devoted and adored leader.

A TRUE PATRIOT AND AT THE SAME TIME A LOVER OF MUSIC AND FAIR PLAY.

Brookline, Mass., Nov. 7, 1917.

AMERICAN
New York City.

MUCK CAPTURES LARGE AUDIENCE

Agitation Against Symphony Director Subsides Under Spell of Art.

By MAX SMITH.

As far as New York is concerned, the agitation regarding Dr. Karl Muck seems to have subsided. He was greeted heartily yesterday by the large audience that attended the Boston Symphony Society's first matinee in Carnegie Hall. After the introductory performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" under his direction nothing occurred to divert attention from the purely artistic proceedings of the afternoon.

Tha tthese proceedings were sustained throughout on a lofty plane goes without saying. The concert not only brought clearly into evidence once more the superlative excellence of the orchestra itself, which, under Dr. Muck's leadership, has never shown the slightest tendency to deteriorate, but proved to be highly enjoyable from beginning to end.

Nothing on the programme gave keener pleasure, however, than Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which was read in a spirit of true reverence for the master's intention without undue attention to those opportunities for dramatic, or, as some persons might say, theatrical, effect, so dear to the heart of many modern conductors.

Decidedly Dr. Muck's interpretation is more academic than those of Nikisch or Mahler. It goes against the grain of this leader to indulge in anything that might be construed as an exaggeration, not to say an appeal to the gallery, for he is the kind of man who would scorn to offend the taste of the few in order to win the acclaim of the many.

Yet, who can say tthe music of Beethoven, as treated yesterday, lacked virility, intensity, power? And who could justly have accused Dr. Muck of coldness after hearing the performances under his baton of Sibelius's symphonic poem, "Finlandia," and Rachmaninoff's poetically conceived, emotionally vital and exquisitely orchestrated, "Island of the Dead?"

Though brilliantly played, Enesco's fascinating "Rhapsodie Roumaine" in A major (opus 11, No. 1) might have had a little more elasticity and fire. But surely it would be unreasonable to expect a musician, no matter how gifted, to be at his best in every style. Versatility, after all, often goes hand in hand with superficiality.

TRIBUNE
New York City
NOV 11 1917

Washington Censured For Receiving Muck

[Staff Correspondence]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The capital patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are charged with lack of patriotism in giving their support to Dr. Karl Muck in a statement issued to-day by the National Committee of Patriotic Societies.

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities?" reads the statement. "Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the capital city.

"The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received at this time. Washington people who support his concerts say that music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The national committee maintains that the capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question, and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

AMERICAN
ress: New York City.
te NOV 10

Muck Plays National Anthem in Brooklyn

Again last night Dr. Karl Muck waved his baton for "The Star Spangled Banner"—this time in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of a series of five concerts.

It was remarked that the director failed to turn and bow his acknowledgment of the liberal applause which greeted the National anthem. There were 2,300 persons in the theatre and hundreds were turned away.

m TIMES
dress: New York City
te

"Contrapuntal Camouflage."

For the musical minded, wrote James Huneker in The Philadelphia Press on hearing Karl Muck lead the national anthem over there before he did it in New York, there was interest in the Boston conductor's reading of "The Star-Spangled Banner," whose composer, an Englishman, would, if alive, be astonished at the excitement over his anacreontic song. Mr. Stokowski had conducted the anthem with more breadth and passion, Dr. Muck with more finesse and precision. The version he used has a series of scales for the strings—contrapuntal camouflage, is Mr. Huneker's term—as the brass intones the brave old tune. The performance was stimulating and it did not damage by its contiguity the mighty C Minor Symphony of Beethoven, which opened the Quaker program.

SUN
New York City.
1917

Stalking the Lesser Evil.

That St. Louis stops its ears to FRIEDA HEMPEL'S voice and New England detects a Prussian accent in the Boston Symphony Orchestra as conducted by Dr. MUCK is hardly more than natural, for these are nationally prominent figures and equally prominent enemy sympathizers. In the way of injustice and unwarranted violence more is to be feared from the little local outbreaks, such as the hector fest in the hectic atmosphere of Billings, Montana, where a State official and a city official have been deposed and a small tradesman was forced to kiss the flag.

One of the culprits was accused of pro-German utterances; another had refused to buy Liberty bonds; the third had destroyed a Liberty bond application blank. These offences were mild, and the offenders probably felt that they were within their rights. They are likely to feel as indignant as Americans or American Germans who have been badly used somewhere in Germany.

The punishment in such mild cases as these seems oppressively heavy as long as actual spies, who plot against the lives of American citizens, are left almost unpunished.

When the greater agents of Germany have been put out of the way it will be time to deal with the smaller. When the American traitors have been silenced it will be time to prosecute the German pro-Germans. Until then, at least, it will be unlawful and undignified to abuse any person because of natural sympathies passively expressed.

Freie Presse
s: Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 9 1917

Dr. Muck in Brooklyn

„Star Spangled Banner" bildet Finale des heutigen Symphonie-Konzerts.

Heute Abend giebt das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester das erste Konzert der Saison in Brooklyns Academy of Music und man ist gespannt darauf, was für eine Aufnahme der durch die Kontroverse über das Spielen des „Star Spangled Banner" zu peinlicher Notorität gelangte Kapellmeister Dr. Carl Muck und seine Musiker im Borough der Kirchen erhalten werden. Nach dem vom Brooklyn Institut für das Konzert ausgesandten Programm wird die Nationalhymne zum Schluß der Vortragsordnung exekutirt werden. Fritz Kreisler, der österreichische Violinvirtuose, dessen Auftreten in einigen Städten durch patriotische Verbände inhibirt ward, ist für den 19. November mit einem Konzert in Brooklyn angekündigt und man erwartet hier keine Störung.

REDUCTION

RATIO

15x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

m TRIBUNE
ress: New York City
NOV 11 1917

Dr. Muck Balks at "The Star-Spangled Banner"; Resigns

WAR has invaded the American musical world. Almost at the same time that the Expeditionary Forces in France suffer their first casualties in a trench raid by the Germans, the music-loving reserves at home are stirred by two quite unrelated events that threaten to remove even music from the plane of "business as usual." These are the dropping of German opera by the Metropolitan Opera House and the incident in connection with Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

No fuss accompanied the Metropolitan's announcement that during the coming season German opera would not be given, and that Mme. Gadski and Otto Göritz, said to be strong pro-German sympathizers, would not be heard at the Metropolitan. The incident has no reference to the Dr. Muck affair. The question of the playing of the national anthem was not raised, nor was the patriotism of any individual or body of individuals in question. "The directors reached the conclusion that to continue to produce German opera might enable Germany, by garbling and patching, to print 'news' dispatches for home consumption which would tend to put heart in the German people. . . . to convince the German people that this nation was not heart and soul in the war."

Dr. Karl Muck

© Garo.

Incidentally, a number of famous singers were dropped along with Teutonic music.

The case of Dr. Muck, however, attained the heights of sensation, if not of notoriety. As leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, former leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Königlicher Preussischer General Musik Direktor, Dr. Muck, at a concert in Providence, refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the request of several members of the audience. To play such a piece of music, the director said, was "very embarrassing" for a man of his artistic temperament, and insistence on a rendition was "almost an insult." In brief, the leader made his plea on the ground that the national anthem, not being high-class music, would spoil the programme of the orchestra.

Things at once began to happen. The Rhode Island Council of National Defence adopted resolutions characterizing the refusal as "a deliberately insulting attitude." Thomas Howick, special agent for the Department of Justice at Providence, recommended to Washington that the concerts of the orchestra be prohibited unless the anthem were played. Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, backed the leader, threatening to disband the orchestra.

In defence of his refusal to play, Dr. Muck gave out the following statement:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of the artistic taste and principles—for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives from twenty-five different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything that would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"We want no consciousness of national differences in the orchestra. To introduce such a thing would disrupt an organization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"To ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art. The public has no right to demand it. I am following Manager Higginson's wishes."

His Resignation Has Been Given, But Not Yet Accepted

At a concert immediately following, Dr. Muck led the orchestra in the national air, and then his resignation was announced from the platform by Major Higginson. Later, it was decided to withhold acceptance of the resignation until after a forthcoming tour of Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn. If there appeared public demand for Dr. Muck's removal and for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programme of the orchestra, then the resignation would take effect.

Apparently, the orchestra was warmly received in Washington, but long before it was due at Baltimore that city, the home of "The Star-Spangled Banner," put itself forcibly on record against receiving any orchestra directed by Dr. Muck. Led by former Governor Warfield, a mass-meeting was held in the Lyric Theatre Tuesday as a protest. The following extracts from an account of it published in "The Baltimore Sun" describe the temper of the meeting:

"The meeting resolved itself into a great plea to the government to intern not only Dr. Muck but all enemy aliens who are a menace to the safety of the American people. There was cheer after cheer when this was called for, the mightiest cheer of all coming when Secretary of State Thomas B. Simmons pointed out that the strongest recommendation of the American people was that 'deserving cases' be given not less than the 'firing squad at sunrise.'

"Governor Warfield, who was also warmly applauded as he walked on the stage, lost no time in calling the meeting to order.

"'Some people say,' he began, 'that our national anthem, that we all love so dearly, should not be played on certain occasions and in connection with certain artistic concerts. I say it should be played everywhere. It is the hymn that has stirred the heart of America for a hundred years. The day is coming when 'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be sung by every free nation on the globe, and the people will jump to their feet when they hear it, just as you have jumped to your feet to-day.'

As for Art—"Give Me Old-Fashioned Music!"

"'Talk about musical art,' continued the former Governor, while the crowd laughed derisively; 'all I've got to say is, give me the old-fashioned music. I have been taught to reverence that flag, and when I heard of a certain leader's insult to it [hisses] I was indignant.'

"'Muck ought to have been shot after that,' called a woman in the gallery.

"'I wrote a letter to the Police Board and told them Baltimore wouldn't stand for that leader coming here,' continued Governor Warfield, and cries of 'Right! Right! Bravo!' came from the audience.

"'Philadelphia stood for it!' cried one. It was then that Governor Warfield exclaimed: 'God help Philadelphia for the scandalous way in which she received this Prussian last night.'

"Governor Warfield then read extracts from his letter to the Police Board. 'I had a right to resent the attempt to force this alien enemy on the people of Baltimore,' he said. 'I think the best place for him is in an internment camp.'

"'Put 'em all there,' came the cries from all parts of the hall.

"'There is no necessity for a mob or mob violence,' continued Governor Warfield, 'but we would have, I believe, "interned" this man very quickly if he had come to Baltimore.'

"Great cheers greeted this.

"The crowd just wouldn't be restrained. In the midst of the brief addresses which were being made men and women in the audience, spurred on by their patriotic impulses and indignation, broke in with exclamations of all sorts. When one speaker suggested an internment camp for Dr. Muck a man in the audience shouted 'a wooden box would be a better place.' A woman in the gallery was in favor of 'shooting now all traitors.' Captain Hughes said Dr. Muck's action was enough 'to make Francis Scott Key rise out of his grave,' and when he added, 'I hope he will, and haunt Muck until doomsday,' the crowd just yelled with delight and called for Key's ghost."

Meantime, the cry against foreign musicians spreads. From Pittsburgh comes a report that feeling has developed against the appearance there of Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, who was wounded early in the war. Since then he has been in this country and has sent money back to Austria. Milwaukee reports that her orchestra will play the national anthem at every concert this season. Colonel Roosevelt would intern Dr. Muck as an alien. The St. Louis Symphony, led by Max Zach, has followed the lead of Milwaukee. It is also pointed out that the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Philharmonic have been playing the national anthem without damage to the artistic sensibilities of their leaders.

Comment by the press and other musicians reveals interesting differences of opinion on the subject of Dr. Muck and German music, the two being generally associated now that the issue raised by the Metropolitan is carried on by the Dr. Muck incident. The cry for tolerance on the one hand is opposed by the cry of "Intern him!" and bar German music quite as vehemently on the other.

Distinguishing Dr. Muck from German music, one finds a fairly large and tolerant following opposed to barring German music. "Is there not too much ado about Dr. Muck?" asks "The New York World." And continues:

"There is no public clamor against German symphony music, which is wholly different from German opera, and there is no desire anywhere to have the famous Boston orchestra disband.

"The whole question is as concerns its alien conductor's position with regard to playing the national anthem, a position he made needlessly offensive by his failure to use ordinary tact in the matter. His artistic usefulness in this country may be done for, but that fact in no way impairs the orchestra's usefulness. It was a great musical organization before Muck and should continue to exemplify its high ideals without him."

"The Evening Post" is also a dissenter against the almost universal approval of the anti-German music move, particularly regretting the dropping of German operas at the Metropolitan, "if only because it shows less breadth of tolerance than is to be found in London, where they are giving German opera right along, or in Vienna, where Shakespeare's plays are frequently produced. These great works of art surely rise above international rivalries and warfare. Particularly is this true of Wagner's works. As we have already pointed out, Wagner was one of the most anti-Prussian Germans who ever lived. He hated Prussia and her officialdom, which he frequently denounced, and if he were living could surely be counted upon to be in opposition to-day."

Probably the most extreme of those objecting to the treatment of German music is Bernard H. Ridder, writing in the "Staats-Zeitung" under the heading of "Art and Asininity":

"A spirit of blind, unreasoning prejudice seems to be stealing its way into every channel of American life under the cloak of 'patriotism.' The malignant manifestations of the hydra-headed monster increase with the days. Whatever incurs the displeasure of any group of the bilious or gouty in our citizenry is immediately anathematized and maranathematized as disloyal or unpatriotic. That art should long escape those 'amiable bulls who are determined to make every color scarlet' was not to be expected.

"The word has gone forth from them that German opera shall not be sung at the Metropolitan this season.

"The Metropolitan opera is controlled by a small group of still smaller minded gentlemen of great wealth and inconsiderable powers of reflection. Their little world 'five miles round' has taken a plebiscite and determined that the war aims of President Wilson are all wrong. They have amended his war proclamation to include the German people as well as the imperial German government, and now extend it to embrace the master minds of Teutonic genius. The artistic creations of Wagner and Strauss and Humperdinck and Mozart and Beethoven, which so offend the jewelled sensitiveness of the ears that grace the Metropolitan 'Horseshoe,' have already passed into their allotted place in history. They will be found there in all their vigor and sublimity when the present world war is as dead as the struggles between Rome and Carthage."

But in general the press seizes upon the two incidents to express satisfaction at the possible internment of Dr. Muck, if not to develop something of the war spirit. "The Providence Journal," warning Major Higginson not to bring his orchestra back to Providence with Dr. Muck as leader, says: "The place of that insolent German music master is not on the American concert stage, but in an internment camp, under strict guard."

American singers, thinks "The New York Herald," "can be engaged to replace those heavy German singers, whose gutturals and garglings should not be permitted beyond the confines of concentration camps, with Dr. Muck as their chief auditor."

A good deal of criticism attaches itself to Dr. Muck and his attempt to explain why he did not wish to play the national air. Few editors or musicians accept his explanation as sincere. "There has been, of course, a considerable dodging of the issue in the reasons given," says Richard Aldrich in "The New York Times":

"Dr. Muck is a Prussian, an official of the Prussian court . . . and naturally does not like to conduct the national anthem of a country with which his own is at war. It goes hard against the grain now; it might get him into trouble in Berlin when he returns.

"Neither Dr. Muck nor Major Higginson will have found any general demand in New York for the elimination of German music in larger proportion than that of other nations for the simple and undeniable reason that there is more and better German music than music of other nations. But he has not hesitated to play French, Russian, Finnish and Rumanian music. All these nationalities are represented on the two programmes that he announced for this week in New York. To these it was necessary that one piece be added closely identified with the United States, though composed in England by an Englishman. Its name is 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'"

Most of the Directors Sympathize With Germany

Similarly H. E. Krehbiel, musical critic of The Tribune, points out the "rub" in the director's excuse. "It is an open secret, we believe, that except Walter Damrosch of the Symphony Society and Modest Altschuler of the Russian Symphony Orchestra (but here we are speaking largely on presumption) all the conductors of the symphony orchestras in the United States sympathize with the enemies of our country."

At the same time Mr. Krehbiel is inclined to agree with those who think it will be difficult for some Americans to remain quiet when they see alien musicians fattening on the bounty of a country whose needs are "bound to grow larger as the people are called on to make material sacrifices in its behalf. After all, some will say, if meatless and wheatless days so that our allies may be fed, why not musicless days so that the enemy in our own land may not devour of our plenty?"

"The Philadelphia Public Ledger" would let Dr. Muck's resignation stand, while "The Baltimore Sun" thinks loyal Americans "should prevent officially the performance of any such organization as Muck's." "The Utica Press" also thinks this country will no longer be considered a gold mine by European musicians who fear the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" will interfere with a musical programme. Over in Brooklyn, where the orchestra is billed for a performance this week, "The Eagle" reports "gossip about 'a silent treatment' to be given to the Prussian at the Academy on Friday night, and if the Germans in the audience undertake to acclaim him there is pretty certain to be a counter demonstration and a row. The way to avoid the risk of such an unseemly collision is to announce at once that Dr. Muck's resignation will be accepted as soon as a new conductor can be found."

In short, sentiment in the country is readily stirred up against Dr. Muck. People are getting "grouchy." If the press is to be believed, the people want to hear "The Star-Spangled Banner" before or after a musical programme. Tolerance is all right in its place, but so is the German—in his place.

Make 'Em All Do It

—From The New York Evening Telegram

DR. KARL MUCK was born in Darmstadt, Germany, October 22, 1859, the son of a Bavarian ministerial counsellor. He studied at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipsic, in 1880 receiving a Ph. D. That same year, having studied in the Leipsic Conservatory, he made his first appearance as a pianist in the Gewandhaus. Soon after that he was opera conductor at Salzburg, and then at Brünn and Gräz. In 1886 he was first conductor at Prague, and in 1892, after he had appeared in Berlin as conductor of Neumann's travelling opera company, he settled in that city as conductor at the Imperial Opera House. In 1906, having been granted a two years' leave of absence, he came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1908 he returned to his duties in Berlin, but four years later renounced them completely, sailed for America once more and reëstablished himself with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"It is a personage of consequence in the musical world to-day who comes to take command of the orchestra in its twenty-sixth year," ran a newspaper comment at the time of the conductor's first arrival in this country. "Dr. Muck is conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin. His temporary release, by consent of the Kaiser, was obtained only under the same entente cordiale that exists between the German Emperor and America as a whole, whereby a bronze Frederick the Great now stands in Washington and a live Columbia professor, Dr. Burgess, gives instruction abroad to Wilhelm and his people."

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

m TRIBUNE
ress: New York City
NOV 11 1917

Dr. Muck Balks at "The Star-S[pangled Ban]ng

WAR has invaded the American musical world. Almost at the same time that the Expeditionary Forces in France suffer their first casualties in a trench raid by the Germans, the music-loving reserves at home are stirred by two quite unrelated events that threaten to remove even music from the plane of "business as usual." These are the dropping of German opera by the Metropolitan Opera House and the incident in connection with Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

No fuss accompanied the Metropolitan's announcement that during the coming season German opera would not be given, and that Mme. Gadski and Otto Göritz, said to be strong pro-German sympathizers, would not be heard at the Metropolitan. The incident has no reference to the Dr. Muck affair. The question of the playing of the national anthem was not raised, nor was the patriotism of any individual or body of individuals in question. "The directors reached the conclusion that to continue to produce German opera might enable Germany, by garbling and patching, to print 'news' dispatches for home consumption which would tend to put heart in the German people. . . . to convince the German people that this nation was not heart and soul in the war."

Dr. Karl Muck

© Garo.

Incidentally, a number of famous singers were dropped along with Teutonic music.

The case of Dr. Muck, however, attained the heights of sensation, if not of notoriety. As leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, former leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin and Königlicher Preussischer General Musik Direktor, Dr. Muck, at a concert in Providence, refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the request of several members of the audience. To play such a piece of music, the director said, was "very embarrassing" for a man of his artistic temperament, and insistence on a rendition was "almost an insult." In brief, the leader made his plea on the ground that the national anthem, not being high-class music, would spoil the programme of the orchestra.

Things at once began to happen. The Rhode Island Council of National Defence adopted resolutions characterizing the refusal as "a deliberately insulting attitude." Thomas Howick, special agent for the Department of Justice at Providence, recommended to Washington that the concerts of the orchestra be prohibited unless the anthem were played. Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and principal patron of the orchestra, backed the leader, threatening to disband the orchestra.

In defence of his refusal to play, Dr. Muck gave out the following statement:

"Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake—a violation of the artistic taste and principles—for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

"Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra? No! The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperaments and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult.

"Art is international. I have representatives from twenty-five different nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented. For months I have tried to keep peace among them. So far I have succeeded. And I do not want to introduce anything that would destroy the esprit de corps which it has taken so many years to bring to its present state of perfection.

"We want no consciousness of national differences in the orchestra. To introduce such a thing would disrupt an organization which has been thirty-six years in the making.

"To ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the Symphony stands for—musical art. The public has no right to demand it. I am following Manager Higginson's wishes."

His Resignation Has Been Given, But Not Yet Accepted

At a concert immediately following, Dr. Muck led the orchestra in the national air, and then his resignation was announced from the platform by Major Higginson. Later, it was decided to withhold acceptance of the resignation until after a forthcoming tour of Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn. If there appeared public demand for Dr. Muck's removal and for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programme of the orchestra, then the resignation would take effect.

Apparently, the orchestra was warmly received in Washington, but long before it was due at Baltimore that city, the home of "The Star-Spangled Banner," put itself forcibly on record against receiving any orchestra directed by Dr. Muck. Led by former Governor Warfield, a mass-meeting was held in the Lyric Theatre Tuesday as a protest. The following extracts from an account of it published in "The Baltimore Sun" describe the temper of the meeting:

"The meeting resolved itself into a great plea to the government to intern not only Dr. Muck but all enemy aliens who are a menace to the safety of the American people. There was cheer after cheer when this was called for, the mightiest cheer of all coming when Secretary of State Thomas B. Simmons pointed out that the strongest recommendation of the American people was that 'deserving cases' be given not less than the 'firing squad at sunrise.'

"Governor Warfield, who was also warmly applauded as he walked on the stage, lost no time in calling the meeting to order.

"'Some people say,' he began, 'that our national anthem, that we all love so dearly, should not be played on certain occasions and in connection with certain artistic concerts. I say it should be played everywhere. It is the hymn that has stirred the heart of America for a hundred years. The day is coming when 'The Star-Spangled Banner' will be sung by every free nation on the globe, and the people will jump to their feet when they hear it, just as you have jumped to your feet today.'

As for Art—"Give Me Old-Fashioned Music!"

"'Talk about musical art,' continued the former Governor, while the crowd laughed derisively; 'all I've got to say is, give me the old-fashioned music. I have been taught to reverence that flag, and when I heard of a certain leader's insult to it [hisses] I was indignant.'

"'Muck ought to have been shot after that,' called a woman in the gallery.

"'I wrote a letter to the Police Board and told them Baltimore wouldn't stand for that leader coming here,' continued Governor Warfield, and cries of 'Right! Right! Bravo!' came from the audience.

"'Philadelphia stood for it!' cried one. It was then that Governor Warfield exclaimed: 'God help Philadelphia for the scandalous way in which she received this Prussian last night.'

"Governor Warfield then read extracts from his letter to the Police Board. 'I had a right to resent the attempt to force this alien enemy on the people of Baltimore,' he said. 'I think the best place for him is in an internment camp.'

"'Put 'em all there,' came the cries from all parts of the hall.

"'There is no necessity for a mob or mob violence,' continued Governor Warfield, 'but we would have, I believe, "interned" this man very quickly if he had come to Baltimore.'

"Great cheers greeted this.

"The crowd just wouldn't be restrained. In the midst of the brief addresses which were being made men and women in the audience, spurred on by their patriotic impulses and indignation, broke in with exclamations of all sorts. When one speaker suggested an internment camp for Dr. Muck a man in the audience shouted 'a wooden box would be a better place.' A woman in the gallery was in favor of 'shooting now all traitors.' Captain Hughes said Dr. Muck's action was enough 'to make Francis Scott Key rise out of his grave,' and when he added, 'I hope he will, and haunt Muck until doomsday,' the crowd just yelled with delight and called for Key's ghost."

Meantime, the cry against foreign musicians spreads. From Pittsburgh comes a report that feeling has developed against the appearance there of Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, who was wounded early in the war. Since then he has been in this country and has sent money back to Austria. Milwaukee reports that her orchestra will play the national anthem at every concert this season. Colonel Roosevelt would intern Dr. Muck as an alien. The St. Louis Symphony, led by Max Zach, has followed the lead of Milwaukee. It is also pointed out that the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Philharmonic have been playing the national anthem without damage to the artistic sensibilities of their leaders.

Comment by the press and other musicians reveals interesting differences of opinion on the subject of Dr. Muck and German music, the two being generally associated now that the issue raised by the Metropolitan is carried on by the Dr. Muck incident. The cry for tolerance on the one hand is opposed by the cry of "Intern him!" and bar German music quite as vehemently on the other.

Distinguishing Dr. Muck from German music, one finds a fairly large and tol-

Make 'E[m]ll Do

—From The New

DR. KARL MUCK was born in Darmstadt, Germany, Oc
Bavarian ministerial counsellor. He studied at the u Leipsic, in 1880 receiving a Ph. D. That same year, having servatory, he made his first appearance as a pianist in the G
he was opera conductor at Salzburg, and then at Brünn first conductor at Prague, and in 1892, after he had appear Neumann's travelling opera company, he settled in that city
Opera House. In 1906, having been granted a two years' America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 19 in Berlin, but four years later renounced them completely, and reëstablished himself with the Boston Symphony Orch
"It is a personage of consequence in the musical wor command of the orchestra in its twenty-sixth year," ran time of the conductor's first arrival in this country. "D Royal Opera in Berlin. His temporary release, by consent only under the same entente cordiale that exists betwee America as a whole, whereby a bronze Frederick the Gre and a live Columbia professor, Dr. Burgess, gives instru his people."

erant follow man music.
about Dr. M World." An

"There is n symphony mu from German anywhere to tra disband.

"The whol alien conduc playing the made needles

r-Spangled Banner"; Resigns

lake 'Em All Do It

—From The New York Evening Telegram

K was born in Darmstadt, Germany, October 22, 1859, the son of a nisterial counsellor. He studied at the universities of Heidelberg and ceiving a Ph. D. That same year, having studied in the Leipsic Con- his first appearance as a pianist in the Gewandhaus. Soon after that ductor at Salzburg, and then at Brünn and Gräz. In 1886 he was Prague, and in 1892, after he had appeared in Berlin as conductor of ing opera company, he settled in that city as conductor at the Imperial 1906, having been granted a two years' leave of absence, he came to t the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1908 he returned to his duties years later renounced them completely, sailed for America once more himself with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

onage of consequence in the musical world to-day who comes to take orchestra in its twenty-sixth year," ran a newspaper comment at the uctor's first arrival in this country. "Dr. Muck is conductor of the Berlin. His temporary release, by consent of the Kaiser, was obtained same entente cordiale that exists between the German Emperor and ole, whereby a bronze Frederick the Great now stands in Washington nbia professor, Dr. Burgess, gives instruction abroad to Wilhelm and teresting differences of ubject of Dr. Muck and the two being generally that the issue raised by is carried on by the Dr. The cry for tolerance on opposed by the cry of and bar German music ntly on the other.

Dr. Muck from German s a fairly large and tol-erant following opposed to barring German music. "Is there not too much ado about Dr. Muck?" asks "The New York World." And continues:

"There is no public clamor against German symphony music, which is wholly different from German opera, and there is no desire anywhere to have the famous Boston orchestra disband.

"The whole question is as concerns its alien conductor's position with regard to playing the national anthem, a position he made needlessly offensive by his failure to use ordinary tact in the matter. His artistic usefulness in this country may be done for, but that fact in no way impairs the orchestra's usefulness. It was a great musical organization before Muck and should continue to exemplify its high ideals without him."

"The Evening Post" is also a dissenter against the almost universal approval of the anti-German music move, particularly regretting the dropping of German operas at the Metropolitan, "if only because it shows less breadth of tolerance than is to be found in London, where they are giving German opera right along, or in Vienna, where Shakespeare's plays are frequently produced. These great works of art surely rise above international rivalries and warfare. Particularly is this true of Wagner's works. As we have already pointed out, Wagner was one of the most anti-Prussian Germans who ever lived. He hated Prussia and her officialdom, which he frequently denounced, and if he were living could surely be counted upon to be in opposition to-day."

Probably the most extreme of those objecting to the treatment of German music is Bernard H. Ridder, writing in the "Staats-Zeitung" under the heading of "Art and Asininity":

"A spirit of blind, unreasoning prejudice seems to be stealing its way into every channel of American life under the cloak of 'patriotism.' The malignant manifestations of the hydra-headed monster increase with the days. Whatever incurs the displeasure of any group of the bilious or gouty in our citizenry is immediately anathematized and maranathematized as disloyal or unpatriotic. That art should long escape those 'amiable bulls who are determined to make every color scarlet' was not to be expected.

"The word has gone forth from them that German opera shall not be sung at the Metropolitan this season.

"The Metropolitan opera is controlled by a small group of still smaller minded gentlemen of great wealth and inconsiderable powers of reflection. Their little world 'five miles round' has taken a plebiscite and determined that the war aims of President Wilson are all wrong. They have amended his war proclamation to include the German people as well as the imperial German government, and now extend it to embrace the master minds of Teutonic genius. The artistic creations of Wagner and Strauss and Humperdinck and Mozart and Beethoven, which so offend the jewelled sensitiveness of the ears that grace the Metropolitan 'Horseshoe,' have already passed into their allotted place in history. They will be found there in all their vigor and sublimity when the present world war is as dead as the struggles between Rome and Carthage."

But in general the press seizes upon the two incidents to express satisfaction at the possible internment of Dr. Muck, if not to develop something of the war spirit. "The Providence Journal," warning Major Higginson not to bring his orchestra back to Providence with Dr. Muck as leader, says: "The place of that insolent German music master is not on the American concert stage, but in an internment camp, under strict guard."

American singers, thinks "The New York Herald," "can be engaged to replace those heavy German singers, whose gutturals and garglings should not be permitted beyond the confines of concentration camps, with Dr. Muck as their chief auditor."

A good deal of criticism attaches itself to Dr. Muck and his attempt to explain why he did not wish to play the national air. Few editors or musicians accept his explanation as sincere. "There has been, of course, a considerable dodging of the issue in the reasons given," says Richard Aldrich in "The New York Times":

"Dr. Muck is a Prussian, an official of the Prussian court . . . and naturally does not like to conduct the national anthem of a country with which his own is at war. It goes hard against the grain now; it might get him into trouble in Berlin when he returns.

"Neither Dr. Muck nor Major Higginson will have found any general demand in New York for the elimination of German music in larger proportion than that of other nations for the simple and undeniable reason that there is more and better German music than music of other nations. But he has not hesitated to play French, Russian, Finnish and Rumanian music. All these nationalities are represented on the two programmes that he announced for this week in New York. To these it was necessary that one piece be added closely identified with the United States, though composed in England by an Englishman. Its name is 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'"

Most of the Directors Sympathize With Germany

Similarly H. E. Krehbiel, musical critic of The Tribune, points out the "rub" in the director's excuse. "It is an open secret, we believe, that except Walter Damrosch of the Symphony Society and Modest Altschuler of the Russian Symphony Orchestra (but here we are speaking largely on presumption) all the conductors of the symphony orchestras in the United States sympathize with the enemies of our country."

At the same time Mr. Krehbiel is inclined to agree with those who think it will be difficult for some Americans to remain quiet when they see alien musicians fattening on the bounty of a country whose needs are "bound to grow larger as the people are called on to make material sacrifices in its behalf. After all, some will say, if meatless and wheatless days so that our allies may be fed, why not musicless days so that the enemy in our own land may not devour of our plenty?"

"The Philadelphia Public Ledger" would let Dr. Muck's resignation stand, while "The Baltimore Sun" thinks loyal Americans "should prevent officially the performance of any such organization as Muck's." "The Utica Press" also thinks this country will no longer be considered a gold mine by European musicians who fear the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" will interfere with a musical programme. Over in Brooklyn, where the orchestra is billed for a performance this week, "The Eagle" reports "gossip about 'a silent treatment' to be given to the Prussian at the Academy on Friday night, and if the Germans in the audience undertake to acclaim him there is pretty certain to be a counter demonstration and a row. The way to avoid the risk of such an unseemly collision is to announce at once that Dr. Muck's resignation will be accepted as soon as a new conductor can be found."

In short, sentiment in the country is readily stirred up against Dr. Muck. People are getting "grouchy." If the press is to be believed, the people want to hear "The Star-Spangled Banner" before or after a musical programme. Tolerance is all right in its place, but so is the German—in his place.

EVENING MAIL
New York City
NOV 9 1917

MUSIC
CONCERTS OPERA

Mu[illegible] Plays the "Star Spangled Banner" with a Vengeance—Jacques Thibaud, Harold Bauer and Louis Graveure.

By SIGMUND SPAETH.

AS usual, the reality fell far short of the foreboding when the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its New York season at Carnegie Hall last evening. Many people went to the concert chiefly to see if Dr. Muck would actually play the "Star Spangled Banner," with a faint hope that something exciting would occur. Perhaps someone might say "Boo!" or even hiss the German doctor. You never can tell.

As a matter of fact, everything was eminently dignified and proper. Dr. Muck was welcomed with hearty and obviously sincere applause, not quite an ovation, but certainly more than the average season's greetings. After bowing his acknowledgment several times, he turned to conduct the national anthem.

But this was the "Star-Spangled Banner" with a vengeance! The "Tannhäuser" overture was not more elaborate in its orchestration. With the full brass choir carrying the air, the strings played a furious accompaniment of the most florid type, creating a huge volume of sound. In bowing to convention, Dr. Muck at least showed that his orchestra had its own way of doing things.

FOURTH BRAHMS SYMPHONY.

Refusing further acknowledgments, he at once attacked the fourth symphony of Brahms and proceeded to give it a masterly performance. This symphony is generally considered the most abstract and difficult of the four, from the hearer's standpoint, but Dr. Muck yesterday succeeded in making even the scholarly passacaglia of the last movement interesting and dramatic.

As for the three earlier sections they were a joy, particularly the andante, in which the wind instruments played with wonderful clarity and repose. It was hardly fair to poor old Berlioz to drag in his "King Lear" overture on top of that symphony, even after a ten-minute intermission. In spite of a splendid performance, the music sounded empty and banal, the orchestration puerile.

Liszt's "Prometheus," except for the impressive opening pages, fared little better, and it required the "Parsifal" prelude to restore the lofty mood in which the concert began.

om WORLD
ldress: New York City
ate NOV 10 1917

MUCK GIVES HYMN AGAIN AND JUST AS FRIGIDLY.

Refuses to Acknowledge Plaudits for "Banner," but Brooklyn Treats Him Cordially.

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, last evening, quite as coolly as he had led it the night before in Carnegie Hall. But the Brooklyn audience plainly did not mind the director's obvious lack of interest in the anthem and showed by its warm applause throughout the evening that it was glad to see him.

Dr. Muck bowed when he first came out on the stage. He refused to turn and acknowledge the applause that followed the anthem as his first number, but he bowed readily enough after each of the four parts of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 and he had to return to the stage twice before the audience would subside at the intermission.

deutsche Journal
: New York City.
NOV 9 - 1917

Dr. Muck gestern in Carnegie Hall begeistert empfangen.

Das mit Spannung erwartete erste hiesige Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters unter Dr. Karl Mucks Leitung in Carnegie Hall verlief gestern festlich und ohne jeden Zwischenfall. Dr. Muck wurde bei seinem Erscheinen mit auffallender Herzlichkeit empfangen. Auch nachdem er die National-Hymne dirigiert hatte, applaudierten viele Anwesende. Der Saal war überfüllt. Das Konzert, dessen Programm fast ausschließlich aus deutschen Werken sich zusammensetzte, mit der 4. Symphonie von Brahms als Hauptwerk, stand auf der gewohnten unübertroffenen Höhe und fand rauschenden Beifall.

rom
ddress: New York City.
ate NOV 9 - 1917

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert.

Das künstlerische New York, vertreten durch Alle, die bei uns musikalisch, intellektuell und sozial eine Rolle spielen — man nennt diese Elite-Versammlung am besten das Publikum unserer großen Symphonie-Konzerte — hat gestern abend den Bostoner Meisterspielern und ihrem großen Führer, Dr. Karl Muck, einen Willkommengruß zuteil werden lassen, der an Wärme und Herzlichkeit, an Deutlichkeit und Offenheit nichts zu wünschen übrig ließ. Immer wieder anschwellend und sich erneuernd brauste der Beifall durch den Saal, als der Dirigent seinem Pult zuschritt. Er mußte sich wiederholt umdrehen und für die ehrende Ovation danken. Dann gab er das Signal zum Beginn des „Star Spangled Banner", das sich bei den Bostonern fast zu einer Quelle schwerer Wirren erwiesen hätte, alle Anwesenden standen auf, und mächtig und weihevoll rauschten die majestätischen Klänge durch den Saal. Die Ovation erneuerte sich — man ist zufrieden und hat vergessen, was noch vor wenigen Tagen ein Grund zu heller Aufregung gewesen war! New York, die Großmütige, hat ihren Ruf wieder einmal gerechfertigt — die als Stadt hochstehender Fortgeschrittenheit, Duldung und künstlerischer Unbefangenheit mancher anderen Großstadt unseres Kontinents ein leuchtendes Beispiel geben kann!

Die Wiedergabe, die Dr. Muck und sein herrliches Orchester sodann der Brahms'schen Vierten zuteil werden ließen, erregte Enthusiasmus. Das Werk prangte in einer karakteristischen Färbung und wurde so groß und virtuos gespielt, daß des Beifalls kein Ende nehmen wollte. Diese in der „falben Herbst-Tonart" E-Moll geschriebene Symphonie kann nur von einem großen Dirigenten entsprechend vorgeführt werden, denn ein Vergreifen ist da nur zu leicht. Wie oft wird der erste Satz im Tempo verhetzt, um die Durchbrochenheit seines Orchesterfiligrans gebracht, von der reinen Gothik des Satzbaues zu einer ganz unberechtigten Massigkeit aufgebauscht! Dr. Muck arbeitete den Satz ganz unvergleichlich schön heraus. Er gestaltete den zweiten Satz zu einem feingegliederten Miniaturstück von einer so fein abgestuften Zartheit des Kolorits, daß er wie mit duftigen Schleiern zugedeckt erschien. Dagegen kam der fast gespensterhafte Humor im dritten Satz zu seinem vollen Rechte, und die „Chaconne" des Schlußsatzes war nach dem trotzig daherschreitenden Scherzo von zwingender Größe.

Berlioz' „König Lear"-Ouverture, ein 1831 geschriebenes Werk, in dem der große französische Orchester-Reformator in seinen Anforderungen noch ziemlich bescheiden ist, bot uns ein erschütterndes Seelendrama, und der selten gehörte „Prometheus" von Liszt wirkte durch den göttlichen Trost und den Zug elementarer Kraft, welche von der antiken Dichtung auch in das Liszt's Tonpoem übergegangen ist. Das Orchester prangte in allen diesen Darbietungen in seiner ganzen durchgeistigten Virtuosität.

Wagner's „Parsifal"-Vorspiel schloß das interessante Programm in echter Weise ab. Die New Yorker Serie der Bostoner hat gestern mit Glanz eingesetzt. Wenn wir in New York auch auf die höchsten Werte in dieser Richtung hinweisen können, so ist doch der Gedanke, daß wir die Bostoner Gäste verlieren könnten (wie es in letzter Zeit wiederholt angedroht wurde) unerträglich. In den Wechselbeziehungen zwischen den uns zur Verfügung stehenden Elite-Orchestern lockt ein reger Wettbewerb um den Siegespreis, der diese Institutionen jung erhält und vor dem Rosten bewahrt!

H.

EVE. STAATS ZEITUNG
ess: New York City
NOV 9 1917

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert.

Das künstlerische New York, vertreten durch Alle, die bei uns musikalisch, intellektuell und sozial eine Rolle spielen — man nennt diese Elite-Versammlung am besten das Publikum unserer großen Symphonie-Konzerte — hat gestern abend den Bostoner Meisterspielern und ihrem großen Führer, Dr. Karl Muck, einen Willkommengruß zuteil werden lassen, der an Wärme und Herzlichkeit, an Deutlichkeit und Offenheit nichts zu wünschen übrig ließ. Immer wieder anschwellend und sich erneuernd brauste der Beifall durch den Saal, als der Dirigent seinem Pult zuschritt. Er mußte sich wiederholt umdrehen und für die ehrende Ovation danken. Dann gab er das Signal zum Beginn des „Star Spangled Banner", das sich bei den Bostonern fast zu einer Quelle schwerer Wirren erwiesen hätte, alle Anwesenden standen auf, und mächtig und weihevoll rauschten die majestätischen Klänge durch den Saal. Die Ovation erneuerte sich — man ist zufrieden und hat vergessen, was noch vor wenigen Tagen ein Grund zu heller Aufregung gewesen war! New York, die Großmütige, hat ihren Ruf wieder einmal gerechfertigt — die als Stadt hochstehender Fortgeschrittenheit, Duldung und künstlerischer Unbefangenheit mancher anderen Großstadt unseres Kontinents ein leuchtendes Beispiel geben kann!

Die Wiedergabe, die Dr. Muck und sein herrliches Orchester sodann der Brahms'schen Vierten zuteil werden ließen, erregte Enthusiasmus. Das Werk prangte in einer karakteristischen Färbung und wurde so groß und virtuos gespielt, daß des Beifalls kein Ende nehmen wollte. Diese in der „falben Herbst-Tonart" E-Moll geschriebene Symphonie kann nur von einem großen Dirigenten entsprechend vorgeführt werden, denn ein Vergreifen ist da nur zu leicht. Wie oft wird der erste Satz im Tempo verhetzt, um die Durchbrochenheit seines Orchesterfiligrans gebracht, von der reinen Gothik des Satzbaues zu einer ganz unberechtigten Massigkeit aufgebauscht! Dr. Muck arbeitete den Satz ganz unvergleichlich schön heraus. Er gestaltete den zweiten Satz zu einem feingegliederten Miniaturstück von einer so fein abgestuften Zartheit des Kolorits, daß er wie mit duftigen Schleiern zugedeckt erschien. Dagegen kam der fast gespensterhafte Humor im dritten Satz zu seinem vollen Rechte, und die „Chaconne" des Schlußsatzes war nach dem trotzig daherschreitenden Scherzo von zwingender Größe.

Berlioz' „König Lear"-Ouverture, ein 1831 geschriebenes Werk, in dem der große französische Orchester-Reformator in seinen Anforderungen noch ziemlich bescheiden ist, bot uns ein erschütterndes Seelendrama, und der selten gehörte „Prometheus" von Liszt wirkte durch den göttlichen Trost und den Zug elementarer Kraft, welche von der antiken Dichtung auch in das Liszt's Tonpoem übergegangen ist. Das Orchester prangte in allen diesen Darbietungen in seiner ganzen durchgeistigten Virtuosität. Wagner's „Parsifal"-Vorspiel schloß das interessante Programm in wirkungsvoller Weise.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Applause Dr. Muck Didn't Hear.

It is unfortunate that Dr. Karl Muck did not act more graciously last night at the Boston Symphony Concert when the audience warmly applauded "The Star Spangled Banner." Contrary to custom this leader took no notice whatever of the demonstration at the conclusion of the anthem, standing like a Prussian drillmaster with his back to the audience and giving no indication whatever that he heard the appreciative applause. Indeed, his attitude was one of impatience at what he seemed to consider the unwarranted delay in beginning the regular programme.

The manner of this world-famous leader may not have meant anything whatever—it may have been the natural coldness or indifference of the man to the plaudits of the audience, but manifestly under the circumstances the thing for him to have done was to have turned and bowed his acknowledgments. So long as Dr. Muck consented to lead the orchestra in playing the National Anthem he should not have given the impression of doing so under protest. This he undoubtedly did.

Perhaps it is nothing much to justify criticism, nevertheless the audience felt that the artist neither cared nor wanted to please. Dr. Muck displayed lack of good taste and fine judgment, to say nothing of a total absence of diplomacy. He is not an American citizen, but he ought not to go out of his way to impress the public with the fact that his sympathies lie entirely with [illegible]

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 9 1917

VOICE OBJECTIONS TO DR. MUCK HERE

Institute Trustees Vote Aid and Appreciation to Major Higginson.

ORCHESTRA HERE TO-NIGHT.

Reception In Manhattan Relieves Tense Situation.

Objection to Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has come to a head in Brooklyn. It was learned to-day that "hostile sentiments" of a number of subscribers were expressed at yesterday's meeting of the Brooklyn Institute trustees, and that the day before the Women's Auxiliary of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society adopted resolutions of protest against the German conductor's recent course with reference to "The Star Spangled Banner."

There is no hint of any change in the programme which calls for the first appearance of the Bostonians in Brooklyn to-night. Brooklyn Institute officials to-day expressed themselves as greatly relieved that the concert of the same orchestra in Manhattan last night passed without incident except the hearty applause given to a new instrumental setting of the national anthem. As in previous years, the seats for the Academy of Music concert have practically all been subscribed for in advance. The disposition in musical circles here is to consider the Muck incident as having been closed by yesterday's action of the Institute trustees.

Referred to Major Higginson.

At the conclusion of yesterday's meeting the following statement was given out:

"The question of Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given consideration by the board, and on motion, duly seconded, the president appointed a committee of three trustees to present to Major Higginson the hostile sentiments of a number of subscribers to the concerts with reference to Dr. Muck, the object of the conference being the desire to aid Major Higginson in arriving at a conclusion that will satisfy public sentiment and at the same time not be embarrassing to him. The board also voted to express to Major Higginson their high appreciation of the services he has rendered the musical life of the Nation in organizing and maintaining for so many years the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Both A. Augustus Healy, the president of the Board of Trustees, who presided, and Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, declined to comment further on the results of the meeting. Mr. Healy said the discussion had been dispassionate and not in the least exciting. Mr. Atkins said it was "mild." He said the number of written protests received was small.

Mrs. Camden C. Dike, president of the Women's Auxiliary, confirmed the report of protest resolutions passed on Wednesday, but declined to give the text of the resolutions, saying she must await the action of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Healy also admitted such resolutions were presented to the board, but said the action concerning them was covered in the authorized statement of the board.

In addition to Mr. Healy there were present at the meeting yesterday Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, Henry H. Benedict, David A. Boody, George W. Brush, William J. Coombs, Walter H. Crittenden, William C. Courtney, Martin Joost, Luke Vincent Lockwood, Clinton W. Ludlum, Horace J. Morse, Henry F. Noyes, Charles Jones Peabody, William A. Putnam, Dick S. Ramsay, Herman Stutzer, John T. Underwood, Alfred T. White, and Directors Atkins, Fox, Gager and Davenport.

Volkszeitung
ess: New York City.
NOV 9 - 1917

National-Hymne gespielt.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 9, 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6, 1917.

Unter großem Beifall dirigierte Dr. Karl Muck gestern abend in der Carnegie Hall das Abonnements-Konzert des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters. Jeder Platz in dem großen Konzertsaal war vergriffen. Das Orchester spielte auch das „Star Spangled Banner". Das Publikum setzte sich aus der zahlungsfähigen Bourgeoisie zusammen.

EVENING MAIL
New York City
NOV 9 1917

MUSIC
CONCERTS OPERA

Mu[illegible] Plays the "Star Spangled Banner" with a Vengeance—Jacques Thibaud, Harold Bauer and Louis Graveure.

By SIGMUND SPAETH.

AS usual, the reality fell far short of the foreboding when the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its New York season at Carnegie Hall last evening. Many people went to the concert chiefly to see if Dr. Muck would actually play the "Star Spangled Banner," with a faint hope that something exciting would occur. Perhaps someone might say "Boo!" or even hiss the German doctor. You never can tell.

As a matter of fact, everything was eminently dignified and proper. Dr. Muck was welcomed with hearty and obviously sincere applause, not quite an ovation, but certainly more than the average season's greetings. After bowing his acknowledgment several times, he turned to conduct the national anthem.

But this was the "Star-Spangled Banner" with a vengeance! The "Tannhäuser" overture was not more elaborate in its orchestration. With the full brass choir carrying the air, the strings played a furious accompaniment of the most florid type, creating a huge volume of sound. In bowing to convention, Dr. Muck at least showed that his orchestra had its own way of doing things.

FOURTH BRAHMS SYMPHONY.

Refusing further acknowledgments, he at once attacked the fourth symphony of Brahms and proceeded to give it a masterly performance. This symphony is generally considered the most abstract and difficult of the four, from the hearer's standpoint, but Dr. Muck yesterday succeeded in making even the scholarly passacaglia of the last movement interesting and dramatic.

As for the three earlier sections they were a joy, particularly the andante, in which the wind instruments played with wonderful clarity and repose. It was hardly fair to poor old Berlioz to drag in his "King Lear" overture on top of that symphony, even after a ten-minute intermission. In spite of a splendid performance, the music sounded empty and banal, the orchestration puerile.

Liszt's "Prometheus," except for the impressive opening pages, fared little better, and it required the "Parsifal" prelude to restore the lofty mood in which the concert began.

om WORLD
ldress: New York City
ate NOV 10 1917

MUCK GIVES HYMN AGAIN AND JUST AS FRIGIDLY.

Refuses to Acknowledge Plaudits for "Banner," but Brooklyn Treats Him Cordially.

Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, last evening, quite as coolly as he had led it the night before in Carnegie Hall. But the Brooklyn audience plainly did not mind the director's obvious lack of interest in the anthem and showed by its warm applause throughout the evening that it was glad to see him.

Dr. Muck bowed when he first came out on the stage. He refused to turn and acknowledge the applause that followed the anthem as his first number, but he bowed readily enough after each of the four parts of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 and he had to return to the stage twice before the audience would subside at the intermission.

deutsche Journal
: New York City.
NOV 9 - 1917

Dr. Muck gestern in Carnegie Hall begeistert empfangen.

Das mit Spannung erwartete erste hiesige Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters unter Dr. Karl Mucks Leitung in Carnegie Hall verlief gestern festlich und ohne jeden Zwischenfall. Dr. Muck wurde bei seinem Erscheinen mit auffallender Herzlichkeit empfangen. Auch nachdem er die National-Hymne dirigiert hatte, applaudierten viele Anwesende. Der Saal war überfüllt. Das Konzert, dessen Programm fast ausschließlich aus deutschen Werken sich zusammensetzte, mit der 4. Symphonie von Brahms als Hauptwerk, stand auf der gewohnten unübertroffenen Höhe und fand rauschenden Beifall.

EVE. STAATS ZEITUNG
ess: New York City
NOV 9 1917

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert.

Das künstlerische New York, vertreten durch Alle, die bei uns musikalisch, intellektuell und sozial eine Rolle spielen — man nennt diese Elite-Versammlung am besten das Publikum unserer großen Symphonie-Konzerte — hat gestern abend den Bostoner Meisterspielern und ihrem großen Führer, Dr. Karl Muck, einen Willkommengruß zuteil werden lassen, der an Wärme und Herzlichkeit, an Deutlichkeit und Offenheit nichts zu wünschen übrig ließ. Immer wieder anschwellend und sich erneuernd brauste der Beifall durch den Saal, als der Dirigent seinem Pult zuschritt. Er mußte sich wiederholt umdrehen und für die ehrende Ovation danken. Dann gab er das Signal zum Beginn des „Star Spangled Banner", das sich bei den Bostonern fast zu einer Quelle schwerer Wirren erwiesen hätte, alle Anwesenden standen auf, und mächtig und weihevoll rauschten die majestätischen Klänge durch den Saal. Die Ovation erneuerte sich — man ist zufrieden und hat vergessen, was noch vor wenigen Tagen ein Grund zu heller Aufregung gewesen war! New York, die Großmütige, hat ihren Ruf wieder einmal gerechfertigt — die als Stadt hochstehender Fortgeschrittenheit, Duldung und künstlerischer Unbefangenheit mancher anderen Großstadt unseres Kontinents ein leuchtendes Beispiel geben kann!

Die Wiedergabe, die Dr. Muck und sein herrliches Orchester sodann der Brahms'schen Vierten zuteil werden ließen, erregte Enthusiasmus. Das Werk prangte in einer karakteristischen Färbung und wurde so groß und virtuos gespielt, daß des Beifalls kein Ende nehmen wollte. Diese in der „falben Herbst-Tonart" E-Moll geschriebene Symphonie kann nur von einem großen Dirigenten entsprechend vorgeführt werden, denn ein Vergreifen ist da nur zu leicht. Wie oft wird der erste Satz im Tempo verhetzt, um die Durchbrochenheit seines Orchesterfiligrans gebracht, von der reinen Gothik des Satzbaues zu einer ganz unberechtigten Massigkeit aufgebauscht! Dr. Muck arbeitete den Satz ganz unvergleichlich schön heraus. Er gestaltete den zweiten Satz zu einem feingegliederten Miniaturstück von einer so fein abgestuften Zartheit des Kolorits, daß er wie mit duftigen Schleiern zugedeckt erschien. Dagegen kam der fast gespensterhafte Humor im dritten Satz zu seinem vollen Rechte, und die „Chaconne" des Schlußsatzes war nach dem trotzig daherschreitenden Scherzo von zwingender Größe.

Berlioz' „König Lear"-Ouverture, ein 1831 geschriebenes Werk, in dem der große französische Orchester-Reformator in seinen Anforderungen noch ziemlich bescheiden ist, bot uns ein erschütterndes Seelendrama, und der selten gehörte „Prometheus" von Liszt wirkte durch den göttlichen Trost und den Zug elementarer Kraft, welche von der antiken Dichtung auch in das Liszt's Tonpoem übergegangen ist. Das Orchester prangte in allen diesen Darbietungen in seiner ganzen durchgeistigten Virtuosität.

Wagner's „Parsifal"-Vorspiel schloß das interessante Programm in echter Weise ab. Die New Yorker Serie der Bostoner hat gestern mit Glanz eingesetzt. Wenn wir in New York auch auf die höchsten Werte in dieser Richtung hinweisen können, so ist doch der Gedanke, daß wir die Bostoner Gäste verlieren könnten (wie es in letzter Zeit wiederholt angedroht wurde) unerträglich. In den Wechselbeziehungen zwischen den uns zur Verfügung stehenden Elite-Orchestern lockt ein reger Wettbewerb um den Siegespreis, der diese Institutionen jung erhält und vor dem Rosten bewahrt!

H.

From
Address: STAATSZEITUNG New York City.
Date NOV 9 - 1917

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert.

Das künstlerische New York, vertreten durch Alle, die bei uns musikalisch, intellektuell und sozial eine Rolle spielen — man nennt diese Elite-Versammlung am besten das Publikum unserer großen Symphonie-Konzerte — hat gestern abend den Bostoner Meisterspielern und ihrem großen Führer, Dr. Karl Muck, einen Willkommengruß zuteil werden lassen, der an Wärme und Herzlichkeit, an Deutlichkeit und Offenheit nichts zu wünschen übrig ließ. Immer wieder anschwellend und sich erneuernd brauste der Beifall durch den Saal, als der Dirigent seinem Pult zuschritt. Er mußte sich wiederholt umdrehen und für die ehrende Ovation danken. Dann gab er das Signal zum Beginn des „Star Spangled Banner", das sich bei den Bostonern fast zu einer Quelle schwerer Wirren erwiesen hätte, alle Anwesenden standen auf, und mächtig und weihevoll rauschten die majestätischen Klänge durch den Saal. Die Ovation erneuerte sich — man ist zufrieden und hat vergessen, was noch vor wenigen Tagen ein Grund zu heller Aufregung gewesen war! New York, die Großmütige, hat ihren Ruf wieder einmal gerechfertigt — die als Stadt hochstehender Fortgeschrittenheit, Duldung und künstlerischer Unbefangenheit mancher anderen Großstadt unseres Kontinents ein leuchtendes Beispiel geben kann!

Die Wiedergabe, die Dr. Muck und sein herrliches Orchester sodann der Brahms'schen Vierten zuteil werden ließen, erregte Enthusiasmus. Das Werk prangte in einer karakteristischen Färbung und wurde so groß und virtuos gespielt, daß des Beifalls kein Ende nehmen wollte. Diese in der „falben Herbst-Tonart" E-Moll geschriebene Symphonie kann nur von einem großen Dirigenten entsprechend vorgeführt werden, denn ein Vergreifen ist da nur zu leicht. Wie oft wird der erste Satz im Tempo verhetzt, um die Durchbrochenheit seines Orchesterfiligrans gebracht, von der reinen Gothik des Satzbaues zu einer ganz unberechtigten Massigkeit aufgebauscht!

Berlioz' „König Lear"-Ouverture, ein 1831 geschriebenes Werk, in dem der große französische Orchester-Reformator in seinen Anforderungen noch ziemlich bescheiden ist, bot uns ein erschütterndes Seelendrama, und der selten gehörte „Prometheus" von Liszt wirkte durch den göttlichen Trost und den Zug elementarer Kraft, welche von der antiken Dichtung auch in das Liszt's Tonpoem übergegangen ist. Das Orchester prangte in allen diesen Darbietungen in seiner ganzen durchgeistigten Virtuosität. Wagner's „Parsifal"-Vorspiel schloß das interessante Programm in wirkungsvoller Weise.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Applause Dr. Muck Didn't Hear.

It is unfortunate that Dr. Karl Muck did not act more graciously last night at the Boston Symphony Concert when the audience warmly applauded "The Star Spangled Banner." Contrary to custom this leader took no notice whatever of the demonstration at the conclusion of the anthem, standing like a Prussian drillmaster with his back to the audience and giving no indication whatever that he heard the appreciative applause. Indeed, his attitude was one of impatience at what he seemed to consider the unwarranted delay in beginning the regular programme.

The manner of this world-famous leader may not have meant anything whatever—it may have been the natural coldness or indifference of the man to the plaudits of the audience, but manifestly under the circumstances the thing for him to have done was to have turned and bowed his acknowledgments. So long as Dr. Muck consented to lead the orchestra in playing the National Anthem he should not have given the impression of doing so under protest. This he undoubtedly did.

Perhaps it is nothing much to justify criticism, nevertheless the audience felt that the artist neither cared nor wanted to please. Dr. Muck displayed lack of good taste and fine judgment, to say nothing of a total absence of diplomacy. He is not an American citizen, but he ought not to go out of his way to impress the public with the fact that his sympathies lie entirely with America's enemy.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 9 1917

VOICE OBJECTIONS TO DR. MUCK HERE

Institute Trustees Vote Aid and Appreciation to Major Higginson.

ORCHESTRA HERE TO-NIGHT.

Reception In Manhattan Relieves Tense Situation.

Objection to Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has come to a head in Brooklyn. It was learned to-day that "hostile sentiments" of a number of subscribers were expressed at yesterday's meeting of the Brooklyn Institute trustees, and that the day before the Women's Auxiliary of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society adopted resolutions of protest against the German conductor's recent course with reference to "The Star Spangled Banner."

There is no hint of any change in the programme which calls for the first appearance of the Bostonians in Brooklyn to-night. Brooklyn Institute officials to-day expressed themselves as greatly relieved that the concert of the same orchestra in Manhattan last night passed without incident except the hearty applause given to a new instrumental setting of the national anthem. As in previous years, the seats for the Academy of Music concert have practically all been subscribed for in advance. The disposition in musical circles here is to consider the Muck incident as having been closed by yesterday's action of the Institute trustees.

Referred to Major Higginson.

At the conclusion of yesterday's meeting the following statement was given out:

"The question of Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given consideration by the board, and on motion, duly seconded, the president appointed a committee of three trustees to present to Major Higginson the hostile sentiments of a number of subscribers to the concerts with reference to Dr. Muck, the object of the conference being the desire to aid Major Higginson in arriving at a conclusion that will satisfy public sentiment and at the same time not be embarrassing to him. The board also voted to express to Major Higginson their high appreciation of the services he has rendered the musical life of the Nation in organizing and maintaining for so many years the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Both A. Augustus Healy, the president of the Board of Trustees, who presided, and Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, declined to comment further on the results of the meeting. Mr. Healy said the discussion had been dispassionate and not in the least exciting. Mr. Atkins said it was "mild." He said the number of written protests received was small.

Mrs. Camden C. Dike, president of the Women's Auxiliary, confirmed the report of protest resolutions passed on Wednesday, but declined to give the text of the resolutions, saying she must await the action of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Healy also admitted such resolutions were presented to the board, but said the action concerning them was covered in the authorized statement of the board.

In addition to Mr. Healy there were present at the meeting yesterday Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, Henry H. Benedict, David A. Boody, George W. Brush, William J. Coombs, Walter H. Crittenden, William C. Courtney, Martin Joost, Luke Vincent Lockwood, Clinton W. Ludlum, Horace J. Morse, Henry F. Noyes, Charles Jones Peabody, William A. Putnam, Dick S. Ramsay, Herman Stutzer, John T. Underwood, Alfred T. White, and Directors Atkins, Fox, Gager and Davenport.

Volkszeitung
ess: New York City.
NOV 9 - 1917

National-Hymne gespielt.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 9, 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6 1917.

Unter großem Beifall dirigierte Dr. Karl Muck gestern abend in der Carnegie Hall das Abonnements-Konzert des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters. Jeder Platz in dem großen Konzertsaal war vergriffen. Das Orchester spielte auch das „Star Spangled Banner". Das Publikum setzte sich aus der zahlungsfähigen Bourgeoisie zusammen.

SUN

New York City.

DR. MUCK CONDUCTS U. S. ANTHEM AGAIN

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Audience Applauds Him on His Entrance.

SONG INCIDENT CLOSED

New York Symphony Also Gives Concert, in Which Mme. Homer Sings.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first matinee at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. As on Thursday evening the national anthem was the first number on the programme, and it was conducted by Dr. Karl Muck. The audience applauded him on his entrance and it applauded the performance of the anthem.

Major HRigginson has issues a statement in which he emphatically denies that either he or his conductor ever refused to have the song performed. He also denies that any one except the newspapers ever threatened a disbandment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In diplomatic language, "the incident is closed," and every one may be happy except perhaps Dr. Muck.

After the anthem the orchestra played Beethoven's fifth symphony, Sibelius's tone poem, "Finlandia"; Rachmaninov's symphonic poem "The Island of the Dead" (suggested by Boecklin's well known painting) and Enesco's "Rumanian" rhapsody in A major.

Concert Had Sound Merit.

The concert was one of sound merit. The reading of the great C minor symphony of Beethoven was one of deeply reflective character and most delicate insight. Technically the performance was especially noteworthy for its exquisite clarity, which was brought about by perfection in balance of tone and just disposition of light and shade.

In such matters Dr. Muck is a supreme master. The beauty of tone which his orchestra possesses is largely due to his unerring sense of dynamic values in the relations of the various voice parts, and secondly to the high ability of the players, artists every one of them. It is to be hoped that this splendid organization will long continue to visit New York and bring its message of delight.

WORLD

New York City

NOV 11 1917

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD IN THE FIFTH SYMPHONY.

Fine Performance of Beethoven's Great Work Given at Yesterday's Matinee.

The Saturday performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Karl Muck, passed off as smoothly and with as little commotion, except for the applause, as last Thursday's.

The national anthem opened the programme, Dr. Muck, as usual, refraining from acknowledging the audience's appreciation on the ground, it was learned, that such observance is in keeping with international formula, and that the applause is for the anthem and not for the leader or the orchestra.

Beethoven's fifth symphony, the "Finlandia" of Sibelius, Rachmaninoff's "Die Toteninsel" ("Island of the Dead") and a Roumanian rhapsodie of Enesco composed the programme.

The playing of the Boston men was brilliant in the extreme, and it would be captious to ask for a more satisfactory interpretation of the great symphony.

The overlong Rachmaninoff composition stirs the interest at first, but palls in time. It is called a symphonic poem to the picture by A. Boecklin. It brings out, however, the virtuosity of the orchestra and was given with a detail and finish that was amazing.

Enesco's rhapsody had the requisite grace and lightness to send the big audience home in a happy musical mood.

From NEW YORKER HERALD

Address: New York City.

Date NOV 9 1

Dr. Muck spielt Hymne.

New Yorker hörten ihn gestern in der Carnegie Hall.

Einen warmen Empfang erhielt gestern Dr. Karl Muck, der Leiter des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, als er in der Carnegie Hall sein erstes diesjähriges New Yorker Konzert mit dem „Star Spangled Banner" einleitete. Major Higginson, der Finanzier des Orchesters, war bei dem Konzert zugegen, das dem Orchesterleiter in allen Teilen demonstrativen Beifall einbrachte.

Fritz Kreisler, der Violinist, erließ in Pittsburg, Pa., eine Erklärung, in welcher er die über ihn in der Presse gemachten Angaben als voreingenommen und unwahr bezeichnet. Kreisler führt ferner aus, daß er Geld nach drüben nur zur Unterstützung von Waisen russischer und serbischer Soldaten sende, für die seine Frau zu sorgen versprochen habe. Außerdem erhalte er seinen schwer leidenden Vater, der sein Vermögen durch den Krieg eingebüßt habe.

Ex-Gouverneur Warfield von Maryland, der gegen das Auftreten Dr. Mucks mit dem Boston Symphonie Orchester Stellung genommen hatte, erklärte gestern, daß er gegen das Auftreten Fritz Kreislers am 22. November nichts einzuwenden habe, da Fritz Kreisler sich nicht gegen die amerikanische Flagge vergangen habe.

Auch gegen Frieda Hempel von der Metropolitan Oper richtet sich die Voreingenommenheit gewisser musikalischer Kreise. So hat der Monday Musical Club in Youngstown, Ohio, das Konzert-Engagement der Künstlerin für April nächsten Jahres kanzelliert.

STAATSZEITUNG

New York City.

NOV 1917

Dr. Muck konzertiert in Washington.

Eröffnet seine beiden Konzerte mit „Star Spangled Banner."

(International News Service.)

Washington, 6. Nov. Dr. Karl Muck, der Leiter des Bostoner Sinfonie-Orchesters, hat heute sowohl in seinem Nachmittags- als auch im Abendkonzert das Programm mit der amerikanischen Nationalhymne eröffnet. Die Zuhörer zollten den Darbietungen des Orchesters enthusiastischen Beifall.

Opposition gegen Dr. Mucks Erscheinen war, nachdem derselbe resigniert hat, nur von einer Person, die im Besitz von Einlaßkarten war, erhoben. Die betreffende Person zog es vor, ihre Karten wieder zu verkaufen.

deutsche Journal

ess: New York City.

NOV 6 - 1917

Bostoner Orchester aus Baltimore verbannt

Baltimore, 5. Nov. — Auf Empfehlung der Grand Jury wies die Polizeikommission die Leitung des „Lyric" heute Abend spät an, dem Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester, dessen Konzert für Mittwoch festgesetzt war, das Erscheinen nicht zu erlauben.

Die Nationalhymne, um die sich der bekannte Streit dreht, wurde von dem Orchester letzten Freitag in Boston gespielt. Aber dennoch war hier eine wachsende Agitation gegen das Auftreten des Orchesters, bei der Ex-Gouverneur Warfield eine führende Rolle spielte.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date NOV 10 1917

It is remarked that in New York Herr Muck led the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" badly and that his great orchestra was even more inefficient. Why, therefore, compel the rendering of the national anthem when everybody detects the false notes?

From RECORD

Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 5 -

MUCK COMING TO PLAY STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Boston Symphony Director Will Conduct National Anthem at Concert Here Tonight.

STATUS STILL IN DOUBT

Census of Orchestra Members Shows 15 Native Americans in 110 Players.

Special to "The Record."

Boston, Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

As to the objections against Dr. Muck because he is a German, it is pointed out that in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the Department of Justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, 13 of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, 12 of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium, who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

No word came today about the status of the resignation of Dr. Muck. Major Higginson adheres to his announced position that Muck's loss would be a disaster, and if the acceptance of his resignation is forced it will mean the end of the orchestra. The Major says Muck gets $18,000 a year, or $3000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra, despite its great revenue from concerts. He came to Boston on a five-year contract, which expired last spring, and the Major considered him so essential to the success of the Symphony that he asked him to remain. In 1914 Muck purchased a $30,000 house in the Fenway section.

Muck was obtained for the Boston Symphony by Charles A. Ellis, the manager. He was then conducting the Royal Opera in Berlin and had to get the Kaiser's permission to come here in 1906, when he made such a success that his leave was extended for the next season. In 1912 he resigned from the Berlin opera to come to Boston, apparently much to the displeasure of royal circles. The question was raised whether the artistic temperament of the conductor had not rebelled against the imperial dominance which restricts the scope of any conductor at the Berlin Opera. The matter was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, inspired court newspaper, hinted that Muck had let American gold lure him from a position of honor in the Fatherland. But Representative Kopsch arose in the German House in his defense. He criticised "That despotic authority of Prussian militiarism which extends even to the Temples of the Muses."

om HERALD

dress: New York City

e 1917

DR. MUCK LEADS IT AGAIN.

Without any evidence of the storm of criticism that recently raged around the Boston Orchestra and its conductor, Karl Muck, the second concert of its New York series was given yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Dr. Muck, as at the opening concert, directed "The Star Spangled Banner." Apparently it is t be the rule at all programmes of the men from Boston.

Beethoven's fifth symphony was applauded so roundly that the musicians arose and acknowledged it. It was presented with such beauty of tone in the string section, with such fire, precision and such fine regard for tempos, dynamics and nuances as is to be heard only from these players.

Finnish, Russian and Roumanian music filled the second half of the programme. Sibelius' "Finlandia" was followed by Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem "The Island of the Dead," gloomy, but brilliantly orchestrated and full of appeal to lovers of Russian music. Brilliantly the final number, Enesco's happy melodious Rhapsodie Roumaine, opus 11, No. 1, was rendered.

om deutsche Journal

ldress: New York City.

ate NOV 7 - 1917

Bostoner Symphonie Orchester konzertiert Freitag in Brooklyn.

Tschaikowsky, Sibelius, Beethoven und Liszt auf dem Programm.

Uebermorgen hält das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester in der Brooklyner Academy of Music sein erstes Saison-Konzert ab. Dirigent Dr. Karl Muck hat hierfür folgendes Programm aufgestellt: Tschaikowskys sechste Symphonie; Sibelius' symphonisches Poem „Finlandia"; Liszts symphonisches Poem „Prometheus"; Beethovens Ouverture „Leonore", No. 3.

Der hervorragende Reiseschriftsteller Newman wird heuer wiederum einen großen Cyklus von Vorträgen halten, die diesmal ausschließlich das Gebiet der Vereinigten Staaten und ihrer Kolonien behandeln. Der erste dieser Vorträge findet am kommenden Dienstag statt und wird das Thema „Unsere National-Parks" behandeln.

rom EVE. STAATS ZEITUNG

ldress: New York City

ate NOV 9 1917

Aus Brooklyn.

Keine Störung erwartet

Einwände gegen Konzerte des Boston Symphonieorchesters und Fritz Kreisler nicht erhoben.

Aller Voraussicht nach wird das für heute abend anberaumte Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie Orchesters in der Academy of Music in aller Ruhe verlaufen. Wie die gestern ausgegebenen Programme besagen, wird das Orchester das „Star Spangled Banner" am Schlusse des Konzerts spielen. Es verlautet, daß Major Henry L. Higginson mit dem Orchester nach der Kirchenstadt kommen werde, um im Laufe des Abends einige Worte an das Publikum zu richten.

Hetzer benützten die Pittsburger Vorfälle betreffs des Auftretens des gefeierten Geigenvirtuosen Fritz Kreisler, um auf dessen Konzert in der hiesigen Academy of Music in unliebsamer Weise aufmerksam zu machen. Vom Brooklyner Institut wird indessen bekannt gegeben, daß bisher auch nicht ein Einwand gegen das Auftreten des Künstlers in Brooklyn erhoben wurde und auch keiner erwartet wird.

TELEGRAM

ess: New York City.

NOV 11 1917

DR. MUCK AGAIN LEADS THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

Without any evidence of the storm of criticism that recently raged around the Boston Orchestra and its conductor, Karl Muck, the second concert of its New York series was given Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Dr. Muck, as at the opening concert, directed "The Star Spangled Banner." Apparently it is to be the rule at all programmes of the men from Boston.

Beethoven's fifth symphony was applauded so roundly that the musicians arose and acknowledged it. It was presented with such beauty of tone in the string section, with such fire, precision and such fine regard for tempos, dynamics and nuances as is to be heard only from these players.

Finnish, Russian and Roumanian music filled the second half of the programme. Sibelius' "Finlandia" was followed by Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem "The Island of the Dead," gloomy, but brilliantly orchestrated and full of appeal to lovers of Russian music. Brilliantly the final number, Enesco's happy melodious Rhapsodie Roumaine, opus 11, No. 1, was rendered.

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 6 - 191

Letters to the Editor

An "American's" Stab From Behind

To the Editor of The Inquirer:

I was very much interested in an article published in your paper in which it hinted the Boston Symphony Orchestra may disband owing to the criticism over their omitting the "Star Spangled Banner" from their programme.

I can hardly understand Mr. Higginson's attitude in this matter. It would not only seem correct that they should be compelled to play our National Anthem prior to all concerts, but that moreover before the curtain shall rise on any dramatic performance in our theatres the caste should step upon the stage and recite the words in unison.

There seem to be too many people in high places who are attempting to give the direct lie to the late General Sherman, and it might not be a bad idea at the opening of our courts to have the presiding judge lead the jury in at least one verse of Dr. Key's immortal poem.

Could it not also be arranged that professional men be demanded to show their loyalty; dentists singing "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean" before filling a tooth; bank tellers demanding "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" before honoring a check; contractors, of course, rendering "Hail! Hail! The Gang Has Not Disbanded" prior to getting to work to run the city for the day.

Personally, I am an American, and the National Anthem stands for a great deal to me. But there seem to be some people who are asking it to stand for a great deal too much. Were it exhibited with the rarity and reverence shown to the Liberty Bell I think it would mean more to all of us.

It is still a question in my mind if the art patrons who are criticising this great organization will be consistent enough to allow only paintings hung in their art galleries which are painted in Red, White and Blue.

S. H. C.
Jersey City, N. J.

(The above was written by a gentleman whose English camouflage of his German name is not sufficiently complete to conceal its Teutonic origin. The letter itself is its own explanation for his expressed request that his name should not be published.—Ed. Inquirer).

Freie Presse
Brooklyn, N Y
NOV -6 1917

Dr. Muck's Konzert

Wird in Baltimore von der Polizei verboten.

Baltimore, 6. Nov. Die Polizei von Baltimore ließ gestern dem Manager des Lyric-Theaters die Nachricht zukommen, daß sie das für Mittwoch in Aussicht genommene Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters verbieten müsse, weil dadurch die öffentliche Sicherheit der Gemeinde gefährdet sein würde.

Die Maßregel wurde auf Empfehlung der Grand Jury getroffen. Dieselbe ist der Ansicht, daß es bei dem Konzert zu einer patriotischen Demanstration und zu Krawallen gekommen wäre.

SUN
Baltimore, Md.
- 191

THE DUTY OF THE POLICE BOARD.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays in this city Wednesday, the Police Board owes it to the community to take such precautions as will prevent disorder.

It is clear that intense feeling has been aroused by the refusal of the German leader of the orchestra to play the national anthem, and his subsequent compliance with the popular demand has by no means allayed this resentment. The great majority of Americans are in no mood to consider with toleration or calmness what they regard as an insult to the nation from an avowed enemy. For this reason there is danger that an outbreak might occur which the city would afterward regret, and it is the duty of the Police Commissioners to take such steps in advance as will insure good order in case the performance takes place.

NEWS
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 5 - 1917

Music

Explosives, verbal as well as chemical, are mightily in vogue just at present, but it remained for Dr. Karl Muck, Boche director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Major Higginson, its mainstay and support, to set off the bomb that has shaken our musical universe to its very center.

—✣—

A wave of angry protest and denunciation swept the country following the report of a refusal to grant requests for "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the orchestra's Providence concert and it remains to be seen how quickly it will subside.

Of course, the fact that Dr. Muck has resigned relieves the intensity of the situation somewhat, though in truth the whole thing is "up in the air."

Presumably the concert for which the orchestra has engaged the Lyric next Wednesday night will be given, but whether or not Dr. Muck will be on hand is not known.

Indeed no definite information is at hand at this writing (Saturday), so it is hard to tell just what we may expect.

The first dispatches telling of the matter created vast indignation, but when later ones were received emphasizing Dr. Muck's glaring affrontery and quoting Major Higginson as supporting him, a situation was created whose seriousness the police had sufficient grounds for realizing, if the hyphenated part of the public did not.

The American people do not readily forget such an insult as that which has been paid them and it will probably be very unwise, to say the least, for Dr. Muck to stir out of the holy precincts of Boston. If a vote were taken the result would undoubtedly show that the majority of loyal American citizens would agree with Teddy's declaration that he should be interned.

Because things were as they were, the concert that the orchestra is scheduled to give at the Lyric next Wednesday night was being anticipated in a way almost amounting to apprehension. Now, however, that the matter has been, at least, partially cleared up and the promise to play the anthem has been made, the outlook is much brighter.

The program contains two German works, both masterpieces — Brahms' E minor Symphony and Beethoven's third Lenore Symphony. The other numbers are Sibelius' "Finlandia" and Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," a Russian tone poem inspired by a Teutonic painting of the same name by a Teutonic artist, Boecklin. There will be no soloist.

—✣—

Reports from other cities say that Walter Damrosch, director of the New York Symphony, and Josef Stransky, director of the New York Philharmonic, are including "The Star-Spangled Banner" at all their

There is absolutely no excuse for a point-blank refusal to include the national anthem at any public concert.

It is disturbing to think that with the country at war with the most destructive forces the world has ever known, a request should even be necessary.

To say that the inclusion of "The Star-Spangled Banner" makes a break in the artistic continuity of a program is by no means to furnish adequate justification. It is not at all plain that such is the case, for if the anthem be given at the opening or close of the evening, the main body of the program need not be disarranged.

"The Star-Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck will agree, may not be as great a composition as "Die Wacht am Rhein" and the words are, everyone must admit, nothing like as sublime as those of "The Hymn of Hate."

But nevertheless it has the associations of grandeur and dignity and in this respect it is high above many of the decadent compositions that nowadays are dovetailed into programs, even those of the most pedantic and artistically righteous of musical organizations.

Granted, if needs be, that its inclusion does shatter completely the aesthetic properties. What of it? Surely patriotism should supersede everything else, even a Boston Symphony program, in these days. Dr. Muck has conclusively proved that he is more than technically an alien enemy.

The previous attitude taken by the Boston Symphony management to this denouement—for such it seems—is perfectly amazing. If the orchestra were of a second or third rate, if t were a mere nonentity, such a stand would center hostile attention upon it. But being traditionally the premier orchestra of the United States, the effect will be far-reaching and, it is to be feared, enduring.

It is almost unbelievable that such a state of affairs were permitted to come to pass, especially at the very opening of the season. As an example of bad policy it could not be more perfect had it been devised in Berlin.

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 8 -

KREISLER MAY PLAY

Former Governor Warfield Will Not Oppose His Appearance In This City

BARRED FROM PITTS[illegible]

Has Not Insulted Flag And Played At Conference Of Red Cross.

Former Gov. Edwin Warfield, who organized the movement which prevented Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, will not undertake any effort to prevent Fritz Kreisler from playing here. Kreisler is an officer of the Austrian Army and it is reported that he sends most of his earnings to his home country. He is scheduled to play in Baltimore on November 22. He was refused permission by the authorities of Pittsburgh to play in that city last night.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He is a brave man and he fought for his country. The American people honor bravery and they have honored him. I understand that he is a wonderful violinist.

Not At War With Austria.

"We are not formally at war with Austria, even though we may be practically at war with her. Mr. Kreisler has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem or their flag. On the contrary, he has played at Red Cross conferences and I have even heard that he played for the Allied Bazar, although I am not sure of the latter. Perhaps it might alter the condition somewhat if it were true that he sends all his money home to aid Austria in winning the war. I shall not lead any movement in opposition to him.

"But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country. I have no doubt he has stayed here to t to help Germany win the war by association with aliens here. I t you may be sure that Dr. Muck wil again lead the Boston Symphony O tra in this city.

"We must support the men who gone to France to fight for us and t who are in military camps all over country at this time. It is impossi to tell the disheartening effect it woul have on them if they learned that Dr. Muck had been allowed to insult the national anthem and the flag and it had not been resented."

The Boston Symphony's schedule provides for four more concerts here—on December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. W. Kinsey, manager of the Lyric, said he had heard nothing of the plans of the organization for the future.

Governor Warfield will address a patriotic meeting which will be held tomorrow afternoon in the Courthouse at Frederick, the birthplace of Francis Scott Key. He had an engagement to speak before the Catoctin Men's Club of the Evangelical Reformed Church there, and some of the citizens of Frederick, learning of it, seized the opportunity to ask the man who had opposed Dr. Muck in this city to speak at the birthplace of the author of the national anthem. There is considerable feeling in Frederick over the Muck incident.

SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 8 - 19

PHILADELPHIA.

We understand now how Philadelphia could applaud Karl Muck. On Tuesday it applauded the Smith-Vare political combination, which makes a business of municipal larceny and utilizes murder as a part of its machinery. There has been a competition in the past between New York and Chicago in the matter of vice, audacious political villainy and unblushing rascality, but Philadelphia has them both "beaten to a frazzle" in absolute lowness and baseness of political standards.

Her pretended respectability and Americanism make her lack of response to the most ordinary sense of shame all the more flagrant. She is a city without a conscience. Where the public conscience is in most communities, there is only a moral vacuum. God help her, for she seems past helping herself!

NEWS
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 5

Well, Dr. Muck played it without having the arm with which he swings his baton paralyzed.

SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 8 - 1917

Anti-Muck Patriots Like Minute Men Of '75

The Baltimore massmeeting against the enemy is "standing by." Its decisive action Tuesday at the Lyric is only the prelude to its activities. It will be ready to act swiftly and effectively when next the German viper crawls from its hole.

"The people are not done with this yet," said former Governor Edwin Warfield yesterday. "The meeting was adjourned only temporarily. The session of Tuesday has been 'recessed' only, subject to the call of the chairman.

"Muck must go. I think the feeling is that this man cannot continue, on such favorable conditions, being the centre of admiration and the idol of the alien enemies and traitors to our country. It is not a question of accepting his resignation, but a question of getting rid of him. A man came to my office this morning and said, 'I would follow you anywhere to get that fellow and get him off the soil of this country.'

Back Of Boys In Trenches.

"The meeting Tuesday was an organized massmeeting and it is ready to meet any time at the call of the chairman to take action on any question of a serious nature to our country. We have got to back up the boys that have gone to the front. It will be cheering news to the boys when they learn of it and realize that the parents and relatives and the people at home are behind them.

"We will be found ready when the emergency requires. This is no time for temporizing with traitors."

Washington on Tuesday night gave the glad hand to Muck instead of the cold mitten Baltimore handed him, the reports from there indicating that the Prussian director received a "warm welcome."

Police Board Saved Rout.

Baltimore itself was prepared to give him a warm reception last night and would have done so had not the Police Board turned the flank. But is was scheduled to be a somewhat different welcome than the one he received in Washington. The big hall at the Lyric was vacant last night. There was no Muck and no Boston Symphony and no flaunting of enemy "kultur" in Baltimore's midst. The very air, however, was still alive with the spirit of patriotism that was sent broadcast at the Tuesday massmeeting, when Baltimore went on record for the country.

Washington, in time, may see the error of its welcome to the Hun in our midst and repent. Philadelphia gave a somewhat similar welcome to Muck on Monday night, but already it is rustling the penitential ashes.

Philadelphian Lauds Stand.

"The Optimist" in the North American has already voiced Philadelphia's awakening consciousness of its infamy in tolerating Muck and his organization.

"Thank God for Baltimore," he says. "Mars and music may not have much in common . . . . but when it comes to a German musician earning a handsome living in the United States, first declining to play our national anthem and then doing it poorly under compulsion, the whole matter passes out of the field of art into the field of patriotism. . . . Under such circumstances you could expect one American city to show where such an alien gets off.

Says He Misplayed Anthem.

"If the old Liberty Bell down in Independence Hall had human feelings I wonder what it would have thought and said when it heard how enthusiastically the audience at the Academy of Music Monday evening applauded Herr Dr. Muck for kindly condescending temporarily to can his Kultur and misplay the 'Star-Spangled Banner'.

"It must be highly gratifying to red-blooded Americans elsewhere to hear how dwellers in the city of Penn and Franklin did all they could to make Herr Dr. Muck feel that he was performing a signal service in playing the 'Star-Spangled Banner.'

"Baltimore prohibited the concert because Baltimore is an American city which won't put up with anyone or anything that isn't for America in a time like this.

"Of course, American independence was not born in Baltimore, but at least some part of it moved there at one time and has grown a large and vigorous family! The 'Star-Spangled Banner' was born in Baltimore and, thank God, it still waves there."

1 ENQUIRER
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

Letters to the Editor

An "American's" Stab From Behind

To the Editor of The Inquirer:

I was very much interested in an article published in your paper in which it hinted the Boston Symphony Orchestra may disband owing to the criticism over their omitting the "Star Spangled Banner" from their programme.

I can hardly understand Mr. Higginson's attitude in this matter. It would not only seem correct that they should be compelled to play our National Anthem prior to all concerts, but that moreover before the curtain shall rise on any dramatic performance in our theatres the caste should step upon the stage and recite the words in unison.

There seem to be too many people in high places who are attempting to give the direct lie to the late General Sherman, and it might not be a bad idea at the opening of our courts to have the presiding judge lead the jury in at least one verse of Dr. Key's immortal poem.

Could it not also be arranged that professional men be demanded to show their loyalty; dentists singing "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean" before filling a tooth; bank tellers demanding "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" before honoring a check; contractors, of course, rendering "Hail! Hail! The Gang Has Not Disbanded" prior to getting to work to run the city for the day.

Personally, I am an American, and the National Anthem stands for a great deal to me. But there seem to be some people who are asking it to stand for a great deal too much. Were it exhibited with the rarity and reverence shown to the Liberty Bell I think it would mean more to all of us.

It is still a question in my mind if the art patrons who are criticising this great organization will be consistent enough to allow only paintings hung in their art galleries which are painted in Red, White and Blue.

S. H. C.
Jersey City, N. J.

(The above was written by a gentleman whose English camouflage of his German name is not sufficiently complete to conceal its Teutonic origin. The letter itself is its own explanation for his expressed request that his name should not be published.—Ed. Inquirer).

[illegible] Freie Presse
om
ddress: Brooklyn, N Y
ate NOV -6 1917

Dr. Muck's Konzert

Wird in Baltimore von der Polizei verboten.

Baltimore, 6. Nov. Die Polizei von Baltimore ließ gestern dem Manager des Lyric-Theaters die Nachricht zukommen, daß sie das für Mittwoch in Aussicht genommene Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters verbieten müsse, weil dadurch die öffentliche Sicherheit der Gemeinde gefährdet sein würde.

Die Maßregel wurde auf Empfehlung der Grand Jury getroffen. Dieselbe ist der Ansicht, daß es bei dem Konzert zu einer patriotiischen Demanstration und zu Krawallen gekommen wäre.

m SUN
lress: Baltimore, Md.

THE DUTY OF THE POLICE BOARD.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays in this city Wednesday, the Police Board owes it to the community to take such precautions as will prevent disorder.

It is clear that intense feeling has been aroused by the refusal of the German leader of the orchestra to play the national anthem, and his subsequent compliance with the popular demand has by no means allayed this resentment. The great majority of Americans are in no mood to consider with toleration or calmness what they regard as an insult to the nation from an avowed enemy. For this reason there is danger that an outbreak might occur which the city would afterward regret, and it is the duty of the Police Commissioners to take such steps in advance as will insure good order in case the performance takes place.

NEWS
: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 5 - 1917
shed:

Music

Explosives, verbal as well as chemical, are mightily in vogue just at present, but it remained for Dr. Karl Muck, Boche director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Major Higginson, its mainstay and support, to set off the bomb that has shaken our musical universe to its very center.

—✣—

A wave of angry protest and denunciation swept the country following the report of a refusal to grant requests for "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the orchestra's Providence concert and it remains to be seen how quickly it will subside.

Of course, the fact that Dr. Muck has resigned relieves the intensity of the situation somewhat, though in truth the whole thing is "up in the air."

Presumably the concert for which the orchestra has engaged the Lyric next Wednesday night will be given, but whether or not Dr. Muck will be on hand is not known.

Indeed no definite information is at hand at this writing (Saturday), so it is hard to tell just what we may expect.

The first dispatches telling of the matter created vast indignation, but when later ones were received emphasizing Dr. Muck's glaring affrontery and quoting Major Higginson as supporting him, a situation was created whose seriousness the police had sufficient grounds for realizing, if the hyphenated part of the public did not.

The American people do not readily forget such an insult as that which has been paid them and it will probably be very unwise, to say the least, for Dr. Muck to stir out of the holy precincts of Boston. If a vote were taken the result would undoubtedly show that the majority of loyal American citizens would agree with Teddy's declaration that he should be interned.

Because things were as they were, the concert that the orchestra is scheduled to give at the Lyric next Wednesday night was being anticipated in a way almost amounting to apprehension. Now, however, that the matter has been, at least, partially cleared up and the promise to play the anthem has been made, the outlook is much brighter.

The program contains two German works, both masterpieces — Brahms' E minor Symphony and Beethoven's third Lenore Symphony. The other numbers are Sibelius' "Finlandia" and Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," a Russian tone poem inspired by a Teutonic painting of the same name by a Teutonic artist, Boecklin. There will be no soloist.

—✣—

Reports from other cities say that Walter Damrosch, director of the New York Symphony, and Josef Stransky, director of the New York Philharmonic, are including "The Star-Spangled Banner" at all their

There is absolutely no excuse for a point-blank refusal to include the national anthem at any public concert.

It is disturbing to think that with the country at war with the most destructive forces the world has ever known, a request should even be necessary.

To say that the inclusion of "The Star-Spangled Banner" makes a break in the artistic continuity of a program is by no means to furnish adequate justification. It is not at all plain that such is the case, for if the anthem be given at the opening or close of the evening, the main body of the program need not be disarranged.

"The Star-Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck will agree, may not be as great a composition as "Die Wacht am Rhein" and the words are, everyone must admit, nothing like as sublime as those of "The Hymn of Hate."

But nevertheless it has the associations of grandeur and dignity and in this respect it is high above many of the decadent compositions that nowadays are dovetailed into programs, even those of the most pedantic and artistically righteous of musical organizations.

Granted, if needs be, that its inclusion does shatter completely the aesthetic properties. What of it? Surely patriotism should supersede everything else, even a Boston Symphony program, in these days. Dr. Muck has conclusively proved that he is more than technically an alien enemy.

The previous attitude taken by the Boston Symphony management to this denouement—for such it seems—is perfectly amazing. If the orchestra were of a second or third rate, if t were a mere nonentity, such a stand would center hostile attention upon it. But being traditionally the premier orchestra of the United States, the effect will be far-reaching and, it is to be feared, enduring.

It is almost unbelievable that such a state of affairs were permitted to come to pass, especially at the very opening of the season. As an example of bad policy it could not be more perfect had it been devised in Berlin.

n EVENING SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.
[illegible]

KREISLER MAY PLAY

Former Governor Warfield Will Not Oppose His Appearance In This City.

BARRED FROM PITTS[illegible]

Has Not Insulted Flag And Played At Conference Of Red Cross.

Former Gov. Edwin Warfield, who organized the movement which prevented Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, will not undertake any effort to prevenf Fritz Kreisler from playing here. Kreisler is an officer of the Austrian Army and it is reported that he sends most of his earnings to his home country. He is scheduled to play in Baltimore on November 22. He was refused permission by the authorities of Pittsburgh to play in that city last night.

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Kreisler," said the former Governor. "He is a brave man and he fought for his country. The American people honor bravery and they have honored him. I understand that he is a wonderful violinist.

Not At War With Austria.

"We are not formally at war with Austria, even though we may be practically at war with her. Mr. Kreisler has offered no insult to the American people, their national anthem or their flag. On the contrary, he has played at Red Cross conferences and I have even heard that he played for the Allied Bazar, although I am not sure of the latter. Perhaps it might alter the condition somewhat if it were true that he sends all his money home to aid Austria in winning the war. I shall not lead any movement in opposition to him.

"But I would oppose any effort to have Dr. Muck lead the Boston Symphony in any future concerts in Baltimore. He has remained in this country. I have no doubt he has stayed here to t[illegible] to help Germany win the war by association with aliens here. I t[illegible] you may be sure that Dr. Muck wil[illegible] again lead the Boston Symphony O[illegible]tra in this city.

"We must support the men who [illegible] gone to France to fight for us and t[illegible] who are in military camps all over [illegible] country at this time. It is impossi[illegible] to tell the disheartening effect it woul[illegible] have on them if they learned that Dr. Muck had been allowed to insult the national anthem and the flag and it had not been resented."

The Boston Symphony's schedule provides for four more concerts here—on December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13. W. Kinsey, manager of the Lyric, said he had [illegible] nothing of the plans of the organization for the future.

Governor Warfield will address a patriotic meeting which will be held tomorrow afternoon in the Courthouse at Frederick, the birthplace of Francis Scott Key. He had an engagement to speak before the Catoctin Men's Club of the Evangelical Reformed Church there, and some of the citizens of Frederick, learning of it, seized the opportunity to ask the man who had opposed Dr. Muck in this city to speak at the birthplace of the author of the national anthem. There is considerable feeling in Frederick over the Muck incident.

om SUN
ldress: Baltimore, Md.
te

PHILADELPHIA.

We understand now how Philadelphia could applaud Karl Muck. On Tuesday it applauded the Smith-Vare political combination, which makes a business of municipal larceny and utilizes murder as a part of its machinery. There has been a competition in the past between New York and Chicago in the matter of vice, audacious political villainy and unblushing rascality, but Philadelphia has them both "beaten to a frazzle" in absolute lowness and baseness of political standards.

Her pretended respectability and Americanism make her lack of response to the most ordinary sense of shame all the more flagrant. She is a city without a conscience. Where the public conscience is in most communities, there is only a moral vacuum. God help her, for she seems past helping herself!

m NEWS ldress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 5
e

Well, Dr. Muck played it without having the arm with which he swings his baton paralyzed.

SUN
: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 8 - 1917
she

Anti-Muck Patriots Like Minute Men Of '75

The Baltimore massmeeting against the enemy is "standing by." Its decisive action Tuesday at the Lyric is only the prelude to its activities. It will be ready to act swiftly and effectively when next the German viper crawls from its hole.

"The people are not done with this yet," said former Governor Edwin Warfield yesterday. "The meeting was adjourned only temporarily. The session of Tuesday has been 'recessed' only, subject to the call of the chairman.

"Muck must go. I think the feeling is that this man cannot continue, on such favorable conditions, being the centre of admiration and the idol of the alien enemies and traitors to our country. It is not a question of accepting his resignation, but a question of getting rid of him. A man came to my office this morning and said, 'I would follow you anywhere to get that fellow and get him off the soil of this country.'

Back Of Boys In Trenches.

"The meeting Tuesday was an organized massmeeting and it is ready to meet any time at the call of the chairman to take action on any question of a serious nature to our country. We have got to back up the boys that have gone to the front. It will be cheering news to the boys when they learn of it and realize that the parents and relatives and the people at home are behind them.

"We will be found ready when the emergency requires. This is no time for temporizing with traitors."

Washington on Tuesday night gave the glad hand to Muck instead of the cold mitten Baltimore handed him, the reports from there indicating that the Prussian director received a "warm welcome."

Police Board Saved Rout.

Baltimore itself was prepared to give him a warm reception last night and would have done so had not the Police Board turned the flank. But is was scheduled to be a somewhat different welcome than the one he received in Washington. The big hall at the Lyric was vacant last night. There was no Muck and no Boston Symphony and no flaunting of enemy "kultur" in Baltimore's midst. The very air, however, was still alive with the spirit of patriotism that was sent broadcast at the Tuesday massmeeting, when Baltimore went on record for the country.

Washington, in time, may see the error of its welcome to the Hun in our midst and repent. Philadelphia gave a somewhat similar welcome to Muck on Monday night, but already it is rustling he penitential ashes.

Philadelphian Lauds Stand.

"The Optimist" in the North American has already voiced Philadelphia's awakening consciousness of its infamy in tolerating Muck and his organization.

"Thank God for Baltimore," he says. "Mars and music may not have much in common . . . . but when it comes to a German musician earning a handsome living in the United States, first declining to play our national anthem and then doing it poorly under compulsion, the whole matter passes out of the field of art into the field of patriotism. . . . Under such circumstances you could expect one American city to show where such an alien gets off.

Says He Misplayed Anthem.

"If the old Liberty Bell down in Independence Hall had human feelings I wonder what it would have thought and said when it heard how enthusiastically the audience at the Academy of Music Monday evening applauded Herr Dr. Muck for kindly condescending temporarily to can his Kultur and misplay the 'Star-Spangled Banner'.

"It must be highly gratifying to red-blooded Americans elsewhere to hear how dwellers in the city of Penn and Franklin did all they could to make Herr Dr. Muck feel that he was performing a signal service in playing the 'Star-Spangled Banner.'

"Baltimore prohibited the concert because Baltimore is an American city which won't put up with anyone or anything that isn't for America in a time like this.

"Of course, American independence was not born in Baltimore, but at least some part of it moved there at one time and has grown a large and vigorous family! The 'Star-Spangled Banner' was born in Baltimore and, thank God, it still waves there."

REDUCTION

RATIO

13x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

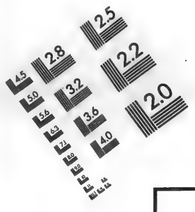
2.0 mm

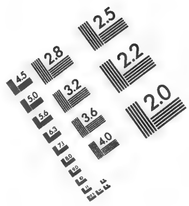
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

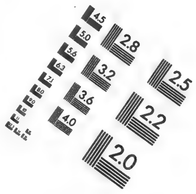
1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

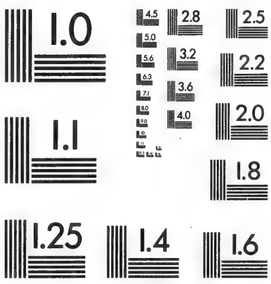


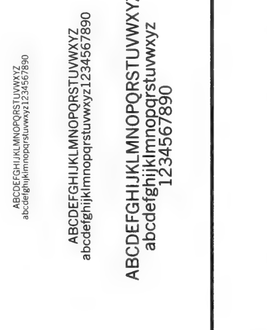




150 mm

100 mm





1.0 mm

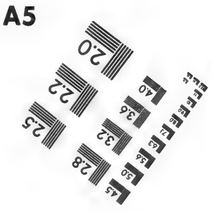
1.5 mm

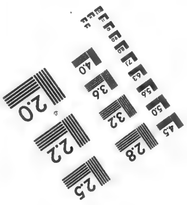
2.0 mm

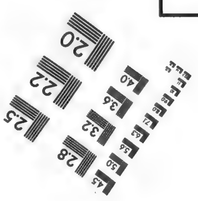
2.5 mm

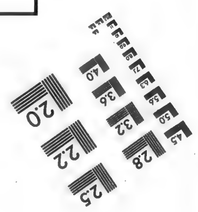
A5

A4









PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

123

SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 6 - 1917

NO BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT TOMORROW

Grand Jury And Police Board Forbid It To Avert Possible Popular Outbreak.

PATRIOTIC MEETING TO BE HELD

Whether Dr. Muck Resigns Or Not, Program Stands—Future Appearances Of Organization Depend Upon Circumstances.

Dr. Muck or no Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be prohibited from giving its scheduled concert at the Lyric here tomorrow night. An order to this effect was embodied last evening by the Board of Police Commissioners in a letter to Manager Wilbur Kinsey, of the Lyric, drafted after a protracted session.

The action was precipitated by a notification to the Police Board by the grand jury that the members of the inquest considered it "unwise, if not physically dangerous," to permit the concert. Foreman John S. Bridges was sent to the Police Board yesterday morning, as the representative of the jury, to carry this message.

Mr. Kinsey received the letter last night. He stated that he will get in touch with the managers of the orchestra to find out if they will give the concert here tomorrow and the concerts scheduled for the balance of the season without Dr. Muck. If they so agree, said Mr. Kinsey, this may change the situation, and he will ask the Police Board to rescind their prohibitory order. However, it does not appear probable that the order will be rescinded for tomorrow's concert.

Popular Outbreak Feared.

The grand jury and the Police Board seem to have taken the stand that the anger of the people of Baltimore is so unmistakable that, even if Dr. Muck is taken from the orchestra before tomorrow, it may be impossible to control this anger, which may vent itself, the authorities feel, on the orchestra as a whole, however innocent of blame.

The indigation of Baltimore citizens against the attempt to send here the leader of the Boston orchestra who had refused to play the American national anthem had grown to such an extent by yesterday morning that the action by the Police Commissioners was not unexpected.

The letter to Manager Kinsey is as follows:

NOVEMBER 5, 1917.

Mr. W. Kinsey, Manager of the Lyric Theatre, Baltimore, Md.:

Dear Sir—The grand inquest of the State of Maryland, in and for Baltimore city, has today officially notified the Board of Police Commissioners, through its foreman, that the grand jury considers, in view of recent events, it would be unwise, if not physically dangerous, to permit the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday evening next.

You are therefore directed not to allow the said concert to take place at the Lyric Theatre. Very respectfully,

LAWRASON RIGGS,
President Board of Police Commissioners.

Massmeeting To Be Held.

This action, however, will have no effect whatever on the big patriotic massmeeting which is to be held at the Lyric at 2 o'clock this afternoon, unless it serves to make the meeting even more enthusiastic than at first promised. The meeting was called by former Governor Warfield as a protest of Marylanders against the insult offered by the orchestra leader to the American flag, and also to give Baltimoreans and Marylanders an opportunity to reaffirm their allegiance to that flag and offer fresh evidence of their patriotism. The latter purpose is unchanged by the developments which have resulted in the prohibition of tomorrow's concert.

Several days ago, before he called the massmeeting, Governor Warfield appeared before the Board of Police Commissioners and requested that such action as the board took last evening be decided upon. As it did not appear that the board would act at that time the meeting was arranged.

The response to the call for such a meeting has been overwhelming. Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn, Camp Meade commander, is going to send one of the Camp Meade bands and about 100 of Baltimore's selected soldiers of the National Army to the city today to take part in the meeting.

Letter Carriers Band To Play.

Col. Sherlock Swann, postmaster of Baltimore, telegraphed to Governor Warfield yesterday afternoon from Washington that he had obtained permission from the Postoffice authorities to have the Baltimore Letter Carriers' Band on hand to furnish additional music. Employers called on the former Governor, some to say they were giving their employes a holiday to attend the meeting and others to tell him that, while they couldn't give everyone a holiday, they were going to let big delegations from their offices and factories go to the Lyric.

Mothers and fathers of Camp Meade boys and of other soldiers serving their country also let it be known that they would be on hand to show where they stand. In fact, so general were the responses which poured into Governor Warfield's office that it appeared that overflow meetings will be necessary to-

There are no tickets for the meeting. In addition to the music from the bands, the program will include several solos by several of the musicians, singing of patriotic airs and impromptu speeches by prominent Marylanders. Resolutions condemning the actions of such aliens as Dr. Muck and reaffirming the patriotism of the people of Baltimore will probably be offered and adopted. The Camp Meade Band will give a concert on the plaza in front of the Lyric before the meeting and the other Baltimore soldiers may drill.

Got Threats Against Orchestra.

News of the great responses to the call for today's meeting reached the grand jury yesterday morning, shortly after it had opened its session, and the matter was discussed immediately.

Marshal of Police Carter backed up the grand jury in a report to the board. The Marshal stated that, not only had he heard, first hand, sentiments from those backing today's meeting, but he had received anonymous letters containing threats against the orchestra. Following this report, the Commissioners went into executive session and the letter to Manager Kinsey followed.

It is not improbable that if Dr. Muck is withdrawn the Police Board will permit the Boston Symphony concerts scheduled for the balance of the season. Yesterday's letter applies only to the concert scheduled for tomorrow. Mr. Kinsey said he does not expect to hear from the managers of the orchestra relative to Muck before this afternoon.

Walbrook Indorses Meeting.

The Walbrook Improvement Association at its meeting held last night unanimously, with the presidency of James D. Verney presiding, adopted a resolution introduced by Ernest R. Crapster indorsing the action of former Governor Warfield in calling the patriotic mass meeting at the Lyric this afternoon. Edgar Fallon, secretary of the association, was instructed to forward a copy of the resolution to Governor Warfield.

STAR

Baltimore, Md.

NOV 3 - 1917

"Kultur" Efficiency Expert

Photo by Western Newspaper Union.

Karl Muck, Ph. D., Prussian conductor of Berlin Royal Opera. He came to the United States in 1906 as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the "imperial consent" of the Kaiser, granted because of the Kaiser's "regard for Americans." He was titled afterwards by the Kaiser. His connection with the recent refusal of the organization to play the national anthem of the United States, because "art is higher than any national considerations" threatens dissolution of the orchestra.

EVENING SUN

Baltimore, Md.

NOV 3 - 1917

GRAND JURY WOULD STOP MUCK CONCERT

John S. Bridges, The Foreman, Says Jurors Fear Disorders And Perhaps Bloodshed.

ORDINANCE TO BE DRAWN REQUIRING THE ANTHEM

President O'Meara Will Provide For Its Inclusion In All Musical Programs.

The probable danger in allowing Dr. Carl Muck, who is a Prussian citizen, to appear in this city Wednesday evening as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was discussed by the grand jury at its session this morning.

Following a thorough threshing out of the subject, in which all of the members of the inquest took part, Foreman John S. Bridges called on Secretary Josiah Kinsey of the Police Board and said that the grand jury felt that the Police Board should not allow Dr. Muck to appear and that the concert should be called off. Owing to the state of the popular mind at this time, Mr. Bridges explained, the jurors felt that the concert might result in grave disorder, even bloodshed.

Mr. Bridges also announced that the jury was forwarding to former Governor Warfield a letter asking him to announce from the stage of the Lyric tomorrow afternoon its action in the matter.

Marshal Carter Objects.

Police Marshal Carter said this afternoon that he was opposed to the concert being given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whether held under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The Marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused on the question he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be held.

Asks Everyone To Bring Flag.

Everybody who attends the big patriotic massmeeting which former Governor Warfield has called at the Lyric tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock to protest against the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck in this city is asked to bring an American flag to serve as a further reminder of the slurs that have been cast upon it by the Prussian musician. There will be bands a-plenty to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," but Governor Warfield wants the emblem of the nation as well as its anthem very much in evidence.

Messages that have reached the former Governor's office this morning indicate that the gathering will be large and enthusiastic. Several big business houses have sent word that they are unable to give a whole holiday to their forces, but that they will send delegations to show that they are in sympathy with this movement that will place an undoubted stamp of patriotic loyalty on the people of Maryland. Telephone calls from people outside of Baltimore show that there is likely to be a large representation of patriots from the counties as well as from the city.

Several of the big patriotic organizations are planning to go to the Lyric in a body. The members of others will attend as individuals. The doors will be thrown open a half hour before the meeting and there will be no reserved seats, the first comers getting the preference in position. There will be a number of speakers, but the speeches will be brief and to the point. The chief idea of the meeting is for the people of the city to make a public demonstration of their resentment of Dr. Muck's insults to the national anthem and to make plain their determination that he shall not be allowed to direct the orchestra in this city.

The evident intention of the managers of the orchestra to have Dr. Muck lead the concert Wednesday is shown by the fact that reservations have been made for him at the Belvedere Hotel.

O'Meara To Propose Ordinance.

An ordinance compelling the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the beginning of all musical entertainments, the ordinance to remain in force until the end of the war, will be introduced in the City Council by John F. O'Meara, president of the First Branch, when that body convenes November 13.

Mr. O'Meara said today that he was sorry the City Council was not in session now, so some action could be taken immediately upon the attitude of Dr. Muck. He said that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in public here or elsewhere.

"If Muck plays the national anthem now, it will only be through compulsion, and it is against his sentiments and wishes, and he therefore should be banned from ever appearing before an American audience," said Mr. O'Meara. "I am in favor of putting the quietus on all persons who are unpatriotic, and the time has now arrived for the American people to insist on all things being done in an American spirit."

Will Provide Heavy Penalty.

Mr. O'Meara said that he would have his ordinance prepared in time for introduction at the opening session of the City Council. He will have it provide a heavy penalty for failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the beginning of every musical entertainment held in this city. The ordinance will be law at least until after the war. After further consideration it may be deemed best to make the playing of the national anthem a part of all musical programs for all time.

It is said that the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" upon all occasions, even after the war, may go a long way to keep alive the patriotism which is now being shown throughout the land.

n STAR

ress: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 6 - 1917

PATRIOTIC CROWD GATHERS AT LYRIC

Mass-meeting to Protest Against Muck and Concert Is Begun.

SOLDIERS' BAND PLAYS

A public mass-meeting to protest against Dr. Karl Muck being continued as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is on at the Lyric, under the leadership of former Governor Warfield. The meeting was scheduled to open at 2 o'clock, and from the great interest shown by Baltimoreans in the fight against Dr. Muck, it is believed a warm session will start almost at once. The soldiers' band from Camp Meade is enlivening the meeting.

Efforts now are being made in some quarters to retain the concert here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled for tomorrow night at the Lyric, and prohibited by the Police Board after action by the Grand Jury, but under the direction of someone other than Dr. Karl Muck.

Taboo on Muck.

Whether these will be successful under the circumstances remains to be seen. The point is raised that so long as Dr. Karl Muck is retained as regular conductor of the orchestra its management may not be willing to have regular concerts of the orchestra conducted by someone else which he himself is engaged to conduct, even if that person be already an assistant conductor. The situation would resolve itself into practically two conductors for the same orchestra. Dr. Muck himself might not agree to such an arrangement, and some persons may object to patronizing the orchestra, an American institution, as long as it remains under the control—even though not in Baltimore—of an enemy alien. It is possible also that only by the authorities prohibiting the concert can Dr. Muck be forbidden to conduct such a concert.

Music lovers and all those interested in conserving every resource of the United States want the organization as such preserved, and if satisfactory solution can be found Baltimoreans want its annual series of concerts here retained.

Camp Meade Band.

There was chorus music at the Lyric meeting under the direction of Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, with the accompaniment of a piano and the Camp Meade Band. The band was escorted by 150 National Army men from the camp. It gave a concert in front of the Lyric before the meeting. The Postoffice authorities also gave consent for the popular Baltimore Letter-carriers' Band to participate in the demonstration.

Letters, telegrams and other expressions from many points have been received by all those who have participated in Baltimore's determined protest.

EVENING SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 6 - 19

Higginson Silent On Barring Of Orchestra

Boston Musical Circles Uphold His Right To Select Program, But Would Appease Public.

Boston, Nov. 6.—"I have nothing to say now and have no intention of issuing any statement later," declared Major Henry L. Higginson in an interview today regarding the refusal of the Police Commissioners to allow the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play in Baltimore.

Boston papers have not yet commented editorially on Baltimore's action, but the sentiment in musical circles generally and among Major Higginson's personal friends is that he is at entire liberty as founder of the orchestra to decide what it shall play. Furthermore, the program is made up far in advance and it cannot easily be changed.

The question of patriotism, they feel, does not enter into the matter, as every American is patriotic, although every man is entitled to his own opinion as to the inclusion of "The Star-Spangled Banner" in the symphony's program. On the other hand, the matter having come to the attention of the public which is largely ignorant of the higher order of musical affairs, the playing of the national anthem would seem a

123

SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 6 - 1917

NO BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT TOMORROW

Grand Jury And Police Board Forbid It To Avert Possible Popular Outbreak.

PATRIOTIC MEETING TO BE HELD

Whether Dr. Muck Resigns Or Not, Program Stands—Future Appearances Of Organization Depend Upon Circumstances.

Dr. Muck or no Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be prohibited from giving its scheduled concert at the Lyric here tomorrow night. An order to this effect was embodied last evening by the Board of Police Commissioners in a letter to Manager Wilbur Kinsey, of the Lyric, drafted after a protracted session.

The action was precipitated by a notification to the Police Board by the grand jury that the members of the inquest considered it "unwise, if not physically dangerous," to permit the concert. Foreman John S. Bridges was sent to the Police Board yesterday morning, as the representative of the jury, to carry this message.

Mr. Kinsey received the letter last night. He stated that he will get in touch with the managers of the orchestra to find out if they will give the concert here tomorrow and the concerts scheduled for the balance of the season without Dr. Muck. If they so agree, said Mr. Kinsey, this may change the situation, and he will ask the Police Board to rescind their prohibitory order. However, it does not appear probable that the order will be rescinded for tomorrow's concert.

Popular Outbreak Feared.

The grand jury and the Police Board seem to have taken the stand that the anger of the people of Baltimore is so unmistakable that, even if Dr. Muck is taken from the orchestra before tomorrow, it may be impossible to control this anger, which may vent itself, the authorities feel, on the orchestra as a whole, however innocent of blame.

The indigation of Baltimore citizens against the attempt to send here the leader of the Boston orchestra who had refused to play the American national anthem had grown to such an extent by yesterday morning that the action by the Police Commissioners was not unexpected.

The letter to Manager Kinsey is as follows:

NOVEMBER 5, 1917.

Mr. W. Kinsey, Manager of the Lyric Theatre, Baltimore, Md.:

Dear Sir—The grand inquest of the State of Maryland, in and for Baltimore city, has today officially notified the Board of Police Commissioners, through its foreman, that the grand jury considers, in view of recent events, it would be unwise, if not physically dangerous, to permit the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday evening next.

You are therefore directed not to allow the said concert to take place at the Lyric Theatre. Very respectfully,

LAWRASON RIGGS,
President Board of Police Commissioners.

Massmeeting To Be Held.

This action, however, will have no effect whatever on the big patriotic massmeeting which is to be held at the Lyric at 2 o'clock this afternoon, unless it serves to make the meeting even more enthusiastic than at first promised. The meeting was called by former Governor Warfield as a protest of Marylanders against the insult offered by the orchestra leader to the American flag, and also to give Baltimoreans and Marylanders an opportunity to reaffirm their allegiance to that flag and offer fresh evidence of their patriotism. The latter purpose is unchanged by the developments which have resulted in the prohibition of tomorrow's concert.

Several days ago, before he called the massmeeting, Governor Warfield appeared before the Board of Police Commissioners and requested that such action as the board took last evening be decided upon. As it did not appear that the board would act at that time the meeting was arranged.

The response to the call for such a meeting has been overwhelming. Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn, Camp Meade commander, is going to send one of the Camp Meade bands and about 100 of Baltimore's selected soldiers of the National Army to the city today to take part in the meeting.

Letter Carriers Band To Play.

Col. Sherlock Swann, postmaster of Baltimore, telegraphed to Governor Warfield yesterday afternoon from Washington that he had obtained permission from the Postoffice authorities to have the Baltimore Letter Carriers' Band on hand to furnish additional music. Employers called on the former Governor, some to say they were giving their employes a holiday to attend the meeting and others to tell him that, while they couldn't give everyone a holiday, they were going to let big delegations from their offices and factories go to the Lyric.

Mothers and fathers of Camp Meade boys and of other soldiers serving their country also let it be known that they would be on hand to show where they stand. In fact, so general were the responses which poured into Governor Warfield's office that it appeared that overflow meetings will be necessary today.

There are no tickets for the meeting. In addition to the music from the bands, the program will include several solos by several of the musicians, singing of patriotic airs and impromptu speeches by prominent Marylanders. Resolutions condemning the actions of such aliens as Dr. Muck and reaffirming the patriotism of the people of Baltimore will probably be offered and adopted. The Camp Meade Band will give a concert on the plaza in front of the Lyric before the meeting and the other Baltimore soldiers may drill.

Got Threats Against Orchestra.

News of the great responses to the call for today's meeting reached the grand jury yesterday morning, shortly after it had opened its session, and the matter was discussed immediately.

Marshal of Police Carter backed up the grand jury in a report to the board. The Marshal stated that, not only had he heard, first hand, sentiments from those backing today's meeting, but he had received anonymous letters containing threats against the orchestra. Following this report, the Commissioners went into executive session and the letter to Manager Kinsey followed.

It is not improbable that if Dr. Muck is withdrawn the Police Board will permit the Boston Symphony concerts scheduled for the balance of the season. Yesterday's letter applies only to the concert scheduled for tomorrow. Kinsey said he does not expect to hear from the managers of the orchestra relative to Muck before this afternoon.

Walbrook Indorses Meeting.

The Walbrook Improvement Association, at its meeting held last night under the presidency of James D. Verney, unanimously adopted a resolution introduced by Ernest R. Crapster indorsing the motives that prompted former Governor Warfield to call the patriotic massmeeting at the Lyric this afternoon. Charles J. Fallon, secretary of the association, was instructed to forward a copy of the resolution to Mr. Warfield.

"Kultur" Efficiency Expert

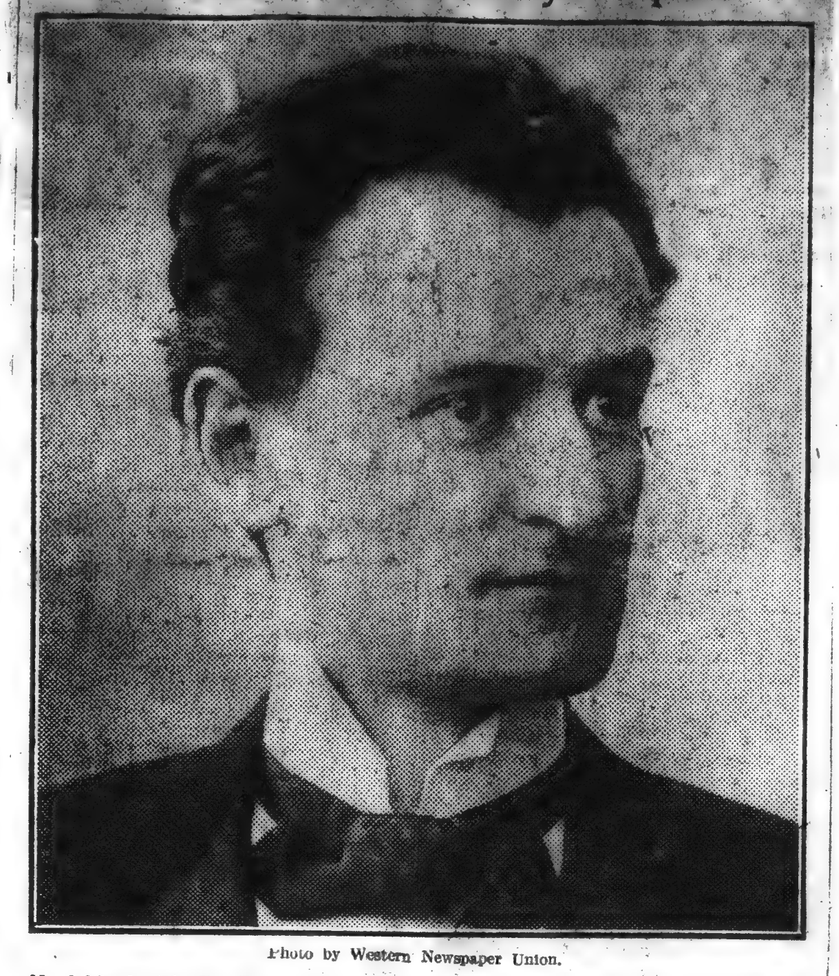


Photo by Western Newspaper Union.

Karl Muck, Ph. D., Prussian conductor of Berlin Royal Opera. He came to the United States in 1906 as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the "imperial consent" of the Kaiser, granted because of the Kaiser's "regard for Americans." He was titled afterwards by the Kaiser. His connection with the recent refusal of the organization to play the national anthem of the United States, because "art is higher than any national considerations" threatens dissolution of the orchestra.

EVENING SUN

Baltimore, Md.

GRAND JURY WOULD STOP MUCK CONCERT

John S. Bridges, The Foreman, Says Jurors Fear Disorders And Perhaps Bloodshed.

ORDINANCE TO BE DRAWN REQUIRING THE ANTHEM

President O'Meara Will Provide For Its Inclusion In All Musical Programs.

The probable danger in allowing Dr. Carl Muck, who is a Prussian citizen, to appear in this city Wednesday evening as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was discussed by the grand jury at its session this morning.

Following a thorough threshing out of the subject, in which all of the members of the inquest took part, Foreman John S. Bridges called on Secretary Josiah Kinsey of the Police Board and said that the grand jury felt that the Police Board should not allow Dr. Muck to appear and that the concert should be called off. Owing to the state of the popular mind at this time, Mr. Bridges explained, the jurors felt that the concert might result in grave disorder, even bloodshed.

Mr. Bridges also announced that the jury was forwarding to former Governor Warfield a letter asking him to announce from the stage of the Lyric tomorrow afternoon its action in the matter.

Marshal Carter Objects.

Police Marshal Carter said this afternoon that he was opposed to the concert being given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whether held under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The Marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused on the question he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be held.

Asks Everyone To Bring Flag.

Everybody who attends the big patriotic massmeeting which former Governor Warfield has called at the Lyric tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock to protest against the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck in this city is asked to bring an American flag to serve as a further reminder of the slurs that have been cast upon it by the Prussian musician. There will be bands a-plenty to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," but Governor Warfield wants the emblem of the nation as well as its anthem very much in evidence.

Messages that have reached the former Governor's office this morning indicate that the gathering will be large and enthusiastic. Several big business houses have sent word that they are unable to give a whole holiday to their forces, but that they will send delegations to show that they are in sympathy with this movement that will place an undoubted stamp of patriotic loyalty on the people of Maryland. Telephone calls from people outside of Baltimore show that there is likely to be a large representation of patriots from the counties as well as from the city.

Several of the big patriotic organizations are planning to go to the Lyric in a body. The members of others will attend as individuals. The doors will be thrown open a half hour before the meeting and there will be no reserved seats, the first comers getting the preference in position. There will be a number of speakers, but the speeches will be brief and to the point. The chief idea of the meeting is for the people of the city to make a public demonstration of their resentment of Dr. Muck's insults to the national anthem and to make plain their determination that he shall not be allowed to direct the orchestra in this city.

The evident intention of the managers of the orchestra to have Dr. Muck lead the concert Wednesday is shown by the fact that reservations have been made for him at the Belvedere Hotel.

O'Meara To Propose Ordinance.

An ordinance compelling the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the beginning of all musical entertainments, the ordinance to remain in force until the end of the war, will be introduced in the City Council by John F. O'Meara, president of the First Branch, when that body convenes November 13.

Mr. O'Meara said today that he was sorry the City Council was not in session now, so some action could be taken immediately upon the attitude of Dr. Muck. He said that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in public here or elsewhere.

"If Muck plays the national anthem now, it will only be through compulsion, and it is against his sentiments and wishes, and he therefore should be banned from ever appearing before an American audience," said Mr. O'Meara. "I am in favor of putting the quietus on all persons who are unpatriotic, and the time has now arrived for the American people to insist on all things being done in an American spirit."

Will Provide Heavy Penalty.

Mr. O'Meara said that he would have his ordinance prepared in time for introduction at the opening session of the City Council. He will have it provide a heavy penalty for failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the beginning of every musical entertainment held in this city. The ordinance will be law at least until after the war. After further consideration it may be deemed best to make the playing of the national anthem a part of all musical programs for all time.

It is said that the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" upon all occasions, even after the war, may go a long way to keep alive the patriotism which is now being shown throughout the land.

n STAR

ress: Baltimore, Md.

1917

PATRIOTIC CROWD GATHERS AT LYRIC

Mass-meeting to Protest Against Muck and Concert Is Begun.

SOLDIERS' BAND PLAYS

A public mass-meeting to protest against Dr. Karl Muck being continued as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is on at the Lyric, under the leadership of former Governor Warfield. The meeting was scheduled to open at 2 o'clock, and from the great interest shown by Baltimoreans in the fight against Dr. Muck, it is believed a warm session will start almost at once. The soldiers' band from Camp Meade is enlivening the meeting.

Efforts now are being made in some quarters to retain the concert here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled for tomorrow night at the Lyric, and prohibited by the Police Board after action by the Grand Jury, but under the direction of someone other than Dr. Karl Muck.

Taboo on Muck.

Whether these will be successful under the circumstances remains to be seen. The point is raised that so long as Dr. Karl Muck is retained as regular conductor of the orchestra its management may not be willing to have regular concerts of the orchestra conducted by someone else which he himself is engaged to conduct, even if that person be already an assistant conductor. The situation would resolve itself into practically two conductors for the same orchestra. Dr. Muck himself might not agree to such an arrangement, and some persons may object to patronizing the orchestra, an American institution, as long as it remains under the control—even though not in Baltimore—of an enemy alien. It is possible also that only by the authorities prohibiting the concert can Dr. Muck be forbidden to conduct such a concert.

Music lovers and all those interested in conserving every resource of the United States want the organization as such preserved, and if satisfactory solution can be found Baltimoreans want its annual series of concerts here retained.

Camp Meade Band.

There was chorus music at the Lyric meeting under the direction of Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, with the accompaniment of a piano and the Camp Meade Band. The band was escorted by 150 National Army men from the camp. It gave a concert in front of the Lyric before the meeting. The Postoffice authorities also gave consent for the popular Baltimore Letter-carriers' Band to participate in the demonstration.

Letters, telegrams and other expressions from many points have been received by all those who have participated in Baltimore's determined protest.

EVENING SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md.

Higginson Silent On Barring Of Orchestra

Boston Musical Circles Uphold His Right To Select Program, But Would Appease Public.

Boston, Nov. 6.—"I have nothing to say now and have no intention of issuing any statement later," declared Major Henry L. Higginson in an interview today regarding the refusal of the Police Commissioners to allow the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play in Baltimore.

Boston papers have not yet commented editorially on Baltimore's action, but the sentiment in musical circles generally and among Major Higginson's personal friends is that he is at entire liberty as founder of the orchestra to decide what it shall play. Furthermore, the program is made up far in advance and it cannot easily be changed.

The question of patriotism, they feel, does not enter into the matter, as every American is patriotic, although every man is entitled to his own opinion as to the inclusion of "The Star-Spangled Banner" in the symphony's program. On the other hand, the matter having come to the attention of the public, which is largely ignorant of the higher order of musical affairs, the playing of the national anthem would seem ad

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

om STAR
dress: Baltimore, Md.
e

WARFIELD TO STOP MUCK COMING HERE

Former Governor Says He Shall Not Play Here Under Any Circumstances.

WILL HOLD PROTEST MEETING

Predicts Great Patriotic Gathering; Department of Justice After Director.

While the Department of Justice at Washington is investigating Dr. Karl Muck, German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, former Governor Edwin Warfield, of Maryland, is also busy.

"No matter if I am the only one present," Governor Warfield emphatically said today., "the public meeting I called at the Lyric for Tuesday afternoon will be held as originally planned. It will begin at 2 o'clock. I predict, however, that it will be such a gathering of patriots as Baltimore has never seen. It is time for everyone to show exactly where he stands—either for or against the United States.

"As for Dr. Muck, he shall not come to Baltimore and lead that orchestra under any conditions."

The Washington dispatch to The Star, which tells that Dr. Muck is being investigated by agents of the Department of Justice, adds:

"If Dr. Muck is found to be actually an enemy of the United States he will be interned," officials of the department said today. "The fact that Dr. Muck directed the playing of the national anthem yesterday has not halted the investigation. But if it proves that Dr. Muck's action really was the result of artistic rather than disloyal motives no further move will be made by the Department of Justice."

A Bostond ispatch says the orchestra will play the national anthem in future; that it is understood Maj. Henry L. Higginson has not yet accepted Dr. Muck's resignation.

om SUN
dress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 6 - 1

BOSTONIANS WON'T COME

Dr. Muck In Philadelphia Hurries Through Anthem—Academy Of Music Thronged.

[From Staff Correspondent of The Sun.]

Philadelphia, Nov. 5.—A. E. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, leader, smiled when he was told of the action of the Baltimore Police Department in barring the concert for the Lyric Wednesday night.

"Well, that settles it," he said, "doesn't it? We won't go to Baltimore."

He said there was no use in Dr. Muck saying anything more than he has said, that he would be "misunderstood," and that "the only reason he was with the orchestra was that if he left it a hundred men would be out of the means of earning a living."

Mr. Ellis said he was told of the situation in Baltimore and about the report that former Governor Warfield would lead a mob to prevent Dr. Muck appearing, and asked if the authorities in Baltimore would permit "anything like that."

The orchestra played to a crowded house at the Academy of Music tonight. The lower floor was packed and jammed with the best society people of the town.

There was a line three blocks long at 7 o'clock to buy the seats for the gallery, and when the concert opened the house was filled from cellar to roof.

Director Muck opened the concert with the playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner." He walked quickly onto the stage, made a quick bow to the audience in response to a generous applause, then wheeled around, lifted his baton and started slambang into the national anthem. He swung his stick and his "hundred" raced through their notes as if the only object was to reach the end. He went through it like a breeze.

Then at the end he went immediately to the first number of the program without a chance for applause. The helter-skelter playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the hasty swinging into the opening number of the program indicated more clearly than anything the obvious dislike of the German director to the piece and his uncontrolled pique. The abrupt change was not only tactless, impudent and rude, for the audience was still standing, but was a practical insult to the American people.

Manager Ellis said that there are Frenchmen, Russians and Italians as well as Germans in the orchestra, and that it is not a "German organization by any means." Colonel Higginson did not come to Philadelphia.

While he spoke guardedly, Mr. Ellis' plain attitude is that if people do not want to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra the orchestra can stand it. He does not say it in so many words, but his stand gives the plain intimation that those people are unfortunate and to be pitied.

H. S. S.

NEWS
ss: Baltimore, Md.

CHEER WAFIELD AND HISS NAME OF MUCK

Thousands Pack Lyric In Protest Against Leader Of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PATRIOTISM RUNS RAMPANT

Prominent Citizens Of The City Applaud Wildly When The Anthem Is Played.

"Hang the Kaiser!"

"Kill the Hun!"

These were mild expletives compared to some that were shouted by enthusiasts at the Lyric yesterday afternoon, the first time Dr. Muck's name was mentioned, and the audience, laughing, swept into a thunder of applause.

It was perhaps just as well that the Police Commissioners put the ban on the appearance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; because if the audience which would have greeted it had been in the same temper as that which packed the Lyric, a ride on a rail might have been in order.

Mr. Warfield Takes Command.

"I did not call this meeting on my own account, but on account of that anthem which has just been sung," shouted former Governor Edwin Warfield, springing to his feet as the audience finished the last stanza of "The Star-Spangled Banner." "Some people say that it should not be played at a symphony concert. I say that it should be played everywhere!

"The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art! What does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism? When I read that this alien was coming to Baltimore, I simply had to protest. And you, my friends, show me that I was right!"

Shame On Philadelphia.

"This isn't Philadelphia!" shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, no!" replied the Governor heartily.

Then the Governor proceeded to read a few out of an enormous sheaf of letters that had been written to him, commending his stand. He read one from Cardinal Gibbons, saying that the prelate "approved with all his heart" of the meeting. Other letters from Providence, R. I., from persons who had witnessed Dr. Muck's initial affront to the flag were read.

No Trouble, But——

"We did not intend, if the concert had been allowed to proceed, to inaugurate any disorder," explained the Governor, adding, however, in a whimsical manner, "but we certainly would have — interned — that German!"

At this, Marshal of Police Robert Carter, who was standing at one corner of the stage, nodded, and said, more to himself than to anyone else: "Governor, you're all right!"

They Hiss Muck.

Every time the name of Dr. Muck was uttered the audience received it with a gust of hisses, and hearty applause greeted every reference to the slighted anthem. Every seat in the theater was taken and many persons were standing back of the orchestra circle. The crowd voiced its approval of the former Governor's step in no uncertain manner; and had it been just a shade more enthusiastic it would have strongly reminded one of the anti-pacifist affair at the Academy of Music last spring.

Judge Henry Stockbridge, on being introduced, read the following resolutions, which he and Mr. Warfield had drawn up:

Pass Resolutions.

Whereas Karl Muck has refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when requested to do so; and

Whereas by his acts and words he has shown his contempt for the song, and in doing so has insulted every Marylander and has proclaimed himself a loyal subject of the Kaiser,

Be it resolved, That we declare the conduct of said Muck an affront to every patriotic citizen of the country, an incitement to riot and disorder and a blow at freedom and liberty!

We publicly proclaim our loyal [illegible] of our President, and re-

rom EVENING SUN
ddress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 6 - 19
ate

724

The Muddle Of Muck.

Dr. Karl Muck, the "loyal Prussian subject," and his Boston backer have only themselves to blame for the tempest of public indignation which is raging about their heads and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It is of very little practical consequence whether the Boston Orchestra does or does not play "The Star-Spangled Banner" before or after its concerts. If Muck had been anything but a "loyal Prussian," he would have had the good taste and good sense not to object to the playing of the national anthem of the country in which he was making his living and asking public support. If he was so loyal a Prussian that that would have offended him, he could have had some one else conduct it.

But, like a true Prussian, he first positively refused to have the anthem played, with the insulting remark that it is artistically unworthy of the German music he gives the public; then he, true Prussian that he is, had it played, conducting himself, but in a huff, resigning his position at the same time. It is all this that has made him and his backer and his orchestra offensive to Americans.

The Boston Orchestra is not the only music-making organization in America, and, as we have said before, why not let the Huns and the "shadow Huns" support their own?

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

This Correspondent Maintains That A Live Issue Has Been Raised Between The Enemy Alien, Dr. Muck, And American Patriotism, And That Our National Anthem Harmonizes With Religious Feeling As Well As With Loyalty.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: In the letter of Dr. Joseph S. Ames he says: "I think Dr. Muck was right in his refusal," i. e., to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

While I have no doubt of the patriotism of Dr. Ames, I feel compelled to say it seems to be of a different brand from that of other people when he says: "I earnestly suggest that those people who insist so strongly upon the floating of our flag and the playing of our anthem should recognize the fact that there are other sides to our minds." This is not a question of psychology, but of patriotism.

I am even willing to admit that Dr. Ames' patriotism is of a higher order than that of the men who have volunteered their lives to float our flag in the trenches in behalf of the liberty of this country and that of the civilized world. I do, however, have difficulty in giving the same eminence to Dr. Ames' musical judgment when he says that the national anthem has no place in religious worship or in a symphony concert played under the direction of Dr. Muck. The wave theory of sound is one of the most interesting studies of physics, the thorough knowledge of which Dr. Ames beyond doubt possesses, but this does not make him a musical critic to follow blindly.

Religion and patriotism call upon mankind for the greatest sacrifices they can make and in time of war they are closely allied. Had Dr. Ames attended a religious ceremony at Christ Church this afternoon, he would have discovered that the playing of the national anthem by the organist was in entire sympathy with the religious feeling of the rest of the music. As to its being out of place in a symphony concert, I beg leave to point out that a movement of one of Beethoven's symphonies has a motif identically the same as that of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The fact is, this is not so much a question of musical judgment as it is the relative position of Dr. Muck and the people of this country who are at war with the nation to which he owes his allegiance. As Mr. Higginson says, "Nobody doubts where Dr. Muck stands." Unfortunately, Dr. Muck has not only announced his allegiance to his own country but his antagonism to this country. He is not only an alien citizen at large, and heretofore unmolested, in his enemy's country, but he is also the paid leader of an orchestra which invites the patronage and financial support of the people who have given him shelter and tolerance.

When the patrons of the orchestra requested that the national anthem be played in Providence and it was not played, an issue was immediately raised between partiotism and Dr. Muck.

Baltimore, Nov. 4. America.

NEWS
s: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 5 - 1917

MUCK'S FATE IN HANDS OF CITIES

Number Of Protests Received Will Settle Matter Of His Resignation.

(Special Dispatch to The Baltimore News and New York Sun.)

Boston, Nov. 4.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again last night in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn.

His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on whether there is public dmand for the removal of Muck and whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programs of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done.

There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further changes in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programs.

[illegible] Warfield [illegible] suggestion [illegible] which it is written, in the [illegible] high devotion to the best and worthiest ideals in our common cause. Sincerely yours,

"Morris S. Lazaron."

"I am a subscriber to the symphony series and, therefore, give my opinion in the matter."

Ban On Muck Pleases Public

Satisfaction General Over Halting Of Boston Orchestra Concert By Police.

General satisfaction at the decision of the Police Board in forbidding the holding of the Boston Symphony Concert in Baltimore tomorrow evening was expressed this morning by musicians, patriotic organizations and laymen. Previous to this decision fears had been expressed by many persons that the experiences of the long-to-be-remembered pacifist meeting at the Academy of Music last spring might easily be duplicated, and with probably more direful results, unless steps were taken by the police to prevent the actual holding of the concert.

That the concerts will not be discontinued but that a director will be found to fill Dr. Muck's place as leader of the orchestra, is the hope of all music-lovers who have been dreading the possibility of the dissolution of this organization.

W. H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra, will pass through Baltimore today on his way to Washington, and will hold a short conference with Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric, to determine what the future holds for the orchestra in Baltimore. At this conference it will probably be decided whether tomorrow's concert is to be altogether abandoned or simply postponed, and whether the other concerts scheduled for this winter's musical season take place or will be also abandoned.

As to the return of money to the ticket holders should the concert tomorrow be altogether given up, Mr. Kinsey said:

"Knowing the organization of the orchestra as I do, I feel quite certain that the public will not be the losers should any financial loss be entailed.

om STAR
dress: Baltimore, Md.
e

WARFIELD TO STOP MUCK COMING HERE

Former Governor Says He Shall Not Play Here Under Any Circumstances.

WILL HOLD PROTEST MEETING

Predicts Great Patriotic Gathering; Department of Justice After Director.

While the Department of Justice at Washington is investigating Dr. Karl Muck, German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, former Governor Edwin Warfield, of Maryland, is also busy.

"No matter if I am the only one present," Governor Warfield emphatically said today,, "the public meeting I called at the Lyric for Tuesday afternoon will be held as originally planned. It will begin at 2 o'clock. I predict, however, that it will be such a gathering of patriots as Baltimore has never seen. It is time for everyone to show exactly where he stands—either for or against the United States.

"As for Dr. Muck, he shall not come to Baltimore and lead that orchestra under any conditions."

The Washington dispatch to The Star, which tells that Dr. Muck is being investigated by agents of the Department of Justice, adds:

"If Dr. Muck is found to be actually an enemy of the United States he will be interned," officials of the department said today. "The fact that Dr. Muck directed the playing of the national anthem yesterday has not halted the investigation. But if it proves that Dr. Muck's action really was the result of artistic rather than disloyal motives no further move will be made by the Department of Justice."

A Bostond ispatch says the orchestra will play the national anthem in future; that it is understood Maj. Henry L. Higginson has not yet accepted Dr. Muck's resignation.

om SUN
dress: Baltimore, Md.

BOSTONIANS WON'T COME

Dr. Muck In Philadelphia Hurries Through Anthem—Academy Of Music Thronged.

[From Staff Correspondent of The Sun.]

Philadelphia, Nov. 5.—A. E. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, leader, smiled when he was told of the action of the Baltimore Police Department in barring the concert for the Lyric Wednesday night.

"Well, that settles it," he said, "doesn't it? We won't go to Baltimore."

He said there was no use in Dr. Muck saying anything more than he has said, that he would be "misunderstood," and that "the only reason he was with the orchestra was that if he left it a hundred men would be out of the means of earning a living."

Mr. Ellis said he was told of the situation in Baltimore and about the report that former Governor Warfield would lead a mob to prevent Dr. Muck appearing, and asked if the authorities in Baltimore would permit "anything like that."

The orchestra played to a crowded house at the Academy of Music tonight. The lower floor was packed and jammed with the best society people of the town.

There was a line three blocks long at 7 o'clock to buy the seats for the gallery, and when the concert opened the house was filled from cellar to roof.

Director Muck opened the concert with the playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner." He walked quickly onto the stage, made a quick bow to the audience in response to a generous applause, then wheeled around, lifted his baton and started slambang into the national anthem. He swung his stick and his "hundred" raced through their notes as if the only object was to reach the end. He went through it like a breeze.

Then at the end he went immediately to the first number of the program without a chance for applause. The helter-skelter playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the hasty swinging into the opening number of the program indicated more clearly than anything the obvious dislike of the German director to the piece and his uncontrolled pique. The abrupt change was not only tactless, impudent and rude, for the audience was still standing, but was a practical insult to the American people.

Manager Ellis said that there are Frenchmen, Russians and Italians as well as Germans in the orchestra, and that it is not a "German organization by any means." Colonel Higginson did not come to Philadelphia.

While he spoke guardedly, Mr. Ellis' plain attitude is that if people do not want to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra the orchestra can stand it. He does not say it in so many words, but his stand gives the plain intimation that those people are unfortunate and to be pitied.

H. S. S.

NEWS
ss: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 5 -

MUCK'S FATE IN HANDS OF CITIES

Number Of Protests Received Will Settle Matter Of His Resignation.

(Special Dispatch to The Baltimore News and New York Sun.)

Boston, Nov. 4.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again last night in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn.

His resignation has not been accepted, and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on whether there is public dmand for the removal of Muck and whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programs of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done.

There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further changes in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programs.

...cept ...us suggestion ...hich it is written, in the ...high devotion to the best and worthiest ideals in our common cause. Sincerely yours,

"MORRIS S. LAZARON."

"I am a subscriber to the symphony series and, therefore, give my opinion in the matter."

Ban On Muck Pleases Public

Satisfaction General Over Halting Of Boston Orchestra Concert By Police.

General satisfaction at the decision of the Police Board in forbidding the holding of the Boston Symphony Concert in Baltimore tomorrow evening was expressed this morning by musicians, patriotic organizations and laymen. Previous to this decision fears had been expressed by many persons that the experiences of the long-to-be-remembered pacifist meeting at the Academy of Music last spring might easily be duplicated, and with probably more direful results, unless steps were taken by the police to prevent the actual holding of the concert.

That the concerts will not be discontinued but that a director will be found to fill Dr. Muck's place as leader of the orchestra, is the hope of all music-lovers who have been dreading the possibility of the dissolution of this organization.

W. H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra, will pass through Baltimore today on his way to Washington, and will hold a short conference with Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric, to determine what the future holds for the orchestra in Baltimore. At this conference it will probably be decided whether tomorrow's concert is to be altogether abandoned or simply postponed, and whether the other concerts scheduled for this winter's musical season take place or will be also abandoned.

As to the return of money to the ticket holders should the concert tomorrow be altogether given up, Mr. Kinsey said:

"Knowing the organization of the orchestra as I do, I feel quite certain that the public will not be the losers should any financial loss be entailed.

NEWS
ess: Baltimore, Md.

CHEER WAFIELD AND HISS NAME OF MUCK

Thousands Pack Lyric In Protest Against Leader Of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PATRIOTISM RUNS RAMPANT

Prominent Citizens Of The City Applaud Wildly When The Anthem Is Played.

"Hang the Kaiser!"

"Kill the Hun!"

These were mild expletives compared to some that were shouted by enthusiasts at the Lyric yesterday afternoon, the first time Dr. Muck's name was mentioned, and the audience, laughing, swept into a thunder of applause.

It was perhaps just as well that the Police Commissioners put the ban on the appearance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; because if the audience which would have greeted it had been in the same temper as that which packed the Lyric, a ride on a rail might have been in order.

Mr. Warfield Takes Command.

"I did not call this meeting on my own account, but on account of that anthem which has just been sung," shouted former Governor Edwin Warfield, springing to his feet as the audience finished the last stanza of "The Star-Spangled Banner." "Some people say that it should not be played at a symphony concert. I say that it should be played everywhere!

"The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art! What does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism? When I read that this alien was coming to Baltimore, I simply had to protest. And you, my friends, show me that I was right!"

Shame On Philadelphia.

"This isn't Philadelphia!" shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, no!" replied the Governor heartily.

Then the Governor proceeded to read a few out of an enormous sheaf of letters that had been written to him, commending his stand. He read one from Cardinal Gibbons, saying that the prelate "approved with all his heart" of the meeting. Other letters from Providence, R. I., from persons who had witnessed Dr. Muck's initial affront to the flag were read.

No Trouble, But——

"We did not intend, if the concert had been allowed to proceed, to inaugurate any disorder," explained the Governor, adding, however, in a whimsical manner, "but we certainly would have — interned — that German!"

At this, Marshal of Police Robert Carter, who was standing at one corner of the stage, nodded, and said, more to himself than to anyone else: "Governor, you're all right!"

They Hiss Muck.

Every time the name of Dr. Muck was uttered the audience received it with a gust of hisses, and hearty applause greeted every reference to the slighted anthem. Every seat in the theater was taken and many persons were standing back of the orchestra circle. The crowd voiced its approval of the former Governor's step in no uncertain manner; and had it been just a shade more enthusiastic it would have strongly reminded one of the anti-pacifist affair at the Academy of Music last spring.

Judge Henry Stockbridge, on being introduced, read the following resolutions, which he and Mr. Warfield had drawn up:

Pass Resolutions.

Whereas Karl Muck has refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when requested to do so; and

Whereas by his acts and words he has shown his contempt for the song, and in doing so has insulted every Marylander and has proclaimed himself a loyal subject of the Kaiser,

Be it resolved, That we declare the conduct of said Muck an affront to every patriotic citizen of the country, an incitement to riot and disorder and a blow at freedom and liberty!

We publicly proclaim our loyal ...rt of our President, and re-

rom EVENING SUN
ddress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 6 - 19
ate

724

The Muddle Of Muck.

Dr. Karl Muck, the "loyal Prussian subject," and his Boston backer have only themselves to blame for the tempest of public indignation which is raging about their heads and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It is of very little practical consequence whether the Boston Orchestra does or does not play "The Star-Spangled Banner" before or after its concerts. If Muck had been anything but a "loyal Prussian," he would have had the good taste and good sense not to object to the playing of the national anthem of the country in which he was making his living and asking public support. If he was so loyal a Prussian that that would have offended him, he could have had some one else conduct it.

But, like a true Prussian, he first positively refused to have the anthem played, with the insulting remark that it is artistically unworthy of the German music he gives the public; then he, true Prussian that he is, had it played, conducting himself, but in a huff, resigning his position at the same time. It is all this that has made him and his backer and his orchestra offensive to Americans.

The Boston Orchestra is not the only music-making organization in America, and, as we have said before, why not let the Huns and the "shadow Huns" support their own?

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

This Correspondent Maintains That A Live Issue Has Been Raised Between The Enemy Alien, Dr. Muck, And American Patriotism, And That Our National Anthem Harmonizes With Religious Feeling As Well As With Loyalty.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: In the letter of Dr. Joseph S. Ames he says: "I think Dr. Muck was right in his refusal," i. e., to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

While I have no doubt of the patriotism of Dr. Ames, I feel compelled to say it seems to be of a different brand from that of other people when he says: "I earnestly suggest that those people who insist so strongly upon the floating of our flag and the playing of our anthem should recognize the fact that there are other sides to our minds." This is not a question of psychology, but of patriotism.

I am even willing to admit that Dr. Ames' patriotism is of a higher order than that of the men who have volunteered their lives to float our flag in the trenches in behalf of the liberty of this country and that of the civilized world. I do, however, have difficulty in giving the same eminence to Dr. Ames' musical judgment when he says that the national anthem has no place in religious worship or in a symphony concert played under the direction of Dr. Muck. The wave theory of sound is one of the most interesting studies of physics, the thorough knowledge of which Dr. Ames beyond doubt possesses, but this does not make him a musical critic to follow blindly.

Religion and patriotism call upon mankind for the greatest sacrifices they can make and in time of war they are closely allied. Had Dr. Ames attended a religious ceremony at Christ Church this afternoon, he would have discovered that the playing of the national anthem by the organist was in entire sympathy with the religious feeling of the rest of the music. As to its being out of place in a symphony concert, I beg leave to point out that a movement of one of Beethoven's symphonies has a motif identically the same as that of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The fact is, this is not so much a question of musical judgment as it is the relative position of Dr. Muck and the people of this country who are at war with the nation to which he owes his allegiance. As Mr. Higginson says, "Nobody doubts where Dr. Muck stands." Unfortunately, Dr. Muck has not only announced his allegiance to his own country but his antagonism to this country. He is not only an alien citizen at large, and heretofore unmolested in his enemy's country, but he is also the paid leader of an orchestra which invites the patronage and financial support of the people who have given him shelter and tolerance.

When the patrons of the orchestra requested that the national anthem be played in Providence and it was not played, an issue was immediately raised between partiotism and Dr. Muck.

Baltimore, Nov. 4. AMERICA.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Date NOV 5

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 2-1917

Suggests A Patriotic Society Of 1917 Should Be Formed Of Those Who Joined In "The Star-Spangled Banner" Meeting At The Lyric.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: You have done so much for the people through your valuable paper. I wish you would have a society of 1917 formed of all who assembled at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon—the indignation meeting—for such must have been the one called in 1776 to write the Declaration of Independence.

They were called by duty, by the same inspiration as was our beloved ex-Governor Warfield, who voiced so well our feelings. I believe he is to accomplish some great good for our country as the outcome of this inspired meeting.

I hope "Higginson" and "Muck" shall be forbidden to hold another concert in America. Ship them and all "muck" to the prisoners' camp. We shall not allow decayed matter to soil our flag, though even a musical instrument of art be used. It breeds sedition. No man can separate the holy emblem of our country, emblem of all that is good, "The Star-Spangled Banner," from the heart of America.

ROSE MCCLAYTON.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.

Where Are Those Lamp-Posts?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Where is one of those 500,000 lamp-posts Ambassador Gerard spoke about to a high German official in Germany a few months past?

This high Hun told Mr. Gerard that if we declared war on Germany that 500,000 German reservists would rise up in this country, and Mr. Gerard's answer was that there were 500,000 lamp-posts here for them.

Isn't there one for Dr. Muck? Why sir, if conditions were reversed and Americans in Germany defied and insulted the German Government as our Government has been insulted and defied by the Germans in this country, there would not be enough left of them to hang to a soda-water straw.

Let us deal sternly with them, not act as barbarians, but give them to understand that we mean business.

STAR-SPANGLED BANNER.

Romney, W. Va., Nov. 6.

A Lonesome Soldier At Camp McClellan.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Kindly give this little message a small space.

Attention girls: This is a lonesome soldier at Camp McClellan who wants some young girl to correspond with him.

JAMES T. BROWNING,
Company A, One Hundred and Twelfth Machine Gun Battalion, Fifty-eighth Brigade, Twenty-ninth Division.

Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala., Nov. 5.

Be An American In Poetry And Prose, In Music And Conversation, Talking Or Singing, Sleeping Or Waking.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The proper course has been taken with reference to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. No man with an ounce of patriotism would attend its concert, and that includes the writer, who has been a subscriber in the past.

It is certainly time that something more than mere words were used in a situation similar to this one and which may happen again. I think the American people have borne patiently the slurs and scoffs long enough, and those in authority should adopt sterner means to suppress a repetition of those who use the liberty of free speech to inflame public sentiment. Are we at war? Then let us take the stand that befits a country whose glorious traditions have inspired and upheld this noble nation—united we stand, divided we fall.

Though many of my friends in the past have been of German extraction—an uncle by marriage having been born in Southern Germany—yet I, an American, can truthfully say that the disloyal remarks and actions of children of those whose parents were born in Germany bewilder me, to say the least. I have ceased to have anything to say to men whom I was on most congenial terms with simply because of their pro-German views.

I write from a purely partiotic spirit and am proud to have been born in this glorious country.

TAXPAYER OF BALTIMORE CITY AND A HOLDER OF THIRD LIBERTY BONDS.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.

TRIBUNE
ess: Providence, R. I.

NOV 2-1917

Not an Intolerable Loss.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is unwilling to comply with the manifest desire of Providence people, the musical as well as the unmusical, there is, of course, no alternative to its cessation of visits to this city.

The loss in that case will not be wholly intolerable. We have a respectable little symphony orchestra of our own.

Besides, there are those to whom symphonic music is so much worse than a bore that release from the necessity of going to hear it under social pressure will be welcome.

NATIONAL ANTHEM DEMANDED BY PROVIDENCE ALDERMEN

Boston Symphony Affront Results in Formal Request to Police Board for Inclusion of "The Star Spangled Banner" in All Entertainments.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday added its formal protest against the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Karl Muck, for refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at Infantry Hall Tuesday night.

The resolution, which now goes to the Common Council for concurrent action next Monday evening, asks that licenses for concerts and entertainments be granted only on condition that "The Star Spangled Banner" be a part of the programme. The board passed the resolution unanimously on a roll-call vote.

"I want to go on record, and I know every one of us here wants to go on record, as approving such action by the Board of Police Commissioners," said Alderman Clayton A. Ballou in presenting the measure. "The crisis confronting this nation is too serious to permit those who are unfriendly to our cause to go their way untroubled, unless their way is our way."

At Mr. Ballou's request the vote was by roll call, which put each Alderman on the board's records as favoring the resolution, the text of which was as follows:

"Resolved, That the Board of Police Commissioners be and they hereby are requested to require the person making application for a license to conduct any musical entertainment in any public place or hall, in the city of Providence, to agree, as a condition precedent to the granting of such license, that 'The Star Spangled Banner' shall be played or sung during the course of the entertainment for which such license is granted."

The women representing prominent clubs in this city who signed the request made of Manager C. A. Ellis that the national anthem be played at the concert Tuesday evening sent a request to the Police Commissioners last evening. They request that the American flag be placed in every public hall, theatre and place of amusement in the city. They also request that no licenses be granted to any artist or organization which refuses to participate in either singing or playing "The Star Spangled Banner." This is only one of a score or more protests sent to the board.

The request is as follows:

"We, the undersigned, earnestly request that the American flag be placed in every public hall, theatre, or place of amusement, not to be removed for any individual or organization; and that no license be granted to artists or organizations giving concerts which refuse to participate in either singing or playing 'The Star Spangled Banner,' our national anthem, during the programme. This to be in effect as long as the war lasts."

Continued from Page 1.

Marion E. McConnell (Mrs. James E.), President of The Chaminade Club.

Minnie C. Carpenter (Mrs. Gilbert C.), First Vice President of the Chaminade Club.

Mary K. Hall (Mrs. George), President New England District of the National Federation of Musical Clubs.

Mary Colt Gross (Mrs. Harold J.), President Monday Morning Musical Club.

Emma Winslow Childs, President Chopin Club.

Mary Sweet Winsor, President Schubert Club.

Virginia Boyd Anderson, Acting President State Federation of Rhode Island Musical Clubs.

Annie L. Luther (Mrs. James Wheaton), President MacDowell Club.

Anne M. H. Mathews (Mrs. George S.), chairman of music committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
ress:
NOV 3-191

TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM.

Since the refusal of Dr. Muck to allow "The Star Spangled Banner" to be played at the recent concert in Providence by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a good many people in town have wondered whether the Boston Symphony Trio, which is to appear here in the lecture course of the East Providence Teachers' Association, would play the national anthem and whether the Trio would be kept on the programme. After a consideration of the matter by the officers of the association and the members of the executive committee, Principal Maryott, as chairman of the executive committee, has issued the following statement:

"In view of the present attitude of the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the officers and the executive committee of the East Providence Teachers' Association feel that they should make known the following facts regarding the Cella-Tak-Demailly Trio which is to appear in the teachers' course on Feb. 20.

"The members of this trio, who are Boston Symphony men, are unquestionably all pro-American and pro-ally in their sympathies. Mr. Demailly is of French birth and received his training in Paris. Mr. Cella is of American birth and studied in Italy. Mr. Tak, the leader of the trio, is a Hollander. He studied in Brussels and Paris, and is decidedly anti-German in his views. In fact, Mr. Tak, as a leader of several quartets and trios, has in each case so noticeably refused to allow anyone of pro-German tendencies to play under his leadership that he has won the disapproval of a certain element in the Symphony as a result. Upon inquiry of the bureau with which the contract for the trio was made, we have been assured that these men do not represent the German element of the Boston Symphony, that they are genuinely pro-American and pro-ally, and that they are not only willing to add "The Star Spangled Banner' to their programme, but that they welcome the chance to do so."

President Perkins has the programme cards of the course, and the supply of season tickets, which he intends to have distributed the first part of next week. The first number on the programme comes on Nov. 14, and consists of a lecture by Dr. Charles T. Baylis on "One Thousand Miles Over the Battlefields of Europe."

NATIONAL ANTHEM DEMAND MADE BY CITY'S ALDERMEN

TRIBUNE
ess: Providence, R. I.

NOV 2-1917

mrs. Carpenter and 30 days were fined.

MUST PLAY ANTHEM.

A trio from the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled for one of the dates in the teachers' course of lectures at the high school, but after the episode in Infantry Hall the other evening members of the committee felt that unless the trio agrees to play "The Star Spangled Banner" that the date be cancelled. While no official statement in regard to the matter is given out it is definitely known that such an agreement must be entered into before the trio is allowed to fill its date. It is understood, however, that tthe members of the trio are strongly pro-ally and if this is the case there will be no reason for concern. A statement is regard to the matter is expected soon.

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.

NOV 2-1917

Dr. Karl Muck says: "I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America." And Walter Damrosch, upholding Dr. Muck in his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner," says: "Dr. Muck is a loyal citizen of Prussia." Then if such is the case why is he running amuck in this country? Why is he not in Prussia or in an American internment camp?

om SUN
ldress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 9 - 191
ate

BALTIMORE ONCE MORE LEADS THE COUNTRY.

One of the finest things that have been done in Baltimore since "The Star-Spangled Banner" was written was the demonstration at the Lyric on Tuesday against the insult offered to our national anthem by the Prussian subject of the Kaiser, who gave his money freely to the Fatherland to support its propaganda in defense of the sinking of the Lusitania. It put Baltimore first among the cities of the Union in patriotism—not a hysterical, exaggerated emotionalism, but a sound, manly, red-blooded and righteous expression of Americanism that has been unequaled anywhere else. It was a splendid flaming out of the spirit which gave birth to Key's burning lines in a great crisis of our history, and it showed that the patriotism of 1812 and of 1917 are of the same blood and speak the same language.

It was something more important, however, than a mere outburst of indignation. It represented a sane and clear realization of the actual situation, of the danger of ignoring the internal enemies who menace us, of the folly of soft-pedaling issues which concern the national safety. The Baltimore meeting has served to emphasize this point, to arouse sleepy Americans to the supreme business of the hour, to inspire us all to greater earnestness and vigilance.

We are glad to know that Baltimore's New Defenders of the Star-Spangled Banner will remain on duty to guard against our own indifference and against insidious enemies. Former Governor Warfield performed a great and notable service for the country in an hour of need, and all associated with him in the historic meeting at the Lyric are worthy of the highest honor, particularly CardinalGibbons, Judge Stockbridge and Dr. Hopkinson. Cardinal Gibbons' letter must thrill the heart of every American who reads it. It should be framed and kept in the living room of every American household side by side with President Wilson's war address to Congress. Baltimore has again made history.

ANTHEM ALL RIGHT AT SYMPHONY CONCERTS

So Says David S. Smith, Professor Of Music At Yale University.

From the New York Times.

The present discussion concerning the wisdom of playing the national anthem at symphony concerts has resolved itself into much needless argumentum ad ominem, at the same time failing to throw light on the actual justification of its appearance on a program.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" has been officially designated the symbol of our national unity, appealing to the ear as the flag appeals to the eye. To object to its performance at a serious concert on the ground of the impossibility of its fitting into the scheme of a program of orchestra music is not unlike a refusal to display the Stars and Stripes on our house because the striking colors "kill" the color arrangement of the flowers in the garden. Nor is it a question of the literary and musical value of the national anthem; scoffing on the part of professional critics is but futile. The emblem is there for us to accept in its real significance, transcending individual opinion.

To be sure, it is hard to determine just the proper amount of publicity which the song should have, to fix the point beyond which it loses its force through repetition and becomes merged in the general mass of popular music. But at least we may protect it from the odium implied in the published remark of one conductor to the effect that it is all very well to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at popular concerts, but not at symphony concerts. Actually, the opposite is true. The national anthem is never presented with more appropriateness than before audiences that have gathered for serious reflection. It begins to offend only when it is used as a cloak of respectability over general cheapness of entertainment; and it is in the field of mere amusement that its use might well be curtailed.

Let us hope that mutual recrimination and professional aloofness and hypersensitiveness may give way to a vision of the exalted symbolism which a thoughtful conception of the national anthem reveals.

DAVID STANLEY SMITH,
Professor of Music, Yale University.
New Haven, Nov. 2, 1917.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md.

Date

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 2 - 1917

Suggests A Patriotic Society Of 1917 Should Be Formed Of Those Who Joined In "The Star-Spangled Banner" Meeting At The Lyric.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: You have done so much for the people through your valuable paper. I wish you would have a society of 1917 formed of all who assembled at the Lyric Tuesday afternoon—the indignation meeting—for such must have been the one called in 1776 to write the Declaration of Independence.

They were called by duty, by the same inspiration as was our beloved ex-Governor Warfield, who voiced so well our feelings. I believe he is to accomplish some great good for our country as the outcome of this inspired meeting.

I hope "Higginson" and "Muck" shall be forbidden to hold another concert in America. Ship them and all "muck" to the prisoners' camp. We shall not allow decayed matter to soil our flag, though even a musical instrument of art be used. It breeds sedition. No man can separate the holy emblem of our country, emblem of all that is good, "The Star-Spangled Banner," from the heart of America.

ROSE MCCLAYTON.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.

Where Are Those Lamp-Posts?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Where is one of those 500,000 lamp-posts Ambassador Gerard spoke about to a high German official in Germany a few months past?

This high Hun told Mr. Gerard that if we declared war on Germany that 500,000 German reservists would rise up in this country, and Mr. Gerard's answer was that there were 500,000 lamp-posts here for them.

Isn't there one for Dr. Muck? Why sir, if conditions were reversed and Americans in Germany defied and insulted the German Government as our Government has been insulted and defied by the Germans in this country, there would not be enough left of them to hang to a soda-water straw.

Let us deal sternly with them, not act as barbarians, but give them to understand that we mean business.

STAR-SPANGLED BANNER.

Romney, W. Va., Nov. 6.

A Lonesome Soldier At Camp McClellan.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Kindly give this little message a small space.

Attention girls: This is a lonesome soldier at Camp McCellan who wants some young girl to correspond with him.

JAMES T. BROWNING,
Company A, One Hundred and Twelfth Machine Gun Battalion, Fifty-eighth Brigade, Twenty-ninth Division.

Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala., Nov. 5.

Be An American In Poetry And Prose, In Music And Conversation, Talking Or Singing, Sleeping Or Waking.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The proper course has been taken with reference to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. No man with an ounce of patriotism would attend its concert, and that includes the writer, who has been a subscriber in the past.

It is certainly time that something more than mere words were used in a situation similar to this one and which may happen again. I think the American people have borne patiently the slurs and scoffs long enough, and those in authority should adopt sterner means to suppress a repetition of those who use the liberty of free speech to inflame public sentiment. Are we at war? Then let us take the stand that befits a country whose glorious traditions have inspired and upheld this noble nation—united we stand, divided we fall.

Though many of my friends in the past have been of German extraction—an uncle by marriage having been born in Southern Germany—yet I, an American, can truthfully say that the disloyal remarks and actions of children of those whose parents were born in Germany bewilder me, to say the least. I have ceased to have anything to say to men whom I was on most congenial terms with simply because of their pro-German views.

I write from a purely partiotic spirit and am proud to have been born in this glorious country.

A TAXPAYER OF BALTIMORE CITY AND A HOLDER OF TWO LIBERTY BONDS.

Baltimore, Nov. 6.

TRIBUNE

ess: Providence, R. I.

NOV 2 - 1917

Not an Intolerable Loss.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is unwilling to comply with the manifest desire of Providence people, the musical as well as the unmusical, there is, of course, no alternative to its cessation of visits to this city.

The loss in that case will not be wholly intolerable. We have a respectable little symphony orchestra of our own.

Besides, there are those to whom symphonic music is so much worse than a bore that release from the necessity of going to hear it under social pressure will be welcome.

NATIONAL ANTHEM DEMANDED BY PROVIDENCE ALDERMEN

Boston Symphony Affront Results in Formal Request to Police Board for Inclusion of "The Star Spangled Banner" in All Entertainments.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday added its formal protest against the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Karl Muck, for refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at Infantry Hall Tuesday night.

The resolution, which now goes to the Common Council for concurrent action next Monday evening, asks that licenses for concerts and entertainments be granted only on condition that "The Star Spangled Banner" be a part of the programme. The board passed the resolution unanimously on a roll-call vote.

"I want to go on record, and I know every one of us here wants to go on record, as approving such action by the Board of Police Commissioners," said Alderman Clayton A. Ballou in presenting the measure. "The crisis confronting this nation is too serious to permit those who are unfriendly to our cause to go their way untroubled, unless their way is our way."

At Mr. Ballou's request the vote was by roll call, which put each Alderman on the board's records as favoring the resolution, the text of which was as follows:

"Resolved, That the Board of Police Commissioners be and they hereby are requested to require the person making application for a license to conduct any musical entertainment in any public place or hall, in the city of Providence, to agree, as a condition precedent to the granting of such license, that 'The Star Spangled Banner' shall be played or sung during the course of the entertainment for which such license is granted."

The women representing prominent clubs in this city who signed the request made of Manager C. A. Ellis that the national anthem be played at the concert Tuesday evening sent a request to the Police Commissioners last evening. They request that the American flag be placed in every public hall, theatre and place of amusement in the city. They also request that no licenses be granted to any artist or organization which refuses to participate in either singing or playing "The Star Spangled Banner." This is only one of a score or more protests sent to the board.

The request is as follows:

"We, the undersigned, earnestly request that the American flag be placed in every public hall, theatre, or place of amusement, not to be removed for any individual or organization; and that no license be granted to artists or organizations giving concerts which refuse to participate in either singing or playing 'The Star Spangled Banner,' our national anthem, during the programme. This to be in effect as long as the war lasts."

Marion E. McConnell (Mrs. James E.), President of The Chaminade Club.

Minnie C. Carpenter (Mrs. Gilbert C.), First Vice President of the Chaminade Club.

Mary K. Hall (Mrs. George), President New England District of the National Federation of Musical Clubs.

Mary Colt Gross (Mrs. Harold J.), President Monday Morning Musical Club.

Emma Winslow Childs, President Chopin Club.

Mary Sweet Winsor, President Schubert Club.

Virginia Boyd Anderson, Acting President State Federation of Rhode Island Musical Clubs.

Annie L. Luther (Mrs. James Wheaton), President MacDowell Club.

Anne M. H. Mathews (Mrs. George S.), chairman of music committee of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs.

a

ress: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 3 - 1917

TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM.

Since the refusal of Dr. Muck to allow "The Star Spangled Banner" to be played at the recent concert in Providence by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a good many people in town have wondered whether the Boston Symphony Trio, which is to appear here in the lecture course of the East Providence Teachers' Association, would play the national anthem and whether the Trio would be kept on the programme. After a consideration of the matter by the officers of the association and the members of the executive committee, Principal Maryott, as chairman of the executive committee, has issued the following statement:

"In view of the present attitude of the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the officers and the executive committee of the East Providence Teachers' Association feel that they should make known the following facts regarding the Cella-Tak-Demailly Trio which is to appear in the teachers' course on Feb. 20.

"The members of this trio, who are Boston Symphony men, are unquestionably all pro-American and pro-ally in their sympathies. Mr. Demailly is of French birth and received his training in Paris. Mr. Cella is of American birth and studied in Italy. Mr. Tak, the leader of the trio, is a Hollander. He studied in Brussels and Paris, and is decidedly anti-German in his views. In fact, Mr. Tak, as a leader of several quartets and trios, has in each case so noticeably refused to allow anyone of pro-German tendencies to play under his leadership that he has won the disapproval of a certain element in the Symphony as a result. Upon inquiry of the bureau with which the contract for the trio was made, we have been assured that these men do not represent the German element of the Boston Symphony, that they are genuinely pro-American and pro-ally, and that they are not only willing to add 'The Star Spangled Banner' to their programme, but that they welcome the chance to do so."

President Perkins has the programme cards of the course, and the supply of season tickets, which he intends to have distributed the first part of next week. The first number on the programme comes on Nov. 14, and consists of a lecture by Dr. Charles T. Baylis on "One Thousand Miles Over the Battlefields of Europe."

NATIONAL ANTHEM DEMAND MADE BY CITY'S ALDERMEN

Continued from Page 1.

TRIBUNE

ess: Providence, R. I.

NOV 2 - 1917

...ers Carpenter and no bags were mined.

MUST PLAY ANTHEM.

A trio from the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled for one of the dates in the teachers' course of lectures at the high school, but after the episode in Infantry Hall the other evening members of the committee felt that unless the trio agrees to play "The Star Spangled Banner" that the date be cancelled. While no official statement in regard to the matter is given out it is definitely known that such an agreement must be entered into before the trio is allowed to fill its date. It is understood, however, that tthe members of the trio are strongly pro-ally and if this is the case there will be no reason for concern. A statement is regard to the matter is expected soon.

TRIBUNE

Providence, R. I.

NOV 2 - 1917

Dr. Karl Muck says: "I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America." And Walter Damrosch, upholding Dr. Muck in his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner," says: "Dr. Muck is a loyal citizen of Prussia." Then if such is the case why is he running amuck in this country? Why is he not in Prussia or in an American internment camp?

om SUN

ldress: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 9 - 1917

ate

BALTIMORE ONCE MORE LEADS THE COUNTRY.

One of the finest things that have been done in Baltimore since "The Star-Spangled Banner" was written was the demonstration at the Lyric on Tuesday against the insult offered to our national anthem by the Prussian subject of the Kaiser, who gave his money freely to the Fatherland to support its propaganda in defense of the sinking of the Lusitania. It put Baltimore first among the cities of the Union in patriotism—not a hysterical, exaggerated emotionalism, but a sound, manly, red-blooded and righteous expression of Americanism that has been unequaled anywhere else. It was a splendid flaming out of the spirit which gave birth to Key's burning lines in a great crisis of our history, and it showed that the patriotism of 1812 and of 1917 are of the same blood and speak the same language.

It was something more important, however, than a mere outburst of indignation. It represented a sane and clear realization of the actual situation, of the danger of ignoring the internal enemies who menace us, of the folly of soft-pedaling issues which concern the national safety. The Baltimore meeting has served to emphasize this point, to arouse sleepy Americans to the supreme business of the hour, to inspire us all to greater earnestness and vigilance.

We are glad to know that Baltimore's New Defenders of the Star-Spangled Banner will remain on duty to guard against our own indifference and against insidious enemies. Former Governor Warfield performed a great and notable service for the country in an hour of need, and all associated with him in the historic meeting at the Lyric are worthy of the highest honor, particularly CardinalGibbons, Judge Stockbridge and Dr. Hopkinson. Cardinal Gibbons' letter must thrill the heart of every American who reads it. It should be framed and kept in the living room of every American household side by side with President Wilson's war address to Congress. Baltimore has again made history.

ANTHEM ALL RIGHT AT SYMPHONY CONCERTS

So Says David S. Smith, Professor Of Music At Yale University.

From the New York Times.

The present discussion concerning the wisdom of playing the national anthem at symphony concerts has resolved itself into much needless argumentum ad ominem, at the same time failing to throw light on the actual justification of its appearance on a program.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" has been officially designated the symbol of our national unity, appealing to the ear as the flag appeals to the eye. To object to its performance at a serious concert on the ground of the impossibility of its fitting into the scheme of a program of orchestra music is not unlike a refusal to display the Stars and Stripes on our house because the striking colors "kill" the color arrangement of the flowers in the garden. Nor is it a question of the literary and musical value of the national anthem; scoffing on the part of professional critics is but futile. The emblem is there for us to accept in its real significance, transcending individual opinion.

To be sure, it is hard to determine just the proper amount of publicity which the song should have, to fix the point beyond which it loses its force through repetition and becomes merged in the general mass of popular music. But at least we may protect it from the odium implied in the published remark of one conductor to the effect that it is all very well to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at popular concerts, but not at symphony concerts. Actually, the opposite is true. The national anthem is never presented with more appropriateness than before audiences that have gathered for serious reflection. It begins to offend only when it is used as a cloak of respectability over general cheapness of entertainment; and it is in the field of mere amusement that its use might well be curtailed.

Let us hope that mutual recrimination and professional aloofness and hypersensitiveness may give way to a vision of the exalted symbolism which a thoughtful conception of the national anthem reveals.

DAVID STANLEY SMITH,
Professor of Music, Yale University.
New Haven, Nov. 2, 1917.

JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 3 - 1917

MUCK LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY IN NATIONAL ANTHEM.

Major Higginson, in Announcing Resignation of Conductor of Orchestra Says His Loss Would Be Disaster.—Is Considering Matter.

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert here yesterday.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the programme Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr. Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience yesterday, Maj. Higginson said that Dr. Muck and the orchestra "had never refused" to play the anthem and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the programme

When "The Star Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony Hall officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation Maj. Higginson made the following statement:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring at my earnest request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

om EVENING SUN

dress: Baltimore, Md.

te

MUCK LEADS ANTHEM, BUT DOES IT BADLY

New York, Nov. 9.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star-Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

Dr. Muck stood with his back to the audience a third of a minute while the handclapping went on. As he showed no signs of unbending, and as the majority of the 2,500 persons in Carnegie Hall seemed in a good-natured mood, the German conductor—who at first had refused to lead "The Star-Spangled Banner" and then did so after tendering his resignation—was allowed to begin the evening's program.

Dr. Muck led the national anthem badly and the orchestra played even worse, a fact not due to their being asked to stand. Third-rate orchestras do much better.

But there was no outward show of antagonism by any part of last evening's audience toward the man who has aroused so much hostile feeling and whose professional presence in some cities will not be tolerated.

SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 10 1917

Thanks Governor Warfield.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: As a faithful son of those that fought for the birth and protection of our glorious Star-Spangled Banner, I want to convey, through your columns, to ex-Governor Warfield and your loyal citizens my appreciation for their just rebuke and resentment of the insult to our flag, the anthem and the memory of your honored citizen that wrote it.

If the American public cannot obtain classical music without a director bearing the trade mark of the vulture Eagle of Prussianism, it is time we developed some of our own masters and directors.

It is to be hoped that every patriotic city and citizen, like Baltimore, will resent this insult by closing the doors of its music halls to Dr. Muck and his kind, because even his acquiescence to the public demands and attempting to whitewash his previous actions in including our anthem in his program, is only adding further desecration to the song and our beautiful Star-Spangled Banner—the flag that thrills and animates the heart and soul of every true American, because it bears no stains and is marred with no injustice, cruelty or wrong, and typifies justice, liberty, equality and a worldwide righteousness.

DR. D. LOUIS IRETON.

New York, Nov. 7.

FEDERAL AGENTS INVESTIGATE ACTIVITIES OF DR. KARL MUCK

Director's Attitude Toward National Anthem Stirs Washington.

From the Washington Bureau of The Evening Bulletin, 723 Fifteenth Street.

Washington, Nov. 3.—The Department of Justice is quietly investigating Dr. Karl Muck and his activities in this country, it was admitted yesterday. The department's agents, however, are expected to direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Providence concert on Tuesday night.

MUCK LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN NATIONAL ANTHEM

Continued from Page 1.

Washington will hear no German grand opera this winter, it was announced yesterday. Manager Taylor of the Belasco Theatre said that grand opera would be produced, but that it would be French or Italian, and not German.

Washington musical circles are stirred over the fact that Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to conduct the concert of that orchestra in this city next Tuesday.

The discussion centred about these questions—should a German citizen, as Dr. Muck is, who has refused to play the national anthem, be given support in the national capital; or should the music lovers of the capital think only of the artistic side of the matter and give their support to the famous orchestra?

The house has been sold out for the concert next Tuesday, which is to be held at the National Theatre, according to a statement made yesterday by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who for 11 years has had charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington. She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year because Dr. Muck, the leader, is a German.

Some of the subscribers to the orchestra seats did not take the view of Mrs. Greene yesterday, and were strong in their condemnation of Dr. Muck's stand.

Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, insisted that the national anthem had a right to a place upon any programme whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

"The national anthem," he said, "could in no sense detract from the beauty of any musical programme, no matter how artistic the programme might be. In these times, it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school, exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Otto T. Simon, director of the Montet Choral Society and the Washington War Chorus, said: "There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the national capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. Dr. Muck should be swept from the stage."

rom AMERICAN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

9 - 19

ate

There seem to be many brands of patriotism. New York, Boston, Philadelphia and even the National Capital are hearing and applauding the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Muck, too, when he plays the national anthem. They seem to think that, having surrendered to the public demand, there is no reason why the excellent music of the Orchestra should not be enjoyed.

EVENING SUN

s: Baltimore, Md.

10 - 31

DEFENDS DR. MUCK

Manager Of Orchestra Says Conductor Has Never Refused To Play Anthem.

HIGGINSON DENIED REQUEST

Muck's Aspersions Far From Studied Insult, Declare Members Of Organization.

Staff Correspondent of The Evening Sun.

Philadelphia, Nov. 6.—After hearing and seeing the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening and talking to almost everybody connected with the organization except Dr. Karl Muck himself, one gets the impression that the dispute over Dr. Muck's attitude toward "The Star-Spangled Banner" is the inevitable result of the fact that his country and the United States are at war—and not the result of any special or studied insult to the national anthem by Dr. Muck.

Muck Is All German.

It is clear that Dr. Muck does not lead the orchestra in playing the national anthem with the same quickening of the pulse with which former Governor Edwin Warfield would lead it. He was born in Darmstadt, Germany; was the conductor at the Berlin Imperial Opera House from 1892 to 1912, and has been decorated by the German Kaiser. All the associations of his early life were German. American audiences remember that the same Kaiser who decorated him decorated somebody else for sinking the Lusitania and has been shaking a bloody sabre over Europe for three years.

The situation does not make for sweet reasonableness, either on the part of Dr. Muck, who suddenly finds himself hauled down from the pedestal on which he has stood for years, or on the part of the American people, reading the names of their fellow-countrymen killed by Germans.

"Citizenship in art should be superior to national limitations," said one of the members of the orchestra last evening. But plainly it isn't.

Anthem Doesn't Fit Orchestra.

C. A. Ellis, the manager of the orchestra, and W. H. Brennan, both of whom declare themselves to be as good Americans as any of those who have criticized Dr. Muck, say that the Doctor has never refused to play the national anthem and has never said anything critical of it except that, because of the character of the music, it is not fitted for performance by an orchestra.

"That," said A. E. Ellis, "is entirely independent of the appeal the anthem makes to one because of its patriotic associations. It is not even a criticism of its beauty or lack of beauty. It is merely a musician's statement that its score is not the order of music which a symphony orchestra is designed to play. That is all that Dr. Muck has ever said. That was the only reason which led to the failure to comply with the request that it be played in Providence. Dr. Muck did not know of that request. It was denied by Major Higginson, the patron of the orchestra. Dr. Muck has never refused to play the anthem. We will be in Washington today, the capital of the nation. He will lead the orchestra in playing it there. Could one desire anything more?

Resignation Still In Air.

"The Doctor's resignation? He offered his resignation because he did not wish to embarrass the organization. No, it has not been accepted. It has not been determined whether it will be accepted or not. If Dr. Muck resigned the organization would disband at once and 100 men, Frenchmen, Russians, Germans and Americans, would be robbed of their means of earning their living."

However, both Mr. Ellis and Mr. Brennan, whose chief occupation, during the concert at least, is to wear long-tailed black coats, open-face vests, white ties and high silk hats and to pose in this garb in the foyers of the concert halls—they would not enjoy such jobs if the orchestra were disbanded—are suspiciously alert in the manner in which they protect Dr. Muck from the interviewer. Even when one promises not to sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" if led into the presence of the Herr Doktor they hold up their hands together and exclaim: "Oh, impossible! Quite impossible!" (They make an impressive picture standing together thus, in evening clothes and high silk hats, both gentlemen of highly colored complexion and white hair.)

They suggest that they are afraid of what the Doctor might say under the influence of a sudden word. Mr. Ellis was evidently much relieved last night when he heard that the Baltimore city authorities would not license the concert. Clearly he thought that any city so lost to all high things as to be willing to forego a concert by this orchestra deserved to dwell in outer darkness. The loss was Baltimore's, not the orchestra's.

Frenchmen Say Muck Is Fair.

That Dr. Muck is not in a mood in which the war has tinctured all his acts, that he is not sulking in contempt of everything not German, is made clear by members of his orchestra. The Frenchmen say that he has been as fair to them as he could be throughout the war; that the conflict has made no difference in their relations with their conductor. All say that Dr. Muck never refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

H. S. S.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 10 1917

Date

FREDERICK EXTOLS FLAG

Big Massmeeting Denounces Dr. Muck And Boston Symphony

GOV. WARFIELD STIRS AUDI

Resolutions Pledging Devotion To Star-Spangled Banner Passed And Will Be Sent President.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 9.—A massmeeting was held here this afternoon under the auspices of the Frederick Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution; the Francis Scott Key Memorial Association, Frederick Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy; the Frederick County Patriotic Committee and other local patriotic organizations at which stirring resolutoins were passed denouncing Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for his insult to "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The resolutions also urged the Government be requested to deny all persons except American citizens and those loyal to the Government the right to play or sign "The Star-Spangled Banner" in public, and that a reasonable effort be made on the part of every Fredericktonian to secure proper respect for the flag whenever the national anthem is sung or played.

The meeting was presided over by Judge Glenn H. Worthington. The courtroom was decorated with the national colors and the flags of Allies. A large portrait of the Francis Scott Key monument was placed between the flags above the judges stand.

Tells Of Lyric Meeting.

Former Governor Warfield was the principal speaker. After referring to the patriotic demonstration at the Lyric in Baltimore Tuesday night he paid a high tribute to the patriotism and love for flag and country of the early Frederick countians. He then referred to Dr. Muck, whom he styled an alien enemy.

"The first thing to be done at this critical time," he said, "is to rid the country of Muck. When I read of the insult that he directed to our national anthem it made my blood boil. I was determined to have the insult resented." He then told of the part he took in having the engagement o fthe Boston orchestra in Baltimore cancelled and described the great meeting at the Lyric.

After that inspiring meeting he said he desired to know how the patriotic people of Frederick county and the rest of the State felt toward the insult. After expressing great pleasure at the size of the meeting here, he said that if the Boston orchestra could not live without an alien leader it should die. The condition of Russia, he said, was brought about by German intrigue and spies. He declared that spies were on every hand and that the utmost care should be taken to rid this country of them.

Blames Spies For Pier Fire.

He attributed the recent fire in Baltimore and plots to destroy property in other cities to the work of alien enemies. He said that Muck was serving his master, the Kaiser, better in this country than he could in the trenches, and that the Kaiser had spies all over this country serving hi in the same capacity.

Referring to the flag, the ex-Governor exclaimed: "For God's sake give some little time to exalting the flag. The day is coming when our flag will be the hope of every free nation on earth. I will go home happy over the success and inspiration of this splendid meeting. We want the spirit of patriotism more abroad than ever before in the history of this country."

He suggested that the roll of Company A and the draft men from this county be recorded among the records of the court.

To Prepare Honor Roll.

As president of the Maryland Historical Society, Governor Warfield said he would prepare a list of every man in the service from this State. He recommended that every school in the county have a flag and that the last verse of "The Star-Spangled Banner" be sung every day before school was dismissed.

In closing the Governor said he was not at war with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It could play all it desires, but when it did play in Maryland it must be under the leadership of an American.

Other speakers were Dr. J. S. G. Rupp, pastor of the Lutheran Church; Dr. T. Freeman Dixon, Presbyterian Church; Dr. Joseph H. Apple, president of Hood College; Jacob Rohrback, Dr. Charles W. Crum, Noah E. Cramer, Emory L. Coblentz and Dr. Charles Crum; W. R. Crum, Brunswick. The latter stated that he was in favor of giving Muck a dose of tar and feathers and deporting him to the Fiji Islands.

Resolutions To President.

The resolutions were introduced by Justice of the Peace Guy K. Motter, and it was voted to send copies to President Wilson, Governor Harrington, Secretaries of War and the Navy, to Camp McClellan and Camp Meade.

The resolutions were seconded by Mrs. Augustus Leader, the first president of the Francis Ccott Key Memorial Association; Mrs. Francis H. Markell, regent of the local Daughters of the American Revolution; Mrs. Edward Dyer, president of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty, and Miss Mary Ott, in behalf of the Frederick Chapter Daughters of the Confederacy.

Governor Warfield was given a rising vote of thanks for his address and was later taken to Rose Hill, the former home of Thomas Johnson, the first Governor of Maryland, for lunch. He delivered an address tonight at the annual banquet of the Monocacy Club, of the Evangelical Reformed Church.

m EVENING SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 6
te 127

MUCK PROTEST GROWS

Cancelling Of Concert Will Not Affect Plans For The Lyric Meeting Today.

WILL BE PATRIOTIC EVENT

Judge Stockbridge To Offer Resolutions Condemning Symphony Leader's Attitude.

Unmistakable indignation at the reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, toward the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be voiced at the meeting arranged by former Governor Warfield at the Lyric at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Resolutions will be offered by Judge Henry Stockbridge expressing the feeling of those present toward all persons who at this time, when American soldiers are meeting the Germans in battle, fail in respect to the national anthem. Dr. Muck will be named in the resolutions, which will say exactly what is thought of his attitude.

It is expected that the meeting will gather rather than lose force by reason of the fact that the concert will not be given. Once Judge Stockbridge has offered the resolutions, anybody present who wishes to do so will be permitted to speak on them. It is expected that one of the officers from Camp Meade will attend and will express the soldier's point of view.

Soldiers' Band To Play.

Mr. Warfield will preside. Seated on the stage with him will be 50 soldiers from the draft army at Camp Meade. In the audience will be parents and relatives of the drafted men. A soldiers' band will attend, as will the Letter-Carriers' Band, which Col. Sherlock Swann has arranged to have at the meeting.

The first number on the program will be the playing of "Hail, Columbia." This will be followed by "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience will be expected to sing. The presiding officer will then make a brief speech explaining the purposes of the meeting. Judge Stockbridge, who was formerly the president of the national body of the Sons of the American Revolution, will then be introduced and will offer the resolutions.

Patriotism Dominant.

The dominant note of the whole proceedings will be an expression to the effect that the freest country on the face of the earth has been forced to war with the most reactionary power in all history, and that the two are now locked in a grip which will be loosened only when one succumbs. It will be made clear that nothing but the most profound respect for the song which brings a fighting man to attention with every nerve in his body rigid will be tolerated.

The meeting will close with the playing of such airs as "Dixie" and "America" and the singing of them.

Rabbi Opposes Meeting.

The Rev. Morris S. Lazaron, rabbi of the Madison Avenue Temple, has written Governor Warfield the following leter, dated yesterday, protesting against this meeting:

"My Dear Governor Warfield: At the risk of being misunderstood, but moved as you are, by a desire that our flag and our cause be upheld in all honor and justice, I am writing you on the subject of the massmeeting tomorrow afternoon.

"When I first read of Dr. Muck's action I, too, was roused to indignant protest and I, too, felt that it should not be permitted to pass unnoticed. In fact, when the first announcement was published that you intended to call a citizens' meeting before the concert here Wednesday evening I framed a letter to you expressing my satisfaction at your high and altogether justified stand.

"The following day it appeared, however, that the orchestra is responding to the public demand that our national anthem be played at its concerts—indeed, that the anthem was played, with Dr. Muck leading. And, further, public announcement has been made that it will be played at every concert of the Boston Orchestra.

Fears Angry Passions.

"Do you not think, then, in the light of these developments in the situation, that it is unnecessary to hold this meeting? Do you not think that a heated public sentiment may be roused which may lead to acts of indiscretion that you and all good citizens would earnestly deprecate? And if this unhappy consequence should result from the meeting tomorrow afternoon, would not our national anthem be soiled and sullied rather than be reconsecrated by our efforts?

"Dr. Muck is not a citizen. He is an alien—a citizen of a country with which we are at war. But he is a guest in our home—a guest who, after being investigated by the Secret Service Department of the Federal Government, has been declared above suspicion. All the laws of hospitality and gentlemanly conduct (and whose traditions for these things are finer or better known than Maryland's?) would dictate that the whole matter be dropped. Would it not be a shameful thing if because of the spirit engendered at the meeting tomorrow some act might be done by which our city's fair name should be disgraced?

"I do not concede to any man a deeper devotion to the continued and successful prosecution of this war than I have. I believe our cause to be right and just and consecrated in the sight of God, and that the flame which we have kindled is like an offering in the Temple of Human Liberty. It is for this reason that our flag needs no further vin[illegible] than has been given.

CONCERT HALL

Boston Symphony Will Not Play At Lyric

GRAND JURY'S ACTION

Recommendations Carried Out by Commissioner Riggs.

MUCK IS IN PHILADELPHIA

Fear of Physical Danger Prompts Move of Inquest, and Instructions Are Sent to Lyric Directing Manager Not to Permit Appearance of Musicians—Former Governor Warfield Will Hold His Meeting Today in Spite of Situation — Music Devotees Express Hope for a New Arrangement—No Demonstration at Last Night's Concert.

SITUATION AT A GLANCE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Karl Muck, "the Kaiser's own," is director, has been forbidden to give a concert in Baltimore tomorrow night, as scheduled.

The Police Board issued this order to Mr. Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric.

Former Governor Edwin Warfield, who volunteered to lead a movement to stop the concert by force, will hold his scheduled meeting today at the Lyric, obviously to prevent any change of plan by which the concert may be allowed without Dr. Muck.

Musical devotees in Baltimore are unanimous in the opinion that the concert should be held without the leadership of Dr. Muck.

The Grand Jury recommended the action of the Police Board because physical danger threatened.

Unmistakable evidences that something approaching a riot would result if Dr. Karl Muck directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric tomorrow night led to a drastic decision by the Grand Jury yesterday.

On the strength of the inquest's recommendations, General Lawrason Riggs, president of the Board of Police Commissioners, notified Mr. Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric that he must not permit even the concert. Fear of "physical danger" was given as the cause of the decision.

WARFIELD DETERMINED.

Nevertheless, Former Governor Edwin Warfield, last some arrangement be made by which the Police Board may vaccillate, and allow the concert without Muck, intends holding his scheduled meeting at the Lyric this afternoon, which bids fair to evolve into a mammoth patriotic demonstration.

On the other hand, musical devotees in Baltimore are disappointed at the failure of the Grand Jury to make a distinction between Muck and the orchestra, and express the hope that the concert may be allowed.

None of these persons would tolerate the appearance of Muck for an instant, but regard the ban on the concert more or less as a catastrophe.

The Grand Jury and members of the Police Board feel that in disposing of the concert, as well as Muck, they have averted a blot on the history of Baltimore, for not a man of them doubted that trouble would crop out at the affair scheduled for tomorrow night. Long conferences and a thorough discussion of the possibilities of the situation preceded the decision. Altogether, those in a position to realize what might have happened, consider the decision a particularly wise move.

LARGE SUM INVOLVED.

The cancellation of the concert will involve quite an immense sum, as many seats and boxes at the Lyric had been paid for in advance. Mr. Kinsey announced last night that there would be no difficulty in straightening out matters, as the entire financial end rested in the hands of W. H. Brennen, business manager of the Boston Symphony, and that he would take matters in hand. Mr. Brennen is expected in Baltimore either late this afternoon or tomorrow morning. The orchestra plays in Washington tonight, having played at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia last night. The concert in the Quaker City was pulled off without any hitch, with Muck directing. There was no demonstration, though Muck did not prove overpopular.

[illegible] Banner was the largest in the history of the Philadelphia theater. It was also well behaved, but palpably there for the single purpose of hearing the concert—not considering Muck.

MUCK IS GUARDED.

Muck reached Philadelphia at 6:45 o'clock and was rushed under a heavy guard to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, where he did not register. He went to his room to dress and all callers were told that he had not registered, which was true. He refused, stubbornly, to see any newspaper men until after the concert, when he was interviewed by a staff representative of The American, to whom he said: "I am aware that the concert in Baltimore has been canceled, and, of course, shall not go there. Further I have nothing to say—no comment to make."

All night the Doctor was kept under a guard of his own men.

In many quarters the opinion was ventured that Baltimore's cancellation of the concert might give the orchestra's tours something of a black eye, inasmuch as some cities might regard the Grand Jury's action as a precedent.

MR. KINSEY NOTIFIED.

Dr. Muck was informed of the action of the Police Board by telephone, Mr. Kinsey having called up C. E. Ellis, the business manager. Major Higginson, who owns the orchestra, was present in Philadelphia at the time, and evinced little surprise. He returned to Boston last night. Mr. Kinsey was notified of the ban on the concert by General Riggs, who sent him the following letter:

Mr. W. Kinsey,
Manager of the Lyric Theater,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear sir: The Grand Inquest of the State of Maryland, in and for Baltimore city, has today officially notified the Board of Police Commissioners, through its foreman, that the Grand Jury considers, in view of recent events, it would be unwise, if not physically dangerous, to permit the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday evening next.

You are therefore directed not to allow the said concert to take place at the Lyric Theater.

Very respectfully,
LAWRASON RIGGS,
(Signed) President.

WILL OF THE PEOPLE.

Discussing the action of the Police Board, Governor Warfield said last night: "The action of the board follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the board had acted or not, however, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theater. And he will never conduct another concert in this city. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We should have been willing for the concert to take place—if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem!' We were after the man who said that our beautiful Star-spangled Banner was not fit to be included in an artistic musical program. Next to the prayer he says every night, it should be nearest to every American's heart, and I think it is the most beautiful anthem that has ever been composed.

MEETING TO BE HELD.

"The meeting will be held tomorrow (this) afternoon and we expect even a larger crowd than before. Our main object is once more to affirm our allegiance to our President, our Flag, and to voice our love for our National Anthem. The Grand Jury's protest will be read from the stage, as will the action of the Police Board. Nor will the fact that the concert will not be held prevent us from passing resolutions on the subject of the playing of the Star-spangled Banner in the future."

MUSIC LOVERS DISAPPOINTED.

Mr. Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, speaking of the Police Board's order last night, stated:

It should not be lost sight of for a moment that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Certainly, he should not be allowed to conduct the concert, but if the concert is cancelled it is nothing short of a catastrophe. It will be a sad disappointment to music lovers in Baltimore.

Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt, one of the foremost devotees of music in the city, who had refused to attend the concert if Dr. Muck had been allowed to direct it, had this to say:

I am extremely sorry that the concert is not to be given—without Dr. Muck. There is no reason why Baltimoreans or any other Americans should ostracize this fine organization because of one man. The concert would have been of great importance to Baltimore and I would be happy to learn that some arrangement can be made by which the concert shall not be lost. There is no reason why such an arrangement cannot be made.

Other patrons of these concerts and other musical events expressed practically the same sentiments as the foregoing. All were strong for having a suggestion made to the police for the purpose of arranging the concert

TRIBUNE
s: Providence, R. I.
NOV 3-1917

PATRIOTISM WAS THE KEY NOTE

Gaspee Chapter, D. A. R., Passed Resolutions and Heard About War Work.

Patriotism was the keynote of the opening meeting of the season of Gaspee Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, held in Andrews assembly room yesterday afternoon. There was a large attendance of members and guests and the Regent, Miss Sarah Dyer Barnes, presided.

Features of the meeting were patriotic addresses by Col. H. Anthony Dyer and Prof. Courtney Langdon of Brown University. A musical program was given by the Mathews Trio, Miss Hope Mathews, director, and a tea ended the afternoon. Col. Dyer made a stirring address on food conservation. Prof. Langdon gave an address on the subject "A French Conception of the American Flag" followed by a reading of original sonnets and from Rostand's "Carol of the Stars."

In the course of his address Prof. Langdon scored Dr. Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for not playing the national anthem Tuesday night and also those who refuse to give up German music. "The people who want the luxury of German music, led by a German, and won't give it up are the people most to blame in the matter," he said.

REPORTS OF WAR WORK.

Following the opening of the meeting and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" a number of interesting reports concerning the war activities of the members were made. Mrs. Mabel Brown Chase, the secretary, read an extended report, after which came the report of Mrs. Marion Gay Ladd of the magazine committee.

Mrs. Thomas W. Aldrich, corresponding secretary, said that of the sum of $401 given by members of the chapter for Red Cross work $351 had been devoted to the war fund of the chapter and $60 to the library fund.

Miss E. Katherine Clarke reported on the war activities of the groups of chapter members during the summer. "Nine groups," she said, "gave opportunity for 200 members to make 963 cloth garments, 2304 surgical dressings and 253 knitted articles. This did not include the 2000 surgical dressings made at the home of the Vice Regent, Miss Irene Seabury."

The report of Mrs. Frederick E. Shaw told of $158 appropriated by the chapter to buy wool. She said "88¼ pounds was purchased and made into 63 sweaters by the members, 34 pairs of wristers, 35 mufflers, 33 helmets and other warm articles, making a sum total of 172 articles. These were given to Mrs. LeBaron B. Colt, head of the Navy Comforts' League of this State." A letter of acknowledgment and thanks for these articles from Mrs. Harold J. Gross of the comforts' committee was read by Mrs. Shaw.

Miss Katherine U. Peirce reported on the work of 100 boys and girls of the English High School during the summer. She told of gardening, canning, sewing, making surgical dressings and running automobiles. Other reports were by Mrs. Frank A. Waterman on the Liberty bond and Mrs. Walter G. Hough for the food conservation committee.

The Regent also reported a total membership in the chapter of 344, including 11 new members.

The Regent paid tribute to the memory of those who had died during the past year, Mrs. W. Maxwell Greene, Mrs. Ludowick H. Tillinghast and Mrs. John Arnold, and the members rose in silent tribute.

DISPLAY OF FLAGS URGED.

A resolution was passed asking that the Board of Police Commissioners cause the American flag to be displayed in every public hall and not to be removed at the request of any one renting the hall and also to refuse a license to any organization refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mrs. Albert L. Calder, State Regent of the D. A. R., who has recently returned from meetings of the National Board in Washington, told some of the results of these meetings. "We voted," she said, "to take a village in France completely destroyed by the Germans and restore it. This will cost $51,000. We also voted to purchase $100,000 of bonds in the next Liberty Loan, with the hope that every D. A. R. in the country will give $1.50 toward this sum."

The chapter voted to give up teas at future meetings, and during the war at all meetings of the chapter during the winter except Feb. 22 and the chapter's birthday.

The Regent announced that the $40 prize awarded by the chapter annually to a student at the Women's College presenting the best essay on a patriotic theme, had been given to Miss Bertha M. Prentice.

The hostesses of the patriotic tea which ended the afternoon were Mrs. Walter H. Woodmancy, Mrs. Alonzo Flint, Mrs. Arthur F. Kenyon, Mrs. James A. Nealey, Miss M. Alice Sprague, Mrs. Frederick Talcott, Miss Edith Wilkinson.

m EVENING SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md. NOV 6
te 127

MUCK PROTEST GROWS

Cancelling Of Concert Will Not Affect Plans For The Lyric Meeting Today.

WILL BE PATRIOTIC EVENT

Judge Stockbridge To Offer Resolutions Condemning Symphony Leader's Attitude.

Unmistakable indignation at the reported attitude of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, toward the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be voiced at the meeting arranged by former Governor Warfield at the Lyric at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Resolutions will be offered by Judge Henry Stockbridge expressing the feeling of those present toward all persons who at this time, when American soldiers are meeting the Germans in battle, fail in respect to the national anthem. Dr. Muck will be named in the resolutions, which will say exactly what is thought of his attitude.

It is expected that the meeting will gather rather than lose force by reason of the fact that the concert will not be given. Once Judge Stockbridge has offered the resolutions, anybody present who wishes to do so will be permitted to speak on them. It is expected that one of the officers from Camp Meade will attend and will express the soldier's point of view.

Soldiers' Band To Play.

Mr. Warfield will preside. Seated on the stage with him will be 50 soldiers from the draft army at Camp Meade. In the audience will be parents and relatives of the drafted men. A soldiers' band will attend, as will the Letter-Carriers' Band, which Col. Sherlock Swann has arranged to have at the meeting.

The first number on the program will be the playing of "Hail, Columbia." This will be followed by "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience will be expected to sing. The presiding officer will then make a brief speech explaining the purposes of the meeting. Judge Stockbridge, who was formerly the president of the national body of the Sons of the American Revolution, will then be introduced and will offer the resolutions.

Patriotism Dominant.

The dominant note of the whole proceedings will be an expression to the effect that the freest country on the face of the earth has been forced to war with the most reactionary power in all history, and that the two are now locked in a grip which will be loosened only when one succumbs. It will be made clear that nothing but the most profound respect for the song which brings a fighting man to attention with every nerve in his body rigid will be tolerated.

The meeting will close with the playing of such airs as "Dixie" and "America" and the singing of them.

Rabbi Opposes Meeting.

The Rev. Morris S. Lazaron, rabbi of the Madison Avenue Temple, has written Governor Warfield the following leter, dated yesterday, protesting against this meeting:

"My Dear Governor Warfield: At the risk of being misunderstood, but moved as you are, by a desire that our flag and our cause be upheld in all honor and justice, I am writing you on the subject of the massmeeting tomorrow afternoon.

"When I first read of Dr. Muck's action I, too, was roused to indignant protest and I, too, felt that it should not be permitted to pass unnoticed. In fact, when the first announcement was published that you intended to call a citizens' meeting before the concert here Wednesday evening I framed a letter to you expressing my satisfaction at your high and altogether justified stand.

"The following day it appeared, however, that the orchestra is responding to the public demand that our national anthem be played at its concerts—indeed, that the anthem was played, with Dr. Muck leading. And, further, public announcement has been made that it will be played at every concert of the Boston Orchestra.

Fears Angry Passions.

"Do you not think, then, in the light of these developments in the situation, that it is unnecessary to hold this meeting? Do you not think that a heated public sentiment may be roused which may lead to acts of indiscretion that you and all good citizens would earnestly deprecate? And if this unhappy consequence should result from the meeting tomorrow afternoon, would not our national anthem be soiled and sullied rather than be reconsecrated by our efforts?

"Dr. Muck is not a citizen. He is an alien—a citizen of a country with which we are at war. But he is a guest in our home—a guest who, after being investigated by the Secret Service Department of the Federal Government, has been declared above suspicion. All the laws of hospitality and gentlemanly conduct (and whose traditions for these things are finer or better known than Maryland's?) would dictate that the whole matter be dropped. Would it not be a shameful thing if because of the spirit engendered at the meeting tomorrow some act might be done by which our city's fair name should be disgraced?

"I do not concede to any man a deeper devotion to the continued and successful prosecution of this war than I have. I believe our cause to be right and just and consecrated in the sight of God, and that the flame which we have kindled is like an offering in the Temple of Human Liberty. It is for this reason that our flag needs no further vindication than has been given.

CONCERT HERE

Boston Symphony Will Not Play At Lyric

GRAND JURY'S ACTION

Recommendations Carried Out by Commissioner Riggs.

MUCK IS IN PHILADELPHIA

Fear of Physical Danger Prompts Move of Inquest, and Instructions Are Sent to Lyric Directing Manager Not to Permit Appearance of Musicians—Former Governor Warfield Will Hold His Meeting Today in Spite of Situation—Music Devotees Express Hope for a New Arrangement—No Demonstration at Last Night's Concert.

SITUATION AT A GLANCE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Karl Muck, "the Kaiser's own," is director, has been forbidden to give a concert in Baltimore tomorrow night, as scheduled.

The Police Board issued this order to Mr. Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric.

Former Governor Edwin Warfield, who volunteered to lead a movement to stop the concert by force, will hold his scheduled meeting today at the Lyric, obviously to prevent any change of plan by which the concert may be allowed without Dr. Muck.

Musical devotees in Baltimore are unanimous in the opinion that the concert should be held without the leadership of Dr. Muck.

The Grand Jury recommended the action of the Police Board because physical danger threatened.

Unmistakable evidences that something approaching a riot would result if Dr. Karl Muck directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric tomorrow night led to a drastic decision by the Grand Jury yesterday.

On the strength of the inquest's recommendations, General Lawrason Riggs, president of the Board of Police Commissioners, notified Mr. Wilbur Kinsey, manager of the Lyric that he must not permit even the concert. Fear of "physical danger" was given as the cause of the decision.

WARFIELD DETERMINED.

Nevertheless, Former Governor Edwin Warfield, lest some arrangement be made by which the Police Board may vaccillate, and allow the concert without Muck, intends holding his scheduled meeting at the Lyric this afternoon, which bids fair to evolve into a mammoth patriotic demonstration.

On the other hand, musical devotees in Baltimore are disappointed at the failure of the Grand Jury to make a distinction between Muck and the orchestra, and express the hope that the concert may be allowed.

None of these persons would tolerate the appearance of Muck for an instant, but regard the ban on the concert more or less as a catastrophe.

The Grand Jury and members of the Police Board feel that in disposing of the concert, as well as Muck, they have averted a blot on the history of Baltimore, for not a man of them doubted that trouble would crop out at the affair scheduled for tomorrow night. Long conferences and a thorough discussion of the possibilities of the situation preceded the decision. Altogether, those in a position to realize what might have happened, consider the decision a particularly wise move.

LARGE SUM INVOLVED.

The cancellation of the concert will involve quite an immense sum, as many seats and boxes at the Lyric had been paid for in advance. Mr. Kinsey announced last night that there would be no difficulty in straightening out matters, as the entire financial end rested in the hands of W. H. Brennen, business manager of the Boston Symphony, and that he would take matters in hand. Mr. Brennen is expected in Baltimore either late this afternoon or tomorrow morning. The orchestra plays in Washington tonight, having played at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia last night. The concert in the Quaker City was pulled off without any hitch, with Muck directing. There was no demonstration, though Muck did not prove overpopular.

[illegible] Banner was [illegible] when he walked out on the stage. The audience was the largest in the history of the Philadelphia theater. It was also well behaved, but palpably there for the single purpose of hearing the concert—not considering Muck.

MUCK IS GUARDED.

Muck reached Philadelphia at 6:45 o'clock and was rushed under a heavy guard to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, where he did not register. He went to his room to dress and all callers were told that he had not registered, which was true. He refused, stubbornly, to see any newspaper men until after the concert, when he was interviewed by a staff representative of The American, to whom he said: "I am aware that the concert in Baltimore has been canceled, and, of course, shall not go there. Further I have nothing to say—no comment to make."

All night the Doctor was kept under a guard of his own men.

In many quarters the opinion was ventured that Baltimore's cancellation of the concert might give the orchestra's tours something of a black eye, inasmuch as some cities might regard the Grand Jury's action as a precedent.

MR. KINSEY NOTIFIED.

Dr. Muck was informed of the action of the Police Board by telephone, Mr. Kinsey having called up C. E. Ellis, the business manager. Major Higginson, who owns the orchestra, was present in Philadelphia at the time, and evinced little surprise. He returned to Boston last night. Mr. Kinsey was notified of the ban on the concert by General Riggs, who sent him the following letter:

Mr. W. Kinsey,
Manager of the Lyric Theater,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear sir: The Grand Inquest of the State of Maryland, in and for Baltimore city, has today officially notified the Board of Police Commissioners, through its foreman, that the Grand Jury considers, in view of recent events, it would be unwise, if not physically dangerous, to permit the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday evening next.

You are therefore directed not to allow the said concert to take place at the Lyric Theater.

Very respectfully,
LAWRASON RIGGS,
(Signed) President.

WILL OF THE PEOPLE.

Discussing the action of the Police Board, Governor Warfield said last night: "The action of the board follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the board had acted or not, however, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theater. And he will never conduct another concert in this city. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We should have been willing for the concert to take place—if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem!' We were after the man who said that our beautiful Star-spangled Banner was not fit to be included in an artistic musical program. Next to the prayer he says every night, it should be nearest to every American's heart, and I think it is the most beautiful anthem that has ever been composed.

MEETING TO BE HELD.

"The meeting will be held tomorrow (this) afternoon and we expect even a larger crowd than before. Our main object is once more to affirm our allegiance to our President, our Flag, and to voice our love for our National Anthem. The Grand Jury's protest will be read from the stage, as will the action of the Police Board. Nor will the fact that the concert will not be held prevent us from passing resolutions on the subject of the playing of the Star-spangled Banner in the future."

MUSIC LOVERS DISAPPOINTED.

Mr. Harold Randolph, director of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, speaking of the Police Board's order last night, stated:

It should not be lost sight of for a moment that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Certainly, he should not be allowed to conduct the concert, but if the concert is cancelled it is nothing short of a catastrophe. It will be a sad disappointment to music lovers in Baltimore.

Mr. J. B. Noel Wyatt, one of the foremost devotees of music in the city, who had refused to attend the concert if Dr. Muck had been allowed to direct it, had this to say:

I am extremely sorry that the concert is not to be given—without Dr. Muck. There is no reason why Baltimoreans or any other Americans should ostracize this fine organization because of one man. The concert would have been of great importance to Baltimore and I would be happy to learn that some arrangement can be made by which the concert shall not be lost. There is no reason why such an arrangement cannot be made.

Other patrons of these concerts and other musical events expressed practically the same sentiments as the foregoing. All were strong for having a suggestion made to the police for the purpose of arranging the concert

TRIBUNE
s: Providence, R. I.
NOV 3 - 1917

PATRIOTISM WAS THE KEY NOTE

Gaspee Chapter, D. A. R., Passed Resolutions and Heard About War Work.

Patriotism was the keynote of the opening meeting of the season of Gaspee Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, held in Andrews assembly room yesterday afternoon. There was a large attendance of members and guests and the Regent, Miss Sarah Dyer Barnes, presided.

Features of the meeting were patriotic addresses by Col. H. Anthony Dyer and Prof. Courtney Langdon of Brown University. A musical program was given by the Mathews Trio, Miss Hope Mathews, director, and a tea ended the afternoon. Col. Dyer made a stirring address on food conservation. Prof. Langdon gave an address on the subject "A French Conception of the American Flag" followed by a reading of original sonnets and from Rostand's "Carol of the Stars."

In the course of his address Prof. Langdon scored Dr. Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for not playing the national anthem Tuesday night and also those who refuse to give up German music. "The people who want the luxury of German music, led by a German, and won't give it up are the people most to blame in the matter," he said.

REPORTS OF WAR WORK.

Following the opening of the meeting and the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" a number of interesting reports concerning the war activities of the members were made. Mrs. Mabel Brown Chase, the secretary, read an extended report, after which came the report of Mrs. Marion Gay Ladd of the magazine committee.

Mrs. Thomas W. Aldrich, corresponding secretary, said that of the sum of $401 given by members of the chapter for Red Cross work $351 had been devoted to the war fund of the chapter and $60 to the library fund.

Miss E. Katherine Clarke reported on the war activities of the groups of chapter members during the summer. "Nine groups," she said, "gave opportunity for 200 members to make 968 cloth garments, 2304 surgical dressings and 253 knitted articles. This did not include the 2000 surgical dressings made at the home of the Vice Regent, Miss Irene Seabury."

The report of Mrs. Frederick E. Shaw told of $158 appropriated by the chapter to buy wool. She said "88¼ pounds was purchased and made into 63 sweaters by the members, 34 pairs of wristers, 35 mufflers, 33 helmets and other warm articles, making a sum total of 172 articles. These were given to Mrs. LeBaron B. Colt, head of the Navy Comforts' League of this State." A letter of acknowledgment and thanks for these articles from Mrs. Harold J. Gross of the comforts' committee was read by Mrs. Shaw.

Miss Katherine U. Peirce reported on the work of 100 boys and girls of the English High School during the summer. She told of gardening, canning, sewing, making surgical dressings and running automobiles. Other reports were by Mrs. Frank A. Waterman on the Liberty bond and Mrs. Walter G. Hough for the food conservation committee.

The Regent also reported a total membership in the chapter of 344, including 11 new members.

The Regent paid tribute to the memory of those who had died during the past year, Mrs. W. Maxwell Greene, Mrs. Ludowick H. Tillinghast and Mrs. John Arnold, and the members rose in silent tribute.

DISPLAY OF FLAGS URGED.

A resolution was passed asking that the Board of Police Commissioners cause the American flag to be displayed in every public hall and not to be removed at the request of any one renting the hall and also to refuse a license to any organization refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mrs. Albert L. Calder, State Regent of the D. A. R., who has recently returned from meetings of the National Board in Washington, told some of the results of these meetings. "We voted," she said, "to take a village in France completely destroyed by the Germans and restore it. This will cost $51,000. We also voted to purchase $100,000 of bonds in the next Liberty Loan, with the hope that every D. A. R. in the country will give $1.50 toward this sum."

The chapter voted to give up teas at future meetings, and during the war at all meetings of the chapter during the winter except Feb. 22 and the chapter's birthday.

The Regent announced that the $40 prize awarded by the chapter annually to a student at the Women's College presenting the best essay on a patriotic theme, had been given to Miss Bertha M. Prentice.

The hostesses of the patriotic tea which ended the afternoon were Mrs. Walter H. Woodmancy, Mrs. Alonzo Flint, Mrs. Arthur F. Kenyon, Mrs. James A. Nealey, Miss M. Alice Sprague, Mrs. Frederick Talcott, Miss Edith Wilkinson.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 3-1917

Dr. Karl Muck Tenders Resignation as Conductor of Boston Symphony

Maj. Higginson, Patron of Orchestra, Says Matter Will be Seriously Considered; Foresees Disaster

German Director Leads Organization When It Plays "The Star Spangled Banner" at Concert in Boston.—Announcement Made That National Authem Will be Feature of All Programmes Given in the Future

Boston, Nov. 2.—"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert here to-day.

In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the programme Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr. Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience to-day, Mrj. Higginson said that Dr. Muck and the orchestra "had never refused" to play the anthem and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the programme.

When "The Star Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony Hall officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation Maj. Higginson made the following statement:

"I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the Star Spangled Banner and they have consented. They have never refused. Last spring at my earnest request Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands because he does not wish that any personal feeling toward him should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. Therefore, the matter rests with me and will have my earnest consideration."

FEDERAL AGENTS INVESTIGATE ACTIVITIES OF DR. KARL MUCK

Director's Attitude Toward National Anthem Stirs Washington.

From the Washington Bureau of The Providence Journal, 723 Fifteenth Street.

Washington, Nov. 2.—The Department of Justice is quietly investigating Dr. Karl Muck and his activities in this country, it was admitted to-day. The department's agents, however, are expected to direct their attention to the real reasons behind the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Providence concert on Tuesday night.

Washington will hear no German grand opera this winter, it was announced to-day. Manager Taylor of the Belasco Theatre said that grand opera would be produced, but that it would be French or Italian, and not German.

Washington musical circles are stirred over the fact that Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to conduct the concert of that orchestra in this city next Tuesday.

The discussion centred about these questions—should a German citizen, as Dr. Muck is, who has refused to play the national anthem, be given support in the national capital; or should the music lovers of the capital think only of the artistic side of the matter and give their support to the famous orchestra?

The house has been sold out for the concert next Tuesday, which is to be held at the National Theatre, according to a statement made to-day by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who for 11 years has had charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington. She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year because Dr. Muck, the leader, is a German.

Some of the subscribers to the orchestra seats did not take the view of Mrs. Greene to-day, and were strong in their condemnation of Dr. Muck's stand.

Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, insisted that the national anthem had a right to a place upon any programme whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

"The national anthem," he said, "could in no sense detract from the beauty of any musical programme, no matter how artistic the programme might be. In these times, it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school, exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Otto T. Simon, director of the Montet Choral Society and the Washington War Chorus, said: "There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the national capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. Dr. Muck should be swept from the stage."

OPERA IN GERMAN LANGUAGE UNDER BAN IN NEW YORK

Prominent Singers Will be Eliminated from Roll of Artists.

New York, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced to-night that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season. This means that a number of German singers will be eliminated from the roll of artists.

Official announcement that the ban has been placed on German music confirmed earlier information that the directors had virtually decided upon this action.

Among the prominent German singers who, it is understood, will not appear this season are Mme. Ober, Mme. Selma Kurt, Johannes S. Embach and Carl Braun. Mesdames Hempel and Matzenaur, who, although their names are German, are said to be thoroughly loyal in their Americanism, will, it is said, appear in French and English opera.

The action taken by the board was announced as responsive to a growing sentiment against the use of the German language. It means that Wagner and "Faust" will be eliminated from the repertoire. There was no intention at any time, it was said, to put on operas this year by Richard Straus, a living German composer.

Journal
Providence, R. I.
NOV 2-1917

The Boston Symphony in Providence

Major Higginson's decision that the Boston Symphony Orchestra shall not again appear in Providence offers a satisfactory solution of the matter, so far as this community is concerned. It will, indeed, be greeted with enthusiasm by every citizen who resents the contemptuous flouting of patriotism and propriety by those in charge of the famous musical organization.

At the same time, Major Higginson should understand that, irrespective of his decision, the people of Providence and Rhode Island would under no condition tolerate the future appearance of the orchestra here, so long as Dr. Karl Muck continues in the post of conductor.

The place of that insolent German music master is not on the American concert stage, but in an internment camp, under strict guard.

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
OCT 31 1917
SECOND S

GERALDINE FARRAR HEARD AT OPENING SYMPHONY CONCERT

Full Orchestra Appears Under Leadership of Dr. Muck at Infantry Hall.—Varied Programme is Presented Before Appreciative Audience.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its 37th session in this city last evening, playing before a big audience in Infantry Hall. The full complement of men appeared as during last season. There has been no change in the organization's personnel and Dr. Muck conducted as usual. The soloist, Geraldine Farrar, sang a Wagner aria and three songs by the same composer.

Dr. Muck, who is considered great as a programme builder as well as a conductor, elected to play works by 19th century composers, heading the list with Tschaikowsky's Symphony in F-minor.

This was the programme:

Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 4, F-minor, Op. 36
Andante sostenuto; moderato con anima in movimento di valse.
Andantino in modo di canzona.
Scherzo; Pizzicato ostinato: Allegro.
Finale: Allegro con fuoco.
Wagner....Elisabeth's Greeting, "Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhauser"
Liszt....."Prometheus," Symphonic Poem No. 5
First time in Providence.
Wagner.....Three Poems
Im Treibhaus.
Schmerzen.
Traume.
Beethoven....Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84.

While by no means his greatest work, the symphony contains good material. Its central idea, Fate, is treated in the composer's usual despondent style. It is a cruel Fate that is shown us. There is little joy but plenty of pain, the portrayal of which seemed to be Tschaikowsky's chief delight. Not until the last movement do we get a glimpse of a brighter picture and then Fate steps in to remind us that darker ones are much more plentiful.

The work, however, holds one's interest, which is especially true when it is played in such a compelling manner as at last evening's concert.

The players seemed particularly alert and responsive to their leader, who gave the symphony a lucid and powerful interpretation.

The Liszt symphonic poem, "Prometheus," if not one of his best productions in that style of orchestral composition, was an excellent contrast to the programme's principal number. Its rather discordant nature and bizarre effects were things of secondary importance in comparison to the fire and abandon of its presentation.

The "Egmont" overture, intimately known to us through its place on many former Symphony programmes, brought the concert to a brilliant close.

A hearty welcome was given Mme. Farrar, whose singing showed that neither her voice nor her art have suffered since her last appearance here. Indeed, her voice seemed more full and resonant than formerly. In the "Tannhauser" aria she dominated the orchestra and gave as fine a performance of the joyous song as one would wish to hear.

But her artistic height was reached in the three Wagner "poems" in which the sentiment found perfect expression in her splendid vocal control and reposeful style. Each was a vocal gem in an equally beautiful setting, for such accompaniments as were played by Dr. Muck's forces are rarely heard. Models of effective orchestration, they were given with such delicacy and in such absolute accord with the solo voice that perfection seemed attained.

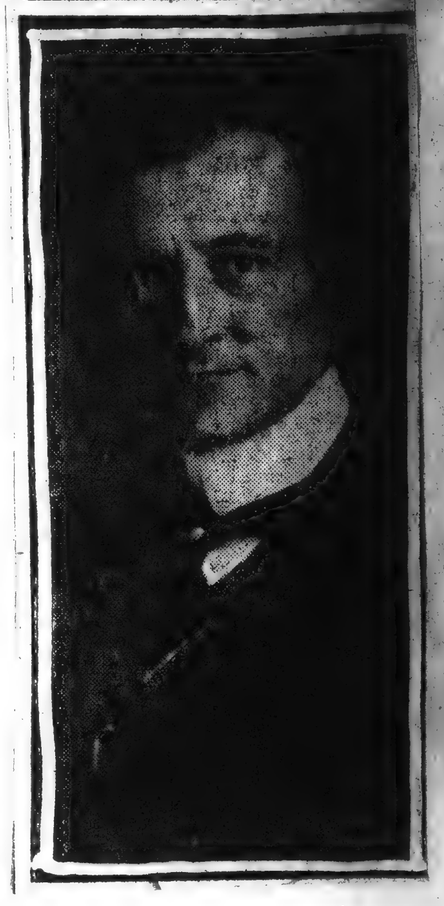
Mme. Farrar was given an ovation after each of her numbers and was obliged to return several times to acknowledge the applause.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 3-1917

128

Dr. Karl Muck

Resigns as Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra, But Yesterday at Boston Concert Conducted While the Orchestra Played the Star Spangled Banner. Maj. Higginson to Consider Resignation But Believes Loss "Would be Disaster"



JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 3 - 1917

Dr. Karl Muck Tenders Resignation as Conductor of Boston Symphony

Maj. Higginson, Patron of Orchestra, Says Matter Will be Seriously Considered; Foresees Disaster

German Director Leads Organization When It Plays "The Star Spangled Banner" at Concert in Boston.—Announcement Made That National Anthem Will be Feature of All Programmes Given in the Future

Boston, Nov. 2.—The Star Spangled Banner was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert in this city today.

Just before the opening of the concert it was announced that the national anthem would be added to the programme. Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience also that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He stated that the situation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr. Muck would be [illegible]

The playing of Dr. Muck followed closely upon the resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a special concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience today, Maj. Higginson said that [illegible] and the orchestra had been [illegible] with the audience and with each other. The Star Spangled Banner was played standing under the direction of Dr. Muck, and its appearance with the programmes of the afternoon.

Maj. Higginson said that the playing of the national anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

In announcing that Dr. Muck had tendered his resignation, Maj. Higginson read the following statement:

"I have asked Dr. Muck if he will conduct the Star Spangled Banner at the concert this afternoon. He has consented. Last spring Dr. Muck consented to conduct the Star Spangled Banner at the concert in Providence, but owing to the excitement of the moment it was not played. Dr. Muck considered his resignation at that time, but I begged him not to do so. He has now tendered his resignation, as he does not wish that any personal feeling toward himself should prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To me it would be a disaster to part with him, but I have given him my consideration."

FEDERAL AGENTS INVESTIGATE ACTIVITIES OF DR. KARL MUCK

Director's Attitude Toward National Anthem Stirs Washington.

By the Washington Bureau of The Providence Journal
723 Fourteenth Street

Washington, Nov. 2.—The Department of Justice is quietly investigating Dr. Karl Muck and his associates in the conduct of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was admitted today. The investigation, however, is expected shortly to come to the final period of the refusal of Dr. Muck to have the Star Spangled Banner played at the Boston concert on Tuesday next. As Washington will hear no German grand opera this winter, it was announced by Manager Taylor of the Belasco Theatre today that grand opera would be given, but that it would be French or Italian, and not German.

Washington musical circles are stirred over the fact that Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to conduct the concert of that orchestra in this city next Tuesday.

The question, centered about [illegible] should a German citizen, as Dr. Muck is, who has refused to play the national anthem, be given support by the capital, or should the people of the capital think only of the excellence of the music and give their support to the famous orchestra?

The concert has been sold out for the event Tuesday, which is to be held in the National Theatre, according to a statement made today by Mrs. Katherine Wilson Greene, who, it seems has been made one of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington. She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year because Dr. Muck, the leader, is a German.

Some of the subscribers to the orchestra seats did not take the view of Mrs. Greene today, and were strong in their condemnation of Dr. Muck's stand.

Lieut. William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, insisted that the national anthem had a right to a place upon any programme whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

"The national anthem," he said, "would in no sense detract from the beauty of any musical programme, no matter how artistic the programme might be. In these times, it should be played and sung upon every public occasion, in school exercises, at church and most decidedly at symphony concerts."

Otto T. Simon, director of the Mozart Choral Society and the Washington War Chorus, said: "There should be no sophistries or arguments tolerated here. It is inconceivable that the people of the national capital will permit such an insult to their country and flag. Dr. Muck should be stopped from this act."

OPERA IN GERMAN LANGUAGE UNDER BAN IN NEW YORK

Prominent Singers Will be Eliminated from Roll of Artists.

New York, Nov. 2.—The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announced tonight that for the duration of opera in the German language will be given in the present season, the names of a number of German singers will be eliminated from the roll of artists.

[illegible] official announcement, it [illegible] has been placed on German singers contained [illegible] effect is formative that the directors and [illegible] are not unanimous [illegible]

Among the prominent [illegible] singers who [illegible] is understood will not appear this season are Mme. Ober, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Carl Jorn, Carl Braun, Paul Kefer and Carl Perron. Mesdames Homer and Matzenauer, although their names are German, are said to be [illegible] and therefore will be heard.

The action taken [illegible] was in response to a request [illegible] as respects the [illegible] German grand opera [illegible] Wagner and [illegible] will be eliminated from [illegible] the stage. There are no intentions of [illegible] the operas that [illegible] Richard Strauss [illegible] German composers.

Journal
Providence, R. I.

The Boston Symphony in Providence

[illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] Providence [illegible] music is not on the [illegible] concert stage, but in the [illegible] camp, under strict guard.

BULLETIN

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 3 1917

SECOND S

GERALDINE FARRAR HEARD AT OPENING SYMPHONY CONCERT

Full Orchestra Appears Under Leadership of Dr. Muck at Infantry Hall.—Varied Programme is Presented Before Appreciative Audience.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its 37th session in this city last evening, playing before a big audience in Infantry Hall. The full complement of men appeared as during last season. There has been no change in the organization's personnel and Dr. Muck conducted as usual. The soloist, Geraldine Farrar, sang a Wagner aria and three songs by the same composer.

Dr. Muck, who is considered great as a programme builder as well as a conductor, elected to play works by 19th century composers heading the list with Tschaikowsky's Symphony in F-minor.

This was the programme.

Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 4, F-minor, Op. 36
Andante sostenuto; moderato con anima in movimento di valse.
Andantino in modo di canzona.
Scherzo; Pizzicato ostinato. Allegro
Finale: Allegro con fuoco.
Wagner....Elisabeth's Greeting, "Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhauser"
Liszt..."Prometheus," Symphonic Poem No. 5
First time in Providence.
Wagner..... Three Poems
Im Treibhaus.
Schmerzen.
Traume.
Beethoven....Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84.

While by no means his greatest work, the symphony contains good material. Its central idea, Fate, is treated in the composer's usual despondent style. It is a cruel Fate that is shown us. There is little joy but plenty of pain, the portrayal of which seemed to be Tschaikowsky's chief delight. Not until the last movement do we get a glimpse of a brighter picture and then Fate steps in to remind us that darker ones are much more plentiful.

The work, however holds one's interest which is especially true when it is played in such a compelling manner as at last evening's concert.

The players seemed interested, alert and responsive to their leader, who gave the symphony a bold and powerful interpretation.

The Liszt symphonic poem, Prometheus, one of his best productions in that style of orchestral composition, was an excellent contrast to the program's previous number. Its rather dissonant theme and liza to effects were things of secondary importance as compared to the fine rendition of its presentation.

The "Egmont" overture, intimately known to us through its place on many former Symphony programmes, brought the concert to a brilliant close.

A hearty welcome was given Miss Farrar, whose singing showed that neither her voice nor her art have suffered since her last appearance here. Indeed, her voice seemed more full and resonant than formerly. In the "Tannhauser" aria she dominated the orchestra and gave as fine a performance of the ingous song as one would wish to hear.

But her artistic height was reached in the three Wagner "poems" in which the sentiment found perfect expression in her splendid vocal control and reposeful style. Each was a vocal gem in an equally beautiful setting, for such accompaniments as were played by Dr. Muck's forces are rarely heard. Music of so effective orchestration, they were given with such delicacy and in such absolute accord with the solo voice that perfection seemed attained.

Mme. Farrar was given an ovation after each of her numbers and was obliged to return several times to acknowledge the applause.

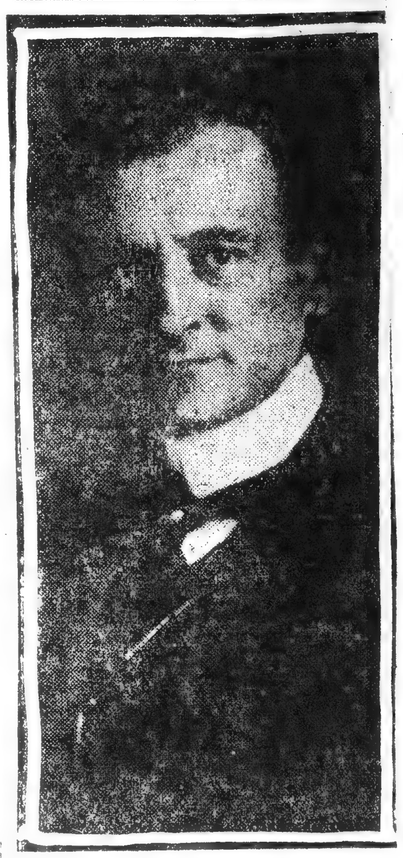
JOURNAL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 3 - 1917

Dr. Karl Muck

Resigns as Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra, But Yesterday at Boston Concert Conducted While the Orchestra Played the Star Spangled Banner. Maj. Higginson to Consider Resignation But Believes Loss "Would be Disaster"



TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
129 NOV 3 - 1917

DR. MUCK DIRECTED NATIONAL ANTHEM

Selection Played by Symphony Orchestra at Boston. --- Maj. Higginson Exonerates Dr. Muck from Responsibility for Refusal Here.

Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared yesterday afternoon that Prof. Karl Muck, director of that orchestra, knew nothing about the request of the women of this city that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at the concert here Tuesday night until after the orchestra returned to Boston. The request was held up by Major Higginson and Manager Ellis because the program played in this city had been rehearsed and they did not want it interfered with.

This statement was made yesterday to newspaper men in Boston by Major Higginson following the announcement of the resignation of Dr. Muck and also following the concert which Dr. Muck conducted at Symphony Hall during which "The Star Spangled Banner" was played while Dr. Muck stood before a tense audience and directed the performance.

The strains of the national anthem drew more than 2500 people to their feet. It drew their voices to their lips, and before the end came the men and women of the audience were singing with growing vigor and spirit "The Star Spangled Banner" and the final note was drowned in a tumult of applause.

EXONERATES DR. MUCK.

At his home in Boston last night Maj. Higginson said that "after all the abuse and misstatements directed against Dr. Muck during the past two days" he wanted to tell the public some facts.

"About 2 o'clock Monday afternoon the message from those ladies in Providence asking that the national anthem be played at their Tuesday night concert was received. Mr. Ellis and I were together when it came. I ordered Mr. Ellis to stop the sale of tickets in Providence and do nothing at that late hour to change the program, which had been made up and rehearsed.

"Tuesday evening Mr. Ellis and I went to Providence. Dr. Muck went down with the orchestra.

"Dr. Muck never knew that a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of that request until they reached Boston.

"It was I who gave the order to stop selling tickets in Providence and to do nothing about changing the program. We didn't have the music. There had been no rehearsal of the piece.

"Above all things I want Dr. Muck exonerated of that false charge circulated by some of the papers that he refused to play the national anthem.

"If the public wants to throw any stones, let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me.

"And now I hope that this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem."

"HAVE DONE MY BEST."

Dr. Muck said yesterday after the performance:

"I hardly know what to think. It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing."

"Would you not regret leaving Boston and the Symphony Orchestra as much as Maj. Higginson and many of the subscribers would regret to have you?" questioned the reporter.

"I have done my best these seven years. I have done my best to-day."

RESIGNATION RECEIVED.

At the concert yesterday Maj. Higginson read the following statement: "I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the 'Star Spangled Banner,' and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling towards him should prejudice the welfare of the organization.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore the matter rests with me, and will have my earnest consideration."

German Opera Dropped.

New York, Nov. 3.—War has halted German opera at the Metropolitan, for some time to come, and with it has ended the New York career of a number of singers engaged exclusively for German roles, subject, as all members of the international company are, to a war clause in their contracts. Following reports of the sudden action, an official statement was issued in these words:

"The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announce that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

In explantion of the directors' final action it was said that their determination was "not due to the Muck incident." The troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not figure here, but a corresponding change in popular feeling was operative in both cases. In New York it was mainly the operas of Wagner that were now dropped, temporarily, at least, for the first time in the present century.

The directors sounded public opinion when the last season closed and found it favorable in general to leaving the repertory unchanged. Again this fall, the newspaper comment showed a demand for Wagner. In the last few weeks a new turn of affairs appeared to have taken place, a general protest arising which resulted in the action.

To replace the operas dropped the Metropolitan has about 30 productions in the standard reportory and nine novelties and revivals, which happens to be exactly the number of operas—39—that were sung all last season to the largest receipts in the history of the house.

From ENQUIRER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date 11/5-1917

National Anthem Will Be Played

In deciding to yield to the insistent, patriotic and perfectly proper demand that the National Anthem be played at its concerts whenever and wherever given, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has done the only sensible, the only decent, the only possible thing. It would have done far better to recognize at the very beginning the necessities and proprieties of the situation. The issue which it injudiciously made is one which should never have been raised. Having been raised, however, it could only be settled in one of two ways. Either the point would have to be conceded to the public sentiment which had been aroused, or the orchestra would have been obliged to discontinue its public performances. Every one must be gratified to learn that the former of these alternatives has been adopted and that the music-loving community is not to be deprived of the pleasure which the playing of the Boston Orchestra consistently affords.

Its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, has said that the reason why he objected to playing the "Star-Spangled Banner" was because its introduction would be an artistic incongruity and not in harmony with the character of the music his programme presented. Conductors habitually attach a good deal more importance to the unity of their programmes than do their audiences, and it is not necessary to question the sincerity of Dr. Muck's statement. But every one understands that the objection he mentioned does not constitute the real explanation of the attitude which he unadvisedly and unfortunately assumed. A German by birth, Dr. Muck is still a German subject, and if his sympathies are with Germany in the great struggle which is proceeding the circumstance is no more than natural. So long as he keeps those sympathies to himself, so long as he refrains from making an offensive display of them, he need not be blamed for entertaining them.

That he is in an embarrassing position may be freely admitted, but under the existing conditions it behooved him to subordinate his own feelings to the requirements of an inexorable situation and to respect the sensibilities of the people whose hospitality he is enjoying. They would never have reproached him for his enemy nationality had he not gone out of his way in a manner which can only be described as offensive and which was no less foolish than provocative to remind them of it. [illegible] Dr. Muck personally there is no animus, and now that the necessary concession has been made it may be hoped that a regrettable incident has been closed. The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are an important feature of our musical life and their abandonment would by thousands have been felt as a misfortune. But the patriotic sentiments of our people must not and may not with impunity be flouted.

[illegible] PHIA, Pa.
[illegible] 1917

TRY ANOTHER LEADER

Suggestion That Orchestra Need Not Be Discontinued Because of Muck

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—The action of the good people of Providence, R. I., because of the refusal of Doctor Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the "Star Spangled Banner" as part of his concert program will be sympathetically received throughout the country.

Doctor Muck's employer, the gallant and philanthropic Major Higginson, says he cannot control the programs, and suggests in addition that our national anthem cannot with propriety be included in a symphony concert. Perhaps the Major forgets that we are at war, a circumstance which would justify a far greater departure from musical propriety. To be sure the country with whom we are at war is that to which Doctor Muck owes his birth and that to which he still apparently gives allegiance.

Just reverse the conditions. Imagine for an instant an American leader of an orchestra giving concerts at this time in Germany! To the internment camp and its resultant starvation for him. Or, let a vivid imagination extend itself and suppose that American leader should refuse to play the "Wacht am Rhein." A firing party and a blank wall for him. And yet we, more or less calmly, except in Providence, permit this alien enemy to flout us on our own soil.

Personally I do not think that any other orchestra in these United States has ever reached the high plane of the Boston organization, although possibly it has done better under other leaders in the past than it has under Doctor Muck. We have, however, in the Philadelphia Orchestra an admirable band of musicians under capable leadership, and their work is highly satisfactory.

Why, then, should we encourage this enemy alien, whose reputation for disloyalty in New England is such that Major Higginson confesses he consulted the "highest authorities in Washington," including the Secret Service, in regard to his activities?

Major Higginson ought not to make Doctor Muck's attitude his own. This country owes him much, musically speaking, but to say that if Doctor Muck goes the orchestra goes and the symphony hall may be sold is to lay the Major under grave but no doubt unjustifiable suspicion of disloyalty.

G. H. S.

Philadelphia, November 2, 1917.

From PRESS
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date NOV 5 - 1917

EX-GOV. WARFIELD HEADS ANTI-MUCK MEETING

Baltimore, Nov. 4 (Special).—A band from Camp Meade, with a guard of honor composed of 150 of Baltimore's drafted boys, lent by General Kuhn, will participate in the spectacular patriotic demonstration being arranged by ex-Governor Warfield in the Lyric on Tuesday afternoon.

The object of this meeting is to reaffirm the allegiance of Baltimoreans to the country, its flag and anthem, and to protest against the insults to the "Star-Spangled Banner" by Dr. Karl Muck.

Presidents of patriotic societies and others will be called upon for brief addaddresses. In their remarks it is certain the Kaiser's musician, who permitted the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" only under national pressure, will be discussed in no honeyed phrases.

From EVENING PUBLIC Ledger
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date NOV 3 - 1917

DOCTOR MUCK QUITS US

NOTHING has so become Doctor Muck's conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which more than once has excited adverse criticism on various grounds, as his taking leave of it—not the manner of the leavetaking, but the fact of the farewell. In view of his pertinacious, Prussianly refusal to pay merely outward and conventional respect to the land in which he was a guest by omission of its national anthem from his concert, he had outlived his usefulness.

The "Star Spangled Banner" may not be great music and may not belong on symphony programs in ordinary times, but these are not ordinary times, and the "Star Spangled Banner," despite lack of Mozartian or Wagnerian musical merit, is no ordinary air, for it voices the national spirit of a people in a great war for democracy and freedom. As a symbol of patriotism and Americanism it belongs on any program whereon the people demand it, and belongs all the more when disrespect to it is made an issue of a technical—and apparently actual—enemy alien. Maybe Doctor Muck can find more congenial musical employment leading the Philharmonic in Berlin; if so, he will play "Die Wacht am Rhein," or that other marvel of classical form and beauty, "Deutschland uber Alles," without lowering of his artistic standards or shock to his temperamental sensibilities.

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.

No Sympathy With Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: Colonel Higginson's explanation of why the Boston Symphony Orchestra at first refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner" may be entirely satisfying to himself, but it will hardly tend toward a kindly feeling from his fellow citizens.

He contends that the national anthem has no place in a program of artistic music, and there is implied that its addition would completely ruin the flow of soul promoted by the performance that had gone before, but we would remind the objector that if would hardly be played as an asset to the purely aesthetic part of the program; rather it would, among well-intentioned people, be added as a manifestation of respect.

The tune of the "Star Spangled Banner" may not be pure harmony, and as such it may have no claim whatever to be classed among artistic music; but if there lives an American who, in these unusual times, does not thrill through and through when its strains reach his ear, then that man or woman is to be pitied, for they are throwing away their heritage.

But Dr. Karl Muck is, let us say, by no means an American, so it may be taken for granted (especially under the existing circumstances) that his heart might thrill with an entirely different and less pleasant emotion, so to ask him to actually lead would be adding insult to injury. We would recommend all persons in his position, at the present time, to remember that old saw about "when in Rome," etc., and also a much less classical but newer one about "not to bite the hand that's feeding you."

There is something pretty nearly repulsive in people prating about art before all else, and what ought to be stifled because of it, when our own flesh and blood, the very youth and sinew of our land, are preparing to enter a titan's struggle, which should subjugate all lesser, lighter interests.

Truly art is not related to any particular nation or group (despite the prejudiced views of a good many people), but we wonder if it is not pretty nearly close to shameful when our artistic sensibilities are allowed to smother those of patriotism and loyalty and make good men and true evince a willingness to back up the dangerous impertinence of the enemy's countrymen.

ETHEL VOLLUM KOEHLER.

Newark, Delaware.

(Following the wide-spread criticism of Dr. Muck for his action, he handed his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to Colonel Higginson. Dr. Muck afterward agreed to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" at future concerts of the Orchestra and on Friday night did so in Pittsburgh.)

From PRESS
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date [illegible] 1917

MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM AT WASHINGTON, IS ENCORED

Washington, Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" Dr Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was encored this afternoon this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was given at the end of the program, the audience refusing to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed.

Secretary of the Interior Lane's party occupied the White House box

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
L29 NOV 3 - 1917

DR. MUCK DIRECTED NATIONAL ANTHEM

Selection Played by Symphony Orchestra at Boston. --- Maj. Higginson Exonerates Dr. Muck from Responsibility for Refusal Here.

Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared yesterday afternoon that Prof. Karl Muck, director of that orchestra, knew nothing about the request of the women of this city that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at the concert here Tuesday night until after the orchestra returned to Boston. The request was held up by Major Higginson and Manager Ellis because the program played in this city had been rehearsed and they did not want it interfered with.

This statement was made yesterday to newspaper men in Boston by Major Higginson following the announcement of the resignation of Dr. Muck and also following the concert, which Dr. Muck conducted at Symphony Hall during which "The Star Spangled Banner" was played while Dr. Muck stood before a tense audience and directed the performance.

The strains of the national anthem drew more than 2500 people to their feet. It drew their voices to their lips, and before the end came the men and women of the audience were singing with growing vigor and spirit "The Star Spangled Banner" and the final note was drowned in a tumult of applause.

EXONERATES DR. MUCK.

At his home in Boston last night Maj. Higginson said that "after all the abuse and misstatements directed against Dr. Muck during the past two days" he wanted to tell the public some facts.

"About 2 o'clock Monday afternoon the message from those ladies in Providence asking that the national anthem be played at their Tuesday night concert was received. Mr. Ellis and I were together when it came. I ordered Mr. Ellis to stop the sale of tickets in Providence and do nothing at that late hour to change the program, which had been made up and rehearsed.

"Tuesday evening Mr. Ellis and I went to Providence. Dr. Muck went down with the orchestra.

"Dr. Muck never knew that a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of that request until they reached Boston.

"It was I who gave the order to stop selling tickets in Providence and to do nothing about changing the program. We didn't have the music. There had been no rehearsal of the piece.

"Above all things I want Dr. Muck exonerated of that false charge circulated by some of the papers that he refused to play the national anthem.

"If the public wants to throw any stones, let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. I don't care how many they throw at me.

"And now I hope that this abuse of Dr. Muck will stop. He has done nothing and has refused to do nothing. He never refused to play our national anthem."

"HAVE DONE MY BEST."

Dr. Muck said yesterday after the performance:

"I hardly know what to think. It has all been very hard. It is all over now. Perhaps I had better say nothing."

"Would you not regret leaving Boston and the Symphony Orchestra as much as Maj. Higginson and many of the subscribers would regret to have you?" questioned the reporter.

"I have done my best these seven years. I have done my best to-day."

RESIGNATION RECEIVED.

At the concert yesterday Maj. Higginson read the following statement: "I have asked Dr. Muck and the orchestra to play the 'Star Spangled Banner,' and they have complied. They have never refused.

"Last spring, at my earnest request, Dr. Muck consented to remain in charge of the orchestra, because I considered him essential to the continuance of these concerts.

"He has placed his resignation in my hands, because he does not wish that any personal feeling towards him should prejudice the welfare of the organization.

"To lose him would be a disaster.

"Therefore the matter rests with me, and will have my earnest consideration."

German Opera Dropped.

New York, Nov. 3.—War has halted German opera at the Metropolitan, for some time to come, and with it has ended the New York career of a number of singers engaged exclusively for German roles, subject, as all members of the international company are, to a war clause in their contracts. Following reports of the sudden action, an official statement was issued in these words:

"The board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company announce that no performances of opera in the German language will be given during the present season."

In explantion of the directors' final action it was said that their determination was "not due to the Muck incident." The troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not figure here, but a corresponding change in popular feeling was operative in both cases. In New York it was mainly the operas of Wagner that were now dropped, temporarily, at least, for the first time in the present century.

The directors sounded public opinion when the last season closed and found it favorable in general to leaving the repertory unchanged. Again this fall, the newspaper comment showed a demand for Wagner. In the last few weeks a new turn of affairs appeared to have taken place, a general protest arising which resulted in the action.

To replace the operas dropped the Metropolitan has about 30 productions in the standard repertory and nine novelties and revivals, which happens to be exactly the number of operas—39—that were sung all last season to the largest receipts in the history of the house.

From ENQUIRER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

National Anthem Will Be Played

In deciding to yield to the insistent, patriotic and perfectly proper demand that the National Anthem be played at its concerts whenever and wherever given, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has done the only sensible, the only decent, the only possible thing. It would have done far better to recognize at the very beginning the necessities and proprieties of the situation. The issue which it injudiciously made is one which should never have been raised. Having been raised, however, it could only be settled in one of two ways. Either the point would have to be conceded to the public sentiment which had been aroused, or the orchestra would have been obliged to discontinue its public performances. Every one must be gratified to learn that the former of these alternatives has been adopted and that the music-loving community is not to be deprived of the pleasure which the playing of the Boston Orchestra consistently affords.

Its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, has said that the reason why he objected to playing the "Star-Spangled Banner" was because its introduction would be an artistic incongruity and not in harmony with the character of the music his programme presented. Conductors habitually attach a good deal more importance to the unity of their programmes than do their audiences, and it is not necessary to question the sincerity of Dr. Muck's statement. But every one understands that the objection he mentioned does not constitute the real explanation of the attitude which he unadvisedly and unfortunately assumed. A German by birth, Dr. Muck is still a German subject, and if his sympathies are with Germany in the great struggle which is proceeding the circumstance is no more than natural. So long as he keeps those sympathies to himself, so long as he refrains from making an offensive display of them, he need not be blamed for entertaining them.

That he is in an embarrassing position may be freely admitted, but under the existing conditions it behooved him to subordinate his own feelings to the requirements of an inexorable situation and to respect the sensibilities of the people whose hospitality he is enjoying. They would never have reproached him for his enemy nationality had he not gone out of his way in a manner which can only be described as offensive and which was no less foolish than provocative to remind them of it. [illegible] Dr. Muck personally there is no animus, and now that the necessary concession has been made it may be hoped that a regrettable incident has been closed. The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are an important feature of our musical life and their abandonment would by thousands have been felt as a misfortune. But the patriotic sentiments of our people must not and may not with impunity be flouted

TRY ANOTHER LEADER

Suggestion That Orchestra Need Not Be Discontinued Because of Muck

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—The action of the good people of Providence, R. I., because of the refusal of Doctor Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the "Star Spangled Banner" as part of his concert program will be sympathetically received throughout the country.

Doctor Muck's employer, the gallant and philanthropic Major Higginson, says he cannot control the programs, and suggests in addition that our national anthem cannot with propriety be included in a symphony concert. Perhaps the Major forgets that we are at war, a circumstance which would justify a far greater departure from musical propriety. To be sure the country with whom we are at war is that to which Doctor Muck owes his birth and that to which he still apparently gives allegiance.

Just reverse the conditions. Imagine for an instant an American leader of an orchestra giving concerts at this time in Germany! To the internment camp and its resultant starvation for him. Or, let a vivid imagination extend itself and suppose that American leader should refuse to play the "Wacht am Rhein." A firing party and a blank wall for him. And yet we, more or less calmly, except in Providence, permit this alien enemy to flout us on our own soil.

Personally I do not think that any other orchestra in these United States has ever reached the high plane of the Boston organization, although possibly it has done better under other leaders in the past than it has under Doctor Muck. We have, however, in the Philadelphia Orchestra an admirable band of musicians under capable leadership, and their work is highly satisfactory.

Why, then, should we encourage this enemy alien, whose reputation for disloyalty in New England is such that Major Higginson confesses he consulted the "highest authorities in Washington," including the Secret Service, in regard to his activities?

Major Higginson ought not to make Doctor Muck's attitude his own. This country owes him much, musically speaking, but to say that if Doctor Muck goes the orchestra goes and the symphony hall may be sold is to lay the Major under grave but no doubt unjustifiable suspicion of disloyalty.

G. H. S.

Philadelphia, November 2, 1917.

om PRESS
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 5 -

EX-GOV. WARFIELD HEADS ANTI-MUCK MEETING

Baltimore, Nov. 4 (Special).—A band from Camp Meade, with a guard of honor composed of 150 of Baltimore's drafted boys, lent by General Kuhn, will participate in the spectacular patriotic demonstration being arranged by ex-Governor Warfield in the Lyric on Tuesday afternoon.

The object of this meeting is to reaffirm the allegiance of Baltimoreans to the country, its flag and anthem, and to protest against the insults to the "Star-Spangled Banner" by Dr. Karl Muck.

Presidents of patriotic societies and others will be called upon for brief addaddresses. In their remarks it is certain the Kaiser's musician, who permitted the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" only under national pressure, will be discussed in no honeyed phrases.

EVENING PUBLIC Ledger
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 3 - 17
te

DOCTOR MUCK QUITS US

NOTHING has so become Doctor Muck's conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which more than once has excited adverse criticism on various grounds, as his taking leave of it—not the manner of the leavetaking, but the fact of the farewell. In view of his pertinacious, Prussianly refusal to pay merely outward and conventional respect to the land in which he was a guest by omission of its national anthem from his concert, he had outlived his usefulness.

The "Star Spangled Banner" may not be great music and may not belong on symphony programs in ordinary times, but these are not ordinary times, and the "Star Spangled Banner," despite lack of Mozartian or Wagnerian musical merit, is no ordinary air, for it voices the national spirit of a people in a great war for democracy and freedom. As a symbol of patriotism and Americanism it belongs on any program whereon the people demand it, and belongs all the more when disrespect to it is made an issue of a technical—and apparently actual—enemy alien. Maybe Doctor Muck can find more congenial musical employment leading the Philharmonic in Berlin; if so, he will play "Die Wacht am Rhein," or that other marvel of classical form and beauty, "Deutschland uber Alles," without lowering of his artistic standards or shock to his temperamental sensibilities.

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.

No Sympathy With Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: Colonel Higginson's explanation of why the Boston Symphony Orchestra at first refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner" may be entirely satisfying to himself, but it will hardly tend toward a kindly feeling from his fellow citizens.

He contends that the national anthem has no place in a program of artistic music, and there is implied that its addition would completely ruin the flow of soul promoted by the performance that had gone before, but we would remind the objector that it would hardly be played as an asset to the purely aesthetic part of the program; rather it would, among well-attentioned people, be added as a manifestation of respect.

The tune of the "Star Spangled Banner" may not be pure harmony, and as such it may have no claim whatever to be classed among artistic music; but if there lives an American who, in these unusual times, does not thrill through and through when its strains reach his ear, then that man or woman is to be pitied, for they are throwing away their heritage.

But Dr. Karl Muck is, let us say, by no means an American, so it may be taken for granted (especially under the existing circumstances) that his heart might thrill with an entirely different and less pleasant emotion, so to ask him to actually lead would be adding insult to injury. We would recommend all persons in his position, at the present time, to remember that old saw about "when in Rome," etc., and also a much less classical but newer one about "not to bite the hand that's feeding you."

There is something pretty nearly repulsive in people prating about art before all else, and what ought to be stifled because of it, when our own flesh and blood, the very youth and sinew of our land, are preparing to enter a titanic struggle which should subjugate all lesser, lighter interests.

Truly art is not related to any particular nation or group (despite the prejudiced views of a good many people), but we wonder if it is not pretty nearly close to shameful when our artistic sensibilities are allowed to smother those of patriotism and loyalty and make good men and true evince a willingness to back up the dangerous impertinence of the enemy's countrymen.

ETHEL VOLLUM KOEHLER.

Newark, Delaware.

(Following the wide-spread criticism of Dr. Muck for his action, he handed his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to Colonel Higginson. Dr. Muck afterward agreed to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" at future concerts of the Orchestra and on Friday night did so in Pittsburgh.)

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM AT WASHINGTON, IS ENCORED

Washington, Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" Dr Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was encored this afternoon this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was given at the end of the program, the audience refusing to leave until Dr. Muck returned to the stage and bowed.

Secretary of the Interior Lane's party occupied the White House box.

from PUBLIC ...PHIA, PA

Address:

NOV 4 - 1917

Let Muck's Resignation Stand

MR. WALTER DAMROSCH is quite right in saying that for Doctor Muck to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" is a bit of arrant hypocrisy and it would pain him to witness the effort. This is the view that all sensible people will take. The dilemma, created by the alien origin and the known attitude of Doctor Muck toward America and the "Star Spangled Banner's" very proper intrusion into operatic and symphony concerts during the war, is one that can only be solved by his resignation. What Major Higginson has unselfishly done for music in America is not the issue. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has survived six changes in its conductorship, but even its survival is not the issue. That is that Major Higginson as the Maecenas should not force Doctor Muck to compromise with his very tender German conscience and subject himself to the ignominy of being compelled to conduct, and to disarrange his program through conducting, the national anthem of a free people. Under the circumstances of the war, Doctor Muck, as it has been put in an attempt to create sympathy for him, something, by the way, he has not invited himself, ought not to be "earning his bread" in a country for which he is unwilling to show the slightest respect. And aside from the fact that, even considered artistically, much of what he has said about the disharmony of a symphonic program which includes the national air is sheer nonsense, the situation calls for the acceptance of his resignation and as close an observation of him by the Government as his subsequent actions may call for.

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK'S RESIGNATION NOT YET ACCEPTED

ed: Lon

Boston Symphony Orchestra Again Adds "Star Spangled Banner" to Its Programme

Conductor's Withdrawal Said to Depend Upon His Reception in Other Cities on Tour

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on two things—first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck, and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programme of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra will visit next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Much would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German, he registered, as provided by law, and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives him credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more.

Major Higginson and the doctor were non-committal today. The major planned to consult Washington authorities, although they are believed to have no objection to Muck.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 5 - 1917

PLAYING STAR SPANGLED BANNER

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—It seems very unfortunate that the subject of playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" has come so to the fore in our musical life. Such a controversy should never have been started. It bodes no good for the advancement of music either in this city or in this country. "The Star-Spangled Banner" has its place in musical programs, but it is out of place at symphony concerts, at the sacred oratorio concerts, or at the opera. We might just as well ask the Choral Society to sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their Christmas oratorio presentation of the "Messiah," or to expect them to open every one of the Metropolitan Opera House performances with this national song.

It appears to me that we are carrying sentiment to extremes when we attempt to force a symphony conductor to place on his program a composition which has no conformity whatever with what is to follow it. I am not making an attempt to defend Dr. Muck for refusing to play it, any more than I am attempting to condone with Mr. Stokowski for having to accede to the wishes of the public in this respect.

In the arranging of a symphony program, it is part of the art of the conductor to see that his entire program has uniformity, and that each number conforms with the one that either precedes or follows it. If he does not use proper judgment his concert is not uniformly successful.

I was very much in sympathy with your sane editorial on the subject, just a much as I was out of sympathy with the editorial in another morning paper of the same date. The writer of the latter tried to compare a Strauss and a Carpenter symphony with "The Star-Spangled Banner," but there does not seem any application in this. Strauss has tried to picture musically all the incidents of home life in his "Domestic Symphony," and shows the wide interpretative power of the musical instruments of a great orchestra, but I fail to see how "The Star-Spangled Banner" enters into any discussion between the two compositions.

Simply because Dr. Muck is a German citizen, temporarily engaged in work in this country, there is no reason why he should be more interfered with than the thousands of German citizens employed in other occupations in this country. If he fails to respond to our laws, that is another question, but we have no right to force upon him our customs.

It would be just as ridiculous for us to go to the home or the business establishment of a non-American citizen and tell him he had to display in front of his house, or his business, the American flag. Many of them find it a matter of good business to do this, but at heart they are no more American than if the flag was not displayed.

Most of our orchestra conductors in this country are Germans, and this is also true of the majority of the members constituting such orchestras. As long as we must have German conductors and German musicians, so long should we not attempt to force them to be false to their own convictions. We are constantly calling our people to come forward and work for democracy. Democracy means freedom of thought and freedom to do as we choose to do, as long as we don't go against the laws and the Constitution.

If we do not like a man's ideas or his actions, we can refrain from supporting him morally or financially, but we have no right to molest him in any way as long as he stays within the law. We are asking other nations to recognize the rights of individuals, so why should we not be willing to recognize such rights ourselves?

SAMUEL N. HOWELL.

Philadelphia, Nov. 2, 1917.

m ENQUIRER
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 6 - 19

ANTHEM IS PLAYED AS DR. MUCK LEADS

Boston Orchestra Opens Concert Here With "Star Spangled Banner"

Walter Damrosch Attacks German Musician for Explanation of His Attitude

Amidst applause that could be heard on Broad street, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his noted organization through the strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Academy of Music last night.

The national anthem, scheduled to be the last number on the programme, was played almost immediately after the conductor walked upon the stage.

As the strains of the anthem came out over the audience the throng went wild with enthusiasm. At first, when the music lovers heard what was being played, so enthusiastic did they become that the anthem was almost drowned out. The applause then died down until the last strains were heard, and applause then burst out like thunder from the standing audience.

A strange hush permeated the atmosphere on all floors of the Academy after the audience had been seated, as the musicians walked on the stage and took their places. Now and then a woman whispered. It could be heard over almost the entire house.

Applause Greets Conductor

The hush grew more intense as the lean form of Dr. Muck appeared, and he walked slowly to the centre of the stage. Then someone applauded. It was the signal for the entire audience to join in the welcome such as only a fair-minded American gathering could pay a German subject who had come into the focus of the public eye because of his refusal to play the national anthem. For fully three minutes the applause was deafening. Dr. Muck bowed and the welcome only stopped when he turned to his orchestra, waved his baton and commanded his men to rise.

As they did the audience, seemingly realizing what was about to happen, arose too and then, when the first notes of the "Star Spangled Banner" burst forth they were answered by the tumultuous applause of the people. This applause was continued almost half way through the playing of the anthem. At the end, Dr. Muck and his orchestra were rewarded by another prolonged outburst.

Cowardly, Says Damrosch

Shortly before Dr. Muck arrived in Philadelphia the following statement was issued by Walter Damrosch, famous musician:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair-minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing in itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?'

"Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German opera from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

Dr. Muck would make no reply to Mr. Damrosch's statement.

Reception Pleases Dr. Muck

The reception of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music was characterized by Dr. Muck as extremely gratifying to himself and to the members of the organization.

"I am highly pleased at the reception Philadelphia gave us this evening," said Dr. Muck. "It was extremely gratifying to all of us. Philadelphia lovers of music are loyal and we entertain a high appreciation of them."

Dr. Muck, as well as his managers, declined to discuss either Dr. Muck's resignation as director of the orchestra or the position taken by him when he refused to have the "Star-Spangled Banner" played at the concerts given by the orchestra.

130

BALTIMORE CONCERT STOPPED BY POLICE

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore today sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night, on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the grand jury and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting tomorrow, at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Its Local Season Opened at the Academy of Music Last Night

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its thirty-third local season at the Academy of Music last evening. Such an audience as in numbers and character it never fails to attract was present, and it is gratifying to record that nothing occurred to recall the late unpleasantness. Dr. Muck was cordially received upon his appearance, and, after having acknowledged an applause which, if anything, seemed to be even heartier than usual, he waved his baton, the orchestra stood up, the audience also rose and the "Star Spangled Banner" was played with all the fervor the most patriotic could desire. Dr. Muck then proceeded to the performance of a programme which included Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Liszt's Symphonic Poem of "Prometheus" and the "Parsifal" prelude, and which had for its central feature the C minor or fifth symphony of Beethoven.

This is music which many of those present must almost have known by heart, but it is also music which loses none of its vitality or interest with the flight of years, and when it is played as well as it was last evening, with so much of tone, lucidity of exposition and brilliancy of execution, with such an intelligent apprehension of its significance and such a subtle and sympathetic appreciation of its values, even the most sated veteran may be expected to agree that it is as impressive and enjoyable as ever. The "King Lear" overture and the "Prometheus" tone poem, which are both interesting and worth while in their different ways, although not exactly in the class of masterpieces, were also played in a manner which strikingly exhibited the orchestra's virtuosity and a really superb rendering of the "Parsifal" prelude, in which the celestial effects at which the composer aims were wonderfully realized ended the proceedings.

PUBLIC Ledger
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ess:

NOV 5 -

THE MASTERLY RETREAT IN MUSIC

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—I attended the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert this afternoon, and though a concert-goer of nearly thirty years' exposure, my artistically musical soul, strange to say, is not in a pathological condition as a result of Doctor Stokowski's inclusion of the much-discussed and Muck-despised "Star Spangled Banner." I venture to say here that my "sensibilite" is very finely attuned, and I have a nice taste in the "arrangement of epitaphs" that I can and (frequently do) hurl at those who, consciously or otherwise, bring about a clash of things inharmonious.

On leaving the concert I read that Doctor Muck resigned, after having led his "band" in the "Star Spangled Banner." One who is not acclimated to the Kultural method of cerebration might deduce from this that it looks as if Muck's objections to the song were due to political and not artistic reasons. This morning's paper brings the news that though he has resigned he is conducting and is to conduct. This is in line with the German "masterly retreats."

Let us for a moment consider the charge that our anthem is artistically nil; let us compare it with some of the "artistic" music one might find on a Muck program. Brahms's Academic Overture, for instance. It is based on German student drinking songs, the program notes tell us; their esoteric beauties and artistic inspiration are not highly discernible to the music lover unless he be a rabid "Brahmin." Is surely our anthem is as melodious and artistically worth while as these; personally I'd much rather hear it, for I usually fall asleep during German music, except Mozart's; I have slept through some of the dullest of Brahms's.

What will be the effect of such "kolossal" German pigheadedness like Muck's on German music in this country? The result will be that German music will be banished from our concert and opera stage, which move the Metropolitan Opera Company is about to begin. It won't affect me personally, as you may have gathered from what I have said above, because I am bored by most German music; but it will grieve some of my friends who like it, and I am sorry for them, because they will have to stay away from it against their will, whereas, if it were not ostracized, I would have an advantage over them in staying away from it of my own free will.

In conclusion, in times such as these, musicians who are so nervously constituted that the inclusion of our anthem on a program causes them acute distress should either be located in the psychopathic ward of a hospital or else interned. T. G.

Philadelphia, November 3, 1917.

rom

Address:

Let Muck's Resignation Stand

MR. WALTER DAMROSCH is quite right in saying that for Doctor Muck to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" is a bit of arrant hypocrisy and it would pain him to witness the effort. This is the view that all sensible people will take. The dilemma, created by the alien origin and the known attitude of Doctor Muck toward America and the "Star Spangled Banner's" very proper intrusion into operatic and symphony concerts during the war, is one that can only be solved by his resignation. What Major Higginson has unselfishly done for music in America is not the issue. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has survived six changes in its conductorship, but even its survival is not the issue. That is that Major Higginson as the Maecenas should not force Doctor Muck to compromise with his very tender German conscience and subject himself to the ignominy of being compelled to conduct, and to disarrange his program through conducting, the national anthem of a free people. Under the circumstances of the war, Doctor Muck, as it has been put in an attempt to create sympathy for him, something, by the way, he has not invited himself, ought not to be "earning his bread" in a country for which he is unwilling to show the slightest respect. And aside from the fact that, even considered artistically, much of what he has said about the disharmony of a symphonic program which includes the national air is sheer nonsense, the situation calls for the acceptance of his resignation and as close an observation of him by the Government as his subsequent actions may call for.

ENQUIRER

Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK'S RESIGNATION NOT YET ACCEPTED

Boston Symphony Orchestra Again Adds "Star Spangled Banner" to Its Programme

Conductor's Withdrawal Said to Depend Upon His Reception in Other Cities on Tour

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on two things—first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck, and, second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programme of the Symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the Symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the Symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra will visit next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programmes.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German, he registered, as provided by law, and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives him credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant conductor, but next year it would be no more.

Major Higginson and the doctor were non-committal today. The major planned to consult Washington authorities, although they are believed to have no objection to Muck.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 5 - 1917

PLAYING STAR SPANGLED BANNER

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—It seems very unfortunate that the subject of playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" has come so to the fore in our musical life. Such a controversy should never have been started. It bodes no good for the advancement of music either in this city or in this country. "The Star-Spangled Banner" has its place in musical programs, but it is out of place at symphony concerts, at the sacred oratorio concerts, or at the opera. We might just as well ask the Choral Society to sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at their Christmas oratorio presentation of the "Messiah," or to expect them to open every one of the Metropolitan Opera House performances with this national song.

It appears to me that we are carrying sentiment to extremes when we attempt to force a symphony conductor place on his program a composition which has no conformity whatever with what is to follow it. I am not making an attempt to defend Dr Muck for refusing to play it, any more than I am attempting to condone with Mr. Stokowski for having to accede to the wishes of the public in this respect.

In the arranging of a symphony program, it is part of the art of the conductor to see that his entire program has uniformity, and that each number conforms with the one that either precedes or follows it. If he does not use proper judgment his concert is not uniformly successful.

I was very much in sympathy with your sane editorial on the subject, just a much as I was out of sympathy with the editorial in another morning paper of the same date. The writer of the latter tried to compare a Strauss and a Carpenter symphony with "The Star-Spangled Banner," but there does not seem any application in this. Strauss has tried to picture musically all the incidents of home life in his "Domestic Symphony," and shows the wide interpretative power of the musical instruments of a great orchestra, but I fail to see how "The Star-Spangled Banner" enters into any discussion between the two compositions.

Simply because Dr. Muck is a German citizen, temporarily engaged in work in this country, there is no reason why he should be more interfered with than the thousands of German citizens employed in other occupations in this country. If he fails to respond to our laws, that is another question, but we have no right to force upon him our customs.

It would be just as ridiculous for us to go to the home or the business establishment of a non-American citizen and tell him he had to display in front of his house, or his business, the American flag. Many of them find it a matter of good business to do this, but at heart they are no more American than if the flag was not displayed.

Most of our orchestra conductors in this country are Germans, and this is also true of the majority of the members constituting such orchestras. As long as we must have German conductors and German musicians, so long should we not attempt to force them to be false to their own convictions. We are constantly calling our people to come forward and work for democracy. Democracy means freedom of thought and freedom to do as we choose to do, as long as we don't go against the laws and the Constitution.

If we do not like a man's ideas or his actions, we can refrain from supporting him morally or financially, but we have no right to molest him in any way as long as he stays within the law. We are asking other nations to recognize the rights of individuals, so why should we not be willing to recognize such rights ourselves?

SAMUEL N. HOWELL

1917

m ENQUIRER

lress: Philadelphia, Pa.

ANTHEM IS PLAYED AS DR. MUCK LEADS

Boston Orchestra Opens Concert Here With "Star Spangled Banner"

Walter Damrosch Attacks German Musician for Explanation of His Attitude

Amidst applause that could be heard on Broad street, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his noted organization through the strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at the Academy of Music last night.

The national anthem, scheduled to be the last number on the programme, was played almost immediately after the conductor walked upon the stage.

As the strains of the anthem came out over the audience the throng went wild with enthusiasm. At first, when the music lovers heard what was being played, so enthusiastic did they become that the anthem was almost drowned out. The applause then died down until the last strains were heard, and applause then burst out like thunder from the standing audience.

A strange hush permeated the atmosphere on all floors of the Academy after the audience had been seated, as the musicians walked on the stage and took their places. Now and then a woman whispered. It could be heard over almost the entire house.

Applause Greets Conductor

The hush grew more intense as the lean form of Dr. Muck appeared, and he walked slowly to the centre of the stage. Then someone applauded. It was the signal for the entire audience to join in the welcome such as only a fair-minded American gathering could pay a German subject who had come into the focus of the public eye because of his refusal to play the national anthem. For fully three minutes the applause was deafening. Dr. Muck bowed and the welcome only stopped when he turned to his orchestra, waved his baton and commanded his men to rise.

As they did the audience, seemingly realizing what was about to happen, arose too and then, when the first notes of the "Star Spangled Banner" burst forth they were answered by the tumultuous applause of the people. This applause was continued almost half way through the playing of the anthem. At the end, Dr. Muck and his orchestra were rewarded by another prolonged outburst.

Cowardly, Says Damrosch

Shortly before Dr. Muck arrived in Philadelphia the following statement was issued by Walter Damrosch, famous musician:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair-minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

"But the explanation that he gives is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, 'Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing in itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?'

"Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

"The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter."

Dr. Muck would make no reply to Mr. Damrosch's statement.

Reception Pleases Dr. Muck

The reception of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music was characterized by Dr. Muck as extremely gratifying to himself and to the members of the organization.

"I am highly pleased at the reception Philadelphia gave us this evening," said Dr. Muck. "It was extremely gratifying to all of us. Philadelphia lovers of music are loyal and we entertain a high appreciation of them."

Dr. Muck, as well as his managers, declined to discuss either Dr. Muck's resignation as director of the orchestra or the position taken by him when he refused to have the "Star-Spangled Banner" played at the concerts given by the orchestra.

130

BALTIMORE CONCERT STOPPED BY POLICE

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore today sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night, on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered.

The action came at the recommendation of the grand jury and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting tomorrow, at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Its Local Season Opened at the Academy of Music Last Night

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its thirty-third local season at the Academy of Music last evening. Such an audience as in numbers and character it never fails to attract was present, and it is gratifying to record that nothing occurred to recall the late unpleasantness. Dr. Muck was cordially received upon his appearance, and, after having acknowledged an applause which, if anything, seemed to be even heartier than usual, he waved his baton, the orchestra stood up, the audience also rose and the "Star Spangled Banner" was played with all the fervor the most patriotic could desire. Dr. Muck then proceeded to the performance of a programme which included Berlioz's "King Lear" overture, Liszt's Symphonic Poem of "Prometheus" and the "Parsifal" prelude, and which had for its central feature the C minor or fifth symphony of Beethoven.

This is music which many of those present must almost have known by heart, but it is also music which loses none of its vitality or interest with the flight of years, and when it is played as well as it was last evening, with so much of tone, lucidity of exposition and brilliancy of execution, with such an intelligent apprehension of its significance and such a subtle and sympathetic appreciation of its values, even the most sated veteran may be expected to agree that it is as impressive and enjoyable as ever. The "King Lear" overture and the "Prometheus" tone poem, which are both interesting and worth while in their different ways, although not exactly in the class of masterpieces, were also played in a manner which strikingly exhibited the orchestra's virtuosity and a really superb rendering of the "Parsifal" prelude, in which the celestial effects at which the composer aims were wonderfully realized ended the proceedings.

PUBLIC Ledger

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ess:

NOV 6 -

THE MASTERLY RETREAT IN MUSIC

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—I attended the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert this afternoon, and though a concert-goer of nearly thirty years' exposure, my artistically musical soul, strange to say, is not in a pathological condition as a result of Doctor Stokowski's inclusion of the much-discussed and Muck-despised "Star Spangled Banner." I venture to say here that my "sensibilite" is very fine, attuned, and I have a nice taste in the "arrangement of epitaphs" that I can and (frequently do) hurl at those who, consciously or otherwise, bring about a clash of things inharmonious.

On leaving the concert I read that Doctor Muck resigned, after having led his "band" in the "Star Spangled Banner." One who is not acclimated to the Kultural method of celebration might deduce from this that it looks as if Muck's objections to the song were due to political and not artistic reasons. This morning's paper brings the news that though he has resigned he is conducting and is to conduct. This is in line with the German "masterly retreats."

Let us for a moment consider the charge that our anthem is artistically nil; let us compare it with some of the "artistic" music one might find on a Muck program. Brahms's Academic Overture, for instance. It is based on German student drinking songs, the program notes tell us; their esoteric beauties and artistic inspiration are not highly discernible to the music lover unless he be a rabid "Brahmin." If surely our anthem is as melodious and artistically worth while as these; personally I'd much rather hear it, for I usually fall asleep during German music, except Mozart's; I have slept through some of the dullest of Brahms's.

What will be the effect of such "kolossal" German pigheadedness like Muck's on German music in this country? The result will be that German music will be banished from our concert and opera stage, which move the Metropolitan Opera Company is about to begin. It won't affect me personally, as you may have gathered from what I have said above, because I am bored by most German music; but it will grieve some of my friends who like it, and I am sorry for them, because they will have to stay away from it against their will, whereas, if it were not ostracized, I would have an advantage over them in staying away from it of my own free will.

In conclusion, in times such as these, musicians who are so nervously constituted that the inclusion of our anthem on a program causes them acute distress should either be located in the psychopathic ward of a hospital or else interned. T. G.

Philadelphia, November 3, 1917.

131

From ENQUIRER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date NOV 4 - PM

ORCHESTRA TO PLAY NATIONAL AIR HERE

Major Higginson, Sponsor of the Boston Organization Will Be at Concert Tonight

May Be Objections to Appearance of Conductor and Attempt to Eliminate German Music

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert, if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

A statement absolving Dr. Muck and the men under him of any disloyalty or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star-Spangled Banner" from their programmes was made tonight by Major L. Higginson. He took upon himself the blame for any mistakes made.

Major Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Major Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence, the "Star-Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Major Higginson said tonight:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist, the orchestra under Dr. Muck has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every future concert, the question is whether there will be objections to Dr. Muck, such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the programme.

Aliens in Orchestra

As the objections against Dr. Muck is because he is a German, it is pointed out that, in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the Department of Justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are forty-one Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom nineteen are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized; fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, thirteen of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, twelve of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

Muck's Salary $18,000

Major Higginson pays Muck $18,000 a year, or $3000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra, despite its great revenue from concerts. He came to Boston on a five-year contract, which expired last spring, and the Major considered him so essential to the success of the symphony that he asked him to remain. In 1914 Muck purchased a $30,000 house in the Fenway section.

In 1912 Dr. Muck resigned from the Berlin Opera to come to Boston, apparently much to the displeasure of Royal circles. The question was raised whether the artistic temperament of the conductor had not rebelled against the imperial dominance, which restricts the scope of any conductor at the Berlin Opera. The matter was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, an inspired court newspaper, hinted that Muck had let American gold lure him from a position of honor in the Fatherland.

RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

INSISTS ON GERMAN MUSIC

Muck Resignation Now Depends Upon Attitude of Public.

Boston, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

Boston press that wanted the symphony to play the anthem, wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programs.

There remains one more step to be taken in this progressive program of condemnation and repudiation by Courts and people. This will be the overwhelming defeat of the Vare ticket on Tuesday and the election of the public-spirited candidates of the Town Meeting party. Then Philadelphia can proceed to put its house in order for further great victories next year.

Misfit Leadership.

RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

THE ISSUE OF NATIONAL MUSIC PRECIPITATED

How the Action of Dr. Karl Muck Affects Music World.

GERMAN ART IN BALANCE

In Fact, the Whole Situation Is Quite a Ticklish Topic Just at This Time.

DR. KARL MUCK has flatly precipitated the whole issue of national music in this country, so far as "artistic neutrality" now goes, the fat is in the fire.

Whether Dr Muck goes or stays is of no particular moment

Higginson's High Hand.

At first Colonel Higginson, financial backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was disposed, according to the reports, to take a pretty high hand. He said, rather shortly, that the public would better not go "too far" in this matter or he would disband the entire Boston organization That would be a good deal of a calamity, to be sure Still, this is wartime, and there are other considerations in the world than symphonic music.

Now, however, the special case of the Boston Orchestra seems more or less settled But the issue is only thoroughly started. We are likely to hear an immense deal of it

For the general eye of this country is going to be kept more and more closely on the angles of disloyalty, in whatever department of our life There is no sound objection to German music, within the definite war limitations. It must not contribute money to the enemy funds—that is certain.

Wagner Copyright Expired.

Richard Wagner we may have, operatically or otherwise; for the copyright protection of his operas is now run out, and American producers need pay no royalty to Frau Cosima. With Richard Strauss the case is very different. Moreover, Strauss was one of the foremost of those who signed the famous manifesto of the Intellectuals. We can do without him for a bit.

Still, it must be remembered that our quarrel is not with music When our use of German music in this country is apt to have any bolstering effect on the people of Germany, however, then we may well draw back, and, as for the Prussian Herr Mucks and the Prussian-American Geraldine Farrars, we ought, as rational individuals, to know very adequately what to do in their instances. In a situation like the present, either we are Americans or we are not F. H.

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 5 - 1917

DR. MUCK RESTORED AS ORCHESTRA HEAD

Will Direct Boston Symphony Here Tonight in Playing "Star Spangled Banner"

CONTROVERSY NOW AT END

Dr. Karl Muck, the German director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will descend from his Olympian fastness when his orchestra appears at the Academy of Music this evening and will lead his musicians in the rendition of the American national anthem.

Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian and one of the most noted orchestra leaders in the world, brought a storm down upon his head by refusing at recent concerts to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Those who act as spokesmen for the Boston Orchestra say now that the national hymn will be a part of every future program and that Dr. Muck will lead. This, it is assumed, will calm general criticism and return the Boston organization to its position in the estimation of American music lovers.

It is not believed there will be any signs of unfriedliness when the Boston musicians play here this evening. Baltimore, however, has threatened to riot when Dr. Muck and his organization appear there on Wednesday night. There is a possibility that the Baltimore concert may be called off.

Late developments in the tempest that surrounded the Boston Orchestra, when Dr. Muck refused to play the national anthem at a concert in Providence, about a week ago, indicate that the noted conductor didn't exactly mean it when he handed his resignation to Major Henry M. Higginson, the orchestra's patron, after directing the playing of the national hymn in Boston under pressure.

Dr. Muck who based his refusal on the ground that the national hymn would disturb the artistic balance of his program, surrendered to public indignation, directed the playing of the anthem and then handed his letter of resignation to the orchestra management. It now appears that Dr. Muck was tempted to dramatize his sentiments and that he didn't intend actually to quit.

Major Higginson, who does for the Boston Orchestra what the Philadelphia Orchestra Association does for Mr. Stokowski's organization here, has announced that Dr. Muck will continue to conduct the Boston's concerts. Major Higginson went further, and took all the blame for the recent disturbance upon himself.

Major Higginson said his own concepts of artistic unity caused him to believe each program should be limited to the classic compositions which it is the first function of the musicians of his orchestra to interpret. He believed that art transcands all other considerations.

In an announcement yesterday, he drew the attention of the public to the fact that the orchestra itself is a mixed organization, made up of representatives of almost all nationalities, and that there is no predominent pro-German sentiment among his players. Dr. Muck, he said, never objected to the anthem because of its national significance but because of the fact that it was not the sort of music which the orchestra is organized to play.

PRESS
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK AND HIS ORCHESTRA WILL NOT BE ALLOWED TO PLAY IN BALTIMORE

Grand Jury, Fearing a Riot, Urges Police Board to Withhold a Permit.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—Following the failure of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., and the subsequent outburst of indignation here, the orchestra will not be permitted to play here on Wednesday night.

Upon the recommendation of the Grand Jury today, the Police Board decided that inasmuch as a riot might be precipitated, it would be unwise to permit the concert to be held.

This opposition has been championed by ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, who had planned to hold a big indignation meeting tomorrow, to be attended, among others, by drafted men at Camp Meade and the camp band. This meeting will be held, notwithstanding the action of the Police Board.

Musical devotees tonight are criticising the Police Board, saying that a distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EVENING
From PUBLIC Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa.
Address:
NOV 3 - 1917

FEDERAL AGENTS SHADOW DR. MUCK

Department of Justice Is Investigating Orchestra Leader's Activities

IN WASHINGTON TUESDAY

By a Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.

The Department of Justice is making a hurried but thorough investigation of the activities of Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refused to permit the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., Tuesday night, when the request was made. If its secret agents are able to substantiate a few of the many charges of pro-German activity that have been made against him he may be interned immediately for the duration of the war or suffer a worse fate. This fact was admitted by nigh officials of the department today.

Washington musical circles are all in a flutter today because Dr. Muck, whose resignation tendered yesterday in Boston hasn't been accepted, is scheduled to conduct a concert of the orchestra at the National Theatre here next Tuesday night.

Several prominent and patriotic American citizens have begun to devise some means of preventing Muck from giving his concert. They will go further than this, they say, and do whatever possible to put Muck behind the jail bars if they are unable to prevent his coming to Washington.

The discussion among the music lovers centered about this question: Should a German citizen, as Doctor Muck is, be given support in the National Capital; or should the music-lovers think only of the artistic side of the matter and give their support to the famous orchestra?

The house has been sold out for the concert next Tuesday, according to Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who for eleven years has had charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington. She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year, because Doctor Muck the leader, is a German.

"There isn't a well-known orchestra in the country or an opera company which has not Germans in its ranks," said Mrs. Greene.

Continued from Page One

But a considerable number of the subscribers to the orchestra seats differ from Mrs. Greene's views and are strong in their condemnation of Muck, and declare they will stay away if he comes here.

Lieutenant William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, which plays at all White House and State functions, insisted today that the national anthem has a right to a place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

131

From ENQUIRER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

ORCHESTRA TO PLAY NATIONAL AIR HERE

Major Higginson, Sponsor of the Boston Organization Will Be at Concert Tonight

May Be Objections to Appearance of Conductor and Attempt to Eliminate German Music

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left today for Philadelphia, where it will give a concert tomorrow evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert, if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

A statement absolving Dr. Muck and the men under him of any disloyalty or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star-Spangled Banner" from their programmes was made tonight by Major L. Higginson. He took upon himself the blame for any mistakes made.

Major Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Major Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence, the "Star-Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Major Higginson said tonight:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist, the orchestra under Dr. Muck has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

Now that it has been announced that the anthem will be played at every future concert, the question is whether there will be objections to Dr. Muck, such as has already appeared in Baltimore, and whether there will be any attempt to have German music eliminated from the programme.

Aliens in Orchestra

As the objections against Dr. Muck is because he is a German, it is pointed out that, in addition to the fact that his presence has been approved by the Department of Justice, the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are forty-one Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom nineteen are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized; fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, thirteen of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, twelve of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

Muck's Salary $18,000

Major Higginson pays Muck $18,000 a year, or $3000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra, despite its great revenue from concerts. He came to Boston on a five-year contract, which expired last spring, and the Major considered him so essential to the success of the symphony that he asked him to remain. In 1914 Muck purchased a $30,000 house in the Fenway section.

In 1912 Dr. Muck resigned from the Berlin Opera to come to Boston, apparently much to the displeasure of Royal circles. The question was raised whether the artistic temperament of the conductor had not rebelled against the imperial dominance, which restricts the scope of any conductor at the Berlin Opera. The matter was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, an inspired court newspaper, hinted that Muck had let American gold lure him from a position of honor in the Fatherland.

---

1 RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

INSISTS ON GERMAN MUSIC

Muck Resignation Now Depends Upon Attitude of Public.

Boston, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

Boston press that wanted the symphony to play the anthem, wants Dr. Muck retained.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programs.

There remains one more step to be taken in this progressive program of condemnation and repudiation by Courts and people. This will be the overwhelming defeat of the Vare ticket on Tuesday and the election of the public-spirited candidates of the Town Meeting party. Then Philadelphia can proceed to put its house in order for further great victories next year.

Misfit Leadership.

1 RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

THE ISSUE OF NATIONAL MUSIC PRECIPITATED

How the Action of Dr. Karl Muck Affects Music World.

GERMAN ART IN BALANCE

In Fact, the Whole Situation Is Quite a Ticklish Topic Just at This Time.

DR. KARL MUCK has flatly precipitated the whole issue of national music in this country, so far as "artistic neutrality" now goes, the fat is in the fire.

Whether Dr Muck goes or stays is of no particular moment

Higginson's High Hand.

At first Colonel Higginson, financial backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was disposed, according to the reports, to take a pretty high hand. He said, rather shortly, that the public would better not go "too far" in this matter or he would disband the entire Boston organization That would be a good deal of a calamity, to be sure Still, this is wartime, and there are other considerations in the world than symphonic music.

Now, however, the special case of the Boston Orchestra seems more or less settled But the issue is only thoroughly started. We are likely to hear an immense deal of it

For the general eye of this country is going to be kept more and more closely on the angles of disloyalty, in whatever department of our life There is no sound objection to German music, within the definite war limitations. It must not contribute money to the enemy funds—that is certain.

Wagner Copyright Expired.

Richard Wagner we may have, operatically or otherwise; for the copyright protection of his operas is now run out, and American producers need pay no royalty to Frau Cosima. With Richard Strauss the case is very different. Moreover, Strauss was one of the foremost of those who signed the famous manifesto of the Intellectuals. We can do without him for a bit.

Still, it must be remembered that our quarrel is not with music When our use of German music in this country is apt to have any bolstering effect on the people of Germany, however, then we may well draw back, and, as for the Prussian Herr Mucks and the Prussian-American Geraldine Farrars, we ought, as rational individuals, to know very adequately what to do in their instances. In a situation like the present, either we are Americans or we are not F. H.

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 5 - 1917

DR. MUCK RESTORED AS ORCHESTRA HEAD

Will Direct Boston Symphony Here Tonight in Playing "Star Spangled Banner"

CONTROVERSY NOW AT END

Dr. Karl Muck, the German director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will descend from his Olympian fastness when his orchestra appears at the Academy of Music this evening and will lead his musicians in the rendition of the American national anthem.

Dr. Muck, who is a Prussian and one of the most noted orchestra leaders in the world, brought a storm down upon his head by refusing at recent concerts to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

Those who act as spokesmen for the Boston Orchestra say now that the national hymn will be a part of every future program and that Dr. Muck will lead. This, it is assumed, will calm general criticism and return the Boston organization to its position in the estimation of American music lovers.

It is not believed there will be any signs of unfriendliness when the Boston musicians play here this evening. Baltimore, however, has threatened to riot when Dr. Muck and his organization appear there on Wednesday night. There is a possibility that the Baltimore concert may be called off.

Late developments in the tempest that surrounded the Boston Orchestra, when Dr. Muck refused to play the national anthem at a concert in Providence, about a week ago, indicate that the noted conductor didn't exactly mean it when he handed his resignation to Major Henry L. Higginson, the orchestra's patron, after directing the playing of the national hymn in Boston under pressure.

Dr. Muck who based his refusal on the ground that the national hymn would disturb the artistic balance of his program, surrendered to public indignation, directed the playing of the anthem and then handed his letter of resignation to the orchestra management. It now appears that Dr. Muck was tempted to dramatize his sentiments and that he didn't intend actually to quit.

Major Higginson, who does for the Boston Orchestra what the Philadelphia Orchestra Association does for Mr. Stokowski's organization here, has announced that Dr. Muck will continue to conduct the Boston's concerts. Major Higginson went further, and took all the blame for the recent disturbance upon himself.

Major Higginson said his own concepts of artistic unity caused him to believe each program should be limited to the classic compositions which it is the first function of the musicians of his orchestra to interpret. He believed that art transcends all other considerations.

In an announcement yesterday, he drew the attention of the public to the fact that the orchestra itself is a mixed organization, made up of representatives of almost all nationalities, and that there is no predominent pro-German sentiment among his players. Dr. Muck, he said, never objected to the anthem because of its national significance but because of the fact that it was not the sort of music which the orchestra is organized to play.

---

PRESS
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK AND HIS ORCHESTRA WILL NOT BE ALLOWED TO PLAY IN BALTIMORE

Grand Jury, Fearing a Riot, Urges Police Board to Withhold a Permit.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—Following the failure of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., and the subsequent outburst of indignation here, the orchestra will not be permitted to play here on Wednesday night.

Upon the recommendation of the Grand Jury today, the Police Board decided that inasmuch as a riot might be precipitated, it would be unwise to permit the concert to be held.

This opposition has been championed by ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, who had planned to hold a big indignation meeting tomorrow, to be attended, among others, by drafted men at Camp Meade and the camp band. This meeting will be held, notwithstanding the action of the Police Board.

Musical devotees tonight are criticising the Police Board, saying that a distinction should have been made between Dr. Muck and the orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EVENING
From PUBLIC Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa.
Address:
NOV 3 - 1917

FEDERAL AGENTS SHADOW DR. MUCK

Department of Justice Is Investigating Orchestra Leader's Activities

IN WASHINGTON TUESDAY

By a Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.

The Department of Justice is making a hurried but thorough investigation of the activities of Dr. Carl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who refused to permit the orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" in Providence, R. I., Tuesday night, when the request was made. If its secret agents are able to substantiate a few of the many charges of pro-German activity that have been made against him he may be interned immediately for the duration of the war or suffer a worse fate. This fact was admitted by nigh officials of the department today.

Washington musical circles are all in a flutter today because Dr. Muck, whose resignation tendered yesterday in Boston hasn't been accepted, is scheduled to conduct a concert of the orchestra at the National Theatre here next Tuesday night.

Several prominent and patriotic American citizens have begun to devise some means of preventing Muck from giving his concert. They will go further than this, they say, and do whatever possible to put Muck behind the jail bars if they are unable to prevent his coming to Washington.

The discussion among the music lovers centered about this question: Should a German citizen, as Doctor Muck is, be given support in the National Capital; or should the music-lovers think only of the artistic side of the matter and give their support to the famous orchestra?

The house has been sold out for the concert next Tuesday, according to Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who for eleven years has had charge of the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington. She said that only three persons, so far as she knew, had not taken their season tickets again this year, because Doctor Muck the leader, is a German.

"There isn't a well-known orchestra in the country or an opera company which has not Germans in its ranks," said Mrs. Greene.

Continued from Page One

But a considerable number of the subscribers to the orchestra seats differ from Mrs. Greene's views and are strong in their condemnation of Muck, and declare they will stay away if he comes here.

Lieutenant William H. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band, which plays at all White House and State functions, insisted today that the national anthem has a right to a place upon any program whatsoever, artistic symphonies not excepted.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 1917

PITTSBURGH WOMEN PROTEST KREISLER AND DR. KARL MUCK

Austrian Army Violinist and Orchestra Leader Branded "Open Enemies."

BOTH BILLED TO PERFORM

D. A. R. Regent Calls on People Not to Buy Tickets Nor Attend Concerts.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Pittsburgh, Nov. 6.—Pittsburgh women today joined their voices to the storm of protest that has arisen over the proposed appearance of Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian army officer violinist, who is scheduled to give a concert at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and play at the Union Arcade Auditorium on Saturday afternoon. Emphatic condemnation of the project as unpatriotic and inconsistent with a loyal policy of wholehearted support of the Government's war prosecution was voiced by the members.

At the Daughters of 1812 meeting today, Mrs. William Ralston Dabbs, regent of the Dolly Madison Chapter declared that Kreisler was an open enemy of the United States and was sending American money to the support of the country with which we are at war. Germany, or at least its ally.

Resolutions were then unanimously passed protesting against the appearance of Kreisler and Dr. Karl Muck, who is billed for later in the month, and upon the resolutions termed "an alien enemy of the United States." Mrs. John B. Heron, regent of the Pittsburgh Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, also added the indignation of that body to the protest that has arisen against Kreisler and Muck, and while the tickets for the former sold quite freely, she called upon the buyers of the tickets to stay away from the concerts to show their loyalty to their own country.

Walter Damrosch, of New York, who had been represented in the papers as supporting Dr. Karl Muck in his stand against the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," today flooded the local papers with extracts from a New York paper showing that he had condemned Muck for his attitude.

KILL MUCK, SHOUTS WOMAN IN BALTIMORE MEETING

Occupant of Box at Theatre Interrupts as Ex-Governor Warfield Denounces German Teacher.

Baltimore, Nov. 6, (Special).—"Kill Muck" shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was voicing the protest of a patriotic gathering against Dr. Karl Muck's actions in reference to playing the Star-Spangled Banner as part of the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts.

Little available space was left when former Governor Warfield marched to the center of the stage and began his denunciation of Dr. Muck, whose name he did not once mention.

From the audience came hisses whenever any reference was made to Dr. Muck. The former Governor, during his address, read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the Cardinal said he was sorry he could not be present, but was with the gathering in spirit, and paid a glowing tribute to the American flag.

Captain Hughes, of a Pennsylvania company representing General Kobbe to General Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals and of the army here and the army over there. He concluded: "Muck's reference to the Star-Spangled Banner was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave" and he "hoped that Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck." Deafening applause greeted the remarks.

In referring to Philadelphia allowing Muck to play there, Alfred J. Carr, representing the Society of the War of 1812, said: "O City of Brotherly Love, you have no right now to that bell which cracked for Liberty!"

om PRESS
ldress: Philadelphia, Pa.
te

DR. MUCK TO LEAD SYMPHONY HERE AND PLAY ANTHEM

Resignation and Disbanding of Orchestra to Depend on Reception on Tour.

OPENS HERE TOMORROW

Major Appeals for Ending of Criticism, Saying German Leader Is Blameless.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Boston, Nov. 3.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again tonight in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and he will do so next week at concerts in Philadelphia, where the tour begins Monday, and in Baltimore, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. His resignation has not been accepted and Major Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, has not decided whether to accept it and end the orchestra's career or not.

It depends on two things—first, whether there is public demand for the removal of Muck, and second, whether there is public demand for the elimination of Wagner and all German music from the programs of the symphony, as the Metropolitan has done. There is absolutely no demand in Boston for any further change in the symphony's plans. Even the small portion of the Boston press that wanted the symphony to play the anthem wants Dr. Muck retained.

Receptions Will Decide.

The cities that the orchestra visits next week, therefore, will decide. Dr. Muck would insist on his resignation being accepted if there should be a demand for the elimination of German music. He has said art is international and that has been the spirit with which he has selected programs.

As to Muck's international status, Major Higginson's position is that though the director is a German, he registered as provided and his presence in Boston was approved by the Department of Justice. He gives him credit for the success of the orchestra and undoubtedly if the public demands Muck's removal the major ultimately will disband the orchestra. It would carry out its contracts under an assistant director, but next year it would be no more.

Fourteen Nationalities in Orchestra.

The symphony embraces men of fourteen nationalities, equally divided among men born in the Central and Entente Powers. Belgians, Frenchmen and Italians are included. Most of them have become naturalized. The Boston Symphony is their career. They have families, and all were in a gloomy mood today. So was the major. He fears that the greatest monument of his lifetime of eighty-three years, the famous orchestra, will be no more.

Major Higginson made an appeal for the termination of criticism of Muck. "If the public wants to throw stones," he said, "let them throw them at me, not at the orchestra or the leader. He never refused to play our national anthem. Above all things, I want him exonerated of that false charge."

PUBLIC Ledger
...LPHIA, PA.
...17

132

WHY SHOULD WE DEFER IN MUSIC TO GERMANY?

Reader Thinks We Have Reached a Point Where We May Stand Alone

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—The discussion caused by Doctor Muck's attitude toward our national anthem leads me to voice some ideas I have held for some time and also by astonishment at the peculiar tolerance or indifference of the financial backers of our own orchestra. That the American anthem should be excluded from a program because it has no musical value is beside the question and a befogging of the point at issue. It is not for what a national air is, but for what it stands that it exists at all.

The Boston Orchestra includes so many German players that at the present time, when we are at war with Germany, it should freely make any concession—especially one so natural and so slight to the public, from whom it expects support and appreciation. Our own orchestra is not without blame.

That an orchestra supported by Philadelphia money would present a soloist advertised openly as a German pianist, not to mention the fact that he was not even of the first class, was an impudent piece of nerve.

The managers or Mr. Stokowski must have relied greatly on either the ignorance or indifference of their backers. There are a few players who have never studied outside of this country who could have taken Carl Frieberg's place with greater talent.

Our eyes are being opened about many heretofore uninterested facts, and it will behoove us, seeing we Americans are supporting these organizations with our patronage and purse, to take an inventory of our own value musically. We have always been trained to regard ourselves in the realm of music as absolutely frivolous and outside the pale of comparison with Germany. Well, up to the present time we have frankly accepted our tail-end position and badge of ignorance, and like happy but ambitious children we have flocked to everything musical at home and abroad. We have sat at the feet of any old shrine to study music in Europe. We have studied, learned and brought back prodigiously, and we do not realize what we have gained.

Americans, in their lack of assurance in self-appreciation, their abundant generosity, have a most profound deference for everything German in music. Like everythings else German, it has been a matter of education. The idea has been so grounded in us—the superiority of Germany—we simply hand it to them without question. We take their slurring criticisms, their conviction that we are to be educated "up" to their standard, and never realize that perhaps we have reached a point where we can stand alone and question the attitude of Germany. Not in the past, but in this present day, are they so superior? Are they then so fitted to "teach" us? For the past, the influence of the older and oldest German composers, there is nothing but love and gratitude. Their methods, their personality, yes, all due reverence and thanks can be given to them. No one questions their right to a first place. We are fair, and neither would nor could take away one jot. But the present—take "Elektra"—or Wagner when he gets wild with his brasses—veritable cataclysm of hell let loose is "Elektra," a forecast of the racket at Verdun. There are many splendid leaders who are not of Germany. Of singers, the names come fast to my mind; the greatest are not from the fatherland. Jenny Lind, Christine Nilsson, Patti, Melba, Sembrich, Tetrazzini, Scalchi, Cary, Kellogg, Lucca, Emily Winant, Calve, Farrar, Homer, Nordica, Eames, Galli-Curci, Galvany, Caruso, the de Reszkes—none Germans.

As Mr. Stokowski tells us that the fatherland takes care of its musicians and artists during the war, that is where they all should be who do not wish to play or sing our anthem.

H. L. S.

Moylan, Pa., November 2, 1917.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
...1 - 1917

JUST MUCK

THE WEEK

133 GLOBE, NOV. 17.

DR MUCK WELCOMED AT THE SYMPHONY

National Anthem Precede Formal Program

Debussy, MacDowell and Dvora Numbers Are Played

The agitation attending the departur of the Symphony Orchestra last wee on its first of the usual Southern trip fortunately had no apparent continu ance or sequel at the concert yesterda afternoon. When Dr Muck appeared h was warmly greeted. The orchestra rose—except the cellos, who must sit t play—and the National anthem was per formed. There was no announcemen or comment as to why it was to precede the program rather than follow it, a before. Wild applause followed as the audience sat down and the concert proceeded. There was no intimation of any kind at Symphony Hall that there would be any other developments than that concerts would be given by the orchestra as usual and that Dr Muck would conduct them.

Debussy's cosmic music of the sea is grateful at a time of universal human unrest. It is more inspiring to see nature in moods of sardonic mockery than men, and here the great deep, like a sated courtesan, laughs in derision over her victims; hints at her mysteries, at the secrets that lurk beneath her bosom, lures on the trusting mariner by balmy smiles, caressing winds and the caprice of the waves. A score less scintillating, even riotous with color, than the "Iberia," as Dr Muck has made it known, it reminds at times of the great simplicity with which Cesar Franck contemplated and communed with the infinite.

MacDowell's "Indian" suite, noble music which repeoples the primeval forest with a picturesque race whether in carnival, love, war or lamentation, was nobly played. There was distinction in Dr Muck's differentiation of moods and the euphony of the orchestra was a joy which is now an oft-told tale.

Dvorak thought much upon the pathos surrounding the innocent Desdemona, gentle and good, in his "Othello." There is less suggestion of the true nobility of soul, the poetic mind of the Moor, his a nature of trust, incredulous and just, until Iago's crafty needle injected the poison into his soul.

TRAVELER
NOV. 17, 1917-

MacDowell Suite Played by Symphony

Dr. Muck's fine reading of the beautiful MacDowell "Indian Suite" was the feature of yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its refreshing music, clearly written, without thought of tone puzzles or unusual effects. It was well placed between Debussy's "The Sea," the opening number, and Dvorak's "Othello" overture. Would that either had the desire to write from the heart as did MacDowell. Enthusiastic applause followed the close of the MacDowell selection.

Debussy evidently saw more in his vision of the ocean than is visible to the casual observer. It is not Debussy at his best but it is Debussy nevertheless and, as always, interesting.

Dvorak has been heard to better advantage than in this overture. He is not convincing, failing to catch the spirit of his subject.

It is to be noted that "The Star Spangled Banner" was played at the opening of the concert.

Next week's program is yet to be given out. Mabel Garrison, soprano, will be the soloist, singing Mozart's "Il re Pastore" and Strauss's "Ariande in Naxos."

Record
Nov. 17, 1917.

Maj. Higginson spoke at a musical event the other afternoon. It was not a very happy occasion. You may remember that it was concerning Dr. Muck's offering his resignation as the conductor of the Symphony. Maj. Higginson will speak at another musical affair next week. This affair will be the recital which Percy Grainger will give Monday evening to benefit the Red Cross. The major will introduce Grainger, the pianist, who recently enlisted as a private in the United States Army.

POST. NOV. 17.

DEBUSSY'S PIECES BY SYMPHONY

Beauty of "The Sea" Creates a Deep Impression

BY OLIN DOWNES

Debussy's three orchestral pieces, known under the collective title of "The Sea," MacDowell's "Indian Suite" and Dvorak's overture "Othello," made the programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall—these pieces, and the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck conducted at the beginning of the concert instead of the end, and without turning to acknowledge the applause which followed this performance.

DEBUSSY IN EXTREME

If we had to estimate the probable artistic value of "The Sea" we would feel faced with the most impossible of tasks. Happily a reviewer of music is called upon to do no such thing, but only to record his individual impressions of a piece of music for what they are worth. "The Sea" is for us the extreme of Debussy's impressionism, and one of the most enchanting experiences for the ear that modern music affords.

The orchestral coloring is fascinating and incomparable in its glow and its flash and its whimsy. The ear drinks in this concourse of colors and sounds and is greedy for more. Then there are the sudden, mysterious lulls of tone, the ebb and flux of the orchestra, the marvellous free interplay of tones and lines. The impression is in a way so sensual that the glint of the tube of a trumpet in the orchestra is inseparable from the sound itself and from the vision of a golden glint of sun on the waves.

Makes Hearer Believe

All these impressions come to a hearer simultaneously. Here is music, not related to anything but itself, music which cannot be said to have a story or a programme, and which yet is so suggestive and natural, as it now appears, that it seems to come nearer a union of music with all other sensorial arts than almost any other composition that we know. The scoring is nothing short of marvellous. The pulsatile instruments are used, as they are used in certain pages of "Pelleas et Melisande," for the sake of tone-color and not for rhythm and accent. What is more golden, and what enmesses the whole orchestra in a more wonderful glow of golden tone, than Debussy's cymbal, vibrated with a drumstick? And there are pages of tumultuous power, when the orchestra surges about the hymning brass choir as great waves might surge on a sunny, windy afternoon about a rock.

The roar and the spume of the sea is there, and also the wind that whistles to the fancy as the Pied Piper of Hamelin whistled to those whom he led far off and astray. This man, Debussy—what can he not do, and make us believe? This is either the freest, the finest, the most masterly music ever composed, or it is the most deceptive will o' the wisp of strange and beautiful sounds ever dreamed of by a man. And whatever it is, one way or the other, nobody cares. Enough to be hypnotized by this composition which has no ascertainable outlines or proportions, but has indeed the freedom, the bigness, the menace also, of the vasty deep.

We personally feel that there are too many strings in the composition of the standard symphony orchestra, such as the Boston Symphony, for the finest things in "The Sea" to be heard clearly. Played by the Boston Symphony in Cambridge, slightly reduced, so that the wind instruments show more clearly than they do in Symphony Hall, "The Sea" is still greater, still more enchanting, still more a thing of mystery, terror and beauty.

MacDowell's "Indian Suite" is commencing to age now. But its spirit remains and permeated the atmosphere yesterday. What a poetic spirit that was, Americans have still to thoroughly realize. The Love Song now verges a little on the sentimental; the war dance is a rather joyous affair. It is certainly no Hymn of Hate such as the Indian, whatever his barbaric pleasure in conflict might be, would chant as he leaped to his arms. But the Legends and the Dirge are superb music, with the silences of pine forests and blazing sunsets in it. The music has the savor of northern nature, of nature that broods while men struggle and wend their way.

- Nov. 17, 1917 -
BOSTON AMERICAN

DEBUSSY WELL PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

By FRED J. McISAAC.

After a most momentous and tumultuous tour in the history of the Boston Symphony, the orchestra returned yesterday afternoon and gave a brilliant concert. The program included Debussy's Symphonic Sketches, "The Sea," MacDowell's orchestral suite in E minor, known as the "Indian" suite, and Dvorak's Overture, "Othello."

For once there wasn't a scrap of German music on the program. To be sure, Dvorak was an Austrian subject, but by race he was a Slav.

Debussy comes and goes on symphony programs nowadays without creating any more disturbance than Brahms or Cesar Franck. The striking originality of his musical ideas, his independance of traditions and of form, have come to be recognized, and those who once were bewildered and annoyed by his music now may hear it with a greater or less degree of pleasure, but they tolerate it. "The Sea" is impressionistic, atmospheric, highly imaginative. If you can conjure up a picture of it as seen from the deck of a vessel, this music serves exquisitely as an accompaniment to the picture.

I should rather like to hear it from an orchestra pit while upon a screen a motion picture of the ocean held the eye.

The three movements were played with the delicacy, elegance and grandeur that the music deserves.

A too infrequent visitor to these concerts was the Indian suite of MacDowell, the one American composer whose work is the equal of any modern European for originality, inspiration and orchestral development. The Indian songs which serve as themes for the five movements of the suite were but inspiration to the composer, and were doubtless greatly idealized by him, but give an exotic air to the composition which distinguishes it greatly.

The Dvorak overture, "Othello," is one of the least beautiful of the works of the Bohemian genius. It is long drawn out, full of needless repetitions and the soprano and bass dialogue of Desdemona and Othello borders upon the grotesque.

"The Star Sangled Banner" was used to begin the concert. If we are to criticize the performance of this piece we might say that it was played rather listlessly.

AMERICAN
NOV. 10, 1917 -

MUCK'S PICTURE IS TORN FROM WALL

Chicago, Nov. 10.—An empty frame today graces the spot on the wall in Orchestra Hall where once might have been seen the photograph of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Muck's picture was found in shreds on the floor after several members of John Phillip Sousa's Great Lakes Naval Training Station band had visited Orchestra Hall.

AMERICAN
NOV. 11, 1917-

The sale of subscription tickets for the three choral concerts to be given by the Symphony Orchestra and the newly organized Symphony chorus has been in progress at Symphony Hall for several days with gratifying results. There is intense interest in these concerts for they promise to open a new era of choral music in this city.

TRANSCRIPT.
NOV. 10, 1917

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, in Symphony Hall, the first of the series of three concerts in which a chorus of large dimensions and assiduous training will join forces with the Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Muck. At it, for the first time in America, he will conduct a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, unheard in Boston for six years. Miss Hempel of the Metropolitan Opera House; Miss Keyes, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Middleton form the solo quartet.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

The Symphony Orchestra as Usual—Mme Guilbert in New Pieces—Mr Elman Anew—The Apollo Club in Public—Mr. Fox's and Mr. Ferir's Novel Pieces

IN the confusions and perturbations of the present week, no programmes have yet come to Symphony Hall from Dr. Muck in New York for the fifth pair of Symphony Concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next or for the concert of the orchestra in Cambridge next Thursday evening. All three, however, will befall as usual.

MONITOR
NOV. 10, 1917-

MUSIC

The usual concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are announced to be given in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of next week, with Karl Muck conducting; and the Symphony concert in Cambridge is announced to take place in Sanders Theater, according to schedule, on Thursday evening. The performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony, with chorus and soloists assisting, is announced to be given in Symphony Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Nov. 20, according to the original preparations. Rehearsals of the chorus that takes part in the ninth symphony have been going on under the direction of Stephen Townsend. A rehearsal with chorus and orchestra under Dr. Muck is called for the evening of Nov. 14 in Symphony Hall. A full rehearsal, with soloists taking part, is called for the evening of Nov. 19. The soloists engaged are Mmes. Hempel and Keyes and Messrs. Hackett and Middleton.

TRAVELER
- Nov. 10, 1917 -

FIFTH SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The usual Symphony concerts will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Dr. Muck has not yet forwarded from New York the program which he will play then. Next Thursday evening the usual Symphony concert will be given in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University. The program will be announced as soon as received.

133 GLOBE, NOV. 17.

DR MUCK WELCOMED AT THE SYMPHONY

National Anthem Precedes Formal Program

Globe Nov 17

Debussy, MacDowell and Dvorak Numbers Are Played

The agitation attending the departur of the Symphony Orchestra last wee on its first of the usual Southern trip fortunately had no apparent continu ance or sequel at the concert yesterda afternoon. When Dr Muck appeared h was warmly greeted. The orchestra rose—except the cellos, who must sit t play—and the National anthem was per formed. There was no announcemen or comment as to why it was to precede the program rather than follow it, as before. Wild applause followed as the audience sat down and the concert proceeded. There was no intimation of any kind at Symphony Hall that there would be any other developments than that concerts would be given by the orchestra as usual and that Dr Muck would conduct them.

Debussy's cosmic music of the sea is grateful at a time of universal human unrest. It is more inspiring to see nature in moods of sardonic mockery than men, and here the great deep, like a sated courtesan, laughs in derision over her victims; hints at her mysteries, at the secrets that lurk beneath her bosom, lures on the trusting mariner by balmy smiles, caressing winds and the caprice of the waves. A score less scintillating, even riotous with color, than the "Iberia," as Dr Muck has made it known, it reminds at times of the great simplicity with which Cesar Franck contemplated and communed with the infinite.

MacDowell's "Indian" suite, noble music which repeoples the primeval forest with a picturesque race whether in carnival, love, war or lamentation, was nobly played. There was distinction in Dr Muck's differentiation of moods and the euphony of the orchestra was a joy which is now an oft-told tale.

Dvorak thought much upon the pathos surrounding the innocent Desdemona, gentle and good, in his "Othello." There is less suggestion of the true nobility of soul, the poetic mind of the Moor, his a nature of trust, incredulous and just, until Iago's crafty needle injected the poison into his soul.

TRAVELER NOV. 17, 1915

MacDowell Suite Played by Symphony

Dr. Muck's fine reading of the beautiful MacDowell "Indian Suite" was the feature of yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its refreshing music, clearly written, without thought of tone puzzles or unusual effects. It was well placed between Debussy's "The Sea," the opening number, and Dvorak's "Othello" overture. Would that either had the desire to write from the heart as did MacDowell. Enthusiastic applause followed the close of the MacDowell selection.

Debussy evidently saw more in his vision of the ocean than is visible to the casual observer. It is not Debussy at his best but it is Debussy nevertheless and, as always, interesting.

Dvorak has been heard to better advantage than in this overture. He is not convincing, failing to catch the spirit of his subject.

It is to be noted that "The Star Spangled Banner" was played at the opening of the concert.

Next week's program is yet to be given out. Mabel Garrison, soprano, will be the soloist, singing Mozart's "Il re Pastore" and Strauss's "Ariande in Naxos."

Record Nov. 17, 1917.

Maj. Higginson spoke at a musical event the other afternoon. It was not a very happy occasion. You may remember that it was concerning Dr. Muck's offering his resignation as the conductor of the Symphony. Maj. Higginson will speak at another musical affair next week. This affair will be the recital which Percy Grainger will give Monday evening to benefit the Red Cross. The major will introduce Grainger, the pianist, who recently enlisted as a private in the United States Army.

POST. NOV. 17.

DEBUSSY'S PIECES BY SYMPHONY

Beauty of "The Sea" Creates a Deep Impression

BY OLIN DOWNES

Debussy's three orchestral pieces, known under the collective title of "The Sea," MacDowell's "Indian Suite" and Dvorak's overture "Othello," made the programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall—these pieces, and the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck conducted at the beginning of the concert instead of the end, and without turning to acknowledge the applause which followed this performance.

DEBUSSY IN EXTREME

If we had to estimate the probable artistic value of "The Sea" we would feel faced with the most impossible of tasks. Happily a reviewer of music is called upon to do no such thing, but only to record his individual impressions of a piece of music for what they are worth. "The Sea" is for us the extreme of Debussy's impressionism, and one of the most enchanting experiences for the ear that modern music affords.

The orchestral coloring is fascinating and incomparable in its glow and its flash and its whimsy. The ear drinks in this concourse of colors and sounds and is greedy for more. Then there are the sudden, mysterious lulls of tone, the ebb and flux of the orchestra, the marvellous free interplay of tones and rhythms. The impression is in a way so sensual that the glint of the tube of a trumpet in the orchestra is inseparable from the sound itself and from the vision of a golden glint of sun on the waves.

Makes Hearer Believe

All these impressions come to a hearer simultaneously. Here is music, not related to anything but itself, music which cannot be said to have a story or a programme, and which yet is so suggestive and natural, as it now appears, that it seems to come nearer a union of music with all other sensorial arts than almost any other composition that we know. The scoring is nothing short of marvellous. The pulsatile instruments are used, as they are used in certain pages of "Pelleas et Melisande," for the sake of tone-color and not for rhythm and accent. What is more golden, and what enmesses the whole orchestra in a more wonderful glow of golden tone, than Debussy's cymbal, vibrated with a drumstick? And there are pages of tumultuous power, when the orchestra surges about the hymning brass choir as great waves might surge on a sunny, windy afternoon about a rock.

The roar and the spume of the sea is there, and also the wind that whistles to the fancy as the Pied Piper of Hamelin whistled to those whom he led far off and astray. This man, Debussy—what can he not do, and make us believe? This is either the freest, the finest, the most masterly music ever composed, or it is the most deceptive will o' the wisp of strange and beautiful sounds ever dreamed of by a man. And whatever it is, one way or the other, nobody cares. Enough to be hypnotized by this composition which has no ascertainable outlines or proportions, but has indeed the freedom, the bigness, the menace also, of the vasty deep.

We personally feel that there are too many strings in the composition of the standard symphony orchestra, such as the Boston Symphony, for the finest things in "The Sea" to be heard clearly. Played by the Boston Symphony in Cambridge, slightly reduced, so that the wind instruments show more clearly than they do in Symphony Hall, "The Sea" is still greater, still more enchanting, still more a thing of mystery, terror and beauty.

MacDowell's "Indian Suite" is commencing to age now. But its spirit remains and permeated the atmosphere yesterday. What a poetic spirit that was, Americans have still to thoroughly realize. The Love Song now verges a little on the sentimental; the war dance is a rather joyous affair. It is certainly no Hymn of Hate such as the Indian, whatever his barbaric pleasure in conflict might be, would chant as he leaped to his arms. But the Legende and the Dirge are superb music, with the silences of pine forests and blazing sunsets in it. The music has the savor of northern nature, of nature that broods while men struggle and wend their way.

- Nov. 17, 1917 - BOSTON AMERICAN

DEBUSSY WELL PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

By FRED J. McISAAC.

After a most momentous and tumultuous tour in the history of the Boston Symphony, the orchestra returned yesterday afternoon and gave a brilliant concert. The program included Debussy's Symphonic Sketches, "The Sea," MacDowell's orchestral suite in E minor, known as the "Indian" suite, and Dvorak's Overture, "Othello."

For once there wasn't a scrap of German music on the program. To be sure, Dvorak was an Austrian subject, but by race he was a Slav.

Debussy comes and goes on symphony programs nowadays without creating any more disturbance than Brahms or Cesar Franck. The striking originality of his musical ideas, his independance of traditions and of form, have come to be recognized, and those who once were bewildered and annoyed by his music now may hear it with a greater or less degree of pleasure, but they tolerate it. "The Sea" is impressionistic, atmospheric, highly imaginative. If you can conjure up a picture of it as seen from the deck of a vessel, this music serves exquisitely as an accompaniment to the picture.

I should rather like to hear it from an orchestra pit while upon a screen a motion picture of the ocean held the eye.

The three movements were played with the delicacy, elegance and grandeur that the music deserves.

A too infrequent visitor to these concerts was the Indian suite of MacDowell, the one American composer whose work is the equal of any modern European for originality, inspiration and orchestral development. The Indian songs which serve as themes for the five movements of the suite were but inspiration to the composer, and were doubtless greatly idealized by him, but give an exotic air to the composition which distinguishes it greatly.

The Dvorak overture, "Othello," is one of the least beautiful of the works of the Bohemian genius. It is long drawn out, full of needless repetitions and the soprano and bass dialogue of Desdemona and Othello borders upon the grotesque.

"The Star Sangled Banner" was used to begin the concert. If we are to criticize the performance of this piece we might say that it was played rather listlessly.

AMERICAN NOV. 10, 1917 -

MUCK'S PICTURE IS TORN FROM WALL

Chicago, Nov. 10.—An empty frame today graces the spot on the wall in Orchestra Hall where once might have been seen the photograph of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Muck's picture was found in shreds on the door after several members of John Phillip Sousa's Great Lakes Naval Training Station band had visited Orchestra Hall.

AMERICAN NOV. 11, 1917 -

The sale of subscription tickets for the three choral concerts to be given by the Symphony Orchestra and the newly organized Symphony chorus has been in progress at Symphony Hall for several days with gratifying results. There is intense interest in these concerts for they promise to open a new era of choral music in this city.

TRANSCRIPT. NOV. 10, 1917

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, in Symphony Hall, the first of the series of three concerts in which a chorus of large dimensions and assiduous training will join forces with the Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Muck. At it, for the first time in America, he will conduct a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, unheard in Boston for six years. Miss Hempel of the Metropolitan Opera House; Miss Keyes, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Middleton form the solo quartet.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

The Symphony Orchestra as Usual—Mme Guilbert in New Pieces—Mr Elman Anew—The Apollo Club in Public—Mr. Fox's and Mr. Ferir's Novel Pieces

In the confusions and perturbations of the present week, no programmes have yet come to Symphony Hall from Dr. Muck in New York for the fifth pair of Symphony Concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next or for the concert of the orchestra in Cambridge next Thursday evening. All three, however, will befall as usual.

MONITOR NOV. 10, 1917

MUSIC

The usual concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are announced to be given in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of next week, with Karl Muck conducting; and the Symphony concert in Cambridge is announced to take place in Sanders Theater, according to schedule, on Thursday evening. The performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony, with chorus and soloists assisting, is announced to be given in Symphony Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Nov. 20, according to the original preparations. Rehearsals of the chorus that takes part in the ninth symphony have been going on under the direction of Stephen Townsend. A rehearsal with chorus and orchestra under Dr. Muck is called for the evening of Nov. 14 in Symphony Hall. A full rehearsal, with soloists taking part, is called for the evening of Nov. 19. The soloists engaged are Mmes. Hempel and Keyes and Messrs. Hackett and Middleton.

TRAVELER - NOV. 10, 1917 -

FIFTH SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The usual Symphony concerts will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Dr. Muck has not yet forwarded from New York the program which he will play then. Next Thursday evening the usual Symphony concert will be given in Sanders Theatre, Harvard University. The program will be announced as soon as received.

Record, Nov. 17, 1917.

Record Nov. 17

Beethoven's Great Ninth Symphony — Kreisler

By J. V. Clark

The coming week will be by all odds the most interesting musically that Boston has had this season. There will be on Tuesday evening, at Symphony Hall, the first performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, popularly called the choral, which Boston has had since Nov. 20.

The week will open Sunday afternoon with a Kreisler recital at Symphony Hall. For a time there was great prejudice against Mr. Kreisler in certain parts of the country. This sprung up following the Dr. Muck trouble, when it was learned that Kreisler once served in the Austrian army. Since this flurry many supposedly anti-Kreisler places have expressed their willingness and even more to hear the master violinst.

His charity work for the Red Cross in this country, the statement that he has been sending money back to Austria only to help his aged father and certain international societies, which care for needy musicians, have put a different complexion on his case. Unless al signs fail, Boston will pay honor tomorrow to a great artist.

Monday evening Percy Grainger, the composer pianist, who has enlisted in the army and now wears the olive drab, will play at Jordan Hall. He is on a leave, playing for the Red Cross, and his concert will benefit that best of charities. Already there are indications that his audience will not only be the most fashionable of the year, but that it will tax every inch of the capacity of the hall.

But to return to the Beethoven symphony. Since Sept. 10 the chorus has been having weekly rehearsals, first separately in choirs and then combined, all of them under the direction and training of Mr. Stephen Townsend.

Since his return in 1912, Dr. Muck has been very keen to do this Ninth Symphony and other choral works, but the lack of a proper chorus for this purpose—one which could give the necessary time for rehearsals—had always prevented it, for with his customary thoroughness he would not undertake such work, especially Beethoven's last Symphony, without a competent chorus that was letter-perfect in the difficult music. He has heard the chorus several times and is greatly pleased with it, and Wednesday evening he held the first rehearsal under his own direction of chorus and orchestra. The second and final rehearsal, with all the soloists, will be held in Symphony Hall, Monday evening.

The chorus will number very close to 400 and this has compelled the building in Symphony Hall of a new stage which is the largest that has ever been used there. The addition in front takes out the first seven rows of seats. The orchestra will be on a "rise" as usual and surrounding them will be the chorus placed in tiers.

The orchestra itself has been at work on the Symphony for several weeks and nothing has been left undone by Dr. Muck, Mr. Townsend and the management to make the concert one of the most notable events of the musical history of Boston.

The management on its part has engaged soloists of extraordinary quality. The music that Beethoven has written as a setting for Schiller's "Ode to Joy," is very exacting and demands, if it is to be well done, singers of unusual skill. The soprano will be Mme. Frieda Hempel, of the Metropolitan Opera Company. The contralto will be Margaret Keyes, a mosts excellent concert singer who has already appeared as one of the quartet in the performance of the Ninth Symphony under Mr. Fiedler.

The tenor will be Arthur Hackett. Arthur Hackett is in a sense a discovery of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and since he made his appearances at the Operatic Pops a year ago last September, his progress has been very rapid, until today he is one of the most sought after tenors on the American concert stage. The bass will be Arthur Middleton, who appeared at a Sunday concert in Symphony Hall a fortnight ago.

Operatic Star to Sing Tuesday in Beethoven Work

FRIEDA HEMPEL.

Soprano from the Metropolitan Opera who sings in Beetnoven Choral Symphony Tuesday.

TRANSCRIPT
Nov. 17, 1917.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Transcript Nov. 17

A Notable Performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony by Dr. Muck's New Choir—The Programme for the Orchestra—Mr. Kreisler Returns—Mr. Grainger and Mr. Copeland for Pianists—"The Flonzaleys" Afresh—Singers' Recitals

FOR once a concert outside the regular course of the Symphony Concerts overshadows them, though the Symphony Orchestra will itself share in them and Dr. Muck will be the conductor. The occasion, befalling on Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall is the performance by band and leader of Beethoven's ninth symphony with the assistance of the new chorus, three hundred and fifty strong, assembled and trained for it and for two other choral concerts in the course of the season. For more than seven years the Choral Symphony has been unheard in Boston. Time and again Dr. Muck has been urged to undertake it; but he has declined to do so until he could have at his disposal a chorus sufficient in numbers and sufficiently trained for the task before it. Nor would he put upon a programme the three purely instrumental numbers of the symphony without the choral finale that is climax to it. The way opened before him when Mr. Stephen Townsend undertook the assembling and the preliminary training of such a choir. In answer to his canvass and under pledge to attend rehearsals, it was gathered from the best available singers; for two months past, it has diligently prepared itself in the music at first under Mr. Townsend, latterly under Dr. Muck. It is now on edge for the performance, and in such full ranks that seven rows of seats in Symphony Hall have been removed to make place for it. For three weeks past the conductor has been preparing the orchestra in the symphony, and next Monday the solo singers will join it and the chorus for final rehearsal. They have been chosen with an eye single to their fitness for an exacting music—Miss Hempel of the Metropolitan Opera House; Miss Keyes, experienced in the alto part; Mr. Hackett, accus omed to a quasi-instrumental music for the voice, and Mr. Middleton, the orotund bass. With these forces and with Dr. Muck leading at the top of his ambition, it is safe to predict a performance such as the Ninth Symphony has not received in years in Boston.

Dr. Muck Delays

For another week no particulars come from the conductor or the management of the Symphony Orchestra about the programmes for forthcoming Symphony Concerts, a matter in which neither is usually remiss. The regular concerts will, however, take place on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next and at them Miss Garrison, the pleasurable young soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House, will be heard as assisting singer. Her numbers are an air from Mozart and the extraordinary show-piece crowded with the ornaments, the difficulties, the subtleties and even the obstacles of song as the eighteenth-century knew them which Strauss put together for one of the singing-players in "Ariadne in Naxos." Zerbinetta sings it—the Columbine of the Italian mummers that stroll into Molière's comedy of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" at Strauss's curious bidding.

MONITOR
NOV. 17, 1917.

134

ORCHESTRA HEARD IN "INDIAN" SUITE

Dr. Muck Presents Music of MacDowell—Symphony Program of Descriptive Pieces

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, Conductor—Fifth program, presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon of Nov. 16, 1917; Debussy, "The Sea," three symphonic sketches; MacDowell, suite in E minor, No. 2, "Indian," op. 48; Dvorák, overture, "Othello," op. 93.

The concert opened with a performance of the tune, "The Star-Spangled Banner," which, in spite of incomplete official sanction, is universally accepted as the national air of the United States. The last Boston matinee of the orchestra, given two weeks ago, closed with a performance of this tune, the playing of it at that time being a response to what amounted to a demand from the entire country. In the intervening fortnight, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from being an honored civic institution, has become something like a public scapegoat. Thousands of persons have denounced the organization for failing to comply with the request made by women of patriotic and social clubs in Rhode Island, that the national tune be played at the Providence (R. I.) concert of Oct. 30. They have particularly attacked the orchestra's German conductor, while politely excusing its Bostonesque proprietor and sustainer, who claimed all the blame and clearly proved it on himself. Of all those who have discussed the matter, none, so far as their views have been recorded in print, seem to have considered sympathetically one little prejudice that could well have been the cause of the whole outbreak. For it must be remembered that there are loyal citizens of the United States, not resident in Maryland, who have favored another tune than "The Star-Spangled Banner" for the national air. There are those in the North, of ardent antislavery traditions, who would like to have seen Julia Ward Howe given the honor which, in a moment when nobody was looking, was bestowed on Francis Scott Key. If the women of Rhode Island had but asked for "The Battle Hymn of the Republic"—it might all have been so different! The recrudescence of the quarrel of Roger Williams and John Cotton might not have taken place; the clash between the community with a will to govern its own æsthetic (aforetime ecclesiastical) affairs, and the community with a mind to give æsthetic (aforetime ecclesiastical) discipline to the whole seacoast, might not have occurred.

The program book had no mention of the national tune on the page where the selections to be played are listed, as though its associations of nearly 40 years had been intruded upon enough already by a nonsubscribing world, and as though its pink-bound dignity could not brook a legend which is printed on a myriad trivial showbills every day for mere patriotic effect. The book had in its schedule, however, an American composition, the "Indian" suite of MacDowell, which proved able to uphold the pride of the land at the present moment, when national artistic values are being earnestly weighed and compared. MacDowell, the orchestral writer, can get along a considerable while yet without an apologist. His work can keep a good countenance in the company of a French piece in modern descriptive style, like Debussy's "The Sea"; and it can stand on an equality, or something better, with a piece like Dvorák's "Othello" overture, which, like it, is of the nineties, when descriptive music was much spoken of as tone painting. Actually in the time of MacDowell and Dvorák, symphonic composers had not gone beyond the draftsman's methods of making pictures. Their technique was linear. But they achieved the purposes they sought. When they used folk-song themes, American Indian themes, for example, whether real or imaginary, whether copied down from the oral witness of a genuine tribesman of the prairies or invented in solitary retreat among the New Hampshire hills, they got an informality and a familiar sentiment into their canvases which impressionists, with their free color methods, are rather inclined to miss.

135 NOV. 17, 1917

EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

Concerts --- Films

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

FAMILIAR MUSIC FOR FAMILIAR PLEASURE

Tranquillity in All Respects Again—The Remarkable Mettle Under Stress of Conductor and Orchestra — Debussy's Sea Sketches and MacDowell's "Indian Suite" to New Satisfactions — Also a Moribund Overture of Dvorak

EVEN a frequenter of the Symphony Concerts, dropped after long and isolated absence into that of yesterday afternoon, might hardly have inferred that conductor and orchestra, "founder and sustainer," management and, in measure, audience too, had lately traversed, indeed may be still traversing, as grave a crisis as the affairs of the band have ever known. The stranger, familiar with aspect and procedure, yet newly returned to them, might readily have taken the knitting between the numbers as a token of the time and added to it the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the standing orchestra at the beginning of the concert. Already it plays the hymn as a part of the routine of the day and soon the audience, though it applauded heartily on Friday and even watched each his neighbor, a little curiously during the progress of the anthem, will be like-minded with the band. To the stranger, in fact, it might have been possible to repeat as a new and witty mot, the saying set afoot in New York last week, that in the arrangement of the tune used by the orchestra the strings weave a "contrapuntal camouflage" about the melody as sung by the brass choir. Yet he could hardly have known that Dr. Muck now seems to slow his pace a little as though to make more sonorous and stately the gathering course of the music.

During the progress of these rites, the returning wanderer might have noted the usual audience in usual place in parquet and balconies and the orchestra upon the stage in the usual exercise of such of its distinctive powers and virtues as the music of the day exacted. From the string choirs came the wonted precision, fineness, roundness and lustre of tone. The wood winds had lost not a whit of mobility and surety of lips and fingers or of the resulting pliancy, euphony and expressiveness of characteristic voice. The bass was familiarly mellow; the "pulsatile instruments," as the handbooks call drums and the like, familiarly alert. Rarely has the orchestra, individual for individual, group for group, played with such finesse and felicity of tone as it did through the ceaseless instrumental inflections of Debussy's "symphonic sketches" of the sea. Seldom has it surpassed the sensuous beauty or the eloquent significance of voice that it maintained through the slow movements of MacDowell's Indian Suite or been more vibrant of rhythm than it was through the pages of war-dance or village festival. From even the relatively barren pages of Dvorak's overture to "Othello," it reaped an occasional dramatizing stroke that it and the conductor had sown into it from themselves.

For, like his men, the much harried, the much enduring Dr. Muck—to say nothing of natural and busy preoccupations with the impending performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony—stood in full exercise of familiar faculties. The studious stranger could have detected no relaxation of his usual serene and exact command of his forces, his music and himself; no detachment, of mind, heart or will from the work in hand; no change in any familiar faculty except one, curiously haunting both sketches and suite. For some reason Dr. Muck seemed to crave and enforce slow pace with the music. It is his custom to take Debussy's pieces somewhat more measuredly than do Latin conductors; but yesterday he seemed to subdue even his own tempo with these sea-pictures; while to the clear advantage of MacDowell the swifter passages of his Indian music might have run yet more swiftly. Yet even within this chance shortcoming of the day, the wonder was, as at the concert in Cambridge on the preceding evening that conductor and orchestra ran so true to untroubled and zestful form.

The more excuse, then, for briefly grumbling intermezzo. Circumstances may have compelled Dr. Muck to forego, beyond the usual hour, the assembling and the announcing of his programmes for the concerts of yesterday and today and for the concerts of next week. Yet it is clear disappointment and in these nervous days—a little twinge of anxiety to his hearers not to find them in usual place in programme-book and newspapers. Minor plans, even, may have to be made or unmade to suit them—yet for a fortnight there has been no discovering them within the wonted week's notice. Again, have the pieces on the last two programmes been as well mated or contrasted as they might have been? Somehow on the list of a fortnight ago Sibelius's symphony of the dissonances, a fifty-year-old concerto for piano by Saint-Saëns, and Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture had the semblance of pieces fallen by chance side by side rather than set in considered choice and arrangement.

Perhaps Debussy's tone-pictures of the sea and the winds and the lights upon the waters, perhaps MacDowell's Indian Suite—in Dr. Muck's judgment the ablest and most eloquent piece of music that American composer has yet written—are near enough to classics to warrant the biennial repetition that from 1913 into 1917, he seems disposed to give them. Yet even so, are they pieces advisedly to set side by side except in an extreme of contrast? And why, why need Dvorak's indisputably dull and laboring overture to "Othello" be appended to them? Not yet do playable overtures [illegible]

Being thus familiar and thus played, each of the numbers of yesterday did but renew anticipated impression. With Debussy's symphonic sketches and MacDowell's suite the impression was of keen pleasure heightened, deepened, in the whole illusion of the music or in the play of freshly discovered detail upon it. But for Dvorák's overture to "Othello" is there in these days any excuse outside a Shakspearean concert, except as a convenient "filler." The dramatic content and conduct of the music seem altogether too simple-minded, even though the poignant pages of Verdi in that scene of vengeance upon Desdemona and Othello's self be waved, if it is possible, out of memory. The instrumental and harmonic color has irreparably faded. Even at the hands of Dr. Muck and the orchestra the dramatic strokes "come off" tamely. Not short-breathed but long-winded, the overture labors to sudden and welcome end. Dvorák's other familiar overtures, "Husitzka" and "Carnival" still feign a plausible semblance of vitality, whereas the overture to "Othello" was born puny.

The sharper the contrast, accordingly, with a piece that keeps musical life and so renews sensuous and imaginative interest as clearly as does the Indian Suite of MacDowell. No one, nowadays, much concerns himself, or need much concern himself, with the degree in which the germinating motives are born of Indian tonal idiom or are handled with occasional Indian suggestion. Enough that in the "love-song" they breed wistful and penetrating beauty out of themselves and open to the imagination a vista of musing and sun-lit solitude like the still open spaces in a piney wood. Enough again that "the dirge" rises into music of austere beauty and of wild and piercing mourning—the lament in the human heart irreparable, savage or civilized, that like the night-wind moaning in the tree-tops may not be stilled by mere human willing. In these two woven movements MacDowell wrote the music of the forests that he loved and that in response stirred him to imaginings and to the speech of tones. Under like prompting, perhaps, in the two swifter and the one more incisive movement, he has written music of the great open spaces, between earth and sky, far as the very rim of the horizon, that he also cherished. Out of them may have come the impulse to the voices that gravely, concentratedly sing his legend; there his war-dance, gathered, passed, stilled, re-gathered to iterated rhythms, and thence surely came the zest and spring of his music of ardent, primitive, racing fete. The Indian Suite, as the title bids, but the suite also of American forest and American plain such as Northwest and Southwest still hug and harbor for the many moods of man within the one, upon the other. No wonder, so stimulated, MacDowell wrote in this suite with a freedom of means and a sureness of end that no other of his orchestral music attains.

Not so Debussy in his tonal mirrorings of the sea as it stirs from blank waters under wan dawn into bright ripples in warming sunshine; as it laps and leaps, twists and turns, shivers and shatters when the breeze whips it to play as it foams up big-voiced against those same winds now troubling and goading; as it stirs the watching and absorbing composer to the melancholy and solitary melodies that his cherished oboe may sing. For, if ever there seemed an inlaid, a polished, a meticulously meditated and adjusted music, it is these sketches of the sea, especially under the finesse and the exactitude with which Dr. Muck and the orchestra achieve them. Not even the music of "Parsifal" seems more the exactly applied means to an exactly foreseen end and impression. Imagination there is in both sketches and music-drama but imagination tightly harnessed and adroitly led. Originally there surely was impulse until impulse halted for considerate thought. The outcome in the sketches of the sea is two-fold—first, a distinct sense upon the hearer of willed delineation of the waters, of willed response of mood saved from mechanical process by the fancy, the felicity, the fine suggestion of the means; and second, of momentary strokes of invention, imagination, illusion that thrill the ear as though impulse had for the instant snapped through calculation. More and more at each rehearing, the music of "The Sea" becomes, as do sometimes the waters suggesting it, restless expanse—bejewelled. H. T. P.

NEWS OF MUSIC

RUMOR BUSY WITH THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

No Visible Sign That Dr. Muck's Resignation Has Been Accepted—The Variegated Canvass of Possible Successors—The Apollo Club to a Friendly Public — Opera Afresh in New York — More Rulings on the War Tax — Mr. Damrosch's Concerts for Children — Items and Opinions

RUMOR runs about the town that Mr. Higginson has accepted the resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and rumor has already picked his successor—a much easier task for it than for those who have ever sought a leader for such a band or such concerts. Of evidence to bear out the rumor there is none except the war-time gossip that flies from ear to ear and the war-time credulity that eagerly receives it. Dr. Muck himself is proceeding quietly and busily with his usual and unusual work—more particularly with the preparations for the choral concert at Symphony Hall next week, at which he is to lead in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony for the first time in America. No man could for the moment act less than he does as one about to leave his usual employments. The management of the orchestra is equally unaware of any impending change; the entourage of Mr. Higginson discredits the rumor. In fact, the disposition among those officially concerned with the concerts is to rest content with the calm that has followed recent storms.

Rumor, moreover, is not well advised in the successors that it is picking for Dr. Muck and betrays its ignorance of their present engagements, their quality and of their leanings in the present war—the new test of a conductor's availability. One, Mr. Stokowski, upon whom it likes to dwell is tied by long contracts to the orchestra and the public he now serves in Philadelphia and by a guarantee fund raised especially in his behalf. Another Mr. Gabrilowitsch, of recent and signal rise to praise and promise as a conductor, has in the past, at any rate, made no secret of war sympathies, which are not those of the public that has been loud in outcry and is now busy with surmise. A third, "with a following"—Mr. Henry Hadley—is hardly likely on the strength of his work and experiences in Seattle and San Francisco, to be seriously considered as the conductor of an orchestra of the first rank. A fourth, Mr. Mengelberg, the celebrated conductor of the Amsterdam orchestra, happens to be Jewish, a little past the prime of life and a "specialist" in contemporary German music; while fifth and most curious choice of all is no other than Arthur Nikisch, Hungarian, it is true in blood, but long conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts in Leipzig and of the Philharmonic Concerts in Berlin and fast bound in Germany. So gossip goes a busy and Symphony Hall—and Dr. Muck in particular—a quiet way.

EVENING SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 7 -

Lack Of Decent Respect Shown By Americans When The National Anthem Is Played.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN:

Sir—At the present time when there is so much talk about the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at all public performances, it seems to me to be especially important that each one of us should show our respect for our national anthem and for the flag and country for which it stands. Who has not seen more than one American citizen putting on his coat or laughing and talking during the playing of the anthem? We should surely show our respect by standing erect in a respectful attitude of attention. How can we expect anything but adverse criticism from foreigners who constantly see such acts of carelessness and disrespect on our part? These thoughts were suggested by a remark made recently by a German as to the use of our anthem being played when a number of the audience either chewed gum or talked during its performance. H. V. D.

Baltimore, Nov. 5.

Quite True, We Have Been Careless—But It "Riles" Us To Have A "Loyal Prussian" Insultingly Refuse To Play The National Anthem At A Time Like This.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN:

Sir—Having read the controversy regarding Dr. Muck and Mr. Randolph's views, I beg to say that I would like to voice my sentiments in regard to this "tempest in a teapot."

First and last, I am also a thorough American, and a lover of music, but fail to grasp the enormity of the offense in refusing to play our national anthem at a symphony concert. We Americans are always extreme without consistency, Major Higginson and former Governor Warfield being fair examples. According to Mr. Warfield, "'The Star-Spangled Banner' should have the right of way over every other tune." Why not play it in church? Are we not taught God first and our country next? Certainly the national anthem should be played whenever and wherever consistent, but not absolutely necessary, nor showing lack of patriotism, if not played at a symphony concert.

Some years before the war, riding in a car down Baltimore street, I noticed a colored man washing up a store front with the remnants of what was once the Stars and Stripes, dozens of pedestrians passing at the time, but not one protested. Why not then, as now? I also

n STAR

ress: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 7 - 191

GOVERNMENT SHOULD ACT AGAINST MUCK

Warfield Says If It Does Not, People Will Assert Themselves.

SHOULD BE DISCHARGED

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, depends upon an alien enemy director for its existence, former Gov. Edwin Warfield said today, then the sooner it dies the better for the country, "and I will glory in its death," he added. He said the authorities at Washington should be stirred up or patriotic people will assert themselves.

When asked today what he thought of yesterday's protest meeting at the Lyric, Governor Warfield said:

"I am prouder than ever in being a Marylander. The meeting was the most enthusiastic gathering that I ever faced. I knew when the honor of our flag and the beauty of our national anthem—The Star-spangled Banner—was slurred and insulted that our people could be relied upon to indignantly resent such insult. This meeting has proved that I was right in estimating the patriotism of Maryland. I have faced many audiences in this city, but never one like that of yesterday afternoon, and I have never been so thrilled as I was when standing before that immense gathering of patriots. The action of that meeting will be historic and an inspiration to patriots for all time to come. It will be an encouraging and splendid message to our boys in the trenches 'over there,' and those in the camps throughout the United States who are qualifying for the trenches—the boys who are offering their lives for our flag.

"Unless the owner of this orchestra, Major Higginson, dismisses this alien director at once and thus prevents him from becoming the hero of the aliens in this country and the traitors who are in sympathy with him and the country to which he has sworn allegiance, which he vauntingly and brazenly asserts, he will be held up to the contempt of every patriotic citizen of the United States. If this splendid orchestra cannot live without an alien director, then it should die, and die quickly. It can live if it is patriotic. The music is not produced by this man, but by the men behind the instruments. If a leader has not been developed, then it don't deserve to live, and if it depends upon this alien director for its existence, then the sooner it dies the better for the country, and I will glory in its death. The art that we are interested in now is the art of war against the Huns and vandals that this man proudly proclaims himself as associated with. I cannot understand why the authorities at Washington do not act in this matter. They should be stirred up. Unless they are, patriotic people will assert themselves. This is no time for temporizing with aliens and traitors. Remember that our meeting has not been adjourned; it is simply taking a recess, and is ready to respond to any call that may be made upon it.

"The patriotic people of Baltimore are indebted to the press of this city for its support in this movement, and, personally, I wish to thank them for their earnest and enthusiastic support."

JOURNAL

ss: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 6-1917

COMING SYMPHONY CONCERT AT BALTIMORE FORBIDDEN

Police Commission Acts on Grand Jury's Recommendation.

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore to-day sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night, on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered. The action came as the recommendation of the grand jury, and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

135 NOV. 17, 1915 EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

Concerts --- Films

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

FAMILIAR MUSIC FOR FAMILIAR PLEASURE

Tranquillity in All Respects Again—The Remarkable Mettle Under Stress of Conductor and Orchestra — Debussy's Sea Sketches and MacDowell's "Indian Suite" to New Satisfactions — Also a Moribund Overture of Dvorak

EVEN a frequenter of the Symphony Concerts, dropped after long and isolated absence into that of yesterday afternoon, might hardly have inferred that conductor and orchestra, "founder and sustainer," management and, in measure audience too, had lately traversed, indeed may be still traversing, as grave a crisis as the affairs of the band have ever known. The stranger, familiar with aspect and procedure, yet newly returned to them, might readily have taken the knitting between the numbers as a token of the time and added to it the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the standing orchestra at the beginning of the concert. Already it plays the hymn as a part of the routine of the day and soon the audience, though it applauded heartily on Friday and even watched each his neighbor, a little curiously during the progress of the anthem, will be like-minded with the band. To the stranger, in fact, it might have been possible to repeat as a new and witty mot, the saying set afoot in New York last week, that in the arrangement of the tune used by the orchestra the strings weave a "contrapuntal camouflage" about the melody as sung by the brass choir. Yet he could hardly have known that Dr. Muck now seems to slow his pace a little as though to make more sonorous and stately the gathering course of the music.

During the progress of these rites, the returning wanderer might have noted the usual audience in usual place in parquet and balconies and the orchestra upon the stage in the usual exercise of such of its distinctive powers and virtues as the music of the day exacted. From the string choirs came the wonted precision, fineness, roundness and lustre of tone. The wood winds had lost not a whit of mobility and surety of lips and fingers or of the resulting pliancy, euphony and expressiveness of characteristic voice. The bass was familiarly mellow; the "pulsatile instruments," as the handbooks call drums and the like, familiarly alert. Rarely has the orchestra, individual for individual, group for group, played with such finesse and felicity of tone as it did through the ceaseless instrumental inflections of Debussy's "symphonic sketches" of the sea. Seldom has it surpassed the sensuous beauty or the eloquent significance of voice that it maintained through the slow movements of MacDowell's Indian Suite or been more vibrant of rhythm than it was through the pages of war-dance or village festival. From even the relatively barren pages of Dvorák's overture to "Othello," it reaped an occasional dramatizing stroke that it and the conductor had sown into it from themselves.

For, like his men, the much harried, the much enduring Dr. Muck—to say nothing of natural and busy preoccupations with the impending performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony—stood in full exercise of familiar faculties. The studious stranger could have detected no relaxation of his usual serene and exact command of his forces, his music and himself; no detachment, of mind, heart or will from the work in hand; no change in any familiar faculty except one, curiously haunting both sketches and suite. For some reason Dr. Muck seemed to crave and enforce slow pace with the music. It is his custom to take Debussy's pieces somewhat more measuredly than do Latin conductors; but yesterday he seemed to subdue even his own tempo with these sea-pictures; while to the clear advantage of MacDowell the swifter passages of his Indian music might have run yet more swiftly. Yet even within this chance shortcoming of the day, the wonder was, as at the concert in Cambridge on the preceding evening that conductor and orchestra ran so true to untroubled and zestful form.

The more excuse, then, for briefly grumbling intermezzo. Circumstances may have compelled Dr. Muck to forego, beyond the usual hour, the assembling and the announcing of his programmes for the concerts of yesterday and today and for the concerts of next week. Yet it is clear disappointment and in these nervous days—a little twinge of anxiety to his hearers not to find them in usual place in programme-book and newspapers. Minor plans, even, may have to be made or unmade to suit them—yet for a fortnight there has been no discovering them within the wonted week's notice. Again, have the pieces on the last two programmes been as well mated or contrasted as they might have been? Somehow on the list of a fortnight ago Sibelius's symphony of the dissonances, a fifty-year-old concerto for piano by Saint-Saëns, and Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture had the semblance of pieces fallen by chance side by side rather than set in considered choice and arrangement.

Perhaps Debussy's tone-pictures of the sea and the winds and the lights upon the waters, perhaps MacDowell's Indian Suite—in Dr. Muck's judgment the ablest and most eloquent piece of music that American composer has yet written—are near enough to classics to warrant the biennial repetition that from 1913 into 1917, he seems disposed to give them. Yet even so, are they pieces advisedly to set side by side except in an extreme of contrast? And why, why need Dvorak's indisputably dull and laboring overture to "Othello" be appended to them? Not yet do playable overtures [illegible] so short as to Being thus familiar and thus played, each of the numbers of yesterday did but renew anticipated impression. With Debussy's symphonic sketches and MacDowell's suite the impression was of keen pleasure heightened, deepened, in the whole illusion of the music or in the play of freshly discovered detail upon it. But for Dvorák's overture to "Othello" is there in these days any excuse outside a Shakspearean concert, except as a convenient "filler." The dramatic content and conduct of the music seem altogether too simple-minded, even though the poignant pages of Verdi in that scene of vengeance upon Desdemona and Othello's self be waved, if it is possible, out of memory. The instrumental and harmonic color has irreparably faded. Even at the hands of Dr. Muck and the orchestra the dramatic strokes "come off" tamely. Not short-breathed but long-winded, the overture labors to sudden and welcome end. Dvorák's other familiar overtures, "Husitzka" and "Carnival" still feign a plausible semblance of vitality, whereas the overture to "Othello" was born puny.

The sharper the contrast, accordingly, with a piece that keeps musical life and so renews sensuous and imaginative interest as clearly as does the Indian Suite of MacDowell. No one, nowadays, much concerns himself, or need much concern himself, with the degree in which the germinating motives are born of Indian tonal idiom or are handled with occasional Indian suggestion. Enough that in the "love-song" they breed wistful and penetrating beauty out of themselves and open to the imagination a vista of musing and sun-lit solitude like the still open spaces in a piney wood. Enough again that "the dirge" rises into music of austere beauty and of wild and piercing mourning—the lament in the human heart irreparable, savage or civilized, that like the night-wind moaning in the tree-tops may not be stilled by mere human willing. In these two woven movements MacDowell wrote the music of the forests that he loved and that in response stirred him to imaginings and to the speech of tones. Under like prompting, perhaps, in the two swifter and the one more incisive movement, he has written music of the great open spaces, between earth and sky, far as the very rim of the horizon, that he also cherished. Out of them may have come the impulse to the voices that gravely, concentratedly sing his legend; there his war-dance, gathered, passed, stilled, re-gathered to iterated rhythms, and thence surely came the zest and spring of his music of ardent, primitive, racing fete. The Indian Suite, as the title bids, but the suite also of American forest and American plain such as Northwest and Southwest still hug and harbor for the many moods of man within the one, upon the other. No wonder, so stimulated, MacDowell wrote in this suite with a freedom of means and a sureness of end that no other of his orchestral music attains.

Not so Debussy in his tonal mirrorings of the sea as it stirs from blank waters under wan dawn into bright ripples in warming sunshine; as it laps and leaps, twists and turns, shivers and shatters when the breeze whips it to play as it foams up big-voiced against those same winds now troubling and goading; as it stirs the watching and absorbing composer to the melancholy and solitary melodies that his cherished oboe may sing. For, if ever there seemed an inlaid, a polished, a meticulously meditated and adjusted music, it is these sketches of the sea, especially under the finesse and the exactitude with which Dr. Muck and the orchestra achieve them. Not even the music of "Parsifal" seems more the exactly applied means to an exactly foreseen end and impression. Imagination there is in both sketches and music-drama but imagination tightly harnessed and adroitly led. Originally there surely was impulse until impulse halted for considerate thought. The outcome in the sketches of the sea is two-fold—first, a distinct sense upon the hearer of willed delineation of the waters, of willed response of mood saved from mechanical process by the fancy, the felicity, the fine suggestion of the means; and second, of momentary strokes of invention, imagination, illusion that thrill the ear as though impulse had for the instant snapped through calculation. More and more at each rehearing, the music of "The Sea" becomes, as do sometimes the waters suggesting it, restless expanse—bejewelled.

H. T. P.

NEWS OF MUSIC

RUMOR BUSY WITH THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

No Visible Sign That Dr. Muck's Resignation Has Been Accepted—The Variegated Canvass of Possible Successors—The Apollo Club to a Friendly Public — Opera Afresh in New York — More Rulings on the War Tax — Mr. Damrosch's Concerts for Children — Items and Opinions

RUMOR runs about the town that Mr. Higginson has accepted the resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and rumor has already picked his successor—a much easier task for it than for those who have ever sought a leader for such a band or such concerts. Of evidence to bear out the rumor there is none except the war-time gossip that flies from ear to ear and the war-time credulity that eagerly receives it. Dr. Muck himself is proceeding quietly and busily with his usual and unusual work—more particularly with the preparations for the choral concert at Symphony Hall next week, at which he is to lead in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony for the first time in America. No man could for the moment act less than he does as one about to leave his usual employments. The management of the orchestra is equally unaware of any impending change; the entourage of Mr. Higginson discredits the rumor. In fact, the disposition among those officially concerned with the concerts is to rest content with the calm that has followed recent storms.

Rumor, moreover, is not well advised in the successors that it is picking for Dr. Muck and betrays its ignorance of their present engagements, their quality and of their leanings in the present war—the new test of a conductor's availability. One, Mr. Stokowski, upon whom it likes to dwell is tied by long contracts to the orchestra and the public he now serves in Philadelphia and by a guarantee fund raised especially in his behalf. Another Mr. Gabrilowitsch, of recent and signal rise to praise and promise as a conductor, has in the past, at any rate, made no secret of war sympathies, which are not those of the public that has been loud in outcry and is now busy with surmise. A third, "with a following"—Mr. Henry Hadley—is hardly likely on the strength of his work and experiences in Seattle and San Francisco, to be seriously considered as the conductor of an orchestra of the first rank. A fourth, Mr. Mengelberg, the celebrated conductor of the Amsterdam orchestra, happens to be Jewish, a little past the prime of life and a "specialist" in contemporary German music; while fifth and most curious choice of all is no other than Arthur Nikisch, Hungarian, it is true in blood, but long conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts in Leipzig and of the Philharmonic Concerts in Berlin and fast bound in Germany. So gossip goes a busy and Symphony Hall—and Dr. Muck in particular—a quiet way.

EVENING SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

Lack Of Decent Respect Shown By Americans When The National Anthem Is Played.

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—At the present time when there is so much talk about the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at all public performances, it seems to me to be especially important that each one of us should show our respect for our national anthem and for the flag and country for which it stands. Who has not seen more than one American citizen putting on his coat or laughing and talking during the playing of the anthem? We should surely show our respect by standing erect in a respectful attitude of attention. How can we expect anything but adverse criticism from foreigners who constantly see such acts of carelessness and disrespect on our part? These thoughts were suggested by a remark made recently by a German as to the use of our anthem being played when a number of the audience either chewed gum or talked during its performance.

H. V. D.

Baltimore, Nov. 5.

Quite True, We Have Been Careless—But It "Riles" Us To Have A "Loyal Prussian" Insultingly Refuse To Play The National Anthem At A Time Like This.

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—Having read the controversy regarding Dr. Muck and Mr. Randolph's views, I beg to say that I would like to voice my sentiments in regard to this "tempest in a teapot."

First and last, I am also a thorough American, and a lover of music, but fail to grasp the enormity of the offense in refusing to play our national anthem at a symphony concert. We Americans are always extreme without consistency, Major Higginson and former Governor Warfield being fair examples. According to Mr. Warfield, "'The Star-Spangled Banner' should have the right of way over every other tune." Why not play it in church? Are we not taught God first and our country next? Certainly the national anthem should be played whenever and wherever consistent, but not absolutely necessary, nor showing lack of patriotism, if not played at a symphony concert.

Some years before the war, riding in a car down Baltimore street, I noticed a colored man washing up a store front with the remnants of what was once the Stars and Stripes, dozens of pedestrians passing at the time, but not one protested. Why not then, as now? I also

n STAR

lress: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 7 - 1917

GOVERNMENT SHOULD ACT AGAINST MUCK

Warfield Says If It Does Not, People Will Assert Themselves.

SHOULD BE DISCHARGED

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, depends upon an alien enemy director for its existence, former Gov. Edwin Warfield said today, then the sooner it dies the better for the country, "and I will glory in its death," he added. He said the authorities at Washington should be stirred up or patriotic people will assert themselves.

When asked today what he thought of yesterday's protest meeting at the Lyric, Governor Warfield said:

"I am prouder than ever in being a Marylander. The meeting was the most enthusiastic gathering that I ever faced. I knew when the honor of our flag and the beauty of our national anthem—The Star-spangled Banner—was slurred and insulted that our people could be relied upon to indignantly resent such insult. This meeting has proved that I was right in estimating the patriotism of Maryland. I have faced many audiences in this city, but never one like that of yesterday afternoon, and I have never been so thrilled as I was when standing before that immense gathering of patriots. The action of that meeting will be historic and an inspiration to patriots for all time to come. It will be an encouraging and splendid message to our boys in the trenches 'over there,' and those in the camps throughout the United States who are qualifying for the trenches—the boys who are offering their lives for our flag.

"Unless the owner of this orchestra, Major Higginson, dismisses this alien director at once and thus prevents him from becoming the hero of the aliens in this country and the traitors who are in sympathy with him and the country to which he has sworn allegiance, which he vauntingly and brazenly asserts, he will be held up to the contempt of every patriotic citizen of the United States. If this splendid orchestra cannot live without an alien director, then it should die, and die quickly. It can live if it is patriotic. The music is not produced by this man, but by the men behind the instruments. If a leader has not been developed, then it don't deserve to live, and if it depends upon this alien director for its existence, then the sooner it dies the better for the country, and I will glory in its death. The art that we are interested in now is the art of war against the Huns and vandals that this man proudly proclaims himself as associated with. I cannot understand why the authorities at Washington do not act in this matter. They should be stirred up. Unless they are, patriotic people will assert themselves. This is no time for temporizing with aliens and traitors. Remember that our meeting has not been adjourned; it is simply taking a recess, and is ready to respond to any call that may be made upon it.

"The patriotic people of Baltimore are indebted to the press of this city for its support in this movement, and, personally, I wish to thank them for their earnest and enthusiastic support."

JOURNAL

ss: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 6-1917

COMING SYMPHONY CONCERT AT BALTIMORE FORBIDDEN

Police Commission Acts on Grand Jury's Recommendation.

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The Police Commissioners of Baltimore to-day sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theatre forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night, on the ground that the public safety of the community would be endangered. The action came as the recommendation of the grand jury, and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

From AMERICAN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 10
Date

WILL STAMP OUT PRO-GERMANISM

Stirring Resolutions Adopted at Frederick.

CITY AND COUNTY AROUSED

GREAT DEMONSTRATION HELD IN THE COURTHOUSE.

Representative Men and Women Pledge Themselves to Put Forth Every Reasonable Effort to Crush Disloyalty—Call on the National Government to Forbid Public Singing or Playing of the National Anthem Except by Loyal American Citizens.

Special Dispatch to The American.

Frederick, Md., November 9.—Pledging themselves to put forth every reasonable effort to stamp out a strain of pro-Germanism which has come to light in this county and city from time to time, representative men and women of Frederick county this afternoon, at the biggest patriotic mass-meeting held here in years, adopted a resolution in which they call upon the government of the United States to forbid the public singing or playing of the national anthem except by American citizens and those who are loyal to our government.

The resolutions especially denounce Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who insulted the national anthem and who has spoken disrespectfully of the flag and of the song, and denounce all who fail, cordially and whole-heartedly, to honor the nation's cherished song or its flag, or who fail loyally to support the President in these trying times which are to test our strength to the utmost and which demand the support of every loyal American citizen.

The resolutions are, in part, as follows:

"Whereas, The people of Frederick county have been pronounced and emphatic in their love of liberty and of the free institutions under which they live; and whereas, the author of our proud national anthem, The Star-spangled Banner, was born in Frederick county, and his mortal remains lie buried in our cemetery, and whereas, our people have heretofore evidenced their devotion to the flag and their love of that soul-stirring song by erecting over the last resting place of its author an enduring monument to his memory; and whereas there has recently been manifested in some quarters a want of respect for the flag and for the inspiring song which extols it, and whose strains should ever arouse our pride and patriotism;

"Therefore, Be it resolved by the people of Frederick county, in meeting assembled, that we hereby renew our pledge of allegiance to our flag and to our country, and our devotion to our national anthem, and we denounce as wanting in patriotism any who refuse to respect and reverence either our flag or the song which exalts and glorifies that flag as the emblem of our nation's sovereignty and power."

The demonstration was held in the courthouse, with Associate Judge Glenn H. Worthington presiding. The speaker of the evening was ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, who also spoke at the meeting of the Monocacy Club this evening. Other speakers were Dr. Thomas Freeman Dixon, pastor of the Presbyterian Church; Dr. U. S. G. Rupp, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church; Noah E. Cramer, Rev. Henry L. G. Kieffer, of the Evangelical Reformed Church; Dr. Charles Crum, Brunswick; Dr. Joseph H. Apple, president of Hood College; Emory L. Coblentz and Sergeant Richards, a recruiting officer here.

Ex-Governor Warfield and about 30 guests were entertained at tea at Rose Hill Inn, the home of Thomas Johnson, the first governor of Maryland, following the meeting.

EVENING SUN
s: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 9 - 1917

...r Governor Warfield, And Down With Traitors, Says This Washingtonian.

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—The more I read the papers in regard to the doings and sayings of the pacifists and traitors right here in our midst the more my blood boils. Note the following: La Follette sanctions the sinking of the Lusitania, Dr. Bigelow prays for the Kaiser and his clique of murderers and thereby earns a flogging, Dr. Muck refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" because he is a Prussian—maybe a spy, who knows? Yet he goes through the country collecting our American dollars. An American (?), Colonel Higginson, upholds and defends him.

Three cheers for Governor Warfield! That was a noble act of his, and the people of Maryland should never forget him for putting the damper on the foul Prussian, Muck. The Germans and pro-Germans are banding together under the guise of socialism to hamper the Administration. Strange these hyphens never voted nor affiliated with the Socialist party before. It is as plain as the alphabet. Hilquitt, the treasonable, and his traitor following refuse to buy Liberty bonds and persuade others not to buy. The people of this country had better beware of that Russian element—every one that I talk to has a revolutionary idea. Our Government don't suit them. Why did they come here? The time may soon be here when we of this country will regret their coming. Not all, but most of them, are an ungrateful lot. The very thing they advocate—namely, immediate peace, which would be victory for the Kaiser and his Huns—would return them to the same condition that forced them from Russia. Do they want to see America Kaiserized? "Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

I have no intention of criticizing the Administration, but I would suggest to open at once the internment camps and train the firing squads. Bullets are the only antidote for the Prussian propaganda. Reason is a hard thing to get into the Prussian skull, therefore I suggest lead. JOHN TURNER LOVE.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 7.

But Muck Neither "Held His Peace" Nor "Stuck To His Faith"—He First Insultingly Refused To Play The National Anthem And Then "Crawled" And Did Play It—And We Wonder To What Flag This Anonymous "Loyal Patriot" Is Loyal.

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—May I be allowed to say something in regard to the Boston Symphony problem?

Do the people of Baltimore know that Dr. Muck did not want to stay in America, but was compelled to in order to keep a contract?

If an American were in Germany would he feel like conducting "Die Wacht am Rhein"? No! Why should Dr. Muck be asked to play the hypocrite?

Do you think it wise that the whole orchestra be blamed and barred from coming here? Do you think that it pays to take music in its highest form away from the true lovers of the art?

If a German would want to play our anthem, so much the better; but if he cannot do it with his heart, why act like little school children, as we have been doing, and refuse to allow Mr. Muck here?

Put one of our American conductors in Dr. Muck's place in Germany. Would we not be proud if he refused? Yet when it happens to be one who is man enough to stick to his faith you hoot him. I admire him, and if the people of Baltimore would use what brains they may possess they also might do the same.

I may not be supposed to write this; but, however, it is true, and happened in Baltimore. Three weeks ago I was in a theatre and the French national anthem was being played by the orchestra. One person whom I spoke to afterward purposely was a young French citizen who could not fight, but who was loyal. He stood up and saluted. I heard several hisses, laughter and whispers of "Sit down, sit down." He paid no attention to them, but kept to his feet, all the while saluting.

Was he wrong? And yet one of the speakers at yesterday's massmeeting who spoke of commending isolating Dr. Muck was one of the persons who yelled out loud "Down in front!" to this same Frenchman.

Talk about consistency! Will the people of Baltimore please show some? As long as we allow aliens to come here let us respect their country as well as our own, just so long as they hold their peace. I thank you.

A LOYAL PATRIOT.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.

To the Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—There is no occasion for surprise at the dimensions which the discussion concerning the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts has assumed. This was to be expected after the beginning had once been made. When we attempt to link national patriotism, as exemplified by the attitude of the majority today, with art, a serious conflict is bound to ensue. For the media of the two powers traverse different planes. Art is international, patriotism distinctly national; art is idealistic, patriotism, in its present form, practical; art is necessary for its sentimental values, patriotism for its utilitarian. With certain forms of literature and religion, art develops those higher emotions which are otherwise untouched. The two powers do not blend. The present controversy proves this beyond doubt. When we demand the performance of the national anthem at a concert we know perfectly well now that the demand will be granted, for public opinion today in matters of patriotism is an all-powerful factor. Knowing this, it behooves us to ask, before we make the demand, Are we right and what do we gain?

There can be put two plausible reasons for introducing "The Star-Spangled Banner" into art concerts at present—its musical value or its patriotic value. The first reason may be disposed of at once, since if the anthem were musically valuable, it would have been introduced by the musical world long ago. As a matter of fact, closer inspection will reveal that even its patriotic value at a concert is practically zero. Patriotism is love for and the desire to help one's country. It is difficult to see how this can be accomplished by performing the anthem at a time and in an environment with which it stands in absolutely no logical relation. The mood of a concert audience does not contain the essential emotional elements of patriotism. Under these conditions the anthem can at best but serve its purpose very weakly, if at all. They who insist upon its performance forget that all media of emotional transmission must be met with an emotional interpretation. It is just as ludicrous to command some one to "listen with enthusiasm" as it was to command some one to "sing with enthusiasm." If the real meaning of the anthem is to be clearly comprehended, its vital force felt, would it not be better to reserve it for special occasions, when, in its proper emotional setting, it would awaken the desired associations and cause the proper reaction? Meanwhile, artistic expression would be left free to develop those higher ideals which are as essential to our welfare at present as are the sentiments of patriotism. No one questions the value of the national anthem in time of war. But even then, if applied in an inappropriate field, it does not serve its purpose. We are apt to forget that in a concert it meets the demands of neither art nor patriotism. Those pesons who are lacking in artistic temperament, to whom music is little more than a conglomeration of meaningless sounds, have no right to attempt to settle matters of this art. Not realizing its great value they, of course, do not know the great harm they are doing. The layman can not be expected to render an intelligent judgment on either the value of art or its mode of expression. It is for the musical fraternity to say whether "The Star-Spangled Banner," expressed in a musical idiom, is valuable or not. The concert is a branch of art, not of patriotism, and the question becomes one of art and should so be decided, so long as it in no wise conflicts with the efforts of the Government. This we have seen to be the case—the absence of the anthem from a concert does not retard the preparations of the Government, and its inclusion in a concert does not further them.

The most serious side of the question however, does not rest with the performance of the anthem. By slight concessions, necessary on all sides in a time like the present, this could be arranged. But, unfortunately, we have witnessed only the beginning. Already literature and religion have suffered, and certain forms of artistic creation are under unfavorable discussion. It is time to face the problem from a broad, impartial viewpoint.

The world is at present in a state of unstable equilibrium. In the very nature of things nothing national can remain stable. The only domains possessing this power are art, literature and religion. They alone can instill those higher, subtler ideals which civilization, through education, has found essential to the welfare of society, which, developed through decades of painstaking effort, have already been largely destroyed by a few years of war. Are we to extinguish the last spark? Are we to tear down the one remaining tower of hope and strength, to see it carried down the maelstrom which has engulfed the earth? Whither are we to turn for guidance when the forces of war have spent themselves? Where are we to find stimulation, courage and energy to rebuild? If this is not to be done, if we are not to seek in vain, then let us try to keep the arts free from the influences engendered by the war, as far as this is possible; keep them free to develop in their own sphere of the ideal. Only they who, when everything else has failed them in the last few years, have turned to music for consolation—and found it—only they feel how dangerously near to undermining the very foundation of the structure of civilization we are. Let us hold the arts internationally sacred—damning them will not win the war—so that when peace comes, as eventually it must, we will find at least one structure intact. O. R. O.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.

om NEWS
dress: Baltimore, Md.

COMMENDS WARFIELD

Did Right In Calling Mass-Meeting To Protest Against Dr. Muck.

To the Editor of The News:

Please permit me to commend the action of former Governor Warfield in your worthy paper in calling a meeting of protest against the refusal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

There is too little patriotism in Baltimore, and if playing the anthem of the nation will help, it ought to be played. A. S. L. WASCHLAPSKI.

Baltimore, Nov. 8.

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 7 - 1917
136

SAYS PEOPLE DEMAND ACTION AGAINST MUCK

Former Governor Warfield Points Out That Meeting Merely Took Recess.

Former Governor Edwin Warfield does not regard the meeting at the Lyric yesterday afternoon as having ended all discussion of the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward "The Star-Spangled Banner." In an interview given this morning he indicates that he believes the people of Baltimore are prepared to take further action, perhaps to refuse to be contented with having prevented Dr. Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra here. The meeting yesterday, he pointed out, had not adjourned, but had simply taken a recess. He said:

"I am prouder than ever in being a Marylander. The meeting was the most enthusiastic gathering that I ever faced. I knew when the honor of our flag and the beauty of our national anthem, 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' was slurred and insulted, that our people could be relied upon to indignantly resent such insult. This meeting has proved that I was right in estimating the patriotism of Maryland. I have faced many audiences in this city, but never one like that of yesterday afternoon, and I have never been so thrilled as I was when standing before that immense gathering of patriots. The action of that meeting will be historic and an inspiration to patroits for all time to come. It will be an encouraging and splendid message to our boys in the trenches 'over there,' and those in the camps throughout the United States who are qualifying for the trenches—the boys who are offering their lives for our flag.

"Unless the owner of this orchestra, Colonel Higginson, dismisses this alien director at once and thus prevents him from becoming the hero of the aliens in this country and the traitors who are in sympathy with him and the country to which he has sworn allegiance, which he vauntingly and brazenly asserts, he will be held up to the contempt of every patriotic citizen of the United States.

"If this splendid orchestra cannot live without an alien director, then it should die, and die quickly. It can live if it is patriotic. The music is not produced by this man, but by the men behind the instruments. If a leader has not been developed, then it don't deserve to live, and if it depends upon this alien director for its existence, then the sooner it dies the better for the country, and I will glory in its death. The art that we are interested in now is the art of war against the Huns and vandals that this man proudly proclaims himself as associated with.

"I cannot understand why the authorities at Washington do not act in this matter. They should be stirred up. Unless they are patriotic people will assert themselves. This is no time for temporizing with aliens and traitors. Remember that our meeting has not been adjourned; it is simply taking a recess, and is ready to respond to any call that may be made upon it.

"The patriotic people of Baltimore are indebted to the press of this city for its support in this movement, and personally I wish to thank them for their earnest and enthusiastic support."

STAR
ess: Baltimore, Md.

Boston has always been proud of its Symphony Orchestra. What a pity that it cannot continue so!

om AMERICAN
ldress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 9 1917
te

CAPITAL WELCOMES DR. MUCK

Brilliant Audience Greets Orchestra Leader; Plays National Anthem.

(From the Washington Times.)

It was a brilliant capacity audience that greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday afternoon and formally opened the orchestral concert season.

The question of the playing of the national anthem under the baton of the German leader was definitely settled when Dr. Muck opened the concert with a spirited presentation of "The Star-Spangled Banner" with the full orchestra standing.

There was no demonstration other than of applause either for the first appearance of Dr. Muck or for the playing of the national music. Some of those who felt that Dr. Muck had maintained an improper attitude toward the wishes of his patrons in other cities absented themselves from the concert altogether.

LEGRAM
New York City. 137
NOV 13 1917

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Quit Coddling the Germans.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:

NOW that the operatic atmosphere has been purified by the banning of German opera from the Metropolitan Opera House, and that we have gotten rid of Dr. Muck, who has an appropriate nomenclature, the loyal American public should combine its efforts for the immediate suppression of German song and music from the concert halls of this country, as many of them are incubators of pro-Germanism, therefore nests of treason. Every American citizen should be subordinate to the sublime doctrine of patriotism and do his utmost for the welfare of his country in order to insure its future freedom. * * * Are we in the service of the Kaiser? Should not our men in khaki at the front receive at least a demonstration of respect? Then abstain from frequenting places where German song and music is to be heard. What of the mother who loses a son in the struggle of civilization? What of some other mother who receives from the battle front the mutilated body of her cherished son? Just imagine the feelings of that grief stricken mother on beholding, in glaring red letters, on the repertory boards of a music hall the announcement of German song music. Would it not seem to her as an appeal from mockery to the Almighty? War with the German should be to the very hilt of the knife. For are we not dealing with the most unprincipled and savage people on the face of the globe—a people who are insanely fanatic about their criminal ruler?

J. GERALD DE POLO.

New York, November 7, 1917.

om Nation

idress: New York City.

ate NOV 8 1917

A SINGULAR tempest in a tea-pot has raged in Boston and agitated the press of the country over the alleged refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the well-known conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to include the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the programme to be played during a concert tour. At the regular Friday concert last week the patriotic number was played, and the conductor announced his resignation. Since then Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, has made a statement absolving Dr. Muck of any disloyal or disrespectful intention, and has assumed all responsibility for the omission that originally called forth a demonstration from patriotic societies in Providence. He states that the request for the inclusion of the "Star-Spangled Banner" came directly to him from some persons in Providence, and was not passed on to Dr. Muck.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I. ess: NOV 6-1917

The Symphony's Change of Front

Major Higginson says that he received, before the recent Boston Symphony concert in this city, a request from women of Providence unknown to him and not subscribers to the Symphony concerts that the orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner" upon its visit here. But the request, as has been stated again and again, was signed by officers and representatives of several responsible local organizations, nearly all of a musical character; and hundreds of the members of these organizations were subscribers to the Symphony concerts. Major Higginson's explanation does not explain.

The founder and promoter of the Boston organization further says that "The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, moreover, the request has never been refused." Yet Major Higginson declared, after the Providence concert, that the orchestra would never play here again, and Dr. Muck was quoted as saying that the anthem would not be rendered by the organization in New York or anywhere else.

It is worth while remarking that for the first time in the history of the orchestra, the Star-Spangled Banner flew over Symphony Hall in Boston last Friday.

Major Higginson should stop explaining. The farther in he goes the deeper he gets. The people know the facts.

TIMES
s: Washington, D. C.
NOV 5 1917

CONCERT BY MUCK IN BALTIMORE MAY NOT BE ALLOWED

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Former Gov. Edwin Warfield, whose ancestor, Dr. Charles A. Warfield, led the Anne Arundel countians who burned the tea-laden ship Peggy Stewart at Annapolis in 1774, went ahead with his plans today to prevent Dr. Karl Muck, Prussian conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from appearing in Baltimore.

The orchestra, with Dr. Muck conducting, is advertised to appear here Wednesday evening, and practically all the seats in the Lyric have been sold. Governor Warfield has rented the Lyric for a great patriotic mass meeting tomorrow afternoon.

Plans will be made then for steps to be taken if Dr. Muck conducts. The former governor said today that the playing of the national anthem would not satisfy the people.

"The Kaiser's favorite shall never lead his orchestra here," he said.

MEADE MEN TO ATTEND ANTI-MUCK MEETING

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—The Camp Meade band and fifty men from the cantonment will participate in the patriotic mass meeting to be held here tomorrow to protest against the insult to the flag by Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who resigned after playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

EVENING STAR
s: Washington, D. C.
NOV 5 1917

DR. MUCK AND PLAYERS ABSOLVED FROM BLAME

Maj. Higginson, Sponsor for Orchestra, Says No Disloyalty Was Intended.

BOSTON, November 5.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyalty or disrespectful intent in ommitting "The Star Spangled Banner" from their program was made last night by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Maj. Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by criticism from citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence of the omission of the national anthem from the program of the concert in that city last week.

Maj. Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Maj. Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston.

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public recital of that organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Maj. Higginson said:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play "The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request has never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist—the orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ess: New York City.

THE proffered resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, because of the "Star-Spangled Banner" controversy, is a cause for deep regret among music-lovers, for Dr. Muck is a rare artist. It was unfortunate, however, that the Boston Orchestra should have made a stand upon the playing of what has become a routine accompaniment of theatrical and musical performances. New York's orchestras, the Philharmonic and the Symphony, found that they could play the national anthem without damaging their musical standing, to say nothing of the patriotic side or of obliging their patrons. On the other hand, for an excited public opinion to try to dictate what opera should be produced and what orchestral numbers played would be a grievous blow to musical art in America. It is stated that there will be no German operas at the Metropolitan this winter. This we think regrettable, if only because it shows less tolerance than is to be found in London, where German opera is given, or in Vienna, where Shakespeare's plays are frequently produced. These great works of art surely rise above international rivalries and warfare.

POST
ss: Washington, D. C.
NOV 7 191

The customary large and distinguished audience greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon at its first concert here this season, Dr. Karl Muck conducting. The orchestra has not played so well in several seasons as on this occasion, and the conductor received a warm welcome when he came upon the stage. The concert opened with the "Star Spangled Banner," the audience standing, the officers present standing "at attention" throughout, and the conductor receiving enthusiastic applause at its close. At the end of the interesting program Dr. Muck was recalled to receive the enthusiastic approval set upon his work by the representative music lovers and connoisseurs who filled the house. Among those in the boxes were the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Richard Townsend and Mrs. Corcoran Thom, guests of Mrs. Marshall Field; Mrs. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War, guest of Mrs. William Crozier, whose other guests were Mrs. Julius Lay, Mme. Ramon, Mrs. Reynolds Hitt and Mrs. Bingham; Mrs. Delos Blodgett, who had as her guests Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Mrs. T. De Witt Talmage, Mrs. Charles Gray Matthews, Miss Helen Blodgett and Maj. Horton; Col. and Mrs. Henry May, Mrs. Thomas F. Welsh and Miss Eliza Scidmore, the Rev. and Mrs. F. Ward Denys, who had with them their two daughters, the Bishop of Washington, Rt. Rev. Dr. Harding, and Miss Douglass; Mrs. Calderon Carlisle, who had her daughter, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, and Mr. and Mrs. Myron W. Whitney; Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisner, who had with them Mrs. D. Percy Hickling; Mrs. Keyser, of New York, and Miss Hartman. Others in the audience were Mrs. Houston, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Miss Gladys Hinckley, Mrs. P. H. Hichborn, Mrs. Richard Weightman, Mrs. John M. Biddle, Mrs. McCortney, Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, Mrs. Wilson, widow of former Senator John L. Wilson, of Seattle; Mrs. Charles W. Fairfax, Col. and Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Mrs. Thomas H. Carter, Mrs. Charles T. Thompson, Mrs. Wiley, Mrs. Clifton, the Misses Cullen and Mrs. Hertle, of Gunston Hall.

HERALD
Washington, D. C.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played for a fashionable audience at the New National yesterday afternoon. Seen in the boxes were: The Secretary of Interior and Mrs. Franklin K. Lane, Mrs. Richard H. Townsend, and others in the White House box; Mrs. Delos Blodgett, who entertained Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmage, Mrs. Charles G. Matthews, Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Miss Helen Blodgett and Maj. Horton; Mrs. William Crozier, who entertained Mrs. Newton D. Baker; Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, who had Miss Eliza Scidmore in her box; and the Rev. and Mrs. F. Ward Denys, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisner, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry May, who had parties with them.

HERALD
Washington, D. C.
NOV 9 1917

Gotham Cheers Anthem Directed by Dr. Muck

New York, Nov. 8.—Dr. Karl Muck conducted the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert tonight in Carnegie Hall.

Every seat in the hall was filled, but not during the rendering of the national anthem. The orchestra alone sat at that time. At the conclusion of the "Star Spangled Banner," the hall rang with applause.

The gathering was characteristic of classical concert audiences, composed chiefly of well-to-do and wealthy music lovers.

TIMES
ess: Washington, D. C.
NOV 7 1917

Mrs. Marshall Field was hostess at a box party at the National Theater yesterday afternoon for the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of this season. Her guests were the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Richard Townsend, and Mrs. Corcoran Thom. Mrs. William Crozier had with her Mrs. Newton D. Baker, Mrs. Julius Lay, Mme. Ramon, Mrs. Reynolds Hitt, and Mrs. Bingham.

The recital was attended by a notable audience and the program, which opened with "The Star-Spangled Banner," was received with marked enthusiasm. Others in the distinguished group which filled the boxes were Mrs. Delos Blodgett, who had as her guests Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmage, Mrs. Charles Gray Matthews, Miss Helen Blodgett, and Major William E. Horton, U. S. A.; Mrs. Henry May, Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, and Miss Eliza Scidmore. The Rev. F. Ward Denys and Mrs. Denys had with them two of their daughters, the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, Bishop of Washington, and Miss Harriet Douglass.

Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe and Mr. and Mrs. Myron Whitney were with Mrs. Calderon Carlisle, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisner had as their guests Mrs. D. Percy Hickling, Mrs. Keyser, of New York, and Miss Hartman.

Others in the audience were Mrs. Houston, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Miss Gladys Hinckley, Mrs. P. H. Hichborn, Mrs. Richard Weightman, Mrs. John M. Biddle, Mrs. McCortney, Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, Mrs. Wilson, widow of former Senator John L. Wilson, of Seattle; Mrs. Charles W Fairfax, Col. and Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Mrs. Thomas H. Carter, Mrs. Charles T. Thompson, Mrs. Wiley, Mrs. Clifton, the Misses Cullen, and Mrs. Louis Hertle, of Gunston Hall.

dress: PROVIDENCE, R. I. te Bulletin NOV 7-1917

Symphony Plays in Capital.

Washington, Nov. 6.—The Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck appeared to-day at a local theatre and played "The Star Spangled Banner," which was given an ovation.

LEGRAM

New York City. 137

NOV 13 1917

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Quit, Coddling the Germans.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

NOW that the operatic atmosphere has been purified by the banning of German opera from the Metropolitan Opera House, and that we have gotten rid of Dr. Muck, who has an appropriate nomenclature, the loyal American public should combine its efforts for the immediate suppression of German song and music from the concert halls of this country, as many of them are incubators of pro-Germanism, therefore nests of treason. Every American citizen should be subordinate to the sublime doctrine of patriotism and do his utmost for the welfare of his country in order to insure its future freedom. * * * Are we in the service of the Kaiser? Should not our men in khaki at the front receive at least a demonstration of respect? Then abstain from frequenting places where German song and music is to be heard. What of the mother who loses a son in the struggle of civilization? What of some other mother who receives from the battle front the mutilated body of her cherished son? Just imagine the feelings of that grief stricken mother on beholding, in glaring red letters, on the repertory boards of a music hall the announcement of German song music. Would it not seem to her as an appeal from mockery to the Almighty? War with the German should be to the very hilt of the knife. For are we not dealing with the most unprincipled and savage people on the face of the globe—a people who are insanely fanatic about their criminal ruler?

J. GERALD DE POLO.

New York, November 7, 1917.

om Nation

ddress: New York City.

ate

A SINGULAR tempest in a tea-pot has raged in Boston and agitated the press of the country over the alleged refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the well-known conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to include the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the programme to be played during a concert tour. At the regular Friday concert last week the patriotic number was played, and the conductor announced his resignation. Since then Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, has made a statement absolving Dr. Muck of any disloyal or disrespectful intention, and has assumed all responsibility for the omission that originally called forth a demonstration from patriotic societies in Providence. He states that the request for the inclusion of the "Star-Spangled Banner" came directly to him from some persons in Providence, and was not passed on to Dr. Muck.

Nation

ess: New York City.

JOURNAL

ess: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 6-1917

The Symphony's Change of Front

Major Higginson says that he received, before the recent Boston Symphony concert in this city, a request from women of Providence unknown to him and not subscribers to the Symphony concerts that the orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner" upon its visit here. But the request, as has been stated again and again, was signed by officers and representatives of several responsible local organizations, nearly all of a musical character; and hundreds of the members of these organizations were subscribers to the Symphony concerts. Major Higginson's explanation does not explain.

The founder and promoter of the Boston organization further says that "The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, moreover, the request has never been refused." Yet Major Higginson declared, after the Providence concert, that the orchestra would never play here again, and Dr. Muck was quoted as saying that the anthem would not be rendered by the organization in New York or anywhere else.

It is worth while remarking that for the first time in the history of the orchestra, the Star-Spangled Banner flew over Symphony Hall in Boston last Friday.

Major Higginson should stop explaining. The farther in he goes the deeper he gets. The people know the facts.

TIMES

ss: Washington, D. C.

NOV 5 1917

CONCERT BY MUCK IN BALTIMORE MAY NOT BE ALLOWED

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Former Gov. Edwin Warfield, whose ancestor, Dr. Charles A. Warfield, led the Anne Arundel countians who burned the tea-laden ship Peggy Stewart at Annapolis in 1774, went ahead with his plans today to prevent Dr. Karl Muck, Prussian conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from appearing in Baltimore.

The orchestra, with Dr. Muck conducting, is advertised to appear here Wednesday evening, and practically all the seats in the Lyric have been sold. Governor Warfield has rented the Lyric for a great patriotic mass meeting tomorrow afternoon.

Plans will be made then for steps to be taken if Dr. Muck conducts. The former governor said today that the playing of the national anthem would not satisfy the people.

"The Kaiser's favorite shall never lead his orchestra here," he said.

MEADE MEN TO ATTEND ANTI-MUCK MEETING

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—The Camp Meade band and fifty men from the cantonment will participate in the patriotic mass meeting to be held here tomorrow to protest against the insult to the flag by Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who resigned after playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

EVENING STAR

s: Washington, D. C.

DR. MUCK AND PLAYERS ABSOLVED FROM BLAME

Maj. Higginson, Sponsor for Orchestra, Says No Disloyalty Was Intended.

BOSTON, November 5.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyalty or disrespectful intent in ommitting "The Star Spangled Banner" from their program was made last night by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Maj. Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by criticism from citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence of the omission of the national anthem from the program of the concert in that city last week.

Maj. Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Maj. Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston.

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public recital of that organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Maj. Higginson said:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play "The Star Spangled Banner' they played it; and, still further, the request has never been refused.

"The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow citizens. On one point I may insist—the orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion, but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust."

THE proffered resignation of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, because of the "Star-Spangled Banner" controversy, is a cause for deep regret among music-lovers, for Dr. Muck is a rare artist. It was unfortunate, however, that the Boston Orchestra should have made a stand upon the playing of what has become a routine accompaniment of theatrical and musical performances. New York's orchestras, the Philharmonic and the Symphony, found that they could play the national anthem without damaging their musical standing, to say nothing of the patriotic side or of obliging their patrons. On the other hand, for an excited public opinion to try to dictate what opera should be produced and what orchestral numbers played would be a grievous blow to musical art in America. It is stated that there will be no German operas at the Metropolitan this winter. This we think regrettable, if only because it shows less tolerance than is to be found in London, where German opera is given, or in Vienna, where Shakespeare's plays are frequently produced. These great works of art surely rise above international rivalries and warfare.

POST

ss: Washington, D. C.

NOV 7 1917

The customary large and distinguished audience greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon at its first concert here this season, Dr. Karl Muck conducting. The orchestra has not played so well in several seasons as on this occasion, and the conductor received a warm welcome when he came upon the stage. The concert opened with the "Star Spangled Banner," the audience standing, the officers present standing "at attention" throughout, and the conductor receiving enthusiastic applause at its close. At the end of the interesting program Dr. Muck was recalled to receive the enthusiastic approval set upon his work by the representative music lovers and connoisseurs who filled the house. Among those in the boxes were the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Richard Townsend and Mrs. Corcoran Thom, guests of Mrs. Marshall Field; Mrs. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War, guest of Mrs. William Crozier, whose other guests were Mrs. Julius Lay, Mme. Ramon, Mrs. Reynolds Hitt and Mrs. Bingham; Mrs. Delos Blodgett, who had as her guests Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Mrs. T. De Witt Talmage, Mrs. Charles Gray Matthews, Miss Helen Blodgett and Maj. Horton; Col. and Mrs. Henry May, Mrs. Thomas F. Welsh and Miss Eliza Scidmore, the Rev. and Mrs. F. Ward Denys, who had with them their two daughters, the Bishop of Washington, Rt. Rev. Dr. Harding, and Miss Douglass; Mrs. Calderon Carlisle, who had her daughter, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, and Mr. and Mrs. Myron W. Whitney; Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisner, who had with them Mrs. D. Percy Hickling, Mrs. Keyser, of New York, and Miss Hartman. Others in the audience were Mrs. Houston, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Miss Gladys Hinckley, Mrs. P. H. Hichborn, Mrs. Richard Weightman, Mrs. John M. Biddle, Mrs. McCortney, Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, Mrs. Wilson, widow of former Senator John L. Wilson, of Seattle; Mrs. Charles W. Fairfax, Col. and Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Mrs. Thomas H. Carter, Mrs. Charles T. Thompson, Mrs. Wiley, Mrs. Clifton, the Misses Cullen and Mrs. Hertle, of Gunston Hall.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played for a fashionable audience at the New National yesterday afternoon. Seen in the boxes were: The Secretary of Interior and Mrs. Franklin K. Lane, Mrs. Richard H. Townsend, and others in the White House box; Mrs. Delos Blodgett, who entertained Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmage, Mrs. Charles G. Matthews, Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Miss Helen Blodgett and Maj. Horton; Mrs. William Crozier, who entertained Mrs. Newton D. Baker; Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, who had Miss Eliza Scidmore in her box; and the Rev. and Mrs. F. Ward Denys, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisner, and Col. and Mrs. Henry May were others who had parties with them.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

Gotham Cheers Anthem Directed by Dr. Muck

New York, Nov. 8.—Dr. Karl Muck conducted the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert tonight in Carnegie Hall.

Every seat in the hall was filled, but not during the rendering of the national anthem. The orchestra alone sat at that time. At the conclusion of the "Star Spangled Banner," the hall rang with applause.

The gathering was characteristic of classical concert audiences, composed chiefly of well-to-do and wealthy music lovers.

Mrs. Marshall Field was hostess at a box party at the National Theater yesterday afternoon for the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of this season. Her guests were the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Richard Townsend, and Mrs. Corcoran Thom. Mrs. William Crozier had with her Mrs. Newton D. Baker, Mrs. Julius Lay, Mme. Ramon, Mrs. Reynolds Hitt, and Mrs. Bingham.

The recital was attended by a notable audience and the program, which opened with "The Star-Spangled Banner," was received with marked enthusiasm. Others in the distinguished group which filled the boxes were Mrs. Delos Blodgett, who had as her guests Mrs. Robert Hinckley, Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmage, Mrs. Charles Gray Matthews, Miss Helen Blodgett, and Major William E. Horton, U. S. A.; Mrs. Henry May, Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, and Miss Eliza Seidmore. The Rev. F. Ward Denys and Mrs. Denys had with them two of their daughters, the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, Bishop of Washington, and Miss Harriet Douglass.

Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe and Mr. and Mrs. Myron Whitney were with Mrs. Calderon Carlisle, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisner had as their guests Mrs. D. Percy Hickling, Mrs. Keyser, of New York, and Miss Hartman.

Others in the audience were Mrs. Houston, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Miss Gladys Hinckley, Mrs. P. H. Hichborn, Mrs. Richard Weightman, Mrs. John M. Biddle, Mrs. McCortney, Mrs. Matthew T. Scott, Mrs. Wilson, widow of former Senator John L. Wilson, of Seattle; Mrs. Charles W. Fairfax, Col. and Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Mrs. Thomas H. Carter, Mrs. Charles T. Thompson, Mrs. Wiley, Mrs. Clifton, the Misses Cullen, and Mrs. Louis Hertle, of Gunston Hall.

dress: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

te Bulletin NOV 7-1917

Symphony Plays in Capital.

Washington, Nov. 6.—The Boston Symphony orchestra and Dr. Karl Muck appeared to-day at a local theatre and played "The Star Spangled Banner," which was given an ovation.

EAGLE

s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Amazing Attitude Assumed by Symphony Director.

Indignation over the Muck affair has not died out as yet nor is it likely to do so for some time. The fact of the matter is that Dr. Muck was most indiscreet in his statements, as, indeed, he has been for the past two years. It is hard to conceive how a man who has enjoyed the courtesy and adulation that he has should feel so little gratitude to the United States and to its people as to offend them on just the point which in himself he admires most—patriotism. And certainly it was no other than a manifestation of this sentiment that inspired the demand for the National Anthem.

Nor is it true that Dr. Muck is indispensable to the welfare of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Admitting that he is a great conductor, and an idol of the people of Boston, and further admitting that he has given to us the ablest performances of the Brahms symphonies that we have heard of recent years, it must be admitted that there are one or two men in this country who could take over the direction of the band and in a short time give us such performances as would compare most favorably with those under Dr. Muck's direction. For instance, there is Walter Henry Rothwell, who directed the concerts of the Civic Orchestra two years ago. With a band gathered together for the time being he gave us unusually excellent concerts. Those who heard him conduct the Tschaikowsky "Fifth" will remember it as one of the most stirring performances of that work that New York has ever heard. And what could he not do with an orchestra of the personnel of the Boston?

TIMES

Washington, D. C.

NATIONAL ANTHEM PLAYED BY MUCK IN CONCERT HERE

It was a brilliant capacity audience that greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon and formally opened the orchestral concert season.

The question of the playing of the national anthem under the baton of the German leader was definitely settled when Dr. Muck opened the concert with a spirited presentation of "The Star-Spangled Banner" with the full orchestra standing.

There was no demonstration other than of applause either for the first appearance of Dr. Muck or for the playing of the national music. Some of those who felt that Dr. Muck had maintained an improper attitude toward the wishes of his patrons in other cities absented themselves from the concert altogether.

Mr. Lisner Absent.

Conspicuously absent from the box which he customarily occupies at all symphony concerts was A. Lisner, who took this means of expressing his indignant protest against the previous attitude of Dr. Muck toward America's national air.

Following the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" the orchestra proceeded at once to the formal program. Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony, F minor, was the major number. No music could have been better chosen to display the absolute finesse, the pure melody of the orchestra, or the incomparable loveliness of the wind choirs, both wood and brass.

In finely wrought climaxes these players were as a single man. Yet for this Russian music there was almost too much law and order, not enough temperamental abandon nor impassioned feeling. It was exquisite playing at all times, but the Eastern rhythms of the andantino were too measured and the recurrent themes of the finale not insistent enough. It lacked atmosphere.

Old Italian Spirit.

But to the Beethoven overture to Goethe's "Egmont" with its old Italian spirit, Dr. Muck gave noble dignity and that frank clarity that fully reveals the polish and art of true mastery. And again, vivid local color was portrayed in the bizarre Roumanian Rhapsodie of Enesco with its rich orchestration and picturesque tone paintings—now pastorale, now a mad frenzy of the dance. Sweeps of full orchestra and the weaving of inner voices were given with rich tone texture and much subtlety.

To Wagner and the Tannhauser overture that closed the program Dr. Muck gave a marked solemnity, a solemnity that pervaded the Venusberg at times. It is undoubtedly true that music mirrors the soul. Its message then is manifold for those to whom it belongs. The Tannhauser finale as played yesterday would surely say that "beauty is its own excuse for being."

J. MacB.

POST

ess: Washington, D. C.

MUCK WINS AUDIENCE

Applaud "Star-Spangled Banner" at Boston Symphony Concert.

CURTAIN CALL FOR DIRECTOR

Brilliant House Shows Warm Approval of Superb Program—Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor Pleases, Its Theme Receiving Precise Interpretation.

A brilliant audience greeted Dr. Muck and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the initial Washington concert of that superb organization at the New National Theater yesterday afternoon. A spirited rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner" preceded the program and elicited vociferous applause, thus allaying all disquieting rumors to the effect that Dr. Muck would refuse to play our national anthem at his concerts.

Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor, was the piece de resistance of the program. The sinister "Fate" theme that ushers in the first movement at once places the listener in the subjecting mood that enhances one's enjoyment of this great Russian's marvellous tone-pictures. It is "program" music in its nighest and best sense. The alternative themes represent hopeless despair and happiness.

Varying Emotions Depicted.

The second movement is song-like and sweetly sad; the third is capricious in its rapid pizzicalo for strings, while the fourth movement, wild and tumultuous, with a folk-song basis, depicts happy scenes of rejoicing, with however, the sinister shadow of "Fate" imminent over all.

The second half of the program opened with the stately and dignified Egmont overture of Beethoven. In marked contrast to this number was the rollicking Rhapsodie Romaine in A major, by the Roumanian composer, Georges Enesco. Written in the folk style, based on Roumanian airs, it has, nevertheless, a flavor of Bohemia with a true Magyar lilt as the trills and swirling passages for strings suggest the cembalo of the Hungarians.

The Tannhauser Overture as the final number was rendered with more precision than fire, and the ever-sublime Pilgrims Chant soaring above the tumultauous "bacchanal" theme, brought the program to an impressing close.

The Program.

Tschaikowsky Smmphony No. 4, F minor, Op. 36. I. Andante sostenuto; moderato con anima in movimento di valse. II. Andantino in modo di canzona. III. Scherzo; Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro. IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco. Beethoven, overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84; Enesco, Rhapsodie Roumaine, A major, Op. 11, No. 1; Wagner, Overture to "Tannhauser."

At the close of the concert Dr. Muck was forced to respond to a curtain call

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

NOV 7 1917

138

DR. MUCK PLAYS ANTHEM TO OPEN LOCAL CONCERT

Apparently oblivious to any stir which his appearance might make, Dr. Carl Muck walked deliberately across the stage of the National Theater yesterday afternoon and led the Boston Symphony Orchestra mechanically through the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner."

As he appeared at the right entrance of the stage a large round of applause greeted him from various parts of the house, which was crowded to the doors. The applause was led and encouraged by several of Dr. Muck's own countrymen, who paraded down the aisles in an effort to stir the applause higher.

A tense feeling of suspense hovered over the audience, which was heightened when one old gentleman of distinguished appearance, jumped to his feet and shouted to the audience to stop the applause. An usher forced him back in his chair for a moment, and before he could rise again the orchestra was playing the National anthem. The music seemed to relieve the tension, as there were no more outbreaks and the concert program proceeded uninterrupted.

At least one holder of tickets resented Dr. Muck's appearance. This ticketholder advertised his tickets for sale, and sold them rather than attend the concert.

Dr. Muck Is Reticent.

The orchestra arrived about 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the train coming in a little behind schedule. From Washington the orchestra was to go to Baltimore, where a concert was to be given tonight, but the Baltimore authorities cancelled the license for the performance.

The musicians will leave sometime this morning for New York, where a concert will be given Thursday night.

"Our concert was started this afternoon with The Star Spangled Banner," said Dr. Muck last night, "just as our concerts have been for the last week, and our other concerts will be."

"You have been reported as refusing to play The Star Spangled Banner. Is there anything you care to say about that report?" Dr. Muck was asked.

"No, there is nothing," he answered. "I have nothing to say about the matter. Maj. Higginson has issued several statements, as you know, and there is nothing more to be said about it."

"I understand you have resigned?"

"Yes, my resignation is in the hands of Mr. Higginson now. I do not know what action he will take upon it, but he has it."

Program a Splendid One.

The splendid and sympathetic interpretation of Tschaikowsky's Symphony in F minor was most pleasing. This symphony, which was composed during the winter of 1877-78, was dedicated to Mrs. von Meck, the composer's benefactress for many years and his best though unknown friend. The treatment of the Scherzo movement, which consists of three contrasting themes, was perfection itself.

Beethoven's Overture to Goethe's "Egmont" followed the symphony, and in its slow, melancholy way served further to bring out the unusual brilliance of the following Roumanian Rhapsodie of Georges Enesco. This rhapsody in A major is founded on various Roumanian airs, which, though undeveloped, appear through the whole theme. This exciting music was most interesting and greatly appreciated by the audience.

The program closed with Wagner's Overture to the opera "Tannhaeuser."

POST

Washington, D. C.

NOV 6 1917

Baltimore Police Board Forbids Appearance of Boston Orchestra

Baltimore, Nov. 5.—The police commissioners of Baltimore today sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theater forbidding the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday the ground that the public safety and or the community would be endangered. Dr. Karl Muck is leader of the orchestra.

The action came at the recommendation of the grand jury, and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting tomorrow at which leading men of the State will denounce the attitude of Dr. Muck toward playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The mass meeting was called by former Gov. Edwin Warfield, whose ancestor, Dr. Charles A. Warfield, led the Ann Arundel countians, who burned the tea-laden ship Peggy Stewart at Annapolis in 1774.

"The kaiser's favorite shall never lead his orchestra here," Warfield said.

Maj. Higgisnon Absolves Dr. Muck.

Boston, Nov. 5.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him, of any disloyalty or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star-Spangled Banner" from their program was made last night by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Maj. Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made.

Maj. Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts, to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Maj. Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been, as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star-Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public recital of the organization in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Maj. Higginson said tonight:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' they played it, and, still further, the request had never been refused.

ENQUIRER
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 1917

MUCK DENOUNCED BY BALTIMOREANS

"Should Have Been Shot," Says Woman—Ex-Governor Warfield Formally Protests

Cardinal Gibbons Sends Letter of Patriotic Approval of Action Banning German Conductor

Special to The Inquirer.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 6.—When the band of the 313th Regiment from Camp Meade playing patriotic airs and fifty men from Company I, of the regiment marching into the Lyric this afternoon with fixed bayonets and marshaled by their company commander, Captain Richard J. Hughes, with big American flags waving from every box and the whole audience cheering the drafted men became soldiers and the sentiments expressed, the spirit of the big meeting called by former Governor Warfield to make formal protest against Dr. Muck's attitude towards the Star Spangled Banner was definitely warlike.

"Should Have Been Shot"

When the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played the "Star Spangled Banner" willing or unwillingly, the applause was deafening. When former Governor Warfield, in referring to the musician, said "He should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a full minute. At its end some large handsome woman who had been waving a great American flag from the box nearest the stage on the right shouted "Muck should have been shot when he said that!" There were shouts of approval and handclapping for the woman.

After the singing of the anthem by the audience Warfield shouted:

"The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art! What does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism? When I read that this alien was coming to Baltimore, I simply had to protest. And you, my friends, show me that I am right!

"This isn't Philadelphia!" shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, No!" shouted the ex-Governor.

Cardinal Gibbons Approves

Then Warfield read a few out of an enormous sheaf of letters written to him, commending his stand. He read letters from Providence, R. I., from persons who had witnessed Dr. Muck's initial affront to the flag and also this patriotic communication from Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the Republic. Thirdly, the Flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

MUCK LEADS ANTHEM AT CAPITAL CONCERTS

Special to The Inquirer.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6.—Dr. Carl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted Nation-wide condemnation, appeared at two concerts this afternoon and tonight at the National Theatre. The audience included many army and navy officers in uniform.

Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of both concerts. When he finished the audience applauded. Dr. Muck bowed acknowledgment.

Many persons who had tickets for the concert gave them up at the last minute and there was talk that they did not wish to hear Dr. Muck. Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, local manager of the organization, said she did not believe the tickets were given up because of this, but rather the inability of the holders to attend.

Caproni Gives Up Trip

By Associated Press.

MINEOLA, N. Y., Nov. 6.—The Caproni airplane, which flew here from Virginia several days ago piloted by Captain A. S. Resnati, of the Italian army, gave up its proposed return flight to Hampton, Va., with ten men today after three starts. Captain Resnati turned back from the first two on account of foggy conditions over the ocean, which would have prevented contemplated observation and photographic work, and on his third effort motor trouble forced him to return. Another attempt will be made Saturday.

n RECORD
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 1917

"KILL MUCK!" IS SHOUT AT BALTIMORE MEETING

Bitter Public Protest in City Where "The Star-Spangled Banner" Was Written.

CARDINAL GIBBONS WRITES

Ex-Governor Warfield Speaks and Resolutions Denounce Prussian Slur.

Special to "The Record."

Baltimore, Nov. 6.—"Kill Muck!" shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was denouncing Dr. Karl Muck to a tremendous gathering of aroused patriots who crowded the big hall. It was in this hall that the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was to have been held tomorrow night. Just before the meeting began, Manager Kinsey ordered the removal of posters announcing the concert.

Shortly after 2 o'clock the band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders with glistening bayonets, marched down the aisle. After a selection by the National Army Band from Camp Meade, the audience sang a number of patriotic songs.

In the course of his address former Governor Warfield read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the latter said he was sorry he could not be present, but was with the gathering in spirit, and paid a glowing tribute to the American flag. In his letter the Cardinal said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

Ark of Covenant, Says Cardinal.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore; secondly, it is the national song of the Republic; thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Captain Hughes, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson, at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals of the army here and the army over there. He concluded:

"Muck's reference to the 'Star-Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave," and he "hoped that Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck." Deafening applause greeted the remark.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Muck for having refused to play the national anthem, thereby showing his contempt. "We consider he has publicly insulted every patriotic citizen, and especially every citizen of Maryland, the State in which the national anthem had its birth," said the resolutions.

Muck Encored at Washington.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, director of the orchestra, was encored this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was given at the end of the program, the audience refusing to leave until Muck returned to the stage and bowed. Such an encore at dignified orchestra concerts is said never to have occurred in Washington before. Secretary of the Interior Lane and party occupied the White House box.

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 19

BALTIMOREANS SCORE MUCK

"Kill Him," Shouts Woman at Protest Meeting Against German— Warmly Received in Washington

Baltimore, Nov. 7.—"Kill Muck" shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric yesterday while former Governor Warfield was voicing the protest of a patriotic gathering against Dr. Karl Muck's action in reference to playing "The Star Spangled Banner" as part of the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts.

The Symphony was to have appeared in this city tonight. The engagement has been cancelled.

Governor Warfield did not once mention Dr. Muck's name.

From the audience came hisses whenever any reference was made to the Symphony conductor.

Captain Hughes, of a Pennsylvania company, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals and of the "Army here and the Army over there." He said:

"Muck's reference to 'The Star-Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave."

Washington, Nov. 7.—Official and social Washington accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra a reception yesterday little less cordial than in former seasons. The concert was largely attended. The applause for Dr. Karl Muck as he stepped on the stage was long and earnest.

"The Star Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Doctor Muck leading.

Secretary of the Interior Lane and Mrs. Lane, Major-General William Crozier and Mrs. Crozier, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mr. and Mrs. Henry May, Mrs. Richard Townsend and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle were among the box-holders.

PUBLIC Ledger
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 11 1917

The Muck controversy and anti-Muck agitation has occupied the minds of the country entirely too much this last week.

Muck and Music vs. Our Boys' Flag

It should have been settled out of hand, as did the Providence people and the people of Baltimore. Philadelphia and Boston, it seems to me, lost an admirable ocasion to behave well and sensibly. Especially Boston. Both, however, showed themselves entirely lacking in a just sense of perspective and of proportion.

We have the honor of belonging to a great country; and we should be a great nation, but this week we showed that we are not, and I am mourning one of my few last illusions. All my life I have loved music and nursed a fond belief that it was a great factor in elevating the soul of man. And, lo! I discovered this week that far from having an elevating influence upon the public mind of Boston and Philadelphia, it had so befogged it that Bostonians who had worked in such wholesouled manner for the Allies, and many lads of whose university were now at the front, actually had, to a man, risen to do honor to a German who had demurred when requested to play their national anthem, going so far as to give him an ovation! And we at war!! And our boys at the front!!!

There is in existence no greater admirer of the sporting spirit than I am. But the situation today in no way represents sport. It is a grim, stern peril which the western world is facing and in the struggle in which we are now engaged, those who are not with us are against us. It is not a question of art. The Germans have shown how quickly the highest art of the world can be annihilated by brute force. And yet in our cities we are giving ovations to German musicians, placing their talents above the feeling of loyalty to the flag and the safety of the country.

As was finely said in a contemporary local paper on Tuesday evening last, Doctor Muck is not of us. He is against us. It is not just to him to blame him for all this; it is in the nature of things. "The blame should rest upon those who keep a man of his tendencies in a conspicuous public position in American life at this time." That is just the point—but there is more to it than this: "Are we to believe that the American people have lost so much of their manhood, that they wish to make a hero of a German musician who is an enemy to this country?"

Philadelphians on Monday night did not have the shocking bad taste to rise to receive Doctor Muck. That depth of inanity was spared us. But Philadelphians DID bestow strong PERSONAL applause as he entered, and in so doing—before he had even played a note—they stultified both themselves and their city. Applause, of course, means approval and indorsement, if it means anything. Is it not time for the public to think a little?

n RECORD
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

Music and Politics.

We are pained to note in The Baltimore Sun some highly uncomplimentary references to Philadelphia because Dr. Muck was not insulted by his audience here when he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," on Monday evening. Most persons would think this an evidence of good breeding, but The Sun opines otherwise. It prefers the Baltimore style, which was to threaten Dr. Muck with personal violence if he should appear there. Accordingly the concert in the Monumental City was given up.

By some curious twist in its mental processes our contemporary connects this broad-minded tolerance of Philadelphia with the result of Tuesday's election, which was virtually a defeat of the Republican gang. On the same day Baltimore had an election, and the Republicans won an important victory over the Democrats. Now put these two facts together, link them up with Dr. Muck, "The Star Spangled Banner," Fort McHenry and Francis Scott Key, and you have a clear idea of the lucidity with which Baltimore judges contemporaneous events.

ENQUIRER
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 1917

MUCK DENOUNCED BY BALTIMOREANS

"Should Have Been Shot," Says Woman—Ex-Governor Warfield Formally Protests

Cardinal Gibbons Sends Letter of Patriotic Approval of Action Banning German Conductor

Special to The Inquirer.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 6.—When the band of the 313th Regiment from Camp Meade playing patriotic airs and fifty men from Company I, of the regiment marching into the Lyric this afternoon with fixed bayonets and marshaled by their company commander, Captain Richard J. Hughes, with big American flags waving from every box and the whole audience cheering the drafted men became soldiers and the sentiments expressed, the spirit of the big meeting called by former Governor Warfield to make formal protest against Dr. Muck's attitude towards the Star Spangled Banner was definitely warlike.

"Should Have Been Shot"

When the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played the "Star Spangled Banner" willing or unwillingly, the applause was deafening. When former Governor Warfield, in referring to the musician, said "He should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a full minute. At its end some large handsome woman who had been waving a great American flag from the box nearest the stage on the right shouted "Muck should have been shot when he said that!" There were shouts of approval and handclapping for the woman.

After the singing of the anthem by the audience Warfield shouted:

"The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art! What does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism? When I read that this alien was coming to Baltimore, I simply had to protest. And you, my friends, show me that I am right!

"This isn't Philadelphia!" shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, No!" shouted the ex-Governor.

Cardinal Gibbons Approves

Then Warfield read a few out of an enormous sheaf of letters written to him, commending his stand. He read letters from Providence, R. I., from persons who had witnessed Dr. Muck's initial affront to the flag and also this patriotic communication from Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the Republic. Thirdly, the Flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

MUCK LEADS ANTHEM AT CAPITAL CONCERTS

Special to The Inquirer.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6.—Dr. Carl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose refusal at Providence to play "The Star Spangled Banner" attracted Nation-wide condemnation, appeared at two concerts this afternoon and tonight at the National Theatre. The audience included many army and navy officers in uniform.

Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of both concerts. When he finished the audience applauded. Dr. Muck bowed acknowledgment.

Many persons who had tickets for the concert gave them up at the last minute and there was talk that they did not wish to hear Dr. Muck. Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, local manager of the organization, said she did not believe the tickets were given up because of this, but rather the inability of the holders to attend.

Caproni Gives Up Trip

By Associated Press.

MINEOLA, N. Y., Nov. 6.—The Caproni airplane, which flew here from Virginia several days ago piloted by Captain A. S. Resnati, of the Italian army, gave up its proposed return flight to Hampton, Va., with ten men today after three starts. Captain Resnati turned back from the first two on account of foggy conditions over the ocean, which would have prevented contemplated observation and photographic work, and on his third effort motor trouble forced him to return. Another attempt will be made Saturday.

n RECORD
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

"KILL MUCK!" IS SHOUT AT BALTIMORE MEETING

Bitter Public Protest in City Where "The Star-Spangled Banner" Was Written.

CARDINAL GIBBONS WRITES

Ex-Governor Warfield Speaks and Resolutions Denounce Prussian Slur.

Special to "The Record."

Baltimore, Nov. 6.—"Kill Muck!" shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was denouncing Dr. Karl Muck to a tremendous gathering of aroused patriots who crowded the big hall. It was in this hall that the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was to have been held tomorrow night. Just before the meeting began, Manager Kinsey ordered the removal of posters announcing the concert.

Shortly after 2 o'clock the band from Fort Howard, followed by 100 khaki-clad Marylanders with glistening bayonets, marched down the aisle. After a selection by the National Army Band from Camp Meade, the audience sang a number of patriotic songs.

In the course of his address former Governor Warfield read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the latter said he was sorry he could not be present, but was with the gathering in spirit, and paid a glowing tribute to the American flag. In his letter the Cardinal said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

Ark of Covenant, Says Cardinal.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore; secondly, it is the national song of the Republic; thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Captain Hughes, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson, at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals of the army here and the army over there. He concluded:

"Muck's reference to the 'Star-Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave," and he "hoped that Key would arise in his grave and haunt Muck." Deafening applause greeted the remark.

Resolutions were adopted denouncing Muck for having refused to play the national anthem, thereby showing his contempt. "We consider he has publicly insulted every patriotic citizen, and especially every citizen of Maryland, the State in which the national anthem had its birth," said the resolutions.

Muck Encored at Washington.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 6.—After he had led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck, director of the orchestra, was encored this afternoon by an audience that filled every available space in the National Theatre. The encore was given at the end of the program, the audience refusing to leave until Muck returned to the stage and bowed. Such an encore at dignified orchestra concerts is said never to have occurred in Washington before. Secretary of the Interior Lane and party occupied the White House box.

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 1917

BALTIMOREANS SCORE MUCK

"Kill Him," Shouts Woman at Protest Meeting Against German— Warmly Received in Washington

Baltimore, Nov. 7.—"Kill Muck" shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric yesterday while former Governor Warfield was voicing the protest of a patriotic gathering against Dr. Karl Muck's action in reference to playing "The Star Spangled Banner" as part of the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts.

The Symphony was to have appeared in this city tonight. The engagement has been cancelled.

Governor Warfield did not once mention Dr. Muck's name.

From the audience came hisses whenever any reference was made to the Symphony conductor.

Captain Hughes, of a Pennsylvania company, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson at Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals and of the "Army here and the Army over there." He said:

"Muck's reference to 'The Star-Spangled Banner' was sufficient to make Francis Scott Key turn over in his grave."

Washington, Nov. 7.—Official and social Washington accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra a reception yesterday little less cordial than in former seasons. The concert was largely attended. The applause for Dr. Karl Muck as he stepped on the stage was long and earnest.

"The Star Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Doctor Muck leading.

Secretary of the Interior Lane and Mrs. Lane, Major-General William Crozier and Mrs. Crozier, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mr. and Mrs. Henry May, Mrs. Richard Townsend and Mrs. Calderon Carlisle were among the box-holders.

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 11 1917

The Muck controversy and anti-Muck agitation has occupied the minds of the country entirely too much this last week.

Muck and Music vs. Our Boys' Flag

It should have been settled out of hand, as did the Providence people and the people of Baltimore. Philadelphia and Boston, it seems to me, lost an admirable ocasion to behave well and sensibly. Especially Boston. Both, however, showed themselves entirely lacking in a just sense of perspective and of proportion.

We have the honor of belonging to a great country; and we should be a great nation, but this week we showed that we are not, and I am mourning one of my few last illusions. All my life I have loved music and nursed a fond belief that it was a great factor in elevating the soul of man. And, lo! I discovered this week that far from having an elevating influence upon the public mind of Boston and Philadelphia, it had so befogged it that Bostonians who had worked in such wholesouled manner for the Allies, and many lads of whose university were now at the front, actually had, to a man, risen to do honor to a German who had demurred when requested to play their national anthem, going so far as to give him an ovation! And we at war!! And our boys at the front!!!

There is in existence no greater admirer of the sporting spirit than I am. But the situation today in no way represents sport. It is a grim, stern peril which the western world is facing and in the struggle in which we are now engaged, those who are not with us are against us. It is not a question of art. The Germans have shown how quickly the highest art of the world can be annihilated by brute force. And yet in our cities we are giving ovations to German musicians, placing their talents above the feeling of loyalty to the flag and the safety of the country.

As was finely said in a contemporary local paper on Tuesday evening last, Doctor Muck is not of us. He is against us. It is not just to him to blame him for all this; it is in the nature of things. "The blame should rest upon those who keep a man of his tendencies in a conspicuous public position in American life at this time." That is just the point—but there is more to it than this: "Are we to believe that the American people have lost so much of their manhood, that they wish to make a hero of a German musician who is an enemy to this country?"

Philadelphians on Monday night did not have the shocking bad taste to rise to receive Doctor Muck. That depth of inanity was spared us. But Philadelphians DID bestow strong PERSONAL applause as he entered, and in so doing—before he had even played a note—they stultified both themselves and their city. Applause, of course, means approval and indorsement, if it means anything. Is it not time for the public to think a little?

n RECORD
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

Music and Politics.

We are pained to note in The Baltimore Sun some highly uncomplimentary references to Philadelphia because Dr. Muck was not insulted by his audience here when he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," on Monday evening. Most persons would think this an evidence of good breeding, but The Sun opines otherwise. It prefers the Baltimore style, which was to threaten Dr. Muck with personal violence if he should appear there. Accordingly the concert in the Monumental City was given up.

By some curious twist in its mental processes our contemporary connects this broad-minded tolerance of Philadelphia with the result of Tuesday's election, which was virtually a defeat of the Republican gang. On the same day Baltimore had an election, and the Republicans won an important victory over the Democrats. Now put these two facts together, link them up with Dr. Muck, "The Star Spangled Banner," Fort McHenry and Francis Scott Key, and you have a clear idea of the lucidity with which Baltimore judges contemporaneous events.

TRIBUNE

s: Providence, R. I.

NOV 1 - 1917

To ask Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" is embarrassing. It is almost impertinent," he says. Why is it embarrassing? Is the anthem too patriotic? Too American? And is it impertinent to ask Dr. Muck to play it because he is the German high-muck-a-muck who has been permitted to run amuck in this country?

Dr. Muck asks "Does the public think the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?" Then, answering his own question, he says: "No. The Symphony Orchestra is a classical musical organization, composed of the finest musicians, with varying temperament and cultivated tastes. To ask them to play some compositions would be almost an insult."

The insult is to be found in Dr. Muck's answer, and the insult is not to a classical musical organization, not to the "varying temperament and cultivated tastes" of "the finest musicians," but to the United States of America. Why should these "finest musicians of cultivated tastes" feel insulted because, forsooth, they are asked to play the national anthem of the country in which they live?

"Art is international," says Dr. Muck. "I have representatives of 25 nationalities in my orchestra. All the nations at war are represented." Well, what of it? These representatives of 25 nationalities are living in this country. They have made their homes here, at least temporarily. They are making a good living here. Does Dr. Muck seriously believe that the non-German musicians in his orchestra would hesitate to play "The Star Spangled Banner" if asked to do so by their conductor?

When Dr. Muck is asked to play "God Save the King," or "La Marseilaise," or the "Garibaldi March" it will be time for his artistic soul and his refined German taste to revolt. Until such time, however, he should remember he is in the United States, not in Germany, and that he is a wise man who, while in Rome, does as the Romans do.

TRIBUNE

s: Providence, R. I.

NOV 1 - 191

MEMBERS OF ART CLUB INDIGNANT

Dr. Muck Denounced by Col. Dyer for Refusal to Play National Anthem.

At the first members' night of the season at the Providence Art Club last evening the club took action on the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in refusing to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concert Tuesday evening.

This action followed a stirring speech by Col. H. Anthony Dyer, a former president of the club, in which he denounced the actron of Dr. Muck in vigorous terms. He assailed the pro-Germanism of Dr. Muck, declaring that he had already been under surveillance in this country. "We don't need Dr. Muck here," he added, "and until the Boston Symphony Orchestra recognizes its debt to America by playing our national anthem it should not be allowed to play here."

As a result of Mr. Dyer's denunciation the Art Club passed the following resolution: "Until the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leader prove to the American people that they are not inimical to what this country stands for they would better not appear in this city."

Members of the Art Club voiced their indignation at the attitude of Dr. Muck here in the strongest terms, many regretting that they did not make a protest in Infantry Hall Tuesday night.

Col. Dyer spoke on food conservation, urging the members of the club to use all their influence to aid the cause of food conservation. In this connection, he said: "The apathy of American people is appalling. The American people of the better classes have grown so materialistic that we are having a hard time to get them to say that they will go without wheat bread on certain days of the week. Unless we realize conditions and conserve our food supply we will have soup kitchens and bread lines all over this country."

The guest of honor was Thomas B. Dawson, delegate for the Commission for Relief in Belgium. His address was on the topic "Conditions in Belgium and France." He declared, after summing up his experiences and observations in Germany, Belgium and England, that "it is the victory in the field that will win the war. We have got to fight. The German military class must be convinced by a decided victory on our part. I want to see all our energies bent on beating the Germans on their own field and not on ours."

The speaker told of many instances of German cruelty and lauded the self-sacrifice and bravery of the Belgians and their great kindness and helpfulness to each other. "The German officers," he said, "are all from the nobility and to those in their own class they are polite. All the rest of humanity is as dirt under their feet. The rest of humanity is not human to them, hence their unutterable brutality."

In speaking of the casualties of the war the speaker said only about 5 per cent. were killed in battle and 85 per cent. of

ENQUIRER

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK HEADS GERMAN PROPAGANDA, IS CLAIM

Special to The Inquirer.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 7.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been, ever since the beginning of the European war, a most violent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

In May, 1915, Dr. Muck was in California. He was approached by one Frederick Greisheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the notorious German weekly, "The Fatherland," on its feet. Greisheimer called Dr. Muck's attention to the attitude of "The Fatherland" for several issues following the Lusitania disaster and other matters, and secured $300 from him to aid that publication. Dr. Muck discovered a few weeks afterwards that Greisheimer was not authorized to make such collection and had him arrested. The man was convicted on Muck's testimony and is now serving sentence in St. Quentin Penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by "The Fatherland," and said he had made many contributions for like purposes.

Dr. Muck's enthusiastic desire to help "The Fatherland" came immediately after that paper had made the statement that the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania because they had sold their souls to England, and another statement, over Viereck's own signature, that if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin, and that the Lusitania case, judging by replies to questions sent out by "The Fatherland," had not changed the opinion of German-Americans with regard to the righteousness of Germnay's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston and the constant companion of Sir Edgar Spever and other men of the same type. By his own statement to the San Francisco courts, he has made it apparent that at least a considerable portion of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the same vicious and traitorous character.

om

idress:

ate

DECLARES DR. MUCK MARTYR PLEA FALSE

Providence Journal Accuses Orchestra Leader of Rabid Propaganda Since U. S. Entered War

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 7.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

"In May, 1915, Doctor Muck was approached in California by Frederick Greisheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the pro-German weekly, The Fatherland, on its feet. Greisheimer obtained $300. Doctor Muck discovered a few weeks afterward that Greisheimer was not authorized to make such collections and had him arrested. The man was convicted on Muck's testimony, and is now serving sentence in San Quentin penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by The Fatherland, and said that he had made many contributions for like purposes.

"Ever since the United States entered the war Doctor Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston. By his own statement to the San Francisco courts he has made it appear that at least a considerable portion of the money that comes to him through the good will of the American public has been spent in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character."

140

PUBLIC Ledger

om

Newspaper

idress: PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

NOV 1 1917

m PUBLIC Ledger

idress: LPHIA, PA.

te NOV 1 19

German Music

MAWKISH sentimentality and arrant nonsense have vied with each other for supremacy in the discussion regarding the performance of German music during the period of the war. Of course, in a time of national crisis calm discussion of anything in connection with the enemy country is almost impossible, and it is an unfailing sign of the high tension of the public mind when a matter of such insignificance can assume such ridiculous proportions.

Beginning with the undignified and wholly unnecessary episode of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the dispute has raged violently over the decision of the Metropolitan Opera Company to give no German operas this year, the cancellation of the Kreisler concerts and the barring of all German music in Pittsburgh by our own orchestra.

Much of this is pure "camouflage," to use the much-overworked French word which has been so unceremoniously pitchforked into our language by the war. No one in his right senses believes for a moment that the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" under the compulsion of public sentiment will make a loyal American out of a German or that any observation of patriotic formalities will in any way change the convictions of a pacifist.

The prohibition of German music for any time, long or short, means a loss to the art as an art, because for the last two hundred years Germany has made the musical history of the world, and in absolute music unquestionably has no rival. However, there is a far larger question to be considered than that of abstract art, and that is our duty to the country in the hour of national trial.

If the continued performance of German music in the United States will furnish material to the propagandists to spread the report in Germany that the American people are not heart and soul in this war, or if it will in any way lead to such a belief in our own country, then all such performances should immediately be discontinued. This is certainly a just and sufficient reason, but to interdict German music on the sole ground that it is the product of a people with whose Government we are at war is hysteria and silliness raised to the nth power. The power of Bach, Beethoven and Mozart over the hearts of men is in no way affiliated with the temporal power which the German military autocracy exercises over their mundane destinies.

Art has no geographical boundaries, but at the same time there should be no limits to what a man should be willing to give up for his country. If there be any real reason to believe that the performance of German music is having an evil effect on our conduct of the war, no matter how slight, it should be stopped at once; if there be no such reason, then let us enjoy the masterpieces which are the heritage of music lovers of whatever nationality the world over. In any event, let sentimentality cease. Let us have our full measure and more of patriotism, but let it be the substance and not the shadow.

HOW great a fire a little matter kindleth! That our public demanded and obtained the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" by a visiting orchestra was not a little matter. It seemed—and it was—important to assert the paramount claim of patriotism, when the right of the national anthem to be heard on a public musical occasion of the sort was called in question. But the smallness was that of the managerial horizon and the administrative intellect in allowing the storm of controversy to grow from a cloud no bigger than a man's hand to an overshadowing menace that seemed to threaten the very existence of that magnificent musical institution, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Why couldn't the callous raker-in of shekels, realizing the sturdy patriotism of Major Higginson, his devoted labor of the years and his prodigious financial sacrifice, at least have shrugged his shoulders and said: "Oh, well, if the public wants its anthem in wartime as much as all that, let us play the music and be done with it."

It has been suggested that Doctor Muck should be interned, but in view of the fact that the manager of the orchestra withheld the request of some of the "best people" of Providence until after the concert, is there not some excuse in the name of the gentleman for sending him to Ellis Island?

The Philadelphia concert was heard with enjoyment unfeigned, though the version of the anthem was remarkably bedecked with persiflage for the first violins. They spent their time in running up and down the fingerboard, while the wind instruments blared the melody, only striking the stride of unanimity on the homestretch of the final couplet.

What a ridiculous muss it was! And yet how serious! It was a clear illustration of the fact that no man or no institution is so high and mighty that he—or it—can afford to tamper with the feelings of the people, especially when it is a public that is sending its sons into the valley of the shadow of death.

141

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 -

The Optimist

IF THE old Liberty Bell down in Independence Hall had human feelings, I wonder what it would have thought and said when it heard how enthusiastically the audience at the Academy of Music Monday evening applauded Herr Dr. Muck for kindly condescending temporarily to can his Kultur and misplay the Star Spangled Banner—the national anthem of the United States of America which, at the present moment, is engaged in a mighty effort to save mankind from the domination of this same Kultur to which Dr. Muck is so devoted!

It must be highly gratifying to red-blooded Americans elsewhere to hear how dwellers in the city of Penn and Franklin did all they could to make Herr Dr. Muck feel that he was performing a signal service in playing the Star Spangled Banner. Of course, it must have made the Hun conductor happy to know that in the birthplace of every principle opposed to the form of government he loves, his "stooping" to the rendition of so inartistic a composition should have been so generously rewarded with evidences of love and sympathy.

Also it will make some ninety-odd million real Americans equally happy to know that Herr Dr. Muck unexpectedly was given the whole of Tuesday and Tuesday evening to mentally masticate this morsel of approbation.

For, on an order from the police authorities of Baltimore, the concert which he and his orchestra were to have given in that city last night was prohibited.

It was prohibited because Baltimore is an American city which won't put up with anyone or anything that isn't for America in a time like this.

Headed by a former governor of Maryland and backed by the most influential men and women in Baltimore, a movement was started to hold a monster mass meeting of protest on the evening scheduled for the concert.

Of course, American independence was not born in Baltimore, but at least some part of it moved there at one time and has grown a large and vigorous family!

The members of this family made up their minds as to their course as soon as news of Herr Dr. Muck's dislike for the Star Spangled Banner as a concert number reached them.

You see the Star Spangled Banner was born in Baltimore and thank God, it still waves there.

Instead of applauding Herr Dr. Muck for playing the Star Spangled Banner in a good deal the same manner that a punished child eats its meal of bread and water, Baltimore made preparations to give Herr Dr. Muck and his muckers a still warmer reception.

The plans got heated to such a degree that the police commissioners feared Dr. Muck might get scorched or even burned beyond the saving possibilities of ambrine, so the concert which had been such a lovefeast in Philadelphia was indefinitely postponed in Baltimore.

Mars and music may not have much in common, and it is my firm conviction that war should not be allowed to interfere with Wagner or any other admirable form of German art.

But when it comes to the case of a German musician who is earning a handsome living in the United States first declining to play our national anthem and then doing it poorly under compulsion, the whole matter passes out of the field of art into the field of patriotism.

Of course, you cannot expect a conductor who believes in Kultur to warm up to anything connected with the philosophy of freedom, but under such circumstances you can expect at least one American city to show such an alien where he gets off.

Therefore, once again thank God for Baltimore.

om EVENING TELEGRAM
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.
e NOV 5 1917

NATIONAL ANTHEM TO BE PLAYED HERE

Dr. Muck Will Direct Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tonight's Concert.

BALTIMORE IS AROUSED

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck still its director, will arrive in this city today for its scheduled concert in the Academy of Music tonight, when "The Star Spangled Banner" will be included in the program. The refusal of the orchestra to play the National anthem led to such a storm of protest that many persons demanded that Dr. Muck, who is a German citizen, be interned or deported for his apparent slight to American patriotism.

There is a disposition now on the part of Major Henry L. Higginson, the Boston millionaire, who is the principal patron of the orchestra, to shoulder the censure that followed the refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Higginson said in Boston today that Dr. Muck never had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and that its omission from the orchestra's programs had been because it interfered with the classical excellence of the programs.

However, Dr. Muck himself stated, before the criticism reached the stage, that later compelled a back down and his own resignation, that he was a German citizen, and as such could not be expected to act the same as an American citizen would act. At the time he was defending his action in not playing "The Star Spangled Banner" after he had been requested to do so by patrons of the orchestra in Providence, R. I., and in New York.

It is not known at what time the orchestra and Dr. Muck will arrive here. The orchestra usually stops at the Bellevue-Stratford while on tour here, but no reservations have been made there, and the members were not registered there after the arrival of the Federal Express from Boston this morning. It is not known, either, whether Major Higginson will accompany the orchestra here.

No disorder is expected to attend the concert here tonight, although warning has been given that if the scheduled concert is given in Baltimore on Wednesday night there will be a riot instead of music. Former Governor Warfield is heading a coterie of citizens who have called a patriotic mass meeting in Baltimore for tomorrow afternoon, the avowed purpose of which is to protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck because of his alleged slight to the American national anthem. Ex-Governor Warfield has notified the Baltimore Police Board that there will be trouble unless the concert is prevented by the authorities. A large number of drafted men from Camp Meade are expected to attend the meeting tomorrow afternoon in Baltimore, and the police fear they may start a riot if the concert is given.

When Dr. Muck resigned, Major Higginson made it clear that he would accept the resignation only with great reluctance, if at all, saying he would regard the resignation of the German director as "the gravest calamity." Since that time he has shouldered the responsibility for "whatever mistakes have been made."

om NORTH AMERICAN
ldress: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7 - 19

SCORES PHILADELPHIA FOR ACCEPTING MUCK

Has Lost Right to Posses Liberty Bell, Speaker Tells Baltimore Patriots

KILL HIM! WOMAN CRIES

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—"Kill Muck," shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was denouncing Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before a tremendous gathering of aroused patriots who crowded the big hall. It was in this hall that the orchestra's concert was to have been held tomorrow. Just before the meeting began, Manager Kinsey ordered the removal of the posters.

Alfred C. Carr, referring to the action of Philadelphia in allowing Doctor Muck to lead a concert there last night, said: "O, City of Brotherly Love, you have lost the right to possess the Bell of Liberty."

In the course of his address, Governor Warfield read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the latter said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands, shall suffer."

Captain Hughes, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson, of Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals and of the army here and the army "over there."

RECORD
s: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 7

A BIT ABOUT STRANSKY AND HIS PERSONALITY

And Some Things He did Before Coming to Gotham's Philharmonic.

HIS ACHIEVEMENTS ABROAD

Studied to Be a Physician, But Lure of Music Won.

A FEW years ago Josef Stransky was an unknown name to most Americans. Only the initiated few in this country understood at that time the importance of the man and the significance of his work.

He had come to New York at the invitation of the directors of the New York Philharmonic Society. Gustav Mahler had died.

Josef Stransky has had a tremendous amount of musical experience. His original intention was to become a physician. In fact, he actually received the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the University of Prague. But while studying in the laboratories young Stransky heard the golden trumpets of Siegfried. Music was his greatest diversion at that time. Finally the call was too strong to resist, and Stransky began the serious study of music. He first studied with Zdenko Fibich in Prague and afterward with Anton Dvorak, of the same city. Then he went to Leipzig and did research work in music with Jadassohn, and from there he went to Vienna, where Robert Fuchs and Anton Bruckner took him up. Returning to Prague, he became acquainted with Angelo Neumann, the general director of the Royal Prague Theatre, the great Wagner propagandist and a close friend of the Bayreuth master. It was this same Angelo Neumann who had discovered such eminent conductors as Anton Seidl, Gustav Mahler, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck among others. He now gave Stranski his first opportunity by permitting him to conduct a festival performance of the Walkuere. Until the rehearsal for this performance Stransky had never wielded a baton. After that came all manner of triumphs, the greatest being the conducting of the 22 Wagner operas at the Royal Opera House, Berlin. His symphonic songs (of course, he is a composer) are said to have made a deep impression.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
EVENING
n PUBLIC Ledger
ress PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 6 - 191
e

NATIONAL ANTHEM DIRECTED BY MUCK

But "Star Spangled Banner" Boston Symphony Style Lacks Heroic Quality

"Nominated in the bond" verbally patched up for the occasion between Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a performance of the "Star Spangled Banner" at last evening's concert in the Academy of Music. Evidently, however, as in the case of Snylock's famous contract, "the quality of mercy" had not been specified. That virtue was but meagerly apparent in a "reading" of the national anthem, at whose opening notes 3000 persons in the audience rose to their feet with electrical fervor.

Passionately present in the minds of the auditors was the expectation of being thrilled. So far at least as any suggestion of musical eloquence was concerned, Doctor Muck punctilliously refused to gratify that hope. That he did direct the "Star Spangled Banner" is a fact as incontestable as a column of figures in the census—and just about as uninspiring.

Void of soul and overweighted with astonishing instrumental embroidery was the national anthem as presented by the Prussian artist. Frivolous whirling figures on the strings curiously reminiscent of the Teutonic "Bacchanale" in "Tannhaeuser" twisted the composition almost out of all semblance to a patriotic song. Perhaps Doctor Muck, in his zeal for "art," sought to treat the "Star Spangled Banner" "symphonically." In any event, the effect was eccentric, finickly and with a flavor of the perverse.

The superfluous orchestral ornamentation very successfully excised all heroism from the song. Imagine the American flag converted into a silk lace "tidy" and some notion of last night's musical preface may be gleaned.

The audience, which had so rapturously applauded the first bars, betrayed a shade less emphasis at the conclusion. During the entr'acte a few musically sensitive persons expressed indignation at the performance. Most of the resentment, however, was tactfully suppressed. On the part of the auditors not a single untoward incident marked the entire evening.

Boston Symphony concerts, traditionally exalted in art, have their equally long-established elements of decorousness, conservatism and good breeding. Not even a performance under the rigid baton of Wilhelm Gericke had less external sensational aspects than last night's program, once the national anthem incident had been closed. Immortal music was superbly played. The enduring qualities of the "Star Spangled Banner" are awaiting a verdict of history—proudly and confidently, it is true, but the decision is as yet delayed. Perhaps that was why Doctor Muck read the piece so queerly, and in a sense, mercilessly. Moreover, "mercy," says the poet, "is above * * * sceptered sway." That Doctor Muck is not is just now a much-discussed actuality.

The remainder of the concert was of the familiar and masterly Boston Symphony pattern. Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony" serenely transcends boundary lines and the splendor of that work was never more impressively set forth than it was last night. In the calm, poetic andante, the whole huge orchestra seemed to play the role of a single inspired virtuoso. Tribute to French art was generously paid in a brilliant interpretation of Berlioz's "King Lear" overture and Hungary had its innings in a rather second-rate symphonic poem by Liszt, the "Prometheus." Musical expression of this composition, however, was one of the first artistic order. Wagner's "Parsifal" prelude closed the program. Doctor Muck has often led the piece at Bayreuth. Its mystical loveliness is enough to melt even a Prussian and Doctor Muck missed none of this appealing quality.

He was applauded after each number, enthusiastically after the symphony, cordially after the other pieces and courteously on his first appearance. He was recalled to the platform after the Beethoven masterpiece and the Wagner offering.

The ticket tax was not collected from season patrons. Their status under the new law seems to be not yet fully determined.

H. T. C.

141

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

The Optimist

IF THE old Liberty Bell down in Independence Hall had human feelings, I wonder what it would have thought and said when it heard how enthusiastically the audience at the Academy of Music Monday evening applauded Herr Dr. Muck for kindly condescending temporarily to can his Kultur and misplay the Star Spangled Banner—the national anthem of the United States of America which, at the present moment, is engaged in a mighty effort to save mankind from the domination of this same Kultur to which Dr. Muck is so devoted!

It must be highly gratifying to red-blooded Americans elsewhere to hear how dwellers in the city of Penn and Franklin did all they could to make Herr Dr. Muck feel that he was performing a signal service in playing the Star Spangled Banner. Of course, it must have made the Hun conductor happy to know that in the birthplace of every principle opposed to the form of government he loves, his "stooping" to the rendition of so inartistic a composition should have been so generously rewarded with evidences of love and sympathy.

Also it will make some ninety-odd million real Americans equally happy to know that Herr Dr. Muck unexpectedly was given the whole of Tuesday and Tuesday evening to mentally masticate this morsel of approbation.

For, on an order from the police authorities of Baltimore, the concert which he and his orchestra were to have given in that city last night was prohibited.

It was prohibited because Baltimore is an American city which won't put up with anyone or anything that isn't for America in a time like this.

Headed by a former governor of Maryland and backed by the most influential men and women in Baltimore, a movement was started to hold a monster mass meeting of protest on the evening scheduled for the concert.

Of course, American independence was not born in Baltimore, but at least some part of it moved there at one time and has grown a large and vigorous family!

The members of this family made up their minds as to their course as soon as news of Herr Dr. Muck's dislike for the Star Spangled Banner as a concert number reached them.

You see the Star Spangled Banner was born in Baltimore and thank God, it still waves there.

Instead of applauding Herr Dr. Muck for playing the Star Spangled Banner in a good deal the same manner that a punished child eats its meal of bread and water, Baltimore made preparations to give Herr Dr. Muck and his muckers a still warmer reception.

The plans got heated to such a degree that the police commissioners feared Dr. Muck might get scorched or even burned beyond the saving possibilities of ambrine, so the concert which had been such a lovefeast in Philadelphia was indefinitely postponed in Baltimore.

Mars and music may not have much in common, and it is my firm conviction that war should not be allowed to interfere with Wagner or any other admirable form of German art.

But when it comes to the case of a German musician who is earning a handsome living in the United States first declining to play our national anthem and then doing it poorly under compulsion, the whole matter passes out of the field of art into the field of patriotism.

Of course, you cannot expect a conductor who believes in Kultur to warm up to anything connected with the philosophy of freedom, but under such circumstances you can expect at least one American city to show such an alien where he gets off.

Therefore, once again thank God for Baltimore.

om EVENING TELEGRAM
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 5

NATIONAL ANTHEM TO BE PLAYED HERE

Dr. Muck Will Direct Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tonight's Concert.

BALTIMORE IS AROUSED

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck still its director, will arrive in this city today for its scheduled concert in the Academy of Music tonight, when "The Star Spangled Banner" will be included in the program. The refusal of the orchestra to play the National anthem led to such a storm of protest that many persons demanded that Dr. Muck, who is a German citizen, be interned or deported for his apparent slight to American patriotism.

There is a disposition now on the part of Major Henry L. Higginson, the Boston millionaire, who is the principal patron of the orchestra, to shoulder the censure that followed the refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Major Higginson said in Boston today that Dr. Muck never had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and that its omission from the orchestra's programs had been because it interfered with the classical excellence of the programs.

However, Dr. Muck himself stated, before the criticism reached the stage, that later compelled a back down and his own resignation, that he was a German citizen, and as such could not be expected to act the same as an American citizen would act. At the time he was defending his action in not playing "The Star Spangled Banner" after he had been requested to do so by patrons of the orchestra in Providence, R. I., and in New York.

It is not known at what time the orchestra and Dr. Muck will arrive here. The orchestra usually stops at the Bellevue-Stratford while on tour here, but no reservations have been made there, and the members were not registered there after the arrival of the Federal Express from Boston this morning. It is not known, either, whether Major Higginson will accompany the orchestra here.

No disorder is expected to attend the concert here tonight, although warning has been given that if the scheduled concert is given in Baltimore on Wednesday night there will be a riot instead of music. Former Governor Warfield is heading a coterie of citizens who have called a patriotic mass meeting in Baltimore for tomorrow afternoon, the avowed purpose of which is to protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck because of his alleged slight to the American national anthem. Ex-Governor Warfield has notified the Baltimore Police Board that there will be trouble unless the concert is prevented by the authorities. A large number of drafted men from Camp Meade are expected to attend the meeting tomorrow afternoon in Baltimore, and the police fear they may start a riot if the concert is given.

When Dr. Muck resigned, Major Higginson made it clear that he would accept the resignation only with great reluctance, if at all, saying he would regard the resignation of the German director as "the gravest calamity." Since that time he has shouldered the responsibility for "whatever mistakes have been made."

om NORTH AMERICAN
ldress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 7

SCORES PHILADELPHIA FOR ACCEPTING MUCK

Has Lost Right to Posses Liberty Bell, Speaker Tells Baltimore Patriots

KILL HIM! WOMAN CRIES

BALTIMORE, Nov. 6.—"Kill Muck," shouted a woman in a box at the Lyric this afternoon while former Governor Warfield was denouncing Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before a tremendous gathering of aroused patriots who crowded the big hall. It was in this hall that the orchestra's concert was to have been held tomorrow. Just before the meeting began, Manager Kinsey ordered the removal of the posters.

Alfred C. Carr, referring to the action of Philadelphia in allowing Doctor Muck to lead a concert there last night, said: "O, City of Brotherly Love, you have lost the right to possess the Bell of Liberty."

In the course of his address, Governor Warfield read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which the latter said:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command.

"In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands, shall suffer."

Captain Hughes, representing General Kuhn and General Nicholson, of Camp Meade, said he was there to voice the protests of his generals and of the army here and the army "over there."

RECORD
s: Philadelphia, Pa.

A BIT ABOUT STRANSKY AND HIS PERSONALITY

And Some Things He did Before Coming to Gotham's Philharmonic.

HIS ACHIEVEMENTS ABROAD

Studied to Be a Physician, But Lure of Music Won.

A FEW years ago Josef Stransky was an unknown name to most Americans. Only the initiated few in this country understood at that time the importance of the man and the significance of his work.

He had come to New York at the invitation of the directors of the New York Philharmonic Society. Gustav Mahler had died.

Josef Stransky has had a tremendous amount of musical experience. His original intention was to become a physician. In fact, he actually received the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the University of Prague. But while studying in the laboratories young Stransky heard the golden trumpets of Siegfried. Music was his greatest diversion at that time. Finally the call was too strong to resist, and Stransky began the serious study of music. He first studied with Zdenko Fibich in Prague and afterward with Anton Dvorak, of the same city. Then he went to Leipzig and did research work in music with Jadassohn, and from there he went to Vienna, where Robert Fuchs and Anton Bruckner took him up. Returning to Prague, he became acquainted with Angelo Neumann, the general director of the Royal Prague Theatre, the great Wagner propagandist and a close friend of the Bayreuth master. It was this same Angelo Neumann who had discovered such eminent conductors as Anton Seidl, Gustav Mahler, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck among others. He now gave Stranskl his first opportunity by permitting him to conduct a festival performance of the Walkuere. Until the rehearsal for this performance Stransky had never wielded a baton. After that came all manner of triumphs, the greatest being the conducting of the 22 Wagner operas at the Royal Opera House, Berlin. His symphonic songs (of course, he is a composer) are said to have made a deep impression.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
EVENING
n PUBLIC Ledger
ress PHILADELPHIA, PA.
e NOV 5 - 91

NATIONAL ANTHEM DIRECTED BY MUCK

But "Star Spangled Banner" Boston Symphony Style Lacks Heroic Quality

"Nominated in the bond" verbally patched up for the occasion between Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a performance of the "Star Spangled Banner" at last evening's concert in the Academy of Music. Evidently, however, as in the case of Shylock's famous contract, "the quality of mercy" had not been specified. That virtue was but meagerly apparent in a "reading" of the national anthem, at whose opening notes 3000 persons in the audience rose to their feet with electrical fervor.

Passionately present in the minds of the auditors was the expectation of being thrilled. So far at least as any suggestion of musical eloquence was concerned, Doctor Muck punctilliously refused to gratify that hope. That he did direct the "Star Spangled Banner" is a fact as incontestable as a column of figures in the census—and just about as uninspiring.

Void of soul and overweighted with astonishing instrumental embroidery was the national anthem as presented by the Prussian artist. Frivolous whirling figures on the strings curiously reminiscent of the Teutonic "Bacchanale" in "Tannhaeuser" twisted the composition almost out of all semblance to a patriotic song. Perhaps Doctor Muck, in his zeal for "art," sought to treat the "Star Spangled Banner" "symphonically." In any event, the effect was eccentric, finickly and with a flavor of the perverse.

The superfluous orchestral ornamentation very successfully excised all heroism from the song. Imagine the American flag converted into a silk lace "tidy" and some notion of last night's musical preface may be gleaned.

The audience, which had so rapturously applauded the first bars, betrayed a shade less emphasis at the conclusion. During the entr'acte a few musically sensitive persons expressed indignation at the performance. Most of the resentment, however, was tactfully suppressed. On the part of the auditors not a single untoward incident marked the entire evening.

Boston Symphony concerts, traditionally exalted in art, have their equally long-established elements of decorousness, conservatism and good breeding. Not even a performance under the rigid baton of Wilhelm Gericke had less external sensational aspects than last night's program, once the national anthem incident had been closed. Immortal music was superbly played. The enduring qualities of the "Star Spangled Banner" are awaiting a verdict of history—proudly and confidently, it is true, but the decision is as yet delayed. Perhaps that was why Doctor Muck read the piece so queerly, and in a sense, mercilessly. Moreover, "mercy," says the poet, "is above * * * sceptered sway." That Doctor Muck is not is just now a much-discussed actuality.

The remainder of the concert was of the familiar and masterly Boston Symphony pattern. Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony" serenely transcends boundary lines and the splendor of that work was never more impressively set forth than it was last night. In the calm, poetic andante, the whole huge orchestra seemed to play the role of a single inspired virtuoso. Tribute to French art was generously paid in a brilliant interpretation of Berlioz's "King Lear" overture and Hungary had its innings in a rather second-rate symphonic poem by Liszt, the "Prometheus." Musical expression of this composition, however, was one of the first artistic order. Wagner's "Parsifal" prelude closed the program. Doctor Muck has often led the piece at Bayreuth. Its mystical loveliness is enough to melt even a Prussian and Doctor Muck missed none of this appealing quality.

He was applauded after each number, enthusiastically after the symphony, cordially after the other pieces and courteously on his first appearance. He was recalled to the platform after the Beethoven masterpiece and the Wagner offering.

The ticket tax was not collected from season patrons. Their status under the new law seems to be not yet fully determined.

H. T. C.

EVENING PUBLIC Ledger

ess PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NOV 1917

DAMROSCH RAPS MUCK 'DEFENSE'

'Cowardly,' Cries N. Y. Symphony Leader—Francis Rawle on German Music

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger:

Sir—As I learn to my astonishment that my interview regarding Doctor Muck and the "Star Spangled Banner" has been entirely misquoted in some of the papers, partly through misleading headlines and because only a very small portion of my interview was printed, I take pleasure herewith in sending you the actual statements which I made at the time and which appeared correctly in most of the New York papers:

If Doctor Muck had spoken up like an honest man and said, "How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?" fair-minded Americans would have accepted his attitude. I myself would certainly not have enjoyed hearing him conduct our national anthem under such circumstances.

But the explanation that he gives is cowardly and evades the real issue. He says, "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing in itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore it would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs. Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra?"

Does Doctor Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by "military bands and ballroom orchestras"? He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty, at a time when our nation is at war, and that, even though he is an "enemy alien," the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time.

The pity of it all is that the feelings of anger which are naturally aroused among our people by such cynical disregard of the sanctity of our national air engender in turn enmity against the music of the German masters of the past. Witness the exclusion of German operas from the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House this winter.

There seems to be every reason why the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an American institution should play our national anthem, but that Doctor Muck, after his extraordinary statements, should not be permitted to conduct it.

WALTER DAMROSCH.

New York, November 5.

TRIBUNE

: Providence, R. I.

NOV 6- 1917

BALTIMORE BARS MUCK ORCHESTRA

Police Forbid Concert To-morrow Night.—Mob Violence Feared.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 5. Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from performing in Baltimore Wednesday night.

As a result of threats of mob violence, in which former Governor Edwin Warfield took a leading part, the grand jury yesterday notified the police commissioners that owing to the fact that the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, the conductor should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore and that the concert should be called off. The police commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

Police Marshal Carter said yesterday afternoon that he was opposed to the concert being given by the orchestra whether under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

Upon learning the action of the Police Commissioner, former Gov. Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting, said:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck and in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra, we would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted."

"The many devotees of music and lovers of the Symphony concert are very much disappointed," Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said. "It should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

n BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

Boston Symphony

Dr. Muck Conducts Orchestra and Plays "Star Spangled Banner"

THE thirty-third season in Philadelphia of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened to the strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner," with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, at the Academy of Music last evening, and aside from the playing of the National Anthem, and the short, spontaneous expression of approval which it called forth, the occasion was unmarked by anything in the way of unusual incident or excitement.

That something out of the ordinary was expected was evident, however, a double line of persons eager to obtain admission extending from the amphitheatre entrance around upon Broad st. for a block or more, many of these being turned away after the house was completely filled, and an air of curiosity also was apparent in the auditorium before the concert began.

Expectations of a demonstration against the noted conductor, who has been the subject of much animated discussion the past week because of his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at one of the orchestra's concerts, were soon dispelled when Dr. Muck made his appearance, quickly stepped to his accustomed place, and, with musicians and audience standing, led the orchestra in America's revered tune. The piece not only was played—it was done with trills. A rippling, running accompaniment in the violins set off the familiar air, played by the other instruments, and the wind-up came with a real flourish that did not fail to arouse the expected enthusiasm. A sincere, unfancified rendering of the Anthem, such as the Philadelphia Orchestra gives at its weekly concerts under the direction of Leopold Stokowski, would have been quite as acceptable, and perhaps even more appropriate, but there was no lack of spontaneity or spirit in the delivery, and the large audience evidently was satisfied. That Dr. Muck did not interpret the applause which followed as a tribute to himself, or as an expression of pardoning good will, was made apparent by his failure to turn and face the audience, or to make any sign of acknowledgment. After as short a pause as was possible, he raised his baton and began playing the Fifth, C minor, Symphony of Beethoven, which was the opening number of the regular program.

The remainder of the program—at least, the two succeeding numbers—seemed not far from tame and commonplace in comparison with the glorious symphony. These were Berlioz's overture to "King Lear" and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Prometheus." Splendid compositions these are, to be sure, of their kind, but in the nature of a "come-down" from the heights of Beethoven's sublime "Fifth." The Berlioz overture may be accepted as indicating some of the romantic passages in the Shakespearean drama and foreshadowing its tragic events. It is expressive, graphic and at times melodious music, written in the easy, fluent style of the French composer, but it is not the finest example of his work.

Liszt also is heard more felicitously in some of his compositions than in this "Prometheus" overture, or "symphonic poem," which seems not very forcibly to suggest the legend it is supposed to elucidate, nor in any particularly striking way to conform to its title.

More to be praised was the effective unfolding of the "Parsifal" prelude, which closed the concert. This beautiful music is Wagner at his best, and it could scarcely be more gloriously played than under the leadership of Dr. Muck, who has conducted many performances of the opera at Beyreuth.

In connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" last evening, it may be remarked that, while the anthem was heard at the opening of the concert, the original intention was to give it at the close. Slips pasted in the programs, stating that the patriotic piece would be played after the completion of the program, were torn out before the audience arrived, and, evidently to avoid possible apprehension or impatience, the familiar strains came at the opening, thus clearing the way for a program which justly was accorded a cordial and appreciative reception.

TRIBUNE

Providence, R. I.

NOV 6- 1917

142

WAR VETERANS ARE AFTER DR. MUCK

Want "The Star-Spangled Banner" Played Before the Beginning of the Program and Not While Audience Is Leaving the Hall.

Although it had been announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has agreed to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in future concerts, in this city and elsewhere, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States are not satisfied with this promise.

At the meeting of Thomas W. Connell Post, No. 45, held at headquarters, 98 Weybosset street, last evening, a committee was appointed and instructed to secure a conference with the Board of Police Commissioners for the purpose of bringing about the enactment of a rule that at all concerts "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played before the beginning of the program.

Thomas W. Connell Post was the first patriotic organization in this city to take action when it was learned that Dr. Karl Muck had refused to include the national anthem in his program for the first of the series of Boston Symphony concerts. A large delegation of members of the post visited Infantry Hall on the evening of the concert with the intention of singing "The Star Spangled Banner" if the orchestra failed to play it, but Maj. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, who heard of the plans, stopped the sale of tickets and therefore the members of the post were unable to secure admission into the hall.

The next day, however, the legislative committee of the post filed an emphatic protest with the Board of Police Commissioners against the granting of further permits to hold concerts to the Boston Symphony Orchestra unless the management agreed to have the organization play the national anthem.

At the meeting last night Commander John J. Boyle pointed out that the playing of the national anthem at the end of a concert is far from being satisfactory. On the contrary, he said, it is an insult to the national hymn to play it amid the noise incidental to the leaving of the hall by the audinece. "It should be playde first or not at all," he said.

A committee composed of William Sneath, chairman; Jean B. Sabate, secretary, of the legislative committee; Commander John J. Boyle, Arthur L. Lake, Oscar E. Lenoir and Ernest Boudreau, was appointed to lay the matter before the Police Commissioners.

A rising vote of thanks was given to the secretary of the legislative committee for the prompt action he took last week in getting the members of that body together to formulate the protest which they filed with the Police Commissioners.

TRIBUNE

: Providence, R. I.

NOV 7- 1917

WOULD BAR DR. MUCK FROM THIS CITY

War Council of Chamber of Commerce Endorsed Request.

The War Council of the Providence Chamber of Commerce unanimously approved yesterday afternoon the action of President Henry A. Carpenter in requesting the Police Commissioners not to grant permission to any band or orchestra to give a concert here if Dr. Karl Muck is to lead it.

The action taken here has been communicated by Secretary Clarence Cotton to the secretaries of commercial organizations in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other cities.

James R. MacColl was appointed local "Volunteer Expediter," a request for such action having been received from the United States Chamber of Commerce. Mr. MacColl will speed up the production of supplies, acting in conjunction with the War Department.

Fuel Administrator George H. Holmes and Chairman Oscar Swanson of the Retail Merchants Division reported a recommendation that illuminated signs be cut off after business hours nightly.

Chairman Richard B. Comstock reported the appointment of the following members of the committee on law matters: John E. Canning, Thomas F. I. McDonnell, William W. Moss, Robert B. Dresser, Michael J. Lynch.

Theodore Francis Green announced, that as chairman of the committee on citizenship, he had appointed the following associates: Dr. Ralph E. Hayward, Knight C. Richmond, Paul C. Nicholson, Luther D. Burlingame, Charles F. Towne, Robert T. Burbank, Patrick P. Curran, Daniel H. Morrissey.

TRIBUNE

s: Providence, R. I.

NOV 7- 1917

CALL KREISLER AN ENEMY

Pittsburgh Women Protest Against Violinist Playing There.

Pittsburg, Nov. 7.—Patriotic Pittsburg women joined their voices yesterday to the storm of protest that has arisen over the proposed appearance of Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian Army officer and violinist, who is scheduled to give a concert at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and play at the Union Arcade Auditorium Saturday afternoon.

Emphatic condemnation of his engagement as unpatriotic and inconsistent with a loyal policy of wholehearted support of the Government's war prosecution was voiced by the members of the Daughters of 1812 at their meeting yesterday. The subject was brought up by Mrs. William Ralston Crabbe, regent of the Dolly Madison Chapter, who asserted that Kreisler was an open enemy of the United States and was sending American money to the succor of an ally of the country with which we are at war. Resolutions were then unanimously adopted protesting against the appearance of Kreisler and Dr. Karl Muck, also billed here for later in the month, and termed in the resolutions "an alien enemy of the United States."

Mrs. John B. Heron, Regent of the Pittsburg Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, also added the indignation of that body to the protest that has arisen here against Kreisler and Muck and while the tickets for the former have sold freely she called upon the buyers to stay away from the concerts to show their loyalty to their own country.

Walter Damrosch of New York, who had been represented in the press here as supporting Dr. Muck in his stand regarding the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," flooded the local papers to-day with extracts from the New York newspapers showing that he had condemned Muck for his attitude.

rom TRIBUNE JOURNAL

ldress: Providence, R. I.

ite NOV 7 1917

CARDINAL GIBBONS SAYS HONOR FLAG

Sent Letter to Baltimore Mass Meeting That Denounced Dr. Muck.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.—A big crowd turned out yesterday afternoon to attend the meeting called by ex-Gov. Warfield to protest against Dr. Muck's being allowed to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A regimental band from Camp Meade was present and 50 men from Company I marched into the hall.

When the resolutions were read declaring that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead the orchestra in this city whether he played "The Star Spangled Banner" willingly or unwillingly, the applause was deafening. When ex-Gov. Warfield, in referring to the musician said, "he should be in an internment camp," the applause lasted almost a minute. At its end a woman who had been waving a flag from a box near the stage shouted: "Muck should have been shot when he said that."

After the anthem was sung, Mr. Warfield shouted: "The day is coming when that anthem will be sung by every nation on the globe. Talk about your musical art—what does art amount to when it is in competition with patriotism?"

"This isn't Philadelphia," shouted a man in the front row.

"Thank God, no," shouted the ex-Governor.

Then Mr. Warfield read a few out of a sheaf of letters written to him, commending his stand. He read this communication from Cardinal Gibbons:

"I regret that I cannot attend the meeting arranged in honor of 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but shall be with you in spirit, and approve with all my heart of the efforts being put forth to surround this sacred emblem of our country with all the respect which it should command. In the first place, the anthem was composed in Baltimore. Secondly, it is the national song of the republic. Thirdly, the flag itself is the embodiment of our political faith, and he who sings this anthem is making a profession of fidelity to the country. As with the Ark of the old covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer."

Played at Capital.

Washington, Nov. 7.—The reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra by officials and social Washington yesterday afternoon was only a little less gratifying than in former seasons, while the applause greeting the much-discussed leader, Dr. Muck, as he stepped on the stage at the National Theatre was long and earnest, with special emphasis from the music-loving gallery.

Although not named on the program, "The Star Spangled Banner" opened the performance, with Dr. Muck leading and the entire orchestra standing.

This was followed by Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4. The program closed with the overture to Tannhauser, which received the applause of the entire house.

Only one box remained empty and less than 50 seats, although some former patrons of the orchestra have relinquished their tickets since the controversy arose over the inclusion of the

Baltimore Warns Muck and Aliens of Danger in Insulting Anthem

Citizens of Town in Which "The Star Spangled Banner" Was Born Hold Protest Meeting

Letter from Cardinal Gibbons Indorsing Gathering Cheered by Thousands in Attendance.—Representatives of Patriotic Societies in Speeches Indorse Police Commission's Action in Placing Ban on Boston Symphony Concert

Special to the Journal.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 6.—Three thousand fellow citizens of Francis Scott Key, with a mighty yell which they tried to make loud enough to be heard in Berlin, gave warning in the Lyric Theatre this afternoon to Dr. Karl Muck and all of his Prussianized countrymen in America that "he courts danger" who insults "The Star Spangled Banner" and, through the national anthem, the flag.

The fact that a Baltimore grand jury and a Baltimore Police Board had already acted to prevent Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra which he leads from giving the concert scheduled for Baltimore Wednesday night had no effect on the great protest mass meeting. Citizens of the town in which the national anthem had its birth had decided to put themselves on record against Dr. Muck and they did.

Probably no greater honor was ever done the memory of Key than at that meeting; and there have been few more inspiring tributes to the flag.

It is certain that, since America entered the war, alien enemies, plotting discouragement and destruction in this country, have been given no more pointed warning of the temper of the American people and what it threatens for the seditious.

WOULD INTERN MUCK.

After former Governor Edwin Warfield, who led the movements for giving voice to Baltimore's protest, had called the meeting to order, the gathering resolved itself into a great plea to the Government to intern not only Dr. Muck, but all enemy aliens who are a menace to the safety of the American people. There was cheer after cheer when this was called for, the mightiest cheer of all coming when Secretary of State Thomas B. Simmons pointed out that the strongest recommendation of the American people was that "deserving cases" be given not less than the "firing squad at sunrise."

In a letter which Cardinal Gibbons wrote to Governor Warfield saying he was "with the meeting in spirit," the Baltimore prelate, referring to the Stars and Stripes, said that, "as with the Ark of the Old Covenant, he who touches it with profane hands shall suffer." The thousands of cheering men and women in the big hall showed that they were willing to see some of the owners of such "profane hands" suffer soon, and prove, not only to Maj. Higginson, backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but to all America, that the "silly trouble" over Dr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem wasn't so "silly," after all.

After Mr. Simmons had said that the "time has come for our attitude to change toward all of those who have not the welfare of America at heart," the crowd showed that it lost no time in changing that attitude.

BAN ON CONCERT INDORSED.

When after representatives of various patriotic societies, Capt. Hughes of the Three Hundred and Fifteenth Infantry at Camp Meade; Civil War Veterans, ministers and others had been called to the platform by Governor Warfield and had voiced their sentiments, Judge Stockbridge offered a resolution. This resolution, condemning Dr. Muck in strong terms, reaffirming the patriotism of American citizens in Baltimore and urging that Dr. Muck be not allowed to lead an orchestra here under any circumstances, was adopted amid the greatest cheers of the afternoon. There wasn't a dissenting voice when Governor Warfield put the question.

The turnout for the meeting was spontaneous. Not a special invitation had been issued. Governor Warfield had notified the people of Baltimore that a meeting was to be held for Americans. The response was overwhelming. The reports of the great crowd which greeted Dr. Muck and his orchestra in Philadelphia Monday evening had spurred Baltimore on to even greater protest.

"God help Philadelphia for the scandalous way in which she received this Prussian last night," cried Governor Warfield, when a member of the audience cried out about the crowd which heard Dr. Muck. Later when reference was made to the way Dr. Muck had "galloped through" the national anthem at the concert in the Quaker City, the Rev. Dr. Alfred H. Barr cried out "Oh, city of brotherly love. You have no right to that bell which pealed out the first news of liberty."

This was cheered to the echo, and, several times thereafter, the name of Philadelphia was hissed. Muck's name brought continued hisses every time it was mentioned.

"SHOOT ALL TRAITORS."

The crowd just wouldn't be restrained. In the midst of the brief addresses which were being made, men and women in the audience, spurred by their patriotic impulses and indignation, broke in with exclamations of all sorts. When one speaker suggested an internment camp for Dr. Muck, a man in the audience shouted, "A wooden box would be a better place!" A woman in the gallery was in favor of "shooting now all traitors." Capt. Hughes said Dr. Muck's action was enough "to make Francis Scott Key rise out of his grave," and, when he added, "I hope he will and haunt Muck till doomsday," the crowd just yelled with delight, and called for Key's ghost.

The adoption of the resolution, amid cheers, and several patriotic airs by the soldiers' band followed, after which Governor Warfield announced the meeting adjourned.

"We will not adjourn sine die, however," he said, "we will just take a recess, to come together again if a new crisis arises, or if we feel it necessary to reffiarm our allegiance to "The Star Spangled Banner."

BULLETIN

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 5 - 1917

'HUNS WITHIN OUR BORDERS' ASSAILED BY DR. M'CONNELL

Union Congregational Church Pastor Condemns Hearst Papers and Denounces Boston Symphony's Attitude Toward National Anthem Here.

"The time has come for a stiffening of the backbone on the part of all loyal citizens and for the determination to be not merely expressed, but enforced, that treason and double dealing and hypocrisy and even indifference shall cease their nefarious work of undermining the nation's honor and sapping the nation's vitality," declared Rev. James E. McConnell, speaking on "The Limits of Forbearance" yesterday at the Union Congregational Church.

"We must withstand with all the might a righteous indignation may employ the assumptions and the depredations of the Huns within our own borders, as well as those who are desecrating the soil of Europe, and polluting the waters of the deep," he continued.

Dr. McConnell's sermon was directed against disloyalty in this country, and he spoke particularly of the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the activities of William Randolph Hearst.

Those who are unwilling to do their part in food conservation, he said, are almost on a par with those who are deliberately disloyal, and upon them should be directed "the pronounced and righteous anger" of the community.

AN AROUSED SENTIMENT.

"We have had during the past week an illustration of what an aroused public sentiment can accomplish," he said, speaking of the Symphony Orchestra incident. "The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Tuesday evening here in our city openly disregarded a perfectly reasonable request that "The Star Spangled Banner" be included in its programme.

"The simple fact was and is that the management was afraid to insist upon a decent regard for America from those who were supposed to be opposed to America. These musicians could live under the Government's protection, and receive the money of the people here. Their leader, Dr. Muck, has received a salary of $28,000. But when it comes to acknowledging our flag and giving any evidence of loyalty to the country that harbors them—they must not be asked to do that, lest they get angry and refuse to play.

"Maj. Higginson and Mr. Ellis appear at last to have come to their senses, and, while we may not have reason to question their patriotism, yet we may very appropriately recommend to them a stiffening of their backbone and a more earnest desire to comply with the reasonable demands of American patriotism, and that they take pains not to come this way again unless they are prepared to comply with these reasonable demands of patriotism."

Referring to William Randolph Hearst, Dr. McConnell said: "It may be difficult to undermine and discredit and catch a man who has built up an influence through his newspapers such as that wielded by Mr. Hearst, but the limits of forbearance for the patriotic citizen have been reached long ago in this direction, and the very least that any one of us can do who cares a picayune for his country is to direct the fire of his indignation and resentment against this system of publications and against the man back of them responsible for their insidious treason.

LIMITS ARE PASSED.

"If ever there has been a time in the history of the world when the limits of the forbearance of God and his people have been reached and passed, that time is now; and those who have reached and passed it are not only the rulers and the people of the Imperial German Government, but all those here who aid and abet her in her ignominious course."

Taking up the food conservation appeal, Dr. McConnell declared: "There is still a considerable number among us not affected by the Food Administration's appeal and not interested in the endeavor. Lame pretexts are being put forth by some who, at least, claim to be respectable members of the community. The only proper attitude toward such as are selfishly indulging themselves in this time of unprecedented need and immeasurable possibilities of evil is one of pronounced and righteous anger.

"What are men and women made of if they are so mightily self-centred and so indifferent to the outcome of the course they are pursuing as to persist in gratifying their physical appetites at the expense of the liberties of the world?"

...n the World

BULLETIN

From

Address: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Date NOV - 6 1917

"The Star Spangled Banner"

The Common Council having passed, in concurrence with the vote of the Board of Aldermen, a resolution requesting the Police Commission to see that "The Star Spangled Banner" is played at all local concerts, we may reasonably expect that hereafter the national anthem will not be subjected to disparaging comment by Prussian musicians or other admirers of German "kultur." The excuse that "The Star Spangled Banner" detracts from a classical programme, particularly if the programme consists mostly of German compositions, of course impresses no one. It is merely a palpable German subterfuge, and the City Council of Providence took the action required by this piece of impudence.

But aside from the question of patriotism involved, it does not appear that there is any convincing reason for excluding "The Star Spangled Banner" from the programme of any concert given in America. The testimony of musicians themselves is clear and convincing. In a letter from the President of the American Federation of Musicians, the playing of the national anthem is advised:

"The American Federation of Musicians feels it is its duty to take notice of your patriotic action in insisting that 'The Star Spangled Banner' should be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The position taken by Dr. Muck, which is to the effect that the playing of our sacred national anthem would interfere with the artistic standard of a musical programme is, in the opinion of the 85,000 musicians belonging to the American Federation, untenable, as the national anthem, so far as we Americans are concerned, expresses love of country, respect for our flag as well as true patriotism, and thereby gives to any programme a distinction far outweighing in nobility of sentiment and descriptive powers any number ever composed during all times by any composer, no matter how illustrious he may be."

The probability is that henceforth the country will hear no more about omitting "The Star Spangled Banner" from concert programmes in Providence or elsewhere.

rk, 1884

Journal

...Providence, R. I.

...V - 4 1917

Camouflage

The Boston Herald makes the following statement with regard to Dr. Karl Muck:

Many foolish, many false statements have been made against him. He has borne himself with dignity; he has busied himself only with music. The most searching governmental investigators have declared him blameless in his behavior as a foreign resident. That the great audience of the Symphony concerts holds him in the highest esteem was shown by the unparalleled tribute paid to him yesterday.

We respectfully suggest that our Boston contemporary must be wearing blinders on its intelligence and cotton in its ears. Dr. Muck has borne himself with the dignity of the professional spy with the added amount of dignity that must be the attribute of any high-minded Prussian who takes from the good will of Americans the money that keeps him in luxury and then refers to them as "cattle" and "swine." When the Boston Herald declares that the Government investigators have given Dr. Muck a clean bill of health, it makes a statement absolutely without foundation. The United States Government has not given Dr. Muck a clean bill of health, and the evidence of his anti-American activities would make any such deplorable act impossible, in spite of the fact that Dr. Muck is now seeking, through certain "Americans" who think they have political influence, to secure this certificate of character. The "unparalleled tribute" which the Herald says was paid to Dr. Muck by the Symphony audience in Boston last week, was paid, as the Herald very well knows, to the triumph of American patriotic sentiment over German skulduggery, when Dr. Muck was compelled, in order to save his skin and the future of the Symphony Orchestra, to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV - 6 1917

BALTIMORE GRAND JURY FORBIDS MUCK CONCERT

Police Board Warned Grave Disorders Might be Caused

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader's Antipathy to "The Star Spangled Banner" Results in Action in Maryland City, Where Theatre Manager is Notified That Concert Will Not be Permitted. Police Marshal States That He is Fearful of Public Demonstration Because of the Intense Feeling Aroused.—Big Patriotic Meeting Arranged for To-day.

Baltimore, Nov. 6.—Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from performing in Baltimore tomorrow night. As a result of threats of mob violence and indignant protests, in which agitation former Governor Edwin Warfield, descendant of a distinguished Revolutionary family, took a leading part, the grand jury yesterday notified the Police Commissioners that, owing to the state of the public mind and the fact that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, the Prussian conductor should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore, and that the concert should be called off. The Police Commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

Police Marshal Carter said yesterday afternoon that he was opposed to the concert's being given by the orchestra, whether under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The Marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused, he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

On learning the action of the Police Commissioner, former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting for to-day, said:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic programme.

"The grand jury's protest and the Police Commissioner's action will be read from the stage at the meeting to-morrow, and resolutions will be passed for the playing of the anthem in the future."

"The many devotees of music and lovers of the symphony concert are very much disappointed," Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said. "It should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck. Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

m TRIBUNE
ress: Providence, R. I.
e NOV 9 - 1917

DR. MUCK LED ANTHEM BUT WAS NOT CORDIAL

Made No Response to the Vociferous Applause of Audience.

New York, Nov. 9.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

Dr. Muck stood with his back to the audience a third of a minute while the handclapping went on. As he showed no signs of unbending, and as the majority of the 2500 persons in Carnegie Hall seemed in a good-naturad mood, the German conductor—who at first had refused to lead "The Star Spangled Banner" and then did so after tendering his resignation—was allowed to begin the evening's program.

Dr. Muck led the national anthem badly and the orchestra played even worse, a fact not due to their being asked to stand. Third rate orchestras do much better.

But there was no outward show of antagonism by any part of last evening's audience toward the man who has aroused so much hostile feeling and whose professional presence in some cities will not be tolerated.

To speak truthfully, Dr. Muck was most warmly received by at least one-fourth of the Carnegie Hall audience. Perhaps 200 of the orchestra seat smart folk applauded the Prussian musician the moment he came in sight. Three-quarters of a minute later Dr. Muck began his concert.

Journal
Providence, R. I.
NOV - 4 1917

Dr. Muck—and Some Others.

After successfully flaunting public sentiment and outraging audiences in various cities, by declining to play "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence.

For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude towards this particular community.

Dr. Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy Ed, and Bernstorff.

Next!

Journal
Providence, R. I.
NOV - 4 1917

DR. MUCK'S RESIGNATION

(From the New York World)

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brings the controversy over his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" to an abrupt end by resigning his post after conducting a performance of the national anthem. If the manner of his leaving was theatrical, the action was heroic and in the best sense professional.

But it was obvious that the question was not one of musical art so much as of patriotism. The Boston conductor's apologists have laid stress on his alien birth, one prominent New York orchestra leader pointing out that as Dr. Muck "is a loyal citizen of Prussia it would be hypocritical for him to conduct "The Star Spangled Banner' while we are at war with Germany." Dr. Muck himself in a public statement said: "I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally, one could not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The "hypocrisy" involved being thus the violation of the symphony leader's loyalty to Prussia and not of his loyalty to musical art, the indicated way out of the difficulty was for him to resign. If it was unpatriotic for him to play the American national anthem, it was unpatriotic for him to accept American money in payment for his services. No doubt the controversy has had on its face some of the aspects of a tempest in a teapot. But it is from such small beginnings that serious issues arise, and it is well to have it decided before the question became more acute that patriotism is a consideration to which minor matters of musical prejudice must curtsy in a loyal nation in time of war.

(From the New York Times)

However painful it may have been for Dr. Karl Muck to lead his admirable orchestra through the mazes of "The Star Spangled Banner," and however sincerely as a musician he may disapprove of its progressions and as a German of its associated meaning, it would have been judicious for him before refusing to play it to consider the inevitable results of the refusal. Had he done so, a man of his intelligence could not have failed to see that thus and now to offend and irritate the great mass of the American people would not only bring deep disfavor on himself, but would do a disservice of no small importance to every man, woman and child of German birth or descent now living in the United States.

(From the Boston Post)

The controversy that has been raging about the refusal of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent Providence concert, reached a crisis yesterday afternoon—and peace still reigns. Major Higginson gave orders that the anthem be played at the end of the concert, and it was played, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton. Moreover, it will be played at all subsequent concerts of the orchestra.

It is well to have the principle of the thing settled, and settled right. Even if "The Star Spangled Banner" is not an artistic part of a symphony concert, the times have made it patriotically appropriate. It is played in all the other large orchestral concerts of the country, as very likely some distinctively German anthem is played at classical concerts in Berlin. It should do everybody good at Symphony Hall to hear it and acknowledge it appropriately.

Dr. Muck's resignation is in Major Higginson's hands, but its acceptance would not seem to be demanded. The official national anthem wins, and if Dr. Muck shows discretion, the incident may be considered as closed for the present.

LETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 5 - 1917

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO OPEN TOUR TO-NIGHT

Muck Will Play National Anthem in Philadelphia.

Boston, Nov. 5.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left yesterday for Philadelphia where it will give a concert his evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

As to the objections against Dr. Muck because he is a German, it is pointed out that the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, 13 of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, 12 of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

No word came yesterday about the status of the resignation of Dr. Muck. Maj. Higginson adhered to his announced position that Muck's loss would be a disaster, and if the acceptance of his resignation is forced it will mean the end of the orchestra. The Major pays Muck $18,000 a year, or $3000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra. In 1914 Muck purchased a $30,000 house in the Fenway section.

Muck was obtained for the Boston Symphony by Charles A. Ellis, the manager. He was then conducting the Royal Opera in Berlin, and had to get the Kaiser's permision to come here in 1906, when he made such a success that his leave was extended for the next season. In 1912 he resigned from the Berlin opera to come to Boston, apparently much to the displeasure of royal circles. The question was raised whether the artistic temperament of the conductor had not rebelled against the imperial dominance which restricts the scope of any conductor at the Berlin opera. The matter was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, inspired court newspaper, hinted that Muck had let American gold lure him from a position of honor in the Fatherland. But Representative Kopsch arose in the German house in his defence. He criticised "that despotic authority of Prussiam militarism which extends even to the temples of the Muses," and accused Count von Huelsen-Haelsen, intendent of the Royal Opera House, for attaining "bureaucratic domination at the cost of artistic merit."

HIGGINSON ABSOLVES MUCK OF ANY DISLOYAL INTENT

Major Takes Blame Upon Himself for Mistakes Made.

Boston, Nov. 5.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star Spangled Banner" from their programmes was made last night by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Maj. Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by criticism from citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence, of the omission of the national anthem from the programme of the concert in that city last week.

Maj. Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Maj. Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been, "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the orchestra in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Maj. Higginson said last night:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it, and, moreover, the request had never been refused.

"The plan of this orchestra was the enjoyment and education for our fellow citizens. On one point I must see—the orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words but in deeds and in trust."

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV - 61917

BALTIMORE GRAND JURY FORBIDS MUCK CONCERT

Police Board Warned Grave Disorders Might be Caused

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader's Antipathy to "The Star Spangled Banner" Results in Action in Maryland City, Where Theatre Manager is Notified That Concert Will Not be Permitted. Police Marshal States That He is Fearful of Public Demonstration Because of the Intense Feeling Aroused.—Big Patriotic Meeting Arranged for To-day.

Baltimore, Nov. 6.—Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been barred from performing in Baltimore tomorrow night. As a result of threats of mob violence and indignant protests, in which agitation former Governor Edwin Warfield, descendant of a distinguished Revolutionary family, took a leading part, the grand jury yesterday notified the Police Commissioners that, owing to the state of the public mind and the fact that the appearance of Dr. Muck might lead to grave disorder, even bloodshed, the Prussian conductor should not be permitted to appear before the public in Baltimore, and that the concert should be called off. The Police Commissioners accordingly notified the manager of the Lyric that the concert would not be permitted.

Police Marshal Carter said yesterday afternoon that he was opposed to the concert's being given by the orchestra, whether under the direction of Dr. Muck or not. The Marshal declared that because of the intense feeling that has been aroused, he was fearful of a public demonstration should the concert be permitted.

On learning the action of the Police Commissioner, former Governor Warfield, who has arranged a big patriotic meeting for to-day, said:

"The action of the commissioners follows, of course, upon a tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Muck, and is in the interest of peace and order. Whether the commissioners had acted or not, Muck would never have conducted the concert. He would never have reached the theatre, and he will never conduct another concert in Baltimore. We never had any objection to the orchestra. We would have been willing for the concert to take place if somebody else had conducted. The man we were after was the Prussian who said, 'To hell with your flag and your national anthem.' We were after the man who said our 'Star Spangled Banner' was not fit to be included in an artistic programme.

"The grand jury's protest and the Police Commissioner's action will be read from the stage at the meeting to-morrow, and resolutions will be passed for the playing of the anthem in the future."

"The many devotees of music and lovers of the symphony concert are very much disappointed," Director Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory of Music said. "It should not be lost sight of that the Boston Symphony is strictly a reputable organization. A distinction should be made between it and Dr. Muck.' Cancellation of the concert is nothing short of a catastrophe."

m TRIBUNE
ress: Providence, R. I.
e NOV 9 - 1917

DR. MUCK LED ANTHEM BUT WAS NOT CORDIAL

Made No Response to the Vociferous Applause of Audience.

New York, Nov. 9.—Dr. Karl Muck led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night when it played "The Star Spangled Banner." It did not appear, however, to be gracious leadership, for Dr. Muck refused obstinately to acknowledge vociferous applause after the performance of the anthem that he considers "inartistic."

Dr. Muck stood with his back to the audience a third of a minute while the handclapping went on. As he showed no signs of unbending, and as the majority of the 2500 persons in Carnegie Hall seemed in a good-naturad mood, the German conductor—who at first had refused to lead "The Star Spangled Banner" and then did so after tendering his resignation—was allowed to begin the evening's program.

Dr. Muck led the national anthem badly and the orchestra played even worse, a fact not due to their being asked to stand. Third rate orchestras do much better.

But there was no outward show of antagonism by any part of last evening's audience toward the man who has aroused so much hostile feeling and whose professional presence in some cities will not be tolerated.

To speak truthfully, Dr. Muck was most warmly received by at least one-fourth of the Carnegie Hall audience. Perhaps 200 of the orchestra seat smart folk applauded the Prussian musician the moment he came in sight. Three-quarters of a minute later Dr. Muck began his concert.

Journal
s: Providence, R. I.
NOV - 41917

Dr. Muck—and Some Others

After successfully flaunting public sentiment and outraging audiences in various cities, by declining to play "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence.

For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude towards this particular community.

Dr. Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy Ed, and Bernstorff.

Next!

Journal
s: Providence, R. I.
NOV - 41917

DR. MUCK'S RESIGNATION

(From the New York World)

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brings the controversy over his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" to an abrupt end by resigning his post after conducting a performance of the national anthem. If the manner of his leaving was theatrical, the action was heroic and in the best sense professional.

But it was obvious that the question was not one of musical art so much as of patriotism. The Boston conductor's apologists have laid stress on his alien birth, one prominent New York orchestra leader pointing out that as Dr. Muck "is a loyal citizen of Prussia it would be hypocritical for him to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' while we are at war with Germany." Dr. Muck himself in a public statement said: "I am not a naturalized citizen. Naturally, one could not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

The "hypocrisy" involved being thus the violation of the symphony leader's loyalty to Prussia and not of his loyalty to musical art, the indicated way out of the difficulty was for him to resign. If it was unpatriotic for him to play the American national anthem, it was unpatriotic for him to accept American money in payment for his services. No doubt the controversy has had on its face some of the aspects of a tempest in a teapot. But it is from such small beginnings that serious issues arise, and it is well to have it decided before the question became more acute that patriotism is a consideration to which minor matters of musical prejudice must curtsy in a loyal nation in time of war.

(From the New York Times)

However painful it may have been for Dr. Karl Muck to lead his admirable orchestra through the mazes of "The Star Spangled Banner," and however sincerely as a musician he may disapprove of its progressions and as a German of its associated meaning, it would have been judicious for him before refusing to play it to consider the inevitable results of the refusal. Had he done so, a man of his intelligence could not have failed to see that thus and now to offend and irritate the great mass of the American people would not only bring deep disfavor on himself, but would do a disservice of no small importance to every man, woman and child of German birth or descent now living in the United States.

(From the Boston Post)

The controversy that has been raging about the refusal of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent Providence concert, reached a crisis yesterday afternoon—and peace still reigns. Major Higginson gave orders that the anthem be played at the end of the concert, and it was played, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton. Moreover, it will be played at all subsequent concerts of the orchestra.

It is well to have the principle of the thing settled, and settled right. Even if "The Star Spangled Banner" is not an artistic part of a symphony concert, the times have made it patriotically appropriate. It is played in all the other large orchestral concerts of the country, as very likely some distinctively German anthem is played at classical concerts in Berlin. It should do everybody good at Symphony Hall to hear it and acknowledge it appropriately.

Dr. Muck's resignation is in Major Higginson's hands, but its acceptance would not seem to be demanded. The official national anthem wins, and if Dr. Muck shows discretion, the incident may be considered as closed for the present.

LETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I. 114
V 5 - 1917

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO OPEN TOUR TO-NIGHT

Muck Will Play National Anthem in Philadelphia.

Boston, Nov. 5.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left yesterday for Philadelphia where it will give a concert his evening, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting. He will lead the orchestra in the final number, "The Star Spangled Banner." Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who maintains the orchestra, will probably be at the concert if there are indications that any difficulties will arise.

As to the objections against Dr. Muck because he is a German, it is pointed out that the 110 members of the orchestra have a large representation of subjects of other belligerents than the Central Powers. There are 41 Germans, including Dr. Muck, of whom 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States. There are nine Austrians, three of whom are naturalized. Fifteen native Americans are members of the orchestra. Among the others are three subjects of Italy, one of Poland, 13 of Holland, six of Belgium, six of Russia, 12 of France, five of Great Britain and one of Bohemia. In addition there are two natives of Belgium who are naturalized Americans, and one Italian and one Frenchman who are naturalized.

No word came yesterday about the status of the resignation of Dr. Muck. Maj. Higginson adhered to his announced position that Muck's loss would be a disaster, and if the acceptance of his resignation is forced it will mean the end of the orchestra. The Major pays Muck $18,000 a year, or $3000 more than last year's deficit for the orchestra. In 1914 Muck purchased a $30,000 house in the Fenway section.

Muck was obtained for the Boston Symphony by Charles A. Ellis, the manager. He was then conducting the Royal Opera in Berlin, and had to get the Kaiser's permision to come here in 1906, when he made such a success that his leave was extended for the next season. In 1912 he resigned from the Berlin opera to come to Boston, apparently much to the displeasure of royal circles. The question was raised whether the artistic temperament of the conductor had not rebelled against the imperial dominance which restricts the scope of any conductor at the Berlin opera. The matter was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag. The Lokal Anzeiger, inspired court newspaper, hinted that Muck had let American gold lure him from a position of honor in the Fatherland. But Representative Kopsch arose in the German house in his defence. He criticised "that despotic authority of Prussiam militarism which extends even to the temples of the Muses," and accused Count von Huelsen-Haelsen, intendent of the Royal Opera House, for attaining "bureaucratic domination at the cost of artistic merit."

HIGGINSON ABSOLVES MUCK OF ANY DISLOYAL INTENT

Major Takes Blame Upon Himself for Mistakes Made.

Boston, Nov. 5.—A statement absolving Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the men under him of any disloyal or disrespectful intent to omit "The Star Spangled Banner" from their programmes was made last night by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. Maj. Higginson took upon himself blame for any mistakes made. The statement was brought forth by criticism from citizens and certain patriotic organizations in Providence, of the omission of the national anthem from the programme of the concert in that city last week.

Maj. Higginson said he received a request from some Providence women unknown to him and not subscribers to the orchestra concerts to have the anthem included in the Providence concerts. The request was not communicated to Dr. Muck or the orchestra, Maj. Higginson said, and they knew nothing about it until they had returned to Boston, the concert having been, "as usual, quiet and well received."

After the publicity given the criticism of the orchestra in Providence "The Star Spangled Banner" was made a feature of the regular public rehearsal of the orchestra in this city Friday afternoon. Referring to this, Maj. Higginson said last night:

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it, and, moreover, the request had never been refused.

"The plan of this orchestra was the enjoyment and education for our fellow citizens. On one point I must see—the orchestra, under Dr. Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years, and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words but in deeds and in trust."

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 1 31917

SOME PERISCOPICS ON TIMELY TOPICS

"The Star-Spangled Banner," notwithstanding Dr. Karl Muck—and Mr. Higginson—is always itself the Key to every situation that is liable to precipitate a patriotic musical riot. Baltimore, having repudiated Dr. Muck and his orchestra, shows how the spirit of the people can be stirred wherever there is a case of such a kind to deal with.

Those who will—or do—not salute the Stars and Stripes are enemies of Old Glory and of Uncle Sam & Co., and should, if they will not, figuratively, wrap the flag about them, be given a coat of more suitable tar and feathers.

"The Star Spangled Banner" having just escaped being thrown on the muck heap by a Prussian subject straying in our midst—for "purposes of revenue er only"—it would seem as if this muckraker should himself be mucked. Of course, muck has its uses, but, as Bacon is recorded as having remarked about money, "it is not good unless it is spread."

The German press feign facetiousness over the capture of American "buddies" at the front, saying that the American boys will "now learn something to their advantage of the great German firm of Hindenburg & Co." Now if these German editors would just interview these "buddies" they might learn something to their greater advantage of Uncle Sam & Co.

"The trouble with this war," a German statesman is quoted as saying, "is that it will be ten years after it is over before I can go to London, twenty before I can go to Paris."

Which shows how dissatisfied the Germans are with their own home life. If, accustomed to visit Paris and London, to get a little of the sunshine of these happier places into his chilly system, this statesman feels that the reception he would get would only be commensurate with the estimate that would be held of his own people by the Parisians and Londoners, he will have to be content with going to that other place, which so many of his neighbors believe is now so well prepared for him and to which so many of his countrymen have been, as politely as the mention of the place would admit, consigned, especially the Kaiser. For there will be no other place on earth or out of the sun where the Hun will be welcome. He apparently has taken note of that unmistakable fact already. It will be a hot time in the old town that night the Hun arrives from the place he has lost in the sun.

Germany, as on former occasions, affects to sneer at the "coming of the Americans." That, of course, we can understand—as we have come to have some clearer understanding of her mental process than she has of us—and so it is likely that she realizes only too well the menace which the coming of the United States in the war is to her. And that she is making her greatest effort and plunge in Italy before the storm bursts would seem evident.

...at, as the orchestra ... first ...umber? A. SHARP.
Providence, Oct. 31.

...bout Time for This Country to Wake Up

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
In connection with the recent appear...nce of "Kaiser" Muck in our midst, ...hat about those "almost" loyal Ameri...ns who remained passive in their seats ...d listened to a concert directed by ...ch a person? While not afflicted with ...ch "kultur," at such a time, I realize ...hat a gratification it should be to me ... be so after seeing what it allows

A VOICE CRYING IN THE WILDERNESS

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
Dr. Muck and Mme. Farrar seem to have roused Providence to a terrible pitch. The "artist" who produced the cartoon about Muck raking and the "Providence woman" who spilled patriotism all over your editorial page in Thursday's issue are probably well-meaning persons, but why so hot?

A wave of hysteria and intolerance is sweeping over this land. The country is full of people of inflated importance and under the guise of patriotism they are certainly having their innings.

This is a crucial time, as the platitudinarians say, and we may as well try to keep our heads. Roger Williams used to preach not many miles from Westminster street, but there is no record that he resorted to stage thunder and black magic in securing religious liberty—which logically leads to liberty in various other lines.

Williams did not like Quakers, but he managed to stand for them, and it is possible that he set a pretty good example.

Of course Providence wasn't a cosmopolis when Williams dwelt there, and it had no Thunderer to explain why Malone quit his job in New York city—still the past is not devoid of inspiration just because this is the present.

HENRY WATERMAN.
Hyannis, Mass., Nov. 2.

...vider...
NOV - 4 191...

What Rhode Island Thinks of Dr. Karl Muck

Journal Readers from Widely Scattered Districts Roundly Condemn German Leader of Symphony Orchestra for Omitting "The Star Spangled Banner"

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
We have heard so much about one Karl Muck and Herr Frederick Schytte of tne Leipsic Conservatory of Music, not to mention "Almighty Joe" Weber, the President of the American Federation of Musicians and that lot of German "moosicikers" that one would really like to know just who they are, or if they are any better than some of our prominent American musicians.

For my part I think not, and capable as they are we can find some men just as capable; if they are not quite as good, let us be Americans and think they are better.

The trouble is that the American public has flattered these people so much and given them such big fat salaries that they've got a swelled head over it. They come over here and imagine that we are far inferior to them in every line, especially musically, that the Germans are the only real musicians; under the guise of bands and orchestras, some of these "windjammers," fiddlers, and others have been acting as spies and all that to advance "Kultur" for the Almighty (?) Kaiser; and they've got away with it at that.

To go back to Muck and the others: Who is he that he is too good to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner?" Supposing the positions were changed and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was playing in Germany, under an American conductor; how far would they get if they refused to play "Die Wacht am Rhein" or "Deutschland Uber Alles?" and furthermore they'd think an American conductor going around at the head of an organization had a galvanized gall in a case similar to this. It is doubtful if he would dare to appear in public.

This Muck is an enemy alien in my opinion, as much as a number of others, and if he can go around this way, free to do as he pleases, it is only fair that these others ought to be allowed the same privilege. What he does will only more than please German sympathizers, and anti-American societies who are out to put a stumbling block in the path of our affairs, and will encourage a lot of disrespect amongst our people who feel indifferent toward the administration.

As far as these Germans being the greatest musicians in the world that is a pretty bold statement to make. I have seen the best of them and they were no better than our own representative American performers. Of course, we know that Verdi, Rossini, Paderewski, Balfe, Wallace, Benedict, Elgar, Sullivan and hundreds of others were Germans so we'll have to admit they are the best musicians, and that their music is the finest, and while the "Star Spangled Banner" is not so classic (?) as "Die Wacht am Rhein" they might have played it to please the audience who were paying for their "Kultured" peoples dinners.

When the London Symphony Orchestra visited this country it was mentioned that it was the equal of any organization in the world and being one of those who heard it I feel capable of judging that it was as good as the Boston or any other I have heard. The very noticeable thing about it was the absence of this "Sauer-Kraut, limburger cheese" element.

Anybody who has travelled or worked with the musical profession knows just how they get along with these German musicians and just how much use they have for anybody outside of a German. In some places, if you can't speak German you have as much chance as a snow ball in the hot springs of Arizona.

As far as giving this Muck a chance to play the national anthem goes, he should not get it, because it is only a bluff when he does it. He should be chased back to Germany and all his sympathizers with him. Show him no more respect than would be shown an American in his position in Germany. If American audiences are willing to subscribe to these concerts, they should be favored. It was no imposition to ask that the piece be played especially at this time. In the words of the old Irish saying, "bad luck to him and his lot!" Give an American a chance from now on.

JAMES ROONEY.
Providence, Nov. 1.

Why Do Americans Patronize Dr. Muck?

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
What would become of an American in Germany who refused to play Germany's national anthem?

We all know—he would be shot at once or put in prison. The same thing should be done to any German in this country—and the sooner the better. Why do true Americans patronize such a creature?

L. C. S.
Providence, Nov. 1.

Prohibit Concerts Conducted by German Leader

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
The manager and Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ought to be prohibited from giving concerts in the United States while the war is on. Any man that refuses to play the "Star Spangled Banner" is a dangerous person.

When the reporter of the Journal asked Mr. Ellis if the "Star Spangled Banner" was to be played, and he replied, "I think not," then the concert should have been stopped. America will have to put its foot down hard on impudent men like Dr. Karl Muck.

All enemy aliens should be interned. It would save millions of dollars and lives.

F. HUDSON.

Americans Were Replaced by Germans

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
There are so many who are interested in good music and who might consider it a catastrophe if the Boston Symphony Orchestra were disbanded, that it may be well to present the real facts of the case.

First of all, let it be understood that there would be no difficulty in organizing an orchestra fully equal, if not better, than the present Boston Symphony. No one denies the ability of Karl Muck as a leader, but his orchestra is distinctly German; anyone who knows him knows how arbitrary he is. He has dismissed at least 16 of the best men simply because they were American to make room for players that he imported from Germany.

Some of the men dismissed were superior to the men who replaced them. We have in this country the American Musicians' Association, whose membership embraces all our ablest and best musicians; for example, such organizations, with their famous conductors, as the New York Philharmonic, the New York Symphony, the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra, Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Sousa, Creatore and Arthur Pryor with their bands, and all the first-class musicians in the country.

It is a rule of the Musicians' Association that one applying for membership, if not a native of this country, must take out his first papers and express his intention of becoming a citizen. When the Boston Symphony Orchestra was requested to join the organization the management refused, giving as a reason, they wanted to be free to import musicians whenever they needed them.

Col. Higginson has stated that if the Boston Symphony Orchestra were disbanded its members would have no means of livelihood. That is so, for they could not be employed by the American Musicians' Association. Let the German players go home to fight for Germany, as so many of the best musicians of France and Belgium are doing for their country.

We have plenty of first-class musicians fully their equal in this country. The writer of this letter is an American born who is not a professional musician, but who loves music, but loves his country too much to get his music from the baton of Karl Muck and his German players, who are enemies of this country—perhaps some of them German spies in the employ of the Kaiser.

"AMERICAN."
Providence, Nov. 2.

Refusal to Play National Anthem Was an Outrage

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
The refusal of Dr. Muck to allow his musicians to play "The Star Spangled Banner" on Tuesday evening was an outrage. Is it possible that the citizens of Providence do not realize the insult that has been put upon them?

Is there any city in Germany where an American conductor could take his orchestra and calmly and insolently ignore a request to play a national hymn, also to insist upon a programme made up entirely of American composers? The Germans would rise as one man and the life of that man would not be worth a shoestring.

Ye gods, what are we American people dreaming about? Thousands upon thousands of our splendid boys and men have sailed and will sail for France to fight the most brutal people the world has ever known. They will be taken prisoners, subjected to treatment which only such brutes as these could devise, and, if they come back to us at all—how many will be maimed and helpless for life.

Yet we, the people who have sent them into this hell, calmly go and buy our tickets for a concert where the man who leads the orchestra, openly avows his sympathy with the enemy and absolutely refuses to play our national anthem, and in a sister city has refused to have the Stars and Stripes displayed in the stately hall where his orchestra plays.

Again I say, what are the American people dreaming of to allow such insolence as this to go unheeded and rather to encourage it, by going to listen and applaud his music. 'D. A. R."
Providence, Nov. 1.

Dr. Muck Should be Compelled to Play Anthem

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
In regard to the Dr. Muck incident, it seems to me that the time has arrived for every good American to withhold his or her patronage to such an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war at least, if not for all time as long as it is under the direction of its present leader, the German, Dr. Karl Muck.

The explanations made only render the situation more intolerable. Maj. H. L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, threatens to withdraw his support, and cause the organization to disband, if the perfectly just and patriotic demand to have the "Star Spangled Banner" played continues. In a letter written to a friend, he wants to know what will become of the members if they should be dismissed?

If we throw Germans out of employment where can they go? What can they do? The answer to these questions is simply this: We are not throwing Germans or any other nationality out of employment, if they show a true American of their indiscretions; it is their lookout, not ours.

However, the issue at present is not with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but with its leader, Dr. Muck, who should not be requested again to play the "Star Spangled Banner" but should be made to do it, if the orchestra is to be allowed to continue.

Dr. Muck's statement that it is a gross mistake, yea, a violation of artistic taste and principles, an insult to the orchestra, to ask it to play patriotic airs, should sound his death knell as a leader of music all over this country, especialy when the patriotic air requested was our national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner."

What true American is not inspired by the strains of the 'Star Spangled Banner,' whether it be played on a tin whistle or on instruments of gold, and who being asked to play it, could feel he had been insulted?

A. C. ANDERSON.
Warren, Nov. 1.

Re-dedicated to Dr. Karl Muck.

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
Here is one of the concert hall songs. Is it not appropriate to Muck?

"If you don't like your Uncle Sammy,
Go back to your home o'er the sea;
Go back to the land from which you came
But don't be ungrateful to me.

If you don't like the stars in Old Glory,
If you don't like the Red, White and Blue,
Don't, like the cur in the story,
Bite the hand that's feeding you."

P. O. P.
Providence, Nov. 1.

A Scenario for a Movie in Hun-Land

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
The following is respectfully submitted as a scenario for a moving picture: Action takes place in a large music hall in Germany, during the anti-Hun War.

An orchestra, whose members are of many nationalities, has for a leader an American, one Dr. Charles Luck. At the opening of the Koncert season, the leader is requested by a number of prominent German ladies to direct his orchestra in the national anthem of Germany,—"Der Wacht am Rhein."

Scene I. The hall, blazing with light, and loud with the Klank of Iron Krosses. The opening of the Koncert, plunging into a programme of English, American and Turkish music.

Scene II. As the Koncert progresses and it becomes evident that the request for the national anthem is to be ignored, a kaiser-mustached individual arises, Krying in a Kommanding voice,—"KULTUR!" Instantly the members of the orchestra are seized by soldiers, and with their leader marched off to jail.

Scene III. The midnight trial. Business of pleading, hearing evidence, etc. Judge decides that out of respect to the Kountry where their daily bread is won and the wishes of the ladies of the city, whether they did or did not sympathize with the Kountry's ideas, these men should have played "Der Wacht am Rhein," Konducted by their leader.

Scene IV. Orchestra members lined up to be subjected to machine gun practice. Spt....Spt....Spt of the the gun.....

Scene V. Dr. Charles Luck carrying out a 33-year sentence at writing over and over the music of the German national anthem.

The moral of this play is that what is sauce for the gander might as well be used for those who walk as geese.

M. E. B.
Providence, Nov. 1.

What Would Have Happened in Germany

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
I don't wish to liken our free American institutions to those of Germany, but I can't help wondering what would have happened if in that country, an orchestra, no matter the nationality of its musicians, had refused to play the "Wacht am Rhine"?

When Dr. Karl Muck talks about vioiation of "artistic taste and principles" he goes beyond the limit.

What about Louvain, Arras, Rheims, etc.? AN AMERICAN.
Newport, Nov. 2.

As to the Unsold Seats in Past Seasons

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
Considering the number of times it was said that unless there were more liberal responses on the part of Providence music-lovers the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts might have to be curtailed as to the number given during the season; considering, also, the yearly drumming for subscriptions by mailing publicity matter, the assertion by Mr. Ellis: "We have sold all the seats we care to sell," sounds rather odd.

He is credited with making that assertion last evening, when there were several vacant rows at the back of the hall. In former seasons these empty back rows have given the Boston Symphony management no little concern.

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Congregational Church, Boston, made the statement last evening that Music Hall is the only one in Boston in which the Stars and Stripes are not displayed, adding, "because Dr. Muck will not permit it."

The request for a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" was ignored by Dr. Muck and Mr. Ellis. I wonder if Herr Muck would walk out of Infantry Hall on the occasion of the next Symphony concert if the owner of the building happened to hang a big American flag directly over the stage, letting it

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.

NOV 1 31917

SOME PERISCOPICS ON TIMELY TOPICS

"The Star-Spangled Banner," notwithstanding Dr. Karl Muck—and Mr. Higginson—is always itself the Key to every situation that is liable to precipitate a patriotic musical riot. Baltimore, having repudiated Dr. Muck and his orchestra, shows how the spirit of the people can be stirred wherever there is a case of such a kind to deal with.

Those who will—or do—not salute the Stars and Stripes are enemies of Old Glory and of Uncle Sam & Co., and should, if they will not, figuratively, wrap the flag about them, be given a coat of more suitable tar and feathers.

"The Star Spangled Banner" having just escaped being thrown on the muck heap by a Prussian subject straying in our midst—for "purposes of revenue er only"—it would seem as if this muckraker should himself be mucked. Of course, muck has its uses, but, as Bacon is recorded as having remarked about money, "it is not good unless it is spread."

The German press feign facetiousness over the capture of American "buddies" at the front, saying that the American boys will "now learn something to their advantage of the great German firm of Hindenburg & Co." Now if these German editors would just interview these "buddies" they might learn something to their greater advantage of Uncle Sam & Co.

"The trouble with this war," a German statesman is quoted as saying, "is that it will be ten years after it is over before I can go to London, twenty before I can go to Paris."

Which shows how dissatisfied the Germans are with their own home life. If, accustomed to visit Paris and London to get a little of the sunshine of these happier places into his chilly system, this statesman feels that the reception he would get would only be commensurate with the estimate that would be held of his own people by the Parisians and Londoners, he will have to be content with going to that other place, which so many of his neighbors believe is now so well prepared for him and to which so many of his countrymen have been, as politely as the mention of the place would admit, consigned, especially the Kaiser. For there will be no other place on earth or out of the sun where the Hun will be welcome. He apparently has taken note of that unmistakable fact already. It will be a hot time in the old town that night the Hun arrives from the place he has lost in the sun.

Germany, as on former occasions, affects to sneer at the "coming of the Americans." That, of course, we can understand—as we have come to have some clearer understanding of her mental process than she has of us—and so it is likely that she realizes only too well the menace which the coming of the United States in the war is to her. And that she is making her greatest effort and plunge in Italy before the storm bursts would seem evident.

bat, as the orchestra ... first umber? A. SHARP.
Providence, Oct. 31.

bout Time for This Country to Wake Up

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
In connection with the recent appearnce of "Kaiser" Muck in our midst, hat about those "almost" loyal Amerins who remained passive in their seats nd listened to a concert directed by ich a person? While not afflicted with ich "kultur," at such a time, I realize hat a gratification it should be to me be so after seeing what it allows

A VOICE CRYING IN THE WILDERNESS

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
Dr. Muck and Mme. Farrar seem to have roused Providence to a terrible pitch. The "artist" who produced the cartoon about Muck raking and the "Providence woman" who spilled patriotism all over your editorial page in Thursday's issue are probably well-meaning persons, but why so hot?

A wave of hysteria and intolerance is sweeping over this land. The country is full of people of inflated importance and under the guise of patriotism they are certainly having their innings.

This is a crucial time, as the platitudinarians say, and we may as well try to keep our heads. Roger Williams used to preach not many miles from Westminster street, but there is no record that he resorted to stage thunder and black magic in securing religious liberty—which logically leads to liberty in various other lines.

Williams did not like Quakers, but he managed to stand for them, and it is possible that he set a pretty good example.

Of course Providence wasn't a cosmopolis when Williams dwelt there, and it had no Thunderer to explain why Malone quit his job in New York city—still the past is not devoid of inspiration just because this is the present.

HENRY WATERMAN.
Hyannis, Mass., Nov. 2.

vider
NOV - 4191

What Rhode Island Thinks of Dr. Karl Muck

Journal Readers from Widely Scattered Districts Roundly Condemn German Leader of Symphony Orchestra for Omitting "The Star Spangled Banner"

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
We have heard so much about one Karl Muck and Herr Frederick Schytte of the Leipsic Conservatory of Music, not to mention "Almighty Joe" Weber, the President of the American Federation of Musicians and that lot of German "moosickers" that one would really like to know just who they are, or if they are any better than some of our prominent American musicians.

For my part I think not, and capable as they are we can find some men just as capable; if they are not quite as good, let us be Americans and think they are better.

The trouble is that the American public has flattered these people so much and given them such big fat salaries that they've got a swelled head over it. They come over here and imagine that we are far inferior to them in every line, especially musically, that the Germans are the only real musicians; under the guise of bands and orchestras, some of these "windjammers," fiddlers, and others have been acting as spies and all that to advance "Kultur" for the Almighty (?) Kaiser; and they've got away with it at that.

To go back to Muck and the others: Who is he that he is too good to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner?" Supposing the positions were changed and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was playing in Germany, under an American conductor; how far would they get if they refused to play "Die Wacht am Rhein" or "Deutschland Uber Alles?" and furthermore they'd think an American conductor going around at the head of an organization had a galvanized gall in a case similar to this. It is doubtful if he would dare to appear in public.

This Muck is an enemy alien in my opinion, as much as a number of others, and if he can go around this way, free to do as he pleases, it is only fair that these others ought to be allowed the same privilege. What he does will only more than please German sympathizers, and anti-American societies who are out to put a stumbling block in the path of our affairs, and will encourage a lot of disrespect amongst our people who feel indifferent toward the administration.

As far as these Germans being the greatest musicians in the world that is a pretty bold statement to make. I have seen the best of them and they were no better than our own representative American performers. Of course, we know that Verdi, Rossini, Paderewski, Balfe, Wallace, Benedict, Elgar, Sullivan and hundreds of others were Germans so we'll have to admit they are the best musicians, and that their music is the finest, and while the "Star Spangled Banner" is not so classic (?) as "Die Wacht am Rhein" they might have played it to please the audience who were paying for their "Kultured" peoples dinners.

When the London Symphony Orchestra visited this country it was mentioned that it was the equal of any organization in the world and being one of those who heard it I feel capable of judging that it was as good as the Boston or any other I have heard. The very noticeable thing about it was the absence of this "Sauer-Kraut, limburger cheese" element.

Anybody who has travelled or worked with the musical profession knows just how they get along with these German musicians and just how much use they have for anybody outside of a German. In some places, if you can't speak German you have as much chance as a snow ball in the hot springs of Arizona.

As far as giving this Muck a chance to play the national anthem goes, he should not get it, because it is only a bluff when he does it. He should be chased back to Germany and all his sympathizers with him. Show him no more respect than would be shown an American in his position in Germany. If American audiences are willing to subscribe to these concerts, they should be favored. It was no imposition to ask that the piece be played especially at this time. In the words of the old Irish saying, "bad luck to him and his lot!" Give an American a chance from now on.

JAMES ROONEY.
Providence, Nov. 1.

Why Do Americans Patronize Dr. Muck?

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
What would become of an American in Germany who refused to play Germany's national anthem?

We all know—he would be shot at once or put in prison. The same thing should be done to any German in this country—and the sooner the better. Why do true Americans patronize such a creature?

L. C. S.
Providence, Nov. 1.

Prohibit Concerts Conducted by German Leader

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
The manager and Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ought to be prohibited from giving concerts in the United States while the war is on. Any man that refuses to play the "Star Spangled Banner" is a dangerous person.

When the reporter of the Journal asked Mr. Ellis if the "Star Spangled Banner" was to be played, and he replied, "I think not," then the concert should have been stopped. America will have to put its foot down hard on impudent men like Dr. Karl Muck.

All enemy aliens should be interned. It would save millions of dollars and lives.

F. HUDSON.
[illegible]

Americans Were Replaced by Germans

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
There are so many who are interested in good music and who might consider it a catastrophe if the Boston Symphony Orchestra were disbanded, that it may be well to present the real facts of the case.

First of all, let it be understood that there would be no difficulty in organizing an orchestra fully equal, if not better, than the present Boston Symphony. No one denies the ability of Karl Muck as a leader, but his orchestra is distinctly German: anyone who knows him knows how arbitrary he is. He has dismissed at least 16 of the best men simply because they were American to make room for players that he imported from Germany.

Some of the men dismissed were superior to the men who replaced them. We have in this country the American Musicians' Association, whose membership embraces all our ablest and best musicians; for example, such organizations, with their famous conductors, as the New York Philharmonic, the New York Symphony, the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra, Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Sousa, Creatore and Arthur Pryor with their bands, and all the first-class musicians in the country.

It is a rule of the Musicians' Association that one applying for membership, if not a native of this country, must take out his first papers and express his intention of becoming a citizen. When the Boston Symphony Orchestra was requested to join the organization the management refused, giving as a reason, they wanted to be free to import musicians whenever they needed them.

Col. Higginson has stated that if the Boston Symphony Orchestra were disbanded its members would have no means of livelihood. That is so, for they could not be employed by the American Musicians' Association. Let the German players go home to fight for Germany, as so many of the best musicians of France and Belgium are doing for their country.

We have plenty of first-class musicians fully their equal in this country. The writer of this letter is an American born who is not a professional musician, but who loves music, but loves his country too much to get his music from the baton of Karl Muck and his German players, who are enemies of this country—perhaps some of them German spies in the employ of the Kaiser.

"AMERICAN."
Providence, Nov. 2.

Refusal to Play National Anthem Was an Outrage

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
The refusal of Dr. Muck to allow his musicians to play "The Star Spangled Banner" on Tuesday evening was an outrage. Is it possible that the citizens of Providence do not realize the insult that has been put upon them?

Is there any city in Germany where an American conductor could take his orchestra and calmly and insolently ignore a request to play a national hymn, also to insist upon a programme made up entirely of American composers? The Germans would rise as one man and the life of that man would not be worth a shoestring.

Ye gods, what are we American people dreaming about? Thousands upon thousands of our splendid boys and men have sailed and will sail for France to fight the most brutal people the world has ever known. They will be taken prisoners, subjected to treatment which only such brutes as these could devise, and, if they come back to us at all—how many will be maimed and helpless for life.

Yet we, the people who have sent them into this hell, calmly go and buy our tickets for a concert where the man who leads the orchestra, openly avows his sympathy with the enemy and absolutely refuses to play our national anthem, and in a sister city has refused to have the Stars and Stripes displayed in the stately hall where his orchestra plays.

Again I say, what are the American people dreaming of to allow such insolence as this to go unheeded and rather to encourage it, by going to listen and applaud his music. 'D. A. R."
Providence, Nov. 1.

Dr. Muck Should be Compelled to Play Anthem

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
In regard to the Dr. Muck incident, it seems to me that the time has arrived for every good American to withhold his or her patronage to such an organization as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war at least, if not for all time as long as it is under the direction of its present leader, the German, Dr. Karl Muck.

The explanations made only render the situation more intolerable. Maj. H. L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, threatens to withdraw his support, and cause the organization to disband, if the perfectly just and patriotic demand to have the "Star Spangled Banner" played continues. In a letter written to a friend, he wants to know what will become of the members if they should be dismissed?

If we throw Germans out of employment where can they go? What can they do? The answer to these questions is simply this: We are not throwing Germans or any other nationality out of employment, if they show a true American of their indiscretions; it is their lookout, not ours.

However, the issue at present is not with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but with its leader, Dr. Muck, who should not be requested again to play the "Star Spangled Banner" but should be made to do it, if the orchestra is to be allowed to continue.

Dr. Muck's statement that it is a gross mistake, yea, a violation of artistic taste and principles, an insult to the orchestra, to ask it to play patriotic airs, should sound his death knell as a leader of music all over this country, especialy when the patriotic air requested was our national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner."

What true American is not inspired by the strains of the 'Star Spangled Banner," whether it be played on a tin whistle or on instruments of gold, and who being asked to play it, could feel he had been insulted? A. C. ANDERSON.
Warren, Nov. 1.

Re-dedicated to Dr. Karl Muck.

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
Here is one of the concert hall songs. Is it not appropriate to Muck?

"If you don't like your Uncle Sammy,
Go back to your home o'er the sea;
Go back to the land from which you came
But don't be ungrateful to me.

If you don't like the stars in Old Glory,
If you don't like the Red, White and Blue,
Don't, like the cur in the story,
Bite the hand that's feeding you."

P. O. P.
Providence, Nov. 1.

A Scenario for a Movie in Hun-Land

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
The following is respectfully submitted as a scenario for a moving picture: Action takes place in a large music hall in Germany, during the anti-Hun War.

An orchestra, whose members are of many nationalities, has for a leader an American, one Dr. Charles Luck. At the opening of the Koncert season, the leader is requested by a number of prominent German ladies to direct his orchestra in the national anthem of Germany,—"Der Wacht am Rhein."

Scene I. The hall, blazing with light, and loud with the Klank of Iron Krosses. The opening of the Koncert, plunging into a programme of English, American and Turkish music.

Scene II. As the Koncert progresses and it becomes evident that the request for the national anthem is to be ignored, a kaiser-mustached individual arises, Krying in a Kommanding voice,—"KULTUR!" Instantly the members of the orchestra are seized by soldiers, and with their leader marched off to jail.

Scene III. The midnight trial. Business of pleading, hearing evidence, etc. Judge decides that out of respect to the Kountry where their daily bread is won and the wishes of the ladies of the city, whether they did or did not sympathize with the Kountry's ideas, these men should have played "Der Wacht am Rhein," Konducted by their leader.

Scene IV. Orchestra members lined up to be subjected to machine gun practice. Spt....Spt....Spt of the the gun.....

Scene V. Dr. Charles Luck carrying out a 33-year sentence at writing over and over the music of the German national anthem.

The moral of this play is that what is sauce for the gander might as well be used for those who walk as geese.

M. E. B.
Providence, Nov. 1.

What Would Have Happened in Germany

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
I don't wish to liken our free American institutions to those of Germany, but I can't help wondering what would have happened if in that country, an orchestra, no matter the nationality of its musicians, had refused to play the "Wacht am Rhine"?

When Dr. Karl Muck talks about violation of "artistic taste and principles" he goes beyond the limit.

What about Louvain, Arras, Rheims, etc.? AN AMERICAN.
Newport, Nov. 2.

As to the Unsold Seats in Past Seasons

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:
Considering the number of times it was said that unless there were more liberal responses on the part of Providence music-lovers the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts might have to be curtailed as to the number given during the season; considering, also, the yearly drumming for subscriptions by mailing publicity matter, the assertion by Mr. Ellis: "We have sold all the seats we care to sell," sounds rather odd.

He is credited with making that assertion last evening, when there were several vacant rows at the back of the hall. In former seasons these empty back rows have given the Boston Symphony management no little concern.

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of the Park Street Congregational Church, Boston, made the statement last evening that Music Hall is the only one in Boston in which the Stars and Stripes are not displayed, adding, "because Dr. Muck will not permit it."

The request for a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" was ignored by Dr. Muck and Mr. Ellis. I wonder if Herr Muck would walk out of Infantry Hall on the occasion of the next Symphony concert if the owner of the building happened to hang a big American flag directly over the stage, letting it

CLIPPER
ss: New York City
NOV 7 1917

NATIONAL ANTHEM NOT ART SAYS DR. MUCK

German Leader Declares It Impertinent to Ask Boston Symphony to Play "Star-Spangled Banner"

The failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest musical organization in America, if not the entire world, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence despite a request to do so from the presidents of nine musical societies, and the statement of Dr. Muck that the anthem is not "art," has aroused a storm of protest that threatens to disrupt the organization.

A special report on the failure of the orchestra to play the anthem was made to Washington by Thomas Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice of Providence.

He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited from giving concerts anywhere unless the anthem be played at each, and Theodore Roosevelt has made the statement that Dr. Muck should be interned until the end of the war.

So great was the storm of indignation which Dr. Muck's remarks aroused, that the managers of the orchestra felt that at the last concert which was given in Boston on Thursday night, some action in the matter was necessary and had the organization render the anthem, conducted by Dr. Muck, who immediately after tendered his resignation.

Dr. Muck, who is a German by birth, said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore, it would be a great mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principle for an organization such as ours to play patriotic airs. It is embarrassing, almost impertinent, to ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'"

The Rhode Island Council of Defense at a meeting held last week adopted resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and the orchestra, and the police Commissioner was requested to refuse further permission for concerts when conducted by Dr. Muck.

Major Henry L. Higginson, the Boston banker whose support has made the great orchestra possible, is greatly upset over the affair, and has stated that he is seriously considering withdrawing his support, which would mean the disorganization of the orchestra.

om REPUBLICAN
dress: Springfield, Mass.
te NOV 8 - 1917

The Flag Waves at Symphony Hall

The "Star Spangled Banner" is to wave henceforth on Symphony hall, Boston, and the tune which bears that name is to be played at regular concerts by the celebrated Boston orchestra. So much has resulted from the agitation which reached its climax on Friday afternoon, when Maj Higginson announced that the conductor, Dr Muck, was ready to resign if the good of the orchestra demanded that step. Dr Muck has been attacked for some time by persons who resented his continuing at the head of the Boston orchestra while our country is at war with his. The demand to have "The 'Star Spangled Banner" played at symphony concerts was not the beginning of the agitation. Foolish and false statements have been made regarding Dr Muck, but his conduct has been found blameless.

Dr Muck's resignation, in all probability, will not be accepted. The statement that Dr Muck refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence or anywhere else is false. The request of the committee of patriots never passed beyond the hands of the orchestra's management, which gave its own answer. "Will Boston deliberately destroy an institution of which it has long been proud?" asks the Boston Herald, which asserts that the eminent conductor has "borne himself with dignity" and "has busied himself only with music." M. A. DeWolfe Howe, who some years ago wrote the history of this greatest of orchestras, writes: "Must the Boston public be taught by bitter experience that irresponsible agitation can pull down in a week what has taken more than a generation to build?" And he adds these forcible words: "There are some of us, desiring with all our hearts a common victory with the allies, who yet take pleasure in the fact that while men of opposing nations are occupied elsewhere solely with killing one another, there remain a few spots on earth where representatives of diverse races, including our own, can still join in uttering the universal, civilizing speech of music."

om REPUBLICAN dress: Springfield, Mass
NOV 8 1917

MUSIC and THEATER

PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

MUCK OFFERS TO RESIGN

HIGGINSON REGRETS STEP

Result of Agitation Started in Providence Because of Failure of Symphony Orchestra to Play "Star Spangled Banner".

"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston symphony orchestra with Dr Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert in Boston Friday. In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the program, Maj Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience that Dr Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience Friday, Maj Higginson said that Dr Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the program. Dr Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage and when "The Star Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony hall officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

m PRESS
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 8 1917

DUMONT'S—MINSTRELS.

Frank Dumont is again to the fore in deriving fun from the topic of the day in his new burlesque, entitled, "Doctor Muck's Boston Simple Funny Orchestra." In the course of the lively proceedings the eminent conductor finds himself obliged to play "The Star Spangled Banner," whether he wishes to do so or not. Charley Boyden is the formidable individual who acts as persuader. Needless to say the object of producing laughter in unlimited quantities is attained without any resort to unpleasant personalities. Mr. Dumont and his minstrel comedians are adepts in extracting what is humorous and hilarious from such an occurrence as the tempest in a Boston teapot over the play of the patriotic melody by the Prussian conductor. Will Lawrence made an intentionally ridiculous figure of the musical highbrow. From this role it was quite a change to that of the militant suffragette, just returned from Washington, to tell about her adventures and experiences, who was also impersonated by Lawrence. Burke and Walsh have a capital dancing sketch called "The Surprise Party." Benny Franklin has a patriotic sketch, "The Spirit of '76." The special added feature for the current week is Lowery's wonderfully trained dogs. The first part, with its new songs, ballads and jests, sustained the highest standard of Dumont's Minstrels.

om BULLETIN
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 12 1917

Supports Miss Koehler

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I was very glad to read the article in The Bulletin, written by Ethel Vollmer Koehler, about "Dr. Muck." As it was a voice raised against the "Prussian leader" of the "Boston Symphony," as every good patriot should do, it seems strange how a country at war with such an enemy as Prussia and Germany, would like to have its ears tickled with music, when we know how our sons and husbands are now fighting against those countries, and Germany still has eighty sailors of ours who have been captives for over two years, taken when we were neutral.

Yet a Prussian has been imported to lead an orchestra to the American people, which seems beyond belief, and expects our people to bow down to a Prussian baton. Would his own country allow an American the same privilege? And also travels over it, making money?

We do not know now what tortures our prisoners are receiving at the hands of our enemy. They may share the same fate as the English.

The southern city of Baltimore is the true patriotic one, and Philadelphia should have followed in her footsteps, for no one asked "Muck" to resign, and Colonel Higginson says he is to blame himself. He will not accept Muck's resignation and the fact remains, that he was made to play, against his will, for American dollars. Will music save our country from our enemies or will it be our country's blood? Dr. Muck should have the same treatment that his "Fatherland" would give to an American under the same circumstances. The question is "Music versus Patriotism, or Patriotism versus Music."

Ocean City, N. J. M. P. S.

PRESS
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 9 - 19

BALTIMORE'S GLASS HOUSE.

The Baltimore "American" ventures to take an ill-advised fling at Philadelphia by coupling the fact that Dr. Muck's playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" was applauded with the failure of political reform at the polls on Tuesday as twin signs of civic degeneracy. Baltimore claims a sort of proprietary interest in "The Star Spangled Banner" because Francis Scott Key wrote the words there at the time of the bombardment of Fort McHenry.

Those Baltimoreans, whom the "American" elegantly terms "anti-Muck patriots," have been working themselves into a frenzy over the alleged but unproven refusal of the German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. To be sure it is a little ridiculous that while the "anti-Muck patriots" were fulminating against him in Baltimore he was being applauded by a crowded audience in Washington, which included Secretary Lane in the President's box, and recalled for his playing of the patriotic air.

But this self-same Baltimore, where there are patriots who want Dr. Muck hanged, is the city where mobs fired on the Federal troops who were marching under the "Star Spangled Banner" on April 13, 1861, and killed four defenders of the national flag. Nor do we find that our contemporary has much to boast about in the results of the Maryland election on Tuesday.

There is a wise old saw that warns people who live in glass houses against the injudicious practice of throwing stones. The pebble thrown by "anti-Muck patriotism" at Philadelphia invites a shower of brickbats in response.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

PUBLIC om dress:
1917

DID HE MONKEY WITH THE S. S. B.?

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—Well indeed may Baltimore point the finger of scorn at Philadelphia. The birthplace of Liberty—the home of the flag—and yet it welcomes with open arms a man who makes no secret of his Prussianism, an acknowledged enemy of our country, and glories in it. What would be his fate, think you, if, American by birth and sympathies, he attempted such tactics in Berlin and tried monkey tricks with the "Wacht 'dam' Rhine"?

Compelled, against his wish, to play our national anthem, Muck tried to belittle its force and dignity by interpolating trifling trills and quavers. The "Star Spangled Banner" needs no interpolations or embellishments; strong, uncompromising and glorious, it thrills to the very core of one's heart. No Prussian imagination or touch is necessary to alter or desecrate its magnificently inspiring chords.

The lack of patriotism observable in our places of amusement, where the few who attempt applause are shamed into silence by the insolent indifference and inaction of their neighbors, is lamentable. No matter what the sentiment or scene conveyed to eye or ear, nor how inciting to natural enthusiasm, it falls upon the barren ground of pacifism and what seems to be absolute, offensive apathy. Will nothing stir us up?

A MERE WOMAN.

Philadelphia, November 7, 1917.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 10 1917

PHILA. ORCHESTRA BOWS TO PITTSBURGH'S WILL

Will Eliminate Compositions by Germans From Its Concerts in Western City

ACTS ON RESOLUTIONS

Association Members See No Reason for Not Playing Teuton Works Here

The management of the Philadelphia Orchestra announced yesterday that it would comply with the request of its patrons in Pittsburgh and change programs prepared for concerts in that city in order to eliminate the works of Germans and subjects of Germany's allies. The statement of Arthur Judson, manager of the orchestra, follows:

"The Philadelphia Orchestra Association has just received from the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, the organization which is responsible for its concerts in Pittsburgh, the following resolution:

"'Resolved, that the Philadelphia Orchestra be instructed to omit, during its performances in Pittsburgh for the period of the war, all music written by any German composer, and all music composed by a subject of any of Germany's allies.'

"The motives governing this resolution have been adequately set forth in the statement given to the newspapers.

"The Philadelphia Orchestra Association wishes to announce that it will conform with pleasure to the request of the Pittsburgh association. The Philadelphia Orchestra Association is heartily in accord with any movement dictated by patriotic motives.

"The next pair of concerts in Pittsburgh, of November 19 and 20, will be devoted entirely to the works of American composers. The third pair of concerts, on January 7 and 8, will consist of two Tschaikowsky programs. The other programs will be announced in due time."

Neither Mr. Judson nor Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the orchestra, would add a word to the formal statement. Men high in the counsels of the orchestra association, however, were emphatic in their indorsement of the statement that the orchestra is in sympathy with any movement dictated by patriotism.

At the same time, it was indicated that the performance of compositions of the old German masters in no wise gives aid and comfort to the enemy, that the genius of these men has long been the property of the world, and that the performance of their work involved no cash payments to any German citizen.

The attitude of Philadelphia music lovers on this point was indicated clearly yesterday when a program made up completely from the works of Beethoven was applauded to the echo at the fifth pair of concerts of the season at the Academy of Music. Mr. Stokowski and his men have received no more cordial indorsement recently than was given them at this concert.

"It is evident," said a representative of the orchestra association yesterday, "that local audiences are not inclined to look at the matter as Pittsburgh has. It seems to me that the people here are taking the best view of the matter. There are thousands of fine compositions written by subjects of our allies and our own writers. Programs could be made up from their works. But at the same time, some of the old Germans wrote wonderful music. It is part of our regular musical diet and there is no genuine reason why they should be removed.

"We mustn't forget that many of the old composers fought against the government of their day. Wagner was exiled. He was a thoro rebel. Germany can no more claim them exclusively than they claimed Germany."

The Baltimore committee, which stands behind the concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra in that city, has not asked for the elimination of German composers, it was stated yesterday by the orchestra management. Moreover, it is believed here that it contemplates no such action. Having properly snubbed Doctor Muck, of the Boston Orchestra, for refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" Baltimore is determined, it is said, not to go to further extremes in the matter.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 10 1917

Concerning Doctor Muck

TO THE EDITOR—I was more than pleased to read "The Optimist" in Wednesday's North American. His opinion on the Muck affair will have the approval of all true Americans. I attended a concert two years ago, when Madame Melba was the soloist. Doctor Muck's behavior on that occasion was tiresome. The house, anxious for an encore, applauded the singer, who is a great favorite with Philadelphians. The conductor appeared, incensed and seated himself in a chair (ordering one of his men off it) and, with his arms folded, back to the audience, remained in that position until the noise ceased, then went on with the program. Strange to say he received the usual greeting after each number. Think of spending $2 for a seat to watch a man pout. If this is the sort of "kultur" we hear so much about, then it's no wonder that the best blood in the world is being shed to crush it out of existence. Yes, I agree with "The Optimist," the Liberty Bell is in the wrong city.

E. A. C.

Philadelphia, Nov. 8.

CLIPPER
ss: New York City NOV 7 1917

NATIONAL ANTHEM NOT ART SAYS DR. MUCK

German Leader Declares It Impertinent to Ask Boston Symphony to Play "Star-Spangled Banner"

The failure of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the finest musical organization in America, if not the entire world, to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence despite a request to do so from the presidents of nine musical societies, and the statement of Dr. Muck that the anthem is not "art," has aroused a storm of protest that threatens to disrupt the organization.

A special report on the failure of the orchestra to play the anthem was made to Washington by Thomas Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice of Providence.

He recommends that the orchestra be prohibited from giving concerts anywhere unless the anthem be played at each, and Theodore Roosevelt has made the statement that Dr. Muck should be interned until the end of the war.

So great was the storm of indignation which Dr. Muck's remarks aroused, that the managers of the orchestra felt that at the last concert which was given in Boston on Thursday night, some action in the matter was necessary and had the organization render the anthem, conducted by Dr. Muck, who immediately after tendered his resignation.

Dr. Muck, who is a German by birth, said: "Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. Therefore, it would be a great mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principle for an organization such as ours to play patriotic airs. It is embarrassing, almost impertinent, to ask us to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.'"

The Rhode Island Council of Defense at a meeting held last week adopted resolutions condemning Dr. Muck and the orchestra, and the police Commissioner was requested to refuse further permission for concerts when conducted by Dr. Muck.

Major Henry L. Higginson, the Boston banker whose support has made the great orchestra possible, is greatly upset over the affair, and has stated that he is seriously considering withdrawing his support, which would mean the disorganization of the orchestra.

om REPUBLICAN
dress: Springfield, Mass.
te NOV 8 - 1917

The Flag Waves at Symphony Hall

The "Star Spangled Banner" is to wave henceforth on Symphony hall, Boston, and the tune which bears that name is to be played at regular concerts by the celebrated Boston orchestra. So much has resulted from the agitation which reached its climax on Friday afternoon, when Maj Higginson announced that the conductor, Dr Muck, was ready to resign if the good of the orchestra demanded that step. Dr Muck has been attacked for some time by persons who resented his continuing at the head of the Boston orchestra while our country is at war with his. The demand to have "The Star Spangled Banner" played at symphony concerts was not the beginning of the agitation. Foolish and false statements have been made regarding Dr Muck, but his conduct has been found blameless.

Dr Muck's resignation, in all probability, will not be accepted. The statement that Dr Muck refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence or anywhere else is false. The request of the committee of patriots never passed beyond the hands of the orchestra's management, which gave its own answer. "Will Boston deliberately destroy an institution of which it has long been proud?" asks the Boston Herald, which asserts that the eminent conductor has "borne himself with dignity" and "has busied himself only with music." M. A. DeWolfe Howe, who some years ago wrote the history of this greatest of orchestras, writes: "Must the Boston public be taught by bitter experience that irresponsible agitation can pull down in a week what has taken more than a generation to build?" And he adds these forcible words: "There are some of us, desiring with all our hearts a common victory with the allies, who yet take pleasure in the fact that while men of opposing nations are occupied elsewhere solely with killing one another, there remain a few spots on earth where representatives of diverse races, including our own, can still join in uttering the universal, civilizing speech of music."

om REPUBLICAN
dress: Springfield, Mass.
te NOV 8 1917

MUSIC and THEATER

PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

MUCK OFFERS TO RESIGN

HIGGINSON REGRETS STEP

Result of Agitation Started in Providence Because of Failure of Symphony Orchestra to Play "Star Spangled Banner"

"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by the Boston symphony orchestra with Dr Karl Muck conducting, at the afternoon concert in Boston Friday. In announcing at the opening of the concert that the national anthem would be added to the program, Maj Henry L. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, told the audience that Dr Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor. He added that the resignation would be seriously considered, but expressed the opinion that the loss of Dr Muck would be a disaster.

The action of Dr Muck followed closely the agitation resulting from the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a recent concert in Providence. In his brief address to the audience Friday, Maj Higginson said that Dr Muck and the orchestra had never refused to play the anthem and that they had now complied with his request to make it a part of the program. Dr Muck was applauded liberally as he appeared on the stage and when "The Star Spangled Banner" was rendered as the closing number the audience manifested its approval with a prolonged demonstration.

Symphony hall officials said that the anthem would be a feature of all future concerts.

n PRESS
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

DUMONT'S—MINSTRELS.

Frank Dumont is again to the fore in deriving fun from the topic of the day in his new burlesque, entitled, "Doctor Muck's Boston Simple Funny Orchestra." In the course of the lively proceedings the eminent conductor finds himself obliged to play "The Star Spangled Banner," whether he wishes to do so or not. Charley Boyden is the formidable individual who acts as persuader. Needless to say the object of producing laughter in unlimited quantities is attained without any resort to unpleasant personalities. Mr. Dumont and his minstrel comedians are adepts in extracting what is humorous and hilarious from such an occurrence as the tempest in a Boston teapot over the play of the patriotic melody by the Prussian conductor. Will Lawrence made an intentionally ridiculous figure of the musical highbrow. From this role it was quite a change to that of the militant suffragette, just returned from Washington, to tell about her adventures and experiences, who was also impersonated by Lawrence. Burke and Walsh have a capital dancing sketch called "The Surprise Party." Benny Franklin has a patriotic sketch, "The Spirit of '76." The special added feature for the current week is Lowery's wonderfully trained dogs. The first part, with its new songs, ballads and jests, sustained the highest standard of Dumont's Minstrels.

om BULLETIN
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.
te

Supports Miss Koehler

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I was very glad to read the article in The Bulletin, written by Ethel Vollmer Koehler, about "Dr. Muck." As it was a voice raised against the "Prussian leader" of the "Boston Symphony," as every good patriot should do, it seems strange how a country at war with such an enemy as Prussia and Germany, would like to have its ears tickled with music, when we know how our sons and husbands are now fighting against those countries, and Germany still has eighty sailors of ours who have been captives for over two years, taken when we were neutral.

Yet a Prussian has been imported to lead an orchestra to the American people, which seems beyond belief, and expects our people to bow down to a Prussian baton. Would his own country allow an American the same privilege? And also travels over it, making money?

We do not know now what tortures our prisoners are receiving at the hands of our enemy. They may share the same fate as the English.

The southern city of Baltimore is the true patriotic one, and Philadelphia should have followed in her footsteps, for no one asked "Muck" to resign, and Colonel Higginson says he is to blame himself. He will not accept Muck's resignation and the fact remains, that he was made to play, against his will, for American dollars. Will music save our country from our enemies or will it be our country's blood? Dr. Muck should have the same treatment that his "Fatherland" would give to an American under the same circumstances. The question, is "Music versus Patriotism, or Patriotism versus Music."

Ocean City, N. J. M. P. S.

PRESS
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

BALTIMORE'S GLASS HOUSE.

The Baltimore "American" ventures to take an ill-advised fling at Philadelphia by coupling the fact that Dr. Muck's playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" was applauded with the failure of political reform at the polls on Tuesday as twin signs of civic degeneracy. Baltimore claims a sort of proprietary interest in "The Star Spangled Banner" because Francis Scott Key wrote the words there at the time of the bombardment of Fort McHenry.

Those Baltimoreans, whom the "American" elegantly terms "anti-Muck patriots," have been working themselves into a frenzy over the alleged but unproven refusal of the German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. To be sure it is a little ridiculous that while the "anti-Muck patriots" were fulminating against him in Baltimore he was being applauded by a crowded audience in Washington, which included Secretary Lane in the President's box, and recalled for his playing of the patriotic air.

But this self-same Baltimore, where there are patriots who want Dr. Muck hanged, is the city where mobs fired on the Federal troops who were marching under the "Star Spangled Banner" on April 13, 1861, and killed four defenders of the national flag. Nor do we find that our contemporary has much to boast about in the results of the Maryland election on Tuesday.

There is a wise old saw that warns people who live in glass houses against the injudicious practice of throwing stones. The pebble thrown by "anti-Muck patriotism" at Philadelphia invites a shower of brickbats in response.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

om
dress:

DID HE MONKEY WITH THE S. S. B.?

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—Well indeed may Baltimore point the finger of scorn at Philadelphia. The birthplace of Liberty—the home of the flag—and yet it welcomes with open arms a man who makes no secret of his Prussianism, an acknowledged enemy of our country, and glories in it. What would be his fate, think you, if, American by birth and sympathies, he attempted such tactics in Berlin and tried monkey tricks with the "Wacht 'dam' Rhine"?

Compelled, against his wish, to play our national anthem, Muck tried to belittle its force and dignity by interpolating trifling trills and quavers. The "Star Spangled Banner" needs no interpolations or embellishments; strong, uncompromising and glorious, it thrills to the very core of one's heart. No Prussian imagination or touch is necessary to alter or desecrate its magnificently inspiring chords.

The lack of patriotism observable in our places of amusement, where the few who attempt applause are shamed into silence by the insolent indifference and inaction of their neighbors, is lamentable. No matter what the sentiment or scene conveyed to eye or ear, nor how inciting to natural enthusiasm, it falls upon the barren ground of pacifism and what seems to be absolute, offensive apathy. Will nothing stir us up?

A MERE WOMAN.

Philadelphia, November 7, 1917.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

Concerning Doctor Muck

TO THE EDITOR—I was more than pleased to read "The Optimist" in Wednesday's North American. His opinion on the Muck affair will have the approval of all true Americans. I attended a concert two years ago, when Madame Melba was the soloist. Doctor Muck's behavior on that occasion was tiresome. The house, anixous for an encore, applauded the singer, who is a great favorite with Philadelphians. The conductor appeared incensed and seated himself in a chair (ordering one of his men off it) and, with his arms folded, back to the audience, remained in that position until the noise ceased, then went on with the program. Strange to say he received the usual greeting after each number. Think of spending $2 for a seat to watch a man pout. If this is the sort of "kultur" we hear so much about, then it's no wonder that the best blood in the world is being shed to crush it out of existence. Yes, I agree with "The Optimist," the Liberty Bell is in the wrong city.

Philadelphia, Nov. 8. E. A. C.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 10 1917

PHILA. ORCHESTRA BOWS TO PITTSBURGH'S WILL

Will Eliminate Compositions by Germans From Its Concerts in Western City

ACTS ON RESOLUTIONS

Association Members See No Reason for Not Playing Teuton Works Here

The management of the Philadelphia Orchestra announced yesterday that it would comply with the request of its patrons in Pittsburgh and change programs prepared for concerts in that city in order to eliminate the works of Germans and subjects of Germany's allies. The statement of Arthur Judson, manager of the orchestra, follows:

"The Philadelphia Orchestra Association has just received from the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, the organization which is responsible for its concerts in Pittsburgh, the following resolution:

"'Resolved, that the Philadelphia Orchestra be instructed to omit, during its performances in Pittsburgh for the period of the war, all music written by any German composer, and all music composed by a subject of any of Germany's allies.'

"The motives governing this resolution have been adequately set forth in the statement given to the newspapers.

"The Philadelphia Orchestra Association wishes to announce that it will conform with pleasure to the request of the Pittsburgh association. The Philadelphia Orchestra Association is heartily in accord with any movement dictated by patriotic motives.

"The next pair of concerts in Pittsburgh, of November 19 and 20, will be devoted entirely to the works of American composers. The third pair of concerts, on January 7 and 8, will consist of two Tschaikowsky programs. The other programs will be announced in due time."

Neither Mr. Judson nor Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the orchestra, would add a word to the formal statement. Men high in the counsels of the orchestra association, however, were emphatic in their indorsement of the statement that the orchestra is in sympathy with any movement dictated by patriotism.

At the same time, it was indicated that the performance of compositions of the old German masters in no wise gives aid and comfort to the enemy, that the genius of these men has long been the property of the world, and that the performance of their work involved no cash payments to any German citizen.

The attitude of Philadelphia music lovers on this point was indicated clearly yesterday when a program made up completely from the works of Beethoven was applauded to the echo at the fifth pair of concerts of the season at the Academy of Music. Mr. Stokowski and his men have received no more cordial indorsement recently than was given them at this concert.

"It is evident," said a representative of the orchestra association yesterday, "that local audiences are not inclined to look at the matter as Pittsburgh has. It seems to me that the people here are taking the best view of the matter. There are thousands of fine compositions written by subjects of our allies and our own writers. Programs could be made up from their works. But at the same time, some of the old Germans wrote wonderful music. It is part of our regular musical diet and there is no genuine reason why they should be removed.

"We mustn't forget that many of the old composers fought against the government of their day. Wagner was exiled. He was a thoro rebel. Germany can no more claim them exclusively than they claimed Germany."

The Baltimore committee, which stands behind the concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra in that city, has not asked for the elimination of German composers, it was stated yesterday by the orchestra management. Moreover, it is believed here that it contemplates no such action. Having properly snubbed Doctor Muck, of the Boston Orchestra, for refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" Baltimore is determined, it is said, not to go to further extremes in the matter.

n PRESS
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 9 - 1917

APPOINT CHALMERS HEAD OF AUTO WAR COMMITTEE

Will Co-operate With Government Body on Behalf of Industry.

New York, Nov. 8.—Hugh Chalmers, vice-president of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, was today named by the directors of that organization as chairman of a special committee appointed to co-operate with the war industries board at Washington on behalf of the automobile industry.

A. W. Copeland, representing motor and accessory manufacturers, and John R. Lee, are the other members of the committee.

WILL ASK STOKOWSKI TO PLAY NO GERMAN MUSIC

Pittsburgh Orchestra Association Wants Only English, French or Italian Compositions.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Pittsburgh, Nov. 8.—The agitation against all German and Austrian performances here has been heightened by the action of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, which, last night, adopted a resolution requesting the Philadelphia Orchestra during its forthcoming visit to omit all music written by Germans or by composers of those countries allied with Germany in the war, and confine itself exclusively to music written by American, English, French, Italian or Russian composers. The resolution finishes with this paragraph:—

It is nevertheless felt that at the crucial period of our country, when enemy propaganda both at home and abroad will welcome the slightest encouragement it behooves all loyal citizens to show in every public act disapproval and rejection of all that savors in the slightest degree of German influence recognition or sympathy. To do otherwise would be to seem to give moral support to the living enemies of art and progress.

Captain Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, barred from performing here by the police, has issued a statement protesting that he is not sending his money to the enemies of the United States, although he admits it is going to his father in Vienna. Nothing has been done about the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert here late this month, but it is known that the police authorities are strongly of the opinion that it ought to be prohibited, and if strong pressure is brought to bear on the Director of Public Safety it is believed he will cancel the engagement.

om SUN

dress: New York City.

te NOV 15 1917

Karl Muck.

The following letter has been received from a Brooklyn reader of THE SUN:

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: For the benefit of many of the Brooklyn subscribers to the Boston Symphony will you kindly give a brief history of KARL MUCK?

"Is he a Prussian and is he a close friend of the Kaiser? Has he expressed any opinion in regard to the war?

"Do you think a loyal American can consistently attend his concerts?

"SYMPHONY SUBSCRIBER."

KARL MUCK is not a Prussian but a Bavarian. He is a personal friend of the Kaiser.

He was born in 1859 in Würzburg, the son of a Councillor of the Kingdom of Bavaria. His father was a gifted musician. At eleven KARL MUCK appeared in public as a pianist. Later he was a violinist in a symphony orchestra.

He went to Heidelberg and Leipsic. The latter university gave him its Ph. D. in 1880, there being no degree of Doctor of Music.

Dr. MUCK's subsequent career has been as follows:

1880-1881. Chorus master in the Municipal Theatre at Zürich.

1881-1882. Conductor at Salzburg, Austria.

1882-1884. Conductor of opera at Brünn, Austria.

1884-1886. Conductor of opera at Graz, Austria.

1886-1892. Conductor of German opera and Philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia.

1889. Conductor of ANGELO NEUMANN'S opera company in Russia.

1891. Conductor of NEUMANN'S opera company in Berlin.

1892-1906. Principal conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin.

1906-1907. Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

As "guest" conductor Dr. MUCK appeared at various times in Petrograd and Moscow, Copenhagen, Madrid, Paris and London.

Now as to our reader's remaining questions:

We can find no record of an expression by Dr. MUCK of any opinion on the war unless this, in a despatch from Boston dated November 1, should be so classified:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Major HENRY L. HIGGINSON has publicly stated that Dr. MUCK did not at any time refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner." The Boston Symphony Orchestra now regularly plays "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. MUCK conducting.

We see no reason why a loyal American may not conscientiously attend the concerts presided over by Dr. MUCK, in this not so much disagreeing with as diverging from the point of view expressed by HJALMAR H. BOYESEN in a letter printed elsewhere on this page. By no stretch of the imagination can Dr. MUCK's customary attitude be characterized as that of a "contemptuous and defiant alien." Dr. MUCK's polished manner may conceal a severe contempt for much that is American, but, as the reviewer of musical affairs for THE SUN observed on November 9, 1906, "the new conductor * * * is anything but a poseur."

Has Dr. MUCK ever said anything adverse about America? As we say, we find no record of it; but we do find him recorded as calling America "a marvellous country, a country that should be the source of splendid inspiration for every art." We do find him recorded as saying (the italics are apparently his own):

"In America, I should say, you will have for your later day music the great idea of democracy, of freedom for all the people."

Let's be fair to Dr. MUCK. There have been Germans before this who loved music and liberty both. RICHARD WAGNER was forced into exile because he loved liberty. LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN, dedicating his Heroic Symphony to a leader of the people, tore the dedication in two when that leader, flushed by victory, proclaimed himself an emperor.

om PUBLIC Ledger
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

dress:

NOV 13 1917

Helots of Music

WHILE from a certain point of view the Doctor Muck issue has simmered down, as a matter of fact the real issue has not been touched. Into the conflicting and contradictory statements as to Doctor Muck's attitude toward the national air as a musical composition, or a symbolic act of homage, one need not go for the moment; the contradictions in time will strangle those who invented them or uttered them. But from the action of Doctor Muck, here and in Washington, it is very plain that he is perfectly willing, with perhaps many cynical Prussian reservations up his sleeve, to disport himself as the helot in music. In other words, somewhat as was the case with a certain class called helots in Sparta and with those not capable of citizenship in Athens, to say nothing of the high-class slavery of Greek musicians, professors, philosophers, composers and entertainers that existed in Rome when Rome had conquered the world, it looks very much as if in the opera and in our concerts we are graciously to allow those who, like Doctor Muck, for a large fee are willing to overlook all questions of their sympathies and relationships to appear before us and display the virtuosity supposedly inherent in their foreign origin, racial endowments and superior training.

If this be understood, the persistence of Doctor Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as a superhelot in service to the American public, who at command performs regularly the symbolic act of tribute to the nation by playing the "Star Spangled Banner"—Tannhaeuser overture version—at all his concerts takes on a new aspect. But is this the kind of dignity that one expects from those who forever are abusing Americans because we are supposedly after the almighty dollar under all circumstances? It would not seem so. But that is the position all the foreign musical entertainers now among us who come from countries with whom we are at war are getting themselves into; paid servants of a Mecenas, who entertain those whom they privately abuse. And what can Doctor Muck's standards of conduct be when he is revealed as one of the backers of the notorious Fatherland of Viereck, to the tune of $300, paid at that to a man he was later forced to put in jail?

n PRESS
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

Philadelphia, Nov. 0 191

DISCRIMINATING AGAINST MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—I have noticed two articles in "The Press" of this week that have interested me, and I would like to make a comment upon them. One is the refusal of Pittsburgh to allow Fritz Kreisler to play in that city, and the other is the refusal of Baltimore to hear Dr. Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It seems to me that this is unfair, and discriminating against certain persons. America has always believed in fair play, and if we think it is detrimental not to have Mr. Kreisler to appear or Dr. Muck to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, why not go further and not allow any German aliens or pro-German citizens to appear in public and accept the money of the American people.

There is not a large orchestra in America in which German aliens do not dominate, and most of these organizations are conducted by Germans or by conductors with German leanings. If we want to begin with music, then why allow any Germans to sing for us, or any German artists to have their pictures exhibited in our galleries.

It is unfair and un-American to discriminate against two German artists and leave the rest to follow the pursuit

[illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] American born [illegible] them [illegible] have fight- [illegible] right to dis- [illegible] and force [illegible] by throw- [illegible] their posi- [illegible]

If Mr. Muck is [illegible] go further [illegible] German [illegible] orchestras, [illegible] public ap- [illegible] rican citi- [illegible] necessary food. Let us go without anti-German sentiunnecessary music purveyed.

LOUIS L. KORNBAUGH.

Philadelphia, Nov. 7, 1917.

KARL MUCK.

Hjalmar H. Boyesen Thinks His Presence Is Undesirable.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I do not agree with your editorial article which states that "when the greater agents of Germany have been put out of the way it will be time to deal with the smaller."

On the contrary let us deal with all, great and small, and at all times. To Dr. Muck and all others should be denied an audience in this country.

Many of our allies are going without [illegible] CARING FOR SAILORS.

[illegible] that they should [illegible] aged to leav[illegible] respecti[illegible] ticula[illegible] As[illegible]

PRESS
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

0 191

AMERICA FIRST—ORCHESTRA LAST

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—In "The Press" of November 1, Charles Edward Russell says: "There were two chief reasons why the Russian people had no confidence in the United States.

First, the work of American pacifists, German sympathizers and German agents sent from this country to Russia to bring about exactly this condition.

Second, the attitude of a large part of the American press toward Russia and its troubles.

In your same issue you had an editorial on "Traitors and Spies," which had the true ring in it, consequently when, the next day, you wrote on "Fair Play," it made us wonder.

We believe that we mentioned to you in a previous letter that Professor Brown, of Princeton, made the statement "that society must not be shocked if Americans took the chastisement of pacifists and copperheads into their own hands and failed to wait on the slow process of the law, especially when there did not seem to be any law which covered their acts."

In this respect it is permissible to say that "safety first" is a mighty good rule for all those persons who have not acquired the practice of American first.

You say, in your article, that New Englanders will be shocked at the lawless spirit that animated the flogging of the pacifist in Kentucky, but being a New Englander, we can say they will not be, neither will they think it a lawless act for John Miller, of Carmi, Illinois, to punch Samuel Seibert for saying from the pulpit: "Any man who fights in this war is not a Christian," and that he personally would never salute the United States flag.

Like Dr. Karl Muck, he considered "safety first, then he got wise to America first, and did salute and kiss the flag.

You say: "What would the patriots of New England say if an American in Germany was made, under duress, to salute the German flag?"

They would say he would be a fool if he did not. However, your question is too allegorical, for there was no compulsion or duress in Dr. Muck's case, and since he was a German subject taking good American money for leading an orchestra, he should play "The Star Spangled Banner", or quit. From subsequent reports we learn he did both.

Do you suppose a German audience would attend a symphony concert at this time that was conducted by an American "swine?" There are several good reasons why you cannot answer this question in the affirmative, but assuming that you could, would not some swashbuckler strike the man who refused to play "Wacht Am Rhine?"

I like the tune of that sing. To me it has far more harmony than all the euphonious sounds that ever came over the water in one flat or five sharps, except "America," and from a music-lover's standpoint, while it might grate on some people's war passions, the fact remains that it is music. Further, "The Star Spangled Banner," when played by a good orchestra, is also a subject to be proud of from the same point of view.

Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" on the grounds that it was not classic music, and out of place in a symphony concert, was the rub, since an American musical professor will tell you it is one of the most difficult pieces of music to play or sing.

Had Dr. Muck refused to play the music he would have been boycotted, because to do otherwise would have placed the New England people in the position of lending aid to the enemy, which you are aware it traitorous.

My idea is not only to roast you for that "Fair Play" article, but to reiterate the fact that we are at war and that the most important matter in this world at this time is to subjugate the German outlaws.

At present we are scrimping that our allies may be fed, as well as our young men soldiers, yet we have our food supplies sunk by submarines or burned at the docks in this country. The munitions we can replace, but the food we cannot, consequently our war passions are becoming more and more irritated, and since in this country the people make the laws and there seems to be no law which covers the espionage and sabbotage acts of foreigners, it is good policy for them, for Sein Feiners and for pacifists, to act "safety first" and shout "America first." What would the German outlaws do with an American spy? What does our judiciary do with a German spy?

The Germans shoot spies, and we send them to a Federal prison. It is not reasonable to suppose that we can remain supinely inactive when treachery lurks at home while our young men must face bullets at the front.

I am not a blood-thirsty individual, and believe that a white man is as good as a dark man any day, so long as he behaves, but I have no use for a pacifist or a pro-German, or a spy, at this particular time when he are in such great peril.

E. B. WILSON.

Scranton, Pa., Nov. 3, 1917.

n PRESS

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

APPOINT CHALMERS HEAD OF AUTO WAR COMMITTEE

Will Co-operate With Government Body on Behalf of Industry.

New York, Nov. 8.—Hugh Chalmers, vice-president of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, was today named by the directors of that organization as chairman of a special committee appointed to co-operate with the war industries board at Washington on behalf of the automobile industry.

A. W. Copeland, representing motor and accessory manufacturers, and John R. Lee, are the other members of the committee.

WILL ASK STOKOWSKI TO PLAY NO GERMAN MUSIC

Pittsburgh Orchestra Association Wants Only English, French or Italian Compositions.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Pittsburgh, Nov. 8.—The agitation against all German and Austrian performances here has been heightened by the action of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, which, last night, adopted a resolution requesting the Philadelphia Orchestra during its forthcoming visit to omit all music written by Germans or by composers of those countries allied with Germany in the war, and confine itself exclusively to music written by American, English, French, Italian or Russian composers. The resolution finishes with this paragraph:—

It is nevertheless felt that at the crucial period of our country, when enemy propaganda both at home and abroad will welcome the slightest encouragement it behooves all loyal citizens to show in every public act disapproval and rejection of all that savors in the slightest degree of German influence recognition or sympathy. To do otherwise would be to seem to give moral support to the living enemies of art and progress.

Captain Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, barred from performing here by the police, has issued a statement protesting that he is not sending his money to the enemies of the United States, although he admits it is going to his father in Vienna. Nothing has been done about the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert here late this month, but it is known that the police authorities are strongly of the opinion that it ought to be prohibited, and if strong pressure is brought to bear on the Director of Public Safety it is believed he will cancel the engagement.

om SUN

dress: New York City.

te NOV 15 1917

Karl Muck.

The following letter has been received from a Brooklyn reader of THE SUN:

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: For the benefit of many of the Brooklyn subscribers to the Boston Symphony will you kindly give a brief history of KARL MUCK?

"Is he a Prussian and is he a close friend of the Kaiser? Has he expressed any opinion in regard to the war?

"Do you think a loyal American can consistently attend his concerts?

"SYMPHONY SUBSCRIBER."

KARL MUCK is not a Prussian but a Bavarian. He is a personal friend of the Kaiser.

He was born in 1859 in Würzburg, the son of a Councillor of the Kingdom of Bavaria. His father was a gifted musician. At eleven KARL MUCK appeared in public as a pianist. Later he was a violinist in a symphony orchestra.

He went to Heidelberg and Leipsic. The latter university gave him its Ph. D. in 1880, there being no degree of Doctor of Music.

Dr. MUCK's subsequent career has been as follows:

1880-1881. Chorus master in the Municipal Theatre at Zürich.

1881-1882. Conductor at Salzburg, Austria.

1882-1884. Conductor of opera at Brünn, Austria.

1884-1886. Conductor of opera at Graz, Austria.

1886-1892. Conductor of German opera and Philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia.

1889. Conductor of ANGELO NEUMANN'S opera company in Russia.

1891. Conductor of NEUMANN'S opera company in Berlin.

1892-1906. Principal conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin.

1906-1907. Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

As "guest" conductor Dr. MUCK appeared at various times in Petrograd and Moscow, Copenhagen, Madrid, Paris and London.

Now as to our reader's remaining questions:

We can find no record of an expression by Dr. MUCK of any opinion on the war unless this, in a despatch from Boston dated November 1, should be so classified:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Major HENRY L. HIGGINSON has publicly stated that Dr. MUCK did not at any time refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner." The Boston Symphony Orchestra now regularly plays "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. MUCK conducting.

We see no reason why a loyal American may not conscientiously attend the concerts presided over by Dr. MUCK, in this not so much disagreeing with as diverging from the point of view expressed by HJALMAR H. BOYESEN in a letter printed elsewhere on this page. By no stretch of the imagination can Dr. MUCK's customary attitude be characterized as that of a "contemptuous and defiant alien." Dr. MUCK's polished manner may conceal a severe contempt for much that is American, but, as the reviewer of musical affairs for THE SUN observed on November 9, 1906, "the new conductor * * * is anything but a poseur."

Has Dr. MUCK ever said anything adverse about America? As we say, we find no record of it; but we do find him recorded as calling America "a marvellous country, a country that should be the source of splendid inspiration for every art." We do find him recorded as saying (the italics are apparently his own):

"In America, I should say, you will have for your later day music the great idea of democracy, of freedom for all the people."

Let's be fair to Dr. MUCK. There have been Germans before this who loved music and liberty both. RICHARD WAGNER was forced into exile because he loved liberty. LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN, dedicating his Heroic Symphony to a leader of the people, tore the dedication in two when that leader, flushed by victory, proclaimed himself an emperor.

om

dress:

Helots of Music

WHILE from a certain point of view the Doctor Muck issue has simmered down, as a matter of fact the real issue has not been touched. Into the conflicting and contradictory statements as to Doctor Muck's attitude toward the national air as a musical composition, or a symbolic act of homage, one need not go for the moment; the contradictions in time will strangle those who invented them or uttered them. But from the action of Doctor Muck, here and in Washington, it is very plain that he is perfectly willing, with perhaps many cynical Prussian reservations up his sleeve, to disport himself as the helot in music. In other words, somewhat as was the case with a certain class called helots in Sparta and with those not capable of citizenship in Athens, to say nothing of the high-class slavery of Greek musicians, professors, philosophers, composers and entertainers that existed in Rome when Rome had conquered the world, it looks very much as if in the opera and in our concerts we are graciously to allow those who, like Doctor Muck, for a large fee are willing to overlook all questions of their sympathies and relationships to appear before us and display the virtuosity supposedly inherent in their foreign origin, racial endowments and superior training.

If this be understood, the persistence of Doctor Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as a superhelot in service to the American public, who at command performs regularly the symbolic act of tribute to the nation by playing the "Star Spangled Banner"—Tannhaeuser overture version—at all his concerts takes on a new aspect. But is this the kind of dignity that one expects from those who forever are abusing Americans because we are supposedly after the almighty dollar under all circumstances? It would not seem so. But that is the position all the foreign musical entertainers now among us who come from countries with whom we are at war are getting themselves into; paid servants of a Mecenas, who entertain those whom they privately abuse. And what can Doctor Muck's standards of conduct be when he is revealed as one of the backers of the notorious Fatherland of Viereck, to the tune of $300, paid at that to a man he was later forced to put in jail?

n PRESS

lress: Philadelphia, Pa.

DISCRIMINATING AGAINST MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—I have noticed two articles in "The Press" of this week that have interested me, and I would like to make a comment upon them. One is the refusal of Pittsburgh to allow Fritz Kreisler to play in that city, and the other is the refusal of Baltimore to hear Dr. Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It seems to me that this is unfair, and discriminating against certain persons. America has always believed in fair play, and if we think it is detrimental not to have Mr. Kreisler to appear or Dr. Muck to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, why not go further and not allow any German aliens or pro-German citizens to appear in public and accept the money of the American people.

There is not a large orchestra in America in which German aliens do not dominate, and most of these organizations are conducted by Germans or by conductors with German leanings. If we want to begin with music, then why allow any Germans to sing for us, or any German artists to have their pictures exhibited in our galleries.

It is unfair and un-American to discriminate against two German artists and leave the rest to follow the pursuit

KARL MUCK.

Hjalmar H. Boyesen Thinks His Presence Is Undesirable.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I do not agree with your editorial article which states that "when the greater agents of Germany have been put out of the way it will be time to deal with the smaller."

On the contrary let us deal with all, great and small, and at all times. To Dr. Muck and all others should be denied an audience in this country.

Many of our allies are going without necessary food. Let us go with anti-German sentiment necessary music purveyors.

ous and defiant alien that they should aged to leave respectively

ticular

As

LOUIS L. KORNBAUGH.

Nov. 7, 1917.

CARING FOR SAILORS.

the Boston Sym-

Amer-

n born them

ay fight-

ht to disand force

by throw-heir posi-

If Mr.

Muck is so further

d German orchestras, public ap-rican citi-

n

PRESS

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

AMERICA FIRST—ORCHESTRA LAST

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—In "The Press' of November 1, Charles Edward Russell says: "There were two chief reasons why the Russian people had no confidence in the United States.

First, the work of American pacifists, German sympathizers and German agents sent from this country to Russia to bring about exactly this condition.

Second, the attitude of a large part of the American press toward Russia and its troubles.

In your same issue you had an editorial on "Traitors and Spies," which had the true ring in it, consequently when, the next day, you wrote on "Fair Play," it made us wonder.

We believe that we mentioned to you in a previous letter that Professor Brown, of Princeton, made the statement "that society must not be shocked if Americans took the chastisement of pacifists and copperheads into their own hands and failed to wait on the slow process of the law, especially when there did not seem to be any law which covered their acts."

In this respect it is permissible to say that "safety first" is a mighty good rule for all those persons who have not acquired the practice of American first.

You say, in your article, that New Englanders will be shocked at the lawless spirit that animated the flogging of the pacifist in Kentucky, but being a New Englander, we can say they will not be, neither will they think it a lawless act for John Miller, of Carmi, Illinois, to punch Samuel Seibert for saying from the pulpit: "Any man who fights in this war is not a Christian," and that he personally would never salute the United States flag.

Like Dr. Karl Muck, he considered "safety first, then he got wise to America first, and did salute and kiss the flag.

You say: "What would the patriots of New England say if an American in Germany was made, under duress, to salute the German flag?"

They would say he would be a fool if he did not. However, your question is too allegorical, for there was no compulsion or duress in Dr. Muck's case, and since he was a German subject taking good American money for leading an orchestra, he should play "The Star Spangled Banner" or quit. From subsequent reports we learn he did both.

Do you suppose a German audience would attend a symphony concert at this time that was conducted by an American "swine?" There are several good reasons why you cannot answer this question in the affirmative, but assuming that you could, would not some swashbuckler strike the man who refused to play "Wacht Am Rhine?"

I like the tune of that sing. To me it has far more harmony than all the euphonious sounds that ever came over the water in one flat or five sharps, except "America," and from a music-lover's standpoint, while it might grate on some people's war passions, the fact remains that it is music. Further, "The Star Spangled Banner," when played by a good orchestra, is also a subject to be proud of from the same point of view.

Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" on the grounds that it was not classic music, and out of place in a symphony concert, was the rub, since an American musical professor will tell you it is one of the most difficult pieces of music to play or sing.

Had Dr. Muck refused to play the music he would have been boycotted, because to do otherwise would have placed the New England people in the position of lending aid to the enemy, which you are aware it traitorous.

My idea is not only to roast you for that "Fair Play" article, but to reiterate the fact that we are at war and that the most important matter in this world at this time is to subjugate the German outlaws.

At present we are scrimping that our allies may be fed, as well as our young men soldiers, yet we have our food supplies sunk by submarines or burned at the docks in this country. The munitions we can replace, but the food we cannot, consequently our war passions are becoming more and more irritated, and since in this country the people make the laws and there seems to be no law which covers the espionage and sabbotage acts of foreigners, it is good policy for them, for Sein Feiners and for pacifists, to act "safety first" and shout "America first." What would the German outlaws do with an American spy? What does our judiciary do with a German spy?

The Germans shoot spies, and we send them to a Federal prison. It is not reasonable to suppose that we can remain supinely inactive when treachery lurks at home while our young men must face bullets at the front.

I am not a blood-thirsty individual, and believe that a white man is as good as a dark man any day, so long as he behaves, but I have no use for a pacifist or a pro-German, or a spy, at this particular time when he are in such great peril.

E. B. WILSON.

Scranton, Pa., Nov. 3, 1917.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 9 1917

APPOINT CHALMERS HEAD OF AUTO WAR COMMITTEE

Will Co-operate With Government Body on Behalf of Industry.

New York, Nov. 8.—Hugh Chalmers, vice-president of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, was today named by the directors of that organization as chairman of a special committee appointed to co-operate with the war industries board at Washington on behalf of the automobile industry.

A. W. Copeland, representing motor and accessory manufacturers, and John R. Lee, are the other members of the committee.

WILL ASK STOKOWSKI TO PLAY NO GERMAN MUSIC

Pittsburgh Orchestra Association Wants Only English, French or Italian Compositions.

Special Despatch to "The Press."

Pittsburgh, Nov. 8.—The agitation against all German and Austrian performances here has been heightened by the action of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, which, last night, adopted a resolution requesting the Philadelphia Orchestra during its forthcoming visit to omit all music written by Germans or by composers of those countries allied with Germany in the war, and confine itself exclusively to music written by American, English, French, Italian or Russian composers. The resolution finishes with this paragraph:—

It is nevertheless felt that at the crucial period of our country, when enemy propaganda both at home and abroad will welcome the slightest encouragement it behooves all loyal citizens to show in every public act disapproval and rejection of all that savors in the slightest degree of German influence recognition or sympathy. To do otherwise would be to seem to give moral support to the living enemies of art and progress.

Captain Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, barred from performing here by the police, has issued a statement protesting that he is not sending his money to the enemies of the United States, although he admits it is going to his father in Vienna. Nothing has been done about the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert here late this month, but it is known that the police authorities are strongly of the opinion that it ought to be prohibited, and if strong pressure is brought to bear on the Director of Public Safety it is believed he will cancel the engagement.

om SUN
dress: New York City.
te NOV 15 1917

Karl Muck.

The following letter has been received from a Brooklyn reader of THE SUN:

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: For the benefit of many of the Brooklyn subscribers to the Boston Symphony will you kindly give a brief history of KARL MUCK?

"Is he a Prussian and is he a close friend of the Kaiser? Has he expressed any opinion in regard to the war?

"Do you think a loyal American can consistently attend his concerts?

"SYMPHONY SUBSCRIBER."

KARL MUCK is not a Prussian but a Bavarian. He is a personal friend of the Kaiser.

He was born in 1859 in Würzburg, the son of a Councillor of the Kingdom of Bavaria. His father was a gifted musician. At eleven KARL MUCK appeared in public as a pianist. Later he was a violinist in a symphony orchestra.

He went to Heidelberg and Leipsic. The latter university gave him its Ph. D. in 1880, there being no degree of Doctor of Music.

Dr. MUCK's subsequent career has been as follows:

1880-1881. Chorus master in the Municipal Theatre at Zürich.

1881-1882. Conductor at Salzburg, Austria.

1882-1884. Conductor of opera at Brünn, Austria.

1884-1886. Conductor of opera at Graz, Austria.

1886-1892. Conductor of German opera and Philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia.

1889. Conductor of ANGELO NEUMANN'S opera company in Russia.

1891. Conductor of NEUMANN'S opera company in Berlin.

1892-1906. Principal conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin.

1906-1907. Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

As "guest" conductor Dr. MUCK appeared at various times in Petrograd and Moscow, Copenhagen, Madrid, Paris and London.

Now as to our reader's remaining questions:

We can find no record of an expression by Dr. MUCK of any opinion on the war unless this, in a despatch from Boston dated November 1, should be so classified:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Major HENRY L. HIGGINSON has publicly stated that Dr. MUCK did not at any time refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner." The Boston Symphony Orchestra now regularly plays "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. MUCK conducting.

We see no reason why a loyal American may not conscientiously attend the concerts presided over by Dr. MUCK, in this not so much disagreeing with as diverging from the point of view expressed by HJALMAR H. BOYESEN in a letter printed elsewhere on this page. By no stretch of the imagination can Dr. MUCK's customary attitude be characterized as that of a "contemptuous and defiant alien." Dr. MUCK's polished manner may conceal a severe contempt for much that is American, but, as the reviewer of musical affairs for THE SUN observed on November 9, 1906, "the new conductor * * * is anything but a poseur."

Has Dr. M[illegible]

PARK Broadway & 59 Street.
Evenings at 8:15.
Matinees Sat. & Wed. at 2:15.
Spain in New York!!
(ESPANA EN NEW YORK!!)
Quinto Valverde's Fantastic Review.
THE LAND OF JOY
(LA TIERRA DE ALEGRIA) with L'ARGENTINA
NEXT SUNDAY 2d Valverde Concert

THE NATIONAL
Let [illegible] have been G[illegible] loved music and [illegible] ARD WAGNER was forced [illegible] cause he loved liberty. LUDWIG BEETHOVEN, dedicating his Heroic Symphony to a leader of the people, tore the dedication in two when that leader, flushed by victory, proclaimed himself an emperor.

om [illegible]
PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
dress: [illegible]
NOV 13 1917

Helots of Music

WHILE from a certain point of view the Doctor Muck issue has simmered down, as a matter of fact the real issue has not been touched. Into the conflicting and contradictory statements as to Doctor Muck's attitude toward the national air as a musical composition, or a symbolic act of homage, one need not go for the moment; the contradictions in time will strangle those who invented them or uttered them. But from the action of Doctor Muck, here and in Washington, it is very plain that he is perfectly willing, with perhaps many cynical Prussian reservations up his sleeve, to disport himself as the helot in music. In other words, somewhat as was the case with a certain class called helots in Sparta and with those not capable of citizenship in Athens, to say nothing of the high-class slavery of Greek musicians, professors, philosophers, composers and entertainers that existed in Rome when Rome had conquered the world, it looks very much as if in the opera and in our concerts we are graciously to allow those who, like Doctor Muck, for a large fee are willing to overlook all questions of their sympathies and relationships to appear before us and display the virtuosity supposedly inherent in their foreign origin, racial endowments and superior training.

If this be understood, the persistence of Doctor Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as a superhelot in service to the American public, who at command performs regularly the symbolic act of tribute to the nation by playing the "Star Spangled Banner"—Tannhaeuser overture version—at all his concerts takes on a new aspect. But is this the kind of dignity that one expects from those who forever are abusing Americans because we are supposedly after the almighty dollar under all circumstances? It would not seem so. But that is the position all the foreign musical entertainers now among us who come from countries with whom we are at war are getting themselves into; paid servants of a Mecenas, who entertain those whom they privately abuse. And what can Doctor Muck's standards of conduct be when he is revealed as one of the backers of the notorious Fatherland of Viereck, to the tune of $300, paid at that to a man he was later forced to put in jail?

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

DISCRIMINATING AGAINST MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—I have noticed two articles in "The Press" of this week that have interested me, and I would like to make a comment upon them. One is the refusal of Pittsburgh to allow Fritz Kreisler to play in that city, and the other is the refusal of Baltimore to hear Dr. Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It seems to me that this is unfair, and discriminating against certain persons. America has always believed in fair play, and if we think it is detrimental not to have Mr. Kreisler to appear or Dr. Muck to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, why not go further and not allow any German aliens or pro-German citizens to appear in public and accept the money of the American people.

There is not a large orchestra in America in which German aliens do not dominate, and most of these organizations are conducted by Germans or by conductors with German leanings. If we want to begin with music, then why allow any Germans to sing for us, or any German artists to have their pictures exhibited in our galleries.

It is unfair and un-American to discriminate against two German artists and leave the rest to follow the pursuit without molestation. In the Boston Symphony Orchestra there are many American musicians, men who have been born in this country, and several of them having sons in the army or navy fighting for their country. Is it right to discriminate against their leader, and force the orchestra to disband, thereby throwing these Americans out of their positions.

All should be treated alike. If Mr. Kreisler can't play, and Dr. Muck is not allowed to conduct, then go further and put German conductors and German musicians out of all of our orchestras, and allow no one to make a public appearance unless he is an American citizen and possessing anti-German sentiments.

MRS. LOUIS L. KORNBAUGH.
Philadelphia, Nov. 7, 1917.

CARING FOR SAILORS.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 9 1917

AMERICA FIRST—ORCHESTRA LAST

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—In "The Press" of November 1, Charles Edward Russell says: "There were two chief reasons why the Russian people had no confidence in the United States.

First, the work of American pacifists, German sympathizers and German agents sent from this country to Russia to bring about exactly this condition.

Second, the attitude of a large part of the American press toward Russia and its troubles.

In your same issue you had an editorial on "Traitors and Spies," which had the true ring in it, consequently when, the next day, you wrote on "Fair Play," it made us wonder.

We believe that we mentioned to you in a previous letter that Professor Brown, of Princeton, made the statement "that society must not be shocked if Americans took the chastisement of pacifists and copperheads into their own hands and failed to wait on the slow process of the law, especially when there did not seem to be any law which covered their acts."

In this respect it is permissible to say that "safety first" is a mighty good rule for all those persons who have not acquired the practice of American first.

You say, in your article, that New Englanders will be shocked at the lawless spirit that animated the flogging of the pacifist in Kentucky, but being a New Englander, we can say they will not be, neither will they think it a lawless act for John Miller, of Carmi, Illinois, to punch Samuel Seibert for saying from the pulpit: "Any man who fights in this war is not a Christian," and that he personally would never salute the United States flag.

Like Dr. Karl Muck, he considered "safety first, then he got wise to America first, and did salute and kiss the flag.

You say: "What would the patriots of New England say if an American in Germany was made, under duress, to salute the German flag?"

They would say he would be a fool if he did not. However, your question is too allegorical, for there was no compulsion or duress in Dr. Muck's case, and since he was a German subject taking good American money for leading an orchestra, he should play "The Star Spangled Banner" or quit. From subsequent reports we learn he did both.

Do you suppose a German audience would attend a symphony concert at this time that was conducted by an American "swine?" There are several good reasons why you cannot answer this question in the affirmative, but assuming that you could, would not some swashbuckler strike the man who refused to play "Wacht Am Rhine?"

I like the tune of that sing. To me it has far more harmony than all the euphonious sounds that ever came over the water in one flat or five sharps, except "America," and from a music-lover's standpoint, while it might grate on some people's war passions, the fact remains that it is music. Further, "The Star Spangled Banner," when played by a good orchestra, is also a subject to be proud of from the same point of view.

Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" on the grounds that it was not classic music, and out of place in a symphony concert, was the rub, since an American musical professor will tell you it is one of the most difficult pieces of music to play or sing.

Had Dr. Muck refused to play the music he would have been boycotted, because to do otherwise would have placed the New England people in the position of lending aid to the enemy, which you are aware it traitorous.

My idea is not only to roast you for that "Fair Play" article, but to reiterate the fact that we are at war and that the most important matter in this world at this time is to subjugate the German outlaws.

At present we are scrimping that our allies may be fed, as well as our young men soldiers, yet we have our food supplies sunk by submarines or burned at the docks in this country. The munitions we can replace, but the food we cannot, consequently our war passions are becoming more and more irritated, and since in this country the people make the laws and there seems to be no law which covers the espionage and sabbotage acts of foreigners, it is good policy for them, for Sein Feiners and for pacifists, to act "safety first" and shout "America first." What would the German outlaws do with an American spy? What does our judiciary do with a German spy?

The Germans shoot spies, and we send them to a Federal prison. It is not reasonable to suppose that we can remain supinely inactive when treachery lurks at home while our young men must face bullets at the front.

I am not a blood-thirsty individual, and believe that a white man is as good as a dark man any day, so long as he behaves, but I have no use for a pacifist or a pro-German, or a spy, at this particular time when he are in such great peril.

E. B. WILSON.
Scranton, Pa., Nov. 3, 1917.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 10 1917

HUNEKER COMPARES READINGS OF STOKOWSKI AND MUCK

Using Beethoven's Fifth Symphony as a Basis, Says That Which the Band from Boston Excelled in Polish the Philadelphia Conductor Was the More Vivile in the Finale.

By James Huneker

THE C minor symphony three times in one week! The most fervid Beethoven admirer can't ask for more. Yet it will be three times for this week when tonight's concert of the Symphony Orchestra is over, the other two being the performance by the Boston last Monday night and the afternoon concert of the home orchestra at the Academy of Music yesterday, where an all-Beethoven program was presented. Now, one-man shows in the Fine Arts are usually monotonous unless it be Rembrandt or a master of like quality; and in music the test is quite as searching. All Beethoven? Yes. But how many other names can you mention without challenge. Mr. Stokowski, who is a born programmaker, as Dr. Muck is the reverse, played a pair of symphonies, the second and the fifth: D major and C minor, excellent foils in tonalities. The first-named, composed when Beethoven was in the doleful dumps about his deafness, needs, the gods be praised, no program. It is absolute music, pure and simple, though not merely a pleasing formal pattern. There is plenty of emotion, though poignant pathos is not in the scheme. The composer has not yet outgrown his Hayden and Mozart influences. He is unaffectedly gay. He has grown since the first symphony, though hardly ready for his later flight into the vasty blue of the Eroica.

JAMES HUNEKER.

Particularly interesting was the opportunity of comparing the readings of stokowski and Muck of the Fifth Symphony. Naturally enough, the band from Boston, excelled in polish, which said polish sometimes militated against tonal breadth. Dr. Muck is often the petit maitre. His passage work is fairly perfection at times, the strings, lacelike in their embroidered effects, the wood-wind as if blown by a single breath. But what George Moore calls "guts," a sound old Anglo-Saxon word, despite its connotation of the abbatoir, is precisely what was present in Mr. Stokowski's incisively rhythmic interpretation, and was not felt in Dr. Muck's. The Philadelphia conductor was virile in the finale, and the close of the Andante displayed his poetic temperament. There were occasional rough spots, but as whole the performance was eloquent.

When Mendelssohn played on the piano the C minor symphony to Goethe, the poet, who was unmusical nevertheless was affected. At first he said: "That does not move one at all; it only astonishes; it is grandiose." But even this tone, deaf man had to acknowledge that the composition, pale as was the piano transcription, strangely stirred him. He exclaimed: "That is very grand, quite mad, it makes one almost afraid the house will come down. and what must it be when it is played by all the people of the orchestra!"

Beethoven wrote the overture to von Collin's tragedy "Coriolan," but his memories of Plutarch and Shakespeare doubtless inspired him. Do we not recognize the haughty defiance of the protagonist, the deprecation of Volumnia, and the hero's struggle with both himself and the world and then his final ruin? Of it Wagner wrote: "The tragic idea of the powerful work lies entirely in the personal fate of the hero. An irreconcilable pride, in overtopping ultra-vigorous and oversmiling nature can our sympathy only by its downfall; let us feel the coming of it, and, at last, witness the consummation, that was the master's intention. Beethoven seized upon a single point, the most decisive, so as to focus the true, the emotional content of the whole subject matter and transmit it again to us as purely human feeling." The overture was dramatically delivered yesterday.

A comparative novelty was Beethoven's Three Equali for four trombones, written, so Mr. Goepp tells us, in his scholarly annotations to the program at Linz. "The term Equali," Mr. Goepp informs us, "is used in music to denote voices of the same kind, male or female, and is extended to an instrumental composition in the range of male or treble voices." With a male choir these Equali were sung and played at the funeral of the composer. The trombones of the symphony orchestra solemnly intoned the music, which proved lugubrious and rather depressing. It roused memories of Karlsbad at 6 o'clock of a Summer morning when the visitor in search of a "cure" is aroused by a Lutheran chorale played on the esplanade. Perhaps Beethoven's sojourn in the charming Bohemian resort may have stimulated him to write these imposing harmonies. This evening the same program will be repeated at the Academy.

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 21

SCORE BEETHOVEN SUCCESS

Boston Chorus Also Sings National Anthem, Dr. Muck Conducting

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—Every seat and every available foot of standing room was occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long-awaited and eagerly expected performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of four hundred singers, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck.

The chorus comprised the pick of the professional and amateur singers of Boston, and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hampel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

To accommodate the five hundred singers and musicians, a special stage had been built. With the exception of the National Anthem, which, sung by the chorus, under Dr. Muck's leadership, opened the concert, the symphony was the only work on the programme.

Its performance aroused remarkable enthusiasm on the part of the audience, which at the end took the nature of an ovation to Dr. Muck, the soloists, the orchestra and the chorus. There were many distinguished musicians and music lovers present from New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Springfield, Hartford and other cities.

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.

—If it came to getting along with one of the two, the Boston Symphony Orchestra or the Star Spangled Banner, there is but one class of people in this country that would be likely to produce any arguments on the matter. The remainder wouldn't argue the question; they'd admit it.

SUN
Baltimore, Md.
NOV 20 1917

Prejudice Vs. Patriotism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: There is a question in the midst of the muckraking of the past week which has occurred to many minds. How far does prejudice overrule patriotism? Major Higginson is said to be well known as a patriot, but he is not the only man or woman in New England who will not consider "The Star-Spangled Banner" in any other light than the poor doggerel of a man unfortunate enough to be born below the Mason and Dixon line. It has been the writer's experience of many years to hear the anthem ridiculed, words and music, while the Battle Hymn of the Republic has been lauded and placed above it in many cases. During the Civil War "The Star-Spangled Banner" was naturally in abeyance in the South and "Dixie" took its place. Thank God that time has passed, and it remains for a Boston man of culture to cast a slight upon what is recognized everywhere as the national anthem—the vocal flag.

It has been said by some of the New Englanders that the words "Oh say!" are typical of American vulgarity. Perhaps had a real genuine son of the New England soil written an anthem, it might have begun with "Du tell (do tell), can you see?" Shall we change those two words to suit our Northern brethren?

Seriously, prejudice is a powerful adversary, and there is much prejudice in New England, where broad-mindedness is greatly vaunted. Much of the feeling against our wonderful President has been fomented by those who think him too kind to the South. This has been said time and again.

Coming nearer home, we have an example in New York of prejudice against a Mayor who proved himself fearless in opposing bad administration in charities conducted by Catholics as well as Protestants. The result has been an overwhelming vote against him, chiefly polled by the Catholics, who resented interference. C. R. HALL.

Ruxton, Md., Nov. 7.

m PUBLIC
dress:
to

SEE REPROOF TO DR. MUCK IN MINISTER'S ADDRESS

Crowd of 1500 Attends Service Commission Meeting of Presbyterian Church

Fully 1500 persons crowded Calvary Presbyterian Church, Fifteenth and Locust streets, last night to attend the meeting of the National Service Commission of the Presbyterian Church. Many clergymen prominent in the work of the denomination were present and several of them addressed the meeting. Dr. William H. Roberts presided. The other speakers were the Rev. John R. Davies pastor of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church; Dr. Charles Wood, Church of the Covenant, Washington, and the Rev. John F. Carson, chairman of the National Service Commission, Brooklyn.

In his address the Rev. Mr. Davies arraigned persons who while enjoying the benefits and comforts of this republic are unwiling to play its national airs. He also said it made him highly indignant to hear of a Philadelphia audience applauding in such a case. While the speaker did not mention any name, it was believed that his remarks were directed at Dr. Carl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From REPUBLICAN
Address: Springfield, Mass.
Date NOV 8 - 1917

Baltimore has gone into the air unnecessarily over Dr Muck and "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr Muck is having it played by his orchestra and, what is more, he has never refused to have it played. Baltimore gets hysterical, perhaps, because it was the home of Francis Scott Key.

CALL
s: New York City
NOV 2 1917

BEETHOVEN AN ENEMY ALIEN

"RAUS!" CRIES "PATRIOTIC PITTSBURG," TABOOING ALL HUN MUSIC IN DRIVE FOR DEMOCRACY.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 12.—In obedience to the request of such well recognized patriotic organizations as the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Daughters of 1812, of Betsy Ross, of the Confederacy and the Grand Army of the Republic, no German music will be played in Pittsburgh hereafter.

It is not claimed that the fear of insidious enemy propaganda being hidden in the music inspired the ban, but it is held that preference should be given to American and allied music—during the duration of the war, anyway.

The association sponsoring the Philadelphia Orchestra, which is the only recognized symphony organization which plays regularly here, announced that not a single German number would be given this season.

It is a matter of great doubt whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be permitted to fill its engagement here in January. "Leaders of fashion" said today that so long as the notorious Dr. Karl Muck is the conductor, that organization will not be permitted to play.

There are, of course, a number in this city who actually assert that art knows no nationality, but they admit that at present they are a minority party.

SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 19

Don't Want Dr. Muck In Washington Any More.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities? is the inquiry reaching the office of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies. The inquiry is prompted by the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the capital.

The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received at this time. Washington people who support his concerts say that music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in wartime everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

The National Committee maintains that the Capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful operation of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support.

FROM THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE OF PATRIOTIC SOCIETIES, SOUTHERN BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.
1917

Characteristic Of Maryland Patriotism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The patriotic meeting held at the Lyric, in Baltimore, Tuesday, for the purpose of honoring "The Star-Spangled Banner" in the city in which this immortal anthem was composed, was characteristic of the loyal people of Baltimore and Maryland. Former Governor Warfield, who presided over the meeting, is a man of whom our State may be truly proud. God bless Cardinal Gibbons for the noble and inspiring sentiments which he expressed in his letter.

I heartily approve of the resolutions that were adopted at the meeting and of the patriotism that was there manifested.

Dr. Muck, the Prussian leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, received a just rebuke from the people of Maryland for his insult to our national anthem at Providence, R. I. He who is not with us is against us, and the United States should be too hot to hold him.

There is still another thing for Baltimore to do. It has a street called German. There should be nothing to remind us of Germany in the city of Baltimore. In honor of our splendid former Governor, I would suggest that the name of the street be changed to Warfield street. W. BROOKE HUNTER.

Hyattsville, Md., Nov. 7.

149 RECORD. NOV. 21, 1917.

Monitor
Nov. 21, 1917.

GREAT OVATON FOR DR. MUCK AT SYMPHONY

Gives Fine Performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony

By J. V. Clark

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, popularly called the choral, was sung at Symphony Hall last evening, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. The orchestra was the regular Boston Symphony Orchestra. The chorus was made up of some 350 singers, who were selected from the various choral societies of Boston. These choristers have been under the direction of Stephen Townsend for many weeks. He has coached them until the last week, when they have had attention from Dr. Muck. The solo singers last evening were Miss Frieda Hempel, Miss Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

This performance was the first of three performances of great works calling for orchestra and chorus which Dr. Muck will produce this winter. He has long been anxious to do work of this nature, especially the Choral Symphony, but the lack of an adequate chorus has prevented.

Last night he had splendid material to work with. The orchestra needs no commendation. The voices in the chorus were as good as Boston could produce. There was no skimping on soloists. Miss Hempel is one of the most finished sopranos today. She proved her artistry, if it was ever questioned, in the Boston production of "Der Rosenkavalier." Mr Hackett is a "Pops" find. Mr. Middleton only a fortnight ago took chief honors at a Sunday Symphony concert. Miss Keyes is an admirable contralto.

The Ninth Symphony was produced in Vienna on May 7, 1824.

Sketches of the symphony were made as early as 1815, although not finished until 1824. The first performance was at the Kaerthnerthor Theatre. The first performance in the United States was at a concert by the Philharmonic Society, New York, at Castle Garden, May 20, 1846. In Boston the symphony was not given until Feb. 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Haydn Society.

The last performances in Boston occurred at the final symphony concerts of the 28th season, April 30 and May 1, 1900. The soloists were Miss Laura Combs, soprano, Mme Gertrude May Stein, contralto, Theodore Van Yorx, tenor, and Myron W. Whitney jr., baritone. The chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mr. Fiedler conducted.

A note on the program last evening stated that at the premiere "the success of the symphony was immediate and great. When the drums beat the scherzo motive, the audience applauded so that the orchestra could not be heard. At the end the enthusiasm was trenetic.

The applause last evening was not trenetic. There was much applause, but this applause was for Dr. Muck and his performers. His entrance on the stage was a signal for prolonged applause for the symphony's conduct and at the close the audience remained in their places until he had returned and accepted the tribute of an ovation.

The great symphony itself is known to all students of music. Does it have the spell for the modern, hearing it for the first time, that it had in the days of its Vienne premiere? Does not the third movement seem more reiterative, longer than ever? The symphony, a canvass of mighty dimensions, stands like a mighty epic, but does it make an emotional appeal? To many attending the symphony it was undoubtedly an historical occasion. Such an opportunity has not been enjoyed in Boston for these many years, and in the chaotic times of war it may be years before it is again heard here.

Of the performance last evening only words of praise can be given. The orchestra played superbly. Possibly the scherzo—the scherzo in which Wagner saw planets dancing—was the most gloriously played. The clarity of the first movement with its fundamental idea, the loveliness of the third movement—albeit too long in its loveliness—were treated as if by magic with Dr. Muck's wand.

Choral Symphony Singers

At Last Evening's Symphony

Arthur Hackett, the tenor, and Miss Margaret Keyes, the contralto, who sang last evening in Dr. Muck's great production of Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Singers shared in the excellence of the performance. If Beethoven has written difficult choral music in this symphony, how about the soloists' tasks? The chorus was sure in attack and big in tone. The chorus of sopranos wrestled with the difficult passages allotted to them. A volume of tone that approached perfect intonation from this section in this work is to be marvelled at. We always dread hearing this passage sung by the soprano chorus—they did nobly last evening. Owing to Beethoven's mercies the male chorus was better. The soloists tackled their tasks cheerfully and in some cases with virtuosity. Miss Hempel, a true artist, although not an especially appealing singer, did her difficult bit brilliantly.

Dr. Muck has once more earned the gratitude of Boston in presenting this great work. Although it would not be feasible to give it again with the chorus, the purely orchestral parts would be gratefully heard again. Repetition in the same season would be increased pleasure. Possibly we may hear more of the choral symphony before the musical year is over.

-AMERICAN-
NOV. 21, 1917.

SYMPHONY PLAYS LAST WORK OF BEETHOVEN

By F. J. McISAAC.

The Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, that mammoth and overpowering last work of the greatest composer who ever lived, was given a memorable performance at Symphony Hall last evening by the Boston orchestra and a great chorus of 350 voices.

The chorus was assembled and trained by Stephen Townsend. The combined forces were led by Doctor Muck.

For soloists there were Freida Hempel, soprano; of the Metropolitan; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, basso, of the Metropolitan.

CHORUS SINGS ANTHEM.

The evening began with the "Star Spangled Banner," and the chorus sang lustily and tunefully with the orchestra. The effect was fine and inspiring.

Beethoven was old and sick and deaf when he wrote the Ninth Symphony. He died three years later, in 1827.

He wished it to be his masterpiece and he expanded it to nearly twice the length of any of his previous symphonies adding a chorale to the finale, which was a musical setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

This chorale is the most massive, most difficult and most imposing of works. It brings a symphony distinctly below the level of Beethoven's earlier works to an inspired conclusion.

Mr. Townsend's chorus proved a delight in tonal quality, in skill, in precision and in attack. It responded like machinery to the baton of Dr. Muck, and its work reflects the greatest credit upon Mr. Townsend.

DIFFICULT SOLO WORK.

There is very little solo work, considering the prominence of the artists engaged, but that little is as difficult as possible. Mr. Hackett found this out in his solo number and had much trouble getting good tone and keeping the pace set by the conductor. In the quartets he was more at ease. The other soloists acquitted themselves most satisfactorily.

MUSIC

Beethoven Ninth Symphony

Beethoven's Ninth ("Choral") Symphony—Presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus trained by Stephen Townsend, with Karl Muck conducting; Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., evening of Nov. 20, 1917. The soloists were: Mme. Frieda Hempel, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Has the success of the community singing movement aroused the pride of skilled choral performers, and made them come out and show what they can do? Something, assuredly, has happened to reawaken choral Boston. For right in the midst of the days when formal choral music is supposed to have reached its lowest possible point of decline, a composition of the old repertory is presented by a field of voices, and by soloists and orchestra, with distinguished success. The choral finale of Beethoven's ninth symphony is rendered in an irreproachable manner and is applauded enthusiastically. The significant agent in the matter is a choir of 350 voices, carefully selected, admirably balanced in relative soprano, contralto, tenor and bass strength and splendidly drilled, which appears in association with orchestral players widely acknowledged to be matchless in their attainment of a beautiful compound of instrumental tone. Singing to the accompaniment of these players, the choir, a product of a Boston singing teacher's experience and skill, secures results which may be called ideal.

As an outcome, two desires which many persons have long held, first, that a chorus might be organized worthy to sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and second, that the interest of the Boston public in choral art might be aroused as in former years, have been realized in a night. It may, indeed, have begun in a determination of the skilled singers of the town not to remain silent at a time when men and women in community meeting grounds and when soldiers in training camps throughout the country are ardently chorusing in the name of sociability and comradeship; or it may have begun in a hope of the concert managers to get something new going in Symphony Hall. In any case a proud record of technical achievement has been scored.

A proud record, for the choral finale of Beethoven's ninth symphony has again and again been declared by musical authorities of the past to contain passages which are practically impossible of execution. But its difficulties were all overcome on this occasion. The long passage for the soprano voices, sustained at extreme height, was sung with purity of tone and with accuracy of pitch, and all other vocal problems, whether for chorus or quartet, were triumphantly met. Diligent preparation at rehearsals and masterful direction at the concert had their effect.

There remains, necessarily, the question of what the value of a performance of the choral finale is to an American public in the year 1917. Is there anything in the aspiration of a democratic people at war which can respond to the terribly forced construction of this music? Granted that the theme, or tune, on which the variations for quartet, chorus and orchestra are based is one of elemental beauty and of universal human expressiveness, yet there may well be doubt whether, as elaborated by the German romanticist's imagination, it could do aught but mock the audience which heard it on Tuesday night.

That is speaking of the finale as a piece of expression detached from the rest of the ninth symphony. As for the work in its earlier and wholly orchestral pages, another story has to be told. What irresistible sarcasm in the scherzo! The drumbeat is a livelier surprise than Haydn's. And the glow of the adagio! Here is music to bring hearts of all time together. Beethoven never had better control of his instrumental colors than in these two movements, nor did he ever write in moods which people everywhere and under all circumstances could more heartily accept.

REDUCTION

RATIO

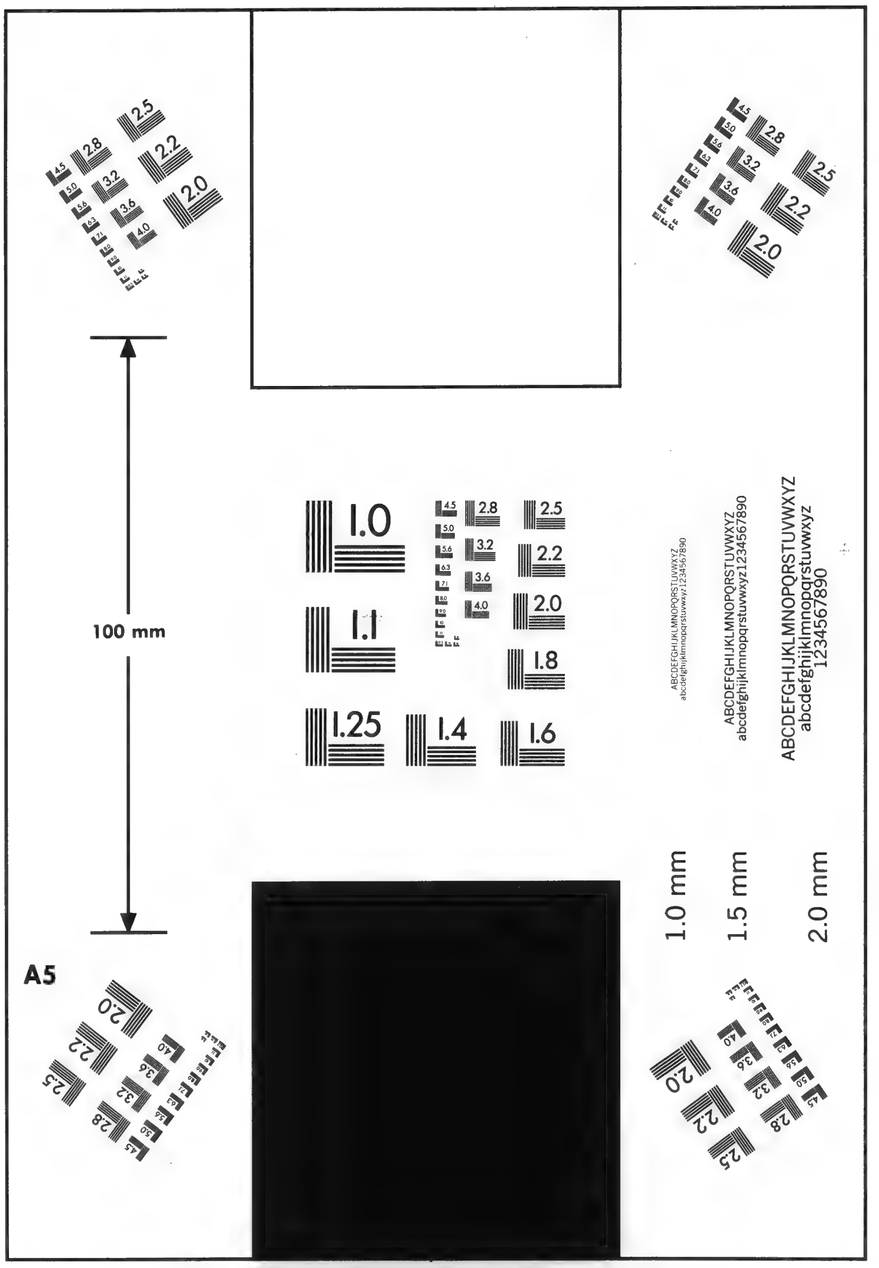
14x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TRANSCRIPT Nov. 21, 1917 - 150

Music and Plays

A CONCERT OF CONCERTS

THE CHORAL SYMPHONY AS NEVER IN BOSTON

A Unique Occasion and a Brilliant Picture —The New Chorus Comparable with the Best of Europe—Orchestra and Conductor Above Themselves—The Resulting Revelation of Beethoven's Music—An Audience Likewise Carried Out of Itself

WHEN, last spring, Symphony Hall proposed three concerts of imposing and exacting choral music, with the Symphony Orchestra, with a numerous, newly assembled, highly trained chorus, and with Dr. Muck conducting, it may hardly have expected such outcome as last evening crowned the first. The auditorium, less six rows of seats in the parquet to make room for the extended stage, was filled to the last sitting-place and the last standing-place by a company quite as representative of the general public as of the particular public of the Symphony Concerts, swelled, besides, by practitioners and amateurs of music whom the interest of the concert had assembled from New York, Philadelphia and various cities of New England. Seldom—and at a timely moment — has Symphony Hall held a more significant audience; while seldom, seen from the back of the balcony, has it so warmed the eye. Over the heads of the seated hearers, along the admirable lines of the hall, the glance gained what had become, for the time, a huge stage. Upon it the black-coated orchestra and its brown or yellow instruments rose in tiers; above sat or stood the thick white ranks of the women-singers of the chorus; higher still, for brim and border to the picture, the dark lines of the singing men. Along the narrow strip of platform, before these forces, Dr. Muck raised high and the solo singers, with Miss Hempel vivid among them by the long sweep and lustrous color of a blue-green gown hung with a single rope of pearls. The golden proscenium framed this picture, unique in recent years in Symphony Hall; while as keystone, so to say, to the frame and to the whole occasion, was the usually unnoted scroll that bears Beethoven's name.

A prefatory singing and playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" aside, Beethoven's Choral Symphony filled the whole concert. For seven years it had not been heard in Boston, since Dr. Muck was disinclined to attempt it without a numerous and severely practiced chorus, and such a piece fits ill into the ordinary course of the Symphony Concerts. In New York and in Chicago Mr. Damrosch's, Mr. Stransky's or Mr. Stock's orchestra attempt it relatively seldom and with some show of unusual circumstance. Thus, in the United States, the Choral Symphony has never become the commonplace that it used to be, especially in Holy Week, in German concert-halls. A performance of it hereabouts still enjoys a festal rarity; while such a performance as it received last evening is a landmark in two or three musical generations. Evidently the audience was keenly expectant and speedily stirred to unusual applause. It received Dr. Muck with much longer and heartier plaudits than even have been his recent lot in Boston and New York; it multiplied them at every pause in the performance, and at the end of the concert, it would not depart until, standing, it had paid repeated tribute to the conductor and his assembled forces. Indeed a general public seemed to begin with this ovation where the special publics of the Symphony Concerts in usual course have lately ended it. More significant still and in finer homage to the music in hand, was the rapt, tense silence—a thrilling atmosphere in itself—in which the audience, so tempered, listened to Beethoven when, through the conductor, in voice of orchestra and chorus, he spoke his own eloquence. In fifteen years, there has been no such occasion in Symphony Hall.

The Glories of the Chorus

In a sense this audience, at once experienced and excited, could measure its expectations of orchestra, conductor and such solo-singers as Miss Hempel and Miss Keyes, Mr. Middleton and Mr. Hackett, but the singing of the chorus came to it in wholly new sensation. The means by which Mr. Stephen Townsend gathered these men and women singers, more than three hundred strong, when other leaders and other choral societies seek in vain for a few recruits; the kindled and sustained loyalty by which he held them to reiterated and exacting rehearsal when other choirs are constantly hampered by absences, are his happy secrets—a white magic, as it were, in the preparation of choral singing. At every turn through music usually playing havoc with the quality of the singers' tone, each element in the chorus kept its distinctions of voice and song. The sopranos maintained in equal measure warm body and fluid brilliance of tone; the alto section rang rich, deep, supple; the tenors sustained both volume and brightness of voice; the basses were at once sonorous and mellow.

No chorus that Boston has heard in many years, except possibly that of the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto—now scattered by the war and war-time prejudices—has matched Mr. Townsend's choir in the body and pliancy, the freshness, freedom, variety and brightness of its song. As incomparably on this side of the Atlantic, it had assimilated the essentials of choral singing—the precision that brings unity of beginning, the surety that sustains this unity to the end of a period; the equal sense of long ascendant choral line and of snarp choral [illegible] the one, however divided the other; the alert sensibility that keeps rhythm vibrant, propulsive; the moulding of the phrase, the measuring of the modulation, the gradation of the climax, all three half-instinctive and half-acquired; the ability to sing out and also to sing true.

Training may do much and has done much in this instance to foster and embed these high virtues; but below them in each and every singer must lie substantial foundation of musical intelligence and pliability, individual diligence and devotion. The vocal quality and the choral achievement of his choir so praises Mr. Townsend and the three hundred several contributors to them. Now that the Mendelssohn Choir is gone, the comparing listener must cross the Atlantic to find equal, but not superior, to it, in Mr. Ochs's elebrated chorus in Berlin, in the choruses that Sir Henry Wood has led in various British festivals.

From Dr. Muck, in presence or in indication, came the guidance preparing such a chorus for remarkable achievement in as difficult and baffling music in kind as man's hand has yet written; for to Beethoven, in this Ninth Symphony, the human means were the almost unconsidered servants of the music and the passion. Beside the impressions of last evening, occasional choral passages in the music of the Symphony Concerts, even the choral concert for the Pension Fund last spring, have but half-disclosed Dr. Muck's abilities as a conductor of vocal as well as instrumental choirs. He mated certainty to freedom in his marshalling and wielding of choral masses; by a single stroke of will he seemed to propel the singers into one of Beethoven's outflung phrases; his pace, his rhythms seemed to stir his choirs; he measured out sustained and swelling sonorities of tone or he enjoined sharp, swift jets of song; led by his hand, ordered by his ear, his three hundred voices, in sum or in division phrased and graduated as one voice. The three hundred responses of as many intelligences, instincts, emotions, became as one, fused through him to Beethoven's purpose.

No wonder, then, that an audience, for once lifted from and beyond itself, heard the choral finale of the Ninth Symphony as it had never heard it before. With orchestra and with choir, the tonal heavens did open in clear radiance and the stars did dance as Joy descended upon waiting men; the night of tones propelled, the majesty of tones upswelled the prayer of the world to its God; the tread of such a host beat out in elate yet marshalled tones the march of exuberant victory; the end of the end was as near to Beethoven's frenzy of jubilation as mortal voices may drive themselves to his whipping imagination. Of such was this choral sheet and flame of tonal power and splendor, while, as the composer bade, athwart it shot the bright lustres of Miss Hempel's mounting periods; the clear, soft, penetrating phrases of Mr. Hackett; while in like relief upon the great tonal expanse moved Mr. Middleton's bass sonorities or Miss Keyes's momentarily rich and luminous measures. As they should, the solo voices, astutely chosen for the quality of the music and the intent of the performance, were as strands to shine each with its own and instant brightness out of the whole musical fabric and progress.

Orchestra and Conductor

Inevitably in the three purely instrumental divisions of the Ninth Symphony, orchestra and conductor could impart no such strange and transporting sensations as did the chorus and the quartet in the finale; yet even the accustomed hearers of Dr. Muck and his forces were unprepared for the range of manifold eloquence that they sustained throughout the music. For nearly a full hour, under the incessant exaction of a nearly superhuman task, leader and players were above themselves. The orchestra ranged its widest from such bursts of tonal power as that which flames out of the first Allegro to the softest of euphonies, the finest woven of underbodies in the seraphic song of the Adagio. The listeners heard this song—or rather the two-fold song that Beethoven upbuilds in mutual course from as many melodies—in the ecstasy in which it was played. Dr. Muck found the very pace that would impart the beauty of this music, at once ardent with human longing and vivid with celestial vision; that would keep it in softly lustrous curve and more and more glowing ascent, that would suddenly wing it with the passion of the earth that it might mount to more ethereal heights. His orchestra in every choir answered him with inexhaustible loveliness of radiant tone, with chiselled yet flowing phrase, with unwaveringly sustained voice that melted period into period in fused and undulated progress. As one human voice might have sung, so sang a hundred voices of instruments. An equal emotion seemed to penetrate and possess conductor, orchestra, hearers. Yet a moment before as perfectly in kind this same leader, this same band had sounded the incisive or the playful rhythms of the scherzo and sung the intervening song in the freshness of fancy, the smiling harmonic and instrumental color, the seeming simplicity of imagination, hiding a singular and astute procedure, that a world-worn and passion-worn Beethoven could invoke in his innovating and solitary fifties far more illusively than in his Mozartean and Haydnish twenties

In similar range through the turbulent course of the first movement, conductor and orchestra had been as master-dramatists in tones upon the stimulated imaginations and emotions of their hearers. From them, it rose, seemingly as it was written a clouded music through which for long Beethoven broods in mystery, gropes in doubts; a clearing music, flashing into sudden tonal action and pursuit; a baffled music sinking wearily back into questionings and dark inertias near to despair; music of a passion of the soul, searching itself, straining at its bonds alike of spiritual emotion and tonal speech, solitary, at odds with the world. Yet he who so willed might hear beneath this eloquence of emotion the lucidest exposition of the strictly musical substance and curve of the movement, animated not merely by understanding, but by recreative impulse. And so through the superb and suspensive vigor with which Dr. Muck and the orchestra sprang over the prologue to the finale and the Bacchic leaps of instrumental frenzy with which they ended the symphony. To hear him and to hear them as they were last evening was to hold the dismissal of the conductor and the dissolution of the orchestra, under the chance exigencies of a war that will not be interminable, a sheer artistic blasphemy. What they now give to their thousands of hearers, no others in America may equally yield.

And Last Beethoven

For ninety years and more much imagination and many ingenuities have exercised themselves, more or less fruitfully upon what they call the "poetic content" of this Ninth Symphony. In our own day, Mr. d'Indy, for example, taking text from Saint Paul and his own heart, has expounded it as a triumphant progress from the brooding of the first movement, through the mere nervous and, as it were, physical excitement of the second, into the ecstasy in the third, and the elation in the fourth, of the love that the apostle celebrated to the Corinthians. For Mr. d'Indy would have his Beethoven of the final years an intensely religious man. In turn, Mr. Rolland, perched upon his Swiss heights, "au dessus de la mêlée humaine," can weave in or out of the music a web of spiritual and transcendental implications that might have made him high priest of Concord in an Emersonian day. Per contra, others see in the music the light of human freedom fitfully piercing the darkness of the beginning, darting in and out of the Scherzo, radiant and calm through the Adagio, enkindling, in the Finale, the wills, the hearts, the voices and the march of men. And so forth and so onward in confusion upon confusion and contradiction against contradiction.

Yet, as listeners hear the Choral Symphony in this autumn of 1917, is it not enough, first, that it is music that speaks of and by itself, as scarcely does any other in the world, with the voice of brooding human struggle, with the thrill of human action, with the fervor of human aspiration and vision, with the high intoxication of human joy—a veritable epitome of such universal emotions in human kind? Is it not enough, furthermore, that the Choral Symphony speaks these things in depths and heights of beauty, passion, power, illusion, such as music or any other means to human expression has seldom attained? And is it not enough, finally, that the Choral Symphony speaks them out of the great mind, the great heart, the great imagination, by the great means, of a Beethoven who embraced within himself as great an understanding, sympathy and passion for human kind and in music wrought indelibly and everlastingly its noblest sensations alike of depression and exaltation, struggle, aspiration, ascent, fulfilment? Beethoven epic remains Beethoven human. H. T. P.

From a Strauss of Florid Music

The Unique Air from "Ariadne on Naxos" That Miss Garrison Will Sing at the Next Pair of Symphony Concerts

AT the Symphony Concerts of next Friand Saturday, when Miss Garrison of the Metropolitan Opera House sings Zerbinetta's air from "Ariadne on Naxos," Bostonian ears will hear for the first time a fragment of Strauss's most singular piece for the stage. As originally designed by the composer and by his usual librettist, Hofmannsthal, "Ariadne on Naxos" was an opera — or rather a mixture of two operas — sung in supplement to a German version of Molière's comedy, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme." A company of players of the spoken word acted this piece, for the most part in ordinary fashion, but to it Strauss added a prelude, occasional measures of incidental music and a sort of "symphonic poem" in miniature to accompany a ceremonious dinner with tonal allusions to the dishes and other incidents In his turn, Hofmannsthal wove into the play passing incidents by which it appeared that Monsieur Jourdain, the parvenu of the piece had commissioned a young composer to write him two short pieces with which to divert his guests—one a "lyric tragedy" recounting the abandonment of Ariadne by Theseus on the island of Naxos in the Grecian Archipelago, when he was returning to Athens victorious over the Minotaur of Crete, and her amorous surrender to Bacchus chancing upon her; the other a ballet with songs in which Zerbinetta, Harlequin, Truffaldino and other personages of the Italian Commedia dell' Arte prattled and pranced in sevententh-century fashion.

The dinner, however, is long and Monsieur Jourdain's guests more or less pressing. Accordingly that he may lose none of the money he has spent and they as little as possible of the diversion he has prepared, he directs that the two pieces be merged. The outraged but submissive composer does some hasty carpentry and the curtain of the stage rises upon Ariadne, deserted, desolate and crying her woes to high heaven. The watching Italians undertake to console her with folk-song and folk-dance, but she will not be persuaded out of the woe that she is proclaiming to music of no little passion and nobility. Then, Zerbinetta, wisest of these folk out of the Commedia dell' Arte, clears the stage of her companions—to reason with Ariadne in song—a long recitative, an arioso and a brilliant rondo. It is this music that Miss Garrison will sing, not, however, as it came originally from Strauss's pen, but in the shortened version that he incorporated into a revision of "Ariadne on Naxos," made for the Court Opera Houses of Berlin and Vienna in the autumn of 1916. This revision permitted performance apart from the comedy of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," and so opened the two-fold piece to theatres which had not a speaking company at disposal.

Of the music, Mr. Edward Burlingame Hill wrote in The Transcript when "Ariadne on Naxos" was originally produced at Stuttgart in the autumn of 1912:

> In all his brilliant career, Strauss's versatility has never been more effectually and convincingly exhibited than in this scene—a masterpiece of musical innuendo and satire, which is nevertheless so carefully and logically worked out as almost to defy proof that it was composed tongue in cheek. In the recitative, the declamation is painstakingly careful, the accompaniment is faultlessly and scrupulously correct, the formal element meticulously preserved. Here and there a subtle modulation gives an indescribable touch of irony in the midst of the conventional style and content of the music. Occasionally even the ingenious Strauss is caught in his own psychological snare, when to Zerbinetta's question, "You wish no other companion but these rocks and waves?" he suggests in the bass the figure of the episode wherein Ariadne awaits the messenger of death. But it is perhaps over-severe to cavil at a modern detail which slipped in involuntarily. The "arioso," equally ingenious and diverting, leads by a brilliant cadenza to a "rondo" of formal correctness, extremely florid in vocal style and accompaniment. Here again, the rondo is so capitally carried out as to be almost imperviously of Italian origin, were it not for its harmonic sophistication, the elusive subtlety of its modulations and for the rhythmic variety and involuntary contrapuntal conception which betrays its ultra-modern origin. The formal returns of the subject are accomplished with preternatural dexterity; a brilliant accompanied cadenza, in which the voice part is without text, leads to a scrupulously formal coda.

Next summer, when comedy and opera were reproduced in London by Sir H. Tree and Sir T. Beecham another correspondent of The Transcript wrote of it:

> In the coloratura air for Zerbinetta Strauss has assembled and enhanced every ornament of florid song as the seventeenth and eighteenth century understood and practised it. As in the incidental music of the play, he has outrun the composers who wrote such music in their own race. He is as formal and elegant as they and far more exacting, resourceful and imaginative. Through the ancient surface, the modern sophisticated smile gleams out, excited, rejoicing in its tour de force accomplished.

Throughout the air, as in the whole opera, Strauss uses an orchestra of only thirty-six instruments—strings, wood-winds, horns, and drums—such as might actually have been employed for such purpose in the rococo time in which Monsieur Jourdain and also the hapless composer had their imaginary being. Yet with it he is as suggestive of harmonic and instrumental color as with one of his huge bands and more fanciful and ingenious in arabesque. Furthermore, the singer once stops in the course of the air and counsels the leader to play less loudly since the volume of tone covers her voice—a touch of professional humor, such as recurs often in the progress of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" and "Ariadne on Naxos," but hardly likely to be enacted at Symphony Hall.

In Character With the Choral Symphony

Beethoven in His Last Years

From the Imaginative Bust by Bourdelle the Parisian Sculptor

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

HERALD
NOV. 21, 1917

CHORAL CONCERT HIGHLY PRAISED

Orchestra and 350 Singers Give Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

DR. MUCK LEADS ADMIRABLY

By PHILIP HALE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, gave a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony last night in Symphony Hall. The orchestra was assisted by a chorus of 350 singers, who had been admirably prepared by Stephen Townsend, and by this quartet: Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. Before the performance of the symphony the National Anthem was sung by the chorus with orchestral accompaniment.

We shall probably not hear a better performance of this symphony in the years that are still allotted to us. We shall certainly not hear a more capable and impressive chorus. It does not seem possible that there could be a more eloquent performance of the orchestral movements. It is not necessary to dwell upon the singularly ungrateful, one might say incomprehensibly difficult, music that Beethoven wrote for the solo singers. Those chosen for the task last night did better than one might have expected. The most beautiful or robust voices in the world, used with the utmost skill, could not change the inherent character of the music. If any one of the quartet is favored by the composer, it is the tenor.

No wonder that this symphony, when it is performed complete, is a stumbling block to conductors, orchestras and singers. We have heard many performances in Boston and in European cities; few of them were ideal, many were mediocre, some were positively bad. The worst we ever heard was in Berlin in the season of '83-'84. Joachim, the violinist, conducted without sense of tempo and rhythm; but he always was a wretched conductor; one without authority, without imagination.

The question comes up, Should the orchestral movements be played without the finale? The symphony has been heard in this form more than once at concerts in this city. It is easy to cry "Sacrilege"; to say that the incomplete work leaves the hearer unsatisfied. Putting the difficulties attending the performance of the Finale out of the question, might not one say without fear of contradiction, except from believers in plenary inspiration, that Beethoven's noblest music is in the three orchestral movements? With the exception of that wonderful passage in which the hearer is caught up to the seventh heaven above the stars, and of the equally marvellous measures in which Beethoven heard the angelic choir, is there anything in the Finale to be compared with the mysteriousness of the first movement, the demoniacal energy of the Scherzo—the Scherzo of the Universe—and the unearthly beauty of the Adagio? In these movements Beethoven, the superman, is revealed.

Are there not many pages in the Finale that are ugly without any rhetorical effect? Pages that, if written by a lesser man, would be at once described as commonplace, uninteresting, unexpressive? It is true that at the very end Beethoven is seen throwing his hat in the air, frenzied with joy, but is this tumultuous ecstasy of a movement comparable with pages in the orchestral movements? After the performance of last night, one that was in so many respects ideal, these questions may be safely asked.

We all, however, owe a debt of gratitude to the management of the orchestra, to Dr. Muck and his forces, for giving us the privilege of hearing the Symphony. To the youngest of concert-goers the music was practically unknown. To the older hearers that have attended the Symphony concerts from the beginning, the performance was a revelation. The great audience—for the seats were all filled and many stood—was keenly appreciative. Dr. Muck and those under his control may well be proud of the tribute paid to them.

May this not be the last of the Choral concerts! For here is a chorus worthy of the superb orchestra; here is an incomparable conductor of singers and players.

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 14 1917

Oh, say, did you hear that $10,000 Metropolitan quintet sing the "Star Spangled Banner"? Doctor Muck, please rise.

POST
NOV. 21, 1917

GREAT 9TH SYMPHONY PERFORMED

Chorus of 350 With Quartet Assist Orchestra

BY OLIN DOWNES

A memorable performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given last night in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor; a chorus of 350 singers, assembled from various sources in this city, and prepared for this performance by Stephen Townsend; and a solo quartet of which the members were Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Arthur Middleton, bass. The occasion was a brilliant one. The stage was built out to accommodate the great chorus.

The hall was filled to its capacity of standing room as well as seats. The concert opened with the singing performance by chorus, orchestra, and soloists of "The Star Spangled Banner."

RESPONSIVE CHORUS

This was the first performance of the Ninth Symphony in Boston by Dr. Muck. He had waited for some seasons, hoping for a chorus adequate in numbers and adequately trained for such a taxing performance. The choral parts of the Ninth Symphony are famous for their outrageous demands on the singers. Mr. Townsend, who had been successful in assembling and training smaller choruses to assist at subscription concerts of the Boston Symphony of late seasons, was again successful in providing the material of the performance of last night. The chorus was of excellent capacity, tonally and technically, and was admirably responsive to Dr. Muck's baton.

This is the symphony in which Beethoven, with a gigantic naivete, expressed his conception of the human brotherhood to be brought about by love and art. No such symphony had been dreamed of before. No work of equal calibre for chorus and orchestra has been created since. Mahler's second symphony, which will be performed by these same singers and players later in the season, is as grandiose, perhaps, in its conceptions and proportions, if not as impractical in its demands on the executants; but it may be safely said, in advance of a public hearing of this work, that it will be long before such a canvas as that unfolded by the Ninth Symphony is completed by a human being.

Dr. Muck's Interpretation

Dr. Muck's interpretation of this music will long be remembered for its lofty and dramatic spirit, its scrupulous observance of each feature of the score and its technical excellence. There are passages in the first movement which are as the vision of the writer of Revelation. They contrast curiously with the simplicity and naivete of other passages. The scherzo is the movement in which Wagner heard the stars and the planets a-dancing.

Profoundest of all seems now the slow movement. The almost commonplace character of the choral theme of the finale has often been noticed. It was probably based on a folk tune, and it served Beethoven's purpose fully. He thought of all men as brothers, not excluding those who were not professional singers but who would like to sing if they could! Hence the extremely simple, straightforward character of the principal theme of the finale. Beethoven was less merciful, however, to his executants.

Singers Admirable

It was surprising and nearly incredible to listen to the performances of the chorus and soloists, as they performed passages of the most impractical and difficult character. The range of the parts along excludes them from performance by the average singers.

To hear the chorus attack and sustain chords so placed that the kind of intonation attained was little short of marvellous under the circumstances was an experience to remember. The singers distinguished themselves equally in passages which demanded rapid virtuosity. Such support must have been a delight to Dr. Muck, who made much of it.

Newspaper
From EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Address:
Date NOV 6 1917
Established:

Hungerford, in Pittsburgh Sun.

IT LOOKS LIKE A HARD WINTER FOR STUBBORN GERMAN PUPILS

From
Address: PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Date

ORCHESTRAL ECHOES

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—The best orchestra in the country—by far the best of the eastern cities of the United States—has been made useless. The Boston Symphony Orchestra should be disbanded. Those who originated it and for years sustained it did so as a public service. It was thought that the orchestra would be an instructor in classic composition.

Now, through the leadership of United States journalism working on an artistic temperament not overjudicious, the orchestra has been made a disturber of the peace. Be popular or be mobbed. Which is to say, "be commercialized," is all that is left to one of the great orchestras of the world. Better it should go.

HORACE T. TOMPKINS.

Philadelphia, November 13, 1917.

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

Would Oust Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin:

Sir: In regard to the Dr. Muck incident, let me say it is not Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," but the spirit that prompted the refusal, that I resent.

My entire family is musically inclined, and we avail ourselves of every opportunity to hear any good music, but I could not attend a concert conducted by a man who hid behind the pretense of art, and at last made a statement that should not be tolerated, especially at this critical time.

His acts seem perfectly characteristic of his nation, and we not only tolerate, but encourage such things by attending and permitting these concerts to be given, so long as Dr. Muck is the conductor.

I also heartily condemn an audience who will be entertained under such conditions. It must be composed of men mentally, morally, as well as physically unfit for national service, and women who crave entertainment to such a degree that they forget that our beloved nation is sadly involved, and that thousands of wonderful men are sacrificing everything for the welfare and safety of those who remain at home.

In my opinion, Dr. Muck should not enjoy his freedom in our land, and above all, should not be permitted the honor of conducting concerts.

Can you imagine an American being permitted to do this same thing in Germany today? Just what do you think the consequences would be?

It is a beautiful thought to love our enemies, but at this time, I consider that no American can hold very much fondness for a man who has acted like Dr. Muck.

MINNIE ATHALIA BAIRD.

Suggests Interning Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: Having seen so much criticism relative to Dr. Muck's attitude regarding the playing of our National anthem, I consider it a direct insult to every American citizen and ought to be dealt with accordingly. Some summary action ought to be taken on the part of our Government.

He, no doubt, is thinking deeply of the inhuman warfare being waged by his fellow countryman, and it would be nigh impossible for him to inject the feeling or temperament necessary to give a proper production of our National anthem. He was brought over here (or imported) to cater to the people's wants and not to his individual self. Intern him or put him behind cold, steel bars, as I think such as he is does not deserve any better treatment. If he was an American citizen and acted in that same manner in Berlin or any other of the so-called "Kultured" cities in Germany he would have been placed in a dungeon long before this. Get rid of him.

Since through criticism he was forced to play the Star Spangled Banner in Philadelphia does not signify anything nor does it change his sentiments, as he did it through fear of losing his job and being maltreated. Now on top of this comes the statement that he tricked the audience by playing a fantasie or burlesque, which I consider adding insult to injury.

Rutledge, Pa. W. B.

n BULLETIN
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

Until further notice ... parties will not be published in this column.

On Current Topics

Severe on Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: Well, indeed, may Baltimore criticise Philadelphia. The birthplace of Liberty, the home of the flag—and yet it welcomes a man who makes no secret of his Prussianism, an acknowledged enemy of our country—and glories in it. A man who is no doubt decorated by his royal master for his effort to eliminate our National anthem. What would be his fate, think you, if American by birth and sympathies, he attempted such tactics in Berlin and tried monkey tricks with the "Wacht 'damn' Rhine?"

I care not what his ability in his particular line, he has no business at large. It will not harm us to be deprived of his services for the remainder of the war. Nor is it any credit to Washington, our seat of Government, that in that city "only one box and not more than fifty seats were vacant" at the recent concert. All honor then to Baltimore—the City Unafraid!

Too easy by far has been the treatment the United States has given the whole tribe and small thanks will we get for it. None will know that better than those of our brave men who have lately—God help them—fallen into the clutch of the tiger. Keep it up and see where we will come out. Compelled, against his wish, to play our National anthem, Muck tried to belittle its force and dignity by interpolating trifling trills and quavers. The "Star Spangled Banner" needs no interpolations or embellishments—strong—uncompromising—and glorious it thrills to the very core of one's heart. No Prussian imagination or touch is necessary to alter or desecrate its magnificently inspiring chords.

The lack of patriotism observable in our places of amusement, where the few who attempt applause are shamed into silence by the insolent indifference and inaction of their neighbors, is lamentable.

No matter what the sentiment or scene conveyed to eye or ear, nor how inciting to natural enthusiasm, it falls upon the barren ground of pacifism and what seems to be—absolute offensive apathy. Will nothing stir us up?

A MERE WOMAN.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 7 1917

Three Varieties

From the Boston Traveler.

I'm very fond of Doctor Muck
And wish for him all kinds of luck.
The rabble, hissing Doctor Muck,
Deserve a dark and damning look.
Their public spirit is a fluke
Who fulminate 'gainst Doctor Muck;
For he has scaled the heights of fame,
Though I cannot pronounce his name.

HERALD
NOV. 21, 1917

CHORAL CONCERT HIGHLY PRAISED

Orchestra and 350 Singers Give Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

DR. MUCK LEADS ADMIRABLY

By PHILIP HALE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, gave a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony last night in Symphony Hall. The orchestra was assisted by a chorus of 350 singers, who had been admirably prepared by Stephen Townsend, and by this quartet: Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. Before the performance of the symphony the National Anthem was sung by the chorus with orchestral accompaniment.

We shall probably not hear a better performance of this symphony in the years that are still allotted to us. We shall certainly not hear a more capable and impressive chorus. It does not seem possible that there could be a more eloquent performance of the orchestral movements. It is not necessary to dwell upon the singularly ungrateful, one might say incomprehensibly difficult, music that Beethoven wrote for the solo singers. Those chosen for the task last night did better than one might have expected. The most beautiful or robust voices in the world, used with the utmost skill, could not change the inherent character of the music. If any one of the quartet is favored by the composer, it is the tenor.

No wonder that this symphony, when it is performed complete, is a stumbling block to conductors, orchestras and singers. We have heard many performances in Boston and in European cities; few of them were ideal, many were mediocre, some were positively bad. The worst we ever heard was in Berlin in the season of '83-'84. Joachim, the violinist, conducted without sense of tempo and rhythm; but he always was a wretched conductor: one without authority, without imagination.

The question comes up. Should the orchestral movements be played without the finale? The symphony has been heard in this form more than once at concerts in this city. It is easy to cry "Sacrilege"; to say that the incomplete work leaves the hearer unsatisfied. Putting the difficulties attending the performance of the Finale out of the question, might not one say without fear of contradiction, except from believers in plenary inspiration, that Beethoven's noblest music is in the three orchestral movements? With the exception of that wonderful passage in which the hearer is caught up to the seventh heaven above the stars, and of the equally marvellous measures in which Beethoven heard the angelic choir, is there anything in the Finale to be compared with the mysteriousness of the first movement, the demoniacal energy of the Scherzo—the Scherzo of the Universe—and the unearthly beauty of the Adagio? In these movements Beethoven, the superman, is revealed.

Are there not many pages in the Finale that are ugly without any rhetorical effect? Pages that, if written by a lesser man, would be at once described as commonplace, uninteresting, unexpressive? It is true that at the very end Beethoven is seen throwing his hat in the air, frenzied with joy, but is this tumultuous ecstasy of a movement comparable with pages in the orchestral movements? After the performance of last night, one that was in so many respects ideal, these questions may be safely asked.

We all, however, owe a debt of gratitude to the management of the orchestra, to Dr. Muck and his forces, for giving us the privilege of hearing the Symphony. To the youngest of concert-goers the music was practically unknown. To the older hearers that have attended the Symphony concerts from the beginning, the performance was a revelation. The great audience—for the seats were all filled and many stood—was keenly appreciative. Dr. Muck and those under his control may well be proud of the tribute paid to them.

May this not be the last of the Choral concerts! For here is a chorus worthy of the superb orchestra; here is an incomparable conductor of singers and players.

Post
NOV. 21, 1917

GREAT 9TH SYMPHONY PERFORMED

Chorus of 350 With Quartet Assist Orchestra

BY OLIN DOWNES

A memorable performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given last night in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor; a chorus of 350 singers, assembled from various sources in this city, and prepared for this performance by Stephen Townsend; and a solo quartet of which the members were Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Arthur Middleton, bass. The occasion was a brilliant one. The stage was built out to accommodate the great chorus.

The hall was filled to its capacity of standing room as well as seats. The concert opened with the singing performance by chorus, orchestra, and soloists of "The Star Spangled Banner."

RESPONSIVE CHORUS

This was the first performance of the Ninth Symphony in Boston by Dr. Muck. He had waited for some seasons, hoping for a chorus adequate in numbers and adequately trained for such a taxing performance. The choral parts of the Ninth Symphony are famous for their outrageous demands on the singers. Mr. Townsend, who had been successful in assembling and training smaller choruses to assist at subscription concerts of the Boston Symphony of late seasons, was again successful in providing the material of the performance of last night. The chorus was of excellent capacity, tonally and technically, and was admirably responsive to Dr. Muck's baton.

This is the symphony in which Beethoven, with a gigantic naivete, expressed his conception of the human brotherhood to be brought about by love and art. No such symphony had been dreamed of before. No work of equal calibre for chorus and orchestra has been created since. Mahler's second symphony, which will be performed by these same singers and players later in the season, is as grandiose, perhaps, in its conceptions and proportions, if not as impractical in its demands on the executants; but it may be safely said, in advance of a public hearing of this work, that it will be long before such a canvas as that unfolded by the Ninth Symphony is completed by a human being.

Dr. Muck's Interpretation

Dr. Muck's interpretation of this music will long be remembered for its lofty and dramatic spirit, its scrupulous observance of each feature of the score and its technical excellence. There are passages in the first movement which are as the vision of the writer of Revelation. They contrast curiously with the simplicity and naivete of other passages. The scherzo is the movement in which Wagner heard the stars and the planets a-dancing.

Profoundest of all seems now the slow movement. The almost commonplace character of the choral theme of the finale has often been noticed. It was probably based on a folk tune, and it served Beethoven's purpose fully. He thought of all men as brothers, not excluding those who were not professional singers but who would like to sing if they could! Hence the extremely simple, straightforward character of the principal theme of the finale. Beethoven was less merciful, however, to his executants.

Singers Admirable

It was surprising and nearly incredible to listen to the performances of the chorus and soloists, as they performed passages of the most impractical and difficult character. The range of the parts along excludes them from performance by the average singers.

To hear the chorus attack and sustain chords so placed that the kind of intonation attained was little short of marvellous under the circumstances was an experience to remember. The singers distinguished themselves equally in passages which demanded rapid virtuosity. Such support must have been a delight to Dr. Muck, who made much of it.

From _____ Address: _____
Date _____
Established:

Hungerford, in Pittsburgh Sun.

IT LOOKS LIKE A HARD WINTER FOR STUBBORN GERMAN PUPILS

From _____
Address: PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Date _____

ORCHESTRAL ECHOES

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—The best orchestra in the country—by far the best of the eastern cities of the United States—has been made useless. The Boston Symphony Orchestra should be disbanded. Those who originated it and for years sustained it did so as a public service. It was thought that the orchestra would be an instructor in classic composition.

Now, through the leadership of United States journalism working on an artistic temperament not overjudicious, the orchestra has been made a disturber of the peace. Be popular or be mobbed. Which is to say, "be commercialized," is all that is left to one of the great orchestras of the world. Better it should go.

HORACE T. TOMPKINS.

Philadelphia, November 13, 1917.

From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date _____

Would Oust Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin:

Sir: In regard to the Dr. Muck incident, let me say it is not Dr. Muck's refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," but the spirit that prompted the refusal, that I resent.

My entire family is musically inclined, and we avail ourselves of every opportunity to hear any good music, but I could not attend a concert conducted by a man who hid behind the pretense of art, and at last made a statement that should not be tolerated, especially at this critical time.

His acts seem perfectly characteristic of his nation, and we not only tolerate, but encourage such things by attending and permitting these concerts to be given, so long as Dr. Muck is the conductor.

I also heartily condemn an audience who will be entertained under such conditions. It must be composed of men mentally, morally, as well as physically unfit for national service, and women who crave entertainment to such a degree that they forget that our beloved nation is sadly involved, and that thousands of wonderful men are sacrificing everything for the welfare and safety of those who remain at home.

In my opinion, Dr. Muck should not enjoy his freedom in our land, and above all, should not be permitted the honor of conducting concerts.

Can you imagine an American being permitted to do this same thing in Germany today? Just what do you think the consequences would be?

It is a beautiful thought to love our enemies, but at this time, I consider that no American can hold very much fondness for a man who has acted like Dr. Muck.

MINNIE ATHALIA BAIRD.

Suggests Interning Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: Having seen so much criticism relative to Dr. Muck's attitude regarding the playing of our National anthem, I consider it a direct insult to every American citizen and ought to be dealt with accordingly. Some summary action ought to be taken on the part of our Government.

He, no doubt, is thinking deeply of the inhuman warfare being waged by his fellow countryman, and it would be nigh impossible for him to inject the feeling or temperament necessary to give a proper production of our National anthem. He was brought over here (or imported) to cater to the people's wants and not to his individual self. Intern him or put him behind cold, steel bars, as I think such as he is does not deserve any better treatment. If he was an American citizen and acted in that same manner in Berlin or any other of the so-called "Kultured" cities in Germany he would have been placed in a dungeon long before this. Get rid of him.

Since through criticism he was forced to play the Star Spangled Banner in Philadelphia does not signify anything nor does it change his sentiments, as he did it through fear of losing his job and being maltreated. Now on top of this comes the statement that he tricked the audience by playing a fantasie or burlesque, which I consider adding insult to injury.

Rutledge, Pa. W. B.

m BULLETIN
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

parties will not be published in this column.

On Current Topics

Severe on Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: Well, indeed, may Baltimore criticise Philadelphia. The birthplace of Liberty, the home of the flag—and yet it welcomes a man who makes no secret of his Prussianism, an acknowledged enemy of our country—and glories in it. A man who is no doubt decorated by his royal master for his effort to eliminate our National anthem. What would be his fate, think you, if American by birth and sympathies, he attempted such tactics in Berlin and tried monkey tricks with the "Wacht 'damn' Rhine?"

I care not what his ability in his particular line, he has no business at large. It will not harm us to be deprived of his services for the remainder of the war. Nor is it any credit to Washington, our seat of Government, that in that city "only one box and not more than fifty seats were vacant" at the recent concert. All honor then to Baltimore—the City Unafraid!

Too easy by far has been the treatment the United States has given the whole tribe and small thanks will we get for it. None will know that better than those of our brave men who have lately—God help them—fallen into the clutch of the tiger. Keep it up and see where we will come out. Compelled, against his wish, to play our National anthem, Muck tried to belittle its force and dignity by interpolating trifling trills and quavers. The "Star Spangled Banner" needs no interpolations or embellishments—strong—uncompromising—and glorious it thrills to the very core of one's heart. No Prussian imagination or touch is necessary to alter or desecrate its magnificently inspiring chords.

The lack of patriotism observable in our places of amusement, where the few who attempt applause are shamed into silence by the insolent indifference and inaction of their neighbors, is lamentable.

No matter what the sentiment or scene conveyed to eye or ear, nor how inciting to natural enthusiasm, it falls upon the barren ground of pacifism and what seems to be—absolute offensive apathy. Will nothing stir us up?

A MERE WOMAN.

Three Varieties

From the Boston Traveler.

I'm very fond of Doctor Muck
And wish for him all kinds of luck.
The rabble, hissing Doctor Muck,
Deserve a dark and damning look.
Their public spirit is a fluke
Who fulminate 'gainst Doctor Muck;
For he has scaled the heights of fame,
Though I cannot pronounce his name.

'84

PUBLIC
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NOV 14 1917

Oh, say, did you hear that $10,000 Metropolitan quintet sing the "Star Spangled Banner"? Doctor Muck, please rise.

STAR

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 1

Dr. Muck is traveling around the country playing The Star-spangled Banner. It is interesting and amusing to note that this loyal Prussian is still holding on to his well paid position. Yet not so long ago Americans were accused of being too fond of the mighty dollar!

PUBLIC

PITTSBURGH CUTS OUT GERMAN COMPOSERS

Philadelphia Orchestra Told to Eliminate Them From Program

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8.—All compositions by German composers and the composers of any of the nations allied with Germany must be omitted from the programs of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Pittsburgh for the period of the war. A resolution to this effect was adopted unanimously at a special meeting of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, under whose auspices the Philadelphia Orchestra is giving a series of concerts in Pittsburgh.

In announcing its action, the executive committee of the local organization emphasized its intention to imply no disparagement of the works of foreign composers, but expressed the feeling that when German propaganda, both at home and abroad, welcomes the slightest encouragement, it is the duty of loyal citizens to show in every public act emphatic disapproval and rejection of all that savors in the slightest degree of German influence, recognition or sympathy. The committee maintains that to do otherwise would be to seem to give moral support to the living enemies of all art and progress.

The barring by the police of a concert tonight by Fritz Kreisler, Austrian army officer and eminent violinist, was in accordance with public demand, according to Safety Director Hubbard. Kreisler, who arrived in this city last evening, issued a long statement today in which he admitted that he was sending money to Austria, but not for the aid of his country in the prosecution of the war. He criticized the press here, saying published articles were for the purpose of prejudicing and arousing public opinion against him.

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its season in Carnegie Hall this evening. The opening number on the program was the "Star Spangled Banner" and the concert was uneventful. Germans in the audience applauded Doctor Muck on his entrance. They did not applaud the opening number.

PRESS

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

ladelphia, November 12, 1917.

ALIEN MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Of course, as "The Press" says today, Baltimore has no right to live in a glass house and throw stones, but there are a good many Philadelphians who wonder why anything is permitted to take place in this city which can be misconstrued or misunderstood.

Have we so many pro-Germans here whose feelings must not be hurt, or do some of our citizens fail to appreciate the influence of a bad example?

Let it be granted that Dr. Muck is a wonderful musician. It has been proven and not even denied that he is a loyal subject of the Kaiser and a supporter of German propaganda in this country.

Why not put him on the list of things to be given up because of the war without any further fuss?

Fritz Kreisler's engagements are being cancelled elsewhere because he is an officer in the Austrian army. If there is even partial truth in what has been published about these two foreigners, that should be sufficient to prevent either of them from again appearing in public in Philadelphia.

The decision should not be left to the management of the performers or of the Academy of Music. It is a police matter and the Director of Public Safety should act.

Good music is a charm, but not a necessity and we are not dependent upon Prussians or Austrians for it. Patrons of high-class concerts should be anxious to give them up when furnished by enemy aliens and if they cannot appreciate the harm such endorsement gives the temptation to attend should be disposed of by the proper city officials.

C. A. D.

Philadelphia, Nov. 10, 1917.

Dr. Muck is no doubt a "loyal subject of the Kaiser," but that it has been proven that he is "a supporter of German propaganda in this country" is incorrect.

PUBLIC LEDGER

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Sallie Wistar's Patriotism

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—John Fiske in eloquent language many years ago wrote of the "Times that tried men's souls," following the American Revolution. Surely, we are in the midst of such experiences at present and everything that tends to kindle the flame of patriotic devotion to a great and noble cause, either by poetry, art or music, should be developed and encouraged.

The self-contained, sane and at the same time scathing and well-deserved criticism of the attitude of the audience in giving "an ovation and prolonged applause" to the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday last, under conditions not necessary to dwell upon here, is heartily commended and thoroughly indorsed by many who appreciate the ability and patriotism of the woman who signs herself in the columns of the PUBLIC LEDGER as "Sallie Wistar."

ANNE MAGNUS EARLE.

Doylestown, Pa., November 6, 1917.

n BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 10 191

To a reader who expresses the opinion that Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, should not have been permitted to mount the stand in the Academy of Music last Monday night, it is to be said that, inasmuch as the Doctor consented to play the "Star Spangled Banner," there seemed to be no occasion for resorting to extreme measures. If, however, he were a man of tact, he would not have allowed himself to give offense to anybody by the sort of remarks which had been attributed to him for his previous refusal or reluctance to play the national anthem in compliance with what had become a courtesy and custom. If it simply hurts him, in his artistic conscience, to play it, he is manifestly a foolish fellow. If, on the other hand, it hurts him, in his patriotic German conscience, to do so, his prompt return passage to Germany, without any further palaver or ceremony, should be provided for. Doubtless his position is a trying one in these days, just as it would be, for example, if John Philip Sousa—although, of course, he and Dr. Muck are not to be considered together in exactly the same professional sense—had been leading a popular band or orchestra in Berlin for many seasons and had now been requested to play "Die Wacht am Rhein." It is to be assumed that it would have run hard against John Philip's patriotic conscience to have done so, even if it would not bother his artistic notions of propriety. In such event, it is pretty certain that he would have declined to comply with the request and would at once have asked for his passports. But if he were not to ask for them, there is little doubt that they would be handed to him on the double quick.

PENN.

n BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

AN IDOLATROUS ATTITUDE

(From the New York Evening Post.)

If any one shared the apprehension of the Police Department that there might be a disturbance at last night's appearance of Dr. Muck to conduct the season's first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he did not know the audience that gathers for the Carnegie Hall concerts of this famous organization. To this audience everything this orchestra, or its conductor, does is absolutely above criticism. Probably ninety-five of every hundred of these good and honest folks, if blindfolded or placed behind a screen, could not, to save their lives, tell whether this particular orchestra was playing or the New York Philharmonic or Chicago Orchestra; yet to hear their pharisaical or adulatory talk one would think that Boston alone provided us with the real thing, everything else in the country being second or third rate. The Boston orchestra certainly is first rate, and Dr. Muck is an admirable conductor in many ways; yet he was known in Berlin as "the metronome," and his programs are certainly far from being models.

It is this idolatrous attitude of certain listeners—and newspaper critics, chiefly in New York—that has led to the recent unfortunate row over the American anthem. The malady known as "swelled-head" led certain very estimable persons to suppose that this Bostonian organization could do no wrong, even in war time; and that even if the other orchestras lowered themselves by playing "The Star Spangled Banner," the exalted Boston band need not stoop to anything so inartistic. Now our anthem is not as great music as the Russian national hymn—just discarded because it glorifies the Czar, or the Austrian, or the French; yet it is far better than "The Watch on the Rhine," which the German orchestras play, but which Wagner justly described as "ein flaues Liedertajel Produkt."

SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 17 1917

THE BALTIMORE MUSICAL UNION

The correspondence between Mr. Charles E. Ford and the Baltimore Musical Union puts that organization in a worse light than that in which Dr. Muck put himself recently. The latter is a German subject, in sympathy with the German purpose of destroying free government. His attitude was natural in an avowed alien enemy, but even he did not refuse to donate a couple of hours to the entertainment of American soldiers in camp, or decline to allow any member of his band to do so without pay.

The Baltimore Musical Union plays "The Star-Spangled Banner," but mocks the soldiers who serve under it. The national flag and the national cause appear to represent to it only dollars and cents. It is composed of citizens or residents of Maryland, who are protected by the State, who make their living by the grace of patriotic Americans, who are supposed to sympathize with this country and to be willing to do something for the men who are doing everything for us. And yet it will not suspend its "rules" for an hour to allow the orchestra at Ford's Opera House to help cheer up the men at Camp Meade who are preparing to risk their lives in France for this strangely cold "union" of musicians, whose inspiration seems to depend upon the dollar mark.

This may not be disloyalty, but it indicates a mean and mercenary spirit that makes even Dr. Muck seem noble by contrast. Loyalty to Germany might at least be pleaded for him. What is to be said of a body of alleged Americans who will not permit its members to give an afternoon of their time to the country to which they claim to be loyal?

There are a good many members of the Musical Union who feel disgraced and outraged by the action of their officers, and we hope they will resent it indignantly and put out of power the men who are responsible for placing them in a false position. In the meantime the loyal public, on which this union is dependent for support, should make its management realize the scorn which patriotic men and women feel for those who will not scrape a fiddle or blow a horn for a little while on one afternoon for the success of Old Glory and for the redemption of the world. Baltimore led the country ten days ago in a demonstration of splendid patriotism at the Lyric. Its Musical Union now gives it first place on the Map of Meanness. Nearly everybody everywhere else is thanking God for the privilege of doing something for the country, and especially for our absent soldiers. It remained for the Baltimore Musical Union to label itself frankly as one of the calculating and selfish mercenaries of a period when the life of the nation is at stake.

rom SUN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

ate NOV 13

Why Make Fish Of One And Flesh Of Another?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I heartily agree with Dr. Hopkinson. Mr. Kreisler, a furloughed officer of the Austrian Army, with which country we are virtually at war, should not be permitted to play here and gather in his dollars so that he may give aid to the enemy. He and Muck should be interned at once by our Government. Does anyone suppose for a moment that Sousa with his band would be permitted to concertize in Austria or Prussia?

We are in a terrible war. If they had the opportunity, the same Huns who have perpetrated the most diabolical outrages (sworn to by many eyewitnesses in France), would gladly assault our women, maim our children and murder our old men and women. They would continue all sorts of incendiary and murderously poisonous schemes which they have so often brought about by the very aliens in our midst.

At the present time patriotism should be above art, amusement and everything else excepting religion, of which it is an essential element. The playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not out of place even at a symphony concert, notwithstanding the assertion of Mr. Harold Randolph, who claims to be intensely loyal. If this be intense loyalty, God save us from plain loyalty.

Is the Musical Union under the control of the Huns? Why do they not permit their members to play gratis at the entertainment at Camp Meade on November 22?

Let us know without any gainsaying who are the alien enemies in our very midst, then the Government will deal with them accordingly.

CIVIS FIDELIS.

Baltimore, Nov. 12.

SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 12 1917

D. A. R. ACTIVITIES

The State Executive Board held its November meeting last Tuesday morning in the Red Room of the Hotel Belvedere, the State regent, Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, presiding. After the opening of the meeting with a prayer by the State chaplain, Mrs. J. Charles Linthicum, and the regular procedure of business, the State regent asked for Victrola records and good books to be sent to the soldiers at Camp Meade. Mrs. Bosley announced that a handsome flag will be presented to the library of the Maryland University as a memorial to General Lafayette, who won his degree there. The report of the "knitting committee" was most encouraging, showing all but 10 of the promised comfort sets for the torpedo boat Commodore Joshua Barney being completed. It was decided to increase the sets to four for each man for each year of the war. A "free wool" benefit will be given later. Mrs. Frank Wilson, regent of the Janet Montgomery Chapter, told of a call on them for 137 sweaters for Montgomery county soldiers at Anniston, and of the completion of the sweaters in 10 days. It was also reported that 80 had been sent through the Navy League (women's section) to the Coast Artillery boys guarding the city docks. The request that the Daughters of each state give $5 for the care of French orphans was responded to by a pledge of $5 from Maryland. The Anne Arundel and Janet Montgomery Chapters are each caring for one of these bereaved children. Mrs. Albert Gore, State chairman of "international relations," urged each chapter to take up the study of international problems, forming classes, especially for mothers, for instruction in the English language and the teaching of American ideals, reminding us that these same foreigners are soon to be citizens of our country. "It largely depends on us," she added, "what kind of citizens they will be."

Resolution was offered by the regent of the Francis Scott Key Chapter, Mrs. J. D. Iglehart, indorsing the act of former Governor Warfield in opposing the appearance here of an orchestra led by an alien enemy, Dr. Karl Muck, and denouncing and condemning the insult to our national anthem. This resolution was unanimously passed by the State Board. The State regent adjourned the meeting earlier than usual that night to attend the meeting of protest at the Lyric. There, Mrs. Bosley, in response to Governor Warfield's invitation from the platform, indorsed the object of the meeting and condemned the attitude of Dr. Muck, saying she knew what she was doing in the name of the Maryland Daughters would be sanctioned by every Daughter of the American Revolution throughout the country. It was at the request of our State regent that the great throng of patriots stood in silence with bowed heads, honoring the memory of the first Americans to die in this world war.

The regular monthly meeting of the John Eager Howard Chapter will be held next Wednesday at the residence of Mrs. R. J. Wyckoff, 1325 Madison avenue.

ETTA LEGG GALLOWAY,
State Editor.

1320 Linden avenue.

SUN

: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 12 1917

ANSWERS MUCK CRITICS

Patriotic Societies' Committee Intimates Baltimore Couldn't Differentiate.

The National Committee of Patriotic Societies of Washington has felt called upon to answer the criticisms leveled at the capital because of the ovation given Dr. Karl Muck, whose Boston Symphony Orchestra was barred from Baltimore on account of its leader's refusal to play the national anthem.

This committee seems to make it appear that Washington was able to differentiate between "music" and "patriotism," intimating broadly that Baltimore failed to note the same distinction.

The committee's statement follows:

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities? This is the inquiry coming into the office of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, according to William Mather Lewis, secretary of that organization. The inquiry is promoted by the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore and Pittsburgh, because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the Capital City. The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received a tthis time. Washington people who support his concrts say ythat music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war-time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The National Committee maintains that the Capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

STAR

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV

Dr. Muck is traveling around the country playing The Star-spangled Banner. It is interesting and amusing to note that this loyal Prussian is still holding on to his well paid position. Yet not so long ago Americans were accused of being too fond of the mighty dollar!

☆

PUBLIC

PITTSBURGH CUTS OUT GERMAN COMPOSERS

Philadelphia Orchestra Told to Eliminate Them From Program

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8.—All compositions by German composers and the composers of any of the nations allied with Germany must be omitted from the programs of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Pittsburgh for the period of the war. A resolution to this effect was adopted unanimously at a special meeting of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, under whose auspices the Philadelphia Orchestra is giving a series of concerts in Pittsburgh.

In announcing its action, the executive committee of the local organization emphasized its intention to imply no disparagement of the works of foreign composers, but expressed the feeling that when German propaganda, both at home and abroad, welcomes the slightest encouragement, it is the duty of loyal citizens to show in every public act emphatic disapproval and rejection of all that savors in the slightest degree of German influence, recognition or sympathy. The committee maintains that to do otherwise would be to seem to give moral support to the living enemies of all art and progress.

The barring by the police of a concert tonight by Fritz Kreisler, Austrian army officer and eminent violinist, was in accordance with public demand, according to Safety Director Hubbard. Kreisler, who arrived in this city last evening, issued a long statement today in which he admitted that he was sending money to Austria, but not for the aid of his country in the prosecution of the war. He criticized the press here, saying published articles were for the purpose of prejudicing and arousing public opinion against him.

Public Ledger Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its season in Carnegie Hall this evening. The opening number on the program was the "Star Spangled Banner" and the concert was uneventful. Germans in the audience applauded Doctor Muck on his entrance. They did not applaud the opening number.

PRESS

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

ladelphia, November 12, 1917.

ALIEN MUSICIANS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Of course, as "The Press" says today, Baltimore has no right to live in a glass house and throw stones, but there are a good many Philadelphians who wonder why anything is permitted to take place in this city which can be misconstrued or misunderstood.

Have we so many pro-Germans here whose feelings must not be hurt, or do some of our citizens fail to appreciate the influence of a bad example?

Let it be granted that Dr. Muck is a wonderful musician. It has been proven and not even denied that he is a loyal subject of the Kaiser and a supporter of German propaganda in this country.

Why not put him on the list of things to be given up because of the war without any further fuss?

Fritz Kreisler's engagements are being cancelled elsewhere because he is an officer in the Austrian army. If there is even partial truth in what has been published about these two foreigners, that should be sufficient to prevent either of them from again appearing in public in Philadelphia.

The decision should not be left to the management of the performers or of the Academy of Music. It is a police matter and the Director of Public Safety should act.

Good music is a charm, but not a necessity and we are not dependent upon Prussians or Austrians for it. Patrons of high-class concerts should be anxious to give them up when furnished by enemy aliens and if they cannot appreciate the harm such endorsement gives the temptation to attend should be disposed of by the proper city officials.

C. A. D.

Philadelphia, Nov. 10, 1917.

Dr. Muck is no doubt a "loyal subject of the Kaiser," but that it has been proven that he is "a supporter of German propaganda in this country" is incorrect.

Sallie Wistar's Patriotism

o the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—John Fiske in eloquent language many years ago wrote of the "Times that tried men's souls," following the American Revolution. Surely, we are in the midst of such experiences at present and everything that tends to kindle the flame of patriotic devotion to a great and noble cause, either by poetry, art or music, should be developed and encouraged.

The self-contained, sane and at the same time scathing and well-deserved criticism of the attitude of the audience in giving "an ovation and prolonged applause" to the conductor of the Bost[illegible] Symphony Orchestra on Friday last, under conditions not necessary to dwell upon here, is heartily commended and th roughly indorsed by many who appreciate the ability and patriotism of the woman who signs herself in the columns of the PUBLIC LEDGER as "Sallie Wistar."

ANNE MAGNUS EARLE.

Doylestown, Pa., November 6, 1917.

n BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

TO a reader who expresses the opinion that Dr. Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, should not have been permitted to mount the stand in the Academy of Music last Monday night, it is to be said that, inasmuch as the Doctor consented to play the "Star Spangled Banner," there seemed to be no occasion for resorting to extreme measures. If, however, he were a man of tact, he would not have allowed himself to give offense to anybody by the sort of remarks which had been attributed to him for his previous refusal or reluctance to play the national anthem in compliance with what had become a courtesy and custom. If it simply hurts him, in his artistic conscience, to play it, he is manifestly a foolish fellow. If, on the other hand, it hurts him, in his patriotic German conscience, to do so, his prompt return passage to Germany, without any further palaver or ceremony, should be provided for. Doubtless his position is a trying one in these days, just as it would be, for example, if John Philip Sousa—although, of course, he and Dr. Muck are not to be considered together in exactly the same professional sense—had been leading a popular band or orchestra in Berlin for many seasons and had now been requested to play "Die Wacht am Rhein." It is to be assumed that it would have run hard against John Philip's patriotic conscience to have done so, even if it would not bother his artistic notions of propriety. In such event, it is pretty certain that he would have declined to comply with the request and would at once have asked for his passports. But if he were not to ask for them, there is little doubt that they would be handed to him on the double quick.

PENN.

n BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

AN IDOLATROUS ATTITUDE

(From the New York Evening Post.)

If any one shared the apprehension of the Police Department that there might be a disturbance at last night's appearance of Dr. Muck to conduct the season's first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he did not know the audience that gathers for the Carnegie Hall concerts of this famous organization. To this audience everything this orchestra, or its conductor, does is absolutely above criticism. Probably ninety-five of every hundred of these good and honest folks, if blindfolded or placed behind a screen, could not, to save their lives, tell whether this particular orchestra was playing or the New York Philharmonic or Chicago Orchestra; yet to hear their pharisaical or adulatory talk one would think that Boston alone provided us with the real thing, everything else in the country being second or third rate. The Boston orchestra certainly is first rate, and Dr. Muck is an admirable conductor in many ways; yet he was known in Berlin as "the metronome," and his programs are certainly far from being models.

It is this idolatrous attitude of certain listeners—and newspaper critics, chiefly in New York—that has led to the recent unfortunate row over the American anthem. The malady known as "swelled-head" led certain very estimable persons to suppose that this Bostonian organization could do no wrong, even in war time; and that even if the other orchestras lowered themselves by playing "The Star Spangled Banner," the exalted Boston band need not stoop to anything so inartistic. Now our anthem is not as great music as the Russian national hymn—just discarded because it glorifies the Czar, or the Austrian, or the French; yet it is far better than "The Watch on the Rhine," which the German orchestras play, but which Wagner justly described as "ein flaues Liedertajel Produkt."

SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 17 1917

THE BALTIMORE MUSICAL UNION

The correspondence between Mr. Charles E. Ford and the Baltimore Musical Union puts that organization in a worse light than that in which Dr. Muck put himself recently. The latter is a German subject, in sympathy with the German purpose of destroying free government. His attitude was natural in an avowed alien enemy, but even he did not refuse to donate a couple of hours to the entertainment of American soldiers in camp, or decline to allow any member of his band to do so without pay.

The Baltimore Musical Union plays "The Star-Spangled Banner," but mocks the soldiers who serve under it. The national flag and the national cause appear to represent to it only dollars and cents. It is composed of citizens or residents of Maryland, who are protected by the State, who make their living by the grace of patriotic Americans, who are supposed to sympathize with this country and to be willing to do something for the men who are doing everything for us. And yet it will not suspend its "rules" for an hour to allow the orchestra at Ford's Opera House to help cheer up the men at Camp Meade who are preparing to risk their lives in France for this strangely cold "union" of musicians, whose inspiration seems to depend upon the dollar mark.

This may not be disloyalty, but it indicates a mean and mercenary spirit that makes even Dr. Muck seem noble by contrast. Loyalty to Germany might at least be pleaded for him. What is to be said of a body of alleged Americans who will not permit its members to give an afternoon of their time to the country to which they claim to be loyal?

There are a good many members of the Musical Union who feel disgraced and outraged by the action of their officers, and we hope they will resent it indignantly and put out of power the men who are responsible for placing them in a false position. In the meantime the loyal public, on which this union is dependent for support, should make its management realize the scorn which patriotic men and women feel for those who will not scrape a fiddle or blow a horn for a little while on one afternoon for the success of Old Glory and for the redemption of the world. Baltimore led the country ten days ago in a demonstration of splendid patriotism at the Lyric. Its Musical Union now gives it first place on the Map of Meanness. Nearly everybody everywhere else is thanking God for the privilege of doing something for the country, and especially for our absent soldiers. It remained for the Baltimore Musical Union to label itself frankly as one of the calculating and selfish mercenaries of a period when the life of the nation is at stake.

rom SUN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

Date NOV

Why Make Fish Of One And Flesh Of Another?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I heartily agree with Dr. Hopkinson. Mr. Kreisler, a furloughed officer of the Austrian Army, with which country we are virtually at war, should not be permitted to play here and gather in his dollars so that he may give aid to the enemy. He and Muck should be interned at once by our Government. Does anyone suppose for a moment that Sousa with his band would be permitted to concertize in Austria or Prussia?

We are in a terrible war. If they had the opportunity, the same Huns who have perpetrated the most diabolical outrages (sworn to by many eyewitnesses in France), would gladly assault our women, maim our children and murder our old men and women. They would continue all sorts of incendiary and murderously poisonous schemes which they have so often brought about by the very aliens in our midst.

At the present time patriotism should be above art, amusement and everything else excepting religion, of which it is an essential element. The playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not out of place even at a symphony concert, notwithstanding the assertion of Mr. Harold Randolph, who claims to be intensely loyal. If this be intense loyalty, God save us from plain loyalty.

Is the Musical Union under the control of the Huns? Why do they not permit their members to play gratis at the entertainment at Camp Meade on November 22?

Let us know without any gainsaying who are the alien enemies in our very midst, then the Government will deal with them accordingly.

CIVIS FIDELIS.

Baltimore, Nov. 12.

SUN

Baltimore, Md.

NOV 12 1917

D. A. R. ACTIVITIES

The State Executive Board held its November meeting last Tuesday morning in the Red Room of the Hotel Belvedere, the State regent, Mrs. Arthur Lee Bosley, presiding. After the opening of the meeting with a prayer by the State chaplain, Mrs. J. Charles Linthicum, and the regular procedure of business, the State regent asked for Victrola records and good books to be sent to the soldiers at Camp Meade. Mrs. Bosley announced that a handsome flag will be presented to the library of the Maryland University as a memorial to General Lafayette, who won his degree there. The report of the "knitting committee" was most encouraging, showing all but 10 of the promised comfort sets for the torpedo boat Commodore Joshua Barney being completed. It was decided to increase the sets to four for each man for each year of the war. A "free wool" benefit will be given later. Mrs. Frank Wilson, regent of the Janet Montgomery Chapter, told of a call on them for 137 sweaters for Montgomery county soldiers at Anniston, and of the completion of the sweaters in 10 days. It was also reported that 80 had been sent through the Navy League (women's section) to the Coast Artillery boys guarding the city docks. The request that the Daughters of each state give $5 for the care of French orphans was responded to by a pledge of $5 from Maryland. The Anne Arundel and Janet Montgomery Chapters are each caring for one of these bereaved children. Mrs. Albert Gore, State chairman of "international relations," urged each chapter to take up the study of international problems, forming classes, especially for mothers, for instruction in the English language and the teaching of American ideals, reminding us that these same foreigners are soon to be citizens of our country. "It largely depends on us," she added, "what kind of citizens they will be."

Resolution was offered by the regent of the Francis Scott Key Chapter, Mrs. J. D. Iglehart, indorsing the act of former Governor Warfield in opposing the appearance here of an orchestra led by an alien enemy, Dr. Karl Muck, and denouncing and condemning the insult to our national anthem. This resolution was unanimously passed by the State Board. The State regent adjourned the meeting earlier than usual that night to attend the meeting of protest at the Lyric. There, Mrs. Bosley, in response to Governor Warfield's invitation from the platform, indorsed the object of the meeting, and condemned the attitude of Dr. Muck, saying she knew what she was doing in the name of the Maryland Daughters would be sanctioned by every Daughter of the American Revolution throughout the country. It was at the request of our State regent that the great throng of patriots stood in silence with bowed heads, honoring the memory of the first Americans to die in this world war.

The regular monthly meeting of the John Eager Howard Chapter will be held next Wednesday at the residence of Mrs. R. J. Wyckoff, 1325 Madison avenue.

ETTA LEGG GALLOWAY,
State Editor.

1320 Linden avenue.

SUN

Baltimore, Md.

NOV 12 1917

ANSWERS MUCK CRITICS

Patriotic Societies' Committee Intimates Baltimore Couldn't Differentiate.

The National Committee of Uatriotic Societies of Washington has felt called upon to answer the criticisms leveled at the capital because of the ovation given Dr. Karl Muck, whose Boston Symphony Orchestra was barred from Baltimore on account of its leader's refusal to play the national anthem.

This committee seews to make it appear that Washington was able to differentiate between "music" and "patriotism," intimating broadly that Baltimore failed to note the same distinction.

The committee's statement follows:

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities? This is the inquiry coming into the office of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, according to William Mather Lewis, secretary of that organization. The inquiry is promoted by the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore and Pittsburgh, because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the Capital City. The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received a tthis time. Washington people who support his concrts say ythat music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war-time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The National Committee maintains that the Capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

NEWS
Baltimore, Md.

753

Music

Considerable surprise was created by the announcement that Gabrilowitsch had been substituted for Mme. Margarete Matzenauer as soloist at the Philadelphia Orchestra's first lyric concert of the season next Wednesday. Mme. Matzenauer will open the Metropolitan Opera season tomorrow night in "Aida" and it is said that her work there made the Baltimore appearance impossible.

"The German language should not be flaunted in the face of the American public when the Huns are killing our men," Arthur Judson, manager of the orchestra, said to me the other day, "and it is because everybody connected with the orchestra feels that way that we have eliminated songs and arias in German from our program this year. Surely singers can find other things for their solo numbers."

The announcement of this fact and also that the Philadelphia Orchestra will present no works by living German composers has attracted no end of attention and has stirred up quite a bit of discussion. Royalties on modern works are generally very large, and, as Mr. Judson explained, they might very well constitute a fiancial factor in assisting the country's enemies.

The men connected with the orchestra, Mr. Judson further told me, had subscribed $65,000 to the Liberty Loan, a sum greater than that put up for the purpose by any other orchestra in the country, and he added both the orchestra and the Orchestra Association had been helping the Red Cross and various other necessary war relief activities. The Sunday concerts in Philadelphia will be given for the benefit of the soldiers and sailors at the League Island Navy Yard.

—✣—

It's very good to know all this—to realize that there is an orchestra that is lining up solidly with the country in this day when every effort should be directed toward stimulating patriotism and instilling the feeling of staunch loyalty into the hearts of the people.

Surely there can be no surer road than through the emotions, and as the musical appeal is entirely emotional it follows that this is one of the most potent forms of American propaganda.

By the same token, the appeal of contemporaneous German music, especially that voiced by operas and songs, is apt to be equally subtle in the interests of the Huns.

Must it again be reiterated that we must guard against giving bounds of nationality to art? No one wants to do that, but we do want to eliminate everything that will tend to encourage and give support, financial, moral or physical, to our enemies.

There is a big difference between a composition by a German composer of the past and one of the present, by inference at any rate.

The old masters were not the monsters that have dyed the world in blood and tears, and even one so modern as Wagner is not to be classed with that unspeakable horde. He of all would have had his revolutionary tendencies stirred as never before by what has taken place under the direction of Berlin since 1914.

—✣—

Apart from all this there are inevitable questions of tact and policy to consider.

If anybody is inclined to doubt this, let him look back over the events of the last week until he finds pause at the Boston Symphony debacle, brought about when Major Higginson to all intents and purposes ran a-Muck.

—✣—

And speaking of this, it would not surprise me in the least if we never heard the Boston Symphony here in Baltimore again. It is quite certain that we will not during the reign of Herr Muck.

Judging from the tone of the meeting of protest called by former Gov. Edwin Warfield—which, incidentally, was characterized by one of the most extraordinary outbursts of patriotic enthusiasm I have ever witnessed in a long newspaper career—Dr. Muck would have been torn limb from limb had he dared poke his nose inside Union Station.

The crowd at the Lyric—the place was packed to the doors—was not of the "rag-tag and bobtail." Far from it. It was composed of the best people of Baltimore, and it demonstrated conclusively that ladies and gentlemen can be quite as formidable in their attitude when it comes to resenting what must be considered an insult to our flag and a seditious outrage as are those of other classes.

It is a sorry thing to contemplate even the possible disappearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the local concert stage; that is, it would be if there were to be any other man as its director than Dr. Muck.

It is quite certain that with another conductor it would be again received into favor in Baltimore, despite the intense feeling of animosity, and it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will wake up in time to save the whole organization from disintegration through a general withdrawal of public support.

The Philadelphia people are beginning to wake up to the fact that, as a recent issue of the Evening Bulletin said, Dr. Muck had "put one over" on them. A sub-head announced that he "was flippant and ornate" in conducting his enforced performance of the national anthem. The arrangement he used, I have been told, was that of Victor Herbert, not the most dignified in the world, by any means.

—✣—

But, land, they say that if animosity toward pro-Prussian music and musicians is high in Baltimore, it is wholly beyond bounds in Pittsburgh.

Of course, everybody knows that Kreisler was denied appearances out there because of his Austrian army connections.

The only definite engagement he has been announced to fill here was with the Boston Symphony, though he is down for a charity benefit later in the winter.

—✣—

The Boston Symphony trouble is apt to put the ban pretty generally upon German music for the duration of the war.

The Metropolitan's step in taking German opera from the repertoire is most significant and will probably be followed elsewhere, though in Chicago, where sedition and treason have been sanctified, nay, lauded in the highest municipal circles—if by any stretch of the imagination they may be called high—it would probably "go" very well.

A recent news item tells that Frieda Hempel of the Metropolitan has been singing "The Star-Spangled Banner." This is amusing and shows that the lady knows what she is about. Last season it was reported she refused on the ground that she did not know it. Fancy such an artist not being able to read at sight a score that would be "pie" to a first-year conservatory student!

—✣—

Everybody outside of Boston is now getting on the patriotic band wagon as fast as possible, or if they are already on they are taking care to let the fact be known.

Walter Damrosch, who undoubtedly has never been anywhere else, has frantically sent out notices to counteract the effect of statements he first made concerning Dr. Muck et al.

It appears that these were misquoted or not quoted at sufficient length, with the result that the stand of the New York Symphony's director was generally misunderstood and misinterpreted.

In the addenda to Statement No. 1, Mr. Damrosch had this to say:

"Does Dr. Muck really believe that the national anthem should be played only by military bands and ballroom orchestras? He chooses to ignore the fact that the national anthem is the symbol of our patriotism and loyalty at a time when our nation is at war, and that, even though he is an enemy alien, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, or should be, most decidedly an American organization and ready to play our national anthem on any occasion when the patriotic emotions of its public demand it.

"Equally cowardly is his claim that the playing of the national anthem would disrupt his orchestra because it is composed of so many different nationalities. All of these men have lived in America many years, and most of them are, and all of them should be, American citizens by this time."

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Date

MAKES ANTHEM OBLIGATORY

Ordinance Decreeing Fine For Refusal To Play In First Branch.

Bands and orchestras will be required to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the opening number at all theatres, concerts and other public functions as soon as the City Council passes and Mayor Preston signs an ordinance introduced in the First Branch of the City Council last evening by President John F. O'Meara.

The measure was advanced to its second reading without reference to a committee, on motion of Dr. John C. Huthwelker, chairman of the Committee on Police and Jail.

The result of the recent refusal of Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the national anthem in Providence, the ordinance provides as a penalty for its violation a fine of not less than $ nor more than $10 for each and every offense.

It will be placed alongside an ordinance which prohibits the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" as a part of any medley or other collection of popular airs, passed by the City Council some time ago.

om SUN
dress: Baltimore, Md.
te NOV 12 19

The Penalty Fits The Crime.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: I was astonished to read in your paper that Mr. Harold Randolph upheld Dr Muck in refusing to play our national anthem at the Providence symphony concert, and says:

"I for one, passionately patriotic as I am, would deeply deplore it being dragged into every musical affair."

Why should we find fault with Dr. Muck if Mr. Randolph does not approve of having "The Star-Spangled Banner" played at the concerts under his direction?

I should suggest that Mr. Randolph as the head of the Peabody Institute be requested to open every Peabody recital with our national anthem on the organ, he himself presiding at the organ.

A SUBSCRIBER.

Baltimore, Nov. 3.

EVENING SUN
ss: Baltimore, Md.

Baltimore, Nov. 10.

"A Loyal Patriot" Is Evidently Not Popular A Little Bit With This Good American.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN: Sir—Having read the ravings of one in today's EVENING SUN, signing the name of "A Loyal Patriot," I would like to ask how he got that way. This Teutonic person asks if the people of Baltimore do not know that Dr. Muck did not want to stay in America, but was compelled to in order to keep a contract. Some more German gas. He also had a contract to conduct a concert in Baltimore for the people of Baltimore. Did he keep this contract? No, his wife would not let him.

"A Loyal Patriot" (?) next asks if an American were in Germany would he feel like conducting "Die Wacht am Rhein"? Anybody knows that an American would not feel like doing this at this time, but regardless of his feelings, he would not prove an ingrate to that element of people who were supporting and protecting him, by openly insulting them. I consider this very question an insult to any American and a reflection upon the intelligence of the questioner.

Next question is: "Do you think it wise that the whole orchestra be blamed and barred from coming here, and does it pay to take music in its highest form away from the true lovers of the art?"

"A Loyal Patriot" should know by now what the people of Baltimore think, including you, Mr. Editor. They so highly indorsed this genius Muck and his collection last Tuesday a week at the Lyric. D—— him, I say, and all his orchestra, and to h—— with music before we take more of his insults in our own back yard. We are at war!

"A Loyal Patriot" (?) has stated he admires Dr. Muck and his stand, and if the people of Baltimore would use what brains they may possess they might do the same.

I would like to bring to his notice that while I do not consider myself a "muck-y" genius, I feel that I can use my brains as well as my fists as ably as "A Loyal Patriot" (?). I do not admire him, rather I despise him and anyone who would admire him, and if "A Loyal Patriot" (?) don't like this he can go to ——. If this is not plain enough for him let him say so and I will try and satisfy him any way he may choose.

Baltimore, Nov. 8. H. MYLES.

EVENING SUN
ss: Baltimore, Md.

NOV 13

Patriotism In Philadelphia And In Baltimore.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN: Sir—When Baltimore awoke one morning and found that Capt. Paul Koenig had no regard for the anthem "Britannia Rules the Waves" its appreciative citizens realized the fact that in evading Britain's powerful navy and bringing the Deutschland into the local port Captain Koenig had accomplished a feat that would find a place in the annals of the world's most startling navigation events.

Quaint Philadelphia, resting peacefully beneath the shadow of the Liberty Bell, was shocked at the felicitations extended Koenig, at least one of the Quaker City contemporaries revealed this fact. The editorial, bringing to mind the Lusitania disaster and other epochs of German Kultur, scored Baltimore for being friendly with the U-boat commander because of the strained relations between his and this country.

Several months elapsed. Dr. Karl Muck evidently dislikes the tempo of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and thousands of Americans heap hot coals on his head when he declares the Boston Symphony Orchestra would bar Francis Scott Key's masterpiece from its concert program. In Philadelphia he changes his mind, and his musicians do their best to imitate Pumpkin Centre's fife and drum corps playing the national anthem. Philadelphia arises and cheers Dr. Muck to the echo.

Hardly had the cheering in Philadelphia died out before it started here. The local cheering, however, was when the official announcement was made that Dr. Muck's name would not appear in electric lights over the Lyric Theatre.

O Patriotism! How many crimes are committed in thy name! G.

Baltimore, Nov. 8.

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.
te NOV 12 1917

Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson Does Not Agree With Governor Warfield As To Kreisler.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Pray permit me to thank you for your editorial commendation of the small part I was permitted to take in the recent remarkable patriotic demonstration. There was very little question, before the meeting, as to Karl Muck's classification. Since November 6 all patriotic Baltimoreans denominate him a "loyal citizen of Prussia," and bid him give the birthplace of "The Star-Spangled Banner" a wide berth.

I was sorry to read Governor Warfield's attitude toward Fritz Kreisler. He has fought in this war against our allies, and I am sure he has the same love for them now as he had when he was in the trenches. I am willing to admit that he is a brave man, that he is an incomparable artist, that he has played for Red Cross meetings (remember, Karl Muck conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner"), but with all these things in his favor he is yet an enemy alien, sympathizing yesterday, today and tomorrow with our bitter enemies, and until the close of the war he should not have the moral and financial support of the enemies of his beloved country.

How long will it take our people to realize that the war is not a secondary issue, but holds first place to the utter exclusion, if need be, of art and amusement in every form, surely to the giving comfort and support to an enemy alien.

When peace has been declared let us again welcome Kreisler; for the period of the war let us place him in the same category as Muck and withhold from him our support in every way.

As a lover and patron of and participant in the divine art of music it is not an agreeable duty to help to make a great artist persona non grata, but let us not make fish of some and flesh and fowl of others.

B. MERRILL HOPKINSON, M. D.

Baltimore, Nov. 10.

Is The Musicians' Union Made Up Of Shadow-Huns?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: May I ask the patriotic people of our city, through your paper, what is the matter with the Musicians' Union of Baltimore. Are they, too, made up of "shadow-Huns" I have just read in THE SUN the news that the board of directors of Local No. 40 of this union has refused to allow a local orchestra to play gratis for a performance of the musical play, "O, Boy," at Camp Meade on November 22. And I also learn that members of this orchestra willingly donated their services for the event, without asking for any pay at all, just so that they might have this little opportunity to give the soldiers a happy afternoon.

What kind of patriotism exists among the members of the Musical Union of Baltimore? Let's put this question squarely up to them, as we did to the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and find out where they stand. What a pity that a big and powerful organization like the Musicians' Union should stoop so low as to refuse permission to a group of musicians who really want to do something for their country without monetary reward of any kind?

What a slap in the face of President Wilson and Mr. Baker, both of whom are doing all they can to provide wholesome amusement in the training camps. And what an insult to our Young Men's Christian Association, which donated its big auditorium at Camp Meade for the use of the "O, Boy" company on November 22.

It begins to look as though the Musicians' Union of Baltimore will have to do a lot of explaining to satisfy the public. J. H. M.

Baltimore, Nov. 10.

EVENING STAR
ess: Washington, D. C.

1 1917

WITH all that melodrama, vaudeville and moving pictures could offer in their infinite variety, not to mention the refined burlesque which has taken the place of the rough and tumble fun that once paraded under this title, the real treat of the week was a musical treat. "The Star Spangled Banner" assisted Boston's famous symphony orchestra to demonstrate virtuosity of execution, catholicity of style, and all the other artistries which musical literature loves to mention. Before the ringing anthem was concluded it sounded as if the spirit was that almost of con amore. Washington refused to be emotionally aroused by report of a reluctance to defer to a popular demand for "The Star Spangled Banner" on all occasions where musicians are assembled, whether the caliber of their organization be that of a symphonic aggregation or only a little German band. The report was denied, and what threatened to be an incident of some poignancy is left for the more authoritative processes of investigation and verification. Critical opinion which addresses itself strictly to the subject of art for art's sake is unanimous that a finer performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" was never heard, and that hereafter no first-class repertory can afford to be without it.

om POST
ress: Washington, D. C.
NOV 4 1917

Finishing His Education.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has included "The Star-Spangled Banner" in its repertoire, despite the declaration of Dr. Karl Muck, its director, that the suggestion was a "silly" one, that "art is a thing of itself" and that patriotic airs have no place in a classical program. Herr Conductor Muck's attitude aroused a storm of protest which so impressed the management of the orchestra that it was decided to include the national anthem in the program, and Boston witnessed the inspiring spectacle of the director of the royal opera of Berlin wielding the baton to the thrilling strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The orchestra is about to start en tour and it is announced that this patriotic air will be played at every concert hereafter, which will do much to allay the feeling of resentment that has been aroused by this incident. In fact, it is doubtful if the tour could be made otherwise. The director of public safety of Pittsburgh has announced that he will not grant a permit for the performance there unless he has assurances that "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played. Col. Roosevelt has risen to remark that the herr conductor ought to be interned because of his expressions in opposition to the national anthem. But if the orchestra continues to play the selection at every concert hereafter, it will become proficient at it, which may be helpful in the future, since there are many people in this country who are fully convinced that before many months elapse "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be heard on Unter den Linden and in the Berlin opera house. Consequently Dr. Muck is but putting the finishing touches upon his musical education in learning to conduct this highly popular selection.

And upon what authority does this eminent artist hold that art and patriotism do not mix? What art can be higher or nobler than love of country? Is there an ideal more beautiful than loyalty to one's flag? Ask any of the great painters of France who have laid aside their brushes to enter the trenches; or Paderewski, who is devoting his energies to his country; or Kreisler, who put away his violin to carry a rifle until a bullet disqualified him for military service. Art and patriotism, being idealistic, ever have been allies. Dr. Muck is entirely wrong in intimating that they are antagonistic. If he finds himself in an uncomfortable environment here, that is his misfortune, but so long as he sells his art for American dollars he must attempt to place no damper upon American patriotic sentiment. The oftener and the louder his orchestra plays "The Star-Spangled Banner," the better the public will like it

TIMES
ess: Washington, D. C.

GIVES UP TICKETS RATHER THAN HEAR MUCK'S ORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Orchestra; desirable season tickets; orchestra, P. 17 and 19; war tax paid; price $19. Apartment 314, The Earlington.

The above ad appeared today in the miscellaneous for sale column of a Washington newspaper, showing that some one does not care to hear Dr. Carl Muck conduct an orchestra, whether he is playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" or "The Watch on the Rhine."

Inquiry by The Times at apartment 314 elicited the information that the tickets had been disposed of.

Muck to Conduct Today.

Dr. Muck will conduct the orchestra at the National Theater this afternoon and tonight, and "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played at the opening of each program. This announcement was made today by Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, the local manager. And she stated further that the seat sale was one of the largest ever recorded for the concerts under her management.

"Everything has been settled," she said. "Dr. Muck will conduct the orchestra, and it will play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' The seat sale is

EVENING STAR
ess: Washington, D. C.
NOV - 6 1917

EXPECTED TO PLAY NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Orchestra at National Theater This Afternoon.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the National Theater this afternoon, as it did in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, Washington business agent for the orchestra, declined to discuss the controversy which has arisen over the alleged refusal of Dr. Muck, leader of the orchestra, to play the national anthem at a recent concert, declaring that she knew less of it than did the newspapers, and that she represented the business management of the orchestra, a thoroughly American institution, and not Dr. Muck.

Mrs. Wilson a Boxholder.

At the ticket office it was learned that a few of the orders for seats had been canceled, but these were sold to other buyers, and by noon, it was stated, but few seats remained unsold. Among the boxholders for the Boston Symphony's season here are Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, who has paid her war tax on the series; representatives of the Russian government now in Washington, and orchestra seats have been sold, it was stated, to large numbers of Army and Navy officers and their families.

There seemed no prospect of police action here with the concert, as in Baltimore, where the concert for tomorrow night was forbidden on the ground that public safety would be endangered by possible demonstrations. Neither had any arrangements been made here this morning to escort Dr. Muck from the station, upon his arrival, to his hotel, as was done as a precautionary measure in Philadelphia yesterday.

Resolutions by Musicians.

Resolutions were adopted yesterday by the Musicians' Protective Union, Local 161, American Federation of Musicians, which referred to the alleged refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and continued "Therefore, be it resolved * * * That every musical organization appearing in this city in concert or other musical production be required to render as a part of its performance the national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

A dispatch from Boston, relating the start of the controversy at Providence, R. I., where it was charged Dr. Muck declined to play the patriotic anthem, quotes Maj. Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, as saying that the request in Providence was made to him by a woman who was not a subscriber to the orchestra concerts, and it was not communicated to Dr. Muck or to the orchestra Maj. Higginson is quoted as saying:

Request Never Refused, He Says.

"The first time Dr. Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' they played it, and still further, the request has never been refused."

Dr. Muck was not expected in Washington until an hour or so before his concert, set for 4:30 o'clock today. W. H. Brennen, business manager of the Boston Symphony, was expected at the same time.

Baltimore Forbids Performance.

BALTIMORE, November 6.—The police commissioners of Baltimore have sent an order to the manager of the Lyric Theater forbidding the performance of the Boston Sympathy Orchestra tomorrow night on the ground that the public safety for the community would be endangered. The action came at the recommendation of the grand jury and after plans had been perfected for a huge mass meeting today at which leading men of the state will denounce the attitude of Dr. Karl Muck toward playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Formal protest against the concert was filed with the police board by the grand jury yesterday. This action was taken after the jury had discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence last week.

Feared Riot Might Follow.

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the grand jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held, as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the grand jury to former Gov. Warfield, expressing the views of that body, which would be read at the mass meeting of protest.

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.
NOV 11 1917

TREATS CHARGES AGAINST MUSICIANS SEPARATELY

Department of Justice Policy Not to Bar Foreign Artists as a Class.

Despite recent opposition to the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other concert artists of foreign nationality, including Fritz Kreisler and Miss Frieda Hempel, in various cities, the policy of the Department of Justice toward foreign artists, musical or otherwise, has not changed.

This policy, it was stated by a department official, has been not to regard artists as a class, any more than persons of any other vocation, and to treat their cases individually. Thus the case of Dr. Muck and allegations linking him with pro-German activities have been investigated thoroughly by the department, and it was found he was doing nothing to warrant his internment.

Two other points are involved, especially in the appearance of musical artists in various cities, but with these points, it was contended, the Department of Justice has nothing to do. One is the disturbance such appearances may cause. The department considers this question one for local action. Thus, in Baltimore the concert last week of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was forbidden by the police department, on the ground that disorder might result.

The other point raised is that which caused the canceling of some Kreisler engagements, on the ground that the money he received might be sent to Austria. But the United States has declared war upon Austria, it is held hence money sent there does not constitute an offense against this government. It was said that if any one was found to be aiding the German government, by money contributions or otherwise, they would be dealt with through the provisions of the alien enemy act.

TIMES
Washington, D. C.
NOV 11 1917

German Musicians In for Bad Season.

About the most exciting incident of the last week—this being the week when voteless Washington goes home to vote—was the Boston Symphony concert, with Dr. Carl Muck leading.

When the protests against his refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" first began to agitate Washington's patriotic breast, there was some speculation as to what the White House would do. In past seasons there has rarely been a Boston Symphony concert that the ladies of the White House have not attended and occasionally the President has been of the party also. Good music is so undeniably the right thing for the White House to patronize! But when patriotism and patronage do not dwell in sweet accord—which wins?

Fortunately—perhaps not fortuitously—the question did not have to be answered. It was election day, Mrs. Wilson had gone to Princeton to help the President vote, and Miss Margaret Wilson, having been home for a few days from her recent triumphal Canadian trip and gotten "rested up again," had gone again. So the concert had to get along without the White House. But the Cabinet was well represented and society, official and residential, was out in force.

—•—

POST
ss: Washington, D. C.
NOV 12 1917

DOUBTS PATRIOTISM HERE.

Patriotic Societies' Commtitee Cites Welcome Given to Dr. Muck.

In Washington less patriotic than other American cities? is the inquiry the office of the National Committee of Pratiotic Societies, according to Wiliam Mather Lewis, secretary of that organization. The inquiry is prompted, he says, by the fact that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the Capitol City.

The national committee maintains, declares Lewis, that the Capitol of the Nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war and that the position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support.

n HERALD
ess: Washington, D. C.
NOV 1 1 191

The rank and file of music-lovers who have for years bought season tickets for the Boston Symphony series filed sedately in to the theater and applauded and listened with rapt attention, fairly sat on the edges of the seats in expectancy Tuesday, listening not for the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," but to hear if it was not played. It was played, and as the last strains died away the audience settled back to survey one another and enjoy itself. In the President's box, left vacant because the President and Mrs. Wilson went to Princeton for the election, sat Mrs. Marshall Field, with Mrs. Richard H. Townsend as her guest, and just to show how well-balanced society could be, the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane, to counteract any vague impressions that might linger about. Mrs. Corcoran Thom was also in the box. Mrs. Newton D. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War, who evidently thinks art, and especially music, has no nationality, was in a box as teh guest of Mrs. William Crozier, who also entertained Mrs. Julius Lay, Mrs. Reynolds Hitt, Mrs. Bingham and Mme. Ramon. In another distinguished group was the Right Rev. Alfred Harding, bishop of Washington, and his sister-in-law, Miss Douglass, who were guests of the Rev. and Mrs. F. Ward Denys, two art-loving persons, who have a wonderful collection of pictures and other interesting things in their home, gathered from frequent travels all over the world. Mrs. David Franklin Houston, wife of the Secretary of Agricvulture; Miss Eliza Scidmore, sister of Mr. George H. Scidmore, consul general at Yokohama for the United States, and who herself is a writer on Japan of great note, was in a box with Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, with whom she spent some months in the Orient last year; Mrs. Matthew

CONTINUED FROM PAGE FOUR.

T. Scott, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, a composer and artist of marked ability, and Mrs. Archibald Hopkins were in the audience, with many others of official and resident society.

TOWN TOPICS
NEW YORK CITY
NOV 15 1917

THE spectacle of Mrs. Jack Gardner turning her back to her flag by walking down from her seat near the stage in Symphony Hall and out at the first Friday matinee when Dr. Muck, coerced by public protest into playing "The Star Spangled Banner," raised his baton to lead it, was not an inspiring sight for those subscribers who still put love of country above love of Higginson and Muck. It was a startling sensation, which almost eclipsed that made by the orchestra's playing of the national song, and the question was everywhere asked, "Why did she do it?" Nobody really knows whether Mrs. Gardner is pro-German or not, but that she is pro-Muck and more has been made strikingly evident for years past. That her feeling for her Bavarian hero, who had been forced by the public into such a position, made it impossible for her to remain to see and hear his humiliation seems to be the only way of solving such a drastic action. Mrs. Jack's further loyalty, if that prompted her action, was evinced by her taking a hurried trip to New York in her feebleness, which is becoming more and more apparent, with Mrs. Muck to attend the Boston Symphony concerts there.

TOPICS
YORK CITY
15 1917

No notes at all are better than false notes, and a thoroughly false note is apparent in the manifest ill will and inefficiency with which Dr. Karl Muck and his Symphony Orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner." To those of us who regard with reverence our national anthem it seems a positive sacrilege to permit it to be given under compulsion, by virtuosi who have publicly professed their contempt for it as inartistic, and who openly proclaim their allegiance to the Kaiser, with whom we are at war, as well as their enmity to the United States. What, under the circumstances, they are doing in this country, it is difficult to understand, and one does not know whether to be more amazed by the coarse and typically Teuton brutality of their insolence, or the extraordinary patience of the American music-lovers in tolerating their appearance upon any concert platform. If they hate us so, why do they ask for our dollars instead of remaining in the assuredly more congenial atmosphere of their precious Fatherland? Their attitude might well serve as inspiration to our cartoonists for a picture representing the typical German itinerant musician, extending his left hand for alms and with the other flinging mud and stones at his generous and over-indulgent American patron. Do not let us have any more playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," either by Dr. Muck and his Symphony of hostile aliens, or by any other of those German bands which have harbored so many spies in their midst. It is nothing less than a contamination of our national hymn.

n EVENING TELEGRAM
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.
NOV 13 191

Funny Burlesque at Dumont's.

"Dr. Muck's Simple Funny Orchestra" is the name of the new burlesque which was presented yesterday for the first time at Dumont's Minstrels. A threat that the doctor would have to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," whether he wanted to or not, was carried out.

UNION
m
Springfield, Mass
dress:
NOV 6 - 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT OPPOSED

Grand Jury in Baltimore Fears Demonstration or Riot.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5—Formal protest against the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here next Wednesday night was filed with the police board by the Grand Jury today. This action was taken after the jury had discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at Providence last week.

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the Grand Jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the Grand Jury to former-Gov. Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be received at the mass-meeting of protest Mr. Warfield has organized for tomorrow.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
REPUBLICAN
rom
Springfield, Mass.
ddress:
NOV 9 - 1917

The Providence Journal, valiantly struggling to have Dr Muck deposed as head of the Boston symphony orchestra, has been saying for some days that the eminent musician was a German spy and insinuating that it had proof of its assertion. Yesterday, keeping faith with the public, the Journal brought forth the supposedly incriminating evidence. And what is it? Nothing but the fact that in 1915, while in California, Dr Muck was fleeced of $300 by an impostor, who pretended to be collecting money for some paper that was presenting the case of Germany before the American people. The fact was widely published at the time and is well remembered. Instead of proving that Dr Muck has been associated with the German propaganda in this country, it would seem to prove the opposite. For if Dr Muck had been acquainted with the ways of the propaganda he would not have been swindled by a man pretending to be one of its agents.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.
NOV 15 1917

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

THE SYMPHONY ISSUE

DR MUCK NOT INVOLVED

MAJ HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT

Members of Orchestra Deserve Not Abuse and Suspicion, but Hearty Thanks, He Says

Maj Henry L. Higginson of Boston issued last Sunday a full public statement regarding the controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston symphony orchestra. Maj Higginson said:—

"In these times of great strees and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, October 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some women in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston symphony orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the women was not mentioned to Dr Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some annonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and couretous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered, but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from people unknown to me. The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and —often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so .I ignored the tardy request of the Providence women, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone. (Signed)

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

Views of Theodore Thomas's Widow

An interesting contribution to the public controversy which became acute with the dissemination of an erroneous report that Dr Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," is made by Mrs Theodore Thomas, widow of America's most famous native orchestral conductor. In a letter to the Boston Herald Mrs Thomas says:—

"The thoughtless people who are trying to stir up popular enmity against Dr Muck and his German colleagues in the Boston orchestra by violent attacks in the daily press are committing exactly the same crime against art and civilization as that which revolted the world when the Germans bombarded Rheims cathedral in order to 'strafe' the French. They are 'shelling' the one perfect and complete art creation of Boston merely in order to 'strafe' its German leader and his colleagues, and if they persist in their causeless attacks they will surely destroy this noble institution past all redemption.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.
NOV 15 1917

The Providence Journal, valiantly struggling to have Dr Muck deposed as head of the Boston symphony orchestra, has been saying for some days that the eminent musician was a German spy and insinuating that it had proof of its assertion. Yesterday, keeping faith with the public, the Journal brought forth the supposedly incriminating evidence. And what is it? Nothing but the fact that in 1915, while in California, Dr Muck was fleeced of $300 by an impostor, who pretended to be collecting money for some paper that was presenting the case of Germany before the American people. The fact was widely published at the time and is well remembered. Instead of proving that Dr Muck has been associated with the German propaganda in this country, it would seem to prove the opposite. For if Dr Muck had been acquainted with the ways of the propaganda he would not have been swindled by a man pretending to be one of its agents.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
REPUBLICAN
m
Springfield, Mass.
dress:
NOV 8 - 1917

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

After Friday's incident in Symphony hall, it looks as though the Boston symphony orchestra would perforce play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts. Maj Higginson announced that Dr Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor, but there would seem to be no reason for accepting the resignation, and Maj Higginson expressed his reluctance to do so. The press of the country is talking about "Dr Muck's refusal to play the national anthem," but Dr Muck never made any such refusal. Maj Higginson apparently decided to yield rather than subject the orchestra to the harm which continuance of agitation might cause. The enthusiasm which greeted Dr Muck's appearance on the stage was a clear demonstration of musical Boston's admiration of its great conductor and desire to retain his services.

rom REPUBLICAN ddress Springfield, Mass.
ate NOV 15 1917

The Providence Journal, valiantly struggling to have Dr Muck deposed as head of the Boston symphony orchestra, has been saying for some days that the eminent musician was a German spy and insinuating that it had proof of its assertion. Yesterday, keeping faith with the public, the Journal brought forth the supposedly incriminating evidence. And what is it? Nothing but the fact that in 1915, while in California, Dr Muck was fleeced of $300 by an impostor, who pretended to be collecting money for some paper that was presenting the case of Germany before the American people. The fact was widely published at the time and is well remembered. Instead of proving that Dr Muck has been associated with the German propaganda in this country, it would seem to prove the opposite. For if Dr Muck had been acquainted with the ways of the propaganda he would not have been swindled by a man pretending to be one of its agents.

As for 'The Star Spangled episode, a similar situation the Thomas orchestra in the close of the Franco-Prus The many German ticket- the Thomas concerts dema the orchestra should play th am Rhein' to celebrate the victory, after its regular progr ended. Theodore Thomas American, first, last and all th and although he was very wil play the German national hym his German friends, he was no ing to humiliate the one Frenc sician in the orchestra, who equally his friend. So he sent player during the intermission said: 'We shall play the "Wach Rhein" to-night after the progra probably for a number of other ings. I know this will be very ful to you, so I give you perm to leave the stage and go home fore the closing number of the gram whenever this is the case.'

"Maj Higginson cannot, perhaps cuse Dr Muck and his German leagues from the orchestra when Star Spangled Banner' is to be pl nor can he ignore the desire of public to hear from time to time national anthem rendered by greatest musical organization. But may safely trust him to do what wise, just and right, not only to country and the public, but to members of his orchestra, whate their nationality, and he alone sho be the judge of when and how of his German musicians shall be quired to play the music which abo all other most deeply incites Ame can hearts to 'carry on' with war against their fatherland."

Providence Journal Stirred Up

In the light of this statement, s of the assertions in the following torial from the Providence Journal appear somewhat irrelevant, but t public may be interested in the Jo nal's reference to its anti-German tivities:—

"After successfully flaunting pub sentiment and outraging audiences various cities, by declining to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' Dr Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence. For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude toward this particular community. Dr Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy-Ed, and Bernstorff. Next!"

A Berlin Precedent

The Lowell Courier-Citizen said: "Insistence that the whole orchestra play the national anthem is directed in most cases only at the German members, as a sort of 'dare-you-to-refuse curse you!' To sandwich this melody into a concert devoted to difficult classical art is as inappropriate as would be a modern bonnet on the head of Minerva. Art is, properly, universal. Even Berlin, with all its insistence upon Deutschland, has not required a Russian orchestra, playing Russian symphonic music to stick 'Die Wacht am Rhein' into its program every time it appeared during the war, as somehow giving the performance a status which it would otherwise have lacked! To be perfectly frank, this pother about making Dr Muck conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' as a condition precedent to his right to give any concert at all strikes us as abominably cheap and nasty."

Another Conductor Talks

Down in New York, when the controversy was at its hight, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York symphony orchestra, made this comment: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at this time, and I confess that while I have always enjoyed hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at this time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feelings regarding the war, it would seem to be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that an assistant conductor could lead in playing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

The Boston Herald recently said in an editorial about Dr Muck: "It is late in the day to dwell upon the surpassing merits of this conductor, whose laurels disturb the sleep of others."

MISS HEMPEL INDIGNANT

m Springfield,
ddress: NOV 1

As the American, public ... lovers and all view it, they can get along a whole lot better ... Karl Muck than without "The ... Spangled Banner." And Karl ... the American dollar constantly ... his eyes, isn't a bit slower ... average Prussian in seeing ...

[illegible] TOWN TOPICS

[illegible] NEW YORK CITY

1917

THE spectacle of Mrs. Jack Gardner turning her back to her flag by walking down from her seat near the stage in Symphony Hall and out at the first Friday matinee when Dr. Muck, coerced by public protest into playing "The Star Spangled Banner," raised his baton to lead it, was not an inspiring sight for those subscribers who still put love of country above love of Higginson and Muck. It was a startling sensation, which almost eclipsed that made by the orchestra's playing of the national song, and the question was everywhere asked, "Why did she do it?" Nobody really knows whether Mrs. Gardner is pro-German or not, but that she is pro-Muck and more has been made strikingly evident for years past. That her feeling for her Bavarian hero, who had been forced by the public into such a position, made it impossible for her to remain to see and hear his humiliation seems to be the only way of solving such a drastic action. Mrs. Jack's further loyalty, if that prompted her action, was evinced by her taking a hurried trip to New York in her feebleness, which is becoming more and more apparent, with Mrs. Muck to attend the Boston Symphony concerts there.

[illegible] CITY

No notes at all are better than false notes, and a thoroughly false note is apparent in the manifest ill will and inefficiency with which Dr. Karl Muck and his Symphony Orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner." To those of us who regard with reverence our national anthem it seems a positive sacrilege to permit it to be given under compulsion, by virtuosi who have publicly professed their contempt for it as inartistic, and who openly proclaim their allegiance to the Kaiser, with whom we are at war, as well as their enmity to the United States. What, under the circumstances, they are doing in this country, it is difficult to understand, and one does not know whether to be more amazed by the coarse and typically Teuton brutality of their insolence, or the extraordinary patience of the American music-lovers in tolerating their appearance upon any concert platform. If they hate us so, why do they ask for our dollars instead of remaining in the assuredly more congenial atmosphere of their precious Fatherland? Their attitude might well serve as inspiration to our cartoonists for a picture representing the typical German itinerant musician, extending his left hand for alms and with the other flinging mud and stones at his generous and over-indulgent American patron. Do not let us have any more playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," either by Dr. Muck and his Symphony of hostile aliens, or by any other of those German bands which have harbored so many spies in their midst. It is nothing less than a contamination of our national hymn.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the U.S.

from EVENING TELEGRAM

address: Philadelphia, Pa.

NOV 13 191[illegible]

Funny Burlesque at Dumont's.

"Dr. Muck's Simple Funny Orchestra" is the name of the new burlesque which was presented yesterday for the first time at Dumont's Minstrels. The threat that the doctor would have to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," whether he wanted to or not, was carried out.

from UNION

address: Springfield, Mass

NOV [illegible] 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT OPPOSED

Grand Jury in Baltimore Fears Demonstration or Riot.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5—Formal protest against the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here next Wednesday night was filed with the police board by the Grand Jury today. This action was taken after the jury had discussed the possibility of trouble because of the refusal of Dr. Muck to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at Providence last week.

Foreman John S. Bridges stated that the Grand Jury felt that Dr. Muck should not be allowed to appear in Baltimore and that the concert should not be held as it feared a patriotic demonstration and possibly a riot might ensue.

Mr. Bridges also said a letter would be sent by the Grand Jury to former-Gov. Warfield expressing the views of the members of that body, which would be received at the mass-meeting of protest Mr. Warfield has organized for tomorrow.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the U.S.

from REPUBLICAN

address Springfield, Mass.

Date NOV 9 - 1917

The Providence Journal, valiantly struggling to have Dr Muck deposed as head of the Boston symphony orchestra, has been saying for some days that the eminent musician was a German spy and insinuating that it had proof of its assertion. Yesterday, keeping faith with the public, the Journal brought forth the supposedly incriminating evidence. And what is it? Nothing but the fact that in 1915, while in California, Dr Muck was fleeced of $300 by an impostor, who pretended to be collecting money for some paper that was presenting the case of Germany before the American people. The fact was widely published at the time and is well remembered. Instead of proving that Dr Muck has been associated with the German propaganda in this country, it would seem to prove the opposite. For if Dr Muck had been acquainted with the ways of the propaganda he would not have been swindled by a man pretending to be one of its agents.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the U.S.

from REPUBLICAN

address Springfield, Mass.

Date NOV 9 - 1917

The Providence Journal, valiantly struggling to have Dr Muck deposed as head of the Boston symphony orchestra, has been saying for some days that the eminent musician was a German spy and insinuating that it had proof of its assertion. Yesterday, keeping faith with the public, the Journal brought forth the supposedly incriminating evidence. And what is it? Nothing but the fact that in 1915, while in California, Dr Muck was fleeced of $300 by an impostor, who pretended to be collecting money for some paper that was presenting the case of Germany before the American people. The fact was widely published at the time and is well remembered. Instead of proving that Dr Muck has been associated with the German propaganda in this country, it would seem to prove the opposite. For if Dr Muck had been acquainted with the ways of the propaganda he would not have been swindled by a man pretending to be one of its agents.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the U.S.

from REPUBLICAN

address Springfield, Mass.

Date NOV 8 - 1917

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

After Friday's incident in Symphony hall, it looks as though the Boston symphony orchestra would perforce play "The Star Spangled Banner" at its concerts. Maj Higginson announced that Dr Muck had tendered his resignation as conductor, but there would seem to be no reason for accepting the resignation, and Maj Higginson expressed his reluctance to do so. The press of the country is talking about "Dr Muck's refusal to play the national anthem," but Dr Muck never made any such refusal. Maj Higginson apparently decided to yield rather than subject the orchestra to the harm which continuance of agitation might cause. The enthusiasm which greeted Dr Muck's appearance on the stage was a clear demonstration of musical Boston's admiration of its great conductor and desire to retain his services.

from REPUBLICAN

address Springfield, Mass.

NOV 15 1917

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

THE SYMPHONY ISSUE

DR MUCK NOT INVOLVED

MAJ HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT

Members of Orchestra Deserve Not Abuse and Suspicion, but Hearty Thanks, He Says

Maj Henry L. Higginson of Boston issued last Sunday a full public statement regarding the controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston symphony orchestra. Maj Higginson said:—

"In these times of great strees and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, October 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some women in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston symphony orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the women was not mentioned to Dr Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some annonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and courteous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered, but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from people unknown to me. The original object and plan of these concerts was the enjoyment and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and [illegible]—often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence women, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone. (Signed)

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

Views of Theodore Thomas's Widow

An interesting contribution to the public controversy which became acute with the dissemination of an erroneous report that Dr Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," is made by Mrs Theodore Thomas, widow of America's most famous native orchestral conductor. In a letter to the Boston Herald Mrs Thomas says:—

"The thoughtless people who are trying to stir up popular enmity against Dr Muck and his German colleagues in the Boston orchestra by violent attacks in the daily press are committing exactly the same crime against art and civilization as that which revolted the world when the Germans bombarded Rheims cathedral in order to 'strafe' the French. They are 'shelling' the one perfect and complete art creation of Boston merely in order to 'strafe' its German leader and his colleagues, and if they persist in their causeless attacks they will surely destroy this noble institution past all redemption.

"As for 'The Star Spangled [illegible] episode, a similar situation occ[illegible] the Thomas orchestra in New [illegible] the close of the Franco-Prussi[illegible] The many German ticket-hol[illegible] the Thomas concerts demande[illegible] the orchestra should play the [illegible] am Rhein' to celebrate the Pr[illegible] victory, after its regular progra[illegible] ended. Theodore Thomas wa[illegible] American, first, last and all the [illegible] and although he was very willin[illegible] play the German national hymn[illegible] his German friends, he was not [illegible] ing to humiliate the one French[illegible] sician in the orchestra, who [illegible] equally his friend. So he sent fo[illegible] player during the intermission [illegible] said: 'We shall play the "Wach[illegible] Rhein" to-night after the program [illegible] probably for a number of other [illegible] ings. I know this will be very p[illegible] ful to you, so I give you permi[illegible] to leave the stage and go home [illegible] fore the closing number of the p[illegible] gram whenever this is the case.'

"Maj Higginson cannot, perhaps, [illegible] cuse Dr Muck and his German [illegible] leagues from the orchestra when [illegible] Star Spangled Banner' is to be play[illegible] nor can he ignore the desire of [illegible] public to hear from time to time [illegible] national anthem rendered by [illegible] greatest musical organization. But [illegible] may safely trust him to do what [illegible] wise, just and right, not only to [illegible] country and the public, but to t[illegible] members of his orchestra, whatev[illegible] their nationality, and he alone sho[illegible] be the judge of when and how oft[illegible] his German musicians shall be r[illegible] quired to play the music which abo[illegible] all other most deeply incites Amer[illegible] can hearts to 'carry on' with t[illegible] war against their fatherland."

Providence Journal Stirred Up

In the light of this statement, som[illegible] of the assertions in the following ed[illegible] torial from the Providence Journal ap[illegible] pear somewhat irrelevant, but th[illegible] public may be interested in the Jour[illegible] nal's reference to its anti-German ac[illegible] tivities:—

"After successfully flaunting publ[illegible] sentiment and outraging audiences [illegible] various cities, by declining to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' Dr Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence. For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude toward this particular community. Dr Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy-Ed, and Bernstorff. Next!"

A Berlin Precedent

The Lowell Courier-Citizen said: "In[illegible] sistence that the whole orchestra play the national anthem is directed in most cases only at the German members, as a sort of 'dare-you-to-refuse curse you!' To sandwich this melody into a concert devoted to difficult classical art is as inappropriate as would be a modern bonnet on the head of Minerva. Art is, properly, universal. Even Berlin, with all its insistence upon Deutschland, has not required a Russian orchestra, playing Russian symphonic music to stick 'Die Wacht am Rhein' into its program every time it appeared during the war, as somehow giving the performance a status which it would otherwise have lacked! To be perfectly frank, this pother about making Dr Muck conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' as a condition precedent to his right to give any concert at all strikes us as abominably cheap and nasty."

Another Conductor Talks

Down in New York, when the controversy was at its hight, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York symphony orchestra, made this comment: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at this time, and I confess that while I have always enjoyed hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at this time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feelings regarding the war, it would seem to be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that an assistant conductor could lead in playing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

The Boston Herald recently said in an editorial about Dr Muck: "It is late in the day to dwell upon the surpassing merits of this conductor, whose laurels disturb the sleep of others."

MISS HEMPEL INDIGNANT

from [illegible]

address: Springfield, M[illegible]

NOV [illegible]

As the American public, music-lovers and all view it, they can get along a whole lot better without Karl Muck than without "The Star-Spangled Banner." And Karl, with the American dollar constantly before his eyes, isn't a bit slower than the average Prussian in seeing the point.

Frankly, We Don't Believe It

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

NOV 11 1917

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

THE SYMPHONY ISSUE

DR MUCK NOT INVOLVED

MAJ HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT

Members of Orchestra Deserve Not Abuse and Suspicion, but Hearty Thanks, He Says

Maj Henry L. Higginson of Boston issued last Sunday a full public statement regarding the controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston symphony orchestra. Maj Higginson said:—

"In these times of great strees and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, October 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some women in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston symphony orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the women was not mentioned to Dr Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some annonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and couretous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered, but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from persons unknown to me. The original object and plan of these concerts was [illegible] and education of our fellow-citizens [illegible] the many men and —often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence women, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone. (Signed)

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

Views of Theodore Thomas's Widow

An interesting contribution to the public controversy which became acute with the dissemination of an erroneous report that Dr Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," is made by Mrs Theodore Thomas, widow of America's most famous native orchestral conductor. In a letter to the Boston Herald Mrs Thomas says:—

"The thoughtless people who are trying to stir up popular enmity against Dr Muck and his German colleagues in the Boston orchestra by violent attacks in the daily press are committing exactly the same crime against art and civilization as that which revolted the world when the Germans bombarded Rheims cathedral in order to 'strafe' the French. They are 'shelling' the one perfect and complete art creation of Boston merely in order to 'strafe' its German leader and his colleagues, and if they persist in their causeless attacks they will surely destroy this noble institution past all redemption.

[illegible] Star Spangled Banner episode; a similar situation occurred in the Thomas orchestra in New York at the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The many German ticket-holders of the Thomas concerts demanded that the orchestra should play the 'Wacht am Rhein' to celebrate the Prussian victory, after its regular program was ended. Theodore Thomas was an American, first, last and all the time, and although he was very willing to play the German national hymn for his German friends, he was not willing to humiliate the one French musician in the orchestra, who was equally his friend. So he sent for the player during the intermission and said: 'We shall play the "Wacht am Rhein" to-night after the program and probably for a number of other evenings. I know this will be very painful to you, so I give you permission to leave the stage and go home before the closing number of the program wherever this is the case.'

"Maj Higginson cannot, perhaps, excuse Dr Muck and his German colleagues from the orchestra when 'The Star Spangled Banner' is to be played, nor can he ignore the desire of the public to hear from time to time our national anthem rendered by our greatest musical organization. But we may safely trust him to do what is wise, just and right, not only to his country and the public, but to the members of his orchestra, whatever their nationality, and he alone should be the judge of when and how often his German musicians shall be required to play the music which above all others most deeply incites American hearts to 'carry on' with the war against their fatherland."

Providence Journal Stirred Up

In the light of this statement, some of the assertions in the following editorial from the Providence Journal appear somewhat irrelevant, but the public may be interested in the Journal's reference to its anti-German activities:—

"After successfully flaunting public sentiment and outraging audiences in various cities, by declining to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' Dr Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence. For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude toward this particular community. Dr Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy-Ed, and Bernstorff. Next!"

A Berlin Precedent

The Lowell Courier-Citizen said: "Insistence that the whole orchestra play the national anthem is directed in most cases only at the German members, as a sort of 'dare-you-to-refuse, curse you!' To sandwich this melody into a concert devoted to difficult classical art is as inappropriate as would be a modern bonnet on the head of Minerva. Art is, properly, universal. Even Berlin, with all its insistence upon Deutschland, has not required a Russian orchestra, playing Russian symphonic music to stick 'Die Wacht am Rhein' into its program every time it appeared during the war, as somehow giving the performance a status which it would otherwise have lacked! To be perfectly frank, this pother about making Dr Muck conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' as a condition precedent to his right to give any concert at all strikes us as abominably cheap and nasty."

Another Conductor Talks

Down in New York, when the controversy was at its hight, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York symphony orchestra, made this comment: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at this time, and I confess that while I have always enjoyed hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at this time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feelings regarding the war, it would seem to be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that an assistant condunctor could lead in playing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

The Boston Herald recently said in an editorial about Dr Muck: "It is late in the day to dwell upon the surpassing merits of this conductor, whose laurels disturb the sleep of others."

---

m SUN

dress: New York City.

te

KARL MUCK.

Remarks by a Reader Who Does Not Like His Demeanor.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The tone of genial bonhomie and careless kindliness of your editorial article "Karl Muck" is characteristic of that "sporting" attitude which the public is striving to display, and to display with such poor taste. Have we no sensibilities, have we no pride, that we permit this German, musical genius though he be, to sneer at us and insult us, treat us as though we were beneath contempt, as he did at last Saturday's concert? And for this favor on his part we fawn upon him and applaud.

We send our youth abroad to give their all for us, while we at home in comfort support and cheer this creature who mocks and insults. We need no statement of his to confirm it; his actions speak where his words are hidden.

I have subscribed for over six years to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but neither my patriotism nor my self-respect would permit me to continue.

JEANNE H. JACOBY.

NEW YORK, November 17.

---

om SUN

dress: New York City.

te NOV 17 19

GIETZEN TO WEAR KHAKI.

Was First Violinist in Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Alfred Gietzen, first violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was appointed to-day an army field clerk and will report for duty next week. Major Henry S. Higginson, speaking for the orchestra, said he was glad to lend Gietzen to the United States if the country needs him.

Gietzen's pay as field clerk will be $1,200 a year. He is a Belgian and probably will be used as an interpreter.

---

rom TIMES

ddress: New York City

ate NOV 18

NO AID TO GILLY.

Noncombatant Artist Abroad Was Not Treated Like Those Here.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If Dr. Muck thinks "art knows no frontier" will he explain why his country's ally interns a French noncombatant opera singer, Dinh Gilly, who desires to come to America?

A LOYAL ARTIST.

New York, Nov. 7, 1917.

---

n STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

e NOV 18 1917

Frl. Frieda Hempel hat in der ersten Woche der neuerwachten Saison im Metropolitan im „Liebestrank" und in der „Traviata" gesungen und wird in der kommenden Woche am Mittwoch als Marta und am Samstag abend in Brooklyn in der „Academy of Music" als Susanna gehört werden. Im Metropolitan werden die Proben für die daselbst seit 14 Jahren nicht mehr gegebene Donizetti'sche Oper „Marie, die Tochter des Regiments", eifrig abgehalten. Die Titelpartie war in Deutschland als eine der glänzendsten Darbietungen Frieda Hempel's bekannt. Am kommenden Dinstag singt Frl. Hempel den Sopranpart in „Beethoven's Neunter Symphonie" in Boston im Rahmen des dortigen Symphonie-Orchesters unter Leitung von Dr. Carl Muck.

* * *

n WORLD

ress: New York City

NOV 16 191

NEW YORK, NOV. 17.

Three Varieties.

(From the Boston Traveler.)

I'm very fond of Doctor Muck
And wish for him all kinds of luck.
The rabble, hissing Doctor Muck,
Deserve a dark and damning look.
Their public spirit is a fluke
Who fulminate 'gainst Doctor Muck;
For he has scaled the heights of fame,
Though I cannot pronounce his name.

---

m STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

e NOV 1 1917

Mucks Bild in Chicago zerfetzt.

Wird in „Orchestra Hall" zerrissen am Boden gefunden.

(International News Service.)

Chicago, Ill., 10. Nov. Wo bisher an der Wand in der „Orchestra Hall" die Photographie des Dirigenten Karl Muck vom Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester zu sehen war, befindet sich nun ein leerer Raum. Mucks Bild wurde am Boden in Fetzen gefunden, nachdem mehrere Mitglieder von John Phillip Sousa's Marine-Kapelle die „Orchestra Hall" besucht hatten.

Deutsche Kunst und Künstler geächtet.

(Associated Press.)

Clarksburg, W. Va., 10. Nov. Der „Marcato Music Club", eine der führenden Frauen-Organisationen des Staates, die mit der „West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs" affiliiert ist, hat gestern bei einem Bankett beschlossen, deutsche Künstler und deutsche Kompositionen in Bann zu erklären. Engagements mit deutschen Künstlern und solchen, welche mit den Verbündeten der Mittelmächte sympathisieren, sind rückgängig gemacht worden.

From ARMY & NAVY Journal

Address: New York City.

Date NOV 10 1917

The recent agitation in Providence and Boston over the question as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor should lead that orchestra in playing The Star Spangled Banner recalls a tale concerning a similar incident in New Orleans, during the consulship of General Butler, told by Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, U.S.N., in "My Fifty Years in the Navy." It appears that one night in the Varieties Theater in that city the band played the Confederate tune The Bonny Blue Flag, whereupon some one rose and asked for The Star Spangled Banner. "There was such a riot that the performance had to stop," Admiral Clark continues. "Finally the manager came out on the stage, stated that the money paid for admission that night would be refunded, and assured his audience that no Yankee air would ever be played in the Varieties Theater. His announcement was followed the next day by an order from Butler, who was then military governor: 'The orchestra of the Varieties Theater will henceforth open with The Star Spangled Banner, close with Hail Columbia, and Yankee Doodle must be played at least once during the evening.'"

---

an EAGLE

ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date

WOULD BAN GERMAN SONG

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

Now that the operatic atmosphere has been purified by the banning of German opera from the Metropolitan Opera House and that we have gotten rid of Dr Muck, who has an appropriate nomenclature, the loyal American public should combine its efforts for the immediate suppression of German song and music from the concert halls of this country, as many of them are incubators of pro-Germanism, therefore nests of treason. I was about to say that we should make the Germans feel their shame, but they have none. What is to be thought of Herr Kreisler, banned from various cities, like Philadelphia, Pittsburg, etc., attempting to brazenly thrust himself upon New York? Every American citizen should be subordinate to the sublime doctrines of patriotism and do his utmost for the welfare of his country in order to insure its future freedom.

J. GERALD DE POLO.

From ARMY & NAVY Journal

Address: New York City. NOV 10 1917

Date

law, Mr. and [illegible]

Among those in the audience at the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 6 at the National Theater, Washington, were Mrs. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. Crozier, wife of Brig. Gen. William Crozier, U.S.A., and Major Paul J. Horton, U.S.A.

---

n EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y. NOV 18 191

NO REFUND, SAY DIRECTORS

In a letter to The Eagle Miss Jessie L. Deming of 403 Washington avenue has complained that the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences refused to refund her ticket money when she stayed away from the recital of Dr. Muck as a protest against his leadership.

"I wrote five days before the concert," says Miss Deming, "asking for the refund on my subscription, giving ample time to resell the tickets had they so desired.

"This reply was received only after a personal protest had been added to the written one, and three days after the first concert had been given."

In their reply to Miss Deming the directors said:

"We regret to say that no subscriptions are refunded by the Symphony managements on tickets purchased for these concerts. This regulation is based on the fact that your holding of seats has prevented others from purchasing them."

...REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

NOV 11 1917

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

THE SYMPHONY ISSUE

DR MUCK NOT INVOLVED

MAJ HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT

Members of Orchestra Deserve Not Abuse and Suspicion, but Hearty Thanks, He Says

Maj Henry L. Higginson of Boston issued last Sunday a full public statement regarding the controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston symphony orchestra. Maj Higginson said:—

"In these times of great strees and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, October 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some women in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston symphony orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the women was not mentioned to Dr Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some annonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and couretous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered, but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from persons unknown to me. The original object and plan of these concerts was [illegible] and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and —often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so .I ignored the tardy request of the Providence women, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone. (Signed)

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

Views of Theodore Thomas's Widow

An interesting contribution to the public controversy which became acute with the dissemination of an erroneous report that Dr Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," is made by Mrs Theodore Thomas, widow of America's most famous native orchestral conductor. In a letter to the Boston Herald Mrs Thomas says:—

"The thoughtless people who are trying to stir up popular enmity against Dr Muck and his German colleagues in the Boston orchestra by violent attacks in the daily press are committing exactly the same crime against art and civilization as that which revolted the world when the Germans bombarded Rheims cathedral in order to 'strafe' the French. They are 'shelling' the one perfect and complete art creation of Boston merely in order to 'strafe' its German leader and his colleagues, and if they persist in their causeless attacks they will surely destroy this noble institution past all redemption.

[illegible] episode, a similar situation occurred in the Thomas orchestra in New York at the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The many German ticket-holders of the Thomas concerts demanded that the orchestra should play the 'Wacht am Rhein' to celebrate the Prussian victory, after its regular program was ended. Theodore Thomas was an American, first, last and all the time, and although he was very willing to play the German national hymn for his German friends, he was not willing to humiliate the one French musician in the orchestra, who was equally his friend. So he sent for the player during the intermission and said: 'We shall play the "Wacht am Rhein" to-night after the program and probably for a number of other evenings. I know this will be very painful to you, so I give you permission to leave the stage and go home before the closing number of the program whenever this is the case.'

"Maj Higginson cannot, perhaps, excuse Dr Muck and his German colleagues from the orchestra when 'The Star Spangled Banner' is to be played, nor can he ignore the desire of the public to hear from time to time our national anthem rendered by our greatest musical organization. But we may safely trust him to do what is wise, just and right, not only to his country and the public, but to the members of his orchestra, whatever their nationality, and he alone should be the judge of when and how often his German musicians shall be required to play the music which above all others most deeply incites American hearts to 'carry on' with the war against their fatherland."

Providence Journal Stirred Up

In the light of this statement, some of the assertions in the following editorial from the Providence Journal appear somewhat irrelevant, but the public may be interested in the Journal's reference to its anti-German activities:—

"After successfully flaunting public sentiment and outraging audiences in various cities, by declining to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' Dr Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence. For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude toward this particular community. Dr Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy-Ed, and Bernstorff. Next!"

A Berlin Precedent

The Lowell Courier-Citizen said: "Insistence that the whole orchestra play the national anthem is directed in most cases only at the German members, as a sort of 'dare-you-to-refuse-curse you!' To sandwich this melody into a concert devoted to difficult classical art is as inappropriate as would be a modern bonnet on the head of Minerva. Art is, properly, universal. Even Berlin, with all its insistence upon Deutschland, has not required a Russian orchestra, playing Russian symphonic music to stick 'Die Wacht am Rhein' into its program every time it appeared during the war, as somehow giving the performance a status which it would otherwise have lacked! To be perfectly frank, this pother about making Dr Muck conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' as a condition precedent to his right to give any concert at all strikes us as abominably cheap and nasty."

Another Conductor Talks

Down in New York, when the controversy was at its hight, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York symphony orchestra, made this comment: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at this time, and I confess that while I have always enjoyed hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at this time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feelings regarding the war, it would seem to be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that an assistant conductor could lead in playing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

The Boston Herald recently said in an editorial about Dr Muck: "It is late in the day to dwell upon the surpassing merits of this conductor, whose laurels disturb the sleep of others."

---

m SUN

dress: New York City.

te

KARL MUCK.

Remarks by a Reader Who Does Not Like His Demeanor.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The tone of genial bonhomie and careless kindliness of your editorial article "Karl Muck" is characteristic of that "sporting" attitude which the public is striving to display, and to display with such poor taste. Have we no sensibilities, have we no pride, that we permit this German, musical genius though he be, to sneer at us and insult us, treat us as though we were beneath contempt, as he did at last Saturday's concert? And for this favor on his part we fawn upon him and applaud.

We send our youth abroad to give their all for us, while we at home in comfort support and cheer this creature who mocks and insults. We need no statement of his to confirm it; his actions speak where his words are hidden.

I have subscribed for over six years to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but neither my patriotism nor my self-respect would permit me to continue.

JEANNE H. JACOBY.

NEW YORK, November 17.

om SUN

dress: New York City.

te NOV 17 19

GIETZEN TO WEAR KHAKI.

Was First Violinist in Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Alfred Gietzen, first violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was appointed to-day an army field clerk and will report for duty next week. Major Henry S. Higginson, speaking for the orchestra, said he was glad to lend Gietzen to the United States if the country needs him.

Gietzen's pay as field clerk will be $1,200 a year. He is a Belgian and probably will be used as an interpreter.

---

rom TIMES

ddress: New York City

ate

NO AID TO GILLY.

Noncombatant Artist Abroad Was Not Treated Like Those Here.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If Dr. Muck thinks "art knows no frontier" will he explain why his country's ally interns a French noncombatant opera singer, Dinh Gilly, who desires to come to America?

A LOYAL ARTIST.

New York, Nov. 7, 1917.

---

n STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

NOV 18 1917

e

* * *

Frl. Frieda Hempel hat in der ersten Woche der neuerwachten Saison im Metropolitan im „Liebestrank" und in der „Traviata" gesungen und wird in der kommenden Woche am Mittwoch als Marta und am Samstag abend in Brooklyn in der „Academy of Music" als Susanna gehört werden. Im Metropolitan werden die Proben für die daselbst seit 14 Jahren nicht mehr gegebene Donizetti'sche Oper „Marie, die Tochter des Regiments", eifrig abgehalten. Die Titelpartie war in Deutschland als eine der glänzendsten Darbietungen Frieda Hempel's bekannt. Am kommenden Dinstag singt Frl. Hempel den Sopranpart in „Beethoven's Neunter Symphonie" in Boston im Rahmen des dortigen Symphonie-Orchesters unter Leitung von Dr. Carl Muck.

* * *

n WORLD

ress: New York City

NOV 16 191

Three Varieties.

(From the Boston Traveler.)

I'm very fond of Doctor Muck
And wish for him all kinds of luck.
The rabble, hissing Doctor Muck,
Deserve a dark and damning look.
Their public spirit is a fluke
Who fulminate 'gainst Doctor Muck;
For he has scaled the heights of fame,
Though I cannot pronounce his name.

---

m STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

NOV 11 1917

e

Mucks Bild in Chicago zerfetzt.

Wird in „Orchestra Hall" zerrissen am Boden gefunden.

(International News Service.)

Chicago, Ill., 10. Nov. Wo bisher an der Wand in der „Orchestra Hall" die Photographie des Dirigenten Karl Muck vom Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester zu sehen war, befindet sich nun ein leerer Raum. Mucks Bild wurde am Boden in Fetzen gefunden, nachdem mehrere Mitglieder von John Phillip Sousa's Marine-Kapelle die „Orchestra Hall" besucht hatten.

Deutsche Kunst und Künstler geächtet.

(Associated Press.)

Clarksburg, W. Va., 10. Nov. Der „Marcato Music Club", eine der führenden Frauen-Organisationen des Staates, die mit der „West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs" affiliiert ist, hat gestern bei einem Bankett beschlossen, deutsche Künstler und deutsche Kompositionen in Bann zu erklären. Engagements mit deutschen Künstlern und solchen, welche mit den Verbündeten der Mittelmächte sympathisieren, sind rückgängig gemacht worden.

From ARMY & NAVY Journal

Address: New York City.

Date NOV 10 1917

The recent agitation in Providence and Boston over the question as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor should lead that orchestra in playing The Star Spangled Banner recalls a tale concerning a similar incident in New Orleans, during the consulship of General Butler, told by Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, U.S.N., in "My Fifty Years in the Navy." It appears that one night in the Varieties Theater in that city the band played the Confederate tune The Bonny Blue Flag, whereupon some one rose and asked for The Star Spangled Banner. "There was such a riot that the performance had to stop," Admiral Clark continues. "Finally the manager came out on the stage, stated that the money paid for admission that night would be refunded, and assured his audience that no Yankee air would ever be played in the Varieties Theater. His announcement was followed the next day by an order from Butler, who was then military governor: 'The orchestra of the Varieties Theater will henceforth open with The Star Spangled Banner, close with Hail Columbia, and Yankee Doodle must be played at least once during the evening.'"

---

an EAGLE

dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date

WOULD BAN GERMAN SONG

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

Now that the operatic atmosphere has been purified by the banning of German opera from the Metropolitan Opera House and that we have gotten rid of Dr Muck, who has an appropriate nomenclature, the loyal American public should combine its efforts for the immediate suppression of German song and music from the concert halls of this country, as many of them are incubators of pro-Germanism, therefore nests of treason. I was about to say that we should make the Germans feel their shame, but they have none. What is to be thought of Herr Kreisler, banned from various cities, like Philadelphia, Pittsburg, etc., attempting to brazenly thrust himself upon New York? Every American citizen should be subordinate to the sublime doctrines of patriotism and do his utmost for the welfare of his country in order to insure its future freedom.

J. GERALD DE POLO.

From ARMY & NAVY Journal

Address: New York City.

Date

[illegible] law, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible]

Among those in the audience at the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 6 at the National Theater, Washington, were Mrs. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. Crozier, wife of Brig. Gen. William Crozier, U.S.A., and Major Paul J. Horton, U.S.A.

---

n EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

NO REFUND, SAY DIRECTORS

In a letter to The Eagle Miss Jessie L. Deming of 403 Washington avenue has complained that the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences refused to refund her ticket money when she stayed away from the recital of Dr. Muck as a protest against his leadership.

"I wrote five days before the concert," says Miss Deming, "asking for the refund on my subscription, giving ample time to resell the tickets had they so desired.

"This reply was received only after a personal protest had been added to the written one, and three days after the first concert had been given."

In their reply to Miss Deming the directors said:

"We regret to say that no subscriptions are refunded by the Symphony managements on tickets purchased for these concerts. This regulation is based on the fact that your holding of seats has prevented others from purchasing them."

...ing Bureau in the World
...EPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.
s:
NOV 11 1917

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

THE SYMPHONY ISSUE

DR MUCK NOT INVOLVED

MAJ HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT

Members of Orchestra Deserve Not Abuse and Suspicion, but Hearty Thanks, He Says

Maj Henry L. Higginson of Boston issued last Sunday a full public statement regarding the controversy in connection with the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston symphony orchestra. Maj Higginson said:—

"In these times of great strees and woe, it seems in doubtful taste to bring forward my small matters, and yet I venture to do so.

"This letter is written in gratitude to a kind and courteous public of many cities, and also in defense of men who have striven hard to please this public, working always under the intention and rules laid down by me 36 years ago.

"On Monday last, October 29, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, there came to me from some women in Providence unknown to me, and not subscribers to our concerts, a request that 'The Star Spangled Banner' be played by the Boston symphony orchestra at its concert in Providence that night. Owing to a paragraph in a Providence newspaper, I stopped the sale of the tickets at once, and at 5 o'clock went to that city, for it seemed that trouble might be brewing, and, if so, it was seemly for me to meet it in person. The request of the women was not mentioned to Dr Muck and the orchestra, and the concert was, as usual, quiet and well received. Only after the return of the orchestra to Boston did Dr Muck hear of the request. Therefore, if any stones are to be thrown, they should be aimed at my head.

"Since Monday a flood of letters has poured in—some annonymous, some abusive, and very many most friendly and couretous. For the latter I am grateful. It would seem fair that the truth should be sought, and the record of the concerts be considered.

"For the past years the audiences have been content to leave in my hands the conduct of our orchestra, and have filled the houses here and elsewhere. If a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had come to me in pleasant terms from subscribers, it would have been pleasantly considered, but does anyone like to be ordered by a newspaper to 'stand and deliver'?

"Note this point: The first time that Dr Muck and the orchestra were asked to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' they played it; and, still further, the request had never been refused. I ignored the request coming to me at the last moment from [illegible] unknown to me. The original object and plan of these concerts was [illegible] and education of our fellow-citizens. To the many men and —often strangers to me—who had written or spoken in sympathy with this plan, I offer hearty thanks.

"On one point I may insist: The orchestra, under Dr Muck, has given to the public from the Atlantic to the Pacific great comfort and happiness through many years; and this band of many nationalities has worked well and loyally under most trying circumstances for the good of us all. Each one of them deserves not abuse or suspicion but hearty thanks, and I ask it for them—thanks not in words, but in deeds and in trust.

"Once more, let it be distinctly understood that Dr Muck and the orchestra played 'The Star Spangled Banner' as soon as they were asked to do so. I ignored the tardy request of the Providence women, and if any mistake has been made, it is mine alone. (Signed)

"HENRY L. HIGGINSON."

Views of Theodore Thomas's Widow

An interesting contribution to the public controversy which became acute with the dissemination of an erroneous report that Dr Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," is made by Mrs Theodore Thomas, widow of America's most famous native orchestral conductor. In a letter to the Boston Herald Mrs Thomas says:—

"The thoughtless people who are trying to stir up popular enmity against Dr Muck and his German colleagues in the Boston orchestra by violent attacks in the daily press are committing exactly the same crime against art and civilization as that which revolted the world when the Germans bombarded Rheims cathedral in order to 'strafe' the French. They are 'shelling' the one perfect and complete art creation of Boston merely in order to 'strafe' its German leader and his colleagues, and if they persist in their causeless attacks they will surely destroy this noble institution past all redemption.

"As for 'The Star Spangled Banner' episode, a similar situation occurred in the Thomas orchestra in New York at the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The many German ticket-holders of the Thomas concerts demanded that the orchestra should play the 'Wacht am Rhein' to celebrate the Prussian victory, after its regular program was ended. Theodore Thomas was an American, first, last and all the time, and although he was very willing to play the German national hymn for his German friends, he was not willing to humiliate the one French musician in the orchestra, who was equally his friend. So he sent for the player during the intermission and said: 'We shall play the "Wacht am Rhein" to-night after the program and probably for a number of other evenings. I know this will be very painful to you, so I give you permission to leave the stage and go home before the closing number of the program whenever this is the case.'

"Maj Higginson cannot, perhaps, excuse Dr Muck and his German colleagues from the orchestra when 'The Star Spangled Banner' is to be played, nor can he ignore the desire of the public to hear from time to time our national anthem rendered by our greatest musical organization. But we may safely trust him to do what is wise, just and right, not only to his country and the public, but to the members of his orchestra, whatever their nationality, and he alone should be the judge of when and how often his German musicians shall be required to play the music which above all others most deeply incites American hearts to 'carry on' with the war against their fatherland."

Providence Journal Stirred Up

In the light of this statement, some of the assertions in the following editorial from the Providence Journal appear somewhat irrelevant, but the public may be interested in the Journal's reference to its anti-German activities:—

"After successfully flaunting public sentiment and outraging audiences in various cities, by declining to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' Dr Muck came to Providence with full confidence that his arrogant Prussianism would score another triumph of the same character in the one place where he most desired to emphasize his insolence. For the past three years he has delighted to indulge in petty insults before Providence audiences. Modesty forbids our analyzing the reason for his studied attitude toward this particular community. Dr Muck's confidence was not disturbed though he had, for guidance, the vision of the broken diplomatic necks of Von Papen, Boy-Ed, and Bernstorff. Next!"

A Berlin Precedent

The Lowell Courier-Citizen said: "Insistence that the whole orchestra play the national anthem is directed in most cases only at the German members, as a sort of 'dare-you-to-refuse, curse you!' To sandwich this melody into a concert devoted to difficult classical art is as inappropriate as would be a modern bonnet on the head of Minerva. Art is, properly, universal. Even Berlin, with all its insistence upon Deutschland, has not required a Russian orchestra, playing Russian symphonic music to stick 'Die Wacht am Rhein' into its program every time it appeared during the war, as somehow giving the performance a status which it would otherwise have lacked! To be perfectly frank, this pother about making Dr Muck conduct the 'Star Spangled Banner' as a condition precedent to his right to give any concert at all strikes us as abominably cheap and nasty."

Another Conductor Talks

Down in New York, when the controversy was at its hight, Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York symphony orchestra, made this comment: "Dr Muck naturally does not care to conduct the national hymn at this time, and I confess that while I have always enjoyed hearing him conduct a symphony of Beethoven or Brahms, I should not at this time enjoy hearing him conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner,' as, considering his citizenship and feelings regarding the war, it would seem to be an act of hypocrisy. It seems to me that an assistant conductor could lead in playing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

The Boston Herald recently said in an editorial about Dr Muck: "It is late in the day to dwell upon the surpassing merits of this conductor, whose laurels disturb the sleep of others."

---

m SUN

ress: New York City.

te

KARL MUCK.

Remarks by a Reader Who Does Not Like His Demeanor.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The tone of genial bonhomie and careless kindliness of your editorial article "Karl Muck" is characteristic of that "sporting" attitude which the public is striving to display, and to display with such poor taste. Have we no sensibilities, have we no pride, that we permit this German, musical genius though he be, to sneer at us and insult us, treat us as though we were beneath contempt, as he did at last Saturday's concert? And for this favor on his part we fawn upon him and applaud.

We send our youth abroad to give their all for us, while we at home in comfort support and cheer this creature who mocks and insults. We need no statement of his to confirm it; his actions speak where his words are hidden.

I have subscribed for over six years to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but neither my patriotism nor my self-respect would permit me to continue.

JEANNE H. JACOBY.

NEW YORK, November 17.

---

om SUN

ddress: New York City.

te NOV 17 19

GIETZEN TO WEAR KHAKI.

Was First Violinist in Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Alfred Gietzen, first violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was appointed to-day an army field clerk and will report for duty next week. Major Henry S. Higginson, speaking for the orchestra, said he was glad to lend Gietzen to the United States if the country needs him.

Gietzen's pay as field clerk will be $1,200 a year. He is a Belgian and probably will be used as an interpreter.

---

rom TIMES

ddress: New York City

ate

NO AID TO GILLY.

Noncombatant Artist Abroad Was Not Treated Like Those Here.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If Dr. Muck thinks "art knows no frontier" will he explain why his country's ally interns a French noncombatant opera singer, Dinh Gilly, who desires to come to America?

A LOYAL ARTIST.

New York, Nov. 7, 1917.

---

n STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

e NOV 18 1917

*

Frl. Frieda Hempel hat in der ersten Woche der neuerwachten Saison im Metropolitan im „Liebestrank" und in der „Traviata" gesungen und wird in der kommenden Woche am Mittwoch als Maria und am Samstag abend in Brooklyn in der „Academy of Music" als Susanna gehört werden. Im Metropolitan werden die Proben für die daselbst seit 14 Jahren nicht mehr gegebene Donizetti'sche Oper „Marie, die Tochter des Regiments", eifrig abgehalten. Die Titelpartie war in Deutschland als eine der glänzendsten Darbietungen Frieda Hempel's bekannt. Am kommenden Dinstag singt Frl. Hempel den Sopranpart in „Beethoven's Neunter Symphonie" in Boston im Rahmen des dortigen Symphonie-Orchesters unter Leitung von Dr. Carl Muck.

* *

n WORLD

ress: New York City

NOV 1 [illegible] 91

New York, Nov. [illegible]

Three Varieties.

(From the Boston Traveler.)

I'm very fond of Doctor Muck
And wish for him all kinds of luck.
The rabble, hissing Doctor Muck,
Deserve a dark and damning look.
Their public spirit is a fluke
Who fulminate 'gainst Doctor Muck;
For he has scaled the heights of fame,
Though I cannot pronounce his name.

---

m STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

e NOV 11 1917

Mucks Bild in Chicago zerfetzt.

Wird in „Orchestra Hall" zerrissen am Boden gefunden.

(International News Service.)

Chicago, Ill., 10. Nov. Wo bisher an der Wand in der „Orchestra Hall" die Photographie des Dirigenten Karl Muck vom Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester zu sehen war, befindet sich nun ein leerer Raum. Mucks Bild wurde am Boden in Fetzen gefunden, nachdem mehrere Mitglieder von John Phillip Sousa's Marine-Kapelle die „Orchestra Hall" besucht hatten.

Deutsche Kunst und Künstler geächtet.

(Associated Press.)

Clarksburg, W. Va., 10. Nov. Der „Marcato Music Club", eine der führenden Frauen-Organisationen des Staates, die mit der „West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs" affiliiert ist, hat gestern bei einem Bankett beschlossen, deutsche Künstler und deutsche Kompositionen in Bann zu erklären. Engagements mit deutschen Künstlern und solchen, welche mit den Verbündeten der Mittelmächte sympathisieren, sind rückgängig gemacht worden.

From ARMY & NAVY Journal

Address: New York City.

Date NOV 10 1917

The recent agitation in Providence and Boston over the question as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor should lead that orchestra in playing The Star Spangled Banner recalls a tale concerning a similar incident in New Orleans, during the consulship of General Butler, told by Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, U.S.N., in "My Fifty Years in the Navy." It appears that one night in the Varieties Theater in that city the band played the Confederate tune The Bonny Blue Flag, whereupon some one rose and asked for The Star Spangled Banner. "There was such a riot that the performance had to stop," Admiral Clark continues. "Finally the manager came out on the stage, stated that the money paid for admission that night would be refunded, and assured his audience that no Yankee air would ever be played in the Varieties Theater. His announcement was followed the next day by an order from Butler, who was then military governor: 'The orchestra of the Varieties Theater will henceforth open with The Star Spangled Banner, close with Hail Columbia, and Yankee Doodle must be played at least once during the evening.'"

---

n EAGLE

ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date

WOULD BAN GERMAN SONG

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

Now that the operatic atmosphere has been purified by the banning of German opera from the Metropolitan Opera House and that we have gotten rid of Dr Muck, who has an appropriate nomenclature, the loyal American public should combine its efforts for the immediate suppression of German song and music from the concert halls of this country, as many of them are incubators of pro-Germanism, therefore nests of treason. I was about to say that we should make the Germans feel their shame, but they have none. What is to be thought of Herr Kreisler, banned from various cities, like Philadelphia, Pittsburg, etc., attempting to brazenly thrust himself upon New York? Every American citizen should be subordinate to the sublime doctrines of patriotism and do his utmost for the welfare of his country in order to insure its future freedom.

J. GERALD DE POLO.

From ARMY & NAVY Journal

Address: New York City.

Date

[illegible]

Among those in the audience at the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 6 at the National Theater, Washington, were Mrs. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. Crozier, wife of Brig. Gen. William Crozier, U.S.A., and Major Paul [illegible] Horton, U.S.A.

---

n EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

NO REFUND, SAY DIRECTORS

In a letter to The Eagle Miss Jessie L. Deming of 403 Washington avenue has complained that the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences refused to refund her ticket money when she stayed away from the recital of Dr. Muck as a protest against his leadership.

"I wrote five days before the concert," says Miss Deming, "asking for the refund on my subscription, giving ample time to resell the tickets had they so desired.

"This reply was received only after a personal protest had been added to the written one, and three days after the first concert had been given."

In their reply to Miss Deming the directors said:

"We regret to say that no subscriptions are refunded by the Symphony managements on tickets purchased for these concerts. This regulation is based on the fact that your holding of seats has prevented others from purchasing them."

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.
NOV 18 1917

THE ANTHEM AN EMBLEM

A Visible Symbol of National Unity.

Dr. Karl Muck, the eminent German subject who directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra, refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his concerts, on the ground that it would not fit in artistically with the rest of the programme. He subsequently relented, and played it, in spite of temperamental qualms. The personal issue may thus be regarded as settled. But the musical question remains.

The uncritical public naturally begins to wonder whether the national anthem we all love is really so crude as Dr. Muck insinuated, and so dreadfully out of place at the end of a classical music programme.

Perhaps David Stanley Smith, professor of music at Yale University, is as good an authority in this matter as Dr. Muck, and his judgment has the additional merit of being free from suspicion of alien prejudice. He says:

"'The Star-Spangled Banner' has been officially designated the symbol of our national unity, appealing to the ear as the flag appeals to the eye. The objection to its performance at a serious concert on the ground of the impossibility of its fitting into the scheme of the programme of orchestral music is not unlike a refusal to display the Stars and Stripes on our house because the striking colors 'kill' the color arrangements of the flowers in the garden."

There isn't any occasion, he says, for analyzing the literary and musical value of the anthem. Whatever profesional critics may say on that point is of no importance. "The emblem is there for us to accept in its real significance, transcending individual opinion." Our people so accept it. To all good Americans it is a noble and inspiring emblem of national unity.

As such an emblem, says Professor Smith, it is more in place in a serious concert than in a cheap, popular concert. "The national anthem is never presented with more appropriateness than before audiences that have gathered for serious reflection."

That ought to settle the matter.

STAATSZEITUNG
New York City.
NOV 11 1917

Theater und Musik.

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert.

Die Aufnahme Dr. Mucks und seines Orchesters am gestrigen Nachmittag in Carnegie Hall glich der des ersten Abends. Ein langandauernder, immer wieder anschwellender Applaus begrüßte den Dirigenten, als er erschien, ein Beifall, der sich nach der Abspielung der Nationalhymne erneuerte. In demselben Zeichen der herzlichen Zufriedenheit der Zuhörer, welche natürlich wieder jedes verfügbare Plätzchen im Saale besetzt hielten, stand die ganze Veranlassung, welche als pièce de resistance Beethoven's Fünfte Symphonie, bekanntlich eine der größten Darbietungen des Dirigenten, enthielt. Mit angehaltenem Atem lauschte das Publikum dem leidenschaftlichen, meisterhaft ausgelegten ersten Satz; man erlabte sich an dem Sonnenglanz des Andantes, dieses himmlischen Trostgesanges, man fühlte die beklemmende Luft des dritten Satzes und jubelte innerlich mit, als das strahlende C Dur-Thema des Schlußsatzes einsetzte und ein Jubilieren, ein Freudengesang im Orchester begann, der sich bis zum höchsten Freiheits- und Freuden-Hymnus steigerte. Es war eine große Leistung, die vom Publikum willig anerkannt wurde.

Damit aber war das Herrliche, das wir miterleben sollten, nicht erschöpft. Ich muß namentlich die Schlußdarbietung rühmen, Enesco's lebhafte und farbenkräftige „Rumänische Rhapsodie" in A Dur, welche in eminenter Weise eine Heimatskunst ist, denn sie legt uns ein Volksseele mit viel Natürlichkeit bloß. Das Orchester prangte in dieser Nummer unter der meisterhaften Leitung seines Führers in einer durchgeistigten Virtuosität, die ihresgleichen suchte. Vorangegangen waren das melancholisch so beredte „Finlandia" von Sibelius, der für eine andere Volksseele um Gehör wirbt, und Rachmaninoff's „Toteninsel" nach dem Boecklinschen Gemälde. In beiden Stücken boten Meister und Orchester herrliche Leistungen.

H.

From Address: Commerce & Finance
Date

AN EDITOR'S QUANDARY

As our readers know, the editorial staff of this paper includes Richard Spillane and F. R. Serri. They are both good fellows, straight thinkers and patriotic Americans. This week each of them turned in a paragraph with regard to an incident that has attracted no little attention in this part of the world.

Dr. Muck, who is or was a Prussian, is the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Major Henry L. Higginson is the chief patron. At a concert the other day the audience demanded "The Star Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck declined to have his orchestra play it upon the ground that it would be inartistic. Major Higginson whose Americanism no one can doubt, has said that Dr. Muck was right. Mr. Serri agrees with him. Mr. Spillane thinks he was wrong. The editor-in-chief, who has no artistic sense and only knows that "The Star Spangled Banner" is very difficult to sing, is in doubt about the merits of the question. He has therefore decided to print the two paragraphs in parallel columns that our readers may take their choice and that we may at the same time enlist the sympathy of the kind critics who sometimes take us to task for expressing opinions with which they do not agree. It is astonishing how well-meaning and intelligent men can disagree in regard to the simplest matters. This is a case in point.—T. H. P.

Karl Muck wouldn't play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a Boston Symphony Concert because it would mar the artistic ensemble. If Herr Muck refused to play "The Watch on the Rhine" in Germany we can imagine what would happen to him. But he wouldn't refuse for he is the Kaiser's Honorary Prussian Director of Music.

It may be Mr. Muck's artistic soul that rebelled against "The Star-Spangled Banner" but he is by no means supersensitive about accepting American dollars.

It would be well if some American musical devotees prated less about art and thought more of patriotism. Yale University invited Mme. Gadski to sing at the Yale festivities recently, disregarding the violence of her expressions of contempt for America and also disregarding the fact that her husband is a German spy who operated in this country.

Fritz Kreisler is a great violinist but, if report is true, the money he has been gathering in America has been going back to Austria, a country with which our Allies are at war and with which we should declare war.

Art may be international but artists persist in being national. Herr Muck's conduct was an insult to America. The action of the Yale people in having Mme. Gadski appear at their celebration was improper. We can make a certain amount of allowance for the artistic temperament but not for disrespect shown to the national anthem or offense to the whole people.

Let Us Imitate England. While Englishmen have not always been able to control themselves perfectly in this war, and have been known to demonstrate their true love for England by smashing German-made plates, they have not allowed such temporary aberrations to get the better of them. In matters of music, at least, they have shown their good sense and have permitted and presumably enjoyed German operas.

Likewise, it is reported, that at Vienna, and Berlin, Shakespeare is played as usual. And from Frankfort comes the news that during the first week of October not less than two Italian operas—"Aida" and "Il Trovatore"—were given at the Opera House.

As against such events which bring back, even if for a moment, a glimpse of international good-feeling and solidarity and hope of a better world, we have the notice that in New York, at the Metropolitan, German operas will not be presented this winter. From every standpoint that order should be reconsidered and rescinded.

Establis

om SUN
dress: New York City.
te NOV 16 1917

THE NATION'S HYMN.

Other Anthems Are Equally Difficult to Sing—or to Conduct Properly.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: In the interview with Nahan Franko which you have published I find Mr. Franko quoted as saying:

"The compass of 'The Star Spangled Banner' is an octave and five-eighths, while the compass of other national airs is within an octave, or does not exceed that limit."

Listen, brother, this from the backwoods of Connecticut:

The "Marseillaise," one octave and one-eighth.

"Die Wacht am Rhein," one octave and five-eighths, with a high F.

Austrian anthem, one octave and four-eighths, with a high F.

Russian anthem, an octave, with high F.

Italian anthem, one octave and one-eighth.

"Rule Britannia," one octave. Impossible!

"God Save the King" and "America," within the octave.

Dear Mr. Franko, you are right when you say that the words are not adapted to the music and that "it is difficult for most persons to reach the notes of 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" but is that the sole property of our national anthem?

Have you ever heard a most hearty rendition of "Die Wacht am Rhein" or "Deutschland über Alles" sung impromptu by a group from the German Singers Union in any gesangverein on a club night? Those soul stirring high Es and Fs!

Or would you go to some church on a Sunday and listen to the singing of "Rise, Crowned With Light!" (tune, Russian National Anthem). High F occurs three times. "Most persons" keep quiet and let the choir do the singing.

And again. "It seems to me, however, that the national anthem conducted by a man whose heart was not in it could have little significance. It would have been better, since 'The Star Spangled Banner' was not a part of a symphonic programme, that the conductor should have given his baton to some member of the orchestra who would not have been influenced by any race question, preferably to a native born American or an American citizen."

The true basis for merit as an artist must be the ability to interpret with authority all branches of that particular art of which he is the technical master. In Dr. Muck's case, if conditions in this country call for the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" as a part of his programme, he ceases to be the artist he is credited with being if he does not study the anthem in all of its aspects with special reference to its traditions. And that study, if thoughtfully done from an artistic standpoint, must make him stand before his men giving his whole being to the correct interpretation of the national anthem. Otherwise he is not an artist, merely a Bavarian music master.

There is known to me a man who, as conductor of a German-American singing society, was called upon to direct the singing of "Die Wacht am Rhein" at a concert three years ago. This person is of Scotch-Irish extraction with no pro-German sympathies, merely holding his position in a professional capacity. But with a German audience at his back and 100 German singers under his baton, the artist came to the fore and his individuality was lost in a spirited and patriotic interpretation.

What is the difference, laying aside musical values, between the interpretation by an artist of compositions by Beethoven, Wagner, Tschaikowsky and "The Star Spangled Banner"? Be it the pathos of Beethoven, the wizardry of Wagner, the grief of Tschaikowsky or the inspiring patriotism of our national anthem, the hand holding the baton must be guided in spirit according to the demands of the composition, whether the conductor be Bavarian or American.

R. M. CARUTH.

HARTFORD, Conn., November 14.

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.
NOV 16 1917

Zur Richtigstellung.

Die Philosophie des unbewußten Größenwahnes.

Dr. Karl Muck erfreut — nein, erfreut ist sicherlich nicht das passende Wort, sagen wir lieber: ist Gegenstand ... Dr. Karl Muck ist seit einigen Wochen Gegenstand der besonderen Aufmerksamkeit der amerikanischen Presse. Wie und warum er es geworden ist, setzen wir als bekannt voraus; das hat auch mit dem nachstehenden nichts zu tun.

Die amerikanische Presse brachte und bringt allerlei Mitteilungen über Dr. Karl Muck und in diesen Mitteilungen stimmt manches nicht. Die „Times" schreibt beispielsweise, Muck sei im Jahre 1957 geboren, was natürlich ein Druckfehler ist; sie schreibt ferner, er habe in Darmstadt, Bayern, das Licht der Welt erblickt — was nur zu Hälfte stimmt und zur andern Hälfte ein Beweis für das mangelhafte geographische Wissen des Timesredakteurs ist: Darmstadt stimmt, aber Darmstadt liegt vorläufig noch im Großherzogtum Hessen und wir haben noch nie gehört, daß sich die imperialistischen Bestrebungen Bayerns bis nach Darmstadt erstrecken.

Die „Sun" geht — wie man auf deutsch-amerikanisch sagt — der Times noch eins besser; sie behauptet, Muck sei in Würzburg, Bayern, geboren. Das stimmt auch wieder nur zur Hälfte: Würzburg liegt in Bayern, aber Muck ist nach wie vor und trotz alledem in Darmstadt geboren.

Damit sich die amerikanischen Kollegen über den Dr. Karl Muck im Reinen sind, wenigstens soweit seine Geburt, sein Lebenslauf und seine Tätigkeit in betracht kommen, geben wir nachstehend seine Biographie und verbürgen uns für deren Richtigkeit:

Karl Muck, Musiker, geboren am 22. Oktober 1859 in Darmstadt, Großherzogtum Hessen; Sohn eines Ministerialrats (Councellor to the Ministry); studierte in Heidelberg (Baden) und Leipzig (Sachsen), wo er auch das Konservatorium besuchte und 1880 zum Doctor philosophiae promovierte. Wirkte als Theaterkapellmeister in Zürich (Schweiz), Salzburg (Herzogtum Salzburg), Brünn (Mähren), Graz (Steiermark), wurde 1886 erster Kapellmeister am Deutschen Landestheater in Prag (Böhmen), leitete 1889 die von Angelo Neumann arrangierten Nibelungenaufführungen in Petersburg und Moskau (Rußland) und ist seit 1892 Kapellmeister der königlichen Oper in Berlin (Preußen). Er dirigierte auch mehrfach die Symphoniekonzerte der königlichen Kapelle, war aber in höherem Maße auswärts als in seiner Berliner Stellung tätig; so dirigierte er 1899 die deutsche Oper in London (England), 1903 bis 1906 die Konzerte des Hoforchesters in Wien (Oesterreich), seit 1906 die Symphoniekonzerte in Boston (Massachusetts, U. S. A.), auch in Paris (Frankreich), Madrid (Spanien), Kopenhagen (Dänemark), Brüssel (Belgien), und leitete auch die Parsifalaufführungen in Bayreuth (Bayern).

Die amerikanischen Kollegen mögen sich diese Biographie aufheben; wir verbürgen uns für die Richtigkeit der Daten und der geographischen Angaben. Mit Ausnahme von Boston, Massachusetts, U. S. A., liegen alle die erwähnten Städte in Europa.

EAGLE
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

SAYS MUCK TURNED BACK TO AUDIENCE

E. D. Venable Left Concert and Tried to Give Up Season Tickets.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

As subscription members of the Boston Symphony Concerts we thank you for the truthful reply you made to Mr. Higginson in tonight's paper. We attended the Symphony concert last Friday evening. We heard hisses and saw many vacant seats. To be sure Dr. Muck played "The Star-Spangled Banner," but he insulted his audience by keeping his back turned to it while the audience applauded him for playing the anthem. Our German neighbors felt their idol had been insulted because he had been requested to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The remarks were so unpleasant we were obliged to leave during the intermission. We called at the box office and it was closed.

Saturday morning we called at the terasurer's office and asked them to take back our season tickets and refund us the money. The directors' secretary refused to do it, and she asked us, "Why did you attend the concert Friday?" I said as American citizens we thought we had a right to attend a concert in Brooklyn without being insulted, especially if that concert was given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences; then, too, we had paid $1.80 apiece for our tickets. When we became subscription members we did not know Dr. Muck's attitude toward playing "The Star-Spangled Banner." We had been out of the city for three months.

All the American subscription members to the Boston Symphony concerts I have met desire the withdrawal of Dr. Muck as the conductor of the orchestra. We do not wish an alien enemy, especially one like Dr. Muck. Mr. Editor, please help us.

E. D. VENABLE.

409 Washington avenue, Brooklyn, November 14, 1917.

The attention of Dr. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, was drawn to the letter and he said:

"No Symphony Society concert ticket money is ever refunded. This is a rule which has been in effect for years. The Brooklyn Institute has no discretion in the matter whatever. The Symphony Society directors have a rule that no money for tickets can be refunded after the purchaser leaves the box office, and money cannot be refunded unless the Symphony Society directs that it shall be returned."

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

NOV 18 1917

THE ANTHEM AN EMBLEM

A Visible Symbol of National Unity.

Dr. Karl Muck, the eminent German subject who directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra, refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his concerts, on the ground that it would not fit in artistically with the rest of the programme. He subsequently relented, and played it, in spite of temperamental qualms. The personal issue may thus be regarded as settled. But the musical question remains.

The uncritical public naturally begins to wonder whether the national anthem we all love is really so crude as Dr. Muck insinuated, and so dreadfully out of place at the end of a classical music programme.

Perhaps David Stanley Smith, professor of music at Yale University, is as good an authority in this matter as Dr. Muck, and his judgment has the additional merit of being free from suspicion of alien prejudice. He says:

"'The Star-Spangled Banner' has been officially designated the symbol of our national unity, appealing to the ear as the flag appeals to the eye. The objection to its performance at a serious concert on the ground of the impossibility of its fitting into the scheme of the programme of orchestral music is not unlike a refusal to display the Stars and Stripes on our house because the striking colors 'kill' the color arrangements of the flowers in the garden."

There isn't any occasion, he says, for analyzing the literary and musical value of the anthem. Whatever profesional critics may say on that point is of no importance. "The emblem is there for us to accept in its real significance, transcending individual opinion." Our people so accept it. To all good Americans it is a noble and inspiring emblem of national unity.

As such an emblem, says Professor Smith, it is more in place in a serious concert than in a cheap, popular concert. "The national anthem is never presented with more appropriateness than before audiences that have gathered for serious reflection."

That ought to settle the matter.

STAATSZEITUNG
New York City.
NOV 11 1917

Theater und Musik.

Bostoner Symphonie-Konzert.

Die Aufnahme Dr. Mucks und seines Orchesters am gestrigen Nachmittag in Carnegie Hall glich der des ersten Abends. Ein langandauernder, immer wieder anschwellender Applaus begrüßte den Dirigenten, als er erschien, ein Beifall, der sich nach der Abspielung der Nationalhymne erneuerte. In demselben Zeichen der herzlichen Zufriedenheit der Zuhörer, welche natürlich wieder jedes verfügbare Plätzchen im Saale besetzt hielten, stand die ganze Veranlassung, welche als pièce de resistance Beethoven's Fünfte Symphonie, bekanntlich eine der größten Darbietungen des Dirigenten, enthielt. Mit angehaltenem Atem lauschte das Publikum dem leidenschaftlichen, meisterhaft ausgelegten ersten Satz; man erlabte sich an dem Sonnenglanz des Andantes, dieses himmlischen Trostgesanges, man fühlte die beklemmende Luft des dritten Satzes und jubelte innerlich mit, als das strahlende C Dur-Thema des Schlußsatzes einsetzte und ein Jubilieren, ein Freudengesang im Orchester begann, der sich bis zum höchsten Freiheits- und Freuden-Hymnus steigerte. Es war eine große Leistung, die vom Publikum willig anerkannt wurde.

Damit aber war das Herrliche, das wir miterleben sollten, nicht erschöpft. Ich muß namentlich die Schlußdarbietung rühmen, Enesco's lebhafte und farbenkräftige „Rumänische Rhapsodie" in A Dur, welche in eminenter Weise eine Heimatskunst ist, denn sie legt uns ein Volksseele mit viel Natürlichkeit bloß. Das Orchester prangte in dieser Nummer unter der meisterhaften Leitung seines Führers in einer durchgeistigten Virtuosität, die ihresgleichen suchte. Vorangegangen waren das melancholisch so beredte „Finlandia" von Sibelius, der für eine andere Volksseele um Gehör wirbt, und Rachmaninoff's „Toteninsel" nach dem Boecklinschen Gemälde. In beiden Stücken boten Meister und Orchester herrliche Leistungen.

H.

From
Address: Commerce & Finance New York City.
Date

AN EDITOR'S QUANDARY

As our readers know, the editorial staff of this paper includes Richard Spillane and F. R. Serri. They are both good fellows, straight thinkers and patriotic Americans. This week each of them turned in a paragraph with regard to an incident that has attracted no little attention in this part of the world.

Dr. Muck, who is or was a Prussian, is the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Major Henry L. Higginson is the chief patron. At a concert the other day the audience demanded "The Star Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck declined to have his orchestra play it upon the ground that it would be inartistic. Major Higginson whose Americanism no one can doubt, has said that Dr. Muck was right. Mr. Serri agrees with him. Mr. Spillane thinks he was wrong. The editor-in-chief, who has no artistic sense and only knows that "The Star Spangled Banner" is very difficult to sing, is in doubt about the merits of the question. He has therefore decided to print the two paragraphs in parallel columns that our readers may take their choice and that we may at the same time enlist the sympathy of the kind critics who sometimes take us to task for expressing opinions with which they do not agree. It is astonishing how well-meaning and intelligent men can disagree in regard to the simplest matters. This is a case in point.—T. H. P.

Karl Muck wouldn't play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a Boston Symphony Concert because it would mar the artistic ensemble. If Herr Muck refused to play "The Watch on the Rhine" in Germany we can imagine what would happen to him. But he wouldn't refuse for he is the Kaiser's Honorary Prussian Director of Music.

It may be Mr. Muck's artistic soul that rebelled against "The Star-Spangled Banner" but he is by no means supersensitive about accepting American dollars

It would be well if some American musical devotees prated less about art and thought more of patriotism. Yale University invited Mme. Gadski to sing at the Yale festivities recently, disregarding the violence of her expressions of contempt for America and also disregarding the fact that her husband is a German spy who operated in this country.

Fritz Kreisler is a great violinist but, if report is true, the money he has been gathering in America has been going back to Austria, a country with which our Allies are at war and with which we should declare war.

Art may be international but artists persist in being national. Herr Muck's conduct was an insult to America. The action of the Yale people in having Mme. Gadski appear at their celebration was improper. We can make a certain amount of allowance for the artistic temperament but not for disrespect shown to the national anthem or offense to the whole people.

Let Us Imitate England. While Englishmen have not always been able to control themselves perfectly in this war, and have been known to demonstrate their true love for England by smashing German-made plates, they have not allowed such temporary aberrations to get the better of them. In matters of music, at least, they have shown their good sense and have permitted and presumably enjoyed German operas.

Likewise, it is reported, that at Vienna, and Berlin, Shakespeare is played as usual. And from Frankfort comes the news that during the first week of October not less than two Italian operas—"Aida" and "Il Trovatore"—were given at the Opera House.

As against such events which bring back, even if for a moment, a glimpse of international good-feeling and solidarity and hope of a better world, we have the notice that in New York, at the Metropolitan, German operas will not be presented this winter. From every standpoint that order should be reconsidered and rescinded.

Estabis

om SUN
dress: New York City.
te NOV 16 1917

THE NATION'S HYMN.

Other Anthems Are Equally Difficult to Sing—or to Conduct Properly.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: In the interview with Nahan Franko which you have published I find Mr. Franko quoted as saying:

"The compass of 'The Star Spangled Banner' is an octave and five-eighths, while the compass of other national airs is within an octave, or does not exceed that limit."

Listen, brother, this from the backwoods of Connecticut:

The "Marseillaise," one octave and one-eighth.

"Die Wacht am Rhein," one octave and five-eighths, with a high F.

Austrian anthem, one octave and four-eighths, with a high F.

Russian anthem, an octave, with high F.

Italian anthem, one octave and one-eighth.

"Rule Britannia," one octave. Impossible!

"God Save the King" and "America," within the octave.

Dear Mr. Franko, you are right when you say that the words are not adapted to the music and that "it is difficult for most persons to reach the notes of 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" but is that the sole property of our national anthem?

Have you ever heard a most hearty rendition of "Die Wacht am Rhein" or "Deutschland über Alles" sung impromptu by a group from the German Singers Union in any gesangverein on a club night? Those soul stirring high Es and Fs!

Or would you go to some church on a Sunday and listen to the singing of "Rise, Crowned With Light!" (tune, Russian National Anthem). High F occurs three times. "Most persons" keep quiet and let the choir do the singing.

And again. "It seems to me, however, that the national anthem conducted by a man whose heart was not in it could have little significance. It would have been better, since 'The Star Spangled Banner' was not a part of a symphonic programme, that the conductor should have given his baton to some member of the orchestra who would not have been influenced by any race question, preferably to a native born American or an American citizen."

The true basis for merit as an artist must be the ability to interpret with authority all branches of that particular art of which he is the technical master. In Dr. Muck's case, if conditions in this country call for the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" as a part of his programme, he ceases to be the artist he is credited with being if he does not study the anthem in all of its aspects with special reference to its traditions. And that study, if thoughtfully done from an artistic standpoint, must make him stand before his men giving his whole being to the correct interpretation of the national anthem. Otherwise he is not an artist, merely a Bavarian music master.

There is known to me a man who, as conductor of a German American singing society, was called upon to direct the singing of "Die Wacht am Rhein" at a concert three years ago. This person is of Scotch-Irish extraction with no pro-German sympathies, merely holding his position in a professional capacity. But with a German audience at his back and 100 German singers under his baton, the artist came to the fore and his individuality was lost in a spirited and patriotic interpretation.

What is the difference, laying aside musical values, between the interpretation by an artist of compositions by Beethoven, Wagner, Tschaikowsky and "The Star Spangled Banner"? Be it the pathos of Beethoven, the wizardry of Wagner, the grief of Tschaikowsky or the inspiring patriotism of our national anthem, the hand holding the baton must be guided in spirit according to the demands of the composition, whether the conductor be Bavarian or American.

B. M. CARUTH.

HARTFORD, Conn., November 14.

ess: STAATSZEITUNG New York City.
NOV 16 1917

Zur Richtigstellung.

Die Philosophie des unbewußten Größenwahnes.

Dr. Karl Muck erfreut — nein, erfreut ist sicherlich nicht das passende Wort, sagen wir lieber: ist Gegenstand . . . Dr. Karl Muck ist seit einigen Wochen Gegenstand der besonderen Aufmerksamkeit der amerikanischen Presse. Wie und warum er es geworden ist, setzen wir als bekannt voraus; das hat auch mit dem nachstehenden nichts zu tun.

Die amerikanische Presse brachte und bringt allerlei Mitteilungen über Dr. Karl Muck und in diesen Mitteilungen stimmt manches nicht. Die „Times" schreibt beispielsweise, Muck sei im Jahre 1957 geboren, was natürlich ein Druckfehler ist; sie schreibt ferner, er habe in Darmstadt, Bayern, das Licht der Welt erblickt — was nur zu Hälfte stimmt und zur andern Hälfte ein Beweis für das mangelhafte geographische Wissen des Timesredakteurs ist: Darmstadt stimmt, aber Darmstadt liegt vorläufig noch im Großherzogtum Hessen und wir haben noch nie gehört, daß sich die imperialistischen Bestrebungen Bayerns bis nach Darmstadt erstrecken.

Die „Sun" geht — wie man auf deutsch-amerikanisch sagt — der Times noch eins besser; sie behauptet, Muck sei in Würzburg, Bayern, geboren. Das stimmt auch wieder nur zur Hälfte: Würzburg liegt in Bayern, aber Muck ist nach wie vor und trotz alledem in Darmstadt geboren.

Damit sich die amerikanischen Kollegen über den Dr. Karl Muck im Reinen sind, wenigstens soweit seine Geburt, sein Lebenslauf und seine Tätigkeit in betracht kommen, geben wir nachstehend seine Biographie und verbürgen uns für deren Richtigkeit:

Karl Muck, Musiker, geboren am 22. Oktober 1859 in Darmstadt, Großherzogtum Hessen; Sohn eines Ministerialrats (Councellor to the Ministry); studierte in Heidelberg (Baden) und Leipzig (Sachsen), wo er auch das Konservatorium besuchte und 1880 zum Doctor philosophiae promovierte. Wirkte als Theaterkapellmeister in Zürich (Schweiz), Salzburg (Herzogtum Salzburg), Brünn (Mähren), Graz (Steiermark), wurde 1886 erster Kapellmeister am Deutschen Landestheater in Prag (Böhmen), leitete 1889 die von Angelo Neumann arrangierten Nibelungenaufführungen in Petersburg und Moskau (Rußland) und ist seit 1892 Kapellmeister der königlichen Oper in Berlin (Preußen). Er dirigierte auch mehrfach die Symphoniekonzerte der königlichen Kapelle, war aber in höherem Maße auswärts als in seiner Berliner Stellung tätig; so dirigierte er 1899 die deutsche Oper in London (England), 1903 bis 1906 die Konzerte des Hoforchesters in Wien (Oesterreich), seit 1906 die Symphoniekonzerte in Boston (Massachusetts, U. S. A.), auch in Paris (Frankreich), Madrid (Spanien), Kopenhagen (Dänemark), Brüssel (Belgien), und leitete auch die Parsifalaufführungen in Bayreuth (Bayern).

Die amerikanischen Kollegen mögen sich diese Biographie aufheben; wir verbürgen uns für die Richtigkeit der Daten und der geographischen Angaben. Mit Ausnahme von Boston, Massachusetts, U. S. A., liegen alle die erwähnten Städte in Europa.

EAGLE
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

SAYS MUCK TURNED BACK TO AUDIENCE

E. D. Venable Left Concert and Tried to Give Up Season Tickets.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

As subscription members of the Boston Symphony Concerts we thank you for the truthful reply you made to Mr. Higginson in tonight's paper. We attended the Symphony concert last Friday evening. We heard hisses and saw many vacant seats. To be sure Dr. Muck played "The Star-Spangled Banner," but he insulted his audience by keeping his back turned to it while the audience applauded him for playing the anthem. Our German neighbors felt their idol had been insulted because he had been requested to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The remarks were so unpleasant we were obliged to leave during the intermission. We called at the box office and it was closed.

Saturday morning we called at the terasurer's office and asked them to take back our season tickets and refund us the money. The directors' secretary refused to do it, and she asked us, "Why did you attend the concert Friday?" I said as American citizens we thought we had a right to attend a concert in Brooklyn without being insulted, especially if that concert was given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences; then, too, we had paid $1.80 apiece for our tickets. When we became subscription members we did not know Dr. Muck's attitude toward playing "The Star-Spangled Banner." We had been out of the city for three months.

All the American subscription members to the Boston Symphony concerts I have met desire the withdrawal of Dr. Muck as the conductor of the orchestra. We do not wish an alien enemy, especially one like Dr. Muck. Mr. Editor, please help us.

E. D. VENABLE.

409 Washington avenue, Brooklyn, November 14, 1917.

The attention of Dr. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, was drawn to the letter and he said:

"No Symphony Society concert ticket money is ever refunded. This is a rule which has been in effect for years. The Brooklyn Institute has no discretion in the matter whatever. The Symphony Society directors have a rule that no money for tickets can be refunded after the purchaser leaves the box office, and money cannot be refunded unless the Symphony Society directs that it shall be returned."

om EAGLE
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAJOR HIGGINSON PROTESTS

He Doesn't Like The Eagle's Account of the Muck Concert.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

Your comment on the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is before me and is not pleasant reading. I hardly believe that Brooklyn people would go to a concert in order to hiss, and certainly I heard no hisses. The house was almost full so far as I could see.

I had the pleaure of talking with Mr. Atkins and several other gentlemen before the concert and told them that "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played at the beginning of the program everywhere except at the first occasion in Boston. They were pleased, as they had wished the same thing.

You published my letter, which ought to be an answer to your words, but evidently you do not think that the keeping of a contract is of value, namely, the keeping of Dr. Muck at the head of the orchestra, as was stated to the public when the tickets were sold. As a matter of fact the objection to keeping Dr. Muck has come almost entirely from the newspapers and from certain people who do not go to the concerts. I have a very large number of letters from people unknown to me who have been to the concerts for years and who beg that they shall go on as before, and under the direction of Dr. Muck. The request is very strong that his resignation shall not be accepted. Perhaps the easiest course is that the orchestra should not play again in Brooklyn.

One thing you do not note. Last summer this orchestra at the popular concerts played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "America" every evening for sixty evenings and so far as I know before it was played at any other public entertainments as a rule. If you are to treat the subject at all, tell the whole truth, and remember once more that it has never been refused to any audience whatsoever. The first request, coming from people unknown to me and not subscribers, was ignored by me. If you object to that make the most of it.

The kindness and courtesy of the managers of the Brooklyn Academy to me were welcome and perfect.

H. L. HIGGINSON.

Boston, November 13.

[The real criticism of the appearance of Dr. Muck in Brooklyn was by the subscribers who stayed away from the seats they had paid for because they did not wish to hear or see Dr. Muck. The newspapers had nothing whatever to do with that action. The Eagle said that there were "subdued hisses" and that Dr. Muck cut them off by starting "The Star-Spangled Banner," which was the exact fact. As to the contract with Dr. Muck, the conductor seems to have waived that when he offered his resignation. All that The Eagle has suggested at any time is the acceptance of that resignation in order that the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be kept free from the entirely natural feeling of a part of its audiences toward the exaltation of an enemy alien.—Ed. Eagle.]

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 9-191

With Reference to Dr. Muck

(From the New Haven Register)

It makes little difference who it is the Providence Journal goes after, whether Boy-Ed, Von Papen, Dr. Muck or Major Higginson. Dr. Muck gave explanations which did not explain, and the Journal said so. Then Major Higginson took up the cudgels for his director, and the Journal turned its attention to him for a brief period. Now the Major says that he'll not have the Boston Symphony Orchestra play in Providence again. The Journal concludes its comment on the Major's part in the proceedings:

"It is worth while remarking that for the first time in the history of the orchestra, the Star Spangled Banner flew over Symphony Hall in Boston last Friday.

"Major Higginson should stop explaining. The farther in he goes the deeper he gets. The people know the facts."

Concerning Mr. Malone

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I. s:
NOV 1 1 1917

Major Higginson's Latest.

In another labored statement, Major Higginson, founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declares that "the first request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me." The fact is that the request was sent not to Major Higginson, but to the manager of the orchestra, Mr. Ellis. Again, as the Journal has pointed out, and, as Major Higginson very well knows, the Providence petitioners represented hundreds of ticket holders.

Major Higginson further says: "The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' until the concert was over." We wish to register our very serious doubt as to the accuracy of this extraordinary declaration.

The national anthem, Major Higginson further informs us, "had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June." Very true, but Dr. Muck did not conduct at any of those concerts—a fact which Major Higginson conveniently ignores.

The agitated patron of the orchestra says: "I never threatened to disband the orchestra." If that is the case every newspaper man who heard Major Higginson's declaration in Boston is a liar, and we don't believe that is so.

The fact is that Dr. Muck is a propagandist of a highly dangerous type and the American people cannot afford to stand for his continued presence on the platform at Boston Symphony concerts. If Major Higginson should finally decide to disband the orchestra, it would be a cheap price to pay for the riddance of this "Königlich Prüsserischer Generalmusikdirektor."

Major Higginson should stop explaining. The American people know the facts and the more he tries to argue them away the worse face he puts on the whole sorry business.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
From BULLETIN
Address: PROVIDENCE, R.
Date

WASHINGTON CENSURED FOR RECEIVING MUCK

National Committee of Patriotic Societies Makes Statement.

Washington, Nov. 12.—The capital patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are charged with lack of patriotism in giving their support to Dr. Karl Muck in a statement issued yesterday by the National Committee of Patriotic Societies.

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities?" reads the statement. "Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the capital city.

"The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received at this time. Washington people who support his concerts say that music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The national committee maintains that the capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question, and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
NOV 10 1917

Looks as if, to make a really satisfactory job of it, having compelled Dr. Muck and his orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," it would next be necessary to compel them to play it well.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 7 1917

WAR COUNCIL WOULD BAR DR. MUCK HERE

Action of Providence Chamber of Commerce is Upheld.

OTHER CITIES JOIN PROTEST

Members Also Hear Reports of Retail Merchants' Division Chairman, Relative to Curtailing Use of Current for Electric Signs.—J. R. MacColl Volunteer Expediter.

Action of Chairman Henry A. Carpenter of the war council of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, in urging the Board of Police Commissioners to refuse permission for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or any other band or orchestra, to give concerts in Providence under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, was unanimously approved and indorsed at a meeting of the war council yesterday afternoon in the Chamber of Commerce rooms.

Secretary Clarence A. Cotton said he had communicated such action to the secretaries of commercial organizations in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other cities where the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to perform, and that hearty letters of appreciation had been received.

The council also received reports from Chairman Swanson of the Retail Merchants' Division and Fuel Administrator Holmes, relative to the action of the retail merchants' committee in recommending that all illuminated signs and outside lighting be turned off at the close of business hours. A special committee of five members has been appointed by the retailers to plan the details of this form of conservation. Ways and means for the sweeping and cleaning of mercantile establishments during the daylight, instead of by artificial light, will also be considered.

In response to a request from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, James R. MacColl has been appointed "Local Volunteer Expediter" for Providence. Mr. MacColl will have charge of the expedition of the production of supplies and will act in co-operation with the War Department.

Information as to local manufacturing conditions will be furnished and efforts to expedite the manufacture of war supplies, together with their transportation to wherever needed, will be made. Proper credentials, authorizing a full investigation of local conditions, will be supplied.

Chairman Richard B. Comstock of the committee on matters of law, reported the appointment of the following members of his committee: Thomas F. I. McDonnell, Robert B. Dresser, William W. Moss, John E. Canning and Michael J. Lynch.

Chairman Theodore Francis Green of the committee on citizenship announced the appointment of the following associates: Knight C. Richmond, Charles F. Towne, Patrick P. Curran, Luther D. Burlingame, Robert T. Burbank, Daniel H. Morrisey, Paul C. Nicholson and Dr. Ralph E. Hayward.

Journal
ress: Providence, R. I.
NOV 2019

WHERE BEN BUTLER RULED

(From the Army and Navy Journal)

The recent agitation in Providence and Boston over the question as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor should lead that orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" recalls a tale concerning a similar incident in New Orleans, during the consulship of General Butler, told by Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, U. S. N., in "My Fifty Years in the Navy." It appears that one night in the Varieties Theatre in that city the band played the Confederate tune "The Bonny Blue Flag," whereupon some one rose and asked for "The Star Spangled Banner." "There was such a riot that the performance had to stop," Admiral Clark continues. "Finally the manager came out on the stage, stated that the money paid for admission that night would be refunded, and assured his audience that no Yankee air would ever be played in the Varieties Theatre. His announcement was followed the next day by an order from Butler, who was then military Governor: 'The orchestra of the Varieties Theatre will henceforth open with "The Star Spangled Banner," close with "Hail Columbia," and "Yankee Doodle" must be played at least once during the evening.'"

TRIBUNE
s: Providence, R. I.
NOV 1 3 1917

TRAITORS ARE VIGOROUSLY DENOUNCED

Former Gov. Higgins Made Strong Appeal for Red Triangle Fund.

Former Governor James H. Higgins, helping to launch the Red Triangle drive for $100,000 at the Pawtucket Young Men's Christian Association building yesterday, denounced traitors, cultured and uncultured, and declared that "if we do not stand together and become big enough to forget the differences of former times we will soon feel the iron heel of oppression which will try to crush us."

He said: "The voice of dissent in a contest such as this war is simply the voice of treason. I have no more respect for the cultured traitors than for the ignorant traitors. The hand of scorn should be levelled at them all, from the crazy and ignorant I. W. W.'s to the more cultured Maj. Higginson and Dr. Muck.

"If Maj. Higginson thinks more of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Carl Muck than he does of 'The Star Spangled Banner' he has picked out a bad time and a bad country to try it in. Any man who thinks more of art, in these times, than he does of patriotism had better keep quiet.

"I don't care what the reason was for getting in the war, whether we are justified or not. We are in the war now and all questions as to why have gone by the board. We stand for no kickers. The time for all discussion ended when the United States entered the war for freedom.

"It is time to put aside all party differences of peace time. Any man who cannot put aside racial, political and religious differences in a time like this does not deserve to be an American citizen. While I was born a Roman Catholic I am in back of this Y. M. C. A. Red Triangle movement as strenuously, and as persistently as any Methodist or Baptist in the land.

"Irrespective of religion, creed and race this movement should receive the support of all classes. We are going to raise this money so as not to allow German military autocracy to throttle the freedom of the whole world. Such a move as this will do much to end the war. It will make more contented soldiers, better fighters, stalwart in Americanism. It will make the boys feel while they are fighting that we, in this country, are in back of them, giving them moral and financial support."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 1 1 1917

Change the Leader and Save the Orchestra

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:

Although any suggestions to the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts may be resented, I venture to make one, that is, to have for a change a French or an Italian conductor. Such an arrangement ought in equity, to say the least, be tolerable to the Germans in the company, and it might be the means of preserving to us the Symphony concerts, which, if lost, would jeopardize the musical interests of the community.

JULES JORDAN.

Providence, Nov. 8.

m EAGLE
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAJOR HIGGINSON PROTESTS

He Doesn't Like The Eagle's Account of the Muck Concert.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

Your comment on the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is before me and is not pleasant reading. I hardly believe that Brooklyn people would go to a concert in order to hiss, and certainly I heard no hisses. The house was almost full so far as I could see.

I had the pleaure of talking with Mr. Atkins and several other gentlemen before the concert and told them that "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played at the beginning of the program everywhere except at the first occasion in Boston. They were pleased, as they had wished the same thing.

You published my letter, which ought to be an answer to your words, but evidently you do not think that the keeping of a contract is of value, namely, the keeping of Dr. Muck at the head of the orchestra, as was stated to the public when the tickets were sold. As a matter of fact the objection to keeping Dr. Muck has come almost entirely from the newspapers and from certain people who do not go to the concerts. I have a very large number of letters from people unknown to me who have been to the concerts for years and who beg that they shall go on as before, and under the direction of Dr. Muck. The request is very strong that his resignation shall not be accepted. Perhaps the easiest course is that the orchestra should not play again in Brooklyn.

One thing you do not note. Last summer this orchestra at the popular concerts played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "America" every evening for sixty evenings and so far as I know before it was played at any other public entertainments as a rule. If you are to treat the subject at all, tell the whole truth, and remember once more that it has never been refused to any audience whatsoever. The first request, coming from people unknown to me and not subscribers, was ignored by me. If you object to that make the most of it.

The kindness and courtesy of the managers of the Brooklyn Academy to me were welcome and perfect.

H. L. HIGGINSON.

Boston, November 13.

[The real criticism of the appearance of Dr. Muck in Brooklyn was by the subscribers who stayed away from the seats they had paid for because they did not wish to hear or see Dr. Muck. The newspapers had nothing whatever to do with that action. The Eagle said that there were "subdued hisses" and that Dr. Muck cut them off by starting "The Star-Spangled Banner," which was the exact fact. As to the contract with Dr. Muck, the conductor seems to have waived that when he offered his resignation. All that The Eagle has suggested at any time is the acceptance of that resignation in order that the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be kept free from the entirely natural feeling of a part of its audiences toward the exaltation of an enemy alien.—Ed. Eagle.]

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 9-191

With Reference to Dr. Muck

(From the New Haven Register)

It makes little difference who it is the Providence Journal goes after, whether Boy-Ed, Von Papen, Dr. Muck or Major Higginson. Dr. Muck gave explanations which did not explain, and the Journal said so. Then Major Higginson took up the cudgels for his director, and the Journal turned its attention to him for a brief period. Now the Major says that he'll not have the Boston Symphony Orchestra play in Providence again. The Journal concludes its comment on the Major's part in the proceedings:

"It is worth while remarking that for the first time in the history of the orchestra, the Star Spangled Banner flew over Symphony Hall in Boston last Friday.

"Major Higginson should stop explaining. The farther in he goes the deeper he gets. The people know the facts."

Concerning Mr. Malone

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I. s:
NOV 11 1917

Major Higginson's Latest.

In another labored statement, Major Higginson, founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declares that "the first request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me." The fact is that the request was sent not to Major Higginson, but to the manager of the orchestra, Mr. Ellis. Again, as the Journal has pointed out, and, as Major Higginson very well knows, the Providence petitioners represented hundreds of ticket holders.

Major Higginson further says: "The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star-Spangled Banner' until the concert was over." We wish to register our very serious doubt as to the accuracy of this extraordinary declaration.

The national anthem, Major Higginson further informs us, "had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June." Very true, but Dr. Muck did not conduct at any of those concerts—a fact which Major Higginson conveniently ignores.

The agitated patron of the orchestra says: "I never threatened to disband the orchestra." If that is the case every newspaper man who heard Major Higginson's declaration in Boston is a liar, and we don't believe that is so.

The fact is that Dr. Muck is a propagandist of a highly dangerous type and the American people cannot afford to stand for his continued presence on the platform at Boston Symphony concerts. If Major Higginson should finally decide to disband the orchestra, it would be a cheap price to pay for the riddance of this "Königlich Prüsserischer Generalmusikdirektor."

Major Higginson should stop explaining. The American people know the facts and the more he tries to argue them away the worse face he puts on the whole sorry business.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
From BULLETIN
Address: PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Date

WASHINGTON CENSURED FOR RECEIVING MUCK

National Committee of Patriotic Societies Makes Statement.

Washington, Nov. 12.—The capital patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are charged with lack of patriotism in giving their support to Dr. Karl Muck in a statement issued yesterday by the National Committee of Patriotic Societies.

"Is Washington less patriotic than other American cities?" reads the statement. "Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been barred from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh because of his German associations and interests, was received with open arms in the capital city.

"The newspapers in the cities from which Dr. Muck was barred have laid before the public enough facts concerning his German affiliations to make it seem undesirable for him to be received at this time. Washington people who support his concerts say that music and patriotism are two different things, but there is an increasingly large number who maintain that in war time everything must be weighed in the scale of patriotism.

"The national committee maintains that the capital of the nation is the place where, because of its influence on every other community, nothing should be tolerated that will be harmful to the successful prosecution of the war. The position of Dr. Muck and some of his musicians is open to grave question, and therefore Washington people who call themselves patriotic should not give them support."

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
NOV 10 1917

Looks as if, to make a really satisfactory job of it, having compelled Dr. Muck and his orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," it would next be necessary to compel them to play it well.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 7 1917

WAR COUNCIL WOULD BAR DR. MUCK HERE

Action of Providence Chamber of Commerce is Upheld.

OTHER CITIES JOIN PROTEST

Members Also Hear Reports of Retail Merchants' Division Chairman, Relative to Curtailing Use of Current for Electric Signs.—J. R. MacColl Volunteer Expediter.

Action of Chairman Henry A. Carpenter of the war council of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, in urging the Board of Police Commissioners to refuse permission for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or any other band or orchestra, to give concerts in Providence under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, was unanimously approved and indorsed at a meeting of the war council yesterday afternoon in the Chamber of Commerce rooms.

Secretary Clarence A. Cotton said he had communicated such action to the secretaries of commercial organizations in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other cities where the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to perform, and that hearty letters of appreciation had been received.

The council also received reports from Chairman Swanson of the Retail Merchants' Division and Fuel Administrator Holmes, relative to the action of the retail merchants' committee in recommending that all illuminated signs and outside lighting be turned off at the close of business hours. A special committee of five members has been appointed by the retailers to plan the details of this form of conservation. Ways and means for the sweeping and cleaning of mercantile establishments during the daylight, instead of by artificial light, will also be considered.

In response to a request from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, James R. MacColl has been appointed "Local Volunteer Expediter" for Providence. Mr. MacColl will have charge of the expedition of the production of supplies and will act in co-operation with the War Department.

Information as to local manufacturing conditions will be furnished and efforts to expedite the manufacture of war supplies, together with their transportation to wherever needed, will be made. Proper credentials, authorizing a full investigation of local conditions, will be supplied.

Chairman Richard B. Comstock of the committee on matters of law, reported the appointment of the following members of his committee: Thomas F. I. McDonnell, Robert B. Dresser, William W. Moss, John E. Canning and Michael J. Lynch.

Chairman Theodore Francis Green of the committee on citizenship announced the appointment of the following associates: Knight C. Richmond, Charles F. Towne, Patrick P. Curran, Luther D. Burlingame, Robert T. Burbank, Daniel H. Morrisey, Paul C. Nicholson and Dr. Ralph E. Hayward.

Journal
Providence, R. I.
NOV 2019

WHERE BEN BUTLER RULED

(From the Army and Navy Journal)

The recent agitation in Providence and Boston over the question as to whether the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor should lead that orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" recalls a tale concerning a similar incident in New Orleans, during the consulship of General Butler, told by Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, U. S. N., in "My Fifty Years in the Navy." It appears that one night in the Varieties Theatre in that city the band played the Confederate tune "The Bonny Blue Flag," whereupon some one rose and asked for "The Star Spangled Banner." "There was such a riot that the performance had to stop," Admiral Clark continues. "Finally the manager came out on the stage, stated that the money paid for admission that night would be refunded, and assured his audience that no Yankee air would ever be played in the Varieties Theatre. His announcement was followed the next day by an order from Butler, who was then military Governor: 'The orchestra of the Varieties Theatre will henceforth open with "The Star Spangled Banner," close with "Hail Columbia," and "Yankee Doodle" must be played at least once during the evening.'"

TRIBUNE
s: Providence, R. I.
NOV 12 1917

TRAITORS ARE VIGOROUSLY DENOUNCED

Former Gov. Higgins Made Strong Appeal for Red Triangle Fund.

Former Governor James H. Higgins, helping to launch the Red Triangle drive for $100,000 at the Pawtucket Young Men's Christian Association building yesterday, denounced traitors, cultured and uncultured, and declared that "if we do not stand together and become big enough to forget the differences of former times we will soon feel the iron heel of oppression which will try to crush us."

He said: "The voice of dissent in a contest such as this war is simply the voice of treason. I have no more respect for the cultured traitors than for the ignorant traitors. The hand of scorn should be levelled at them all, from the crazy and ignorant I. W. W.'s to the more cultured Maj. Higginson and Dr. Muck.

"If Maj. Higginson thinks more of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Carl Muck than he does of 'The Star Spangled Banner' he has picked out a bad time and a bad country to try it in. Any man who thinks more of art, in these times, than he does of patriotism had better keep quiet.

"I don't care what the reason was for getting in the war, whether we are justified or not. We are in the war now and all questions as to why have gone by the board. We stand for no kickers. The time for all discussion ended when the United States entered the war for freedom.

"It is time to put aside all party differences of peace time. Any man who cannot put aside racial, political and religious differences in a time like this does not deserve to be an American citizen. While I was born a Roman Catholic I am in back of this Y. M. C. A. Red Triangle movement as strenuously, and as persistently as any Methodist or Baptist in the land.

"Irrespective of religion, creed and race this movement should receive the support of all classes. We are going to raise this money so as not to allow German military autocracy to throttle the freedom of the whole world. Such a move as this will do much to end the war. It will make more contented soldiers, better fighters, stalwart in Americanism. It will make the boys feel while they are fighting that we, in this country, are in back of them, giving them moral and financial support."

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 13 1917

Change the Leader and Save the Orchestra

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:

Although any suggestions to the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts may be resented, I venture to make one, that is, to have for a change a French or an Italian conductor. Such an arrangement might in equity, to say the least, be tolerable to the Germans in the company, and it might be the means of preserving to us the Symphony concerts, which, if lost, would jeopardize the musical interests of the community.

JULES JORDAN.

Providence, Nov. 8.

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
NOV 10 1917

MAJOR HIGGINSON BLAMES THIS CITY

In Another Statement in New York Patron of Boston Symphony Orchestra Says Tempest Over Playing of National Anthem Was Raised Here.

New York, Nov. 10.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night made public his first complete explanation of the controversy involving the orchestra in an alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Neither he nor Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, ever refused to include the national anthem in the orchestra's repertoire, according to Major Higginson, who added that the conductor and orchestra did not know the anthem had been requested.

From Major Higginson's point of view the entire controversy is little more than a tempest in a teapot, due to a misunderstanding for which Providence, not Boston, is to blame. The statement followed a confrence with A. Augustus Healey, President, and other officials of the Brooklyn Institute, under whose auspices the concert was given last evening in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. It follows:

EXPLAINS AGAIN.'

"Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to know the truth and speak it, and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concertgoers and to the orchestra seems but fair and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra.

"The first request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The program had been made and studied as always and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' until the concert was over.

"Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps 60 times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the managment. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought they cheerfully did as asked.

BLAMES NEWSPAPERS.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra.

"Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families.

"The audiences in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and had a right to expect the same kind of service by the same man as in previous years. They knew that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received.

"In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit. Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; the orchestra is made up of many nationalities including Americans—some of them are our allies.

(Continued on Page 12, Column Six.)

MAJ. HIGGINSON BLAMES THIS CITY

(Continued from Page One.)

TEMPEST RAISED HERE.

"This tempest was raised in Providence and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them.

"Looking at the musicians last evening and recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which they prepare the concerts and with which they play them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

"Once more I ask the public to listen to the truth and then act accordingly."

NO TROUBLE AT CONCERT.

The concert last night passed off without the slightest sign of trouble. In fact there was marked enthusiasm from the audience, which filled every seat and a good bit of the standing room in the back aisles. The enthusiasm was helped along no doubt by the orchestra's early demonstration of Major Higginson's claim that it is without bias in so far at least as "The Star Spangled Banner" is concerned.

The national anthem was the first number given, both orchestra and audience standing. And among the audience were officers and soldiers in olive drab and sailors in blue standing stiffly at salute. The controversy had not kept them away and there was nothing in omission or commission to offend them.

Outside the Academy the Captain of the Bergen street police precinct, a police lieutenant and a dozen policemen, all in plain clothes, twiddled their thumbs with nothing to do "till to-morrow." Not a hiss or jarring note disturbed one of the best advertised and best attended concert of the year.

Globe
Oct Nov. 21, 1917

The first full rehearsal of men's and women's choirs of the chorus conducted by Stephen Townsend in preparation for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Dr Muck and the orchestra will occur Wednesday evening at Jacob Sleeper Hall at 7:30. There will be three full chorus rehearsals, Oct 24, 31 and Nov 7, and two full rehearsals with orchestra in Symphony Hall, the evenings of Nov 14 and 19. At the second, the soloists, Misses Hempel and Keyes, Messers Hackett and Middleton will be present.

Transcript
Nov. 22, 1917

Public Desire and Public Need

Rumor runs that there is likely to be a second performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony—say on a Sunday afternoon in the near future—by the same forces, as nearly as they can be reassembled, that on Tuesday evening surpassed themselves, thrilled their hearers and newly revealed the music. Presumably Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra would willingly undertake such a repetition; the chorus, unless imperative employment elsewhere on Sundays too much depleted the ranks, would as willingly regather its laurels, and to muster again the solo singers might even be possible. To arrange such a repetition ought not to exceed the resources of the management of Symphony Hall; while there is every reason to trust the interest of the public in it. No concert in Boston in years—not even those in which Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have carried Liszt's "Faust Symphony" to unsuspected heights of eloquence— has so deeply impressed hearers as that in which they opened anew the mightier, the more human, the universal music of Beethoven. The single visit of the Mendelssohn Choir aside, no chorus within long memory has so sung into Bostonian ears as did that which for once really achieved the finale of Beethoven's symphony. Yesterday, all concerned as listeners or as doers did but repeat the new sensations, the rare, new glories of what is already a celebrated concert. Many who sought it came too late to find available tickets; many who heard it would gladly renew the experience; while in large measure outside the public that thronged to Symphony Hall on Tuesday is the public of the concerts of Sunday afternoon, quick to discover and appreciate such an opportunity for a musical experience unique in Boston. For its eager sake as well as for the renewed pleasures of the familiars of the Symphony Concerts there may reasonably and desirably be a repetition of so wondrous a concert.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 8 - 1917

Muck's Own Testimony Convicts Him as German Propagandist

Musician, Now Posing as Martyred Artist, Branded by His Statement in San Francisco Court

Concert Conductor, in Prosecuting Bogus Collector for "The Fatherland," Who is Sent to Prison, Testifies He Gave Defendent $300 Intended to Aid Publication and Had Made Many Other Gifts for Like Purposes

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

In May, 1915, when Dr. Muck was in California, he was approached by one Frederick Gresheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the notorious German weekly, The Fatherland, on its feet. Gresheimer called Dr. Muck's attention to the attitude of The Fatherland for several issues following the Lusitania disaster and other matters, and obtained $300 from him in order to aid that publication. Dr. Muck discovered a few weeks afterward that Gresheimer was not authorized to make such collections and had him arrested. The man was convicted on Muck's testimony and is now serving sentence in San Quentin Penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by The Fatherland, and said that he had made many contributions for like purposes. Dr. Muck's enthusiastic desire to help The Fatherland came immediately after that paper had made the statement that the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania because they had sold their souls to England, and another statement over Viereck's own signature that if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany, the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin, and that the Lusitania case, judging by replies to questions sent out by The Fatherland, had not changed the opinion of German-Americans with regard to the United States or Germany's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war, Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston, and the constant companion of Sir Edgar Speyer and other men of the same type. By his own statement to the San Francisco courts, he has made it appaprent that at least a considerable portion of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character.

Globe
Nov. 21, 1917

BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY REVIVED

The revival last night of Beethoven's great choral symphony had the appropriate atmosphere of a festival occasion. Unlike some notable music, it has not become common by familiarity. A special chorus had been prepared, soloists of reputation engaged. Dr Muck, who had long wished to give the symphony in Boston, had expended great care on the rehearsals and a great audience filled the hall.

The performance was a noble one. The orchestra has never played with greater virtuosity and understanding. The solo quartet, composed of Miss Hempel, Miss Keyes, Mr Hackett and Mr Middleton, were equal to music of arduous demands in range. The chorus of 350 was a revelation of the possibilities of voice parts. It was organized and trained by Stephen Townsend, and the sopranos in particular showed fine intonation and endurance in the high sustained phrases. Dr Muck conducted with a master hand.

Complete within itself, there is nothing in the familiar classical symphonic literature which could well be played beside it. There are in it the voices of infinitude and the eternal, which were not denied to ears deaf to earthly sounds, deaf even to this final masterwork. Each movement works its spell —the intricate architectural structure of the first, in which every bar contains a germinal idea or the development of it, the gruff folk humor of the scherzo, with its chuckling dialogue and jocund repartee, the heavenly beauty of the song of the slow movement, the fourth and last which sums up the thoughts of the other three, then prepares the way to the broad, choral setting of Schiller's "Hymn to Joy."

The audience gave pronounced expression to its appreciation. At the close the soloists were recalled and there was sweeping applause as Dr Muck returned and stood with orchestra and chorus.

Pgt. Nov. 4, 1917

Symphony Trip

There will be no Symphony concerts the coming week, for the orchestra leaves tonight for its first Southern trip of the season, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening, and at none of these concerts will there be a soloist. Dr. Muck is playing Beethoven's C-minor symphony in Philadelphia, Tschaikowsky's fourth in F-minor in Washington, Brahms' fourth in Baltimore, Brahms' fourth and Beethoven's fifth in New York, and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" in Brooklyn. The other numbers on the programme are chosen from shorter pieces played at the first four concerts here in Boston.

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
NOV 10 1917

MAJOR HIGGINSON BLAMES THIS CITY

In Another Statement in New York Patron of Boston Symphony Orchestra Says Tempest Over Playing of National Anthem Was Raised Here.

New York, Nov. 10.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night made public his first complete explanation of the controversy involving the orchestra in an alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Neither he nor Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, ever refused to include the national anthem in the orchestra's repertoire, according to Major Higginson, who added that the conductor and orchestra did not know the anthem had been requested.

From Major Higginson's point of view the entire controversy is little more than a tempest in a teapot, due to a misunderstanding for which Providence, not Boston, is to blame. The statement followed a confrence with A. Augustus Healey, President, and other officials of the Brooklyn Institute, under whose auspices the concert was given last evening in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. It follows:

EXPLAINS AGAIN.

"Is it worth while to consider once more the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to know the truth and speak it, and then to let the matter die? Justice to the concertgoers and to the orchestra seems but fair and courteous, and until now the concert public has been courteous to the orchestra.

"The first request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' came from Providence people who were not ticket holders and were unknown to me. The program had been made and studied as always and the musicians did not come together until the hour of the concert in Providence. The conductor and orchestra knew nothing of the request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' until the concert was over.

"Not a word or a sign of complaint was heard at the concert. On the contrary the music was well received. When the next concert came in Boston 'The Star Spangled Banner' was played. It was never refused by me nor by Dr. Muck. It had been played by the orchestra in the popular concerts every evening during May and June—say, perhaps 60 times—and this was done because it seemed fitting to the managment. At that time nobody made question of patriotism; that was taken as a matter of course, and whatever the musicians thought they cheerfully did as asked.

BLAMES NEWSPAPERS.

"Notwithstanding the remarks of the newspapers I never threatened to disband the orchestra. It is the newspapers which will disband the orchestra.

"Last summer I made certain contracts and am now trying to keep them. The musicians were engaged and they need their pay for the support of their families.

"The audiences in various cities bought their tickets as freely as ever and had a right to expect the same kind of service by the same man as in previous years. They knew that the last concert in New York last spring was very warmly received.

"In Baltimore the police forbade the concert, and therefore the contract there was not kept. Elsewhere I have kept my contracts to the letter and to the spirit. Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; the orchestra is made up of many nationalities including Americans—some of them are our allies.

(Continued on Page 12, Column Six.)

M A J. HIGGINSON BLAMES THIS CITY

(Continued from Page One.)

TEMPEST RAISED HERE.

"This tempest was raised in Providence and not in Boston or elsewhere. The audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington have been content with what was offered them.

"Looking at the musicians last evening and recognizing once more the great earnestness and care with which they prepare the concerts and with which they play them, it seemed to me that they were entitled to kind treatment—every one of them.

"Once more I ask the public to listen to the truth and then act accordingly."

NO TROUBLE AT CONCERT.

The concert last night passed off without the slightest sign of trouble. In fact there was marked enthusiasm from the audience, which filled every seat and a good bit of the standing room in the back aisles. The enthusiasm was helped along no doubt by the orchestra's early demonstration of Major Higginson's claim that it is without bias in so far at least as "The Star Spangled Banner" is concerned.

The national anthem was the first number given, both orchestra and audience standing. And among the audience were officers and soldiers in olive drab and sailors in blue standing stiffly at salute. The controversy had not kept them away and there was nothing in omission or commission to offend them.

Outside the Academy the Captain of the Bergen street police precinct, a police lieutenant and a dozen policemen, all in plain clothes, twiddled their thumbs with nothing to do "till to-morrow." Not a hiss or jarring note disturbed one of the best advertised and best attended concert of the year.

Globe
Oct Nov. 21, 1917

The first full rehearsal of men's and women's choirs of the chorus conducted by Stephen Townsend in preparation for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Dr Muck and the orchestra will occur Wednesday evening at Jacob Sleeper Hall at 7:30. There will be three full chorus rehearsals, Oct 24, 31 and Nov 7, and two full rehearsals with orchestra in Symphony Hall, the evenings of Nov 14 and 19. At the second, the soloists, Misses Hempel and Keyes, Messers Hackett and Middleton will be present.

Transcript
Nov. 22, 1917

Public Desire and Public Need

Rumor runs that there is likely to be a second performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony—say on a Sunday afternoon in the near future—by the same forces, as nearly as they can be reassembled, that on Tuesday evening surpassed themselves, thrilled their hearers and newly revealed the music. Presumably Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra would willingly undertake such a repetition; the chorus, unless imperative employment elsewhere on Sundays too much depleted the ranks, would as willingly regather its laurels, and to muster again the solo singers might even be possible. To arrange such a repetition ought not to exceed the resources of the management of Symphony Hall; while there is every reason to trust the interest of the public in it. No concert in Boston in years—not even those in which Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have carried Liszt's "Faust Symphony" to unsuspected heights of eloquence— has so deeply impressed hearers as that in which they opened anew the mightier, the more human, the universal music of Beethoven. The single visit of the Mendelssohn Choir aside, no chorus within long memory has so sung into Bostonian ears as did that which for once really achieved the finale of Beethoven's symphony. Yesterday, all concerned as listeners or as doers did but repeat the new sensations, the rare, new glories of what is already a celebrated concert. Many who sought it came too late to find available tickets; many who heard it would gladly renew the experience; while in large measure outside the public that thronged to Symphony Hall on Tuesday is the public of the concerts of Sunday afternoon, quick to discover and appreciate such an opportunity for a musical experience unique in Boston. For its eager sake as well as for the renewed pleasures of the familiars of the Symphony Concerts there may reasonably and desirably be a repetition of so wondrous a concert.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NOV 8 - 1917

Muck's Own Testimony Convicts Him as German Propagandist

Musician, Now Posing as Martyred Artist, Branded by His Statement in San Francisco Court

Concert Conductor, in Prosecuting Bogus Collector for "The Fatherland," Who is Sent to Prison, Testifies He Gave Defendent $300 Intended to Aid Publication and Had Made Many Other Gifts for Like Purposes

Dr. Karl Muck, now posing before the American public as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been ever since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict than before.

In May, 1915, when Dr. Muck was in California, he was approached by one Frederick Gresheimer, who told him he was collecting money to keep the notorious German weekly, The Fatherland, on its feet. Gresheimer called Dr. Muck's attention to the attitude of The Fatherland for several issues following the Lusitania disaster and other matters, and obtained $300 from him in order to aid that publication. Dr. Muck discovered a few weeks afterward that Gresheimer was not authorized to make such collections and had him arrested. The man was convicted on Muck's testimony and is now serving sentence in San Quentin Penitentiary. Muck testified that the reason he gave the money was because he wanted to help along the cause espoused by The Fatherland, and said that he had made many contributions for like purposes. Dr. Muck's enthusiastic desire to help The Fatherland came immediately after that paper had made the statement that the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania because they had sold their souls to England, and another statement over Viereck's own signature that if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany, the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin, and that the Lusitania case, judging by replies to questions sent out by The Fatherland, had not changed the opinion of German-Americans with regard to the United States or Germany's cause.

Ever since the United States entered the war, Dr. Muck has been one of the active heads of German propaganda in Boston, and the constant companion of Sir Edgar Speyer and other men of the same type.

By his own statement to the San Francisco courts, he has made it appaprent that at least a considerable portion of the money which comes to him through the good will of the American people has been spent in the past in aiding German propaganda of the most vicious and traitorous character.

BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY REVIVED

The revival last night of Beethoven's great choral symphony had the appropriate atmosphere of a festival occasion. Unlike some notable music, it has not become common by familiarity. A special chorus had been prepared, soloists of reputation engaged. Dr Muck, who had long wished to give the symphony in Boston, had expended great care on the rehearsals and a great audience filled the hall.

The performance was a noble one. The orchestra has never played with greater virtuosity and understanding. The solo quartet, composed of Miss Hempel, Miss Keyes, Mr Hackett and Mr Middleton, were equal to music of arduous demands in range. The chorus of 350 was a revelation of the possibilities of voice parts. It was organized and trained by Stephen Townsend, and the sopranos in particular showed fine intonation and endurance in the high sustained phrases. Dr Muck conducted with a master hand.

Complete within itself, there is nothing in the familiar classical symphonic literature which could well be played beside it. There are in it the voices of infinitude and the eternal, which were not denied to ears deaf to earthly sounds, deaf even to this final masterwork. Each movement works its spell—the intricate architectural structure of the first, in which every bar contains a germinal idea or the development of it, the gruff folk humor of the scherzo, with its chuckling dialogue and jocund repartee, the heavenly beauty of the song of the slow movement, the fourth and last which sums up the thoughts of the other three, then prepares the way to the broad, choral setting of Schiller's "Hymn to Joy."

The audience gave pronounced expression to its appreciation. At the close the soloists were recalled and there was sweeping applause as Dr Muck returned and stood with orchestra and chorus.

Post. Nov. 4, 1917

Symphony Trip

There will be no Symphony concerts the coming week, for the orchestra leaves tonight for its first Southern trip of the season, playing in Philadelphia Monday evening, Washington Tuesday afternoon, Baltimore Wednesday evening, New York Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, Brooklyn Friday evening, and at none of these concerts will there be a soloist. Dr. Muck is playing Beethoven's C-minor symphony in Philadelphia, Tschaikowsky's fourth in F-minor in Washington, Brahms' fourth in Baltimore, Brahms' fourth and Beethoven's fifth in New York, and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" in Brooklyn. The other numbers on the programme are chosen from shorter pieces played at the first four concerts here in Boston.

HERALD. Nov. 18, 1917.

Transcript

ley Quartet in Jordan Hall Thursday Even
n Monday Evening, and George Copeland,

Left to Right: Arthur Hackett, Tenor, in Choral
Grainge

Hackett

ADVERTISER (CONT.)

Arthur Hackett gave the trying tenor solo. He has done some great work with the Symphony Orchestra before this; his recent work in the difficult solo passages in Liszt's "Faust" symphony laid the foundations of a great reputation. Here if anything the task was even harder, but equally successful.

Frieda Hempel's coloratura voice was not crushed either by the compass or the floridity of the music. She was an ideal singer for this finale. Margaret Keyes was a steady alto, and Arthur Middleton a sufficiently powerful bass. The bass voice has here the ushering in of the vocal parts of the Finale, on Beethoven's own words—"Oh Friends, these tones no longer." One must always admire the ingenuity with which Beethoven bridges over the gap between instruments and voices by means of the contrabasses.

The contrabasses had already been advanced from a subordinate position in orchestral work, by Beethoven in his fourth and fifth symphonies, but here their employment is an absolute innovation in musical history. They represent nothing less than the voice of a Redeemer rebuking the outcries of a suffering world, and the dialogue between them and the full orchestra, in the instrumental introduction to the finale, is the noblest in the whole musicale repertoire. England has always prided herself on her contra-basses in this portion of the sym-ht have e obbliga-ellos last been some by themement, as st portion

Dr. Muck
he vague introduc-ce of the es of the he Goda,

e second movement one must record the splendid oboe playing in a most difficult passage. The Scherzo also gave our kettle-drummer a good chance, of which he made abundant use. His dialogue with the wood-wind, with his reiteration of an octave figure (F—F), was delicious, and in this movement the Wagner additions to Beethoven's rather defective scoring also made due effect.

Conductors no longer respect Beethoven's scores in every detail. The deaf composer has here made a few miscalculations in the orchestral combinations, which Wagner, Weingartner, Dr. Muck and others set aside without any chance of adverse criticism. This does not belong to the "individualisation" which some affected conductors indulge in only to be original. The tempo of the Trio of this second movement was taken at a splendid speed. Some conductors spoil the effect here by holding the orchestra back, making a merely rustis instead of a headlong effect. Altogether the Scherzo made the popular success of the three instrumental movements.

If the first movement is the most symphonic one, the slow movement is certainly the most beautiful and easily comprehended, even if at times a little cloying. A set of variations on two different and well-contrasted themes can be easily followed in all their embroidery, and Dr. Muck's reading gave them especial clarity. The horn did superb work in this movement as well as in the difficult passage in the Trio of the Scherzo.

Monitor

18 Nov. 3

MUSIC

Subscribers to season tickets for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be exempt from any ticket tax under the new war revenue laws. The decision given by the United States Internal Revenue Commissioner that concert tickets bought and paid for before Nov. 1 are not taxable decides the question which was raised last week when a notice concerning possible taxation liability was inserted in the symphony program books.

The symphony concerts are omitted in Boston next week, when the orchestra is away on its first monthly tour to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Advertiser
Nov. 21, 1917

CHORAL SYMPHONY OF BEETHOVEN IS GIVEN

Dr. Muck Conducts Orchestra and Chorus of 350 Voices Trained by Stephen Townsend for Special Concert in Symphony Hall

By LOUIS C. ELSON

When Mr. Gericke gave his last Boston performance of Beethoven's greatest symphony, with full orchestra and chorus, there were more performers than auditors in Symphony Hall. It speaks well for Boston's musical growth that last night, in the same hall, there was a tremendous and very enthusiastic audience, even at advanced prices and an additional war tax. The performance was worthy of the pronounced appreciation, for we cannot remember as great an interpretation of the work in America.

The chorus was larger than any which has appeared in the work here, and it had been finely drilled by Stephen Townsend. Its makeup was of excellent material and the solo quartette consisted of star artists. This is the most vulnerable part of the work. Beethoven was not a good vocal composer and treats his voices as if they were instruments of wood or brass, having no mercy upon human tissues. He himself once said that his musical thoughts always came to him through some instrument, never through the human voice.

We must also remember that the pitch has been raised a full semitone since this symphony was written (in 1823-4) so that scarcely once in a lifetime does one hear the finale of this work without some degree of screaming. That this was absent last night is in itself something to be admiringly recorded. To give six variations of a theme, upon human voices, would seem to be impracticable, yet last night it did not leave this impression, although it still left a fragmentary and unvocal effect.

GLOBE
NOV. 18, 1917

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Beethoven's Choral Symphony

Preparation for Beethoven's Choral Symphony, on Tuesday evening, in Symphony Hall, from the cheerful bulletins issuing from time to time therefrom, is going more smoothly than that preceding the first performance anywhere which took place May 7, 1824, in Vienna. Mr Krehbiel, the possessor of the transcript of the Conversation books of Beethoven, made by Alexander W. Thayer, has made interesting quotations from them from time to time in his column in the New York Tribune. In those covering this period are told the confusion prevailing up to the last hour before the performance of the Choral Symphony.

There was trouble about a permit or a dispensation." The Archbishop of Vienna, backed up by the police authorities, was unwilling to announce a mass or the portions of a mass for performance in a theatre. Only by appeal to a high authority at court, and then but a short time before the concert, was the permission obtained.

On some points Beethoven was irresolute, distract, on others obstinate. Preisinger was to be the bass. His deep voice found difficulty with the high F sharp in the recitative which introduces the choral part of the finale. Schindler begged to change the one note. To the last Beethoven was obdurate, then grudgingly consented. But it was Siepelt and not Preisinger who sang when the time came.

The thoughtful, tireless Schindler was vigilant in details. He had reminded Schuppanzigh about the additional wind instruments while there was yet time. It appears that Seipelt was invited to sing on extremely short notice. In Schindler's written conversation to the master, we read: "I'll drive at once to Seipelt, I hope he will do it with pleasure . . . I'll go also to Sontag and Unger to call on them. (Mme Henriette Sontag, the soprano, and Frauelein Karoline Unger, the contralto solist.) Wait for me here; I'll be back. Unger, too, is sitting at home with her throat in a bandage. She will be better by tomorrow. . . . The coachman is paid till 2 o'clock; it is now half-past 1; ergo—I found the two together comforting each other. That was only a joke. She has got to sing already today."

Schindler calls Frauelin Unger—after a written speech to Beethoven in which she tells him he "ought also to get married" that perhaps he "would become more industrious"— "A very devil of a good girl, full of fire and open-heartedness." Unger has been telling Beethoven the impending premiere of "The Diver," a new opera in which she was the king's son; Sontag, his daughter; Preisinger, his exiled brother; "Haitzinger, a damned prince." She adds: "If the dear good God would only mercifully enlighten you that you would soon write something better for us, I would not spare any pains—for you would surely be rewarded. I would come out every day."

Sketches of the symphony were made as early as 1815, although not finished until 1824. The first performance was at the Kaerthnerthor Theatre. The first performance in the United States was at a concert by the Philharmonic Society, New York, at Castle Garden, May 20, 1846. In Boston the symphony was not given until Feb 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Hayden Society.

The last performances in Boston occured at the final symphony concerts of the 28th season, April 30 and May 1, 1909. The soloists were Miss Laura Combs soprano, Mme Gertrude May Stein contralto, Theodore Van Yorx tenor and Myron W. Whitney Jr baritone. The chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mr Fiedler conducted.

Dr Muck has been desirous of giving the Ninth Symphony in Boston, but not until now has he considered a chorus available of sufficient numbers and able to give sufficient time to preparation. The organization by Stephen Townsend of a chorus to number nearly 400, has supplied the necessary choral body. Mr Townsend has been directing the preliminary rehearsals. Dr Muck met chorus and orchestra for the first full rehearsal last week, and will do so again tomorrow. The performance will occur Tuesday.

Striving to make the occasion notable, the management of Symphony Hall has engaged as soloists Miss Frieda Hempel, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, who is a Symphony Hall discovery from his debut at the "Pops," and Arthur Middleton, baritone.

Advertiser
(Continued)

But it is the Finale which carries the public after all. It may not be "Vox et preterea nihil" with the average auditor, but the human voice always reaps the greatest applause. Besides this, the subject here treated is especially pertinent to the present time. Schiller in his "Ode to Joy" was singing of human liberty as well as of universal brotherhood. These topics always aroused Beethoven's greatest enthusiasm, as witness his "Egmont" overture and his Heroic Symphony, and, although the work was dedicated to the King of Prussia, an autocrat, that made no difference in the opinions expressed in tones. The Finale is certainly the voice of Liberty.

Tecnically one must single out for praise here the majesty of the performance of the religious movement which stands in the centre of the variations, between the third and fourth; the purity of intonation in the almost impossible passage—"High among the star pavilions"—and the presto of the end. When Beethoven rejoiced it was with Dionysiac fury, as at the end of "Fidelio" and at the close of this movement. Anything wilder in its jubilation cannot be imagined. Dr. Muck, the chorus and the orchestra weathered the storm successfully.

Post
Nov. 18, 1917

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

The long-expected performance of Beethoven's ninth or choral symphony will be given in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening, Nov. 20. Since the 10th of September the chorus has been having weekly rehearsals, first separately in choirs and then combined, all of them under the direction and training of Mr. Stephen Townsend. The formation of this chorus must be largely credited to Mr. Townsend. Invitations were sent out in mid-summer to nearly 500 singers of Boston, professional, semi-professional and amateur, and favorable replies came from [illegible]

Curiously enough, the proportion of sopranos was almost exactly what was desired for the formation of the different choirs, sopranos, altos, tenors and basses.

Since his return in 1912 Dr. Muck has been desirous of performing the ninth symphony and other choral works, but the lack of a proper chorus for this purpose—one which could give the necessary time for rehearsals—had always prevented it. Last Wednesday evening Dr. Muck held the first rehearsal under his own direction of chorus and orchestra. The second and final rehearsal, with all the soloists, will be held in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

The chorus will number about 400, and this has compelled the building in Symphony Hall of a new stage which is the largest that has ever been used there. The addition in front takes out the first seven rows of seats. The orchestra will be on a "rise," as usual, and surrounding them will be the chorus, placed in tiers.

The orchestra itself has been at work on the smyphony for several weeks, and nothing has been left undone by Dr. Muck, Mr. Townsend and the management to make the concert one of the most notable events of the musical history of Boston. Notable soloists, as shown elsewhere, have been engaged.

Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall, performance of Beethoven's 9th symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, with an assisting chorus of 400, and the following soloists: Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keys, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Arthur Middleton, bass. See special notice.

Advertiser (Continued)

Points of deviation from the usual reading may be mentioned here. Dr. Muck greatly repressed the contrabassoon and bass drum at the beginning of the military portion in the Finale. Under the lead of any but the most expert conductor these single, isolated notes, become like comical grunts and are easily made ludicrous. The very florid bassoon work of the finale was most cleverly brought out. The shading of the recitative of the contrabasses was more varied than we have ever heard it read, and gained new meaning. The March in the Finale was more brilliantly interpreted than ever before. It had a note of triumph which was almost overwhelming.

The absolute surety of the chorus should make Mr. Stephen Townsend share in the laurels of Dr. Muck.

One ought to notice how, in the midst of most intense enthusiasm, Beethoven holds to good symphonic form, all through this work, a good object lesson to some of our moderns who break every rule of harmony and form, the moment they begin to boil.

All in all last night was a historic occasion in Boston's musical annals; the conductor and the orchestra attained their very highest pinnacle. We only wish that New York might hear this work thus given, and thus realize what Boston has done in the field of symphonic music.

HERALD. Nov. 18, 1917.

ley Quartet in Jordan Hall Thursday Even
n Monday Evening, and George Copeland,

Left to Right: Arthur Hackett, Tenor, in Choral
Grainge

Monitor Nov. 3

18

MUSIC

Subscribers to season tickets for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be exempt from any ticket tax under the new war revenue laws. The decision given by the United States Internal Revenue Commissioner that concert tickets bought and paid for before Nov. 1 are not taxable decides the question which was raised last week when a notice concerning possible taxation liability was inserted in the symphony program books.

The symphony concerts are omitted in Boston next week, when the orchestra is away on its first monthly tour to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Advertiser Nov. 21, 1917

SHORT TER

Reported by Curtis & S

	Rate.
Am Tel & Tel Co (Subs Cos).....	4½
American Thread Co 1st.....	4
Ayer Mills Cons & Equip.....	5
Ayer Mills Cons & Equip.....	5
Ayer Mills Cons & Equip.....	5
Balt & Ohio R R.....	5
Balt & Ohio R R.....	5
Bethlehem Steel Co.....	5
Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co.....	5
Canadian Pacific Ry.....	6
Chicago & West Indiana R R Co..	6
Delaware & Hudson R R.....	5
Erie R R.....	5
General Rubber Co.....	5
General Electric Co.....	6
Railway.....	5

By LOUIS C. ELSON

When Mr. Gericke gave his last Boston performance of Beethoven's greatest symphony, with full orchestra and chorus, there were more performers than auditors in Symphony Hall. It speaks well for Boston's musical growth that last night, in the same hall, there was a tremendous and very enthusiastic audience, even at advanced prices and an additional war tax. The performance was worthy of the pronounced appreciation, for we cannot remember as great an interpretation of the work in America.

The chorus was larger than any which has appeared in the work here, and it had been finely drilled by Stephen Townsend. Its makeup was of excellent material and the solo quartette consisted of star artists. This is the most vulnerable part of the work. Beethoven was not a good vocal composer and treats his voices as if they were instruments of wood or brass, having no mercy upon human tissues. He himself once said that his musical thoughts always came to him through some instrument, never through the human voice.

We must also remember that the pitch has been raised a full semitone since this symphony was written (in 1823-4) so that scarcely once in a lifetime does one hear the finale of this work without some degree of screaming. That this was absent last night is in itself something to be admiringly recorded. To give six variations of a theme, upon human voices, would seem to be impracticable, yet last night it did not leave this impression, although it still left a fragmentary and unvocal effect.

ADVERTISER (CONT.)

Arthur Hackett gave the trying tenor solo. He has done some great work with the Symphony Orchestra before this; his recent work in the difficult solo passages in Liszt's "Faust" symphony laid the foundations of a great reputation. Here if anything the task was even harder, but equally successful.

Frieda Hempel's coloratura voice was not crushed either by the compass or the floridity of the music. She was an ideal singer for this finale. Margaret Keyes was a steady alto, and Arthur Middleton a sufficiently powerful bass. The bass voice has here the ushering in of the vocal parts of the Finale, on Beethoven's own words—"Oh Friends, these tones no longer." One must always admire the ingenuity with which Beethoven bridges over the gap between instruments and voices by means of the contrabasses.

The contrabasses had already been advanced from a subordinate position in orchestral work, by Beethoven in his fourth and fifth symphonies, but here their employment is an absolute innovation in musical history. They represent nothing less than the voice of a Redeemer rebuking the outcries of a suffering world, and the dialogue between them and the full orchestra, in the instrumental introduction to the finale, is the noblest in the whole musicale repertoire. England has always prided herself on her contrabasses in this portion of the symphony, but London itself might have envied the performance of the obbligato to contrabasses and violoncellos last night. There must have been some special rehearsals of these by themselves.

For all this, the first movement, as symphonic music, is the best portion of the composition, and this Dr. Muck read with great effect. The vague and misty character of the introduction, the thundering entrance of the chief theme, the great surges of the chromatic organ-point in the Goda, were all thrilling.

In the Trio of the second movement one must record the splendid oboe playing in a most difficult passage. The Scherzo also gave our kettledrummer a good chance, of which he made abundant use. His dialogue with the wood-wind, with his reiteration of an octave figure (F—F), was delicious, and in this movement the Wagner additions to Beethoven's rather defective scoring also made due effect.

Conductors no longer respect Beethoven's scores in every detail. The deaf composer has here made a few miscalculations in the orchestral combinations, which Wagner, Weingartner, Dr. Muck and others set aside without any chance of adverse criticism. This does not belong to the "individualisation" which some affected conductors indulge in only to be original. The tempo of the Trio of this second movement was taken at a splendid speed. Some conductors spoil the effect here by holding the orchestra back, making a merely rustis instead of a headlong effect. Altogether the Scherzo made the popular success of the three instrumental movements.

If the first movement is the most symphonic one, the slow movement is certainly the most beautiful and easily comprehended, even if at times a little cloying. A set of variations on two different and well-contrasted themes can be easily followed in all their embroidery, and Dr. Muck's reading gave them especial clarity. The horn did superb work in this movement as well as in the difficult passage in the Trio of the Scherzo.

GLOBE Nov. 18, 1917

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Beethoven's Choral Symphony

Preparation for Beethoven's Choral Symphony, on Tuesday evening, in Symphony Hall, from the cheerful bulletins issuing from time to time therefrom, is going more smoothly than that preceding the first performance anywhere which took place May 7, 1824, in Vienna. Mr Krehbiel, the possessor of the transcript of the Conversation books of Beethoven, made by Alexander W. Thayer, has made interesting quotations from them from time to time in his column in the New York Tribune. In those covering his period are told the confusion prevailing up to the last hour before the performance of the Choral Symphony. There was trouble about a permit or a dispensation." The Archbishop of Vienna, backed up by the police authorities, was unwilling to announce a mass for the portions of a mass for performance in a theatre. Only by appeal to a high authority at court, and then but a short time before the concert, was the permission obtained.

On some points Beethoven was irresolute, distract, on others obstinate. Preisinger was to be the bass. His deep voice found difficulty with the high F sharp in the recitative which introduces the choral part of the finale. Schindler begged to change the one note. To the last Beethoven was obdurate, then grudgingly consented. But it was Siepelt and not Preisinger who sang when the time came.

The thoughtful, tireless Schindler was vigilant in details. He had reminded Schuppanzigh about the additional wind instruments while there was yet time. It appears that Seipelt was invited to sing on extremely short notice. In Schindler's written conversation to the master, we read: "I'll drive at once to Seipelt, I hope he will do it with pleasure . . . I'll go also to Sontag and Unger to call on them. (Mme Henriette Sontag, the soprano, and Fraulein Karoline Unger, the contralto solist.) Wait for me here; I'll be back. Unger, too, is sitting at home with her throat in a bandage. She will be better by tomorrow. . . . The coachman is paid till 2 o'clock; it is now half-past 1; ergo—I found the two together comforting each other. That was only a joke. She has got to sing already today."

Schindler calls Fraulein Unger—after a written speech to Beethoven in which she tells him he "ought also to get married" that perhaps he "would become more industrious"— "A very devil of a good girl, full of fire and open-heartedness." Unger has been telling Beethoven the impending premiere of "The Diver," a new opera in which she was the king's son; Sontag, his daughter; Preisinger, his exiled brother; "Haltzinger, a damned prince." She adds: "If the dear good God would only mercifully enlighten you that you would soon write something better for us, I would not spare any pains—for you would surely be rewarded. I would come out every day."

Sketches of the symphony were made as early as 1815, although not finished until 1824. The first performance was at the Kaerthnerthor Theatre. The first performance in the United States was at a concert by the Philharmonic Society, New York, at Castle Garden, May 20, 1846. In Boston the symphony was not given until Feb 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Hayden Society.

The last performances in Boston occured at the final symphony concerts of the 28th season, April 30 and May 1, 1909. The soloists were Miss Laura Combs soprano, Mme Gertrude May Stein contralto, Theodore Van Yorx tenor and Myron W. Whitney Jr baritone. The chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mr Fiedler conducted.

Dr Muck has been desirous of giving the Ninth Symphony in Boston, but not until now has he considered a chorus available of sufficient numbers and able to give sufficient time to preparation. The organization by Stephen Townsend of a chorus to number nearly 400, has supplied the necessary choral body. Mr Townsend has been directing the preliminary rehearsals. Dr Muck met chorus and orchestra for the first full rehearsal last week, and will do so again tomorrow. The performance will occur Tuesday.

Striving to make the occasion notable, the management of Symphony Hall has engaged as soloists Miss Frieda Hempel, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, who is a Symphony Hall discovery from his debut at the "Pops," and Arthur Middleton, baritone.

Advertiser (continued)

But it is the Finale which carries the public after all. It may not be "Vox et preterea nihil" with the average auditor, but the human voice always reaps the greatest applause. Besides this, the subject here treated is especially pertinent to the present time. Schiller in his "Ode to Joy" was singing of human liberty as well as of universal brotherhood. These topics always aroused Beethoven's greatest enthusiasm, as witness his "Egmont" overture and his Hercic Symphony, and, although the work was dedicated to the King of Prussia, an autocrat, that made no difference in the opinions expressed in tones. The Finale is certainly the voice of Liberty.

Tecnically one must single out for praise here the majesty of the performance of the religious movement which stands in the centre of the variations, between the third and fourth; the purity of intonation in the almost impossible passage—"High among the star pavilions"—and the presto of the end. When Beethoven rejoiced it was with Dionysiac fury, as at the end of "Fidelio" and at the close of this movement. Anything wilder in its jubilation cannot be imagined. Dr. Muck, the chorus and the orchestra weathered the storm successfully.

Post Nov. 18, 1917

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

The long-expected performance of Beethoven's ninth or choral symphony will be given in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening, Nov. 20. Since the 10th of September the chorus has been having weekly rehearsals, first separately in choirs and then combined, all of them under the direction and training of Mr. Stephen Townsend. The formation of this chorus must be largely credited to Mr. Townsend. Invitations were sent out in mid-summer to nearly 500 singers of Boston, professional, semi-professional and amateur, and favorable replies came from 400.

Curiously enough, the proportion of sopranos was almost exactly what was desired for the formation of the different choirs, sopranos, altos, tenors and basses.

Since his return in 1912 Dr. Muck has been desirous of performing the ninth symphony and other choral works, but the lack of a proper chorus for this purpose—one which could give the necessary time for rehearsals—had always prevented it. Last Wednesday evening Dr. Muck held the first rehearsal under his own direction of chorus and orchestra. The second and final rehearsal, with all the soloists, will be held in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

The chorus will number about 400, and this has compelled the building in Symphony Hall of a new stage which is the largest that has ever been used there. The addition in front takes out the first seven rows of seats. The orchestra will be on a "rise," as usual, and surrounding them will be the chorus, placed in tiers.

The orchestra itself has been at work on the smyphony for several weeks, and nothing has been left undone by Dr. Muck, Mr. Townsend and the management to make the concert one of the most notable events of the musical history of Boston. Notable soloists, as shown elsewhere, have been engaged.

Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall, performance of Beethoven's 9th symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, with an assisting chorus of 400, and the following soloists: Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keys, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Arthur Middleton, bass. See special notice.

Advertiser (continued)

Points of deviation from the usual reading may be mentioned here. Dr. Muck greatly repressed the contrabassoon and bass drum at the beginning of the military portion in the Finale. Under the lead of any but the most expert conductor these single, isolated notes, become like comical grunts and are easily made ludicrous. The very florid bassoon work of the finale was most cleverly brought out. The shading of the recitative of the contrabasses was more varied than we have ever heard it read, and gained new meaning. The March in the Finale was more brilliantly interpreted than ever before. It had a note of triumph which was almost overwhelming.

The absolute surety of the chorus should make Mr. Stephen Townsend share in the laurels of Dr. Muck.

One ought to notice how, in the midst of most intense enthusiasm, Beethoven holds to good symphonic form, all through this work, a good object lesson to some of our moderns who break every rule of harmony and form, the moment they begin to boil.

All in all last night was a historic occasion in Boston's musical annals; the conductor and the orchestra attained their very highest pinnacle. We only wish that New York might hear this work thus given, and thus realize what Boston has done in the field of symphonic music.

HERALD. Nov. 18, 1917.

ley Quartet in Jordan Hall Thursday Even
n Monday Evening, and George Copeland,

Left to Right: Arthur Hackett, Tenor, in Choral
Grainge

Monitor
18 Nov. 3

MUSIC

Subscribers to season tickets for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be exempt from any ticket tax under the new war revenue laws. The decision given by the United States Internal Revenue Commissioner that concert tickets bought and paid for before Nov. 1 are not taxable decides the question which was raised last week when a notice concerning possible taxation liability was inserted in the symphony program books.

The symphony concerts are omitted in Boston next week, when the orchestra is away on its first monthly tour to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Advertiser
Nov. 21, 1917

SHORT TER

Reported by Curtis & S

	Rate.
Am Tel & Tel Co (Subs Cos).....	4½
American Thread Co 1st.....	4
Ayer Mills Cons & Equip.....	5
Ayer Mills Cons & Equip.....	5
Ayer Mills Cons & Equip.....	5
Balt & Ohio R R.....	5
Balt & Ohio R R.....	5
Bethlehem Steel Co.....	5
Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co.....	5
Canadian Pacific Ry.....	6
Chicago & West Indiana R R Co..	6
Delaware & Hudson R R.....	5
Erie R R.....	5
General Rubber Co.....	6
General Electric Co.....	6
Pullman Co.....	5

By LOUIS C. ELSON

When Mr. Gericke gave his last Boston performance of Beethoven's greatest symphony, with full orchestra and chorus, there were more performers than auditors in Symphony Hall. It speaks well for Boston's musical growth that last night, in the same hall, there was a tremendous and very enthusiastic audience, even at advanced prices and an additional war tax. The performance was worthy of the pronounced appreciation, for we cannot remember as great an interpretation of the work in America.

The chorus was larger than any which has appeared in the work here, and it had been finely drilled by Stephen Townsend. Its makeup was of excellent material and the solo quartette consisted of star artists. This is the most vulnerable part of the work. Beethoven was not a good vocal composer and treats his voices as if they were instruments of wood or brass, having no mercy upon human tissues. He himself once said that his musical thoughts always came to him through some instrument, never through the human voice.

We must also remember that the pitch has been raised a full semitone since this symphony was written (in 1823-4) so that scarcely once in a lifetime does one hear the finale of this work without some degree of screaming. That this was absent last night is in itself something to be admiringly recorded. To give six variations of a theme, upon human voices, would seem to be impracticable, yet last night it did not leave this impression, although it still left a fragmentary and unvocal effect.

ADVERTISER (CONT.)

Arthur Hackett gave the trying tenor solo. He has done some great work with the Symphony Orchestra before this; his recent work in the difficult solo passages in Liszt's "Faust" symphony laid the foundations of a great reputation. Here if anything the task was even harder, but equally successful.

Frieda Hempel's coloratura voice was not crushed either by the compass or the floridity of the music. She was an ideal singer for this finale. Margaret Keyes was a steady alto, and Arthur Middleton a sufficiently powerful bass. The bass voice has here the ushering in of the vocal parts of the Finale, on Beethoven's own words—"Oh Friends, these tones no longer." One must always admire the ingenuity with which Beethoven bridges over the gap between instruments and voices by means of the contrabasses.

The contrabasses had already been advanced from a subordinate position in orchestral work, by Beethoven in his fourth and fifth symphonies, but here their employment is an absolute innovation in musical history. They represent nothing less than the voice of a Redeemer rebuking the outcries of a suffering world, and the dialogue between them and the full orchestra, in the instrumental introduction to the finale, is the noblest in the whole musicale repertoire. England has always prided herself on her contrabasses in this portion of the symphony, but London itself might have envied the performance of the obbligato to contrabasses and violoncellos last night. There must have been some special rehearsals of these by themselves.

For all this, the first movement, as symphonic music, is the best portion of the composition, and this Dr. Muck read with great effect. The vague and misty character of the introduction, the thundering entrance of the chief theme, the great surges of the chromatic organ-point in the Goda, were all thrilling.

In the Trio of the second movement one must record the splendid oboe playing in a most difficult passage. The Scherzo also gave our kettledrummer a good chance, of which he made abundant use. His dialogue with the wood-wind, with his reiteration of an octave figure (F—F), was delicious, and in this movement the Wagner additions to Beethoven's rather defective scoring also made due effect.

Conductors no longer respect Beethoven's scores in every detail. The deaf composer has here made a few miscalculations in the orchestral combinations, which Wagner, Weingartner, Dr. Muck and others set aside without any chance of adverse criticism. This does not belong to the "individualisation" which some affected conductors indulge in only to be original. The tempo of the Trio of this second movement was taken at a splendid speed. Some conductors spoil the effect here by holding the orchestra back, making a merely rustis instead of a headlong effect. Altogether the Scherzo made the popular success of the three instrumental movements.

If the first movement is the most symphonic one, the slow movement is certainly the most beautiful and easily comprehended, even if at times a little cloying. A set of variations on two different and well-contrasted themes can be easily followed in all their embroidery, and Dr. Muck's reading gave them especial clarity. The horn did superb work in this movement as well as in the difficult passage in the Trio of the Scherzo.

GLOBE
NOV. 18, 1917

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Beethoven's Choral Symphony

Preparation for Beethoven's Choral Symphony, on Tuesday evening, in Symphony Hall, from the cheerful bulletins issuing from time to time therefrom, is going more smoothly than that preceding the first performance anywhere which took place May 7, 1824, in Vienna. Mr Krehbiel, the possessor of the transcript of the Conversation books of Beethoven, made by Alexander W. Thayer, has made interesting quotations from them from time to time in his column in the New York Tribune. In those covering this period are told the confusion prevailing up to the last hour before the performance of the Choral Symphony. "There was trouble about a permit or a dispensation." The Archbishop of Vienna, backed up by the police authorities, was unwilling to announce a mass or the portions of a mass for performance in a theatre. Only by appeal to a high authority at court, and then but a short time before the concert, was the permission obtained.

On some points Beethoven was irresolute, distract, on others obstinate. Preisinger was to be the bass. His deep voice found difficulty with the high F sharp in the recitative which introduces the choral part of the finale. Schindler begged to change the one note. To the last Beethoven was obdurate, then grudgingly consented. But it was Siepelt and not Preisinger who sang when the time came.

The thoughtful, tireless Schindler was vigilant in details. He had reminded Schuppanzigh about the additional wind instruments while there was yet time. It appears that Seipelt was invited to sing on extremely short notice. In Schindler's written conversation to the master, we read: "I'll drive at once to Seipelt, I hope he will do it with pleasure . . . I'll go also to Sontag and Unger to call on them. (Mme Henriette Sontag, the soprano, and Frauelein Karoline Unger, the contralto solist.) Wait for me here; I'll be back. Unger, too, is sitting at home with her throat in a bandage. She will be better by tomorrow. . . . The coachman is paid till 2 o'clock; it is now half-past 1; ergo—I found the two together comforting each other. That was only a joke. She has got to sing already today."

Schindler calls Frauelin Unger—after a written speech to Beethoven in which she tells him he "ought also to get married" that perhaps he "would become more industrious"— "A very devil of a good girl, full of fire and open-heartedness." Unger has been telling Beethoven the impending premiere of "The Diver," a new opera in which she was the king's son; Sontag, his daughter; Preisinger, his exiled brother; "Haltzinger, a damned prince." She adds: "If the dear good God would only mercifully enlighten you that you would soon write something better for us, I would not spare any pains—for you would surely be rewarded. I would come out every day."

Sketches of the symphony were made as early as 1815, although not finished until 1824. The first performance was at the Kaerthnerthor Theatre. The first performance in the United States was at a concert by the Philharmonic Society, New York, at Castle Garden, May 20, 1846. In Boston the symphony was not given until Feb 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Hayden Society.

The last performances in Boston occured at the final symphony concerts of the 28th season, April 30 and May 1, 1909. The soloists were Miss Laura Combs soprano, Mme Gertrude May Stein contralto, Theodore Van Yorx tenor and Myron W. Whitney Jr baritone. The chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mr Fiedler conducted.

Dr Muck has been desirous of giving the Ninth Symphony in Boston, but not until now has he considered a chorus available of sufficient numbers and able to give sufficient time to preparation. The organization by Stephen Townsend of a chorus to number nearly 400 has supplied the necessary choral body. Mr Townsend has been directing the preliminary rehearsals. Dr Muck met chorus and orchestra for the first full rehearsal last week, and will do so again tomorrow. The performance will occur Tuesday.

Striving to make the occasion notable, the management of Symphony Hall has engaged as soloists Miss Frieda Hempel, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, who is a Symphony Hall discovery from his debut at the "Pops," and Arthur Middleton, baritone.

Advertiser
(continued)

But it is the Finale which carries the public after all. It may not be "Vox et preterea nihil" with the average auditor, but the human voice always reaps the greatest applause. Besides this, the subject here treated is especially pertinent to the present time. Schiller in his "Ode to Joy" was singing of human liberty as well as of universal brotherhood. These topics always aroused Beethoven's greatest enthusiasm, as witness his "Egmont" overture and his Hercic Symphony, and, although the work was dedicated to the King of Prussia, an autocrat, that made no difference in the opinions expressed in tones. The Finale is certainly the voice of Liberty.

Tecnically one must single out for praise here the majesty of the performance of the religious movement which stands in the centre of the variations, between the third and fourth; the purity of intonation in the almost impossible passage—"High among the star pavilions"—and the presto of the end. When Beethoven rejoiced it was with Dionysiac fury, as at the end of "Fidelio" and at the close of this movement. Anything wilder in its jubilation cannot be imagined. Dr. Muck, the chorus and the orchestra weathered the storm successfully.

Post
Nov. 18, 1917

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

The long-expected performance of Beethoven's ninth or choral symphony will be given in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening, Nov. 20. Since the 10th of September the chorus has been having weekly rehearsals, first separately in choirs and then combined, all of them under the direction and training of Mr. Stephen Townsend. The formation of this chorus must be largely credited to Mr. Townsend. Invitations were sent out in mid-summer to nearly 500 singers of Boston, professional, semi-professional and amateur, and favorable replies came from [illegible]

Curiously enough, the proportion of sopranos was almost exactly what was desired for the formation of the different choirs, sopranos, altos, tenors and basses.

Since his return in 1912 Dr. Muck has been desirous of performing the ninth symphony and other choral works, but the lack of a proper chorus for this purpose—one which could give the necessary time for rehearsals—had always prevented it. Last Wednesday evening Dr. Muck held the first rehearsal under his own direction of chorus and orchestra. The second and final rehearsal, with all the soloists, will be held in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

The chorus will number about 400, and this has compelled the building in Symphony Hall of a new stage which is the largest that has ever been used there. The addition in front takes out the first seven rows of seats. The orchestra will be on a "rise," as usual, and surrounding them will be the chorus, placed in tiers.

The orchestra itself has been at work on the smyphony for several weeks, and nothing has been left undone by Dr. Muck, Mr. Townsend and the management to make the concert one of the most notable events of the musical history of Boston. Notable soloists, as shown elsewhere, have been engaged.

Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall, performance of Beethoven's 9th symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, with an assisting chorus of 400, and the following soloists: Frieda Hempel, soprano; Margaret Keys, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Arthur Middleton, bass. See special notice.

Advertiser (continued)

Points of deviation from the usual reading may be mentioned here. Dr. Muck greatly repressed the contrabassoon and bass drum at the beginning of the military portion in the Finale. Under the lead of any but the most expert conductor these single, isolated notes, become like comical grunts and are easily made ludicrous. The very florid bassoon work of the finale was most cleverly brought out. The shading of the recitative of the contrabasses was more varied than we have ever heard it read, and gained new meaning. The March in the Finale was more brilliantly interpreted than ever before. It had a note of triumph which was almost overwhelming.

The absolute surety of the chorus should make Mr. Stephen Townsend share in the laurels of Dr. Muck.

One ought to notice how, in the midst of most intense enthusiasm, Beethoven holds to good symphonic form, all through this work, a good object lesson to some of our moderns who break every rule of harmony and form, the moment they begin to boil.

All in all last night was a historic occasion in Boston's musical annals; the conductor and the orchestra attained their very highest pinnacle. We only wish that New York might hear this work thus given, and thus realize what Boston has done in the field of symphonic music.

n 161 OUTLOOK
ress: New York City. NOV 14 1917
e

MUSIC AND PATRIOTISM

ISSUES insignificant in themselves sometimes become symbols of great issues, and then themselves become significant. A classic instance is Great Britain's tax on the American Colonists' tea. Becoming a symbol of King George's enmity to the liberties of freemen, that minor tax started a war that created a nation. That was a tempest in a teapot that disturbed the world. Another disturbance on a smaller scale but of the same sort arose when Dr. Karl Muck, the German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declined to play at his concert "The Star-Spangled Banner." Though the country can survive a concert without the National anthem, it cannot long survive the failure of its people to hold the symbols of its sovereignty and freedom in reverence, and to resent any flouting of them. It was because, in declining to play the music of the National anthem, Dr. Muck used words that rankled, that the controversy which seemed a little thing became National.

The controversy arose when some patriotic citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, where the orchestra was to play, insisted on the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner." And this is what Dr. Muck said:

> Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

Dr. Muck's understanding of the suitable conduct of an alien enemy in this country is evidently defective. That aspect of the matter is no longer of great interest, since he has offered his resignation as conductor of the orchestra. What is surprising is his apparent view of the function and place of art in life.

Art is not a thing by itself. It is an expression of human ideals. As such it varies as human ideals vary. It varies from place to place and from time to time. That is why art, when it is honest, is bound to be national. Wherever there are national ideals there is national art, if there is ever any art at all. There is no better way to study the ideals of a nation than through its art.

Because of this truth the instinct expressed in some of the allied nations—France, England, and now America—to put a ban upon German music is not unreasonable. So far as German music is real music it expresses at least certain German ideals. And people in Allied countries just now are surfeited with the fruits of German ideals, and naturally do not care to feed on them further in their concert halls. The trouble has been that this instinct has expressed itself without discrimination. There are some ideals that are common to all men, Germans included, and some ideals that are a distinctive contribution of Germans to the riches of humankind. Would we banish our Christmas celebrations because the Germans had their Christmas trees and their Santa Claus? Surely not. Neither should we forget the music of Father Bach. Nor should we deny to ourselves the pleasure and the moral stimulus that come from listening to the noble symphonies and quartettes and other compositions of that German who through his art built imperishable monuments to ordered liberty—Ludwig von Beethoven.

There are German composers, however, whose music sets forth an ideal which German guns and German poisoned gases and German atrocities are making repugnant to the world. This is the ideal of lawless self-expression. It scouts the notion that the artist should hold himself subject to the laws of his art if he feels like bursting their bounds, or that the man, whether he be artist or not, should hold himself subject to moral laws if he wants to express himself by what is called "transcending" them. In music the great exponent of this ideal has been a German—Richard Wagner. His "Tristan and Isolde" is the glorification of this ideal applied to human conduct; his "Siegfried" is, to those who understand its import, a peculiarly offensive expression of this ideal as set for the ambition of a race. And Wagner's music, rich as it is in beauty of material, is an exemplification of this ideal in art. And Wagner himself pursued this ideal in his own life. It is said that he was a revolutionary and a Socialist, and therefore can hardly be called an exponent of modern Prussianism. This is to misunderstand the essence of Prussianism.

It is bad enough to have Prussianized Germany with one Kaiser; but it would be infinitely worse to have a Prussianized Germany consisting of nothing but kaisers. A Germany all of whose people were organized into a socialistic empire with the ideals of lawlessness of the Potsdam gang would be a fairly close approximation of the ideals that Wagner set forth. And the Wagner cult in music has naturally spread, together with the Kaiser cult in politics. As Hindenburg practices what Treitschke preached, so Richard Strauss in music practices (with an added element of commonplaceness) what Richard Wagner preached.

Art is national. It is not apart from life. It is life expressing itself by creative activity. And it is therefore of very great moment to a nation what nation's art influences it. The older German music, and those compositions of modern German composers who are out of sympathy with the Prussian ideals, we can well afford to cultivate. Brahms was a patriot, as evinced by his "Triumphlied" written to celebrate German victories; but there was nothing of the Prussian about it or about his music. But Brahms had too much artistic conscience and self-restraint to be acceptable to the modern Germany of Strauss and Hindenburg. He is classed by musical Prussians as a relic of an older and stupider day.

Our programme-makers have a chance to be discriminating in these days. If they give us German music, let it be that of the line of Bach and Brahms. But they have also the opportunity of making our people acquainted with the ideals of France. Adventurous the French are and always have been. They are always ready to explore new fields of art. But they know, what most modern Germans have forgotten, that whatever territory art occupies should become subject to art's laws. The French, with all their liberty, have never been anarchists. They never excuse their own deficiencies in either international relations or in art by saying that necessity knows no law. France has been teaching us by the conduct of her brave troops. She can teach us the same lessons by her music.

om SUN
dress: New York City.
NOV 21 1

OVATION TO DR. MUCK.

It Occurs After Performance of Beethoven Symphony.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—Every seat and every available foot of standing room was occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long awaited and eagerly expected performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck.

The chorus comprised the pick of the professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. To accommodate the singers and musicians a special stage had been built.

With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Dr. Muck's leadership and which opened the concert, the symphony was the only work on the programme. Its performance aroused enthusiasm on the part of the audience, which at the end took the nature of an ovation to Dr. Muck, the soloists, the orchestra and the chorus.

There were many music lovers present from New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

Herald
Nov. 23, 1917

Sopranos and the Ninth.

Mr. Jaber Lilly writes apropos of the performance of the Ninth Symphony last Tuesday: "Did you ever hear the music for the solo soprano well sung, or sung in tune?"

It is true that Miss Hempel was untuneful and ineffective on Tuesday night. No one would have thought she could have been the noble dame in "Der Rosenkavalier," whose singing was a constant delight when the Metropolitan Opera Company last visited us. Perhaps she was not "in voice"; perhaps she was frightened by the vocal difficulties; for the most accomplished singers sometimes have stage fright; the voice sticks in the throat; the knees are turned to water.

Yes, we have heard the ungrateful music that Beethoven wrote for the soprano sung admirably here by Mme. Clementine de Vere-Sapio in 1899 and 1900. In 1910 the voice of Mrs. Hissem de Moss was well suited to the music. Few sopranos, attempting the task, "do a good job," to use a favorite phrase of the late Warren Davenport when he wished to be most eulogistic.

Globe
Nov. 22, 1917.

Symphony Program

Mme Mabel Garrison, the soprano, who made such a favorable impression at her first appearance here in concert two weeks ago, will be the soloist at the Symphony concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week. She will sing the familiar florid aria from Mozart's "Il re Pastore," and then, for the first time in Boston, Zerbinetta's air from Richard Strauss' latest opera, "Ariadne on Naxos." The orchestral numbers comprise Haydn's Symphony "La Chasse" and three movements from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet"—Queen Mab, the love scene and the ball at the house of the Capulets.

Globe
11/22

Transcript Nov-19

WEEK-END CONCERTS

FROM ADROIT DEBUSSY TO ARTFUL KREISLER

The Jewels of the Parisian's Sea-Pieces as They Flash, Bright or Soft Upon the Ear—Mr. Boguslawski, Pianist, Tries Fortune Again—The Violinist in a Light Programme, None Too Rewarding to Him or His Hearers—Dr. Muck's Next Programmes

WRITES Debussy: "Music should seek humbly to give pleasure. Beauty should be perceptible; it should impose itself on us, or insinuate itself, without any effort on out part to grasp it. Look at Leonardo da Vinci, Mozart. These are great artists." To realize how true this is of Debussy's music, how very closely he belongs to the eighteenth century in ideals, only apply the test of "La Mer" as it was played again at the Symphony Concert of Saturday. Lucid, suave, discreet, perceptible without effort (once you are accustomed to the harmonic scheme)—music for pure delight's sake, written for the delectation of the elect, innocent of all that has racked the composers of the nineteenth century—social and race consciousness, the tragedy of life, the pondering of religion and philosophy, the search for the vital sap of nature and the soil. Indeed, Debussy does not contemplate the sea as the romantic poets did, nor have his sketches anything comparable to the narrative associations in the first act of "Tristan." Nature has no underlying significance in Debussy's music. It is merely an artificial form, a starting point, a convenience. "La Mer" does not attempt, in any considerable degree, to describe; it is anything but thoughtful; it appeals neither to the heart nor the intellect. Its whole aim is to give sheer, unadulterated, sensuous pleasure to those of super-refined musical perceptions. That is why the disgruntled academics keep repeating the witticism about the "musical Turkish bath."

To such complaints the triumphant and enduring answer is the force and the genius of "The Sea." Always, with geinus, it is not the "how" that matters, but the "what." You may say this no age for exquisite dallying in saloons with rare sensations; that the trend of the present in the arts is toward democracy; that we are for the stalwart, the natural, the simple, the elemental, the objective, and art must accord. But still the great colorist is not to be denied—he is as secure as he is subtle and polite. You may talk of the pending regeneration of communal art, and the decadence which has got to go, but it has not gone yet, by any means. Debussy is only beginning to take his strongest hold of the musical world, and that world, for all its beliefs ,is by no means ready to yield the Debussyan luxury. Only recall some of the exquisite colorings of "La Mer," and realize that they are the very pride of modern orchestral achievement—the hypnotic mystery of the nebulous, pervasive mass of tone sustained by magic figurations of the violins or the harps; the delicate punctuation of the resourceful instruments of percussion, the shimmering reverberation of which blends inimitably into the whole color-scheme; the gentle stimulus of the trumpets, gleaming forth in rapid, exciting rhythm; the melody of the 'cello solo in the first part, enhanced, almost imperceptibly, by the English horn; toward the end, where the various wood-wind sing eloquently against mysterious figures from the strings, of the most ingenious conceit, and flashes from the brass; the deeply sounded mystery, also barely perceptible, from the bass tuba, or the "grande caisse"; the lovely melody which shades into the formal procedure at the precise, the tantalizing point before satiety; the use of the celesta, which is the rarest of perfumes, although in less skilled hands it so often becomes vulgar tinsel. Conscience and reason may call this voluptuous and unhealthy, but musical instinct eagerly responds and points otherwise.

n OUTLOOK
ress: New York City.
e

MUSIC AND PATRIOTISM

ISSUES insignificant in themselves sometimes become symbols of great issues, and then themselves become significant. A classic instance is Great Britain's tax on the American Colonists' tea. Becoming a symbol of King George's enmity to the liberties of freemen, that minor tax started a war that created a nation. That was a tempest in a teapot that disturbed the world. Another disturbance on a smaller scale but of the same sort arose when Dr. Karl Muck, the German conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declined to play at his concert "The Star-Spangled Banner." Though the country can survive a concert without the National anthem, it cannot long survive the failure of its people to hold the symbols of its sovereignty and freedom in reverence, and to resent any flouting of them. It was because, in declining to play the music of the National anthem, Dr. Muck used words that rankled, that the controversy which seemed a little thing became National.

The controversy arose when some patriotic citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, where the orchestra was to play, insisted on the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner." And this is what Dr. Muck said:

> Why will people be so silly? Art is a thing by itself and not related to any particular nation or group. It would be a gross mistake, a violation of artistic taste and principles, for such an organization as ours to play patriotic airs.

Dr. Muck's understanding of the suitable conduct of an alien enemy in this country is evidently defective. That aspect of the matter is no longer of great interest, since he has offered his resignation as conductor of the orchestra. What is surprising is his apparent view of the function and place of art in life.

Art is not a thing by itself. It is an expression of human ideals. As such it varies as human ideals vary. It varies from place to place and from time to time. That is why art, when it is honest, is bound to be national. Wherever there are national ideals there is national art, if there is ever any art at all. There is no better way to study the ideals of a nation than through its art.

Because of this truth the instinct expressed in some of the allied nations—France, England, and now America—to put a ban upon German music is not unreasonable. So far as German music is real music it expresses at least certain German ideals. And people in Allied countries just now are surfeited with the fruits of German ideals, and naturally do not care to feed on them further in their concert halls. The trouble has been that this instinct has expressed itself without discrimination. There are some ideals that are common to all men, Germans included, and some ideals that are a distinctive contribution of Germans to the riches of humankind. Would we banish our Christmas celebrations because the Germans had their Christmas trees and their Santa Claus? Surely not. Neither should we forget the music of Father Bach. Nor should we deny to ourselves the pleasure and the moral stimulus that come from listening to the noble symphonies and quartettes and other compositions of that German who through his art built imperishable monuments to ordered liberty—Ludwig von Beethoven.

There are German composers, however, whose music sets forth an ideal which German guns and German poisoned gases and German atrocities are making repugnant to the world. This is the ideal of lawless self-expression. It scouts the notion that the artist should hold himself subject to the laws of his art if he feels like bursting their bounds, or that the man, whether he be artist or not, should hold himself subject to moral laws if he wants to express himself by what is called "transcending" them. In music the great exponent of this ideal has been a German—Richard Wagner. His "Tristan and Isolde" is the glorification of this ideal applied to human conduct; his "Siegfried" is, to those who understand its import, a peculiarly offensive expression of this ideal as set for the ambition of a race. And Wagner's music, rich as it is in beauty of material, is an exemplification of this ideal in art. And Wagner himself pursued this ideal in his own life. It is said that he was a revolutionary and a Socialist, and therefore can hardly be called an exponent of modern Prussianism. This is to misunderstand the essence of Prussianism.

It is bad enough to have Prussianized Germany with one Kaiser; but it would be infinitely worse to have a Prussianized Germany consisting of nothing but kaisers. A Germany all of whose people were organized into a socialistic empire with the ideals of lawlessness of the Potsdam gang would be a fairly close approximation of the ideals that Wagner set forth. And the Wagner cult in music has naturally spread, together with the Kaiser cult in politics. As Hindenburg practices what Treitschke preached, so Richard Strauss in music practices (with an added element of commonplaceness) what Richard Wagner preached.

Art is national. It is not apart from life. It is life expressing itself by creative activity. And it is therefore of very great moment to a nation what nation's art influences it. The older German music, and those compositions of modern German composers who are out of sympathy with the Prussian ideals, we can well afford to cultivate. Brahms was a patriot, as evinced by his "Triumphlied" written to celebrate German victories; but there was nothing of the Prussian about it or about his music. But Brahms had too much artistic conscience and self-restraint to be acceptable to the modern Germany of Strauss and Hindenburg. He is classed by musical Prussians as a relic of an older and stupider day.

Our programme-makers have a chance to be discriminating in these days. If they give us German music, let it be that of the line of Bach and Brahms. But they have also the opportunity of making our people acquainted with the ideals of France. Adventurous the French are and always have been. They are always ready to explore new fields of art. But they know, what most modern Germans have forgotten, that whatever territory art occupies should become subject to art's laws. The French, with all their liberty, have never been anarchists. They never excuse their own deficiencies in either international relations or in art by saying that necessity knows no law. France has been teaching us by the conduct of her brave troops. She can teach us the same lessons by her music.

om SUN
dress: New York City.
NOV 21

OVATION TO DR. MUCK.

It Occurs After Performance of Beethoven Symphony.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—Every seat and every available foot of standing room was occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long awaited and eagerly expected performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck.

The chorus comprised the pick of the professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. To accommodate the singers and musicians a special stage had been built.

With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Dr. Muck's leadership and which opened the concert, the symphony was the only work on the programme. Its performance aroused enthusiasm on the part of the audience, which at the end took the nature of an ovation to Dr. Muck, the soloists, the orchestra and the chorus.

There were many music lovers present from New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

Herald
Nov. 23, 1917

Sopranos and the Ninth.

Mr. Jabez Lilly writes apropos of the performance of the Ninth Symphony last Tuesday: "Did you ever hear the music for the solo soprano well sung, or sung in tune?"

It is true that Miss Hempel was untuneful and ineffective on Tuesday night. No one would have thought she could have been the noble dame in "Der Rosenkavalier," whose singing was a constant delight when the Metropolitan Opera Company last visited us. Perhaps she was not "in voice"; perhaps she was frightened by the vocal difficulties; for the most accomplished singers sometimes have stage fright; the voice sticks in the throat; the knees are turned to water.

Yes, we have heard the ungrateful music that Beethoven wrote for the soprano sung admirably here by Mme. Clementine de Vere-Saplo in 1899 and 1900. In 1910 the voice of Mrs. Hissem de Moss was well suited to the music. Few sopranos, attempting the task, "do a good job," to use a favorite phrase of the late Warren Davenport when he wished to be most eulogistic.

Globe
Nov. 22, 1917.

Symphony Program

Mme Mabel Garrison, the soprano, who made such a favorable impression at her first appearance here in concert two weeks ago, will be the soloist at the Symphony concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week. She will sing the familiar florid aria from Mozart's "Il re Pastore," and then, for the first time in Boston, Zerbinetta's air from Richard Strauss' latest opera, "Ariadne on Naxos." The orchestral numbers comprise Haydn's Symphony "La Chasse" and three movements from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet"—Queen Mab, the love scene and the ball at the house of the Capulets.

Transcript
NOV-19

WEEK-END CONCERTS

FROM ADROIT DEBUSSY TO ARTFUL KREISLER

The Jewels of the Parisian's Sea-Pieces as They Flash, Bright or Soft Upon the Ear—Mr. Boguslawski, Pianist, Tries Fortune Again—The Violinist in a Light Programme, None Too Rewarding to Him or His Hearers—Dr. Muck's Next Programmes

WRITES Debussy: "Music should seek humbly to give pleasure. Beauty should be perceptible; it should impose itself on us, or insinuate itself, without any effort on our part to grasp it. Look at Leonardo da Vinci, Mozart. These are great artists." To realize how true this is of Debussy's music, how very closely he belongs to the eighteenth century in ideals, only apply the test of "La Mer" as it was played again at the Symphony Concert of Saturday. Lucid, suave, discreet, perceptible without effort (once you are accustomed to the harmonic scheme)—music for pure delight's sake, written for the delectation of the elect, innocent of all that has racked the composers of the nineteenth century—social and race consciousness, the tragedy of life, the pondering of religion and philosophy, the search for the vital sap of nature and the soil. Indeed, Debussy does not contemplate the sea as the romantic poets did, nor have his sketches anything comparable to the narrative associations in the first act of "Tristan." Nature has no underlying significance in Debussy's music. It is merely an artificial form, a starting point, a convenience. "La Mer" does not attempt, in any considerable degree, to describe; it is anything but thoughtful: it appeals neither to the heart nor the intellect. Its whole aim is to give sheer, unadulterated, sensuous pleasure to those of super-refined musical perceptions. That is why the disgruntled academics keep repeating the witticism about the "musical Turkish bath."

To such complaints the triumphant and enduring answer is the force and the genius of "The Sea." Always, with geniuses, it is not the "how" that matters, but the "what." You may say this no age for exquisite dallying in saloons with rare sensations; that the trend of the present in the arts is toward democracy; that we are for the stalwart, the natural, the simple, the elemental, the objective, and art must accord. But still the great colorist is not to be denied—he is as secure as he is subtle and polite. You may talk of the pending regeneration of communal art, and the decadence which has got to go, but it has not gone yet, by any means. Debussy is only beginning to take his strongest hold of the musical world, and that world, for all its beliefs, is by no means ready to yield to Debussyan luxury. Only recall some of the exquisite colorings of "La Mer" and realize that they are the very pride of modern orchestral achievement—the [illegible] mystery of the nebulous, pervasive tone sustained by magic [illegible] violins or the large [illegible] tion of the resourceful instrumental cussion, the shimmering reverberation which blends inimitably into the whole color-scheme; the gentle stimulus of the trumpets, gleaming forth in rapid, exciting rhythm; the melody of the 'cello solo in the first part, enhanced, almost imperceptibly, by the English horn; toward the end, where the various wood-wind sing eloquently against mysterious figures from the strings, of the most ingenious conceit, and flashes from the brass; the deeply sounded mystery, also barely perceptible, from the bass tuba, or the "grande caisse"; the lovely melody which shades into the formal procedure at the precise, the fortifying point before satiety; the use of the celesta, which is the rarest of instruments although in less skilled hands it so often becomes vulgar tinsel. Conscience and reason may call this voluptuous art unhealthy, but musical instinct cancels the responds and points otherwise.

SUN

New York City.

NOV 21 1917

"THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER" AND THE MILITARY BAND.

If Sousa and His Men Could Get Baltimore to Give $20,000,000 What Could Other Soldier and Sailor Bands Accomplish?

The widespread discussion of "The Star Spangled Banner" in connection with Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra serves to illustrate how rapid has been the growth of patriotic feeling in the American nation since our entry into the war. It is not very long since the playing of the national anthem failed to arouse much enthusiasm in the average American audience, and indeed it often was received with disrespectful indifference, except by men of the army and navy, whose unfailing reverence for our flag and the noble traditions for which it stands might well be a model for the whole nation.

Now, in this fateful hour, our people begin to realize the spirit of the immortal verses composed by Francis Scott Key more than a century ago, during the bombardment of Baltimore by the fleet of that great nation with whom we are to-day fighting shoulder to shoulder in defence of liberty for the world.

It has been reported in the press that Dr. Muck expressed the opinion that patriotic airs were not in harmony with the symmetry of symphonic programmes, and should be reserved for "military bands and ballroom orchestras."

It would be interesting to speculate as to whether Dr. Muck would have expressed a similar opinion if requested to play "Die Wacht am Rhein" at a concert of the Berlin Philharmonic in war times. Certainly patriotic Americans, at a time when our country is engaged in the greatest conflict of all history, are justified in demanding that patriotism shall be placed above everything, and I hope the day will come when "The Star Spangled Banner" will mean to the entire population of the United States what "God Save the King" means to Great Britain, the "Marseillaise" to France or "Die Wacht am Rhein" to Germany.

In literary merit and patriotic fervor the words of our national song are surpassed by none. We frequently hear the music criticised, chiefly on the ground that it is difficult to sing, the range extending from the B flat below the staff to F above. But it should be remembered that in every audience there are both high and low voices, and that when supported by a full orchestra or military band the whole effect may be excellent.

If there were no singing at all—and the average American seldom knows the words of even the first verse—the anthem played as an instrumental number would be very impressive. No one who has heard it played by the full Marine Band on the steps of the grand old Capitol in Washington while "Old Glory" slowly fluttered down from the flagstaff above the dome, the audience of thousands with heads uncovered, and the soldiers and sailors scattered among them standing at rigid salute, could deny that the music has an impressive dignity, or that it is very much more appropriate to Key's verses than to the frivolous words of the old English drinking song for which the melody was originally composed ("To Anacreon in Heaven").

Neither the New York Symphony nor the Philharmonic orchestras considered the national anthem inappropriate at this time, and symphony orchestras all over the country are giving it the first place on their programmes. As David Stanley Smith, professor of music in Yale University, has admirably expressed it: "'The Star Spangled Banner' has been officially designated as the smybol of our national unity, appealing to the ear as the flag appeals to the eye. To object to its performance at a serious concert on the ground of the impossibility of its fitting into the scheme of a programme of orchestral music is not unlike a refusal to display the Stars and Stripes on our house because the striking colors kill the color arrangement of the flowers in the garden.'

In fact, as Professor Smith goes on to say, there is no more appropriate place for the national anthem than at serious concerts.

I rejoice that Government musicians, who hitherto have been hampered by labor union legislation preventing competition between Federal and civilian musicians, are now being permitted to take part in civilian parades and to give patriotic concerts. The recent concert tour of Lieutenant Sousa and his Great Lakes Naval Band of 250 has stimulated patriotic sentiment tremendously wherever they have appeared, and has had a large share in helping to sell Liberty bonds. The man who has had his emotions stirred by hearing Sousa play "Dixie" or "The Red, White and Blue" and "Over There" is likely to listen much more cordially to the Liberty bond salesman.

A most inspiring example of what martial music can accomplish to quicken the pulse and arouse national spirit was the great concert given in Baltimore under the auspices of the local Liberty Loan Committee by Sousa and his snappy navy lads before an audience of 25,000 people in the Fifth Regiment armory. There can be no question but that the huge audience was stirred to a pitch of patriotic fervor never before witnessed in Baltimore.

When it came time to pass the hat, the magnificent sum of $20,458,000 was subscribed for Liberty bonds, about $200,000 of which was in small subscriptions of $50 and $100.

No doubt the fact that the husky young musicians were all enlisted in the service of Uncle Sam, and that they were fighting for their country just as effectively with trumpets and drums as if they had carried rifles in their hands, had much to do with the enthusiasm of the audience.

But only United States musicians could have brought forth such a magnificent response to the call of their country. While civilian bands have done much to aid patriotism, it is not possible for them to compare in military snap, patriotism and discipline with members of the United States Army and Navy.

The experience of Baltimore can be repeated in many other cities, and when the time comes for the next Liberty Loan drive I hope the Government will authorize a concert tour for our finest military band, the famous musicians of the United States Marine Corps (the "President's Band") and will mobilize the full strength of all army and navy bands throughout the country for service in the great cause of patriotic music.

I am confident that splendid results will be achieved by such an organized use of Government musicians in street parades, open air concerts and a sufficient number of indoor pay concerts to defray expenses.

The Government is mobilizing all its other forces, why not its musicians?

EDWIN LITCHFIELD TURNBULL.

N.Y. HERALD - NOV. 23, 1917-

At Atlantic City, Singer Denounces Dr. Muck's Stand

Mme. Schuman-Heink Says Orchestra Leader Should Do Something for America.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—"Dr. Muck has made it bad for so many people," protested Mme. Schumann Heink, in a conversation to-day at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel, where she is recuperating from her recent illness. "I cannot understand it. Dr. Muck is faring well under the American flag. He should do something for the flag."

"It makes me very sad indeed. I must suffer because of this, although I have given four sons to Uncle Sam. Many other loyal American mothers must suffer. A newspaper man in Cleveland distressed me by asking where my sympathies lay in this war. My friends who wire present and heard him were highly indignant."

Mme. Schumann Heink will leave here for Boston on Friday.

Paul M. Warburg, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and Mrs. Warburg arrived at the Traymore to-day. They will remain a wtek.

Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Folsom of New York came here by automobile with Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Lange of Summit, N. J., and Mr. A. M. Glover of Jersey City.

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Scharman of Brooklyn are among the arrivals at the Marlborough-Blenheim.

R. J. Shaefer, of New York, was in the rolling chair procession on the Boardwalk this afternoon. He is at the Shelburne.

Misc Evelyn Protheroe, of Portchester, attended the concert this morning. She is at the Dennis.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Powers, of New York, are at the Alamac for a short sojourn.

Dr. and Mrs. Monic Lesser, of New York, were in the rolling chair procession to-day. They are at the Brighton.

Several residents of Coney Island are at the Fredonia for a short sojourn. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. George S. Scoville, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Newman.

A. T. Newman is among the arrivals at the Breakers.

A. W. Scharp is at the Royal Palace for a few days.

TRANSCRIPT. NOV. 22, 1917.-

Items and Announcements

Two numbers, one modern, one classic and both familiar, divide Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next week—Rakhmaninov's symphony in E minor, more than once heard and applauded at Symphony Hall and well established in Boston beyond most such contemporary pieces, and the overture, scherzo and nocturne out of Mendelssohn's nearly perfect music to Shakspeare's comedy of "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

POST, NOV. 18, 1917

ARTHUR MIDDLETON, BARITONE

ARTHUR HACKETT, TENOR.

LEFT, MARGARET KEYES, CONTRALTO; RIGHT, FRIEDA HEMPEL, SOPRANO, AT THE SYMPHONY HALL CHORAL CONCERT ON NEXT TUESDAY EVENING.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

163

TRANSCRIPT, NOV. 24, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

ZEST AGAIN IN PROGRAMME AND PERFORMANCE

A Remarkable Air from Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos"—The Piece and Miss Garrison's Notable Singing of It—Her Fortunes with Mozart—A Pretty Symphony by Haydn and Berlioz's Fervid Music of Romeo and Juliet Make Vivid Contrast

YESTERDAY for the first time since the agitation over the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Symphony Concerts began and ended, they seemed to be running quite true to form. The usual audience assembled; but in pleasant contrast to the uneasiness of a month past, with no anticipation of ulterior or unwonted happening. Indeed for it, as for orchestra and conductor, the playing of the national hymn as preface to the programme now passes for a few moments of respectful routine. The programme itself brought stimulating contrast in a little symphony by Haydn at one end and at the other three pieces from Berlioz's glowingly romantic music suggested by Shakspeare's youthful tragedy of "Romeo and Juliet." Between, Miss Mabel Garrison of the Metropolitan Opera House sang a familiar air from Mozart's opera, "The Shepherd King," and a much longer, unfamiliar, more intricate piece from Strauss's singular opera, as yet unknown to the theatre in America, of "Ariadne on Naxos." Good report, alike from her regular work in New York and from her recent appearance here in a concert of Sunday afternoon, had preceded the singer. Her girlish presence, her simple white frock, her ingenuousness and sincerity of manner quickly commended her to hearers as ready, after she had sung, with justly rewarding applause.

In her turn Miss Garrison sang more expertly and pleasurably than ever before in Boston on operatic stage or concert-platform; while one of her numbers—the air from "Ariadne on Naxos" was in itself of novel and piquant interest—the more for Dr. Muck's dismissal of the superfluous players from the stage that the accompanying little band of twenty-two instruments, seventeenth-century wise, might cluster closely about him and the singer. Finally, in the swift, fanciful, songful pattern-weaving and filigree-spinning of Haydn's symphony and in the fervent emotional speech and the vivid tone-picturing of Berlioz's music, orchestra and conductor were at the top of their bent. Seldom have they raced the air more swiftly and without break of melodic line or blur of figure and ornament than they did in parts of Haydn's music, and not often do even they accomplish such a feat of tonal and rhythmical virtuosity as they did in the Parisian's scherzo of "Queen Mab." As a youth of the Radio School at Cambridge neatly put it, "the zip had come back into the Symphony Concerts."

Zerbinetta's air from "Ariadne on Naxos," seemingly sung in early entirety in spite of preliminary report of a revised version from Strauss's own hand, fulfilled curious expectation. Never before had so much as a fragment of his rococo opera, as pendant to a satirical seventeenth-century comedy—Molière's 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme'"—been heard in public in Boston; never before—it is almost safe to say—had such a piece of ornate and intricate song penetrated within Symphony Hall. The circumstances in which the music is sung in the opera house, amusing as they may be, are not material to the impression it makes in the concert-room. From the stage need only come the diminutive orchestra, such as might have served any rich man's fete in the Paris of Molière and of Strauss's imaginary composer, that accompanies the singer—two first violins, two second, one viola, one violoncello, one double bass, one oboe, one horn, and so onward. Yet with this miniature orchestra Strauss is not one whit less masterful in kind and degree than he familiarly is with the Brobdinagian bands of some of his music-dramas and later tone-poems. With them he is mighty, multifarious, largely songful, endlessly intricate; while with his one-score and two, he is deft, fanciful, graceful in modulation, elegant in arabesque, sedulous of fine shadings and momentary implication, weaving his measures of lightly-sustained song and gently-fashioned declamation into his sparkling web of instrumental and vocal ornament. In some of his later music, Strauss has been prone to a willed complexity and heaviness, whereas in this air for Zerbinetta he is clarity and lightness, if by no means brevity, itself.

Moreover, into the measures of a piece fully twenty minutes long, Strauss has wrought nearly all the fioritura of ornate song that the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries invented and that the nineteenth, so far as it might, continued to practice. Admittedly, "Ariadne on Naxos" is designed as a rococo opera and so for it, as though half in mimicry and half in mockery, Strauss fashioned this epitome of the decorative ingenuities of song. According to precedent and prescription he makes them as tendrils upon a main stem of flowing melody, happily touched with playful or wistful sentiment or upon little branches, as it were, of spreading declamation. Seemingly he curls these tendrils out of mingled invention, scholarship, elegance; but now and then he gives one and another of them an ironic tweak or twist as though he were insidiously mocking at the form and the manner he is cultivating. As sympathetic but sportive Zerbinetta is not quite in earnest as she consoles Ariadne, mourning the inconstancy of men; so Strauss has a twinkle in his eye and an occasional twirl to his pen as he writes this endlessly embroidered music. Clearly he expects his hearers to perceive his mood with the undertaking and to smile with him over both. Unfortunately, the singer—Miss Siems in the original performance of the opera at Stuttgart; Miss Bosetti thereafter in Munich, Berlin and London; and now Miss Garrison in Boston and Chicago, has no opportunity, no will, to such enjoyments. Virtually, the air exacts all that the means and the methods of coloratura singing may accomplish, to say nothing of the lightly sustained song or the smoothly flowing declamation along the way. It asks a voice of exceeding range—to F above the staff—and suppleness; that voice must be light, limpid, finely tinted as well and by no means shrill or bodiless; the singer must not only ply a manifold, subtle and tireless artistry; but she must ply it with elegance and charm, suggesting also Zerbinetta's merry heart and playful manner.

All these necessities Miss Garrison's voice, skill, presence and implication of personage and mood brought to the music. Alike in the songful, the ornate and the declamatory measures she was far more apt and accurate, more lucid and luminous, more sensitive to the sensuous and suggestive quality of her song than she was a fortnight ago in her pieces of a Sunday afternoon. Not even Miss Bosetti was more supple and sure mistress of an incredibly difficult music than was she; while to it the youthful freshness of her tones and the young play of her fancy lent a charm that the veteran of the Munich Opera may not in these days summon. Indeed, it was this same freshness and charm, which only youth joined to skill and imagination may give, that most glamored Miss Garrison's singing of the familiar "L'Amero, saro costante" from Mozart's opera of "The Shepherd King"—cherished piece within easy memory of Mmes. Melba and Sembrich. Grant that either of them many bring—or could bring in recent past—to the music a finesse of phrase, a shading of melodic hue, rhythm and transition, a felicity of ornament, a sense of Mozartean simplicity and also of Mozartean [illegible] in which Miss Garrison cannot yet, in the nature of things, be ripe; yet the very youth of her tones, guided by no small intuition, artistry and resource, gave the air a flavor seldom gained in our concert halls, much too willingly content with aging, if highly reputed, singers. Is not Mozart, and his music with him, the "ever-young"? Be that as it may, in spite—or because—of Miss Garrison's youth and with certain vocal mannerisms still unsubdued (like the tendency to swell almost imperceptibly each passing tone), she did yesterday in both her airs not a little truly beautiful lyric and ornate singing. No; because we listeners and our generation of coloratura singers are passing into the fifties the voices and the arts of decorative song are not declining from the earth.

The symphony of Haydn at the beginning of the concert—in D major, commonly labelled "The Chase" and numbered five in Rieter-Biedermann's standard catalogue—and at the end the music of Queen Mab, the love-scene and the ball at the Capulets from Berlioz's vocal and instrumental symphony upon "Romeo and Juliet," stood in signal contrast. Haydn's piece was simplicity itself— almost too simple in the steady march, the alternate rise and fall of the suave folk-song transparently rhythmed and modulated, through the slow movement. So might voices and instruments have sung in the youth of music, if not in the youth of the world. As ingenuous and smiling, though at bottom hardly so artless was the racing interplay of the two melodies against the horn-calls—"The Chase"—through the finale. The humor of the bassoon—so soft and melodious as to contradict once more Coleridge's familiar line in "The Ancient Mariner"—gently flavored the quiet pace of the minuet; while the first Allegro ran course in sunny pattern- weaving. An orthodox pattern to follow and fill, to adorn with incidental arabesque, to touch here and there with little strokes of harmonic and instrumental color; motives light and transparent upon the ear, as simple and merry as, maybe, the talk of the folk around the castle of Esterhàzy where in the days of this symphony Haydn dwelt and worked; such motives to be developed into lucent and flowing. racing and sparkling melody, the whole to be touched lightly with appropriate sentiment, contrived and propelled with easy elegance, played with becoming virtuosity (as it surely was yesterday); and all to yield instant and effortless pleasure (as the music surely has from 1781 to 1917)—here is the sum and substance of the symphonies that Haydn wrote when he was dutiful composer and diligent leader of the castle-orchestra to his princes, Anton and Nicolaus.

Less than sixty years pass and in the full tide of the "romantic movement" in letters and the arts, Berlioz in 1839 writes in Paris his symphony upon "Romeo and Juliet." A hundred and thirty-six years after Haydn's pretty symphony was first heard by his noble patrons and their guests, and the two musics happen to stand—and in what contrast!—at opposite end of the programme of a Symphony Concer in Boston. Dr. Muck and the orchestra with him kindled to Berlioz as they do to almost all the distinctively romantic composers, and yesterday from their hands and lips the scherzo of Queen Mab seemed to twinkle and twitch upon the air as in fairy prank and tweak, in the lightest and most supple of rhythms, in sudden and piquant twist and caprice, in pause of momentary melody to frolic away again almost on the quickening instant. In the tone was the suggestion of Shakspeare's verse and Berlioz's music; in the progress of phrase and period was the very movement of both. Here, equally in substance and performance, was a perfectly delineative, a truly illusory music. Yet how free the form after Haydn's; how variously imaginative the ornament, color, suggestion.

Composer, conductor, orchestra passed to the music in which Romeo, beneath the balcony of Juliet, sings his love and thrice repeats and intensifies the ardor of his song. What depths of melody beside Haydn's thin and transparent measures, what fervors of passion, what force of romantic illusion, beside his play of pretty sentiment, his merely abstract elegance. To Haydn ear and fancy listened, pleasured; in answer to Berlioz—and to Romeo in the garden:

> My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
> My love as deep . . .

the whole listening being stirred in fire of response. Next and last to the tonal silhouette of the brooding Romeo awaiting his mistress in the corner of Capulet's great hall; the voice of his passion; the sweeping and colorful tonal-picturing of the fete itself; the end in diversified tonal turmoil. And how far was all this panorama of passion and spectacle—the one no less than the other touched with poetry—from the simple hunting-horns of Haydn's finale that lend his symphony in D major—probably one of many in that key—a characterizing name. Music had indeed gone forward in the fifty-eight years that separate this pattern-weaving of 1781 from this tonal poetry of 1839. But with it had moved also the understanding and the response of listening men as they still move and will aways move to the progress of music which, happily, also is world without end.

H. T. P.

TRAVELER
NOV. 24, 1917

Mabel Garrison Thrills Audience at the Symphony

Even the stoutest opponent of having soloists at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra must have felt a bit like yielding yesterday afternoon when he heard Mabel Garrison sing with the orchestra. The orchestral selections were Haydn's symphony, "The Chase," and the scherzo, garden scene and ball at Capulet's house from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Miss Mabel Garrison sang "L'Amero" from Mozart's "Il re Pastore" (violin obbligato by Mr. Witek) and Zerbinetta's aria from Richard Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos" (first time in this city).

The soloist comes from the ranks of the Metropolitan Opera company. Her voice is a true soprano, of good range, pleasing quality and excellently used. She has a pleasing stage presence and has the happy faculty of giving her audience the impression she enjoys singing fully as much as it does in hearing her sing.

Few are the singers who would dare attempt her selections of yesterday afternoon and fewer still are those who could score such a triumph. Many and enthusiastic were her recalls and if Symphony rules hadn't forbidden it there certainly would have been one or more encores. Mr. Witek's playing of the violin obbligato is entitled to a word of praise.

Dr. Muck gave a fine reading of the Haydn number and thrilled his audience with the Berlioz work.

The program of the concerts next week will include Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor, No. 2, and the Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 24, 1917

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Rakhmaninov and Mendelssohn Share Dr. Muck's Programme—The Society of Ancient Instruments Returns — Mmes. Melba and Schumann-Heink for Singers —Other Incidents

MUSIC of reflection and introspection of spiritual striving, aspiration, depression, clothed in full, modern, instrumental and harmonic panoply and music of humor and fancy, picture and lyric implication, delicately and inventively wrought in the fashion of the first quarter of the nineteenth century divide Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. The introspective modern symphony is Rakhmaninov's in E minor, more than once in the past eloquently played by conductor and orchestra and engrossing audiences by diverse quality and force of content and vigor or beauty of voice. The classic and fanciful music is the overture, scherzo and nocturne in Mendelssohn's music to Shakspeare's comedy of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," each perennial pleasure out of the playwrights and the composer's youth.

HERALD
NOV. 20, 1917.

NINTH SYMPHONY TONIGHT

The long-expected performance of the ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra and a specially chosen chorus of 350 singers, all led by Dr. Karl Muck, will be given in Symphony Hall this evening at 8:15. The concert will open with the national anthem. The performance of the ninth symphony requires considerably over an hour and nothing else will be played. The audience will be large, including a considerable number of distinguished persons from out of town. Parties are coming from Smith College, Springfield and Hartford. From New York several musical people are coming, including Mrs. J. J. V. Lanier and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer. From Philadelphia came yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Mabel Garrison, soprano, will be the soloist at the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. She will sing the familiar aria from Mozart's "Il re Pastore" and Zerbinetta's air from Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos," which will be heard for the first time. The orchestral numbers will be Haydn's Symphony, "La Chasse," and three movements from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," "Queen Mab," The Love Scene and Ball at the House of the Capulets.

MONITOR, NOV. 20, 191[illegible]

Concert Notes

The program of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Friday, Nov. 23, and on the evening of Saturday, Nov. 24, with Miss Mabel Garrison as soloist, is as follows:

Haydn, symphony in D minor, "La Chasse"; Mozart, aria from "Il Re Pastore"; Cherubini, overture, "Anacreon"; Strauss, Zerbinetta's aria from "Ariadne auf Naxos"; Berlioz, three movements from "Romeo and Juliette" symphony, comprising "Queen Mab," "Love Scene" and "Ball of the Capulets."

The program for the concerts of Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 includes the Rachmaninoff second symphony and the overture, nocturne and scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music.

The orchestra goes on its second trip to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington the week of Dec. 2.

RECORD
NOV. 20, 1917.

* * * * *

Many prominent musical people arrived in Boston today for the performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony at Symphony Hall this evening. From New York came Mrs. Samuel Untermyer and Mrs. J. J. V. Lanier. From Philadelphia came Mr. and Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Smith College also sent a large party.

* * * * *

They tell me that no man in Boston

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 19, 1917

Items and Announcements

Two novel pieces stand on the programme for the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next—the seldom heard symphony by Haydn with subtitle "La Chasse," and the air in which Zerbinetta in Strauss's opera, "Ariadne on Naxos" epitomizes the ornaments of song. The singer for this number and for an air from Mozart's opera, "The Shepherd-King" will be Miss Garrison, the young soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. In detail the programme is:

Symphony in D major ("La Chasse").....Haydn
Air from "The Shepherd-King".....Mozart
Overture to the Opera, "The Abencerrages."
Cherubini
Zerbinetta's Air from "Ariadne on Naxos."
Strauss
Three Movements from the Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet".....Berlioz
Queen Mab; Love Scene; Ball at the Capulets

Because of engagements that cannot readily be altered the project for a concert in Boston in December by the remarkable Russian violinist, Mr. Heifetz, has been abandoned. He will play here for the first time (as originally proposed) on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 20, in Symphony Hall.

HERALD
NOV. 26, 1917.

ORDER EXCLUDES DR. MUCK FROM CAPITAL DISTRICT

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19—Dr Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is an unnaturalized German and as such cannot enter the District of Columbia unless the President should exempt him from the provisions of his proclamation issued today, compelling Germans to leave the district and prohibiting their entrance or return.

The Boston Symphony orchestra gave its opening concert in Washington 10 days ago and has a number of others scheduled here. Seats have been sold for the series. In his opening concert Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner" after a protest had been raised because it had not been included in the program. Dr. Muck had said that it had not been included in the program because it was out of place.

163

TRANSCRIPT, NOV. 24, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

ZEST AGAIN IN PROGRAMME AND PERFORMANCE

A Remarkable Air from Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos"—The Piece and Miss Garrison's Notable Singing of It—Her Fortunes with Mozart—A Pretty Symphony by Haydn and Berlioz's Fervid Music of Romeo and Juliet Make Vivid Contrast

YESTERDAY for the first time since the agitation over the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Symphony Concerts began and ended, they seemed to be running quite true to form. The usual audience assembled; but in pleasant contrast to the uneasiness of a month past, with no anticipation of ulterior or unwonted happening. Indeed for it, as for orchestra and conductor, the playing of the national hymn as preface to the programme now passes for a few moments of respectful routine. The programme itself brought stimulating contrast in a little symphony by Haydn at one end and at the other three pieces from Berlioz's glowingly romantic music suggested by Shakspeare's youthful tragedy of "Romeo and Juliet." Between, Miss Mabel Garrison of the Metropolitan Opera House sang a familiar air from Mozart's opera, "The Shepherd King," and a much longer, unfamiliar, more intricate piece from Strauss's singular opera, as yet unknown to the theatre in America, of "Ariadne on Naxos." Good report, alike from her regular work in New York and from her recent appearance here in a concert of Sunday afternoon, had preceded the singer. Her girlish presence, her simple white frock, her ingenuousness and sincerity of manner quickly commended her to hearers as ready, after she had sung, with justly rewarding applause.

In her turn Miss Garrison sang more expertly and pleasurably than ever before in Boston on operatic stage or concert-platform; while one of her numbers—the air from "Ariadne on Naxos" was in itself of novel and piquant interest—the more for Dr. Muck's dismissal of the superfluous players from the stage that the accompanying little band of twenty-two instruments, seventeenth-century wise, might cluster closely about him and the singer. Finally, in the swift, fanciful, songful pattern-weaving and filigree-spinning of Haydn's symphony and in the fervent emotional speech and the vivid tone-picturing of Berlioz's music, orchestra and conductor were at the top of their bent. Seldom have they raced the air more swiftly and without break of melodic line or blur of figure and ornament than they did in parts of Haydn's music, and not often do even they accomplish such a feat of tonal and rhythmical virtuosity as they did in the Parisian's scherzo of "Queen Mab." As a youth of the Radio School at Cambridge neatly put it, "the zip had come back into the Symphony Concerts."

Zerbinetta's air from "Ariadne on Naxos," seemingly sung in early entirety in spite of preliminary report of a revised version from Strauss's own hand, fulfilled curious expectation. Never before had so much as a fragment of his rococo opera, as pendant to a satirical seventeenth-century comedy—Molière's 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme'"—been heard in public in Boston; never before—it is almost safe to say—had such a piece of ornate and intricate song penetrated within Symphony Hall. The circumstances in which the music is sung in the opera house, amusing as they may be, are not material to the impression it makes in the concert-room. From the stage need only come the diminutive orchestra, such as might have served any rich man's fete in the Paris of Molière and of Strauss's imaginary composer, that accompanies the singer—two first violins, two second, one viola, one violoncello, one double bass, one oboe, one horn, and so onward. Yet with this miniature orchestra Strauss is not one whit less masterful in kind and degree than he familiarly is with the Brobdinagian bands of some of his music-dramas and later tone-poems. With them he is mighty, multifarious, largely songful, endlessly intricate; while with his one-score and two, he is deft, fanciful, graceful in modulation, elegant in arabesque, sedulous of fine shadings and momentary implication, weaving his measures of lightly-sustained song and gently-fashioned declamation into his sparkling web of instrumental and vocal ornament. In some of his later music, Strauss has been prone to a willed complexity and heaviness, whereas in this air for Zerbinetta he is clarity and lightness, if by no means brevity, itself.

Moreover, into the measures of a piece fully twenty minutes long, Strauss has wrought nearly all the fioritura of ornate song that the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries invented and that the nineteenth, so far as it might, continued to practice. Admittedly, "Ariadne on Naxos" is designed as a rococo opera and so for it, as though half in mimicry and half in mockery, Strauss fashioned this epitome of the decorative ingenuities of song. According to precedent and prescription he makes them as tendrils upon a main stem of flowing melody, happily touched with playful or wistful sentiment or upon little branches, as it were, of spreading declamation. Seemingly he curls these tendrils out of mingled invention, scholarship, elegance; but now and then he gives one and another of them an ironic tweak or twist as though he were insidiously mocking at the form and the manner he is cultiveting. As sympathetic but sportive Zerbinetta is not quite in earnest as she consoles Ariadne, mourning the inconstancy of men; so Strauss has a twinkle in his eye and an occasional twirl to his pen as he writes this endlessly embroidered music. Clearly he expects his hearers to perceive his mood with the undertaking and to smile with him over both. Unfortunately, the singer—Miss Siems in the original performance of the opera at Stuttgart; Miss Bosetti thereafter in Munich, Berlin and London; and now Miss Garrison in Boston and Chicago, has no opportunity, no will, to such enjoyments. Virtually, the air exacts all that the means and the methods of coloratura singing may accomplish, to say nothing of the lightly sustained song or the smoothly flowing declamation along the way. It asks a voice of exceeding range—to F above the staff—and suppleness; that voice must be light, limpid, finely tinted as well and by no means shrill or bodiless; the singer must not only ply a manifold, subtle and tireless artistry; but she must ply it with elegance and charm, suggesting also Zerbinetta's merry heart and playful manner.

All these necessities Miss Garrison's voice, skill, presence and implication of personage and mood brought to the music. Alike in the songful, the ornate and the declamatory measures she was far more apt and accurate, more lucid and luminous, more sensitive to the sensuous and suggestive quality of her song than she was a fortnight ago in her pieces of a Sunday afternoon. Not even Miss Bosetti was more supple and sure mistress of an incredibly difficult music than was she; while to it the youthful freshness of her tones and the young play of her fancy lent a charm that the veteran of the Munich Opera may not in these days summon. Indeed, it was this same freshness and charm, which only youth joined to skill and imagination may give, that most glamored Miss Garrison's singing of the familiar "L'Amero, saro costante" from Mozart's opera of "The Shepherd King"—cherished piece within easy memory of Mmes. Melba and Sembrich. Grant that either of them many bring—or could bring in recent past—to the music a finesse of phrase, a shading of melodic hue, rhythm and transition, a felicity of ornament, a sense of Mozartean simplicity and also of Mozartean [illegible] in which Miss Garrison cannot yet, in the nature of things, be ripe; yet the very youth of her tones, guided by no small intuition, artistry and resource, gave the air a flavor seldom gained in our concert halls, much too willingly content with aging, if highly reputed, singers. Is not Mozart, and his music with him, the "ever-young"? Be that as it may, in spite—or because—of Miss Garrison's youth and with certain vocal mannerisms still unsubdued (like the tendency to swell almost imperceptibly each passing tone), she did yesterday in both her airs not a little truly beautiful lyric and ornate singing. No; because we listeners and our generation of coloratura singers are passing into the fifties the voices and the arts of decorative song are not declining from the earth.

The symphony of Haydn at the beginning of the concert—in D major, commonly labelled "The Chase" and numbered five in Rieter-Biedermann's standard catalogue—and at the end the music of Queen Mab, the love-scene and the ball at the Capulets from Berlioz's vocal and instrumental symphony upon "Romeo and Juliet," stood in signal contrast. Haydn's piece was simplicity itself— almost too simple in the steady march, the alternate rise and fall of the suave folk-song transparently rhythmed and modulated, through the slow movement. So might voices and instruments have sung in the youth of music, if not in the youth of the world. As ingenuous and smiling, though at bottom hardly so artless was the racing interplay of the two melodies against the horn-calls—"The Chase"—through the finale. The humor of the bassoon—so soft and melodious as to contradict once more Coleridge's familiar line in "The Ancient Mariner"—gently flavored the quiet pace of the minuet; while the first Allegro ran course in sunny pattern- weaving. An orthodox pattern to follow and fill, to adorn with incidental arabesque, to touch here and there with little strokes of harmonic and instrumental color; motives light and transparent upon the ear, as simple and merry as, maybe, the talk of the folk around the castle of Esterhàzy where in the days of this symphony Haydn dwelt and worked; such motives to be developed into lucent and flowing racing and sparkling melody, the whole to be touched lightly with appropriate sentiment, contrived and propelled with easy elegance, played with becoming virtuosity (as it surely was yesterday); and all to yield instant and effortless pleasure (as the music surely has from 1781 to 1917)—here is the sum and substance of the symphonies that Haydn wrote when he was dutiful composer and diligent leader of the castle-orchestra to his princes, Anton and Nicolaus.

Less than sixty years pass and in the full tide of the "romantic movement" in letters and the arts, Berlioz in 1839 writes in Paris his symphony upon "Romeo and Juliet." A hundred and thirty-six years after Haydn's pretty symphony was first heard by his noble patrons and their guests, and the two musics happen to stand—and in what contrast!—at opposite end of the programme of a Symphony Concert in Boston. Dr. Muck and the orchestra with him kindled to Berlioz as they do to almost all the distinctively romantic composers, and yesterday from their hands and lips the scherzo of Queen Mab seemed to twinkle and twitch upon the air as in fairy prank and tweak, in the lightest and most supple of rhythms, in sudden and piquant twist and caprice, in pause of momentary melody to frolic away again almost on the quickening instant. In the tone was the suggestion of Shakspeare's verse and Berlioz's music; in the progress of phrase and period was the very movement of both. Here, equally in substance and performance, was a perfectly delineative, a truly illusory music. Yet how free the form after Haydn's; how variously imaginative the ornament, color, suggestion.

Composer, conductor, orchestra passed to the music in which Romeo, beneath the balcony of Juliet, sings his love and thrice repeats and intensifies the ardor of his song. What depths of melody beside Haydn's thin and transparent measures, what fervors of passion, what force of romantic illusion, beside his play of pretty sentiment, his merely abstract elegance. To Haydn ear and fancy listened, pleasured; in answer to Berlioz—and to Romeo in the garden:

> My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
> My love as deep . . .

the whole listening being stirred in fire of response. Next and last to the tonal silhouette of the brooding Romeo awaiting his mistress in the corner of Capulet's great hall; the voice of his passion; the sweeping and colorful tonal-picturing of the fete itself; the end in diversified tonal turmoil. And how far was all this panorama of passion and spectacle—the one no less than the other touched with poetry—from the simple hunting-horns of Haydn's finale that lend his symphony in D major—probably one of many in that key—a characterizing name. Music had indeed gone forward in the fifty-eight years that separate this pattern-weaving of 1781 from this tonal poetry of 1839. But with it had moved also the understanding and the response of listening men as they still move and will aways move to the progress of music which, happily, also is world without end.

H. T. P.

TRAVELER
NOV. 24, 1917

Mabel Garrison Thrills Audience at the Symphony

Even the stoutest opponent of having soloists at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra must have felt a bit like yielding yesterday afternoon when he heard Mabel Garrison sing with the orchestra. The orchestral selections were Haydn's symphony, "The Chase," and the scherzo, garden scene and ball at Capulet's house from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Miss Mabel Garrison sang "L'Amero" from Mozart's "Il re Pastore" (violin obbligato by Mr. Witek) and Zerbinetta's aria from Richard Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos" (first time in this city).

The soloist comes from the ranks of the Metropolitan Opera company. Her voice is a true soprano, of good range, pleasing quality and excellently used. She has a pleasing stage presence and has the happy faculty of giving her audience the impression she enjoys singing fully as much as it does in hearing her sing.

Few are the singers who would dare attempt her selections of yesterday afternoon and fewer still are those who could score such a triumph. Many and enthusiastic were her recalls and if Symphony rules hadn't forbidden it there certainly would have been one or more encores. Mr. Witek's playing of the violin obbligato is entitled to a word of praise.

Dr. Muck gave a fine reading of the Haydn number and thrilled his audience with the Berlioz work.

The program of the concerts next week will include Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor, No. 2, and the Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 24, 1917

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Rakhmaninov and Mendelssohn Share Dr. Muck's Programme—The Society of Ancient Instruments Returns — Mmes. Melba and Schumann-Heink for Singers —Other Incidents

MUSIC of reflection and introspection of spiritual striving, aspiration, depression, clothed in full, modern, instrumental and harmonic panoply and music of humor and fancy, picture and lyric implication, delicately and inventively wrought in the fashion of the first quarter of the nineteenth century divide Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. The introspective modern symphony is Rakhmaninov's in E minor, more than once in the past eloquently played by conductor and orchestra and engrossing audiences by diverse quality and force of content and vigor or beauty of voice. The classic and fanciful music is the overture, scherzo and nocturne in Mendelssohn's music to Shakspeare's comedy of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," each perennial pleasure out of the playwrights and the composer's youth.

HERALD
NOV. 20, 1917.

NINTH SYMPHONY TONIGHT

The long-expected performance of the ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra and a specially chosen chorus of 350 singers, all led by Dr. Karl Muck, will be given in Symphony Hall this evening at 8:15. The concert will open with the national anthem. The performance of the ninth symphony requires considerably over an hour and nothing else will be played. The audience will be large, including a considerable number of distinguished persons from out of town. Parties are coming from Smith College, Springfield and Hartford. From New York several musical people are coming, including Mrs. J. J. V. Lanier and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer. From Philadelphia came yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Mabel Garrison, soprano, will be the soloist at this week's Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. She will sing the familiar aria from Mozart's "Il re Pastore" and Zerbinetta's air from Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos," which will be heard for the first time. The orchestral numbers will be Haydn's Symphony, "La Chasse," and three movements from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," "Queen Mab," The Love Scene and Ball at the House of the Capulets.

MONITOR, NOV. 20, 1917

Concert Notes

The program of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Friday, Nov. 23, and on the evening of Saturday, Nov. 24, with Miss Mabel Garrison as soloist, is as follows:

Haydn, symphony in D minor, "La Chasse"; Mozart, aria from "Il Rè Pastore"; Cherubini, overture, "Anacreon"; Strauss, Zerbinetta's aria from "Ariadne auf Naxos"; Berlioz, three movements from "Romeo and Juliette" symphony, comprising "Queen Mab," "Love Scene" and "Ball of the Capulets."

The program for the concerts of Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 includes the Rachmaninoff second symphony and the overture, nocturne and scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music.

The orchestra goes on its second trip to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington the week of Dec. 2.

RECORD
NOV. 20, 1917.

* * * * *

Many prominent musical people arrived in Boston today for the performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony at Symphony Hall this evening. From New York came Mrs. Samuel Untermyer and Mrs. J. J. V. Lanier. From Philadelphia came Mr. and Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Smith College also sent a large party.

* * * * *

They tell me that no man in Boston

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 19, 1917

Items and Announcements

Two novel pieces stand on the programme for the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next—the seldom heard symphony by Haydn with subtitle "La Chasse" and the air in which Zerbinetta in Strauss's opera, "Ariadne on Naxos" epitomizes the ornaments of song. The singer for this number and for an air from Mozart's opera, "The Shepherd-King" will be Miss Garrison, the young soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. In detail the programme is:

Symphony in D major ("La Chasse").....Haydn
Air from "The Shepherd-King".....Mozart
Overture to the Opera, "The Abencerrages."
Cherubini
Zerbinetta's Air from "Ariadne on Naxos."
Strauss
Three Movements from the Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet".....Berlioz
Queen Mab; Love Scene; Ball at the Capulets

Because of engagements that cannot readily be altered the project for a concert in Boston in December by the remarkable Russian violinist, Mr. Heifetz, has been abandoned. He will play here for the first time (as originally proposed) on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 20, in Symphony Hall.

HERALD
NOV. 26, 1917.

ORDER EXCLUDES DR. MUCK FROM CAPITAL DISTRICT

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19—Dr Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is an unnaturalized German and as such cannot enter the District of Columbia unless the President should exempt him from the provisions of his proclamation issued today, compelling Germans to leave the district and prohibiting their entrance or return.

The Boston Symphony orchestra gave its opening concert in Washington 10 days ago and has a number of others scheduled here. Seats have been sold for the series. In his opening concert Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner" after a protest had been raised because it had not been included in the program. Dr. Muck had said that it had not been included in the program because it was out of place.

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Tr. MONITOR NOV. 24, 1917.

SOPRANO HEARD IN "ARIADNE" ARIA

Miss Garrison Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra—Haydn and Berlioz Pieces

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, Conductor; Miss Mabel Garrison, Soloist—Sixth program, presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon of Nov. 23, 1917: "The Star Spangled Banner" (played at the opening, though not scheduled in the program book); Haydn, symphony in D major, "The Chase"; Mozart, aria, "L'amero, sarò constante," from "Il rè pastore"; Strauss, aria of Zerbinetta from "Ariadne on Naxos"; Berlioz, three movements of "Romeo and Juliet" dramatic symphony, comprising "Queen Mab" scherzo, "Garden Scene" and "Ball at Capulet's."

Miss Garrison perhaps intends to take the scene from "Ariadne" on the concert circuit of the United States, in the same way that Miss Marcella Craft not long ago took a scene from the Strauss opera, "Salome," singing it with orchestras here and there about the country. If she does so intend, she is not likely to find many sopranos desirous of snatching her honors away from her. For her exploit is one of enormous vocal difficulty, promising slender artistic reward and offering slight temptation to rivals. And yet the Zerbinetta aria, having such an accomplished soloist to sponsor it, will doubtless find its way into the programs of many important concert organizations, because, to begin with, it is a novelty, having had its first American performance a week ago, according to the Chicago Symphony Orchestra program book, when given by Miss Garrison and Mr. Stock's players; and because, furthermore, it is a kind of orchestral curiosity, requiring for the accompaniment a small group of instrumentalists of chamber-music skill.

The reason why this aria holds insignificant promise of artistic reward for the champion of it in the American concert field is not because of any defects of construction. For it has no such defects. Indeed, it can well be called a perfect piece of musical engineering, being, probably, without technical flaw in its entire framework. But the thing that is out of the way with it is the contemptuous manner in which the composer treats the voice as the means whereby speech is uttered and individuality is expressed. The music of Zerbinetta represents in comedy just the same thing that the music of another opera character of Strauss, Elektra, represents in tragedy. It puts a human being in the position of struggling to say something, when the power of saying it is hopelessly nullified. It makes the voice but an inarticulate musical instrument, as witless as a tube of wood.

More cunningly the word-conveying power of the voice is negatived in the comedy than in the tragedy, in that the melodic line of Zerbinetta is distorted until delivery of words becomes impossible, while the Elektra song is merely overpowered in a swirl of orchestration. The light and simple accompaniment of a piano and a few stringed and wind instruments in the Zerbinetta aria heightens the ridiculous plight of the voice and no doubt adds to the dramatic effect of the scene, when given in a theater, by emphasizing the silliness of the shepherdess herself, just as the powerful and complex accompaniment to the opera, "Elektra," emphasizes the madness of its Greek heroine. And without question the interest of the accompaniment played by the little ring of artists who surround Miss Garrison in her singing of the excerpt, will go far toward appeasing listeners for any uneasiness she herself may give them by her strange use of her beautiful voice. For in the accompaniment of the scene is found Strauss, the orchestral humorist, flashing forth at his wittiest.

This occasion was the only one, perhaps, in the annals of the symphony concerts when Haydn sounded big in comparison with Strauss, for the symphony, "The Chase," notwithstanding its fundamental lightness of tone plan, was played with full modern sonority. The feats of agility and the sharp contrasts of shading achieved by the great orchestra were interesting; but why take a pretty, Eighteenth-Century house of brick and try to rebuild it in imposing marble?

The "Romeo and Juliet" music of Berlioz rather suffered from a precise, geometrical presentation, as though it were used to block up a hole in the program. The great French romanticist is somewhat like Schumann, in seeming never quite to win the conductor's major attention.

9

NEWS
ess: Baltimore, Md.
NOV 20 1917

WILL NOT OPPOSE KREISLER RECITAL

But Some Feeling Against Austrian Is Shown.

Baltimore has not followed the lead of several other cities in attempting to prevent the recital Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, is scheduled to give at the Lyric next Thursday night, and nothing like organized opposition to his appearance has developed.

Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, who organized the big protest that prevented the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, is not opposing Kreisler's visit, and none of the patriotic societies has taken any formal action.

A number of people, however, are objecting to the event on the grounds that Kreisler is an alien enemy, and that by patronizing his recitals money is supplied by Americans for their enemies.

Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, the well-known Baltimore barytone, is among these. "I have a great admiration for Kreisler's supreme art," he said, "but all the same I do not think that he should be allowed to appear on the American concert stage. I do not see how any patriotic person could go to any concert given by an alien enemy."

AMERICAN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

BOSTON FOR DR. MUCK

Residents of Bean Metropolis Are Angry at Baltimore.

Up in Boston, where they hung a lantern in the old South Meeting House as a signal for Paul Revere, where the battle of Bunker Hill was fought and where the future of America hung in the balance of debate in old Faneuil Hall, they have an idea that Dr. Karl Muck, of Bavaria, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Kaiser's favorite musician, has been ill-treated by Baltimore.

Letters received here by a friend of one of those most intimately in touch with Dr. Muck, with C. A. Ellis, the business manager of of the orchestra; with Maj. Henry L. Higginson, its sponsor; with the men of the orchestra, and with a large and representative circle of Bostonians themselves, state this very plainly.

From the tone of these letters it is quite evident that Baltimore's action in refusing to allow the Kaiser's favorite musician, who was reported to have demurred at playing The Star-spangled Banner, conduct his band here has cost Baltimore all future concerts by the orchestra.

"You know," reads one of these letters, in referring to Major Higginson, "the old gentleman is 84 years old, and his very closest friends say that during the last few weeks he has aged more than during the last five years. I would not be surprised if Boston lost Dr. Muck, the orchestra and Major Higginson as well. I am pretty sure that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will never visit Baltimore again as long as Henry L. Higginson lives."

The man who received these letters from his Boston friend is a real patriot, and in replying to him pointed out that Dr. Muck, as one of the most intelligent enemy aliens in the country and one of the intimates of Kaiser Wilhelm, could have done nothing quite so graceful as insisting on giving up his baton at the beginning of hostilities and should have returned to Germany and its ruler with dignified speed.

TIMES
s: Washington, D. C.

BLIND LEADER OF BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS IN STREETS

Pieter Van Der Meer, pupil of Ysaye, one time concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared recently in Kansas City, but the concerts he gave were unnoticed except by the musically discerning.

For Pieter Van De Meer played for dimes and nickels and pennies, occasionally quarters, on the streets. One time the ever popular "Humoresque," by Dvorak, assembled such a large crowd that a policeman had to disperse it. But even then there were only a few dimes and nickels and pennies in the dent of the crown of Pietres' hat.

Still it was with a patient smile and a touch of the grand manner of the old world studio that he picked up hat and violin case and trudged on.

"Four days have I been by Kansas City," he said when questioned and assured that his superior playing was appreciated. "Four days I have been here and now I have $22—almost enough money to go to the next stage of my journey. In Chicago I must play again on the street if I cannot get an opportunity to play in a regular concert, and in time, if the weather gets not too cold, I shall make enough money to travel to New York. There I shall find opportunities at least better than this."

Pieter came to this country in 1911 from his home in Liege, Belgium, to become concert master of the Wanamaker Orchestra in New York. Max Fiedler had known him in Antwerp and soon got him to join the Boston Symphony. But in six months' time Fiedler was succeeded by Dr. Carl Muck as conductor and Van Der Meer was succeeded also.

He went to Alabama, where he had a sister. There measles blinded him. A friend arranged a trip to California in the hope that the climate would cure him. But the violinist still is almost blind. He is determined to make his way back to New York. He had only enough money to pay his way to Kansas City.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
ate

Dr. Karl Muck Faces Ban in Pittsburgh

Exclusion Order Follows Refusal to Permit Dr. Kunwald to Appear

[Special Correspondence]

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 22.—Dr. Ernest Kunwald, director of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was barred from conducting a concert in this city tonight. Director Hubbard of the Department of Public Safety barred the Cincinnati conductor because, while it had been ascertained that Dr. Kunwald was not an Austrian resident, as had been reported, he "appears to be an Austrian subject."

In refusing to permit the appearance of Dr. Kunwald, Director Hubbard, however, did not refuse a permit for holding the concert, announcing that it could be held provided no German music was played and that Kunwald did not appear as conductor. Local promotors, however, postponed the concert because they were unable to obtain another conductor in time.

Dr. Kunwald is the second Austrian to be excluded from this city. Fritz Kreisler was the first, and according to a statement issued by Hubbard all other Austrians and Germans will be barred from the city, which means, practically, that Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, will not be permitted to appear here in January, as scheduled.

m EVENING SUN
dress: New York City
NOV 22 19
t

SCHUMANN-HEINK SCORES MUCK

Mother With Three Sons in Service Distressed by Incident.

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 22.—Mme. Schumann-Heink issued an emphatic denial here to-day of reports that she abrogated her engagement in Rochester, N. Y., because of a disagreement over a Wagnerian programme.

"My loyalty cannot be questioned," she said. "I have given three sons to the nation, two for the navy and one for the army, and I may never see them again."

Then she took a fling at Dr. Muck, the Boston director, when she said:

"If Dr. Muck was in England he would learn soon enough how to play 'God Save the King!' He has profited very largely under the Star Spangled Banner and he ought to be ready, as every loyal American is, to do something for the flag. The Muck episode has caused me and many other American mothers great distress."

om SUN
dress: New York City.
te NOV 22

ON GUARD!

The Time Has Come for an Exhibition of Undiluted Americanism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Mr. Stanley of Holyoke is right. There are more of those dirty German sneaks downtown than any one has any idea of, and they are going around grinning and sneering at the inertia of the United States authorities. They ought to get a taste, and that right quickly, of the hardships that our boys are undergoing on the other side. It is sad to think of the few desolate homes with sons already missing; the "few" will change to "many" soon, and here we have those devils basking in comfort, and to the eternal shame of some Americans (sic) they are actually employed in offices and, getting down to the truth of the matter, are being aided by those Americans. It is a shame. Does this not amount to a contravention of the law against "aiding the enemy"?

Let the Kreislers, Mucks, et al. go to the devil. They only come over here for our dollars. They scoff at everything American. All honor to Providence, Baltimore, Sewickley, &c.

Let us be all American and not be a lot of white livered apologists. It's coming to that, so we might as well get on the job. JAMES MCG. BROWN.

NEW YORK, November 21.

REPUBLICAN
ress Springfield, Mass.
NOV 21 1917

NINTH SYMPHONY PLAYED

Beethoven Work Performed in Boston by Symphony Orchestra and Chorus

Every seat was occupied in Symphony hall, Boston, last night when the long-awaited performance of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" was given by the Boston symphony orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers under the direction of Dr Karl Muck. The chorus comprised professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. To accommodate the 500 singers and musicians a special stage had been built.

With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Dr Muck's leadership at the opening of the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused great enthusiasm.

Tr MONITOR NOV. 24, 1917.

SOPRANO HEARD IN "ARIADNE" ARIA

Miss Garrison Soloist With Boston Symphony Orchestra—Haydn and Berlioz Pieces

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, Conductor; Miss Mabel Garrison, Soloist—Sixth program, presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon of Nov. 23, 1917: "The Star Spangled Banner" (played at the opening, though not scheduled in the program book); Haydn, symphony in D major, "The Chase"; Mozart, aria, "L'amerò, sarò constante," from "Il rè pastore"; Strauss, aria of Zerbinetta from "Ariadne on Naxos"; Berlioz, three movements of "Romeo and Juliet" dramatic symphony, comprising "Queen Mab" scherzo, "Garden Scene" and "Ball at Capulet's."

Miss Garrison perhaps intends to take the scene from "Ariadne" on the concert circuit of the United States, in the same way that Miss Marcella Craft not long ago took a scene from the Strauss opera, "Salome," singing it with orchestras here and there about the country. If she does so intend, she is not likely to find many sopranos desirous of snatching her honors away from her. For her exploit is one of enormous vocal difficulty, promising slender artistic reward and offering slight temptation to rivals. And yet the Zerbinetta aria, having such an accomplished soloist to sponsor it, will doubtless find its way into the programs of many important concert organizations, because, to begin with, it is a novelty, having had its first American performance a week ago, according to the Chicago Symphony Orchestra program book, when given by Miss Garrison and Mr. Stock's players; and because, furthermore, it is a kind of orchestral curiosity, requiring for the accompaniment a small group of instrumentalists of chamber-music skill.

The reason why this aria holds insignificant promise of artistic reward for the champion of it in the American concert field is not because of any defects of construction. For it has no such defects. Indeed, it can well be called a perfect piece of musical engineering, being, probably, without technical flaw in its entire framework. But the thing that is out of the way with it is the contemptuous manner in which the composer treats the voice as the means whereby speech is uttered and individuality is expressed. The music of Zerbinetta represents in comedy just the same thing that the music of another opera character of Strauss, Elektra, represents in tragedy. It puts a human being in the position of struggling to say something, when the power of saying it is hopelessly nullified. It makes the voice but an inarticulate musical instrument, as witless as a tube of wood.

More cunningly the word-conveying power of the voice is negatived in the comedy than in the tragedy, in that the melodic line of Zerbinetta is distorted until delivery of words becomes impossible, while the Elektra song is merely overpowered in a swirl of orchestration. The light and simple accompaniment of a piano and a few stringed and wind instruments in the Zerbinetta aria heightens the ridiculous plight of the voice and no doubt adds to the dramatic effect of the scene, when given in a theater, by emphasizing the silliness of the shepherdess herself, just as the powerful and complex accompaniment to the opera, "Elektra," emphasizes the madness of its Greek heroine. And without question the interest of the accompaniment played by the little ring of artists who surround Miss Garrison in her singing of the excerpt, will go far toward appeasing listeners for any uneasiness she herself may give them by her strange use of her beautiful voice. For in the accompaniment of the scene is found Strauss, the orchestral humorist, flashing forth at his wittiest.

This occasion was the only one, perhaps, in the annals of the symphony concerts when Haydn sounded big in comparison with Strauss, for the symphony, "The Chase," notwithstanding its fundamental lightness of tone plan, was played with full modern sonority. The feats of agility and the sharp contrasts of shading achieved by the great orchestra were interesting; but why take a pretty, Eighteenth-Century house of brick and try to rebuild it in imposing marble?

The "Romeo and Juliet" music of Berlioz rather suffered from a precise, geometrical presentation, as though it were used to block up a hole in the program. The great French romanticist is somewhat like Schumann, in seeming never quite to win the conductor's major attention.

NEWS
ess: Baltimore, Md.

WILL NOT OPPOSE KREISLER RECITAL

But Some Feeling Against Austrian Is Shown.

Baltimore has not followed the lead of several other cities in attempting to prevent the recital Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, is scheduled to give at the Lyric next Thursday night, and nothing like organized opposition to his appearance has developed.

Ex-Governor Edwin Warfield, who organized the big protest that prevented the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city, is not opposing Kreisler's visit, and none of the patriotic societies has taken any formal action.

A number of people, however, are objecting to the event on the grounds that Kreisler is an alien enemy, and that by patronizing his recitals money is supplied by Americans for their enemies.

Dr. B. Merrill Hopkinson, the well-known Baltimore barytone, is among these. "I have a great admiration for Kreisler's supreme art," he said, "but all the same I do not think that he should be allowed to appear on the American concert stage. I do not see how any patriotic person could go to any concert given by an alien enemy."

AMERICAN
ss: Baltimore, Md.

BOSTON FOR DR. MUCK

Residents of Bean Metropolis Are Angry at Baltimore.

Up in Boston, where they hung a lantern in the old South Meeting House as a signal for Paul Revere, where the battle of Bunker Hill was fought and where the future of America hung in the balance of debate in old Faneuil Hall, they have an idea that Dr. Karl Muck, of Bavaria, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Kaiser's favorite musician, has been ill-treated by Baltimore.

Letters received here by a friend of one of those most intimately in touch with Dr. Muck, with C. A. Ellis, the business manager of of the orchestra; with Maj. Henry L. Higginson, its sponsor; with the men of the orchestra, and with a large and representative circle of Bostonians themselves, state this very plainly.

From the tone of these letters it is quite evident that Baltimore's action in refusing to allow the Kaiser's favorite musician, who was reported to have demurred at playing The Star-spangled Banner, conduct his band here has cost Baltimore all future concerts by the orchestra.

"You know," reads one of these letters, in referring to Major Higginson, "the old gentleman is 84 years old, and his very closest friends say that during the last few weeks he has aged more than during the last five years. I would not be surprised if Boston lost Dr. Muck, the orchestra and Major Higginson as well. I am pretty sure that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will never visit Baltimore again as long as Henry L. Higginson lives."

The man who received these letters from his Boston friend is a real patriot, and in replying to him pointed out that Dr. Muck, as one of the most intelligent enemy aliens in the country and one of the intimates of Kaiser Wilhelm, could have done nothing quite so graceful as insisting on giving up his baton at the beginning of hostilities and should have returned to Germany and its ruler with dignified speed.

TIMES
s: Washington, D. C.

BLIND LEADER OF BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS IN STREETS

Pieter Van Der Meer, pupil of Ysaye, one time concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared recently in Kansas City, but the concerts he gave were unnoticed except by the musically discerning.

For Pieter Van De Meer played for dimes and nickels and pennies, occasionally quarters, on the streets. One time the ever popular "Humoresque," by Dvorak, assembled such a large crowd that a policeman had to disperse it. But even then there were only a few dimes and nickels and pennies in the dent of the crown of Pietres' hat.

Still it was with a patient smile and a touch of the grand manner of the old world studio that he picked up hat and violin case and trudged on.

"Four days have I been by Kansas City," he said when questioned and assured that his superior playing was appreciated. "Four days I have been here and now I have $22—almost enough money to go to the next stage of my journey. In Chicago I must play again on the street if I cannot get an opportunity to play in a regular concert, and in time, if the weather gets not too cold, I shall make enough money to travel to New York. There I shall find opportunities at least better than this."

Pieter came to this country in 1911 from his home in Liege, Belgium, to become concert master of the Wanamaker Orchestra in New York. Max Fiedler had known him in Antwerp and soon got him to join the Boston Symphony. But in six months' time Fiedler was succeeded by Dr. Carl Muck as conductor and Van Der Meer was succeeded also.

He went to Alabama, where he had a sister. There measles blinded him. A friend arranged a trip to California in the hope that the climate would cure him. But the violinist still is almost blind. He is determined to make his way back to New York. He had only enough money to pay his way to Kansas City.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
ate

Dr. Karl Muck Faces Ban in Pittsburgh

Exclusion Order Follows Refusal to Permit Dr. Kunwald to Appear

[Special Correspondence]

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 22.—Dr. Ernest Kunwald, director of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was barred from conducting a concert in this city tonight. Director Hubbard of the Department of Public Safety barred the Cincinnati conductor because, while it had been ascertained that Dr. Kunwald was not an Austrian reservist, as had been reported, he "appears to be an Austrian subject."

In refusing to permit the appearance of Dr. Kunwald, Director Hubbard, however, did not refuse a permit for holding the concert, announcing that it could be held provided no German music was played and that Kunwald did not appear as conductor. Local promotors, however, postponed the concert because they were unable to obtain another conductor in time.

Dr. Kunwald is the second Austrian to be excluded from this city. Fritz Kreisler was the first, and according to a statement issued by Hubbard all other Austrians and Germans will be barred from the city, which means, practically, that Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, will not be permitted to appear here in January, as scheduled.

m EVENING SUN
dress: New York City
te

SCHUMANN-HEINK SCORES MUCK

Mother With Three Sons in Service Distressed by Incident.

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 22.—Mme. Schumann-Heink issued an emphatic denial here to-day of reports that she abrogated her engagement in Rochester, N. Y., because of a disagreement over a Wagnerian programme.

"My loyalty cannot be questioned," she said. "I have given three sons to the nation, two for the navy and one for the army, and I may never see them again."

Then she took a fling at Dr. Muck, the Boston director, when she said:

"If Dr. Muck was in England he would learn soon enough how to play 'God Save the King!' He has profited very largely under the Star Spangled Banner and he ought to be ready, as every loyal American is, to do something for the flag. The Muck episode has caused me and many other American mothers great distress."

om SUN
dress: New York City.
te NOV 22

ON GUARD!

The Time Has Come for an Exhibition of Undiluted Americanism.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Mr. Stanley of Holyoke is right. There are more of those dirty German sneaks downtown than any one has any idea of, and they are going around grinning and sneering at the inertia of the United States authorities. They ought to get a taste, and that right quickly, of the hardships that our boys are undergoing on the other side. It is sad to think of the few desolate homes with sons already missing; the "few" will change to "many" soon, and here we have those devils basking in comfort, and to the eternal shame of some Americans (sic) they are actually employed in offices and, getting down to the truth of the matter, are being aided by those Americans. It is a shame. Does this not amount to a contravention of the law against "aiding the enemy"?

Let the Kreislers, Mucks, et al. go to the devil. They only come over here for our dollars. They scoff at everything American. All honor to Providence, Baltimore, Sewickley, &c.

Let us be all American and not be a lot of white livered apologists. It's coming to that, so we might as well get on the job. JAMES MCG. BROWN.

NEW YORK, November 21.

REPUBLICAN
ress Springfield, Mass.
NOV 21 1917

NINTH SYMPHONY PLAYED

Beethoven Work Performed in Boston by Symphony Orchestra and Chorus

Every seat was occupied in Symphony hall, Boston, last night when the long-awaited performance of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" was given by the Boston symphony orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers under the direction of Dr Karl Muck. The chorus comprised professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. To accommodate the 500 singers and musicians a special stage had been built.

With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Dr Muck's leadership at the opening of the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused great enthusiasm.

m PUBLIC Ledger

lress: NOV 21 1917 PA.

NINTH SYMPHONY PRODUCED

Four Hundred Singers Join With Orchestra at Boston

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—Every seat and all available standing room were occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long-awaited performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. The chorus comprised many of the best professiona' and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

To accommodate the singers and musicians a special stage had been built. With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Doctor Muck's leadership to open the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused remarkable enthusiasm, which at the end took the nature of an ovation. There were many distinguished music lovers present from Philadelphia, New York, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

ADVERTISER
-NOV. 28, 1917-

FINDS SYMPHONIC KNITTING DE TROP

Socks for Soldiers Patriotic Duty, but Out of Place at Concerts, Says Critic

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

During the recent Symphony concerts I was somewhat astonished to see an arm stretched up in the air during the Berlioz "Garden Scene" and then disappear again. Watching with aroused interest, I saw hands moving to and fro in another part of the hall. Pursuing my investigation still further I saw the glint of steel in feminine hands. They were not armed with stilettos and were not intent upon murdering the admirers of Dr. Muck, but were knitting, presumably for the soldiers.

It was scarcely possible to follow the poetic beauty of the music while these hands obtruded themselves, shuttling to and fro in an irregular rhythm, possibly 5-4 or 7-4, with one particularly rapid one in 24-16.

Certainly this was the right thing, but emphatically in the wrong place. In Paris, during the reign of terror, some women became famous by knitting while seated around the guillotine, watching the heads falling, without dropping a single stitch. I do not intend to compare our Boston symphonic knitters with the dreadful Tricoteuses of 1793, but I venture to consider their benevolent work almost as much out of place as the more ancient one.

To follow the glories of a great symphony and to manufacture mittens and socks are occupations incompatible with each other. But the neighboring non-knitting auditors are the chief sufferers. They find themselves counting the stitches rather than the measures; they watch the thread of wool rather than the thread of the melody; they follow the swing of the needles rather than the swing of the baton. Of course this must be taken as the opinion of a mere man. It may be that some feminine auditors are not thus diverted from the music.

Another point that strikes one strangely is connected with the performance of the "Star Spangled Banner," at the beginning of each concert. In England they give "God Save the King," in connection with almost every public occasion, but it is regarded in the light of a musical grace or a benediction. But in Symphony Hall a good many applaud loudly at the end of the anthem. This seems about as strange as applauding an eloquent prayer would be.

During the Summer, at Eastern Point, Gloucester, I had a vivid experience of the "reductio ad absurdum," of this custom. In the program of the concert it so happened that three national songs followed each other. "The Star Spangled Banner" came first and all appropriately stood up, inappropriately applauded, and then sat down again. "Glory Hallelujah" immediately followed and all got up and then sat down again. They were scarcely seated when the "Marseillaise," brought them all up standing again. Then they were allowed a period of repose. There were knitting women here also and they followed the mild gymnastic exercises evidently without dropping a stitch, nor a ball of yarn.

I hope that the "Star Spangled Banner" will become an outward sign of patriotism, as "God Save the King" has become in England, but I also hope that the audience will never be asked to sing it, for if they do, disaster, musical shipwreck, will almost certainly follow, for the melody is the most difficult national song in existence. We may certainly envy the English the excellent singability of their national anthem. No wonder that it has been borrowed by four other nations.

Herald Nov. 18 1917.

Beethoven's ninth symphony [illegible] will be performed here next [illegible] night, was last played in Boston [illegible] a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra led by Mr. Fiedler, April 24, 1910. The Cecilia Society was the chorus and the solo singers were Mrs. Hissem de Moss, Miss Margaret Keyes, Berrick von Norden and Frederick Weld.

The first performance in Boston was on Feb. 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Haydn Society. The solo singers were Anna Stone, Miss S. Humphrey, J. H. Low and Thomas Ball, the sculptor. Carl Bergmann conducted. The symphony was repeated April 2, 1853.

The symphony has been performed at these concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

1882, March 11—Mrs. Humphrey Allen (now Mrs. George F. Babbitt), Mary H. How, C. R. Adams, V. Cirillo.
1883, March 31—Katherine van Arnheim, Gertrude Edmands, Jules Jordan, V. Cirillo.
1884, March 22—Mrs. Henschel, Louise Rollwagen, T. J. Toedt, Max Heinrich.
1886, March 27—Mme. Fursch-Madi, Mary H. How, T. J. Toedt, C. E. Martin.
1888, April 28—Mme. Kalisch-Lehmann, Louise Meisslinger, Paul Kalisch, Emil Fischer.
1892, Dec. 17—Priscilla White, Louise Leimer, W. J. Winch, H. Meyn.
1894, March 17—Adagio and Scherzo.
1897, April 24—Movements 1, 2, 3.
1898, March 5—Movements 1, 2, 3.
1899, April 29—Mme. de Vere-Sapio, Miss Stein, Evan Williams, Ericeson Bushnell.
1900, April 28—Mme. de Vere-Saplo, Miss Stein, Ben Davies, Herbert Witherspoon.
1909, May 1—Louise Combs, Miss Stein, Theodore van Yorx, M. W. Whitney, Jr.

On April 13, 1904, the symphony was performed at a Pension Fund concert with the assistance of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Bradbury and Woltmann, and Messrs. Van Yorx and M. W. Whitney, Jr.

Other performances in Boston: At concerts in Music Hall led by Carl Zerrahn, March 26 and April 2, 1859 (Mrs. Harwood, Miss J. Twichell, Messrs. Adams and Powers). Harvard Musical Association, April 12, 1867, for the benefit of the orchestra (Mrs. H. M. Smith, Mrs. J. C. Cary, James Whitney, J. F. Rudolphsen); Dec. 19, 1870, with the Handel and Haydn (Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Barry, W. J. Winch, J. F. Rudolphsen).

Theodore Thomas's concerts in Boston: Dec. 30, 1874 (Mrs. Smith, Miss Cranch, W. J. Winch, F. Remmertz); March 15, 1876 (Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Barry, W. J. Winch, F. Remmertz); Jan. 10, 1871, the Adagio; Dec. 9, 1871, Scherzo and Adagio.

Handel and Haydn concerts: May 8, 1868 (Mme. Parepa-Rosa, Adelaide Phillipps, George Simpson, J. F. Rudolphsen); May 12, 1871 (Mrs. Smith, Antoinette Sterling, W. H. Cummings, J. F. Rudolphsen); May 6, 1874 (Mrs. Smith, Annie Louise Cary, Nelson Varley, J. F. Rudolphsen); May 6, 1880 (Emma Thursby, Miss Cary, C. R. Adams, G. W. Dudley).

The first three movements of the symphony were performed at the Beethoven festival for the inauguration of Crawford's statue of Beethoven, in Music Hall, March 1, 1856.

The first performance in America was at a concert of the Philharmonic Society of New York at Castle Garden, conducted by George Loder, May 20, 1846. The solo singers were Mmes. Otto and Boulard, Messrs. Munson and Mayer.

Beethoven made sketches for the symphony as early as 1815 and completed his work about February, 1824. The first performance was in the Kaerthnerthor Theatre, Vienna, May 7, 1824. The solo sigers were Henrietta Sontag, Karoline Unger, Anton Haitzinger and J. Seipelt. Ignaz Schuppanzigh was the concert master. Michael Umlauf conducted. The rehearsals were laborious, and the solo singers had great difficulty in learning their parts. Mmes. Sontag and Unger begged Beethoven to make changes in their music. Beethoven smiled and said they had been spoiled by Italian music. The gentle Mme. Sontag answered: "Go on, then, torturing us." The sucess of the symphony was immediate and great. When the drums alone beat the Scherzo motive, the audience applauded so that the orchestra could not be heard. At the end the enthusiasm was frenetic. Mme. Unger led Beethoven to the edge of the stage that he might see the crowd waving hats and handkerchiefs. He bowed and was very calm. Mme. Grebner, an eye witness, told Felix Weingartner that Beethoven sat in the middle of the orchestra and followed the score. The success was unprecedented, but the net pecuniary result was a sum equivalent to $60. Beethoven was angry. Some days afterwards he accused Schindler and Duport of having swindled him. They were dining at a restaurant with others. Umlauf and Schuppanzigh tried to convince him that the charge was absurd, for Beethoven's nephew Carl, and his brother Johann had watched the cashiers. Beethoven persisted. Schindler, Umlauf Schuppanzigh left the table.

Beethoven had purposed to dedicate the symphony to the Tsar Alexander; he finally dedicated it to the King of Prussia: "The gracious permission of your majesty to dedicate to you, in all humidity, the present work, affords me great happiness. Your majesty is not only the father of your subjects, but also the patron of arts and sciences; so much the more therefore, must your gracious permission rejoice me, as I am myself fortunate enough to count myself as a citizen of Bonn, amongst your subjects. I beg your majesty to accept this work as a trifling token of the high esteem which I entertain for your virtues."

The King answered, saying that he was sending a diamond ring as a token of his sincere esteem. The gem turned out to be not a diamond, but a reddish stone valued by the court jeweller at 300 florins in paper money.

AMERICAN
- NOV. 21, 1917-

SYMPHONY PLAYS LAST WORK OF BEETHOVEN

By F. J. McISAAC.

The Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, that mammoth and overpowering last work of the greatest composer who ever lived, was given a memorable performance at Symphony Hall last evening by the Boston orchestra and a great chorus of 350 voices.

The chorus was assembled and trained by Stephen Townsend. The combined forces were led by Doctor Muck.

For soloists there were Freida Hempel, soprano; of the Metropolitan; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, basso, of the Metropolitan.

CHORUS SINGS ANTHEM.

The evening began with the "Star Spangled Banner," and the chorus sang lustily and tunefully with the orchestra. The effect was fine and inspiring.

Beethoven was old and sick and deaf when he wrote the Ninth Symphony. He died three years later, in 1827.

He wished it to be his masterpiece and he expanded it to nearly twice the length of any of his previous symphonies adding a chorale to the finale, which was a musical setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

This chorale is the most massive, most difficult and most imposing of works. It brings a symphony distinctly below the level of Beethoven's earlier works to an inspired conclusion.

Mr. Townsend's chorus proved a delight in tonal quality, in skill, in precision and in attack. It responded like machinery to the baton of Dr. Muck, and its work reflects the greatest credit upon Mr. Townsend.

DIFFICULT SOLO WORK.

There is very little solo work, considering the prominence of the artists engaged, but that little is as difficult as possible. Mr. Hackett found this out in his solo number and had much trouble getting good tone and keeping the pace set by the conductor. In the quartets he was more at ease. The other soloists acquitted themselves most satisfactorily.

m lress :

e

NINTH SYMPHONY PRODUCED

Four Hundred Singers Join With Orchestra at Boston

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—Every seat and all available standing room were occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long-awaited performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. The chorus comprised many of the best professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

To accommodate the singers and musicians a special stage had been built. With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Doctor Muck's leadership to open the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused remarkable enthusiasm, which at the end took the nature of an ovation. There were many distinguished music lovers present from Philadelphia, New York, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

ADVERTISER
-NOV. 28, 1917-

FINDS SYMPHONIC KNITTING DE TROP

Socks for Soldiers Patriotic Duty, but Out of Place at Concerts, Says Critic

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

During the recent Symphony concerts I was somewhat astonished to see an arm stretched up in the air during the Berlioz "Garden Scene" and then disappear again. Watching with aroused interest, I saw hands moving to and fro in another part of the hall. Pursuing my investigations still further I saw the glint of steel in feminine hands. They were not armed with stilettos and were not intent upon murdering the admirers of Dr. Muck, but were knitting, presumably for the soldiers.

It was scarcely possible to follow the poetic beauty of the music while these hands obtruded themselves, shuttling to and fro in an irregular rhythm, possibly 5-4 or 7-4, with one particularly rapid one in 24-16.

Certainly this was the right thing but emphatically in the wrong place. In Paris, during the reign of terror, some women became famous by knitting while seated around the guillotine, watching the heads falling, without dropping a single stitch. I do not intend to compare our Boston symphonic knitters with the dreadful Tricoteuses of 1793, but I venture to consider their benevolent work almost as much out of place as the more ancient one.

To follow the glories of a great symphony and to manufacture mittens and socks are occupations incompatible with each other. But the neighboring non-knitting auditors are the chief sufferers. They find themselves counting the stitches rather than the measures; they watch the thread of wool rather than the thread of the melody; they follow the swing of the needles rather than the swing of the baton. Of course this must be taken as the opinion of a mere man. It may be that some feminine auditors are not thus diverted from the music.

Another point that strikes one strangely is connected with the performance of the "Star Spangled Banner," at the beginning of each concert. In England they give "God Save the King," in connection with almost every public occasion, but it is regarded in the light of a musical grace or a benediction. But in Symphony Hall a good many applaud loudly at the end of the anthem. This seems about as strange as applauding an eloquent prayer would be.

During the Summer, at Eastern Point, Gloucester, I had a vivid experience of the "reductio ad absurdum," of this custom. In the program of the concert it so happened that three national songs followed each other. "The Star Spangled Banner" came first and all appropriately stood up, inappropriately applauded, and then sat down again. "Glory Hallelujah" immediately followed and all got up and then sat down again. They were scarcely seated when the "Marseillaise," brought them all up standing again. Then they were allowed a period of repose. There were knitting women here also and they followed the mild gymnastic exercises evidently without dropping a stitch, nor a ball of yarn.

I hope that the "Star Spangled Banner" will become an outward sign of patriotism, as "God Save the King" has become in England, but I also hope that the audience will never be asked to sing it, for if they do, disaster, musical shipwreck, will almost certainly follow, for the melody is the most difficult national song in existence. We may certainly envy the English the excellent singability of their national anthem. No wonder that it has been borrowed by four other nations.

Herald Nov. 18, 1917.

Beethoven's ninth symphony, which will be performed here next [illegible] night, was last played in Boston at a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra led by Mr. Fiedler, April 3, 1910. The Cecilia Society was the chorus and the solo singers were Mrs. Hissem de Moss, Miss Margaret Keyes, Berrick von Norden and Frederick Weld.

The first performance in Boston was on Feb. 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Haydn Society. The solo singers were Anna Stone, Miss S. Humphrey, J. H. Low and Thomas Ball, the sculptor. Carl Bergmann conducted. The symphony was repeated April 2, 1853.

The symphony has been performed at these concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

1882, March 11—Mrs. Humphrey Allen (now Mrs. George F. Babbitt), Mary H. How, C. R. Adams, V. Cirillo.
1883, March 31—Katherine van Arnheim, Gertrude Edmands, Jules Jordan, V. Cirillo.
1884, March 22—Mrs. Henschel, Louise Rollwagen, T. J. Toedt, Max Heinrich.
1886, March 27—Mme. Fursch-Madi, Mary H. How, T. J. Toedt, C. E. Martin.
1888, April 28—Mme. Kalisch-Lehmann, Louise Meisslinger, Paul Kalisch, Emil Fischer.
1892, Dec. 17—Priscilla White, Louise Leimer, W. J. Winch, H. Meyn.
1894, March 17—Adagio and Scherzo.
1897, April 24—Movements 1, 2, 3.
1898, March 5—Movements 1, 2, 3.
1899, April 29—Mme. de Vere-Sapio, Miss Stein, Evan Williams, Ericeson Bushnell.
1900, April 28—Mme. de Vere-Sapio, Miss Stein, Ben Davies, Herbert Witherspoon.
1909, May 1—Louise Combs, Miss Stein, Theodore van Yorx, M. W. Whitney, Jr.

On April 13, 1904, the symphony was performed at a Pension Fund concert with the assistance of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Bradbury and Woltmann, and Messrs. Van Yorx and M. W. Whitney, Jr.

Other performances in Boston: At concerts in Music Hall led by Carl Zerrahn, March 26 and April 2, 1859 (Mrs. Harwood, Miss J. Twichell, Messrs. Adams and Powers). Harvard Musical Association, April 12, 1867, for the benefit of the orchestra (Mrs. H. M. Smith, Mrs. J. C. Cary, James Whitney, J. F. Rudolphsen); Dec. 19, 1870, with the Handel and Haydn (Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Barry, W. J. Winch, J. F. Rudolphsen).

Theodore Thomas's concerts in Boston: Dec. 30, 1874 (Mrs. Smith, Miss Cranch, W. J. Winch, F. Remmertz); March 15, 1876 (Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Barry, W. J. Winch, F. Remmertz); Jan. 10, 1871, the Adagio; Dec. 9, 1871, Scherzo and Alagio.

Handel and Haydn concerts: May 8, 1868 (Mme. Parepa-Rosa, Adelaide Phillipps, George Simpson, J. F. Rudolphsen); May 12, 1871 (Mrs. Smith, Antoinette Sterling, W. H. Cummings, J. F. Rudolphsen); May 6, 1874 (Mrs. Smith, Annie Louise Cary, Nelson Varley, J. F. Rudolphsen); May 6, 1880 (Emma Thursby, Miss Cary, C. R. Adams, G. W. Dudley).

The first three movements of the symphony were performed at the Beethoven festival for the inauguration of Crawford's statue of Beethoven, in Music Hall, March 1, 1856.

The first performance in America was at a concert of the Philharmonic Society of New York at Castle Garden, conducted by George Loder, May 20, 1846. The solo singers were Mmes. Otto and Boulard, Messrs. Munson and Mayer.

Beethoven made sketches for the symphony as early as 1815 and completed his work about February, 1824. The first performance was in the Kaerthnerthor Theatre, Vienna, May 7, 1824. The solo sigers were Henrietta Sontag, Karoline Unger, Anton Haitzinger and J Seipelt. Ignaz Schuppanzigh was the concert master. Michael Umlauf conducted. The rehearsals were laborious, and the solo singers had great difficulty in learning their parts. Mmes. Sontag and Unger begged Beethoven to make changes in their music. Beethoven smiled and said they had been spoiled by Italian music. The gentle Mme. Sontag answered: "Go on, then, torturing us." The sucess of the symphony was immediate and great. When the drums alone beat the Scherzo motive, the audience applauded so that the orchestra could not be heard. At the end the enthusiasm was frenetic. Mme. Unger led Beethoven to the edge of the stage that he might see the crowd waving hats and handkerchiefs. He bowed and was very calm. Mme. Grebner, an eye witness, told Felix Weingartner that Beethoven sat in the middle of the orchestra and followed the score. The success was unprecedented, but the net pecuniary result was a sum equivalent to $60. Beethoven was angry. Some days afterwards he accused Schindler and Duport of having swindled him. They were dining at a restaurant with others. Umlauf and Schuppanzigh tried to convince him that the charge was absurd, for Beethoven's nephew Carl, and his brother Johann had watched the cashiers. Beethoven persisted. Schindler, Umlauf Schuppanzigh left the table.

Beethoven had purposed to dedicate the symphony to the Tsar Alexander; he finally dedicated it to the King of Prussia: "The gracious permission of your majesty to dedicate to you, in all humidity, the present work, affords me great happiness. Your majesty is not only the father of your subjects, but also the patron of arts and sciences; so much the more therefore, must your gracious permission rejoice me, as I am myself fortunate enough to count myself as a citizen of Bonn, amongst your subjects. I beg your majesty to accept this work as a trifling token of the high esteem which I entertain for your virtues."

The King answered, saying that he was sending a diamond ring as a token of his sincere esteem. The gem turned out to be not a diamond, but a reddish stone valued by the court jeweller at 300 florins in paper money.

AMERICAN
- NOV. 21, 1917-

SYMPHONY PLAYS LAST WORK OF BEETHOVEN

By F. J. McISAAC.

The Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, that mammoth and overpowering last work of the greatest composer who ever lived, was given a memorable performance at Symphony Hall last evening by the Boston orchestra and a great chorus of 350 voices.

The chorus was assembled and trained by Stephen Townsend. The combined forces were led by Doctor Muck.

For soloists there were Freida Hempel, soprano; of the Metropolitan; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, basso, of the Metropolitan.

CHORUS SINGS ANTHEM.

The evening began with the "Star Spangled Banner," and the chorus sang lustily and tunefully with the orchestra. The effect was fine and inspiring.

Beethoven was old and sick and deaf when he wrote the Ninth Symphony. He died three years later, in 1827.

He wished it to be his masterpiece and he expanded it to nearly twice the length of any of his previous symphonies adding a chorale to the finale, which was a musical setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

This chorale is the most massive, most difficult and most imposing of works. It brings a symphony distinctly below the level of Beethoven's earlier works to an inspired conclusion.

Mr. Townsend's chorus proved a delight in tonal quality, in skill, in precision and in attack. It responded like machinery to the baton of Dr. Muck, and its work reflects the greatest credit upon Mr. Townsend.

DIFFICULT SOLO WORK.

There is very little solo work, considering the prominence of the artists engaged, but that little is as difficult as possible. Mr. Hackett found this out in his solo number and had much trouble getting good tone and keeping the pace set by the conductor. In the quartets he was more at ease. The other soloists acquitted themselves most satisfactorily.

Record, Nov. 21, 1917

166

GREAT OVATON FOR DR. MUCK AT SYMPHONY

Gives Fine Performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony

By J. V. Clark

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, popularly called the choral, was sung at Symphony Hall last evening, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. The orchestra was the regular Boston Symphony Orchestra. The chorus was made up of some 350 singers, who were selected from the various choral societies of Boston. These choristers have been under the direction of Stephen Townsend for many weeks. He has coached them until the last week, when they have had attention from Dr. Muck. The solo singers last evening were Miss Frieda Hempel, Miss Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

This performance was the first of three performances of great works calling for orchestra and chorus which Dr. Muck will produce this winter. He has long been anxious to do work of this nature, especially the Choral Symphony, but the lack of an adequate chorus has prevented.

Last night he had splendid material to work with. The orchestra needs no commendation. The voices in the chorus were as good as Boston could produce. There was no skimping on soloists. Miss Hempel is one of the most finished sopranos today. She proved her artistry, if it was ever questioned, in the Boston production of "Der Rosenkavalier." Mr Hackett is a "Pops" find. Mr. Middleton only a fortnight ago took chief honors at a Sunday Symphony concert. Miss Keyes is an admirable contralto.

The Ninth Symphony was produced in Vienna on May 7, 1824.

Sketches of the symphony were made as early as 1815, although not finished until 1824. The first performance was at the Kaerthnerthor Theatre. The first performance in the United States was at a concert by the Philharmonic Society, New York, at Castle Garden, May 20, 1846. In Boston the symphony was not given until Feb. 5, 1853, at a concert of the Germania Musical Society, assisted by members of the Handel and Haydn Society.

The last performances in Boston occurred at the final symphony concerts of the 28th season, April 30 and May 1, 1900. The soloists were Miss Laura Combs, soprano, Mme Gertrude May Stein, contralto, Theodore Van Yorx, tenor, and Myron W. Whitney jr., baritone. The chorus was that of the Cecilia Society. Mr. Fiedler conducted.

A note on the program last evening stated that at the premiere "the success of the symphony was immediate and great. When the drums beat the scherzo motive, the audience applauded so that the orchestra could not be heard. At the end the enthusiasm was trenetic.

The applause last evening was not trenetic. There was much applause, but this applause was for Dr. Muck and his performers. His entrance on the stage was a signal for prolonged applause for the symphony's conduct and at the close the audience remained in their places until he had returned and accepted the tribute of an ovation.

The great symphony itself is known to all students of music. Does it have the spell for the modern, hearing it for the first time, that it had in the days of its Vienne premiere? Does not the third movement seem more reiterative, longer than ever? The symphony, a canvass of mighty dimensions, stands like a mighty epic, but does it make an emotional appeal? To many attending the symphony it was undoubtedly an historical occasion. Such an opportunity has not been enjoyed in Boston for these many years, and in the chaotic times of war it may be years before it is again heard here.

Of the performance last evening only words of praise can be given. The orchestra played superbly. Possibly the scherzo—the scherzo in which Wagner saw planets dancing—was the most gloriously played. The clarity of the first movement with its fundamental idea, the loveliness of the third movement—albeit too long in its loveliness—were treated as if by magic with Dr. Muck's wand.

Choral Symphony Singers

At Last Evening's Symphony

Arthur Hackett, the tenor, and Miss Margaret Keyes, the contralto, who sang last evening in Dr. Muck's great production of Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Singers shared in the excellence of the performance. If Beethoven has written difficult choral music in this symphony, how about the soloists' tasks? The chorus was sure in attack and big in tone. The chorus of sopranos wrestled with the difficult passages allotted to them. A volume of tone that approached perfect intonation from this section in this work is to be marvelled at. We always dread hearing this passage sung by the soprano chorus—they did nobly last evening. Owing to Beethoven's mercies the male chorus was better. The soloists tackled their tasks cheerfully and in some cases with virtuosity. Miss Hempel, a true artist, although not an especially appealing singer, did her difficult bit brilliantly.

Dr. Muck has once more earned the gratitude of Boston in presenting this great work. Although it would not be feasible to give it again with the chorus, the purely orchestral parts would be gratefully heard again. Repetition in the same season would be increased pleasure. Possibly we may hear more of the choral symphony before the musical year is over.

ADVERTISER DEC. 1, 1917. 167

RACHMANINOFF NO MUSICAL BOLSHEVIK

Proves Emotional Symphony Need Not Break All Musical Laws

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Rachmainoff—Second Symphony, E minor.
Mendelssohn—Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo, from "Midsummer Night's Dream."

The list looks brief, but the concert was of usual length, for a modern symphony is always as big as a modern steamship, and requires plenty of room to turn around in. But Rachmaninoff (the name is accented on the second syllable), at least deviated from the modern works when he made hs symphony in E minor intelligile and sometimes melodic. This was to be expected from a disciple of Tschaikowsky, for that master never indulged in musical puzzle pictures.

Some modern points, however, may be noted in the work. The carrying of figures from one movement into another is a constant procedurein recent symphonies. Beethoven began this idea in his ninth symphony, and Brahms emphasized it in his first symphony. The finale here gives an interesting epitome of preceding movements, because of its recapitulation of figures.

SONATA—ALLEGRO FORM.

The first movement is portentous, long and decidedly emotional. If we have called the work melodic at times this does not imply actual tunes, but rather tuneful figures. In spite of strong contrasts and bold explosions, musical shudderings and mysterious suggestions of calamity, the composer does not throw musical form to the winds; the architecture of the movement is not far removed from the classical sonata-allegro. We are glad to note, therefore, that Rachmaninoff does not belong to the musical Bolsheviki, like Stravinsky or the late Scriabine.

More definite rhythmic treatment appeared in the second movement, which takes the place of the Scherzo, although it is not playful. Yet it has suggestions of Russian dance themes and folk music, but these remain, alas, only suggestions, and suddenly they are thrust aside by a very bitter and ascetic fugue, such a one as Browning satirized in his "Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha," full of dry learning and without any sap whatever.

The Adagio pleased us much. The house programme labelled it "allegro." It is lofty, long-breathed, like the slow movements of eBethoven, with mighty surges of tone, great crescendos, that were given grandly by the orchestra. Of the finale, since we have already spoken of its reminiscences, we need only add that it is much given to tremulous, soft passages, that suggest profound mysteries which we (and the composer) could not unravel.

LESSONS TO THE RADICALS.

Summing up, one can praise this work highly. It is a lesson to some of the radicals that they need not break all musical laws when they become emotional. The work was superbly played.

Then came the Tennysonian Mendelssohn, clear as crystal and tuneful to the whistling point. The overture to "Mid Summer Night's Dream" is equal to any bit of musical humor and daintiness ever written. And it was composed by a boy of eighteen. Last wek we had the fairies of Berlioz, and yesterday those of Mendelssohn. It would be difficult to say which were the more attractive.

In this overture the chief theme (violins) pictures the fairies, the second theme the lovers, the closing theme, the clumsy Athenian players, Bottom, Quince, etc., and the Shakespearian reader could fololw every picture with ease. There was the Braying bassoon, picturing Bottom turned into an ass, and there was the long tone on the bass tuba (Mendelssohn wrote it for Ophicleide) which portrayed the weaver snoring in drunken sleep amid the fairies, and there was the final vanishing into thin air of all the fairy hosts. A musical fantasy that will never die.

The other two movements were written after the youth had grown to manhood (Mendelsshon was greatest when he was little) and show less inspiration, but quite as much melody and symmetry. The Nocturne is a beatuiful display of horn-playing, composed when the valve-horns were beginning to take the place of the natural instruments. It was charmingly played, and it was a delicious rest to listen to such simple harmony in these days of tonal ugliness. Our compliments to the horn player.

A PLAYFUL MOVEMENT.

The Scherzo was playful, yet not with the ebullient animal spirits of the ovetrue. Yet, if we take the Scherzo for what its name indicates—a playful movement—then we may think of Mendelssohn as the best of Scherzo composers. Beethoven oftener achieved grotesqueness or brusquerie than daintiness or genial humor in his Scherzos. But Mendelssohn caught the true spirit of the movement which Beethoven invented, and while some of the other movemnts of his symphonis are fading, his Scherzos stand the test of time.

We wonder that Dr. Muck did not add the "Wedding March" belonging to this same work. It would have been very fitting in these strenuous fighting days, for it has led more people into combat than all the other

POST DEC. 1, 1917.

RUSSIAN MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Rachmaninoff's Work in E Minor Given New Beauties

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the Boston Symphony concert of yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall was purely orchestral, without a soloist. The compositions were Rachmaninoff's E minor symphony and three movements from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

LONG DRAWN OUT

There are several curious and interesting things about this symphony of Rachmaninoff. One is the character of its harmony. There is not a chord in the symphony, practically, which Mendelssohn would have feared to use. For once the genteel Felix did not sound out-of-date, either in the spirit or the material of his music. Rachmaninoff uses chords that our grandfathers knew, and makes them sing. His symphony is too long, because its ideas are too many and the composer gets intoxicated with his resources in the handling of these ideas. "Just once more before I finish," one hears him say—and another transformation of some germ of the melodic material.

The symphony is uncommonly solid in its texture, but it is too thick and too drawn out. It is like an immense picture, overladen with details which finally fatigue instead of inspire the beholder. The fact that in spite of its length it fascinates the ear is a remarkable tribute to the composer. But if this symphony were pruned of its too luxuriant thematic growths it would be a masterpiece of its kind, instead of a work which talks longer than it has good excuse for talking. An idea is worth so much, whether in a newspaper or a symphony. It should not be overworked, no matter how many fine phrases come into the head of the writer.

Wonderfully Picturesque

But with this reservation, and despite it, the symphony is a wonderfully sincere and picturesque work. It is a sort of a blend of Mendelssohn of the A minor symphony and Tschaikowsky. There is a suavity that was never Tschaikowsky's, a mastery of form, if not of conciseness, that Tschaikowsky never attained, a facility pre-eminently characteristic of Mendelssohn. There is also a naive lyricism which speaks irresistibly for itself. The whole symphony sings, in such a heartfelt, Russian manner that even where it is most sentimental or long drawn out one's sympathies are engaged.

And again Dr. Muck made a record with a work which is now well known and of which a certain sort of traditional interpretation might well be accepted. But Dr. Muck never accepts a tradition, at least without subjecting it to the most searching analysis, in his interpretation of a score. Invariably his music is studied afresh, every time that he plays it. We do not say this from personal acquaintance with his methods of study, but from the incontrovertible proof of his successive performances. It is seldom indeed that a piece of music fails to grow in interest and significance under his baton.

Principal Changes Noted

The principal changes noted from previous readings by other conductors and even by Muck himself were in the second movement, a sort of a free scherzo, and the finale. The latter movement had long been held by the writer the weakest of the four, with the possible exception of the slow movement. Yesterday it was, at least, amazingly effective, in many an unsuspected detail, and in the dramatic emphasis of the recurrence of various motifs, brought forward from the earlier movements. The tempo of the scherzo, if we are not mistaken, was faster, at least in the opening, than previously, and the contrast broader and more striking.

The peroration of the finale movement, for sheer pomp and splendor, will not soon be forgotten. The introduction of the first movement was notable for its dreadth, as was the comparative quietness and reserve strength in the interpretation of the movement proper. In brief, the entire work sounded more continuous, more cumulative in interest, more characteristic of a Russian composer, than ever before. The conductor was recalled repeatedly, with marked enthusiasm. The music of Mendelssohn brought an agreeable ending to the programme.

HERALD DEC. 1, 1917.

RACHMANINOFF SYMPHONY GIVEN

Dr. Muck Conducts Seventh Concert Featured by Russian Work.

TO BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE.

The seventh concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor, No. 2, and the Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

What Angelo said to Escalus: "This will last out a night in Russia when nights are longest there," might be said of Rachmaninoff's symphony. Although there is more matter in this music than there was in Pompey's testimony, there are irrelevancies and repetitions that threaten if they do not actually impair the effect of the whole.

The symphony is, indeed, a Russian work; Russian in the spirit of its thematic material; Russian in its melancholy; as Russian in its length as any one of Dostoievsky's greater novels. Rachmaninoff, unlike Glazounoff, has not been thoroughly Germanized. When he wrote this symphony he was more or less influenced by Tschaikowsky. This was natural, for he studied at the Moscow Conservatory, and although he was not Tschaikowsky's pupil, although the symphony was composed some years after Tschaikowsky's death, nevertheless the influence of the latter was still felt by the majority of the younger Russians.

In spite of its length, this symphony is an engrossing and stirring one. Its melodic frankness — obviousness, at times—appeals directly to them that wish melody to be aimed straight at them; its fiery spirit excites; the pronounced sentiment that approaches sentimentalism soothes; there is an authority of expression that leads an audito say at once: "That is a great work." The frequent tumultuousness of the instrumentation is also pleasing to many, who say, as the horse saith among the trumpets, "Ha, ha!"

The symphony suffers from the riot of technic. As Mr. Montagu-Nathan has well remarked, Rachmaninoff's technic constitutes an interest in itself. In this symphony the composer is intoxicated by it. His contrapuntal facility leads him into excesses. Nor do we find releiving nuances, a wealth of dynamic contrasts, a cunning employment of orchestral timbres. What variety there is comes from rhythmic changes and stentorian surprises, as the sudden introduction of fortissimo passages when the hearer has been lulled for a few minutes. The horns are overworked. On the other hand there is a remarkably effective use of trumpets that is stamped upon the memory, after the hearer has left the hall.

The performance of the symphony was magnificent in every respect, technically and emotionally. Its excellence was fully appreciated by an audience that completely filled the hall.

Mendelssohn wrote the Shakesperian overture when he was 17 years old. With the exception of the overture to "Fingal's Cave" he wrote little afterwards that for pure fancy and charm of expression is comparable. Was he spoiled by his good fortune, by his easy life, by the flattery of friends, and an adoring English public? In music as in life he was too often conventional, priggish, genteel. A little portrait of him by Aubrey Beardsley, published in the Savoy, too interesting a magazine to live, shows the Mendelssohn of mature years; the man that was shocked by Berlioz, did not understand Chopin and Schumann, wrote an overture for "Ruy Blas," although he did not approve the play, and turned his eyes away from pretty, innocent Zerlina disrobing in "Fra Diavolo." It is a pity that he did not live to see Richard Strauss's "Salome" and Puccini's "Tosca," or the first act of "The Valkyrie." His letters about these operas would have been entertaining reading. Perhaps he would have inserted pen-and-ink sketches of the "objectionable" scenes. For he was handy with pen and pencil, and we suspect him of writing verses in ladies' albums. But the overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream" will not soon be stale. The Nocturne, composed long afterwards, reveals the composer of the "Songs without Words." The fairies in the Scherzo are heavy-footed after those that Berlioz imagined. "The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo."

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week, for the orchestra will be on its second trip. The program of the concerts of Dec. 14 and 15 will include Mozart's Symphony in E flat major; an excerpt from Ravel's "Daphnis of Chloe," and Balakireff's symphonic poem "Thamar." John McCormack will sing an aria from Handel's "Atalanta" and Beethoven's "Jehovah, Hear Me."

GLOBE DEC. 1, 1917

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The performance by Dr Muck and the orchestra of Rachmaninoff's second symphony in E minor yesterday afternoon was eloquent. The inspired pages of this notable score were illumined as at no previous hearing of them; to those more prolix than significant was given a nobility they did not inherently possess.

It has been said when this symphony was played before in Boston that it was too long, that it did not gain with acquaintance. For some the merit now will lie with Dr Muck's reading. The charge of length is indisputable. The audience gets little from a symphony playing over an hour. In the slow movement the composer becomes enamored of a figure expanding into a melody of folk or naive character. Its profile is indeterminate, and in prolonged development it becomes discursive. The last movement leads through a devious fantasia before a belated return of the first theme and the review of others in the work.

Even in these there are striking passages, but not the sustained beauty of thought and expression of the first two. There are reminiscences of Tschaikowsky and particularly of the "Pathetic" symphony in the first movement, but there are noble passages, a compelling flow of orchestral song, fascinating blends of instrumental colors, superb dramatic climaxes and a Slavic somberness of character. The scherzo with its cheerily, bustling theme, the vivacious fugue and its admirably sustained mood was played with just the touch of folk or festival gayety.

The euphony, the virtuosity throughout, was such as only this orchestra can give, nor must the beautiful tone and finely curved phrasing of Mr Sand's playing of the theme in the slow movement be forgotten.

The overture, nocturne and scherzo of Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" finished the program. Next week the orchestra will be away on its second Southern tour.

Herald Dec. 3.

LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS THE COLOSSAL SYMPHONY

Orchestra and Chorus Give Notable Performance of the Work.

A great audience again filled Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, repeated the admirable and impressive performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony given a little over a week ago. Every seat was taken and all available standing room filled. As before the orchestra was assisted by 350 singers excellently trained by Stephen Townsend, and this quartet: Florence Hinkle, who replaced Miss Hempel; Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. The performance began with "The Star Spangled Banner."

In his choral symphony Beethoven expressed great ideals, glorified universal love and sympathy, voiced his conception of the brotherhood of man. A gigantic work conceived by an Olympian mind. The music imposes extraordinary difficulties upon its executants. It would not be easy to imagine a finer interpretation than that given by Dr. Muck, the moving spirit of the performance. With an incomparable orchestra and a chorus skilled in execution and responsive in spirit at his command his interpretation was marked by nobility, dramatic force and artistic distinction, features that set his conducting apart, unrivalled. The audience was heartily appreciative.

ADVERTISER DEC. 1, 1917.

RACHMANINOFF NO MUSICAL BOLSHEVIK

Proves Emotional Symphony Need Not Break All Musical Laws

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Rachmainoff—Second Symphony, E minor.
Mendelssohn—Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo, from "Midsummer Night's Dream."

The list looks brief, but the concert was of usual length, for a modern symphony is always as big as a modern steamship, and requires plenty of room to turn around in. But Rachmaninoff (the name is accented on the second syllable), at least deviated from the modern works when he made hs symphony in E minor intelligile and sometimes melodic. This was to be expected from a disciple of Tschaikowsky, for that master never indulged in musical puzzle pictures.

Some modern points, however, may be noted in the work. The carrying of figures from one movement into another is a constant procedurein recent symphonies. Beethoven began this idea in his ninth symphony, and Brahms emphasized it in his first symphony. The finale here gives an interesting epitome of preceding movements, because of its recapitulation of figures.

SONATA—ALLEGRO FORM.

The first movement is portentous long and decidedly emotional. If we have called the work melodic at times this does not imply actual tunes, but rather tuneful figures. In spite of strong contrasts and bold explosions, musical shudderings and mysterious suggestions of calamity, the composer does not throw musical form to the winds; the architecture of the movement is not far removed from the classical sonata-allegro. We are glad to note, therefore, that Rachmaninoff does not belong to the musical Bolsheviki, like Stravinsky or the late Scriabine.

More definite rhythmic treatment appeared in the second movement, which takes the place of the Scherzo, although it is not playful. Yet it has suggestions of Russian dance themes and folk music, but these remain, alas, only suggestions, and suddenly they are thrust aside by a very bitter and ascetic fugue, such a one as Browning satirized in his "Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha," full of dry learning and without any sap whatever.

The Adagio pleased us much. The house programme labelled it "allegro." It is lofty, long-breathed, like the slow movements of eBethoven, with mighty surges of tone, great crescendos, that were given grandly by the orchestra. Of the finale, since we have already spoken of its reminiscences, we need only add that it is much given to tremulous, soft passages, that suggest profound mysteries which we (and the composer) could not unravel.

LESSONS TO THE RADICALS.

Summing up, one can praise this work highly. It is a lesson to some of the radicals that they need not break all musical laws when they become emotional. The work was superbly played.

Then came the Tennysonian Mendelssohn, clear as crystal and tuneful to the whistling point. The overture to "Mid Summer Night's Dream" is equal to any bit of musical humor and daintiness ever written. And it was composed by a boy of eighteen. Last wek we had the fairies of Berlioz, and yesterday those of Mendelssohn. It would be difficult to say which were the more attractive.

In this overture the chief theme (violins) pictures the fairies, the second theme the lovers, the closing theme, the clumsy Athenian players, Bottom, Quince, etc., and the Shakespearian reader could fololw every picture with ease. There was the Braying bassoon, picturing Bottom turned into an ass, and there was the long tone on the bass tuba (Mendelssohn wrote it for Ophicleide) which portrayed the weaver snoring in drunken sleep amid the fairies, and there was the final vanishing into thin air of all the fairy hosts. A musical fantasy that will never die.

The other two movements were written after the youth had grown to manhood (Mendelsshon was greatest when he was little) and show less inspiration, but quite as much melody and symmetry. The Nocturne is a beatuiful display of horn-playing, composed when the valve-horns were beginning to take the place of the natural instruments. It was charmingly played, and it was a delicious rest to listen to such simple harmony in these days of tonal ugliness. Our compliments to the horn player.

A PLAYFUL MOVEMENT.

The Scherzo was playful, yet not with the ebullient animal spirits of the ovetrue. Yet, if we take the Scherzo for what its name indicates—a playful movement—then we may think of Mendelssohn as the best of Scherzo composers. Beethoven oftener achieved grotesqueness or brusquerie than daintiness or genial humor in his Scherzos. But Mendelssohn caught the true spirit of the movement which Beethoven invented, and while some of the other movemnts of his symphonis are fading, his Scherzos stand the test of time.

We wonder that Dr. Muck did not add the "Wedding March" belonging to this same work. It would have been very fitting in these strenuous fighting days, for it has led more people into combat than all the other

POST DEC. 1, 1917.

RUSSIAN MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Rachmaninoff's Work in E Minor Given New Beauties

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the Boston Symphony concert of yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall was purely orchestral, without a soloist. The compositions were Rachmaninoff's E minor symphony and three movements from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

LONG DRAWN OUT

There are several curious and interesting things about this symphony of Rachmaninoff. One is the character of its harmony. There is not a chord in the symphony, practically, which Mendelssohn would have feared to use. For once the genteel Felix did not sound out-of-date, either in the spirit or the material of his music. Rachmaninoff uses chords that our grandfathers knew, and makes them sing. His symphony is too long, because its ideas are too many and the composer gets intoxicated with his resources in the handling of these ideas. "Just once more before I finish," one hears him say—and another transformation of some germ of the melodic material.

The symphony is uncommonly solid in its texture, but it is too thick and too drawn out. It is like an immense picture, overladen with details which finally fatigue instead of inspire the beholder. The fact that in spite of its length it fascinates the ear is a remarkable tribute to the composer. But if this symphony were pruned of its too luxuriant thematic growths it would be a masterpiece of its kind, instead of a work which talks longer than it has good excuse for talking. An idea is worth so much, whether in a newspaper or a symphony. It should not be overworked, no matter how many fine phrases come into the head of the writer.

Wonderfully Picturesque

But with this reservation, and despite it, the symphony is a wonderfully sincere and picturesque work. It is a sort of a blend of Mendelssohn of the A minor symphony and Tschaikowsky. There is a suavity that was never Tschaikowsky's, a mastery of form, if not of conciseness, that Tschaikowsky never attained, a facility pre-eminently characteristic of Mendelssohn. There is also a naive lyricism which speaks irresistibly for itself. The whole symphony sings, in such a heartfelt, Russian manner that even where it is most sentimental or long drawn out one's sympathies are engaged.

And again Dr. Muck made a record with a work which is now well known and of which a certain sort of traditional interpretation might well be accepted. But Dr. Muck never accepts a tradition, at least without subjecting it to the most searching analysis, in his interpretation of a score. Invariably his music is studied afresh, every time that he plays it. We do not say this from personal acquaintance with his methods of study, but from the incontrovertible proof of his successive performances. It is seldom indeed that a piece of music fails to grow in interest and significance under his baton.

Principal Changes Noted

The principal changes noted from previous readings by other conductors and even by Muck himself were in the second movement, a sort of a free scherzo, and the finale. The latter movement had long been held by the writer the weakest of the four, with the possible exception of the slow movement. Yesterday it was, at least, amazingly effective, in many an unsuspected detail, and in the dramatic emphasis of the recurrence of various motifs, brought forward from the earlier movements. The tempo of the scherzo, if we are not mistaken, was faster, at least in the opening, than previously, and the contrast broader and more striking.

The peroration of the finale movement, for sheer pomp and splendor, will not soon be forgotten. The introduction of the first movement was notable for its dreadth, as was the comparative quietness and reserve strength in the interpretation of the movement proper. In brief, the entire work sounded more continuous, more cumulative in interest, more characteristic of a Russian composer, than ever before. The conductor was recalled repeatedly, with marked enthusiasm. The music of Mendelssohn brought an agreeable ending to the programme.

HERALD DEC. 1, 1917.

RACHMANINOFF SYMPHONY GIVEN

Dr. Muck Conducts Seventh Concert Featured by Russian Work.

TO BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE.

The seventh concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor, No. 2, and the Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

What Angelo said to Escalus: "This will last out a night in Russia when nights are longest there," might be said of Rachmaninoff's symphony. Although there is more matter in this music than there was in Pompey's testimony, there are irrelevancies and repetitions that threaten if they do not actually impair the effect of the whole.

The symphony is, indeed, a Russian work; Russian in the spirit of its thematic material; Russian in its melancholy; as Russian in its length as any one of Dostoievsky's greater novels. Rachmaninoff, unlike Glazounoff, has not been thoroughly Germanized. When he wrote this symphony he was more or less influenced by Tschaikowsky. This was natural, for he studied at the Moscow Conservatory, and although he was not Tschaikowsky's pupil, although the symphony was composed some years after Tschaikowsky's death, nevertheless the influence of the latter was still felt by the majority of the younger Russians.

In spite of its length, this symphony is an engrossing and stirring one. Its melodic frankness — obviousness, at times—appeals directly to them that wish melody to be aimed straight at them; its fiery spirit excites; the pronounced sentiment that approaches sentimentalism soothes; there is an authority of expression that leads an auditor to say at once: "That is a great work." The frequent tumultuousness of the instrumentation is also pleasing to many, who say, as the horse saith among the trumpets, "Ha, ha!"

The symphony suffers from the riot of technic. As Mr. Montagu-Nathan has well remarked, Rachmaninoff's technic constitutes an interest in itself. In this symphony the composer is intoxicated by it. His contrapuntal facility leads him into excesses. Nor do we find releiving nuances, a wealth of dynamic contrasts, a cunning employment of orchestral timbres. What variety there is comes from rhythmic changes and stentorian surprises, as the sudden introduction of fortissimo passages when the hearer has been lulled for a few minutes. The horns are overworked. On the other hand there is a remarkably effective use of trumpets that is stamped upon the memory, after the hearer has left the hall.

The performance of the symphony was magnificent in every respect, technically and emotionally. Its excellence was fully appreciated by an audience that completely filled the hall.

Mendelssohn wrote the Shakesperian overture when he was 17 years old. With the exception of the overture to "Fingal's Cave" he wrote little afterwards that for pure fancy and charm of expression is comparable. Was he spoiled by his good fortune, by his easy life, by the flattery of friends, and an adoring English public? In music as in life he was too often conventional, priggish, genteel. A little portrait of him by Aubrey Beardsley, published in the Savoy, too interesting a magazine to live, shows the Mendelssohn of mature years; the man that was shocked by Berlioz, did not understand Chopin and Schumann, wrote an overture for "Ruy Blas," although he did not approve the play, and turned his eyes away from pretty, innocent Zerlina disrobing in "Fra Diavolo." It is a pity that he did not live to see Richard Strauss's "Salome" and Puccini's "Tosca," or the first act of "The Valkyrie." His letters about these operas would have been entertaining reading. Perhaps he would have inserted pen-and-ink sketches of the "objectionable" scenes. For he was handy with pen and pencil, and we suspect him of writing verses in ladies' albums. But the overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream" will not soon be stale. The Nocturne, composed long afterwards, reveals the composer of the "Songs without Words." The fairies in the Scherzo are heavy-footed after those that Berlioz imagined. "The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo."

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week, for the orchestra will be on its second trip. The program of the concerts of Dec. 14 and 15 will include Mozart's Symphony in E flat major; an excerpt from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," and Balakiref's symphonic poem "Thamar." John McCormack will sing an aria from Handel's "Atalanta" and Beethoven's "Jehovah, Hear Me."

GLOBE DEC. 1, 1917

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The performance by Dr Muck and the orchestra of Rachmaninoff's second symphony in E minor yesterday afternoon was eloquent. The inspired pages of this notable score were illumined as at no previous hearing of them; to those more prolix than significant was given a nobility they did not inherently possess.

It has been said when this symphony was played before in Boston that it was too long, that it did not gain with acquaintance. For some the merit now will lie with Dr Muck's reading. The charge of length is indisputable. The audience gets little from a symphony playing over an hour. In the slow movement the composer becomes enamored of a figure expanding into a melody of folk or naive character. Its profile is indeterminate, and in prolonged development it becomes discursive. The last movement leads through a devious fantasia before a belated return of the first theme and the review of others in the work.

Even in these there are striking passages, but not the sustained beauty of thought and expression of the first two. There are reminiscences of Tschaikowsky and particularly of the "Pathetic" symphony in the first movement, but there are noble passages, a compelling flow of orchestral song, fascinating blends of instrumental colors, superb dramatic climaxes and a Slavic somberness of character. The scherzo with its cheerily, bustling theme, the vivacious fugue and its admirably sustained mood was played with just the touch of folk or festival gayety.

The euphony, the virtuosity throughout, was such as only this orchestra can give, nor must the beautiful tone and finely curved phrasing of Mr Sand's playing of the theme in the slow movement be forgotten.

The overture, nocturne and scherzo of Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" finished the program. Next week the orchestra will be away on its second Southern tour.

Herald Dec. 3.

LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS THE COLOSSAL SYMPHONY

Orchestra and Chorus Give Notable Performance of the Work.

A great audience again filled Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, repeated the admirable and impressive performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony given a little over a week ago. Every seat was taken and all available standing room filled. As before the orchestra was assisted by 350 singers excellently trained by Stephen Townsend, and this quartet: Florence Hinkle, who replaced Miss Hempel; Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. The performance began with "The Star Spangled Banner."

In his choral symphony Beethoven expressed great ideals, glorified universal love and sympathy, voiced his conception of the brotherhood of man. A gigantic work conceived by an Olympian mind. The music imposes extraordinary difficulties upon its executants. It would not be easy to imagine a finer interpretation than that given by Dr. Muck, the moving spirit of the performance. With an incomparable orchestra and a chorus skilled in execution and responsive in spirit at his command his interpretation was marked by nobility, dramatic force and artistic distinction, features that set his conducting apart, unrivalled. The audience was heartily appreciative.

Post
DEC 3, 1917

GREAT CHORAL HEARD AGAIN

Symphony and Chorus Repeat Beethoven's Ninth

Beethoven's ninth symphony was given a second performance this season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, a chorus of 350 voices, and a solo quartet consisting of Florence Hinkle, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass. The performance, like that of a few days previous by the same forces, was most brilliant and impressive. Long since had the first three movements of the symphony, for orchestra alone, been done justice by the superb orchestra and by more than one conductor, but never before, probably, in this city, had the vocal passages been so well sung. It was surprising that voices could do so much with this dramatic but essentially unvocal music. The only new element in the performance was the appointment of Miss Hinkle as soprano. She has ere this proven herself a vocalist and interpreter of the very first rank, a musician equal to the demands of such music.

The performance was preceded by the performance of the national anthem by orchestra, chorus and soloists. The hall was crowded to its capacity, many standing in the aisles. There was much enthusiasm.

TOUR PUZZLE TO SYMPHONY

Trying to Get Alien Players to New York

Although the Boston Symphony Orchestra has cancelled its engagements to play in Philadelphia tonight, Washington tomorrow evening, and Baltimore Wednesday, owing to the recent alien enemy ruling, which makes it impossible for the 23 members who are alien enemies to travel without passing through restricted area, Manager C. A. Ellis is hopeful that the orchestra may carry out its programme in Brooklyn on Thursday evening and in New York city on Friday.

Manager Ellis left Boston for New York immediately after the symphony concert yesterday. Just before leaving town he stated that at present it looked very much as if the orchestra would be unable to carry out the schedule of the latter part of the week with a concert at Brooklyn and New York; however, he hoped to arrange some plan whereby the 23 alien enemy members might reach the two New York cities. He did not know what route might provide a mode of travel which would not cross any restricted area.

Under the interpretations of the proclamation of President Wilson, Germans are prevented from taking trips of any length. The orchestra includes in its winter schedule five weeks of concerts outside of this State. If Manager Ellis learns that it will be impossible to carry out this schedule, the programme will be readjusted, and Boston will have a longer symphony entertainment than heretofore.

Advertiser
DEC 3, 1917.

FINE PERFORMANCE OF 9TH SYMPHONY

Boston Orchestra and Chorus Under Dr. Muck Repeat Beethoven's Work

Beethoven's Symphony in D minor No. 9, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," which was performed recently by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, with a chorus of 350 singers trained by Stephen Townsend, and with eminent soloists, was repeated yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Miss Hinkle, who took the place of Mme Hempel, the personnel of the soloists was the same as that of the initial performance, and included Miss Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Preceding the symphony the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung by the chorus, soloists and audience, accompanied by the orchestra led by Dr. Muck.

There are some occasions that make heavy drafts on our stock of superlatives. Such an occasion the concert of yesterday proved to be. As a comprehensive analysis of Beethoven's heroic masterpiece has previously appeared in these columns, and the splendid achievements of the orchestra, conductor, chorus and soloists in this work have likewise been adequately reviewed, it is therefore unnecessary to dilate further on these matters.

It would, however, be but natural that the repetition of this colossal work should inevitably reveal greater freedom of expression by reason of more familiarity with the intricate and difficult score. With the exception of the tympanist, who must needs be a virtuoso, doubtless to the players in the orchestra, the gnarled and knotted measures of this symphony hold no terrors and seemed but as a matter of course and all in a day's work; but to the average vocalist the case is different. With regard to the latter, in his vocal scoring, Beethoven's motto might have been, "Hew to the line, let the notes fall where they may." Although the members of the chorus had a difficult task to perform, and acquitted themselves creditably, it was the intervals and rhythms that confronted the quartet that caused "the heart to sag with doubt" as to the outcome. If then the soloists met with too formidable a foe, the chorus more than compensated for this lack by its fine attack, brilliant, thrilling tone of great power, and marked fidelity to pure intonation.

To Dr. Muck's masterly conducting was due the remarkably smooth and altogether excellent performance.

F. M. W.

TAR
Baltimore, Md.

168

Music and Musicians

BY J. NORRIS HERING.

One week from this coming Wednesday is the date of the second scheduled Baltimore concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Photo by Bachrach.

J. Norris Hering

In the meantime no word has been received that the resignation of Dr. Muck has been accepted, that the remaining four planned concerts here of the orchestra have been abandoned, or that arrangements have been made for someone else to conduct them, and the orchestra organization has sent to Baltimore marked copies of Boston newspapers, containing their music critics' accounts of a recent concert there, in which the musical work of Dr. Muck and the orchestra is extolled.

It is to be inferred, naturally, that this last act is a propaganda, intended to divert protestants against recent actions of the organization from their principles. Each article sent mentions that The Star-spangled Banner was performed at the concert, and the one written by H. T. P. in the Boston Evening Transcript (November 21) says:

"To hear him and to hear them as they were last evening was to hold the dismissal of the conductor and the dissolution of the orchestra, under the chance exigencies of a war that will not be interminable, a sheer artistic blasphemy."

In view of Baltimore's organized demonstration against Muck and of the ban upon its first concert here by both the Grand Jury and the Board of Police Commissioners (because they considered "it would be unwise, if not physically dangerous," to permit it), the inference seems justified.

Considered as an isolated question, of course no one now wants the orchestra to cease; but to separate it and other questions purposefully from the main one is not only quibble, but plain ignoring of the main question, no less if unintentional than intentional, and there is no excuse whatever in these days for anyone evading main questions. Their minds should be made up in advance; and if not, after warning, then they ought to be made take consequences.

Performance or not by Dr. Muck of the Star-spangled Banner is not the main question. The question is, briefly, that Dr. Muck is a Prussian citizen high in favor of the Kaiser; an enemy alien, with great freedom of action; in sympathy with Germany; not in sympathy with the United States; and that, in the face of this, the American organization which pays him thousands of dollars yearly and which counts upon American public patronage, at this critical time of our country's history, dared refuse to play this country's national anthem, on the ground that art is greater than any national considerations, and that it continues in the face of this to retain Muck, and to try to preserve American public support by now playing our national hymn against its wishes, and emphasizing Muck's musical excellencies.

Away with such unreason!

An automatic stop

om AMERICAN
ddress: Baltimore, Md.
W 23

BAN JOHNSON AND MUCK.

To the Editor: We hope Ban Johnson, czar of baseball, was misquoted in asking exemption from the service of their country for his star baseball players under the plea that such service would lower the artistic standard of baseball, meaning, of course, that his organization, the American League, would not have attractions strong enough to keep the turnstiles whirling merrily as is dear to Ban's heart.

Dr. Muck earned a panning that broke all records when he excused himself for not leading in The Star-spangled Banner on the plea that this most beautiful anthem would lower the artistic standard of his Boston Symphony Orchestra. Even Dr. Muck apparently had no thought of the effect on the gate receipts, so that Ban has outmucked Muck.

Of course, the fact that every profession, art, trade and business has had its artistic tone lowered by the war is not obvious to Ban. The plumbing in the house is out of order and the neighbor's furnace does not draw because the plumbers and stove men are in the service of Uncle Sam. Pretty tough, but no one but Ban Johnson and Dr. Muck ever felt a lessened desire to strafe the Kaiser because of these inconveniences.

W. W. W.

POST
DEC 3, 1917

GREAT CHORAL HEARD AGAIN

Symphony and Chorus Repeat Beethoven's Ninth

Beethoven's ninth symphony was given a second performance this season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, a chorus of 350 voices, and a solo quartet consisting of Florence Hinkle, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass. The performance, like that of a few days previous by the same forces, was most brilliant and impressive. Long since had the first three movements of the symphony, for orchestra alone, been done justice by the superb orchestra and by more than one conductor, but never before, probably, in this city, had the vocal passages been so well sung. It was surprising that voices could do so much with this dramatic but essentially unvocal music. The only new element in the performance was the appointment of Miss Hinkle as soprano. She has ere this proven herself a vocalist and interpreter of the very first rank, a musician equal to the demands of such music.

The performance was preceded by the performance of the national anthem by orchestra, chorus and soloists. The hall was crowded to its capacity, many standing in the aisles. There was much enthusiasm.

TOUR PUZZLE TO SYMPHONY

Trying to Get Alien Players to New York

Although the Boston Symphony Orchestra has cancelled its engagements to play in Philadelphia tonight, Washington tomorrow evening, and Baltimore Wednesday, owing to the recent alien enemy ruling, which makes it impossible for the 23 members who are alien enemies to travel without passing through restricted area, Manager C. A. Ellis is hopeful that the orchestra may carry out its programme in Brooklyn on Thursday evening and in New York city on Friday.

Manager Ellis left Boston for New York immediately after the symphony concert yesterday. Just before leaving town he stated that at present it looked very much as if the orchestra would be unable to carry out the schedule of the latter part of the week with a concert at Brooklyn and New York; however, he hoped to arrange some plan whereby the 23 alien enemy members might reach the two New York cities. He did not know what route might provide a mode of travel which would not cross any restricted area.

Under the interpretations of the proclamation of President Wilson, Germans are prevented from taking trips of any length. The orchestra includes in its winter schedule five weeks of concerts outside of this State. If Manager Ellis earns that it will be impossible to carry out this schedule, the programme will be readjusted, and Boston will have longer symphony entertainment than heretofore.

ADVERTISER
DEC. 3, 1917.

FINE PERFORMANCE OF 9TH SYMPHONY

Boston Orchestra and Chorus Under Dr. Muck Repeat Beethoven's Work

Beethoven's Symphony in D minor No. 9, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," which was performed recently by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, with a chorus of 350 singers trained by Stephen Townsend, and with eminent soloists, was repeated yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Miss Hinkle, who took the place of Mme Hempel, the personnel of the soloists was the same as that of the initial performance, and included Miss Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Preceding the symphony the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung by the chorus, soloists and audience, accompanied by the orchestra led by Dr. Muck.

There are some occasions that make heavy drafts on our stock of superlatives. Such an occasion the concert of yesterday proved to be. As a comprehensive analysis of Beethoven's heroic masterpiece has previously appeared in these columns, and the splendid achievements of the orchestra, conductor, chorus and soloists in this work have likewise been adequately reviewed, it is therefore unnecessary to dilate further on these matters.

It would, however, be but natural that the repetition of this colossal work should inevitably reveal greater freedom of expression by reason of more familiarity with the intricate and difficult score. With the exception of the tympanist, who must needs be a virtuoso, doubtless to the players in the orchestra, the gnarled and knotted measures of this symphony hold no terrors and seemed but as a matter of course and all in a day's work; but to the average vocalist the case is different. With regard to the latter, in his vocal scoring, Beethoven's motto might have been, "Hew to the line, let the notes fall where they may." Although the members of the chorus had a difficult task to perform, and acquitted themselves creditably, it was the intervals and rhythms that confronted the quartet that caused "the heart to sag with doubt" as to the outcome. If then the soloists met with too formidable a foe, the chorus more than compensated for this lack by its fine attack, brilliant, thrilling tone of great power, and marked fidelity to pure intonation.

To Dr. Muck's masterly conducting was due the remarkably smooth and altogether excellent performance.

F. M. W.

TAR

Baltimore, Md.

168

Music and Musicians

BY J. NORRIS HERING.

One week from this coming Wednesday is the date of the second scheduled Baltimore concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Photo by Bachrach.

J. Norris Hering

In the meantime no word has been received that the resignation of Dr. Muck has been accepted, that the remaining four planned concerts here of the orchestra have been abandoned, or that arrangements have been made for someone else to conduct them, and the orchestra organization has sent to Baltimore marked copies of Boston newspapers, containing their music critics' accounts of a recent concert there, in which the musical work of Dr. Muck and the orchestra is extolled.

It is to be inferred, naturally, that this last act is a propaganda, intended to divert protestants against recent actions of the organization from their principles. Each article sent mentions that The Star-spangled Banner was performed at the concert, and the one written by H. T. P. in the Boston Evening Transcript (November 21) says:

"To hear him and to hear them as they were last evening was to hold the dismissal of the conductor and the dissolution of the orchestra, under the chance exigencies of a war that will not be interminable, a sheer artistic blasphemy."

In view of Baltimore's organized demonstration against Muck and of the ban upon its first concert here by both the Grand Jury and the Board of Police Commissioners (because they considered "it would be unwise, if not physically dangerous," to permit it), the inference seems justified.

Considered as an isolated question, of course no one now wants the orchestra to cease; but to separate it and other questions purposefully from the main one is not only quibble, but plain ignoring of the main question, no less if unintentional than intentional, and there is no excuse whatever in these days for anyone evading main questions. Their minds should be made up in advance; and if not, after warning, then they ought to be made take consequences.

Performance or not by Dr. Muck of the Star-spangled Banner is not the main question. The question is, briefly, that Dr. Muck is a Prussian citizen high in favor of the Kaiser; an enemy alien, with great freedom of action; in sympathy with Germany; not in sympathy with the United States; and that, in the face of this, the American organization which pays him thousands of dollars yearly and which counts upon American public patronage, at this critical time of our country's history, dared refuse to play this country's national anthem, on the ground that art is greater than any national considerations, and that it continues in the face of this to retain Muck, and to try to preserve American public support by now playing our national hymn against its wishes, and emphasizing Muck's musical excellencies.

Away with such unreason!

om AMERICAN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

BAN JOHNSON AND MUCK.

To the Editor: We hope Ban Johnson, czar of baseball, was misquoted in asking exemption from the service of their country for his star baseball players under the plea that such service would lower the artistic standard of baseball, meaning, of course, that his organization, the American League, would not have attractions strong enough to keep the turnstiles whirling merrily as is dear to Ban's heart.

Dr. Muck earned a panning that broke all records when he excused himself for not leading in The Star-spangled Banner on the plea that this most beautiful anthem would lower the artistic standard of his Boston Symphony Orchestra. Even Dr. Muck apparently had no thought of the effect on the gate receipts, so that Ban has outmucked Muck.

Of course, the fact that every profession, art, trade and business has had its artistic tone lowered by the war is not obvious to Ban. The plumbing in the house is out of order and the neighbor's furnace does not draw because the plumbers and stove men are in the service of Uncle Sam. Pretty tough, but no one but Ban Johnson and Dr. Muck ever felt a lessened desire to strafe the Kaiser because of these inconveniences.

W. W. W.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
MANUFACTURER'S RECORD
From
Address: BALTIMORE, MD.
Date NOV 15 1917

TIME TO TAKE THINGS SERIOUSLY.

THE Richmond Virginian, in criticising Baltimore for having prevented Dr. Muck from appearing in this city with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, displays some of the lack of judgment now so prevalent in this country, which utterly disregards the desperate seriousness of the war in which we are engaged and the work of our enemies.

It closes its criticism with the following:

> Though likely we shall not have the privilege of hearing the famous orchestra this season, we would not stay away for a second on account of our neighbor's excessive agitation.

We are sorry that the Virginian, a leading daily paper, has an editor who thus flippantly admits that his interest in the salvation of this country and in the lives of the men who are going out to war is so small that he could enjoy listening to an orchestra led by one of the bitter enemies of the country.

The man who does not resent with all his soul the fact that such an enemy as Dr. Muck has the effrontery to appear before an American audience, and the fact that there are so-called Americans whose patriotism has not yet been so aroused that they are willing to listen to such an enemy, has failed to understand the issue of the hour.

The Virginian says "Baltimore takes itself too seriously," and this because of its protest against Dr. Muck and its determination that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should not play in this city under present conditions. It may be said in reply that the Virginian has demonstrated an incapacity to take anything seriously; but we trust, for the honor of good old Virginia, that the Virginian does not voice the feeling of Richmond—and we are sure it does not.

BULLETIN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

Muck and Prussianism

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I quite agree with "Mere Woman," inasmuch as she scores the people of Philadelphia for welcoming an avowed German, who made a parody of our national anthem, and no doubt won the iron cross in so doing.

Philadelphia should feel keenly the criticisms of the world at large on the matter of Professor Muck. It shows the apathy of the city of "Brotherly Love" as nothing else can do.

Why are the people so slow to see the insidious influence of Prussianism in this country? German sympathizers on every hand who make sport of our flag and our national anthem. They refuse to rise when the "Star Spangled Banner" is played. What do you think would be the fate of an American in Germany who would refuse to salute the German flag? Can you picture it? Only the poor unfortunate soldiers who fall into the hands of the Huns will be able to describe it, and I fear they will not be able to.

They should at least be loyal to the country that gave them freedom which they would not have in the mother country, and where they have made their money. Just one instance that came to my attention: A man, who has made his money in this country, and who owns a large hotel in the South, said: "Now I am going to put the German flag out," when he heard that the Germans were winning, before the United States had declared war. So it goes, every day we hear more of the disloyalty to the United States.

I think the Mayor of Coatesville did a very wise thing to take the stand he did, and if more people would take the same stand this country would be safer.

When will the people wake up to the realization that we are in this war to the finish, and the only way we may hope to win is to work together as a unit and for one end, the downfall of Prussianism? B. W. N.

om BULLETIN
ldress: Philadelphia, Pa.
te

German Orchestra Leaders

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I recently read an article written by "A Mere Woman," and I must say I admire her very much, as I agree with her on all points.

I think Philadelphians did wrong to applaud a man who changed our dear old "Star Spangled Banner," which has been played so often by some of our best musicians. Baltimore showed her respect for the much-loved old song when she denied Muck the privilege of entering the city, and I honor her for it.

Why could not Washington and Philadelphia have done the same? I would like to send Muck and all such back to their beloved Kaiser and let them play their dear "Die Wacht Am Rhein" to their heart's content. I live in a German settlement, and I have taken a great many insults from some of them, simply because I am an American.

Down with Dr. Muck and all such. We can get along very well without them, and I presume their dear Kaiser needs them.

A VIRGINIAN.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Dat NOV 24 191

German Musical Kultur Used Malevolently By Knaves And Witlessly By Fools.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: The distinction—outside of that of being in or out of jail—between the unmannerly lout who shouts "Hoch der Kaiser!" in a barroom and the orchestra leader who refuses deference to the nation which houses him is merely one between untutored and tutored boorishness. Each stands for a brand of German Kultur. Each is equally objectionable but not equally dangerous, yet—as in the Muck episode—it is the Teuton with brains who goes free to parade this country and "trade with the enemy" as truly as any subject of the Kaiser who may manage to smuggle his wares into the United States of America. The only apparent reason why Mr. Muck et al. are allowed this liberty and license is that they find in time of trouble a very present help in the great purblind snobocracy who prattle of Art with a capital A, gush over every item on a concert program as "simply wonderful" and have not sufficient intelligence to discard a moss-grown conviction that there could be no more music if Prussia ceased to exist.

In truth, such music as Prussia has ever composed is almost entirely negligible, and, what is worse, since Prussia put the blight of its Kultur upon the lesser German states they too have become sterile in musical production. Outside, perhaps, of Strauss and Humperdinck, it affords about as much to the lover of music as the Siegesallee with its joblot statues of Hohenzollerns offers the devotee of art. One might well-nigh declare that the most worthy German music written in long years is in the guise of Viennese waltz songs.

And all this at a time when Italy, France and Russia have been giving with such prodigality to the world of music, and encouraging the daring to new paths of progress. The Teuton meanwhile has been standing beyond the pale like some Senite beggar, with busts of Beethoven and Brahms hanging as fetiches about his neck.

Kultur, during the past half-century, has utterly deadened the Teuton production power. The cant one hears, and the nauseous gallimaufry about Germany's pre-eminence in the world of music has as much basis as would a claim to artistic greatness founded upon the rape of statues and paintings from Belgium.

But the establishment and maintenance of the idea that there lurks, hidden somewhere in Germany, a lofty-minded, highly intellectual, white-souled people who love music and whom the wicked militarists could only lure into an abhorred war by means of brass bands playing classical music is a very valuable asset to the Hun at present, and will become immeasurably more so when the time comes to apportion punishment for the fiendish crimes of which Kultur stands indicted before the world. Before we can finally and fairly deal with the Germans we must know the Germans; and to do that we must strip away much threadbare tradition and many carefully spread fictions.

As long as Germany's musical Kultur is being used throughout this nation, malevolently by knaves and witlessly by fools, as a bogey to divert our attention from that more truly Prussian Kultur which a horrified world has seen in Europe, it behooves us to do whatever we can to exorcise that bogey. As a first step we might rid ourselves of the idea that a performance is positively indecorous if the conductor's desk be not littered with musty manuscript from a musically moribund nation. Nor must we cling, as the snobocracy of other American cities have been clinging, to the theory that an æsthetic existence would be incomplete without ever and anon salaaming to some iron-crossed conductor who yields in the common amenities of life to a painted Kaffir chief.

Would it not be, under the circumstances, a sound and sane policy to discourage the inclusion in concert programs of even classic German music, as being a potent agency in a subtle propaganda? Certainly it should not be tolerated that any enemy alien, such as Mr. Muck, should go his insolent way, gathering American shekels for spreading mischievous pro-German doctrines.

Just at present we can get along comfortably minus either dead or live Germans, and yet not starve either spiritually or intellectually. Our boys "over there" are learning the methods of the modern Hun. We may well spend our time, not fraternizing with him, but in pondering what measure of association, it may be possible to accord him in days to come. I. E. R.

Baltimore, Nov. 22.

EVENING WORLD
New York City
NOV 27 1917

APPLY THE BIGGER TESTS.

WE WONDER if the great violinist, Kreisler, would have reached the decision that as an Austrian who has served in the present war it is better for him not to go on giving concerts before American audiences had it not been for the multiplying current evidences of a patriotism too ardent to care what becomes of a Boston Symphony Orchestra or whether the music of Richard Wagner is interned along with enemy aliens.

Yet, provided it rests upon a foundation of sincere, self-sacrificing loyalty, is it not wiser after all to try to understand this phase of patriotism than to combat it?

It is vain in some cases to recall the President's solemn protest that the United States is at war with the German people only so far as they identify themselves with the present Imperial Government and its purpose. It is vain to argue that since we are at war only with a present German dynasty, we need not make war on past generations of Germans nor on the music or the book they produced.

Patriotism would be a pallid thing if it did not feel as well as reason. Its deeper intensities of passion are necessarily in evidence in war time. Don't be too quick to condemn them even when they seem extravagant or inconsistent. The thing itself—when it is real—is too big, too precious to be appraised by any but major tests.

EVENING SUN
New York City
NOV 24

"Enemy Music."

The inherent absurdity of the phrase "enemy music" may serve as the rejoinder to much of the chauvinism which appears in the flood of discussion following the Boston Symphony incident and the decision of the Metropolitan Opera directors to give no operas in German this season. Yet there is just now unquestionably a heavy weight of popular sentiment against entirely ignoring the German and Austrian origins of certain music and certain musical artists who have been made welcome in the United States in recent years.

Possibly the most sensitive nerve was touched by certain artists who made themselves offensive last year by characteristically bold and insolent talk and behavior in and about the Opera House. Those individuals have been eliminated, of course, and if there are some Americans who think they might better be interned than left practically foot-loose, it is to be remembered that the tactful creatures are pretty well under observation in a community which disapproves them pointedly; there is good precedent for giving such people plenty of rope.

Again, a very keen irritation is suffered by some loyal Americans who think that all the Teutonic artists secretly cherish hatred or contempt of America while they are receiving very large sums of American money for their work. It is possible that some of their profits are exaggerated in the minds of their critics, and it is also likely enough that no particular hatred is felt by the Teutonic artists who may be outstaying their welcome, but are fully appreciative of the difference between their situation here and in their native lands. They don't want to go home, naturally.

While a certain excess in emotion is evident in some of the loose talk heard and in letters to the newspapers, it is still perfectly true that full doses of the German language and German music of all sorts are likely to cloy the American public. There is no doubt whatever that a complete abstinence from German music for a year or two, under all the extraordinary circumstances, would not be an intolerable hardship for any good American, however "musical," who chose to take a little pains to make an expression of resentment. That is, it might very well be that however lovely some of the German music, an American should say, "But I can get along without it for the present; I am denying myself my customary allowance of certain foods and giving considerable sums of money to my country's cause; and I certainly can deny myself German music. It's all very well, but I don't care to listen to it just now; the association is too unpleasant. I don't hang out German colors, though red, white and black are not evil in themselves."

If there be souls who faint and pine without German music, the conclusion is inevitable that they are placing self-indulgence ahead of a little needed clear thinking and sharp self-examination. There is no call for Federal regulation of this matter, but there seems to be plenty of room for a little more self-discipline than most people are by way of exercising.

rom ENQUIRER
ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.
ate

DR. KUNWALD BARRED FROM CONCERT STAGE

Pittsburgh Police Will Allow Orchestra to Play, Under Restrictions

Special to The Inquirer.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 21.—The police today put up the bars against the appearance in this city tomorrow night of Dr. Ernest Kunwald, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, though permitting his orchestra to go on with the concert. Director Charles S. Hubbard, of the Department of Public Safety, made the announcement this evening, along with one that hereafter no alien enemies will be permitted to appear in a public performance of any kind, nor will the playing of German or Austrian music be permitted at any place.

Director Hubbard made his decision in the Kunwald matter after considering it all day, and announced that he would permit the concert, providing no German music is played and that Dr. Kunwald does not appear as conductor, "only because it would have caused great disappointment to our own people," if it had been banned.

The Director's announcement practically prohibits the appearance in January of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He stated that while he had ascertained that reports that the Cincinnati leader is an Austrian reservist, were untrue, nevertheless it appeared that Kunwald is still a subject of Austria. He bitterly denounced all alien enemy musicians, asserting that while not all these are spies, "most of them are," and are sending money obtained in these concerts back to their native land.

From Address:
Date

PRODUCE BEETHOVEN SYMPHONY

Ovation for Muck's Orchestra Given by Boston Music Lovers

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—Every seat and all available standing room were occupied in Symphony Hall last night when the long-awaited performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. The chorus comprised many of the best professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

To accommodate the singers and musicians a special stage had been built. With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Doctor Muck's leadership to open the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused remarkable enthusiasm, which at the end took the nature of an ovation. There were many distinguished music lovers present from Philadelphia, New York, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
MANUFACTURER'S RECORD
From
Address: BALTIMORE, MD.
Date NOV 15

TIME TO TAKE THINGS SERIOUSLY.

THE Richmond Virginian, in criticising Baltimore for having prevented Dr. Muck from appearing in this city with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, displays some of the lack of judgment now so prevalent in this country, which utterly disregards the desperate seriousness of the war in which we are engaged and the work of our enemies.

It closes its criticism with the following:

> Though likely we shall not have the privilege of hearing the famous orchestra this season, we would not stay away for a second on account of our neighbor's excessive agitation.

We are sorry that the Virginian, a leading daily paper, has an editor who thus flippantly admits that his interest in the salvation of this country and in the lives of the men who are going out to war is so small that he could enjoy listening to an orchestra led by one of the bitter enemies of the country.

The man who does not resent with all his soul the fact that such an enemy as Dr. Muck has the effrontery to appear before an American audience, and the fact that there are so-called Americans whose patriotism has not yet been so aroused that they are willing to listen to such an enemy, has failed to understand the issue of the hour.

The Virginian says "Baltimore takes itself too seriously," and this because of its protest against Dr. Muck and its determination that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should not play in this city under present conditions. It may be said in reply that the Virginian has demonstrated an incapacity to take anything seriously; but we trust, for the honor of good old Virginia, that the Virginian does not voice the feeling of Richmond—and we are sure it does not.

BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Muck and Prussianism

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I quite agree with "Mere Woman," inasmuch as she scores the people of Philadelphia for welcoming an avowed German, who made a parody of our national anthem, and no doubt won the iron cross in so doing.

Philadelphia should feel keenly the criticisms of the world at large on the matter of Professor Muck. It shows the apathy of the city of "Brotherly Love" as nothing else can do.

Why are the people so slow to see the insidious influence of Prussianism in this country? German sympathizers on every hand who make sport of our flag and our national anthem. They refuse to rise when the "Star Spangled Banner" is played. What do you think would be the fate of an American in Germany who would refuse to salute the German flag? Can you picture it? Only the poor unfortunate soldiers who fall into the hands of the Huns will be able to describe it, and I fear they will not be able to.

They should at least be loyal to the country that gave them freedom which they would not have in the mother country, and where they have made their money. Just one instance that came to my attention: A man, who has made his money in this country, and who owns a large hotel in the South, said: "Now I am going to put the German flag out," when he heard that the Germans were winning, before the United States had declared war. So it goes, every day we hear more of the disloyalty to the United States.

I think the Mayor of Coatesville did a very wise thing to take the stand he did, and if more people would take the same stand this country would be safer.

When will the people wake up to the realization that we are in this war to the finish, and the only way we may hope to win is to work together as a unit and for one end, the downfall of Prussianism?

B. W. N.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
From BULLETIN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

German Orchestra Leaders

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I recently read an article written by "A Mere Woman," and I must say I admire her very much, as I agree with her on all points.

I think Philadelphians did wrong to applaud a man who changed our dear old "Star Spangled Banner," which has been played so often by some of our best musicians. Baltimore showed her respect for the much-loved old song when she denied Muck the privilege of entering the city, and I honor her for it.

Why could not Washington and Philadelphia have done the same? I would like to send Muck and all such back to their beloved Kaiser and let them play their dear "Die Wacht Am Rhein" to their heart's content. I live in a German settlement, and I have taken a great many insults from some of them, simply because I am an American.

Down with Dr. Muck and all such. We can get along very well without them, and I presume their dear Kaiser needs them.

A VIRGINIAN.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Date

German Musical Kultur Used Malevolently By Knaves And Witlessly By Fools.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The distinction—outside of that of being in or out of jail—between the unmannerly lout who shouts "Hoch der Kaiser!" in a barroom and the orchestral leader who refuses deference to the nation which houses him is merely one between untutored and tutored boorishness. Each stands for a brand of German Kultur. Each is equally objectionable but not equally dangerous, yet—as in the Muck episode—it is the Teuton with brains who goes free to parade this country and "trade with the enemy" as truly as any subject of the Kaiser who may manage to smuggle his wares into the United States of America. The only apparent reason why Mr. Muck et al. are allowed this liberty and license is that they find in time of trouble a very present help in the great purblind snobocracy who prattle of Art with a capital A, gush over every item on a concert program as "simply wonderful" and have not sufficient intelligence to discard a moss-grown conviction that there could be no more music if Prussia ceased to exist.

In truth, such music as Prussia has ever composed is almost entirely negligible, and, what is worse, since Prussia put the blight of its Kultur upon the lesser German states they too have become sterile in musical production. Outside, perhaps, of Strauss and Humperdinck, it affords about as much to the lover of music as the Siegesallee with its job-lot statues of Hohenzollerns offers the devotee of art. One might well-nigh declare that the most worthy German music written in long years is in the guise of Viennese waltz songs.

And all this at a time when Italy, France and Russia have been giving with such prodigality to the world of music, and encouraging the daring to new paths of progress. The Teuton meanwhile has been standing beyond the pale like some Senite beggar, with busts of Beethoven and Brahms hanging as fetiches about his neck.

Kultur, during the past half-century, has utterly deadened the Teuton production power. The cant one hears, and the nauseous gallimaufry about Germany's pre-eminence in the world of music has as much basis as would a claim to artistic greatness founded upon the rape of statues and paintings from Belgium.

But the establishment and maintenance of the idea that there lurks, hidden somewhere in Germany, a lofty-minded, highly intellectual, white-souled people who love music and whom the wicked militarists could only lure into an abhorred war by means of brass bands playing classical music is a very valuable asset to the Hun at present, and will become immeasurably more so when the time comes to apportion punishment for the fiendish crimes of which Kultur stands indicted before the world. Before we can finally and fairly deal with the Germans we must know the Germans; and to do that we must strip away much threadbare tradition and many carefully spread fictions.

As long as Germany's musical Kultur is being used throughout this nation, malevolently by knaves and witlessly by fools, as a bogey to divert our attention from that more truly Prussian Kultur which a horrified world has seen in Europe, it behooves us to do whatever we can to exorcise that bogey. As a first step we might rid ourselves of the idea that a performance is positively indecorous if the conductor's desk be not littered with musty manuscript from a musically moribund nation. Nor must we cling, as the snobocracy of other American cities have been clinging, to the theory that an æsthetic existence would be incomplete without ever and anon salaaming to some ironcrossed conductor who yields in the common amenities of life to a painted Kaffir chief.

Would it not be, under the circumstances, a sound and sane policy to discourage the inclusion in concert programs of even classic German music, as being a potent agency in a subtle propaganda? Certainly it should not be tolerated that any enemy alien, such as Mr. Muck, should go his insolent way, gathering American shekels for spreading mischievous pro-German doctrines.

Just at present we can get along comfortably minus either dead or live Germans, and yet not starve either spiritually or intellectually. Our boys "over there" are learning the methods of the modern Hun. We may well spend our time, not fraternizing with him, but in pondering what measure of association it may be possible to accord him in days to come. I. E. R.

Baltimore, Nov. 22.

EVENING WORLD
New York City.
NOV 27 1917

APPLY THE BIGGER TESTS.

WE WONDER if the great violinist, Kreisler, would have reached the decision that as an Austrian who has served in the present war it is better for him not to go on giving concerts before American audiences had it not been for the multiplying current evidences of a patriotism too ardent to care what becomes of a Boston Symphony Orchestra or whether the music of Richard Wagner is interned along with enemy aliens.

Yet, provided it rests upon a foundation of sincere, self-sacrificing loyalty, is it not wiser after all to try to understand this phase of patriotism than to combat it?

It is vain in some cases to recall the President's solemn protest that the United States is at war with the German people only so far as they identify themselves with the present Imperial Government and its purpose. It is vain to argue that since we are at war only with a present German dynasty, we need not make war on past generations of Germans nor on the music or the book they produced.

Patriotism would be a pallid thing if it did not feel as well as reason. Its deeper intensities of passion are necessarily in evidence in war time. Don't be too quick to condemn them even when they seem extravagant or inconsistent. The thing itself—when it is real—is too big, too precious to be appraised by any but major tests.

EVENING SUN
New York City

"Enemy Music."

The inherent absurdity of the phrase "enemy music" may serve as the rejoinder to much of the chauvinism which appears in the flood of discussion following the Boston Symphony incident and the decision of the Metropolitan Opera directors to give no operas in German this season. Yet there is just now unquestionably a heavy weight of popular sentiment against entirely ignoring the German and Austrian origins of certain music and certain musical artists who have been made welcome in the United States in recent years.

Possibly the most sensitive nerve was touched by certain artists who made themselves offensive last year by characteristically bold and insolent talk and behavior in and about the Opera House. Those individuals have been eliminated, of course, and if there are some Americans who think they might better be interned than left practically foot-loose, it is to be remembered that the tactful creatures are pretty well under observation in a community which disapproves them pointedly; there is good precedent for giving such people plenty of rope.

Again, a very keen irritation is suffered by some loyal Americans who think that all the Teutonic artists secretly cherish hatred or contempt of America while they are receiving very large sums of American money for their work. It is possible that some of their profits are exaggerated in the minds of their critics, and it is also likely enough that no particular hatred is felt by the Teutonic artists who may be outstaying their welcome, but are fully appreciative of the difference between their situation here and in their native lands. They don't want to go home, naturally.

While a certain excess in emotion is evident in some of the loose talk heard and in letters to the newspapers, it is still perfectly true that full doses of the German language and German music of all sorts are likely to cloy the American public. There is no doubt whatever that a complete abstinence from German music for a year or two, under all the extraordinary circumstances, would not be an intolerable hardship for any good American, however "musical," who chose to take a little pains to make an expression of resentment. That is, it might very well be that however lovely some of the German music, an American should say, "But I can get along without it for the present; I am denying myself my customary allowance of certain foods and giving considerable sums of money to my country's cause; and I certainly can deny myself German music. It's all very well, but I don't care to listen to it just now; the association is too unpleasant. I don't hang out German colors, though red, white and black are not evil in themselves."

If there be souls who faint and pine without German music, the conclusion is inevitable that they are placing self-indulgence ahead of a little needed clear thinking and sharp self-examination. There is no call for Federal regulation of this matter, but there seems to be plenty of room for a little more self-discipline than most people are by way of exercising.

From ENQUIRER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

DR. KUNWALD BARRED FROM CONCERT STAGE

Pittsburgh Police Will Allow Orchestra to Play, Under Restrictions

Special to The Inquirer.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 21.—The police today put up the bars against the appearance in this city tomorrow night of Dr. Ernest Kunwald, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, though permitting his orchestra to go on with the concert. Director Charles S. Hubbard, of the Department of Public Safety, made the announcement this evening, along with one that hereafter no alien enemies will be permitted to appear in a public performance of any kind, nor will the playing of German or Austrian music be permitted at any place.

Director Hubbard made his decision in the Kunwald matter after considering it all day, and announced that he would permit the concert, providing no German music is played and that Dr. Kunwald does not appear as conductor, "only because it would have caused great disappointment to our own people," if it had been banned.

The Director's announcement practically prohibits the appearance in January of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He stated that while he had ascertained that reports that the Cincinnati leader is an Austrian reservist, were untrue, nevertheless it appeared that Kunwald is still a subject of Austria. He bitterly denounced all alien enemy musicians, asserting that while not all these are spies, "most of them are," and are sending money obtained in these concerts back to their native land.

From Address:
Date

PRODUCE BEETHOVEN SYMPHONY

Ovation for Muck's Orchestra Given by Boston Music Lovers

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—Every seat and all available standing room were occupied in Symphony Hall last night when the long-awaited performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. The chorus comprised many of the best professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton.

To accommodate the singers and musicians a special stage had been built. With the exception of the national anthem, which was sung by the chorus under Doctor Muck's leadership to open the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused remarkable enthusiasm, which at the end took the nature of an ovation. There were many distinguished music lovers present from Philadelphia, New York, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date NOV 22 1917

MRS. PAYNE'S TOPIC TALK

Mrs. Jessica Lozier Payne gave the second of her talks on Current Topics at the Academy of Music today. She lauded President Wilson's efforts in helping to solve the labor problem and expressed her regard for Mr. Gompers and the work he is doing.

Murmurs of approval met Mrs. Payne's comment on the removal of enemy aliens from the barred zones. Speaking of the food situation she urged the women not only to support the Government actively in its efforts, but to be a law unto themselves and supervise their kitchens more carefully. She said women can do much to regulate prices. A wave of dissent met Mrs. Payne's opening remarks in regard to Dr. Karl Muck, but subsided as Mrs. Payne laughingly continued her remarks and seriously asked that the women be more fair in their judgments and hear both sides. After presenting Dr. Muck's side of the case she asked:

"Are we willing to give money to enemy aliens?" There was a hearty chorus of "noes."

Estab

LIFE

ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

ONE hears a deal of nonsense with regard to the interpretation of Tschaikowsky. I have frequently heard it said—and by well-informed, intelligent observers of music—that the best performances they ever listened to of the Tschaikowsky symphonies were those given by the Russian Symphony a few years ago. Such statements are based upon the assumption that it takes a Russian to play Tschaikowsky. One might as well say that it requires a Pole to play Chopin, a German to give Brahms fitting interpretation, an American MacDowell, etc. In its broader aspect music is international. It cannot be bounded by racial or national boundaries. And all the greatest music is universal in its appeal. The Beethoven Fifth is every bit as inspiring to an American or Englishman as to a German. The Bach St. Matthew's Passion awakens as keen a religious fervor in the breast of a Frenchman as in that of the most Protestant German. And because it does so, it is music of the first rank.

WITH particular reference to Tschaikowsky our excitable friends seem to forget that although a Russian subject Tschaikowsky was frequently anything but a Russian in his music. He was always influenced by the music of Germany, France and Italy, always an eclectic in the broad range of his mind. His operas are more Italian in style than anything else; in them is wholly lacking that superb Russianism that one finds in Moussorgsky or Glinka. In fact when the "Five" revolted they did so against the very thing that Tschaikowsky and Rubinstein represented.

THE point I am driving at is this: that never in all my experience have I heard so thrilling a reading of the Pathetique as that given by Dr. Muck in the opening selection of the first concert this season by the Boston Symphony, yet its chief characteristic was a flawless finish of performance. The orchestra was a many-voiced instrument upon which Dr. Muck played with the genius of a master musician, drawing from it tones of wondrous color, brilliancy and light. The scherzo was a marvel of rhythmic precision; the opening andante a tragic outpouring of the heart. It was, in truth, the band at its best and Dr. Muck in his most inspired mood.

THE Sibelius "Finlandia," the tone-poem "Prometheus" of Liszt, and the Leonore 3 followed, but they were all, even to the glorious Beethoven overture, but an aftermath to the symphony. Such performances are rare, indeed, and when they come, one simply gasps and is quiet. They pass beyond the power of words.

—Newspaper Cutting—

PUBLIC

m

dress: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ate NOV 22 1917

SCHUMANN-HEINK TAKES FLING AT DOCTOR MUCK

Mother With Three Sons in the Service Says Episode Distresses Her

Public Ledger Bureau

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 21.—Mme. Schumann-Heink issued an emphatic denial here tonight of reports that she abrogated her engagement in Rochester, N. Y., because of a disagreement over a Wagnerian program.

"My loyalty cannot be questioned," she said. "I have given three sons to the nation, two for the navy and one for the army, and I may never see them again."

Then she took a fling at Doctor Muck, the Boston director, when she said:

If Doctor Muck was in England he would learn soon enough how to play "God Save the King!" He has profited very largely under the Star Spangled Banner and he ought to be ready, as every loyal American is, to do something for the flag. The Muck episode has caused me and many other American mothers great distress.

PUBLIC

rom

ddress: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ate NOV 22 1917

PITTSBURGH PUTS BAN ON ENEMY MUSICIANS

Police Permit Performance of Cincinnati Orchestra, Barring Doctor Kunwald

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 21. — Dr. Ernest Kunwald, leader of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, is barred by the police from conducting concerts in this city. A concert scheduled by the orchestra for this city tomorrow night will be held, however, but with the provision that no German music is played and that Doctor Kunwald does not appear as conductor.

Director Hubbard, of the Department of Public Safety, made this announcement tonight after considering the Kunwald case nearly all day. He said that it was only after consideration of the great disappointment to music lovers in this city if the concert were banned, that he permitted it to go on.

The Department of Public Safety, as a matter of fact, has clamped down tight the lid on all alien enemies. Hereafter, no alien enemies will be permitted to appear in any public performance, the Director announced, nor will the musical compositions of Germany or the subjects of countries allied with Germany be permitted to be played at any place. This order means, virtually, that Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not be permitted to bring his orchestra to this city in January, as scheduled.

n PRESS

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

CALLS EDITORIAL "FACETIOUS."

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Your facetious editorial "Baltimore's Glass House" intended doubtless to cover the lack of appreciation on the part of the Philadelphia audience which stood while Dr. Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra "ragtimed" the Star Spangled Banner (played evidently under duress), would be amusing but for the fact that Philadelphia has always claimed a brand of loyalty and patriotism just a little superior to that of any other locality.

Baltimore does not claim a sort of proprietary interest in "The Star Spangled Banner," no more than Philadelphia claims proprietary interest in the Liberty Bell—but Baltimore does have "a sort of claim" for respect for that anthem which, when sung or played, should stir the heart of any man or woman who loves their country.

No, Baltimore would not stand for that alien enemy Karl Muck and the seventy-five per cent. of the same cult, flaunting their hatred of Old Glory within our borders or in our faces. Had Philadelphia witness that wonderful protest on November 6, her people would have been thrilled and would have said "Amen" to "poor Philadelphia." I fear the spirit of '61-'65 has grown cold in the City of Brotherly Love. What would Curtin, Reynolds, Geary and Hartranft say? It looks like begging the question, a work of supererogation for "The Press" to refer to "the city where mobs fired on the Federal soldiers who were marching under the Star Spangled Banner on April 19, 1861 (not April 13)." Does "The Press not know that fifty-three thousand loyal sons of Maryland wiped out that foul stain more than fifty years ago while battling for the supremacy of the Old Flag?

Nor does it cover Philadelphia's shame by referring to the election results in Maryland. From a Republican standpoint those results were the best in many years—they carried Baltimore city and elected a majority on joint ballot in the next Legislature. We are proud of the election and the candidates. Is Philadelphia proud of her election?

JOHN R. KING,
Past Commander-in-Chief Grand Army of the Republic.
Baltimore, Md., Nov. 17, 1917.

170

m JOURNAL

ress PROVIDENCE, R. I.

e NOV 23 1917

Concerning Mr. Kreisler

The Journal has no sympathy with the attacks that have been made on Fritz Kreisler, which, of course, have been brought about not by any improper conduct on Mr. Kreisler's part, but simply as a reflex of the very proper indignation that has been aroused throughout the country against Dr. Karl Muck.

The case of Mr. Kreisler is not in any sense analogous to that of this Prussian propagandist and insolent musician. Mr. Kreisler is frankly and avowedly an Austrian subject, and he went like a man from this country to fight for Austria. After being wounded he was honorably discharged from further service. He certainly has never attempted to insult an American audience or to do anything of any character in the way of conspiring against the peace of our Government or its people.

JOURNAL

ess: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 23 1917

MUCK'S STAND DENOUNCED BY MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

Declares Orchestra Leader Should Do Something for America.

Atlantic City, Nov. 22.—"Dr. Muck has made it bad for so many people," protested Mme. Schumann-Heink, in a conversation to-day at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel, where she is recuperating from her recent illness. "I cannot understand it. Dr. Muck is faring well under the American flag. He should do something for the flag."

"It makes me very sad, indeed. I must suffer because of this, although I have given four sons to Uncle Sam. Many other loyal American mothers must suffer. A newspaper man in Cleveland distressed me by asking where my sympathies lay in this war. My friends who were present and heard him were highly indignant."

Mme. Schumann-Heink will leave here for Boston on Friday.

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date NOV 22 1917

MRS. PAYNE'S TOPIC TALK

Mrs. Jessica Lozier Payne gave the second of her talks on Current Topics at the Academy of Music today. She lauded President Wilson's efforts in helping to solve the labor problem and expressed her regard for Mr. Gompers and the work he is doing.

Estab

Murmurs of approval met Mrs. Payne's comment on the removal of enemy aliens from the barred zones. Speaking of the food situation she urged the women not only to support the Government actively in its efforts, but to be a law unto themselves and supervise their kitchens more carefully. She said women can do much to regulate prices. A wave of dissent met Mrs. Payne's opening remarks in regard to Dr. Karl Muck, but subsided as Mrs. Payne laughingly continued her remarks and seriously asked that the women be more fair in their judgments and hear both sides. After presenting Dr. Muck's side of the case she asked: "Are we willing to give money to enemy aliens?" There was a hearty chorus of "noes."

LIFE

ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

ONE hears a deal of nonsense with regard to the interpretation of Tschaikowsky. I have frequently heard it said—and by well-informed, intelligent observers of music—that the best performances they ever listened to of the Tschaikowsky symphonies were those given by the Russian Symphony a few years ago. Such statements are based upon the assumption that it takes a Russian to play Tschaikowsky. One might as well say that it requires a Pole to play Chopin, a German to give Brahms fitting interpretation, an American MacDowell, etc. In its broader aspect music is international. It cannot be bounded by racial or national boundaries. And all the greatest music is universal in its appeal. The Beethoven Fifth is every bit as inspiring to an American or Englishman as to a German. The Bach St. Matthew's Passion awakens as keen a religious fervor in the breast of a Frenchman as in that of the most Protestant German. And because it does so, it is music of the first rank.

WITH particular reference to Tschaikowsky our excitable friends seem to forget that although a Russian subject Tschaikowsky was frequently anything but a Russian in his music. He was always influenced by the music of Germany, France and Italy, always an eclectic in the broad range of his mind. His operas are more Italian in style than anything else; in them is wholly lacking that superb Russianism that one finds in Moussorgsky or Glinka. In fact when the "Five" revolted they did so against the very thing that Tschaikowsky and Rubinstein represented.

THE point I am driving at is this: that never in all my experience have I heard so thrilling a reading of the Pathetique as that given by Dr. Muck in the opening selection of the first concert this season by the Boston Symphony, yet its chief characteristic was a flawless finish of performance. The orchestra was a many-voiced instrument upon which Dr. Muck played with the genius of a master musician, drawing from it tones of wondrous color, brilliancy and light. The scherzo was a marvel of rhythmic precision; the opening andante a tragic outpouring of the heart. It was, in truth, the band at its best and Dr. Muck in his most inspired mood.

THE Sibelius "Finlandia," the tone-poem "Prometheus" of Liszt, and the Leonore 3 followed, but they were all, even to the glorious Beethoven overture, but an aftermath to the symphony. Such performances are rare, indeed, and when they come, one simply gasps and is quiet. They pass beyond the power of words.

Newspaper Cutting

m dress:

ate

SCHUMANN-HEINK TAKES FLING AT DOCTOR MUCK

Mother With Three Sons in the Service Says Episode Distresses Her

Public Ledger Bureau

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 21.—Mme. Schumann-Heink issued an emphatic denial here tonight of reports that she abrogated her engagement in Rochester, N. Y., because of a disagrement over a Wagnerian program.

"My loyalty cannot be questioned," she said. "I have given three sons to the nation, two for the navy and one for the army, and I may never see them again."

Then she took a fling at Doctor Muck, the Boston director, when she said:

If Doctor Muck was in England he would learn soon enough how to play "God Save the King!" He has profited very largely under the Star Spangled Banner and he ought to be ready, as every loyal American is, to do something for the flag. The Muck episode has caused me and many other American mothers great distress.

om

idress:

ate

PITTSBURGH PUTS BAN ON ENEMY MUSICIANS

Police Permit Performance of Cincinnati Orchestra, Barring Doctor Kunwald

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 21. — Dr. Ernest Kunwald, leader of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, is barred by the police from conducting concerts in this city. A concert scheduled by the orchestra for this city tomorrow night will be held, however, but with the provision that no German music is played and that Doctor Kunwald does not appear as conductor.

Director Hubbard, of the Department of Public Safety, made this announcement tonight after considering the Kunwald case nearly all day. He said that it was only after consideration of the great disappointment to music lovers in this city if the concert were banned, that he permitted it to go on.

The Department of Public Safety, as a matter of fact, has clamped down tight the lid on all alien enemies. Hereafter, no alien enemies will be permitted to appear in any public performance, the Director announced, nor will the musical compositions of Germany or the subjects of countries allied with Germany be permitted to be played at any place. This order means, virtually, that Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not be permitted to bring his orchestra to this city in January, as scheduled.

n PRESS

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

CALLS EDITORIAL "FACETIOUS."

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Your facetious editorial "Baltimore's Glass House" intended doubtless to cover the lack of appreciation on the part of the Philadelphia audience which stood while Dr. Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra "ragtimed" the Star Spangled Banner (played evidently under duress), would be amusing but for the fact that Philadelphia has always claimed a brand of loyalty and patriotism just a little superior to that of any other locality.

Baltimore does not claim a sort of proprietary interest in "The Star Spangled Banner," no more than Philadelphia claims proprietary interest in the Liberty Bell—but Baltimore does have "a sort of claim" for respect for that anthem which, when sung or played, should stir the heart of any man or woman who loves their country.

No, Baltimore would not stand for that alien enemy Karl Muck and the seventy-five per cent. of the same cult, flaunting their hatred of Old Glory within our borders or in our faces. Had Philadelphia witness that wonderful protest on November 6, her people would have been thrilled and would have said "Amen" to "poor Philadelphia." I fear the spirit of '61-'65 has grown cold in the City of Brotherly Love. What would Curtin, Reynolds, Geary and Hartranft say? It looks like begging the question, a work of supererogation for "The Press" to refer to "the city where mobs fired on the Federal soldiers who were marching under the Star Spangled Banner on April 19, 1861 (not April 13)." Does "The Press not know that fifty-three thousand loyal sons of Maryland wiped out that foul stain more than fifty years ago while battling for the supremacy of the Old Flag?

Nor does it cover Philadelphia's shame by referring to the election results in Maryland. From a Republican standpoint those results were the best in many years—they carried Baltimore city and elected a majority on joint ballot in the next Legislature. We are proud of the election and the candidates. Is Philadelphia proud of her election?

JOHN R. KING,
Past Commander-in-Chief Grand Army of the Republic.
Baltimore, Md., Nov. 17, 1917.

m JOURNAL

iress PROVIDENCE, R. I.

e NOV 23 1917

Concerning Mr. Kreisler

The Journal has no sympathy with the attacks that have been made on Fritz Kreisler, which, of course, have been brought about not by any improper conduct on Mr. Kreisler's part, but simply as a reflex of the very proper indignation that has been aroused throughout the country against Dr. Karl Muck.

The case of Mr. Kreisler is not in any sense analogous to that of this Prussian propagandist and insolent musician. Mr. Kreisler is frankly and avowedly an Austrian subject, and he went like a man from this country to fight for Austria. After being wounded he was honorably discharged from further service. He certainly has never attempted to insult an American audience or to do anything of any character in the way of conspiring against the peace of our Government or its people.

JOURNAL

ess: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 23 1917

MUCK'S STAND DENOUNCED BY MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

Declares Orchestra Leader Should Do Something for America.

Atlantic City, Nov. 22.—"Dr. Muck has made it bad for so many people," protested Mme. Schumann-Heink, in a conversation to-day at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel, where she is recuperating from her recent illness. "I cannot understand it. Dr. Muck is faring well under the American flag. He should do something for the flag."

"It makes me very sad, indeed. I must suffer because of this, although I have given four sons to Uncle Sam. Many other loyal American mothers must suffer. A newspaper man in Cleveland distressed me by asking where my sympathies lay in this war. My friends who were present and heard him were highly indignant."

Mme. Schumann-Heink will leave here for Boston on Friday.

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date NOV 22 1917

MRS. PAYNE'S TOPIC TALK

Mrs. Jessica Lozier Payne gave the second of her talks on Current Topics at the Academy of Music today. She lauded President Wilson's efforts in helping to solve the labor problem and expressed her regard for Mr. Gompers and the work he is doing.

Estab

Murmurs of approval met Mrs. Payne's comment on the removal of enemy aliens from the barred zones. Speaking of the food situation she urged the women not only to support the Government actively in its efforts, but to be a law unto themselves and supervise their kitchens more carefully. She said women can do much to regulate prices. A wave of dissent met Mrs. Payne's opening remarks in regard to Dr. Karl Muck, but subsided as Mrs. Payne laughingly continued her remarks and seriously asked that the women be more fair in their judgments and hear both sides. After presenting Dr. Muck's side of the case she asked:

"Are we willing to give money to enemy aliens?" There was a hearty chorus of "noes."

LIFE

ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

One hears a deal of nonsense with regard to the interpretation of Tschaikowsky. I have frequently heard it said, and by well-informed, intelligent observers of music—that the best performances they ever listened to of the Tschaikowsky symphonies were those given by the Russian Symphony a few years ago. Such statements are based upon the assumption that it takes a Russian to play Tschaikowsky. One might as well say that it requires a Pole to play Chopin, a German to give Brahms fitting interpretation, an American MacDowell, etc. In its broader aspect music is international. It cannot be bounded by racial or national boundaries. And all the greatest music is universal in its appeal. The Beethoven Fifth is every bit as inspiring to an American or Englishman as to a German. The Bach St. Matthew's Passion awakens as keen a religious fervor in the breast of a Frenchman as in that of the most Protestant German. And because it does so, it is music of the first rank.

WITH particular reference to Tschaikowsky our excitable friends seem to forget that although a Russian subject Tschaikowsky was frequently anything but a Russian in his music. He was always influenced by the music of Germany, France and Italy, always an eclectic in the broad range of his mind. His operas are more Italian in style than anything else; in them is wholly lacking that superb Russianism that one finds in Moussorgsky or Glinka. In fact when the "Five" revolted they did so against the very thing that Tschaikowsky and Rubinstein represented.

THE point I am driving at is this: that never in all my experience have I heard so thrilling a reading of the Pathetique as that given by Dr. Muck in the opening selection of the first concert this season by the Boston Symphony, yet its chief characteristic was a flawless finish of performance. The orchestra was a many-voiced instrument upon which Dr. Muck played with the genius of a master musician, drawing from it tones of wondrous color, brilliancy and light. The scherzo was a marvel of rhythmic precision; the opening andante a tragic outpouring of the heart. It was, in truth, the band at its best and Dr. Muck in his most inspired mood.

THE Sibelius "Finlandia," the tone-poem "Prometheus" of Liszt, and the Leonore 3 followed, but they were all, even to the glorious Beethoven overture, but an aftermath to the symphony. Such performances are rare, indeed, and when they come, one simply gasps and is quiet. They pass beyond the power of words.

Newspaper Cutting

m

dress: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ate NOV 22 1917

SCHUMANN-HEINK TAKES FLING AT DOCTOR MUCK

Mother With Three Sons in the Service Says Episode Distresses Her

Public Ledger Bureau

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 21.—Mme. Schumann-Heink issued an emphatic denial here tonight of reports that she abrogated her engagement in Rochester, N. Y., because of a disagrement over a Wagnerian program.

"My loyalty cannot be questioned," she said. "I have given three sons to the nation, two for the navy and one for the army, and I may never see them again."

Then she took a fling at Doctor Muck, the Boston director, when she said:

If Doctor Muck was in England he would learn soon enough how to play "God Save the King!" He has profited very largely under the Star Spangled Banner and he ought to be ready, as every loyal American is, to do something for the flag. The Muck episode has caused me and many other American mothers great distress.

---

om PUBLIC LEDGER

idress: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ate NOV 22 1917

PITTSBURGH PUTS BAN ON ENEMY MUSICIANS

Police Permit Performance of Cincinnati Orchestra, Barring Doctor Kunwald

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 21. — Dr. Ernest Kunwald, leader of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, is barred by the police from conducting concerts in this city. A concert scheduled by the orchestra for this city tomorrow night will be held, however, but with the provision that no German music is played and that Doctor Kunwald does not appear as conductor.

Director Hubbard, of the Department of Public Safety, made this announcement tonight after considering the Kunwald case nearly all day. He said that it was only after consideration of the great disappointment to music lovers in this city if the concert were banned, that he permitted it to go on.

The Department of Public Safety, as a matter of fact, has clamped down tight the lid on all alien enemies. Hereafter, no alien enemies will be permitted to appear in any public performance, the Director announced, nor will the musical compositions of Germany or the subjects of countries allied with Germany be permitted to be played at any place. This order means, virtually, that Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not be permitted to bring his orchestra to this city in January, as scheduled.

n PRESS

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

CALLS EDITORIAL "FACETIOUS."

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Your facetious editorial "Baltimore's Glass House" intended doubtless to cover the lack of appreciation on the part of the Philadelphia audience which stood while Dr. Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra "ragtimed" the Star Spangled Banner (played evidently under duress), would be amusing but for the fact that Philadelphia has always claimed a brand of loyalty and patriotism just a little superior to that of any other locality.

Baltimore does not claim a sort of proprietary interest in "The Star Spangled Banner," no more than Philadelphia claims proprietary interest in the Liberty Bell—but Baltimore does have "a sort of claim" for respect for that anthem which, when sung or played, should stir the heart of any man or woman who loves their country.

No, Baltimore would not stand for that alien enemy Karl Muck and the seventy-five per cent. of the same cult, flaunting their hatred of Old Glory within our borders or in our faces. Had Philadelphia witness that wonderful protest on November 6, her people would have been thrilled and would have said "Amen" to "poor Philadelphia." I fear the spirit of '61-'65 has grown cold in the City of Brotherly Love. What would Curtin, Reynolds, Geary and Hartranft say? It looks like begging the question, a work of supererogation for "The Press" to refer to "the city where mobs fired on the Federal soldiers who were marching under the Star Spangled Banner on April 19, 1861 (not April 13)." Does "The Press not know that fifty-three thousand loyal sons of Maryland wiped out that foul stain more than fifty years ago while battling for the supremacy of the Old Flag?

Nor does it cover Philadelphia's shame by referring to the election results in Maryland. From a Republican standpoint those results were the best in many years—they carried Baltimore city and elected a majority on joint ballot in the next Legislature. We are proud of the election and the candidates. Is Philadelphia proud of her election?

JOHN R. KING,
Past Commander-in-Chief Grand Army of the Republic.
Baltimore, Md., Nov. 17, 1917.

---

m JOURNAL

idress PROVIDENCE, R. I.

e NOV 23 1917

Concerning Mr. Kreisler

The Journal has no sympathy with the attacks that have been made on Fritz Kreisler, which, of course, have been brought about not by any improper conduct on Mr. Kreisler's part, but simply as a reflex of the very proper indignation that has been aroused throughout the country against Dr. Karl Muck.

The case of Mr. Kreisler is not in any sense analogous to that of this Prussian propagandist and insolent musician. Mr. Kreisler is frankly and avowedly an Austrian subject, and he went like a man from this country to fight for Austria. After being wounded he was honorably discharged from further service. He certainly has never attempted to insult an American audience or to do anything of any character in the way of conspiring against the peace of our Government or its people.

JOURNAL

ess: PROVIDENCE, R. I.

NOV 23 1917

MUCK'S STAND DENOUNCED BY MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

Declares Orchestra Leader Should Do Something for America.

Atlantic City, Nov. 22.—"Dr. Muck has made it bad for so many people," protested Mme. Schumann-Heink, in a conversation to-day at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel, where she is recuperating from her recent illness. "I cannot understand it. Dr. Muck is faring well under the American flag. He should do something for the flag."

"It makes me very sad, indeed. I must suffer because of this, although I have given four sons to Uncle Sam. Many other loyal American mothers must suffer. A newspaper man in Cleveland distressed me by asking where my sympathies lay in this war. My friends who were present and heard him were highly indignant."

Mme. Schumann-Heink will leave here for Boston on Friday.

TRIBUNE

ess: Providence, R. I.

NOV 18 1917

Fairness to Dr. Muck.

(From the New York Sun.)

We can find no record of an expression by Dr. Muck of any opinion on the war unless this, in a dispatch from Boston dated Nov. 1, should be so classified:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Maj. Henry L. Higginson has publicly stated that Dr. Muck did not at any time refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner." The Boston Symphony Orchestra now regularly plays "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck conducting.

We see no reason why a local American may not conscientiously attend the concerts presided over by Dr. Muck. By no stretch of the imagination can Dr. Muck's customary attitude be characterized as that of a "contemptuous and defiant alien." Dr. Muck's polished manner may conceal a severe contempt for much that is American but as the reviewer of musical affairs for The Sun observed on Nov. 9, 1906, "the new conductor . . . is anything but a poseur."

Has Dr. Muck ever said anything adverse about America? As we say, we find no record of it; but we do find him recorded as calling America "a marvellous country, a country that should be the source of splendid inspiration for every art." We do find him recorded as saying:

"In America, I should say, you will have for your later day music the great idea of democracy, of freedom for all the people."

Let's be fair to Dr. Muck. There have been Germans before this who loved music and liberty both. Richard Wagner was forced into exile because he loved liberty. Ludwig van Beethoven, dedicating his Heroic Symphony to a leader of the people, tore the dedication in two when that leader, flushed by victory, proclaimed himself an emperor.

TIMES

ess: Washington, D. C.

NOV 22 1917

ENEMY ALIENS IN DISTRICT GRANTED 24-HOUR RESPITE

A twenty-four-hour respite granted to transient enemy aliens in the District expires at midnight. After that hour all coming within this classification caught within the confines of the District will be interned for the period of the war.

Unexpected delays in their registration, which is necessary before they leave, kept a number of Germans here. A day of grace was granted to complete registration and depart.

This form provides a full description of the enemy alien, all details of his past residence and employment, and his intentions regarding future place of residence. His photograph is attached in duplicate, one being filed here and the other being sent to the alien's point of destination, so that he may be kept under surveillance.

Alien enemies who resided in the District on or before April 6 are given until December 15 to furnish such information to the United States Marshal. They must leave the District on or before that day.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the leader of which, Dr. Karl Muck, is barred as a German subject from coming to the District, is known to have within its ranks a number of enemy aliens. The orchestra was booked for a return engagement in December. Department of Justice officials insist that no exceptions will be made in enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation.

HERALD

: Washington, D. C.

NOV 22 191

LAW EXCLUDING ALIENS MAY BAR CONCERTS HERE

Many Boston Symphony Players, Including Leader, Are Not Naturalized.

Issuance of the alien enemy act by the President may result in the cancellation of the next concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the District, since it is certain that many leading soloists of that organization clearly come under the ban of those deemed undesirable in Washington.

Dr. Karl Muck, whose refusal to play the National Anthem at his early concert brought about wide discussion and later a reconsideration by the director, is clearly under the ban. So are a number of leading instrumental soloists with the organization.

Booked to Play Here.

The orchestra is booked at the National Theater for a December date, but the strict enforcement of the act will keep many of the leading players from participating in the Washington concert, even if the booking is retained.

The alien enemy act will not cripple the membership of the Philadelphia and New York orchestras. They are union organizations and in order to become a member of the union, a foreign-born player must be a naturalized citizen.

T. Arthur Smith, who has charge of much of the booking for musicales, concerts and recitals at the Capital said that it was doubtful if more than a few of the dates which have been booked would be canceled.

Agents Seek Aliens.

Department of Justice agents are fast rounding up the list of those who will take their departure from the Capital. With the aid of the membership lists of some of the strong German clubs and the information available from the draft cards, the secret service men have been able to locate practically all unnaturalized Germans and they will be served with notice to move at once.

Much comment has been caused by the fact that the German women are not obliged to leave Washington and a number of members of Congress believe that the act should be amended to compel their departure.

It is pointed out by the Department of Justice that in the majority of cases of those to be deported from Washington the women voluntarily elect to follow the men and little trouble is expected from the activities of German women spies who may elect to remain in Washington.

m UNION

ress Springfield, Mass.

NOV 21 1917

ly."

Great Audience Hears Symphony in Boston

[Special to The Union.]

BOSTON, Nov. 20—Every seat and every available foot of standing room was occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long awaited and eagerly expected performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, the chorus comprised the pick of the professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. To accommodate the 500 musicians a special stage had been built.

With the exception of the National Anthem, which, sung by the chorus under Dr. Muck's leadership, opened the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused enthusiasm on the part of the audience, which at the end took the nature of an ovation to Dr. Muck, the soloists, the orchestra and the chorus.

There were many distinguished musicians and music lovers present from out of town, from New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

TRIBUNE

ess: Providence, R. I.

NOV 18 1917

Fairness to Dr. Muck.

(From the New York Sun.)

We can find no record of an expression by Dr. Muck of any opinion on the war unless this, in a dispatch from Boston dated Nov. 1, should be so classified:

"I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were a citizen of America."

Maj. Henry L. Higginson has publicly stated that Dr. Muck did not at any time refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner." The Boston Symphony Orchestra now regularly plays "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Muck conducting.

We see no reason why a local American may not conscientiously attend the concerts presided over by Dr. Muck. By no stretch of the imagination can Dr. Muck's customary attitude be characterized as that of a "contemptuous and defiant alien." Dr. Muck's polished manner may conceal a severe contempt for much that is American but as the reviewer of musical affairs for The Sun observed on Nov. 9, 1906, "the new conductor . . . is anything but a poseur."

Has Dr. Muck ever said anything adverse about America? As we say, we find no record of it; but we do find him recorded as calling America "a marvellous country, a country that should be the source of splendid inspiration for every art." We do find him recorded as saying:

"In America, I should say, you will have for your later day music the great idea of democracy, of freedom for all the people."

Let's be fair to Dr. Muck. There have been Germans before this who loved music and liberty both. Richard Wagner was forced into exile because he loved liberty. Ludwig van Beethoven, dedicating his Heroic Symphony to a leader of the people, tore the dedication in two when that leader, flushed by victory, proclaimed himself an emperor.

TIMES

ess: Washington, D. C.

NOV 2 1917

ENEMY ALIENS IN DISTRICT GRANTED 24-HOUR RESPITE

A twenty-four-hour respite granted to transient enemy aliens in the District expires at midnight. After that hour all coming within this classification caught within the confines of the District will be interned for the period of the war.

Unexpected delays in their registration, which is necessary before they leave, kept a number of Germans here. A day of grace was granted to complete registration and depart.

This form provides a full description of the enemy alien, all details of his past residence and employment, and his intentions regarding future place of residence. His photograph is attached in duplicate, one being filed here and the other being sent to the alien's point of destination, so that he may be kept under surveillance.

Alien enemies who resided in the District on or before April 6 are given until December 15 to furnish such information to the United States Marshal. They must leave the District on or before that day.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the leader of which, Dr. Karl Muck, is barred as a German subject from coming to the District, is known to have within its ranks a number of enemy aliens. The orchestra was booked for a return engagement in December. Department of Justice officials insist that no exceptions will be made in enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation.

HERALD

: Washington, D. C.

NOV 22 191

LAW EXCLUDING ALIENS MAY BAR CONCERTS HERE

Many Boston Symphony Players, Including Leader, Are Not Naturalized.

Issuance of the alien enemy act by the President may result in the cancellation of the next concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the District, since it is certain that many leading soloists of that organization clearly come under the ban of those deemed undesirable in Washington.

Dr. Karl Muck, whose refusal to play the National Anthem at his early concert brought about wide discussion and later a reconsideration by the director, is clearly under the ban. So are a number of leading instrumental soloists with the organization.

Booked to Play Here.

The orchestra is booked at the National Theater for a December date, but the strict enforcement of the act will keep many of the leading players from participating in the Washington concert, even if the booking is retained.

The alien enemy act will not cripple the membership of the Philadelphia and New York orchestras. They are union organizations and in order to become a member of the union, a foreign-born player must be a naturalized citizen.

T. Arthur Smith, who has charge of much of the booking for musicales, concerts and recitals at the Capital said that it was doubtful if more than a few of the dates which have been booked would be canceled.

Agents Seek Aliens.

Department of Justice agents are fast rounding up the list of those who will take their departure from the Capital. With the aid of the membership lists of some of the strong German clubs and the information available from the draft cards, the secret service men have been able to locate practically all unnaturalized Germans and they will be served with notice to move at once.

Much comment has been caused by the fact that the German women are not obliged to leave Washington and a number of members of Congress believe that the act should be amended to compel their departure.

It is pointed out by the Department of Justice that in the majority of cases of those to be deported from Washington the women voluntarily elect to follow the men and little trouble is expected from the activities of German women spies who may elect to remain in Washington.

m UNION

ress Springfield, Mass.

NOV 21 1917

ly."

Great Audience Hears Symphony in Boston

[Special to The Union.]

BOSTON, Nov. 20—Every seat and every available foot of standing room was occupied in Symphony Hall tonight when the long awaited and eagerly expected performance of Beethoven's ninth symphon was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 400 singers under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, the chorus comprised the pick of the professional and amateur singers of Boston and had been in rehearsal for this performance since early in September. The soloists were Frieda Hempel, Margaret Keyes, Arthur Hackett and Arthur Middleton. To accommodate the 500 musicians a special stage had been built.

With the exception of the National Anthem, which, sung by the chorus under Dr. Muck's leadership, opened the concert, the symphony was the only work on the program. Its performance aroused enthusiasm on the part of the audience, which at the end took the nature of an ovation to Dr. Muck, the soloists, the orchestra and the chorus.

There were many distinguished musicians and music lovers present from out of town, from New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Springfield and Hartford.

HERALD DEC. 2, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONTROVERSY.

To the Editor of the Herald:

Our esteemed citizen and philanthropist, Henry L. Higginson, created the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and every music-lover is grateful for it.

Almighty God created a world of people to love one another and live in peace.

Our forefathers created the United States that we might perpetuate these thoughts and insure freedom to humanity.

Thousands of us may be "unnamed and unknown individuals" to Louisa Loring Dresel, yet we appreciate and understand art, music and literature in its best interpretation, but we are also patriots and we believe we best express our appreciation of citizenship in this country by proclaiming our allegiance to God and to the United States rather than to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, especially when in this body of musicians are many of our enemies and directed by an intimate of the head of the most diabolical group of military autocrats ever known!—the enemy of four-fifths of the world—whose sole purpose is to destroy or enslave humanity. Our sons and brothers are not in a foreign land playing musical instruments, but are there for the purpose of sacrificing their lives, if necessary, to overcome the nations of which Dr. Muck and many of these Symphony players claim loyal citizenship.

Under such circumstances, even though "unnamed and unknown individuals," we believe we manifest our loyalty to our cause, our country and our brothers "over there" by refusing to listen to any overture of our enemies, whether rendered by an orchestra or on the battlefield, except it be an overture of peace whereby a free people may again enjoy the freedom inherited by them from Almighty God, and thereby establishing all there is worth having.

FREDERICK D. BATES.

31 Bedford street, Nov. 27.

May not the discussion stop with the publication of this letter? We had hoped not to continue the debate, but the letter to which this is a reply evoked so many responses that we have decided to print this representative one.—Ed.

ADVERTISER & AMERICAN DEC. 2, 1917.

THREE SYMPHONY CONCERTS ARE OFF

Manager Ellis Cancels Dates at Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore

ALIEN ENEMY RULES ARE GIVEN AS CAUSE

Dingley Asks That Dr. Muck Be Interned for Period of the War

Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were cancelled last evening by Manager C. A. Ellis because of the stringent regulations affecting alien enemies which took effect yesterday.

The Philadelphia concert was announced for Monday evening at the Academy of Music. As a result of Manager Ellis' action the concert tomorrow evening will be called off and the price of tickets refunded. Telegrams similar to the following were dispatched to Washington and Baltimore, where concerts were scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday respectively.

"The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible to properly give the concert which has been announced for Monday evening in Philadelphia at the Academy of Music. It will therefore not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Happes'.

"The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon.

"C. E. ELLIS."

A letter from Edward N. Dingley, Boston representative of the American Defence Society, was sent yesterday to United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton requesting that Dr. Muck, conductor of the orchestra, be interned for the period of the war.

District Attorney Boynton announced that the letter had not been brought to his attention.

GLOBE DEC. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS OFF OWING TO BAN

Orchestra Has 23 Alien Foes Among Members

Dates in Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore Canceled

The President's drastic regulations, barring alien enemies from the District of Columbia and from certain zones, has hit the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which includes in its membership 23 alien enemies, one of whom is the conductor, Dr Karl Muck. In consequence of the order issued from Washington, C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, last night wired Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, canceling concerts arranged for those cities for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

It is doubtful if the orchestra, as an organization, can be taken from Boston. There are 78 members, however, who are not affected by the order. Under the regulations the aliens could not be taken to certain cities, New York for instance, because if they went to New York they would have to pass through barred zones if taken by the Shore Line, while if they attempted to pass down the Hudson, other barred zones would hamper their progress.

It is understood that permits might be granted for these alien enemies to visit interior points where there are no barred zones, as has been done in some cases, if assurances are given that the applicant is not dangerous.

In his telegram last night Mr Ellis said:

"The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concerts announced. They will therefore not be given. The price of tickets will be refunded.

"The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon."

PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA LETS TEUTON MEMBERS GO

PHILADELPHIA, Dec 1—The Philadelphia Orchestra Association announced tonight that it had dispensed with the services of eight German and Austrian players in the orchestra.

The action is based, said the announcement, upon the President's recent proclamation which, in effect, would have made it impossible to carry out the season's program, particularly with respect to touring. The vacated positions will be filled by American musicians.

MONITOR DEC. 1, 1917

MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Townsend chorus will give a second presentation of Beethoven's ninth symphony, with choral ending, in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, with Karl Muck conducting. The soloists will be Mme. Florence Hinkle Witherspoon, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

The orchestra starts on its second monthly trip on Sunday night, prepared to give concerts in Philadelphia, Washington, New York and Brooklyn. At the Philadelphia, Washington and Brooklyn concerts, Mme. Melba will be the soloist.

John McCormack, tenor, will be the soloist at the Symphony concerts of Dec. 14 and 15, presenting an aria from Handel's "Atalanta" and Beethoven's aria, "Jehovah, Hear Me." The orchestra will present the Mozart symphony in E flat major, Ravel's symphonic fragment, "Daphnis and Chloe," and Balakireff's symphonic poem, "Thamar."

POST DEC. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY CANCELS CONCERTS

Alien Enemy Ruling Makes Train Trips Impossible

Because 23 members are alien enemies the Boston Symphony Orchestra is forced to cancel its engagements to give concerts in Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, and may possibly be forced to cancel also its engagements in Brooklyn and New York, through the workings of the alien enemy restrictions which became effective yesterday by proclamation of President Wilson.

Under the interpretation of the regulations the 23 alien enemies, members of the orchestra, cannot travel to Philadelphia, Washington or Baltimore.

ALMOST INTERNED

It has not been determined yet whether the alien enemies included in the orchestra, and essential to it as a musical organization, can travel between Boston and New York and Brooklyn without passing within 100 yards of any restricted area under the proclamation barring alien enemies from such zones. If they cannot, it will be impossible for the orchestra to keep the engagements in New York and Brooklyn.

The orchestra was scheduled to give a concert tomorrow night in Philadelphia, another in Washington Tuesday and another at Baltimore Wednesday.

There is some question whether or not alien enemies can travel through the Pennsylvania tunnel.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, learned yesterday that the alien enemy members of the orchestra cannot make the trips called for in the orchestra's programme and consequently cancelled the engagements for the first three days of this week.

It is believed that a strict enforcement of the President's proclamation will virtually intern Germans, or at least prevent them from taking trips of any great length, as has been possible for them to do when equipped with permits specifying their destination and purpose of travelling.

Transcript Dec. 1, 1917.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A Repetition of the Choral Symphony—The Russian Orchestra, Mr. Powell and Miss Roberts—Otherwise Minor Recitals

BY general desire, as the phrase of announcements goes, unmistakably expressed at the box-office, Dr. Muck and all the forces concerned, with one exception, in the recent and remarkable performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, will repeat that masterpiece tomorrow, Sunday, afternoon in Symphony Hall. Again the Symphony Orchestra will be mustered in full numbers; again, tier on tier above them will rise the most numerous, expert and songful chorus that Boston has known in years; again Miss Keyes, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Middleton will sing three of the solo parts, with Miss Hinkle added to them, in lieu of Miss Hempel detained by work at the Metropolitan. Above all the rest of these favoring circumstances, Dr. Muck will conduct, and it has often been his fortune, as with Liszt's "Faust Symphony" or the fifth symphony of Mahler, to make his repetitions equal in eloquence to his first performances, or even exceeding them. By this token and the particular stimulus of the occasion, this second concert with the Ninth Symphony may hardly fall below that in which the music, especially in the Finale, was opened to most ears as it had never been opened before.

RECORD DEC. 1, 1917

WANT DR. MUCK INTERNED AS ENEMY ALIEN

American Defense Folk Make Demand on U. S. Dist. Attorney

Internment of Dr. Karl Muck as an enemy alien and suspension of all concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which he is the conductor, for the duration of the war, are demanded by the American Defense Society.

In a letter to U. S. Dist. Atty. Boynton, Edward N. Dingley, Boston representative of the society, declares: "It is an insult to our National Anthem to have it played by men who are secretly hoping for our destruction and advancing the cause of the enemy with treacherous propaganda."

Citing the edict prohibiting the Symphony Orchestra from entering the District of Columbia, Mr. Dingley urges the Department of Justice to take immediate action to prevent the organization from giving concerts anywhere in this country.

Mr. Dingley refers to the report that Dr. Muck is travelling on a Swiss passport, "the genuineness of which has been subject to some discussion."

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron of the orchestra, refuses to make any comment upon this action by the American Defense Society.

The society has organized a "vigilance corps" of more than 100 volunteer detectives in Boston to co-operate with the Federal authorities in ferreting out treasonable activities and stamping out sedition. The members of the corps are being recruited from the ranks of young men and women of assured American loyalty. It is hoped to have 1000 enrolled within a short time. Temporary offices have been opened at 262 Washington st. Each of the larger cities in the country is to have one of these vigilance bodies.

GLOBE DEC 2, 1917.

Choral Concert Today in Symphony Hall

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be repeated this afternoon in Symphony Hall with substantially the same forces which gave it such remarkable success, Nov 20. There will be another great audience to hear the performance, and the only change in soloists will be the soprano of the quartet.

Mme Hempel, who sang the part at the first performance, could not come to Boston for the second, and in her stead Florence Hinkle was engaged. Miss Hinkle has had much experience in Beethoven's difficult music, as she has sung in the Symphony with practically all of the orchestras in this country.

As a fortnight ago the Symphony will be preceded by the singing of the National Anthem.

HERALD DEC. 2, 1917.

HALT SYMPHONY PLANS BY ALIEN ENEMY RULES

Concerts Scheduled in Three Cities Cancelled by Manager C. A. Ellis.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, sent telegrams last evening cancelling concerts that were to be given in Philadelphia Monday evening, in Washington Tuesday afternoon and in Baltimore Wednesday evening. The message sent to Philadelphia follows:

"The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the department of justice at Washington affect 23 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for Monday evening at the Academy of Music. It will therefore not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Heppes.

"The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon."

173 TRANSCRIPT DEC. 3, 1917

TRANSCRIPT DEC. 3, 1917

Items and Announcements

The recent regulations of the Department of Justice limiting the movements of German subjects in the United States have compelled the Symphony Orchestra to abandon its monthly visits to Philadelphia and Washington. There are twenty-three such "enemy aliens," though they happen to be among the most peaceful of men, within the band and were they to go to Washington or Philadelphia with it, they would enter "prohibited areas." Whether they can journey to New York and not infringe such prohibition remains to be determined. If they can, the orchestra will undertake the usual concerts there and in Brooklyn on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week, with the possibility of an extra matinee on Sunday. If, however, such a journey proves contrary to the new regulations, the orchestra, for the rest of the season, will limit itself to concerts in Boston and a few neighboring cities.

The programme for the next pair of Symphony Concerts in Boston on Friday afternoon, Dec. 14, and Saturday evening, Dec. 15, will traverse for purely orchestral numbers a symphony by Mozart in E-flat major; a fragment, new to Boston, of Ravel's ballet, "Dauphnis and Chloe"; and Balákire's sombre tone-poem, "Thama." Between these numbers Mr. McCormack, the tenor, will sing an air that he has resurrected from Händel's opera of "Atalanta" and another from Beethoven's oratorio, almost as new and strange, nowadays, "The Mount of Olives."

Herald Dec. 3, 1917

CHORAL CONCERT TODAY

The concert for today at Symphony Hall is Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with substantially the forces that gave it with remarkable success Nov. 20. There will be another large audience. The only change is in the soprano of the solo quartet. Mme. Hempel, who sang this part at the first performance, could not come to Boston for the second as engagements took her to another part of the country. In her stead Florence Hinkle was engaged. Miss Hinkle has sung in the symphony with practically all the orchestras in this country. The symphony will be the only work on the program. The performance will be preceded by the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

Record Nov. 30, 1917.

Symphony Barnstorms

The Symphony Orchestra is having busy week-end. This afternoon and tomorrow evening it plays Rachmaninoff's symphony in E-minor, No. 2, and Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream. Sunday it and the great chorus Stephen Townsend has trained, will give Beethoven's Choral Symphony at Symphony Hall. (The Record has had many suggestions that Dr. Muck fill out the symphony with some other work, preferably one of the Leonore overtures—the Symphony is seldom given alone in Europe.)

Sunday evening the orchestra goes on its second Southern tour. There is no reason to discuss why Baltimore will have no concerts. Baltimore cut off her musical nose to spite her musical face. Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington will get concerts. In the two latter cities Mme. Melba will appear as soloist.

POST Nov. 27, 1917

MAY BAR MUCK IN SPRINGFIELD

Talk of Closing Building to Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Nov. 26.—The same influences that recently refused the use of the Municipal Auditorium to Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, are active to close the building to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Muck, on the ground that Dr. Muck is an enemy alien, it was learned today. Some members of the city property committee, which controls the use of all city buildings, favor this course.

WEEK-END CONCERTS

THE CHORAL SYMPHONY REPEATED UNDIMMED

Dr. Muck and His Forces in a Second Performance—Beethoven, Tolstoy and the Lay Listener—Mr. Gardner and His Violin Pieces—Travel, Under Difficulties, for the Symphony Orchestra—Items of the Instant

NOT a foot of sitting or standing space in Symphony Hall was unfilled at the repetition, yesterday, of Beethoven's great Symphony. Both those who came for a second time and those who had been denied before were uplifted by one of the most inspired performances which the masterpiece has ever received, perhaps as fine as it may receive in our day. However much we had been told previously about the executive impossibilities of the vocal parts, when we had been brought to the close of the sublime Adagio, and the coming message of joy was being wondrously and darkly whispered in the orchestra, we were entirely subject to the conception and the exaltation of Beethoven; the voices of the chorus and the individual singers seemed perfection itself, because we were in a state of mind to forget all difficulties of breathing, interval, and register; to hear, not what was being sung at the moment, but what was sung in Beethoven's heart as he strode up and down with his note-book, wildly humming and roaring, racked by the great creative forces within him, conceiving the voices almost as the instruments which always came first in his thoughts. So, spiritual attainment may conquer physical impracticability and executive discrepancy, and we may pity any who were so unfortunate yesterday as to be conscious of the latter.

Yet no ideal has been entirely realized—the whole earth cannot follow Beethoven in his ascent through the Finale of the Choral Symphony. It seems a tragedy that a barrier of misunderstanding should close it to one of the few other great men who have turned "universal brotherhood" from a phrase or a thinly strained sentiment into an actual and all-pervading concept. Tolstoy, searching thoughtfully for the highest function of art as the emotional intercourse of man, defines something very close to the spirit of the Ninth Symphony. In those same pages he mentions Schiller's "Ode to Joy" as fulfilling his ideal of the art all-inclusive, religiously inspired, simple, spontaneous, and directly comprehensible to all people, yet in Tolstoy's view, Beethoven's setting of it denies this spirit at every point! As a matter of fact, the Ninth Symphony denies Tolstoy hardly less than Schiller. To be sure, it is complex and personal subjectivity must ever conflict with universality. The "Kuss der ganzen welt" is more fully realized than the "Seid umschiungen, Millionen!" for the whole world is not so innately musical as we should wish. But to listen to the music is to affirm its universality, and indeed its simplicity. The themes in octaves and fifths, the choral melody on five diatonic notes—these are the pure elements of the musical universe. There are intellectuals who will tell you that that almost childishly simply folk-tune is commonplace, but that is its Tolstoian glory, and the remark in question indicates a cultural snob. In other hands it might conceivably have been trivial but fraught with its present associations we are incapable of imagining it so.

Again the ninth Symphony throughout divides into a great intricate mass of detail, which, however, never obscures, but rather emphasizes the broad and simple structural lines. Even though the layman cannot penetrate the finer points, he is never bewildered, but immediately impressed and uplifted. For instance, the rhythmic refinement of the Scherzo never obliterates the larger pulse, the elaborate contrapuntal interweaving—"well fugued," as Beethoven's memoranda expressed it—is never baffling to the musically uncultivated, as Brahms often is. A single bar of the Adagio divides into triplets of as many as thirty-six notes, but through it melody gleams clear, eloquent, and indescribably lovely to all. The delicate variety, contrast and expressiveness of color is unprecedented (behold Beethoven marvellously developing his sense of tone-color in abject deafness), and again, those beauties are wholly lost to none.

NEWS OF MUSIC

A Dissenting Voice to Rakhmaninov's Applauded Symphony—Two and Even Three Pianos Play Together — Novel Pieces by Debussy and Rimsky-Korsakov —Sir Thomas Beecham Proffers an Opera House—Items and Incidents

LISTEN to the other side and accordingly here follows a letter from a frequenter of the Symphony Concerts, a man of no mean judgment and taste with music who demurs to the applause lavished on Rakhmaninov's symphony on Friday and Saturday and the spoken praise of piece and performance in many a quarter. "Why," he writes, "does not Rakhmaninov's symphony move us more deeply? It is ingenious and imaginative; it reveals a keen, resourceful and lucid sense of orchestration; it has a piquant, Russian flavor; its dramatic ascents momentarily transfix; its varied, songful course invites immediate emotional response. To be sure, it departs in no considerable degree from the style of the composer's forbears, and the traditional usage which he has been assimilating. But neither does Chausson's, for instance, nor even Franck's to a much greater degree, but those are more vital, more personal, and reach more of the heart.

"The final answer to the question lies only in the music itself. The symphony rises from darkness into light, which previous symphonies have done with a far different kind of elevation, but again that has become a traditional and a very convenient formula. Perhaps, instead of saying "light," we should say "lightness." This symphony makes one realize that Rakhmaninov owed a great deal to Chaikovsky, and the two have interesting similarities as well as differences. Both had a ready, too ready, faculty for absorbing western culture, and thereby individuality suffered, and Russian characteristics became purely external. (Surely Chaikovsky's pessimism was rather personal than national.) Both composers are obvious, and reveal their all and utmost at the first hearing. But there the difference begins. Chaikovsky is emotional, sensational; his themes are often striking, vivid and indelible upon the memory: Rakhmaninov is self-contained, well groomed, no more than mildly exciting; his themes are pleasurable and winning for the moment; but ephemeral and undistinctive. Both have a way of becoming obsessed and haunted by their themes to the point of over-repetition.

"Thus Rakhmaninov's Symphony is too long—first of all because only a colossal conception could justify such length, and a colossal conception it by no means is. There are too many parts and episodes; Rakhmaninov's invention is inexhaustible, and he has not the discrimination to reject the lesser ideas that occur to him. His idiom is facile, impressionable, engagingly colored, and it skims the surface of music. In his dramatic procedure there is always the consciousness of picture-making. His climaxes gather finely and burst like bubbles. We do not sit on the edge of our seats, but lean back in quiet and comfortable enjoyment. He has a high and keen sense of the orchestra, but he is by no means an instrumental creator. He is proficient and apt in the use of colors; his varied wood-wind wins our involuntary admiration, and so does his clever use of the lowest register of the brass in the first movement. On the other hand, the percussion serves trivial ends. The melodic subjects, particularly in the first and the slow movements, are commendably songful; the contour is so pliable and workable that they seem to take the strings and develop almost of themselves. The parts are cleverly and acceptably knit together. At the

TRANSCRIPT Nov. 30, 19

MUSIC AND THE DANC

NEGLECTED PIECES AT DR. MUC CHOICE

Overlooked and Promising Items in Library of Symphony Hall—Roshan and Itow for New and Strange Danc —Mme. Melba and Miscellany—M Novaes and Mr. Tribaud Together—Ite and Opinions

THESE are the days in which c ductors in America search the braries of their several orchest as they never have before. Scar ly any new music is procurable from E rope; not every novel manuscript t American composers submit warrants mediate performance. It is the turn, th of revivals; but the full scores and the s arate parts of pieces in existence and graved for years are difficult to obtain, less by happy chance, some publisher New York has them on his shelves. Ev with classics of the "standard repertory Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, for ample—it is impossible to renew mus sheets, worn by long usage, because dealers have exhausted the few copies hand before Europe, abundant, conveni Europe, was closed to them. More a more the conductors are becoming depe ent upon what the orchestral libraries bri within certain reach. There are the 'star ard pieces" serviceably arrayed each in own nook; but the astute maker of p grammes will not choose too many lest dull the interest of his hearers by too mu of "the regular thing in the regular way There also are the accumulations of yea in scores and parts purchased when this that music was in the fashion; when it w new and strange; when it happened serve the convenience or the ambition the conductor of the hour—symphoni suites, overtures, tone-poems, miscellaneo numbers, deservedly or undeservedly fo gotten and mute.

From these pieces, in particular, the co ductor must now choose his revivals, h pseudo-novelties, unless his programme are to fall into a routine of convenient cla sics, items in favor with his particular pu lic or items the performance of which h himself likes biennially to polish. Seeming ly the library of the Boston Orchestr should be especially rich in such overlooke music, since conductors and manager bought plentifully of it before the days renting returnable scores of new pieces be came common. Moreover, there is a kin of catalogue to this library at the end Mr. Mark Howe's book recounting the his tory of the orchestra, which in an appendi lists all the pieces played by it betwee the beginning of the season of 1881-82 an the end of the season of 1913-14. To ru casually down these pages is to discove not a few promising items, long unheard a the Symphony Concerts and, under presen conditions, readily deserving restoratio to Dr. Muck's programmes—provided, o course, that the library still contains them

There are duller overtures than d'Al bert's, for example, to "The Improvisator" sundry suites by Bach have been none too often played; Bantock's overture, "The Pierrot of the Minute" is a fanciful, piquant piece; it is high time that such a master with Berlioz's music as Dr. Muck should essay his Fantastic Symphony; Bizet's suite, "Jeux d'Enfants" is amusing; Mottl's arrangement for orchestra of Chabrier's Bourrée Fantasque would provide the new show-piece that the repertory sorely needs; Debussy's "Iberia" better deserves re-performance than the much-repeated sketches of the sea, while his Nocturnes have nearly slipped out of the active repertory; Elgar under Dr. Muck might become an Elgar eloquent, in symphony, in overture, like "In the South," in the admirable "Enigma" Variations; the suite from Fauré's incidental music to the play of "Pélléas and Mélisande" is one of the few orchestral pieces of a fine-fibred composer; Mr. Gilbert's overture on "Negro Themes," a truly original piece, ought long since to have been heard anew; there are more full-voiced and proudly stepping concerti by Händel than the one or two that Dr. Muck perennially revives; there are also arrangements of ancient ballet-music, Gluck's or Gretry's to give pleasure; Holbrook's fantasy, "Queen Mab," was uncommonly well received when the conductor once chanced upon it; for too long the public of the Symphony Concerts has heard none of the orchestral music of such a master as the d'Indy of the second symphony or the "Istar" variations; Lendval's singular symphony would fall now upon more attuned ears than it did when Dr. Muck first produced it in 1913; MacDowell's symphonic poems—"Lancelot and Elaine" or "Lamia"—do fall short of his suites, but they are not altogether uninteresting; Mendelssohn wrote other overtures than the two sea-pieces; Saint-Saëns's tone-poems are pleasurable in artificial kind; charm still exhales from Schubert's ballet-music in "Rosamünde"; need Mr. Strube's fanciful and expert overture, "Puck," come and go in a few hearings; and so forth with a list almost as long as the searchings of the compiler chooses to make it. Obviously the library of Symphony Hall may still yield Dr. Muck—and also the public of the concerts—much that, as yet, he has left untouched.

H. T. P.

TRANSCRIPT DEC. 1, 1917

174

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

A PROGRAMME OF CONTRASTING PIECES

Three Numbers from Mendelssohn's Fanciful and Polished Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Besides Rakhmaninov's Puissant Second Symphony—The Eloquence of Each in Kind, and of Conductor and Orchestra with Both

FOR once in a way, yesterday afternoon, Dr. Muck set a programme of two sharply contrasting pieces for the Symphony Concert; while, again for once in a way, the more slender-bodied and fanciful of the pair endured well the proximity of the stouter substance and the larger power of the other. This fortunate music happened to be the overture and two of the entr'actes in Mendelssohn's numbers to accompany Shakspeare's comedy of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The years come and the years go; but naught else that the composer left behind so well withstands the lapse of time; while, try as three generations of music- makers have, no accompaniment to Shakspearean comedy or Shakspearean tragedy has yet matched in fitness to the play, in suggestion to the audience, in fancy, fecundity and felicity within itself these thirteen pieces distributed through a fairy farce of Athenian duke and English Puck, "rude mechanicals" hoydenish damsels and pursuing swains. Almost never do we in America hear them in tonal vesture to the play; the days have seemingly passed when it was read in the concert-hall that an orchestra might intersperse the text with the appointed numbers. The overture has become an item in "the standard repertory"—almost the only item therein that endures permanently from the copious pages of Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy—to be taken down for biennial or triennial performance as perfect as conductor and orchestra may give it and, often in association with as many other divisions of the music to the whole comedy as the conductor elects to set after it. Seldom does it fail to abide the neighboring numbers; while almost never does it fail to pleasure the youngest or the oldest hearer.

When the critical and the curious sons of men fall to measuring the titles of one overture, sundry entr'actes, marches, songs and dances to such permanent vitality and favor, they usually set high the exceeding skill the unfailing felicity of Mendelssohn's workmanship. How aptly he shapes his music to the orthodox forms of his time, yet with no lessening of fitness, from number to number, to the course of the play; with no drying of the invention that fertilizes it. How limpid it all is, both in itself and in implication of personage and incident, scene and atmosphere; how round of phrase and flowing of period; how dexterous in transition and animate and opposite of rhythm; how shimmering of color and playful in suggestion. The learned treatises on orchestration expatiate through pages of the skill of hand, the nicety of ear and the fertility of fancy that Mendelssohn displays with his wind instruments; they find room at least for a paragraph about the dexterity and the imagination with which he keeps his strings either shimmering or incisive, or even both at once. The poets rejoice in a fairy music that trips to meet their visions more than half-way; the pursuers of humor in tones enumerate a score or two of little touches that point the ways of Bottom and his company or tweak and twinkle at Puck and his horde. The dullest-eared, the poorest-witted listeners taste these satisfactions though, wisely, they give not a thought to the examining of them.

Now it is quite true that Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream shines with all these technical aptitudes and distinctions; but so, in greater or less degree, do many more of his pieces seldom heard nowadays and then irking to impatient listeners. True again, Mendelssohn was the born and practised technician, the instinctive and the adept elegante in the artistries of tones; yet others of his own time and of the epoch in music immediately preceding it enjoyed an audible share in these distinctions. Rather, what really isolates this overture and the twelve "additional numbers" from the rest of Mendelssohn's music is the unflagging play of poetic and characterizing imagination, of answering tonal invention, of fancy busy with the details of both, from end to end of this "incidental music." No other of the composer's pieces—not even the two overtures of the sea—bear comparison with it in the possession of these attributes. They flower into a suave and shimmering intrinsic beauty, into a poetic, a humorous or a characterizing illusion, into a sustained, yet diversified flow of fancy and feeling such as nowhere else did Mendelssohn attain and maintain. Felicity of workman is indeed no mean preservative in the arts; but it must have something to preserve. The music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" provides that something savorily and abundantly and by virtue of both substance and style the music smilingly outwits the year and flouts the fashion. Even "suburban schedules," the omnipotent cannot loose many hearers from it.

As the concert went, the felicities of the conductor and the orchestra heightened the felicities of the composer. The tone of the strings could hardly have been lighter, brighter, more flowing, transparent, sprightly, incisive when the music bade; the wood-wind suffused phrases and drenched whole periods in a beauty that seemed the very gossamer of tone; or the bassoons made merry; or the brass preluded to a mellow dignity. Dr. Muck's ear for the tone of his men, for the voice of the music, seemed as sensitive as Mendelssohn's own; he missed not a stroke of the composer, speeding his rhythms, touching in his ornament; while along with these discerning and characterizing executive perfections, he distilled from the whole music its intrinsic beauty and its never flagging poetry or fancy of suggestion. The pleasure, the illusion, might hardly run higher. Yet, in very different kind, conductor and band did as much for the preceeding symphony—the record, in E minor, revived after four years—of Rakhmaninov. This music exacted deep glows, high lights, dark shadows of tone, and the performance yielded them. It demanded a sustained largeness of style and energy of progression. Not once did they flag. Occasionally, it cut from the orchestra an individual choir or even an individual voice and the players made either vivid. Again the music surged into climax and the hearer felt the might and the majesty of the tone. Intricate passages ran luminously; excited rhythms jumped to the ear; song. intensely conceived and intensely voiced, bore the listeners into the emotion that bred and fed it. Clearly Dr. Muck was giving himself to the utmost to the music. Seldom has he conducted a modern symphony—no; not even Franck's—with such penetrating and energizing conception, with such manifold and unfailing eloquence of transmission. Composer and conductor, orchestra and audience, were as one with the sensations of the music.

So heard, for the ninth time within seven years "at these concerts," the symphony unmistakably holds its own among the modern kind that individualizes and vitalizes orthodoxy in the composer's own fashion and yet runs not away to gods new and strange. The studious and scholarly hearer may take his satisfaction of the surety and the power with which Rakhmaninov wields his tonal masses; of the skill with which he guides music, players, and audience, too, in and out of intricacies, of his mastery of large adjustment, adroit detail, and interlocked suggestion; of the range and quality of his harmonic backgrounds and instrumental dress. The less instructed but sometimes more susceptible listener receives from the sum and the interplay of these qualities the sensation of a music he comprehends and feels, that illudes him into pleasure, that stimulates him into answering emotion. Both sorts of listeners will experience the large unfolding of the music from the dark and groping beginning to the blazing and leaping close. Both will know the pervading songfulness, deep and glowing, or sharp and bright, of the symphony; the richness of its manifold voices; the fertility and the variety of imagination that informs, directs, adorns it. Hear it as they may, they find it an engrossing, a puissant music, upon which occasional superfluous lengths and occasional opacities of tune are but the flaggings or the accidents of the moment. No wonder that, again and for the ninth time, Symphony Hall rang with applause for piece and performance.

Yet, be he merely studious or merely susceptible, the imaginative listener will somehow suspect a drama in tones in this symphony of Rakhmaninov—in the interplay and the recurrence of the motives from movement into movement; in the return of that dominant motive of the first Allegro until it masters all the rest; in such singular passages as the fugued and the hymn-like measures interrupting the course of the scherzo; in the insistent intensity of progress from the first bar to the last; in the sense of a deep and personal emotion that rises from the whole symphony. Possibly it is the familiar Russian symphonic drama of motives prompted by introspection that Chaikovsky plays so often in his larger music—the beginning in sombre and groping despairs; the ascent into a nervous, restless, occasionally frantic activity; the resort to external excitements as in the scherzo; the solace of inner meditation as in the slow movement; the final upspring into an exultant, vigorous, human and happy energy. But Rakhmaninov is no Chaikovsky. The elder Russian wrote his tonal dramas out of a neurotic, almost an hysterical spirit, usually at extremes of sensation. The younger has a masterful mind as well as an ardent temperament; feels more deeply, speaks more eloquently, attains a beauty, wields a power that the other could not summon. Chaikovsky's moods and passions, procedure and achievement in his symphonic dramas interest and impress the hearer for the vivid and singular personality they disclose and proclaim. Rakhmaninov's symphony of yesterday, his tone-poem, "The Isle of the Dead," of a month ago, speak out of a finer, graver, more controlled spirit, with an exaltation of passion and speech, a wider, deeper human appeal, a universal quality that Chaikovsky knew not. Once more the composer who directs emotion by mind excels him who leaves it unbridled.

MOVEMENT TO STOP BOSTON SYMPHONY

United States Department of Justice Asked to Prevent Orchestra From Giving Concerts Anywhere in Country

A request that the United States Department of Justice take action to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra giving concerts anywhere in the United States was sent yesterday to Thomas J. Boynton, United States District Attorney, by the American Defense Society. The letter was signed by Edward N. Dingley, Boston representative of the society. It says, in part:

"Dr. Karl Muck, an enemy-alien, is its conductor. He acknowledges that his sympathies are with the Kaiser. He is said to be traveling on a Swiss passport, the genuineness of which has been subject to some discussion. The American Defense Society urges that Dr. Muck be interned and the Symphony Concerts be suspended for the duration of the war. We do not believe that Dr. Muck should be permitted to convey the information he has secured in this country to the German War Office, or be permitted to learn of our military operations while he travels with immunity. Other men, perhaps some of them far less dangerous than he, are in detention camps.

"It is an insult to our national anthem to have it played by men who are secretly hoping for our destruction and advancing the cause of the enemy with treacherous propaganda.

"American soldiers have given their lives before German cannon, peaceful citizens have been killed and murdered by German agents within our boundaries. The American public is in no mood to listen to music played by these men, no matter how wonderful that music may be."

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the orchestra, declined to comment on the letter.

Announcement has been made by the American Defense Society, which has its headquarters in New York, of the formation of a Vigilance Corps in Boston to cooperate with the federal authorities to check seditious utterances. Cleveland Moffett, who has done a good deal in that direction in New York City, arrived in Boston last night to contribute his efforts to the work.

Mr. Dingley said the Vigilance Corps will be able to put at least 100 men at the disposal of the United States Secret Service, should emergency arise. The men will all be volunteers, ready day or night to help the Government. The Vigilance Corps, he said, will list disloyal persons and investigate them. Any suspicious circumstances or evidences of enemy propaganda will be reported to the Department of Justice.

The temporary office of the society in Boston is 262 Washington street. Permanent offices will be established later. The motto of the society, according to Mr. Dingley, is: "Serve at the front or serve at home." The people are asked to give information of suspicious persons.

Mr. Dingley said that members of the Vigilance Corps will patrol the city and see that seditious meetings are broken up. "The Defense Society cleaned New York of treason breeders from the Battery to the Bronx," he said, "and now there are few, if any, seditious street-corner meetings permitted in that city."

175 POST DEC. 2, 1917

It's Patriotic—And Why Not Art?

In several portions of the country of late we have been hearing much discussion over the playing—and in one case the preliminary refusal to play—our official military national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," at concerts of classical music. Peace now reigns, by reason of the reconsideration of all hands who had objected. Still there remains the moot question whether the inclusion of the air in concerts of high grade is or is not artistic. That it is not was one of the chief objections made by the authorities of our finest orchestra before they saw the true light.

But what is the offence to art in beginning or ending a classical concert with "The Star Spangled Banner"? This is no cheap tune, be it understood; it has no relation with the commonplace and maudlin "popular" song. It is good music. Composed somewhere between 1770 and 1775 by John Stafford Smith, an Englishman, and sung to the words of "Anacreon in Heaven"—bacchanalian, it is true; but let that pass—it lived and was approved by the process of time. When a tune reaches its 140th year, and is still well liked, it has made out its case; it is itself a classic. This air of Smith's is distinctly better in form, inspiration and effectiveness than some of the music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "the real thing." Key evidently liked it, and after he had written his stirring song during the bombardment of Fort McHenry, he specifically directed that the words be sung to its tune. Therefore, it is time-honored in both ways.

Why, then, should not "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at concerts of the first grade? Why not more generally and with even more fervor than at cheaper entertainments? David Stanley Smith, professor of music at Yale, admirably answers these questions when he says:

> To be sure, it is hard to determine just the proper amount of publicity which the song should have, to fix the point beyond which it loses its force through repetition and becomes merged in the general mass of popular music. But at least we may protect it from the odium implied in the effect that it is all very well to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at popular concerts, but not at symphony concerts. Actually, the opposite is true. The national anthem is never presented with more appropriateness than before audiences that have gathered for serious reflection. It begins to offend only when it is used as a cloak of respectability over general cheapness of entertainment; and it is in the field of mere amusement that its use might well be curtailed.
>
> Let us hope that mutual recrimination and professional aloofness and hypersensitiveness may give way to a vision of the exalted symbolism which a thoughtful conception of the national anthem reveals.

In another way, but perhaps more practically, the question of "art" was answered at the opening performance of the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York, five of the world's greatest singers, Enrico Caruso, Pasquale Amato, Claudio Muzio, Margareto Matzenauer and Basil Ruysdaele, together with the chorus, sang the national anthem as it has never been sung before on this earth. And the tense interest and spontaneous applause of the great audience testified to the fact that "The Star Spangled Banner" was good art when artistically rendered. And that it is something better, we all know.

TRANSCRIPT Nov. 26, 1917

WEEK-END CONCERTS

NEW PLACE FOR BERLIOZ IN OUR MUSIC

Audiences Now Hear, Appreciate, Applaud—Mrs. Hunt and Her Songs—Mme. Schumann-Heink After Three Changeful Years Upon Voice, Pieces and Procedure—The Choral Symphony to Be Repeated—Other Programmes in Prospect

DELUDED or begrudging Wagner regarded Berlioz as a mere measure of musical nutriment for the world, as a "plump oyster," quickly swallowed, for the growth and rounding out of orchestration. Rolland has levelled an impassioned lance at this misconception which still holds generally over Europe, in Germany not least, and in FFrance as well—this unsympathetic half-way acceptance by the academics as so much "color,'" and of Berlioz; this dismissal of him as a wild and whirling "romantic of romantics." Some read the anecdote of Berlioz's impassioned life, are merely amused, and accordingly dispose themselves not to take his music seriously. Surely the orchestral parts from his symphony upon "Romeo and Juliet," applauded once more at the Symphony Concert of Saturday, have done much to dispel these preconceptions. Boschot, in his fine biography of Berlioz, calls "Romeo and Juliet" his masterpiece, and so does Rolland, in repudiation of Weingartner's choice of the Requiem, and Strauss's of the "Overture to King Lear"! Rolland clears the point in a paragraph by distinguishing a genius from a great man. Wagner was great, because he was a wilful master of his career, his actions, his thought, all of which he subjugated to the service of his creative force. Berlioz possessed none of this moral unity. He was not great, but a burning genius; often he was at pitiful variance with himself, defeating his own ends. To Wagner, Isolde meant one person alone; to Berlioz, Juliet meant one person alone. But while Wagner wisely keeps his beloved Wesendonck in the background, Berlioz persistently hurls his beloved Smithson at your head; in all his writings he does his best to lead you and himself astray, to distort your appreciation of his music. "Berlioz was not a musician," ends Rolland, "he was music itself. He was never in command of his demon; he was ever its prey."

And this sheer, unshackled genius was the glory of France and among the highest of music. Sublimely innocent of tradition or philosophy, of Bach or Schopenhauer, it took the divinely fresh and lucid way. While Wagner was struggling with the problem of centuries, the welding of music and drama, Berlioz solved it directly and spontaneously in the "Garden Scene," by jumping a foregone absurdity. Rolland may be forgiven the partiality of a Frenchman, championing the musical genius of his race, when he writes: "Compare the Virgilian tenderness of the 'nuit sereine' in 'Romeo and Juliet' to the carnal fervor of 'Tristan!'" And yet one surely needs only to listen without prejudice to that love scene, written before "Rienzi," by the way, to appreciate the rare purity and refinement of spirit, the Latin reserve and serenity; to feel throughout the music as played by Dr. Muck and the orchestra the musical and unacademic sense of proportion and fitness. Such appreciation requires only to avoid conclusions from the outward semblance, to leave all thought of actresses, bandits, domestic failures, even of Shakspeare, behind. In short, it is genius expressing itself in music alone as nowhere else, and to be approached from no other point. Berlioz in this music exalts the state of being in love to a degree that none but Wagner may dispute. Surely no fairy piece was as delicate and breathlessly captivating as that of Queen Mab in "Romeo and Juliet" has been written, and no festal music which is at once so splendid, brilliant, stimulating and free from tawdriness as that of Capulet's fete.

MONITOR DEC 3, 1917

Choral Symphony Repeated

Beethoven's Ninth ("Choral") Symphony—Second performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Stephen Townsend's chorus, with Karl Muck conducting; Symphony Hall, afternoon of Dec. 2. The soloists were: Mme. Florence Hinkle, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

A performance such as the one rendered yesterday afternoon leaves the audience with a sense of having listened to something that is practically perfect from any angle it is regarded. The outstanding feature was, of course, the chorus, because a chorus that can measure up to the standard of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and hold its own against it, is, it is needless to say, no ordinary chorus. And that it did both itself and the orchestra full credit is giving the least measure of praise that can be accorded to it.

There is something peculiarly impressive in an achievement such as was scored in this second rendering of the ninth symphony with its choral finale. Passing over the general majesty and beauty of such a performance, and ignoring the fact that the theme upon which the variations for the chorus, orchestra and quartet are built is of a somewhat forced and rather exaggerated nature, one cannot but acknowledge that the ensemble was so unusual and at the same time so irreproachable that it calls for more than passing comment.

The technical difficulties were all overcome with apparently the greatest ease, an attainment that bespeaks careful and studied training of a most particular type, while the soloists upheld their parts with vigor and spontaneity.

As regards the first three movements, there is really little that need be said. They were performed with all that perfection of detail and musicianship that one gets to expect from the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its best, and surely there is scarcely a production of Beethoven's that shows him with more incomparable skill directing the tonal qualities of his material.

It was hard to resist the temptation, while listening to the rendition, of speculating for a moment upon the personnel of the performers in its bearing upon the national crisis as it exists today. What did it foreshadow—that harmonious production, delivered by the combined efforts of so many individuals of so many nations of the world, with the encircling throng of Americans above them? And as the chorus sang the words:

> "Let thy magic bring together
> All whom earth-born laws divide;
> All mankind shall be as brothers
> 'Neath thy tender wings and wide,"

the thought unfolded to a united world, even though today disruption should rend asunder the very organization that was picturing the future harmony.

The audience was enthusiastic in its applause both in greeting Dr. Muck, and after the performance.

Advertiser Nov. 27, 1917

SPRINGFIELD MAY BAR THE SYMPHONY

Springfield, Nov. 26.—The same influences that recently refused the use of the Municipal Auditorium to Fritz Kreisler, Austrian violinist, are active to close the building to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, on the ground that Dr. Muck is an enemy alien, it was learned today. Some members of the city property committee, which controls the use of all city buildings, favor this course.

RECORD Nov. 30, 1917

Symphony Barnstorms

The Symphony Orchestra is having busy week-end. This afternoon and tomorrow evening it plays Rachmaninoff's symphony in E-minor, No. 2, and Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream. Sunday it and the great chorus Stephen Townsend has trained, will give Beethoven's Choral Symphony at Symphony Hall. (The Record has had many suggestions that Dr. Muck fill out the symphony with some other work, preferably one of the Leonore overtures—the Symphony is seldom given alone in Europe.)

Sunday evening the orchestra goes on its second Southern tour. There is no reason to discuss why Baltimore will have no concerts. Baltimore cut off her musical nose to spite her musical face. Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington will get concerts. In the two latter cities Mme. Melba will appear as soloist.

POST Nov. 25, 1917

WILL REPEAT 9TH SYMPHONY

Dr. Muck to Give Great Work Next Sunday

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony is to have a second performance in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The performance of this great work by the Symphony Orchestra and the splendid chorus organized by Stephen Townsend, all under the direction of Dr. Muck in Symphony Hall last Tuesday, was the most brilliant and successful musical event that Boston has had in a generation.

The days following the performance brought in to C. A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, many letters requesting that it be repeated at an early date. The only convenient date for which Symphony Hall was available was Sunday, Dec. 2, and Mr. Ellis decided to repeat the performance on that day, providing the chorus could be got together. Notices were sent out immediately to all the members of the chorus and acceptance has been so general that the concert will be given under the same conditions as prevailed last Tuesday evening.

Three of the soloists have been re-engaged. These are Mr. Middleton, Mr. Hackett and Miss Keyes. It is impossible for Miss Hempel to be here, although she was very keen about coming, but engagements take her to another part of the country, so there will be another soprano in her place, it is expected, equally as distinguished.

TRANSCRIPT Nov. 26, 1917

Items and Announcements

Rapid but successful arrangements have been made for the repetition of the signally eloquent performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony last Tuesday under Dr. Muck. The music will be heard again next Sunday afternoon at three—instead of the usual three-thirty—in Symphony Hall with the chorus virtually intact; three of the solo singers of last week—Miss Keyes and Messrs. Hackett and Middleton; the Symphony Orchestra, as usual, and leading all these forces Dr. Muck, who, as with Liszt's "Faust Symphony," has carried repetitions of notable concerts to the original pitch of pleasure. Miss Hempel, who sang the soprano part in the finale last Tuesday, is, unfortunately, detained at the Metropolitan Opera House by a full-dress rehearsal of "The Daughter of the Regiment," about to be revived there, in which she takes the principal personage. Miss Florence Hinkle, whose voice suits the music, will succeed her.

TRANSCRIPT NOV. 30, 1917.

By exception the concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, at which Beethoven's Choral Symphony will be heard anew under Dr. Muck and with the remarkable chorus of a week ago, will begin at three o'clock instead of the usual three-thirty. The departure of the orchestra on its monthly journey southward necessitates the change. In spite of requests for the resumption of the visits of the orchestra to Baltimore, now that the storm over "The Star-Spangled Banner" has subsided, the city has been definitely struck from the itinerary. Accordingly the schedule for these monthly trips stands: Monday, Philadelphia; Tuesday, Washington; Thursday, New York; Friday, Brooklyn; Saturday, New York.

Under the regulation forbidding the presence of "enemy aliens" within the District of Columbia, thirty-two members of the Symphony Orchestra cannot take their places in its monthly concerts at Washington, one of which befalls next Tuesday. Properly, the Department of Justice has declined to make exception in favor of the band. Accordingly Dr. Muck must adapt his programmes in Washington to an orchestra only seventy strong.

POST
DEC. 2, 1917

It's Patriotic—And Why Not Art?

In several portions of the country of late we have been hearing much discussion over the playing—and in one case the preliminary refusal to play—our official military national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," at concerts of classical music. Peace now reigns, by reason of the reconsideration of all hands who had objected. Still there remains the moot question whether the inclusion of the air in concerts of high grade is or is not artistic. That it is not was one of the chief objections made by the authorities of our finest orchestra before they saw the true light.

But what is the offence to art in beginning or ending a classical concert with "The Star Spangled Banner"? This is no cheap tune, be it understood; it has no relation with the commonplace and maudlin "popular" song. It is good music. Composed somewhere between 1770 and 1775 by John Stafford Smith, an Englishman, and sung to the words of "Anacreon in Heaven"—bacchanalian, it is true; but let that pass—it lived and was approved by the process of time. When a tune reaches its 140th year, and is still well liked, it has made out its case; it is itself a classic. This air of Smith's is distinctly better in form, inspiration and effectiveness than some of the music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "the real thing." Key evidently liked it, and after he had written his stirring song during the bombardment of Fort McHenry, he specifically directed that the words be sung to its tune. Therefore, it is time-honored in both ways.

Why, then, should not "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at concerts of the first grade? Why not more generally and with even more fervor than at cheaper entertainments? David Stanley Smith, professor of music at Yale, admirably answers these questions when he says:

> To be sure, it is hard to determine just the proper amount of publicity which the song should have, to fix the point beyond which it loses its force through repetition and becomes merged in the general mass of popular music. But at least we may protect it from the odium implied in the effect that it is all very well to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at popular concerts, but not at symphony concerts. Actually, the opposite is true. The national anthem is never presented with more appropriateness than before audiences that have gathered for serious reflection. It begins to offend only when it is used as a cloak of respectability over general cheapness of entertainment; and it is in the field of mere amusement that its use might well be curtailed.
>
> Let us hope that mutual recrimination and professional aloofness and hypersensitiveness may give way to a vision of the exalted symbolism which a thoughtful conception of the national anthem reveals.

In another way, but perhaps more practically, the question of "art" was answered at the opening performance of the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York, five of the world's greatest singers, Enrico Caruso, Pasquale Amato, Claudio Muzio, Margareto Matzenauer and Basil Ruysdaele, together with the chorus, sang the national anthem as it has never been sung before on this earth. And the tense interest and spontaneous applause of the great audience testified to the fact that "The Star Spangled Banner" was good art when artistically rendered. And that it is something better, we all know.

TRANSCRIPT
Nov. 26, 1917

WEEK-END CONCERTS

NEW PLACE FOR BERLIOZ IN OUR MUSIC

Audiences Now Hear, Appreciate, Applaud—Mrs. Hunt and Her Songs—Mme. Schumann-Heink After Three Changeful Years Upon Voice, Pieces and Procedure—The Choral Symphony to Be Repeated—Other Programmes in Prospect

DELUDED or begrudging Wagner regarded Berlioz as a mere measure of musical nutriment for the world, as a "plump oyster," quickly swallowed, for the growth and rounding out of orchestration. Rolland has levelled an impassioned lance at this misconception which still holds generally over Europe, in Germany not least, and in FFrance as well—this unsympathetic half-way acceptance by the academics as so much "color,'" and of Berlioz; this dismissal of him as a wild and whirling "romantic of romantics." Some read the anecdote of Berlioz's impassioned life, are merely amused, and accordingly dispose themselves not to take his music seriously. Surely the orchestral parts from his symphony upon "Romeo and Juliet," applauded once more at the Symphony Concert of Saturday, have done much to dispel these preconceptions. Boschot, in his fine biography of Berlioz, calls "Romeo and Juliet" his masterpiece, and so does Rolland, in repudiation of Weingartner's choice of the Requiem, and Strauss's of the "Overture to King Lear"! Rolland clears the point in a paragraph by distinguishing a genius from a great man. Wagner was great, because he was a wilful master of his career, his actions, his thought, all of which he subjugated to the service of his creative force. Berlioz possessed none of this moral unity. He was not great, but a burning genius; often he was at pitiful variance with himself, defeating his own ends. To Wagner, Isolde meant one person alone; to Berlioz, Juliet meant one person alone. But while Wagner wisely keeps his beloved Wesendonck in the background, Berlioz persistently hurls his beloved Smithson at your head; in all his writings he does his best to lead you and himself astray, to distort your appreciation of his music. "Berlioz was not a musician," ends Rolland, "he was music itself. He was never in command of his demon; he was ever its prey."

And this sheer, unshackled genius was the glory of France and among the highest of music. Sublimely innocent of tradition or philosophy, of Bach or Schopenhauer, it took the divinely fresh and lucid way. While Wagner was struggling with the problem of centuries, the welding of music and drama, Berlioz solved it directly and spontaneously in the "Garden Scene," by jumping a foregone absurdity. Rolland may be forgiven the partiality of a Frenchman, championing the musical genius of his race, when he writes: "Compare the Virgilian tenderness of the 'nuit sereine' in 'Romeo and Juliet' to the carnal fervor of 'Tristan!'" And yet one surely needs only to listen without prejudice to that love scene, written before "Rienzi," by the way, to appreciate the rare purity and refinement of spirit, the Latin reserve and serenity; to feel throughout the music as played by Dr. Muck and the orchestra the musical and unacademic sense of proportion and fitness. Such appreciation requires only to avoid conclusions from the outward semblance, to leave all thought of actresses, bandits, domestic failures, even of Shakspeare, behind. In short, it is genius expressing itself in music alone as nowhere else, and to be approached from no other point. Berlioz in this music exalts the state of being in love to a degree that none but W[illegible]er may dispute. Surely no fairy piece as delicate and breathlessly captivating as that of Queen Mab in "Romeo and Juliet" has been written, and no festal music which is at once so splendid, brilliant, stimulating and free from tawdriness as that of Capulet's fete.

MONITOR
DEC. 3, 1917

Choral Symphony Repeated

Beethoven's Ninth ("Choral") Symphony —Second performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Stephen Townsend's chorus, with Karl Muck conducting; Symphony Hall, afternoon of Dec. 2. The soloists were: Mme. Florence Hinkle, soprano; Miss Margaret Keyes, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Arthur Middleton, bass.

A performance such as the one rendered yesterday afternoon leaves the audience with a sense of having listened to something that is practically perfect from any angle it is regarded. The outstanding feature was, of course, the chorus, because a chorus that can measure up to the standard of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and hold its own against it, is, it is needless to say, no ordinary chorus. And that it did both itself and the orchestra full credit is giving the least measure of praise that can be accorded to it.

There is something peculiarly impressive in an achievement such as was scored in this second rendering of the ninth symphony with its choral finale. Passing over the general majesty and beauty of such a performance, and ignoring the fact that the theme upon which the variations for the chorus, orchestra and quartet are built is of a somewhat forced and rather exaggerated nature, one cannot but acknowledge that the ensemble was so unusual and at the same time so irreproachable that it calls for more than passing comment.

The technical difficulties were all overcome with apparently the greatest ease, an attainment that bespeaks careful and studied training of a most particular type, while the soloists upheld their parts with vigor and spontaneity.

As regards the first three movements, there is really little that need be said. They were performed with all that perfection of detail and musicianship that one gets to expect from the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its best, and surely there is scarcely a production of Beethoven's that shows him with more incomparable skill directing the tonal qualities of his material.

It was hard to resist the temptation, while listening to the rendition, of speculating for a moment upon the personnel of the performers in its bearing upon the national crisis as it exists today. What did it foreshadow —that harmonious production, delivered by the combined efforts of so many individuals of so many nations of the world, with the encircling throng of Americans above them? And as the chorus sang the words:

"Let thy magic bring together
All whom earth-born laws divide;
All mankind shall be as brothers
'Neath thy tender wings and wide,"

the thought unfolded to a united world, even though today disruption should rend asunder the very organization that was picturing the future harmony.

The audience was enthusiastic in its applause both in greeting Dr. Muck, and after the performance.

Advertiser
Nov. 27, 1917

SPRINGFIELD MAY BAR THE SYMPHONY

Springfield, Nov. 26.—The same influences that recently refused the use of the Municipal Auditorium to Fritz Kreisler, Austrian violinist, are active to close the building to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, on the ground that Dr. Muck is an enemy alien, it was learned today. Some members of the city property committee, which controls the use of all city buildings, favor this course.

RECORD
NOV. 30, 1917

Symphony Barnstorms

The Symphony Orchestra is having busy week-end. This afternoon and tomorrow evening it plays Rachmaninoff's symphony in E-minor, No. 2, and Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream. Sunday it and the great chorus Stephen Townsend has trained, will give Beethoven's Choral Symphony at Symphony Hall. (The Record has had many suggestions that Dr. Muck fill out the symphony with some other work, preferably one of the Leonora overtures—the Symphony is seldom given alone in Europe.)

Sunday evening the orchestra goes on its second Southern tour. There is no reason to discuss why Baltimore will have no concerts. Baltimore cut off her musical nose to spite her musical face. Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington will get concerts. In the two latter cities Mme. Melba will appear as soloist.

POST
NOV. 25, 1917.

WILL REPEAT 9TH SYMPHONY

Dr. Muck to Give Great Work Next Sunday

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony is to have a second performance in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The performance of this great work by the Symphony Orchestra and the splendid chorus organized by Stephen Townsend, all under the direction of Dr. Muck in Symphony Hall last Tuesday, was the most brilliant and successful musical event that Boston has had in a generation.

The days following the performance brought in to C. A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, many letters requesting that it be repeated at an early date. The only convenient date for which Symphony Hall was available was Sunday, Dec. 2, and Mr. Ellis decided to repeat the performance on that day, providing the chorus could be got together. Notices were sent out immediately to all the members of the chorus and acceptance has been so general that the concert will be given under the same conditions as prevailed last Tuesday evening.

Three of the soloists have been reengaged. These are Mr. Middleton, Mr. Hackett and Miss Keyes. It is impossible for Miss Hempel to be here, although she was very keen about coming, but engagements take her to another part of the country, so there will be another soprano in her place, it is expected, equally as distinguished.

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 26, 1917

Items and Announcements

Rapid but successful arrangements have been made for the repetition of the signally eloquent performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony last Tuesday under Dr. Muck. The music will be heard again next Sunday afternoon at three—instead of the usual three-thirty—in Symphony Hall with the chorus virtually intact; three of the solo singers of last week—Miss Keyes and Messrs. Hackett and Middleton; the Symphony Orchestra, as usual, and leading all these forces Dr. Muck, who, as with Liszt's "Faust Symphony," has carried repetitions of notable concerts to the original pitch of pleasure. Miss Hempel, who sang the soprano part in the finale last Tuesday, is, unfortunately, detained at the Metropolitan Opera House by a full-dress rehearsal of "The Daughter of the Regiment," about to be revived there, in which she takes the principal personage. Miss Florence Hinkle, whose voice suits the music, will succeed her.

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 30, 1917.

[illegible] of this town.

By exception the concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, at which Beethoven's Choral Symphony will be heard anew under Dr. Muck and with the remarkable chorus of a week ago, will begin at three o'clock instead of the usual three-thirty. The departure of the orchestra on its monthly journey southward necessitates the change. In spite of requests for the resumption of the visits of the orchestra to Baltimore, now that the storm over "The Star-Spangled Banner" has subsided, the city has been definitely struck from the itinerary. Accordingly the schedule for these monthly trips stands: Monday, Philadelphia; Tuesday, Washington; Thursday, New York; Friday, Brooklyn; Saturday, New York.

Under the regulation forbidding the presence of "enemy aliens" within the District of Columbia, thirty-two members of the Symphony Orchestra cannot take their places in its monthly concerts at Washington, one of which befalls next Tuesday. Properly, the Department of Justice has declined to make exception in favor of the band. Accordingly Dr. Muck must adapt his programmes in Washington to an orchestra only seventy strong.

Advertiser
Nov. 30, 1917

NINTH SYMPHONY THEMES ANALYZED

What to Observe in Beethoven's Great Work Described by Critic.

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

The great Ninth Symphony is to be repeated in Bosto non Sunday afternoon, and it may be of interest to the untrained auditor to know what chief points to watch for as the great musical panorama unfolds.

Note at the first the vague little figure (an Iambic) which seems wrapped in a fog. Beethoven keeps one in doubt as to what key he is going to write in, until the chief theme enters suddenly, like a thunderclap, in D minor, a downward arpeggio. The subordinate theme comes in sweetly and softly, on the wood-wind instruments. After some treatment the closing theme enters, loudly, and is somewhat like the thundering chief theme, but now upwards. After treatment of the figures of these themes the themes themselves come back, and then a great postscript (Coda), in which is a mighty crescendo.

KETTLE-DRUMS PROMINENT.

Almost the whole second movement reiterates a three-noted figure (a Dactyl), and this figure is given even on the kettle-drums, which became very prominent in parts of this movement. In the second theme of this movement, while the above figure is constantly repeated by the string instruments there is a rapid melody above them on wood-wind instruments and horns. Wagner added the horns, for Beethoven's scoring was poor at this point, possibly on account of his deafness. This is the most easily understood movement of the entire symphony.

The next movement, the slow one, begins with a beautiful melody (Beethoven was totally deaf when he wrote it), which is followed by another tune which is a trifle quicker, and these two tunes are repeated over and over, varied and embroidered each time.

The last movement pictures the era of the universal brotherhood of man. The words on the program will explain that. It begins with a wild outcry, very dissonant, portraying the outbursts of a criminal and sinful world. This is rebuked by the contrabasses and violoncellos in a simple passage which sounds like the voice of a Redeemer counseling patience and promising relief. Then the first figure of each of the three previous movements passes in review, each being rebuked by the contrabasses and 'cellos, except the last and sweetest one, a very wonderful dialogue.

Now comes the melody with which the millennium is to be sung about. It is very simple and without any accompaniment or harmony. After this the tumult bursts forth again, the cry of a suffering world.

BASS VOICE ENTERS.

Up to this point all has been instrumental, but now the bass voice enters, with a phrase which the contrabasses and 'cellos gave before. It sings Beethoven's word — "O friends, such tones no longer"—after which the chorus follows with the simple melody (it sounds not unlike "Yankee Doodle") that the contrabasses and 'cellos sang before. From this point the words (the "Ode to Joy" by Schiller) will explain matters clearly enough, yet one may add that there are six variations of this theme, some of them tremendously difficult. There is a devotional passage exactly in the centre, three variations before and three after it, and this religious theme is in the Gregorian style of the Catholic Church. There is a wonderful march, indicating Victory, a fine interweaving (counterpoint) of the religious theme with the melody of the first theme, and the end is a delirium of joy.

The vocal work is very unsingable. It is too constantly in high register. Beethoven never paid any heed to the limitations of the human voice. He never thought vocally. And the musical pitch has gone up half a tone since his day. None the less, every American auditor will enjoy this song of Liberty and Universal Brotherhood.

Monitor
Dec. 3, 1917

ALIEN ORDER BARS BOSTON ORCHESTRA

News Dec. 3

Symphony Concerts in Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore Canceled as Result of the Restrictions on Enemies

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The concert that was to have been given in Washington on Tuesday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been canceled because of the President's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia. Manager Ellis, of the orchestra, has notified the management of the theater where the concert was to have been given that the organization will not attempt to enter the District of Columbia. Agents of the Government draw no distinction between Dr. Muck and any other alien enemy, and he would be arrested if he entered the District.

A telegram from Mr. Ellis states that tickets sold for the concert will be redeemed at the office where they were on sale. The management stated in the telegram that definite information concerning the effect of the regulations on the members of the orchestra was not obtained from Washington until Saturday afternoon, which prevented an earlier announcement of the cancellation.

The music lovers of Washington are not the only ones who will be deprived of hearing the orchestra, as similar concerts scheduled to be given in Philadelphia today and in Baltimore on Wednesday also had to be canceled because of the enemy alien restrictions.

Globe
Nov. 24, 1917

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The first music from Strauss' opera, "Ariadne on Naxos," to be heard in Boston was the aria of Zerbinetta, sung yesterday afternoon at the Symphony concert by Miss Mabel Garrison, making her first appearance at these concerts. Charged with neurotic decadence in "Salome" and "Elektra," again with Hugo von Hoffmannsthal as his librettist, Strauss determined to write an operatic comedy. Instead of a swollen orchestra riotous with modern dissonance, he would employ only 36 men, but each of necessity a virtuoso. He would also write coloratura music for a soprano voice. This aria of Zerbinetta, originally long and of extreme hight, was altered in the revision following the premiere at Stuttgart five years ago last month, which made other more sweeping changes.

From the performance yesterday this is music of audacious cleverness, of a magical technic which stamps the genius of Strauss upon a form he had not attempted before. Not only does he set forth this exquisitely satirical confession upon her lovers by Zerbinetta to the despairing Queen in roundelays of scintillant pyrotechnical display in the voice, but makes his little orchestra catch and reflect the spirit of fantasy, caprice and amiable malice. It is music which none other than Strauss could have written, and whatever its permanence, is a matchless miniature, which puts every instrumentalist upon his mettle and demands a singer of surpassing abilities.

Miss Garrison's voice is too light, perhaps, to say that she did the florid music fullest justice, but she gave a superb performance in point of musical conception as in skill with decorative song requiring a consummate art. In the climax of the sustained melody she sang with breadth and emotional beauty of tone. Her sense of Mozart's aria "L'amero, saro costante" from "Il Re Pastore" was equally appropriate to its style. In all a young singer of remarkable equipment.

Giving pleasure in the Strauss, Dr Muck conducted Haydn's "The Chase" Symphony and three movements from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet." The Queen Mab music was exqusitely done. Mr Longy made Juliet's song in the garden of incomparable beauty.

Herald
Nov. 24, 1917.

SYMPHONY GIVES RARE PROGRAM

"The Chase" by Haydn, and "Romeo and Juliet" Feature Delightful Concert.

"ARIADNE" FIRST TIME HERE

11/24

By PHILIP HALE.

The sixth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral pieces were Haydn's Symphony, "The Chase," and the Scherzo, Garden Scene and Ball at Capulet's House from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juilet" Symphony. Miss Mabel Garrison sang "L'amero" from Mozart's 'Il re Pastore" (violin obbligato by Mr. Witek) and Zerbinetta's aria from Richard Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos" (first time in this city).

The concert was an unusually interesting one. The Symphony of Haydn is not too familiar; it is in his sprightliest manner not too naive in its simplicity, gay and frank; and, crowning merit, the movements are short. Alexandre Guilmant once said to us, hearing a mass of Haydn's, at the Trinite in Paris, that every page of Haydn's music showed the ripe and sure musician. This symphony was written for the pleasure of Prince Esterhazy, to celebrate his return from a journey. To please him the more, Haydn used for the finale the introduction to the third act of an opera which the prince liked greatly, one of Haydn's operas, long forgotten. The finale with its hunting music gives the name to the Symphony. The first movement is a tuneful and brisk allegro; in the second a simple folk-tune is varied skilfully; the strongly rhythmed Scherzo—Dr. Muck is a master of rhythm—was a pretty oboe solo in the trio, which Mr. Longy played delightfully. The finale, with its cheerful hunting calls, has an unexpectedly gentle ending.

Dr. Muck, always fortunate in his reading of Haydn's symphonies, gave a remarkable interpretation of the excerpts from Berlioz's great dramatic Symphony. It is not easy to believe that this music is nearly 80 years old. The "Queen Mab" Scherzo might have been written yesterday by an ultra-modern; that is, if any composer of this school were the genius to imagine the music and then express it in orchestral speech. There has been no fairy music like this before or since Berlioz was mad over the Irish actress, Harriet Smithson. The fairies of Weber and Mendelssohn are gross and heavy-footed creatures in comparision with Queen Mab. The inherent fancifulness of the Scherzo was more fully revealed by the fine performance of the orchestra than ever before at these concerts. There are pages of the Garden Scene that are of surpassing, intimate beauty, but one wishes that Berlioz had not been so prolix in his love-making. After the

Monitor
Dec 3/917

SYMPHONY PLANS STILL UNSETTLED

Boston Orchestra Will Play at Brooklyn and New York if Dr. Muck Allowed to Appear

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will keep its engagements in Brooklyn on Thursday and in New York on Friday and Saturday, it is understood, provided Dr. Muck, the conductor is allowed to appear. The management is said to be willing to undertake in this partial way its monthly southern tour, leaving at home the 22 members who come under the classification of alien enemies, if the conductor, who has rehearsed the programs and who has made all the artistic arrangements, is allowed to direct the concerts.

The concerts in Boston, it is believed, will continue as originally planned, even if the membership of the orchestra is abridged and if the resignation of the present conductor is accepted, and his place is taken by a United States citizen. The loss of revenue caused by the enforced cancellation of the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington monthly concerts is not supposed to affect the situation seriously, although the loss that would be caused by cancellation of the New York concerts might make the raising of a guarantee fund necessary.

Herald
Nov. 26, 1917

A WORD FOR DR. MUCK.

To the Editor of the Herald:

In the name of common decency and courtesy let our newspapers stop printing insulting letters about Dr. Muck, and, above all, let them cease publishing vulgar caricatures and refrain from reprinting attacks from the papers of other cities.

Have we Americans indeed sunk so low as to forget all common rules of courtesy toward an honorable gentleman, who is our guest, being in this country by invitation, and to whom we are indebted for eight years of higt musical achievement, such as has made our city deservedly famous, not only through the length and breadth of our land, but throughout the world? Without belittling the admirable conductors who have built up our Boston Symphony Orchestra to its present state of perfection, it may safely be said that under Dr. Muck it has reached the high-water mark of efficiency.

Mr. Higginson has given a large part of his life to establishing these concerts, besides the generous support that alone has made them possible. Is that which has been accomplished during 37 years of concentrated effort to be swept away in a night, owing to the hysterical attitude of a few unnamed and unknown individuals in other cities, and the malice and violence of a few equally unrepresentative and ill-informed persons in our own city, who seem to have forgotten President Wilson's wise and humane warning, that "we have no war with the German people"?

Dr. Muck is no fortune-seeker. His salary is to him but a fair remuneration for his arduous services, and it is absurd to suggest that he came here to make money. His position in Europe was pre-eminently assured, honorable and remunerative, and only Mr. Higginson's ambition to secure for Boston the best conductor available accomplished Dr. Muck's engagement. Dr. Muck has worked for eight years among us, and has proved himself not only an artist of highest ability and very unusual powers, but in addition at all times a quiet, law-abiding and honorable gentleman. It should also not be forgotten that the orchestra itself is in no wise a German one, but consists of many different nationalities, and thus is typical of the melting-pot of the nations, our United States. Only Dr. Muck's unfailing tact and conciliatory spirit have amalgamated these discordant elements into one harmonious whole, able to work together during this time of storm and stress for the enjoyment and spiritual inspiration of the community, which never stood in greater need of such ideal influence.

Let us then help Mr. Higginson to preserve intact that which he has built up through the effort of so many years, let us remember that we are indebted to Dr. Muck and owe him not only toleration, but support, courtesy and consideration. Let it be repeated that Dr. Muck has made all the concessions that were required of him, and let it be reiterated that he never refused to conduct our national anthem, as Mr. Higginson himself has testified. Once again, Dr. Muck is with us at our request, not of his own volition; let us then no longer transgress all laws of hospitality, but rather assure him that he is appreciated and valued during the probably short period for which he will still be with us.

At any rate, let not Boston dishonor itself by permitting its greatest institution, a pattern of its kind, to disband at this juncture, owing merely to unfounded and petty attacks on the person of its leader.

I am but voicing the sentiment of the best part of the community, which unhappily has not sufficiently expressed its disapprobation of the malevolent and narrow-minded attitude of the American press. For the sake of our own self-respect, if for no other reason, let all attacks, direct or indirect, cease, and let Dr. Muck's name appear in print only where it belongs, on our concert programs. LOUISA LORING DRESEL.

Post, Dec. 2, 1917

Our critical brethren of New York City evince deep agitation as to the arrangement of "The Star Spangled Banner" which Dr. Muck and his men now play at the beginning of each Boston Symphony concert. Mr. Henry Theophilus Finck, of the Evening Post, saw in the chosen orchestration of the air a deep laid Teutonic plot against National unity. "Last night Dr. Muck conducted 'The Star Spangled Banner' in an arrangement which introduced some curious contrapuntal jingling suggesting the Venusberg music (from Wagner's 'Tannhauser')." The critic of the Evening Journal also felt injured, though on esthetic rather than nationalistic grounds. "It is to be hoped that in the future Dr. Muck will omit the violin trimmings with which the air was quite gratuitously and absurdly embroidered. The National anthem need not be bedizened with ball-room frippery even if the conductor happens to consider it a ball-room piece." The arrangement used is one designed to promote all possible sonority and brilliancy of effect. Perhaps the gentleman would prefer the air as presented by Victor Herbert in one of his popular fantasias.

RECORD
– NOV. 24, 1917 –

DEATH TAKES FIUMARA, SYMPHONY VIOLINIST

The Boston Symphony Orchestra lost one of its most valued members Tuesday in the death of Placido Fiumara. He played in the orchestra for over 30 years.

He was stricken just as he was preparing to leave for the concert in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Fiumara was born in Messina, Sicily, in 1858, and came to Boston when he was 16. Alone and unaided, he made his way against great odds, until his talent as a violinist was recognized by the late Julius Eichberg, who took him as a pupil. As a young man he traveled extensively as a member of operatic orchestras, notably with the old Boston Ideals and The Bostonians.

Mr. Gericke appointed him to the second violins of the Symphony Orchestra in 1885, and few years later he was placed at the first desk as second leader of this section, which post he held until his death.

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 26, 1917.

OPPOSE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Influences at Work to Keep Dr. Muck's Musicians Out of the Springfield Municipal Auditorium

Springfield, Nov. 26—The same influences that recently refused the use of the Municipal Auditorium to Fritz Kreisler, Austrian violinist, are active to close the building to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, on the ground that Dr. Muck is an enemy alien, it was learned today. Some members of the city property committee which controls the use of all city buildings favor this course.

HERALD
NOV. 25, 1917.

SYMPHONY WILL REPEAT FINE CONCERT BY REQUEST

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which was presented last Tuesday evening by the Symphony Orchestra and the splendid chorus organized by Stephen Townsend, all directed by Dr. Muck, is to be repeated in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. Three of the soloists have been re-engaged, Mr. Middleton, Mr. Brackett and Miss Keyes, but it is impossible for Miss Hempel to appear owing to prior engagements in another part of the country. Her place will be filled by another equally distinguished soprano.

The repeat performance is due to a great number of request letters, and it is expected that the coming performance will be equal in every way to the original one.

GLOBE
NOV. 25, 1917.

CHORAL SYMPHONY TO BE REPEATED NEXT SUNDAY

Immediately following the superb performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony last Tuesday, requests to Manager Ellis of the orchestra for a repetition were so numerous as to demand consideration. Mr Ellis found next Sunday, Dec 2, to be the only available date and announces a second performance at 3 that afternoon.

Of the soloists, Margaret Keyes, the alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, baritone, have been re-engaged. Miss Hempel's contracts in other parts of the country will prevent her reappearance, but efforts are being made to secure a soprano of equal rank. Tickets will be ready tomorrow at Symphony Hall.

POST. NOV. 24, 1917.

DR. MUCK EXALTS BERLIOZ

Miss Garrison Soloist at Symphony Concert

Nov 24

BY OLIN DOWNES

The performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, were yesterday of particular brilliance. Miss Mabel Garrison of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was soloist, singing Mozart's air, "L'Amero," and Zerbinetta's aria from Strauss' "Ariadne auf Naxos." The orchestral pieces were Haydn's symphony, nicknamed "La Chasse," and three movements of Berlioz' "dramatic symphony," "Romeo and Juliette."

MISS GARRISON'S ARTISTRY

The novelty was the air of Strauss, sung with superb bravura and masterly expression by Miss Garrison. Seldom has any young singer accomplished so much with music of such difficulty of range and execution and, in some passages, subtlety of expression. In all that the air demanded Miss Garrison excelled. As for the music itself, it is extremely piquant, often melodious, always expressive of the text, and the instrumental combinations attained by an orchestra of some 18 players, including an extensive piano passage, are fascinating. One laughs at the esprit with which this music is written, and exults, with the composer, in his virtuosity. Now we are treated to purest Mozart, now to the paint and powder of Italian opera, now to a style that harks back, as it seemed, to that of the earlier Strauss, plus his later mastery of material. One cannot help being suspicious of all this virtuosity, for there are composers, as there are men, for whom language is a means of concealing thought. But the piece is fascinating, and if it were not inherently interesting, would have become so on account of the performance.

Miss Garrison also sang the "L'Amero" with taste and finish.

Dr. Muck's Berlioz

But the second outstanding feature of the concert was Dr. Muck's interpretation of Berlioz' music. Why do we not hear the whole of the "Romeo and Juliette" symphony, voice parts and all? Perhaps the instrumental movements are the best, but they point so strongly to music which must be associated with the entire development of the drama that, absorbing as they are, they are incomplete.

But to return—the performance yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall was a wonder, not only of technical achievement on the part of the orchestra, but of the most glowing imagination—an imagination which met one of the most imaginative of all composers half-way. Not in 17 years, at least, of the writer's experience of these concerts has this music made so deep an impression. It has become almost a truism to speak of the modernity of Berlioz, and sometimes the word is overworked in connection with him. For there are passages in Berlioz which, far from being ultra-modern, are most shamelessly conventional and bombastic and old hat today. But this cannot be said of the "Romeo and Juliette" music—not even of the ball scene.

The Queen Mab Scherzo

All is life, love, drama in this music. The Queen Mab scherzo is certainly one of the most delicious pieces of fairy music ever dreamed by any composer. Mendelssohn, whose fairy music in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" remains his masterpiece, is more than equalled on his own ground in this composition. It is as transparent as a spider's web. Its wit and esprit are incomparable. It is also deeply poetic.

The music of the garden scene is too long drawn out, and here we have Berlioz becoming so enamored of a certain progression that he works it to death, repeating it over and over, until we have had enough. Yet, again, what purple passion there is in this music! How it glows as it dialogues the love of the immortal pair! And what drama there is in the introduction of the dance in the ballroom scene!

Berlioz' Daring

Lonely, indeed, was Hector Berlioz, as far ahead of his Parisian contemporaries in the quality of his musical thought and his daring in its expression as he was beyond them in emotional capacity. That he dared to dream of the orchestra he used in that day; that he had the force to substitute for his early lack of training ideas that triumphed in spite of it; that he was in such deadly earnest in the midst of a flippant crowd of musicians, who only decried his efforts—one exalts him more and more as the years go by, and yet more when Dr. Muck gives such a revealing performance of his music.

The audience was very enthusiastic. After the Haydn symphony Dr. Muck was recalled twice. The Berlioz music was received with equal enthusiasm, instead of enthusiasm even greater, as should have been the case. Miss Garrison was brought back to the stage several times after her performances.

From AMERICAN
Address: New York City.
Date NOV 29 1

Boston Symphony Is Barred from Capital

Washington, Nov. 28.—The Boston Symphony cannot keep its engagement to give a concert in Washington on December 4 unless it eliminates from its membership twenty-two German subjects. An official announcement on the subject to-night says:

"The Attorney-General wrote Major Higginson to-day stating that because of the strictness of regulations contained in the proclamation issued by the President on November 17, those members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are alien enemies cannot be permitted to enter the District of Columbia"

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date NOV 29 1917

Washington Bars All German Artists

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave alien enemy members behind.

Attorney General Gregory refused to-day to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

From CALL
Address: New York City
NOV 29 1917

Capital Bars 22 of Boston Symphony Men

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—In order to obtain a permit to give a concert here scheduled for December 4, the Boston Symphony orchestra will have to drop 22 of its artists who are Germans.

This was the answer of the government today to a request by Major Henry L. Higginson for permits for the 22 Germans to enter the District of Columbia. An official announcement explained that the Germans could not enter the federal district under the regulations contained in President Wilson's proclamation of November 17 regarding the movements of enemy aliens.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
NOV 29 19

WASHINGTON BARS CONDUCTOR MUCK

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave enemy alien members behind.

Attorney General Gregory refused to-day to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, is one of the enemy aliens thus barred.

From HERALD
Address: New York City

BAR ALIEN MUSICIANS AND ACTORS FROM WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave alien enemy members behind. Attorney General Gregory refused to-day to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

From SUN
Address: New York City.
Date NOV 29 1917

BARS GERMANS IN ORCHESTRA.

Boston Symphony May Not Take Them to Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave enemy alien members behind.

Attorney-General Gregory refused today to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia.

He gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

RECORD
— NOV. 24, 1917 —

DEATH TAKES FIUMARA, SYMPHONY VIOLINIST

The Boston Symphony Orchestra lost one of its most valued members Tuesday in the death of Placido Fiumara. He played in the orchestra for over 30 years.

He was stricken just as he was preparing to leave for the concert in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Fiumara was born in Messina, Sicily, in 1858, and came to Boston when he was 16. Alone and unaided, he made his way against great odds, until his talent as a violinist was recognized by the late Julius Eichberg, who took him as a pupil. As a young man he traveled extensively as a member of operatic orchestras, notably with the old Boston Ideals and The Bostonians.

Mr. Gericke appointed him to the second violins of the Symphony Orchestra in 1885, and few years later he was placed at the first desk as second leader of this section, which post he held until his death.

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 26, 1917.

OPPOSE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Influences at Work to Keep Dr. Muck's Musicians Out of the Springfield Municipal Auditorium

Springfield, Nov. 26—The same influences that recently refused the use of the Municipal Auditorium to Fritz Kreisler, Austrian violinist, are active to close the building to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, on the ground that Dr. Muck is an enemy alien, it was learned today. Some members of the city property committee which controls the use of all city buildings favor this course.

HERALD
NOV. 25, 1917.

SYMPHONY WILL REPEAT FINE CONCERT BY REQUEST

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which was presented last Tuesday evening by the Symphony Orchestra and the splendid chorus organized by Stephen Townsend, all directed by Dr. Muck, is to be repeated in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. Three of the soloists have been re-engaged, Mr. Middleton, Mr. Brackett and Miss Keyes, but it is impossible for Miss Hempel to appear owing to prior engagements in another part of the country. Her place will be filled by another equally distinguished soprano.

The repeat performance is due to a great number of request letters, and it is expected that the coming performance will be equal in every way to the original one.

GLOBE
NOV. 25, 1917.

CHORAL SYMPHONY TO BE REPEATED NEXT SUNDAY

Immediately following the superb performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony last Tuesday, requests to Manager Ellis of the orchestra for a repetition were so numerous as to demand consideration. Mr Ellis found next Sunday, Dec 2, to be the only available date and announces a second performance at 3 that afternoon.

Of the soloists, Margaret Keyes, the alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, baritone, have been re-engaged. Miss Hempel's contracts in other parts of the country will prevent her reappearance, but efforts are being made to secure a soprano of equal rank. Tickets will be ready tomorrow at Symphony Hall.

POST. NOV. 24, 1917.

DR. MUCK EXALTS BERLIOZ

Miss Garrison Soloist at Symphony Concert

BY OLIN DOWNES

The performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, were yesterday of particular brilliance. Miss Mabel Garrison of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was soloist, singing Mozart's air, "L'Amero," and Zerbinetta's aria from Strauss' "Ariadne auf Naxos." The orchestral pieces were Haydn's symphony, nicknamed "La Chasse," and three movements of Berlioz' "dramatic symphony," "Romeo and Juliette."

MISS GARRISON'S ARTISTRY

The novelty was the air of Strauss, sung with superb bravura and masterly expression by Miss Garrison. Seldom has any young singer accomplished so much with music of such difficulty of range and execution and, in some passages, subtlety of expression. In all that the air demanded Miss Garrison excelled. As for the music itself, it is extremely piquant, often melodious, always expressive of the text, and the instrumental combinations attained by an orchestra of some 18 players, including an extensive piano passage, are fascinating. One laughs at the esprit with which this music is written, and exults, with the composer, in his virtuosity. Now we are treated to purest Mozart, now to the paint and powder of Italian opera, now to a style that harks back, as it seemed, to that of the earlier Strauss, plus his later mastery of material. One cannot help being suspicious of all this virtuosity, for there are composers, as there are men, for whom language is a means of concealing thought. But the piece is fascinating, and if it were not inherently interesting, would have become so on account of the performance.

Miss Garrison also sang the "L'Amero" with taste and finish.

Dr. Muck's Berlioz

But the second outstanding feature of the concert was Dr. Muck's interpretation of Berlioz' music. Why do we not hear the whole of the "Romeo and Juliette" symphony, voice parts and all? Perhaps the instrumental movements are the best, but they point so strongly to music which must be associated with the entire development of the drama that, absorbing as they are, they are incomplete.

But to return—the performance yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall was a wonder, not only of technical achievement on the part of the orchestra, but of the most glowing imagination—an imagination which met one of the most imaginative of all composers half-way. Not in 17 years, at least, of the writer's experience of these concerts has this music made so deep an impression. It has become almost a truism to speak of the modernity of Berlioz, and sometimes the word is overworked in connection with him. For there are passages in Berlioz which, far from being ultra-modern, are most shamelessly conventional and bombastic and old hat today. But this cannot be said of the "Romeo and Juliette" music—not even of the ball scene.

The Queen Mab Scherzo

All is life, love, drama in this music. The Queen Mab scherzo is certainly one of the most delicious pieces of fairy music ever dreamed by any composer. Mendelssohn, whose fairy music in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" remains his masterpiece, is more than equalled on his own ground in this composition. It is as transparent as a spider's web. Its wit and esprit are incomparable. It is also deeply poetic.

The music of the garden scene is too long drawn out, and here we have Berlioz becoming so enamored of a certain progression that he works it to death, repeating it over and over, until we have had enough. Yet, again, what purple passion there is in this music! How it glows as it dialogues the love of the immortal pair! And what drama there is in the introduction of the dance in the ballroom scene!

Berlioz' Daring

Lonely, indeed, was Hector Berlioz, as far ahead of his Parisian contemporaries in the quality of his musical thought and his daring in its expression as he was beyond them in emotional capacity. That he dared to dream of the orchestra he used in that day; that he had the force to substitute for his early lack of training ideas that triumphed in spite of it; that he was in such deadly earnest in the midst of a flippant crowd of musicians, who only decried his efforts—one exalts him more and more as the years go by, and yet more when Dr. Muck gives such a revealing performance of his music.

The audience was very enthusiastic. After the Haydn symphony Dr. Muck was recalled twice. The Berlioz music was received with equal enthusiasm, instead of enthusiasm even greater, as should have been the case. Miss Garrison was brought back to the stage several times after her performances.

From AMERICAN
Address: New York City.
Date NOV 29

Boston Symphony Is Barred from Capital

Washington, Nov. 28.—The Boston Symphony cannot keep its engagement to give a concert in Washington on December 4 unless it eliminates from its membership twenty-two German subjects. An official announcement on the subject to-night says:

"The Attorney-General wrote Major Higginson to-day stating that because of the strictness of regulations contained in the proclamation issued by the President on November 17, those members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are alien enemies cannot be permitted to enter the District of Columbia"

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date

Washington Bars All German Artists

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave alien enemy members behind.

Attorney General Gregory refused to-day to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

From CALL
Address: New York City
NOV 29 1917

Capital Bars 22 of Boston Symphony Men

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—In order to obtain a permit to give a concert here scheduled for December 4, the Boston Symphony orchestra will have to drop 22 of its artists who are Germans.

This was the answer of the government today to a request by Major Henry L. Higginson for permits for the 22 Germans to enter the District of Columbia. An official announcement explained that the Germans could not enter the federal district under the regulations contained in President Wilson's proclamation of November 17 regarding the movements of enemy aliens.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
NOV 29 1917

WASHINGTON BARS CONDUCTOR MUCK

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave enemy alien members behind.

Attorney General Gregory refused to-day to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, is one of the enemy aliens thus barred.

From HERALD
Address: New York City

BAR ALIEN MUSICIANS AND ACTORS FROM WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave alien enemy members behind. Attorney General Gregory refused to-day to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

From SUN
Address: New York City.
NOV 29 1917
Date

BARS GERMANS IN ORCHESTRA.

Boston Symphony May Not Take Them to Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Musical and theatrical organizations coming to Washington during the war must leave enemy alien members behind.

Attorney-General Gregory refused today to relax in favor of twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia.

He gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

Independent
ss: New York City.
NOV 17 191

"OH, SAY, CAN YOU SEE?"

BY HENRY T. FINCK

MUSICAL CRITIC OF THE NEW YORK EVENING POST

AN amusing anecdote is related about Wassily Safonoff. When that eminent Russian was conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra he went back to Europe every summer, as most musicians did before the war, America being considered the better place to earn money and Europe to spend it. He suffered much from seasickness, and on one of the trips he was lying on his steamer chair looking very pale and unhappy. Suddenly he heard Mrs. Fritz Kreisler, who was standing near him, humming the Russian national hymn. "For heaven's sake," exclaimed the suffering conductor, "don't sing that, or I shall have to get on my feet."

That air is no longer the Russian national hymn, because its words glorify the dethroned Czar. This is most unfortunate, because musically it is the most inspired of all national hymns, and it is to be hoped that, rather than discard the song permanently, the Russians will provide it with a new text, reflecting republican sentiment.

OUR own national hymn has become within the last few days a first-page and editorial subject in the newspapers, and the chief topic of conversation in musical circles, all because Dr. Karl Muck did not conduct it at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence. He had been requested to conduct it, either before or after his program, by the presidents of nine local women's clubs, but their joint message was ignored on the ground that the subscribers themselves had not asked for "The Star Spangled Banner."

The manager of the Boston Orchestra refused to sell tickets at the last moment, for fear, perhaps, that individuals might enter prepared to make a demonstration against the Prussian conductor. Major Henry L. Higginson, who created this orchestra and put aside a million dollars for its maintenance, tho a staunch patriot, sided with his conductor, going so far as to declare that he would disband the orchestra and sell Symphony Hall in Boston if the public clamor for the performance by it of "The Star Spangled Banner" continued. On his return to Boston Dr. Muck aggravated matters by declaring that the Symphony Orchestra was "a classical musical organization," not "a military band or a ballroom orchestra." "To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult."

Nevertheless, he did conduct this anthem at the Friday concert in Symphony Hall and then placed his resignation in the hands of Major Higginson, who, in announcing it to the audience, declared that "to lose him would be a calamity. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

The whole thing was in extremely bad taste. The trouble with Major Higginson is that extravagant praise of the organization created by him has evidently made him look on it as a thing apart from and above everything else of its kind, and above criticism of any kind. He has found out his mistake, for the press has been practically unanimous in censuring the attitude of the Boston Orchestra. As a matter of fact there are half a dozen orchestras in this country quite as "classical" as the Boston band, and at least one of them, the New York Philharmonic, is in some respects superior to it. Its leader, Josef Stransky, is an Austrian subject, a Bohemian, yet he cheerfully conducted the anthem of the country which has welcomed him so cordially and given him profitable employment. So did Walter Damrosch (who was born in Prussia, but is now an ardent American) at the first concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra. So did Dr. Kunwald of Cincinnati, and the conductors of all the leading orchestras in the country.

While one cannot but rejoice that this foolish attempt of the Boston Orchestra to evade a national custom has failed dismally, one cannot but feel that the playing of our national anthem at every symphony concert thruout the season would be a little trying. Not that this anthem is musically contemptible, as "Yankee Doodle" for instance would be. As music, "The Star Spangled Banner," while inferior to the Russian and Austrian national hymns, is not at all bad—far better than "The Watch on the Rhine." Its best setting, in part, is in Puccini's "Madama Butterfly," where some delightful effects are achieved with it. But it is not well to flaunt patriotism and make it a matter of mere routine which may become irksome and thus create the opposite of the effect desired. In our theaters there are not a few spectators, who, tho patriots, resent getting on their feet so often. Others feel that the cheap shows they witness are hardly a proper background for the performance of a patriotic air.

WHEN Theodore Roosevelt heard about Dr. Muck's action he declared that "any man who refuses to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this time of national crisis should be forced to pack up and return to the country he came from." Perhaps Dr. Muck would not be unwilling to do so and return to Berlin as Hofkapellmeister of the Kaiser, who holds him in special esteem. Should he decide to leave us, who is there to take his place? How about Ossip Gabrilowitsch, or Leopold Stokowski? Three American names also might be considered: Frank Van der Stucken, Victor Herbert, Henry Hadley. But this is idle speculation. The latest report from Boston is that Major Higginson takes all the blame on himself. He now declares that Dr. Muck never refused to conduct our anthem, and that he will meekly do it wherever the orchestra plays.

Thus this regrettable incident is closed. It is to be feared, however, that it has had an unfortunate effect in New York, for it was followed promptly by the announcement that no operas in German would be given at the Metropolitan this season. This came as a surprize, for the management had retained all of the German singers except Gadski and Goritz, and announced the usual Wagner repertory. The whole thing was thrashed out last spring, when all the New York daily newspapers had editorials approving of Mr. Gatti-Casazza's policy, on the ground that there was no connection between opera and the Prussian militarism we are bent on exterminating. Why, then, this sudden change of face?

IT is no secret that among the influential directors of the Metropolitan there are some who have never wanted German opera at that house for the simple reason that it bores them. They have reluctantly submitted to its sway because, even with Caruso and Farrar, opera cannot be made to pay without Wagner, whose operas always receive more performances than those of any Italian or French composer. These directors, it is surmised, saw their chance and by a flank movement, overthrew the repertory at a critical moment. The reason advanced—that our tolerance of opera in German would make the Teutons think we were divided in sentiment—is absurd. We shall simply be accused of chauvinism and narrow-mindedness. The Germans themselves have not banished French or Italian opera; in Frankfort, for instance, "Aïda" and "Rigoletto" were sung last month. In Paris, it is true, the name of the Rue Richard Wagner has been changed to that of a French composer, Alberic Magnard, a victim of the war. But in London the Wagner nights at the Promenade Concerts are as popular as ever and Wagner operas have been produced in several English cities since the war began.

It is particularly stupid to banish the operas of Wagner, because he himself was as anti-Prussian as a French general. Were he alive he would be a leader of the revolution which is bound to come; he was exiled eleven years for taking part in one revolution; and to Mathilde Wesendonck he wrote in April, 1859:

"It is interesting that, upon an outbreak between Germany and France, I should be seeking refuge in the enemy's country. I am much afraid of losing all my patriotism, and being secretly delighted if the Germans receive another sound thrashing. Bonapartism is an acute, a passing ailment for the world—but German-Austrian reactionism a chronic, an abiding one."

New York City

m STAATSZEITUNG
dress: New York City.
e NOV 27 191

Auch für Dr. Muck verschlossen.

Konzert des Boston Symphonie Orchesters soll verhindert werden.

(Associated Press.)

Springfield, Mass., 26. November. Die gleichen Einflüsse, welche kürzlich die Benützung des munizipalen Auditoriums für das Konzert von Fritz Kreisler, des österreichischen Geigers, hintertrieben, sind wieder am Werk.

Das Gebäude soll auch dem Boston Symphonie Orchester verschlossen bleiben, weil dasselbe von Dr. Karl Muck, einem feindlichen Ausländer, dirigiert wird. Verschiedene Mitglieder des Stadtrats sollen zu Gunsten dieses Planes sein.

Volkszeitung
n
ress: New York City.
e NOV 27 1917

Opposition gegen Dr. Muck.

Springfield, Mass., 26. Nov. Dieselben Einflüsse, welche kürzlich die Benutzung des Rathaussaales dem österreichischen Violinisten Fritz Kreisler verweigerten, sind, wie man heute erfuhr, aktiv, das Gebäude dem Boston Symphonie-Orchester zu verschließen und der Begründung, daß dessen Dirigent, Dr. Karl Muck, ein feindlicher Ausländer sei. Einige Mitglieder des Stadteigentum-Komitees, welches die Benutzung aller städtischen Gebäude kontrolliert, begünstigten diesen Kurs.

n NEW YORKER
ress: New York City. HERALD
e NOV 30 1917

Reichsdeutsche Musiker nicht in Washington.

Washington, 29. Nov. Die Bostoner Symphonie-Gesellschaft wird das für den 4. Dezember hier angesetzte Konzert nicht geben können, außer wenn sie 22 Reichsdeutsche entläßt. Eine Anfrage beim Generalanwalt hat ergeben, daß unter keinen Umständen feindlichen Ausländern erlaubt werden wird, in den Distrikt Columbia zu kommen, auch nicht Musikern.

NEW YORKER
Journal
ss: New York City.
NOV 29 1917

Symphonie-Musiker als feindliche Ausländer.

Konzert des Bostoner Orchesters in Washington nicht gestattet.

Washington, 28. Nov. — Wenn das Boston Symphonie-Orchester nicht 22 deutsche Untertanen entläßt, kann es sein Engagement am 4. Dezember, ein Konzert in Washington zu geben, nicht halten. Major Henry L. Higginson schrieb an General-Anwalt Gregory und bat ihn um Erlaubnis für 22 feindliche Ausländer, den Distrikt Columbia betreten zu dürfen. Eine diesbezügliche Erklärung besagt:

„Der General-Anwalt schrieb heute an Major Higginson, daß infolge der Strenge der Regulierungen, die in der vom Präsidenten am 17. November erlassenen Proklamation enthalten sind, Mitglieder des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, die feindliche Ausländer seien, die Erlaubnis, den Distrikt Columbia betreten zu dürfen, nicht erhalten können. Der General-Anwalt stellt fest, daß diese Regel auf alle anderen musikalischen und theatralischen Körperschaften, die in Washington auftreten, Anwendung findet."

TELEGRAM
ess: New York City.
NOV 28 1917

CHANGE OF HEART.

That the all-German programme with which the Boston Symphony Orchestra started its season has been relegated to the top shelf in the cupboard will be matter of congratulation to very many persons.

The coming programmes comprise a Russian symphony by Rachmaninoff, three pieces from Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," a MacDowell suite, Debussy's symphonic sketches and a Beethoven overture.

Some one, either Dr. Carl Muck or Major Higginson, has experienced a change of heart evidently. Perhaps both have.

In any event it is well that the temper of the people has been recognized. There is a disposition to resent having things made in Germany forced on the community.

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City
NOV 28 1917

For Boston Subscribers.

The second pair of Boston Symphony concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on Friday evening, December 7, and Saturday afternoon, December 8. The attention of the subscribers to the Boston concerts is particularly called to the fact that the evening concert comes on Friday instead of the usual Thursday. The programme for Friday evening comprises Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, No. 2, and three pieces from Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," overture, nocturne and scherzo.

For Saturday afternoon there will be no symphony, the programme comprising MacDowell's second suite in E minor, "Indian," Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "The Sea" and Beethoven's overture, "Leonore," No. 3.

Volkszeitung
ss: New York City.
NOV 29 1917

Keine deutschen Musiker für Washington.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 29, 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6, 1917.

Washington, 28. Nov. Um die Erlaubnis für Abhaltung eines Konzertes zu erhalten, das hier für den 4. Dezember anberaumt ist, muß das Boston Symphonie-Orchester 22 seiner Musiker fallen lassen, da dieselben Deutsche sind. Dies war die heute erfolgte Antwort der Regierung auf das Gesuch von Major Henry L. Higginson, um Erlaubnis für die 22 Deutschen, den Distrikt von Columbia betreten zu dürfen.

Eine offizielle Ankündigung erklärte, daß die Deutschen den Bundes-Distrikt unter den Bestimmungen der Proklamation des Präsidenten Wilson, vom 17. Oktober, betreffs Bewegung feindlicher Ausländer, nicht betreten dürfen.

Independent

ss: New York City.

"OH, SAY, CAN YOU SEE?"

BY HENRY T. FINCK

MUSICAL CRITIC OF THE NEW YORK EVENING POST

An amusing anecdote is related about Wassily Safonoff. When that eminent Russian was conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra he went back to Europe [illegible] summer, as most musicians did before the war, America being considered the better place to earn money and Europe to spend it. He suffered much from seasickness, and on one of the trips he was lying on his cabin [illegible] looking very pale and unhappy. Suddenly he heard Mrs. Fritz Kreisler, who was standing near him, humming the Russian national hymn. "Feodor, what's that?" exclaimed the sufferer, [illegible] long sing that, or I [illegible] on my feet."

[illegible] longer the Russian national hymn because its words glorify [illegible] Czar. This is most unfortunate, because musically it is the most inspiring of all national hymns. And [illegible] that, rather than discard it permanently, the Russians [illegible] with a new text, reflecting [illegible] sentiment.

OUR own national hymn has become within the last few days a first-page and editorial subject in the newspapers, and the chief topic of conversation in musical circles, not because Dr. Karl Muck did not conduct it at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence. He had been requested to conduct it, either before or after his program, by the presidents of nine local women's clubs, but their joint message was ignored on the ground that the subscribers themselves had not asked for "The Star Spangled Banner."

The manager of the Boston Orchestra refused to sell tickets at the last moment, for fear, perhaps, that individuals might enter prepared to make a demonstration against the Prussian conductor. Major Henry L. Higginson, who created this orchestra and put aside a million dollars for its maintenance, tho a staunch patriot, sided with his conductor, going so far as to declare that he would disband the orchestra and sell Symphony Hall in Boston if the public clamor for the performance by it of "The Star Spangled Banner" continued. On his return to Boston Dr. Muck aggravated matters by declaring that the Symphony Orchestra was "a classical musical organization," not "a military band or a ballroom orchestra." "To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult."

Nevertheless, he did conduct this anthem at the Friday concert in Symphony Hall and then placed his resignation in the hands of Major Higginson, who, in announcing it to the audience, declared that "to lose him would be a calamity. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

[illegible] was in extremely good taste to trouble with Major Higginson is that extravagant praise of the organization created by him has evidently made him look on it as a thing apart from and above everything else of its kind, and above criticism of any kind. He has found out his mistake, for the press has been practically unanimous in censuring the attitude of the Boston Orchestra. As a matter of fact there are half a dozen orchestras in this country quite as "classical" as the Boston band, and at least one of them, the New York Philharmonic, is in some respects superior to it. Its leader, Josef Stransky, is an Austrian subject, a Bohemian, yet he cheerfully conducted the anthem of the country which has welcomed him so cordially and given him profitable employment. So did Walter Damrosch (who was born in Prussia, but is now an ardent American) at the first concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra. So did Dr. Kunwald of Cincinnati, and the conductors of all the leading orchestras in the country.

While one cannot but rejoice that this foolish attempt of the Boston Orchestra to evade a national custom has failed dismally, one cannot but feel that the playing of our national anthem at every symphony concert thruout the season would be a little trying. Not that this anthem is musically contemptible, as "Yankee Doodle" for instance would be. As music, "The Star Spangled Banner," while inferior to the Russian and Austrian national hymns, is not at all bad—far better than "The Watch on the Rhine." Its best setting, in part, is in Puccini's "Madama Butterfly," where some delightful effects are achieved with it. But it is not well to flaunt patriotism and make it a matter of mere routine which may become irksome and thus create the opposite of the effect desired. In our theaters there are not a few spectators, who, tho patriots, resent getting on their feet so often. Others feel that the cheap shows they witness are hardly a proper background for the performance of a patriotic air.

WHEN Theodore Roosevelt heard about Dr. Muck's action he declared that "any man who refuses to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' in this time of national crisis should be forced to pack up and return to the country he came from." Perhaps Dr. Muck would not be unwilling to do so and return to Berlin as Hofkapellmeister of the Kaiser, who holds him in special esteem. Should he decide to leave us, who is there to take his place? How about Ossip Gabrilowitsch, or Leopold Stokowski? Three American names also might be considered: Frank Van der Stucken, Victor Herbert, Henry Hadley. But this is idle speculation. The latest report from Boston is that Major Higginson takes all the blame on himself. He now declares that Dr. Muck never refused to conduct our anthem, and that he will meekly do it wherever the orchestra plays.

Thus this regrettable incident is closed. It is to be feared, however, that it has had an unfortunate effect in New York, for it was followed promptly by the announcement that no operas in German would be given at the Metropolitan this season. This came as a surprize, for the management had retained all of the German singers except Gadski and Goritz, and announced the usual Wagner repertory. The whole thing was thrashed out last spring, when all the New York daily newspapers had editorials approving of Mr. Gatti-Casazza's policy, on the ground that there was no connection between opera and the Prussian militarism we are bent on exterminating. Why, then, this sudden change of face?

IT is no secret that among the influential directors of the Metropolitan there are some who have never wanted German opera at that house for the simple reason that it bores them. They have reluctantly submitted to its sway because, even with Caruso and Farrar, opera cannot be made to pay without Wagner, whose operas always receive more performances than those of any Italian or French composer. These directors, it is surmised, saw their chance and by a flank movement, overthrew the repertory at a critical moment. The reason advanced—that our tolerance of opera in German would make the Teutons think we were divided in sentiment—is absurd. We shall simply be accused of chauvinism and narrow-mindedness. The Germans themselves have not banished French or Italian opera; in Frankfort, for instance, "Aïda" and "Rigoletto" were sung last month. In Paris, it is true, the name of the Rue Richard Wagner has been changed to that of a French composer, Alberic Magnard, a victim of the war. But in London the Wagner nights at the Promenade Concerts are as popular as ever and Wagner operas have been produced in several English cities since the war began.

It is particularly stupid to banish the operas of Wagner, because he himself was as anti-Prussian as a French general. Were he alive he would be a leader of the revolution which is bound to come; he was exiled eleven years for taking part in one revolution; and to Mathilde Wesendonck he wrote in April, 1859:

"It is interesting that, upon an outbreak between Germany and France, I should be seeking refuge in the enemy's country. I am much afraid of losing all my patriotism, and being secretly delighted if the Germans receive another sound thrashing. Bonapartism is an acute, a passing ailment for the world—but German-Austrian reactionism a chronic, an abiding one."

New York City

---

m STAATSZEITUNG

ress: New York City.

e NOV 27 1917

Auch für Dr. Muck verschlossen.

Konzert des Boston Symphonie Orchesters soll verhindert werden.

(Associated Preß)

Springfield, Mass., 26. November. Die gleichen Einflüsse, welche kürzlich die Benützung des munizipalen Auditoriums für das Konzert von Fritz Kreisler, des österreichischen Geigers, hintertrieben, sind wieder am Werk.

Das Gebäude soll auch dem Boston Symphonie Orchester verschlossen bleiben, weil dasselbe von Dr. Karl Muck, einem feindlichen Ausländer, dirigiert wird. Verschiedene Mitglieder des Stadtrats sollen zu Gunsten dieses Planes sein.

n Volkszeitung

ress: New York City.

e NOV 27 1917

Opposition gegen Dr. Muck.

Springfield, Mass., 26. Nov. Dieselben Einflüsse, welche kürzlich die Benutzung des Rathaussaales dem österreichischen Violinisten Fritz Kreisler verweigerten, sind, wie man heute erfuhr, aktiv, das Gebäude dem Boston Symphonie-Orchester zu verschließen und der Begründung, daß dessen Dirigent, Dr. Karl Muck, ein feindlicher Ausländer sei. Einige Mitglieder des Stadteigentum-Komitees, welches die Benutzung aller städtischen Gebäude kontrolliert, begünstigten diesen Kurs.

n NEW YORKER

ress: New York City. HERALD

e NOV 30 1917

Reichsdeutsche Musiker nicht in Washington.

Washington, 29. Nov. Die Bostoner Symphonie-Gesellschaft wird das für den 4. Dezember hier angesetzte Konzert nicht geben können, außer wenn sie 22 Reichsdeutsche entläßt. Eine Anfrage beim Generalanwalt hat ergeben, daß unter keinen Umständen feindlichen Ausländern erlaubt werden wird, in den Distrikt Columbia zu kommen, auch nicht Musikern.

NEW YORKER Journal

ss: New York City.

NOV 29 1917

Symphonie-Musiker als feindliche Ausländer.

Konzert des Bostoner Orchesters in Washington nicht gestattet.

Washington, 28. Nov. — Wenn das Boston Symphonie-Orchester nicht 22 deutsche Untertanen entläßt, kann es sein Engagement am 4. Dezember, ein Konzert in Washington zu geben, nicht halten. Major Henry L. Higginson schrieb an General-Anwalt Gregory und bat ihn um Erlaubnis für 22 feindliche Ausländer, den Distrikt Columbia betreten zu dürfen. Eine diesbezügliche Erklärung besagt:

„Der General-Anwalt schrieb heute an Major Higginson, daß infolge der Strenge der Regulierungen, die in der vom Präsidenten am 17. November erlassenen Proklamation enthalten sind, Mitglieder des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, die feindliche Ausländer seien, die Erlaubnis, den Distrikt Columbia betreten zu dürfen, nicht erhalten können. Der General-Anwalt stellt fest, daß diese Regel auf alle anderen musikalischen und theatralischen Körperschaften, die in Washington auftreten, Anwendung findet."

EVENING SUN

ess: New York City

For Boston Subscribers.

The second pair of Boston Symphony concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on Friday evening, December 7, and Saturday afternoon, December 8. The attention of the subscribers to the Boston concerts is particularly called to the fact that the evening concert comes on Friday instead of the usual Thursday. The programme for Friday evening comprises Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, No. 2, and three pieces from Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," overture, nocturne and scherzo.

For Saturday afternoon there will be no symphony, the programme comprising MacDowell's second suite in E minor, "Indian," Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "The Sea" and Beethoven's overture, "Leonore," No. 3.

TELEGRAM

ess: New York City.

NOV 28 1917

CHANGE OF HEART.

That the all-German programme with which the Boston Symphony Orchestra started its season has been relegated to the top shelf in the cupboard will be matter of congratulation to very many persons.

The coming programmes comprise a Russian symphony by Rachmaninoff, three pieces from Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," a MacDowell suite, Debussy's symphonic sketches and a Beethoven overture.

Some one, either Dr. Carl Muck or Major Higginson, has experienced a change of heart evidently. Perhaps both have.

In any event it is well that the temper of the people has been recognized. There is a disposition to resent having things made in Germany forced on the community.

Volkszeitung

s: New York City.

NOV 29 1917

Keine deutschen Musiker für Washington.

True translation filed with the postmaster at New York on Nov. 29, 1917, as required by the act of Oct. 6, 1917.

Washington, 28. Nov. Um die Erlaubnis für Abhaltung eines Konzertes zu erhalten, das hier für den 4. Dezember anberaumt ist, muß das Boston Symphonie-Orchester 22 seiner Musiker fallen lassen, da dieselben Deutsche sind. Dies war die heute erfolgte Antwort der Regierung auf das Gesuch von Major Henry L. Higginson, um Erlaubnis für die 22 Deutschen, den Distrikt von Columbia betreten zu dürfen.

Eine offizielle Ankündigung erklärte, daß die Deutschen den Bundes-Distrikt unter den Bestimmungen der Proklamation des Präsidenten Wilson, vom 17. Oktober, betreffs Bewegung feindlicher Ausländer, nicht betreten dürfen.

LIFE

Brooklyn, N. Y.

NOV 1 1917

Unsoothing to the Savage Breast.

THERE are two distinct aspects of the comparatively trifling controversy which has been going on over the German musicians we are unfortunate enough to have with us. One is practical and the other is emotional, or sentimental. It is a practical question whether it is conducive to a successful prosecution of the war to have enemy aliens going freely about the country in any capacity. It is a purely personal question and one of sentiment alone how one feels about attending their concerts, or listening to the music of their countrymen. So far as we—meaning of course the editor of this paper—are concerned we would, for prudential reasons, fain see the country entirely rid of all enemy aliens and renegade Americans, while our repugnance for all things German is such that even the greatest German music, if played by an accomplished and thoroughgoing American musician, would no longer give us pleasure. So far as the "Star-Spangled Banner" is concerned, the only satisfaction it could give us to hear it played under the direction of a German, or pro-German conductor, would be in reflecting upon the pain he was enduring and our pleasure would be greatly heightened if, instead of being compelled to play our national anthem, he were required to trample on the German flag or recite "Me und Gott" as a preliminary formality. No lesser attraction would tempt us to attend, for personal gratification, a Boston symphony orchestra concert while Mr. Muck or any other German wielded the baton. At that we have nothing against Mr. Muck personally. Indeed he seems to have conducted himself as well as his orchestra, with an eminent degree of discretion and propriety and to be wholly innocuous, though you never can tell, especially in the case of a German. Now, of course, this feeling of repugnance toward anything German is purely a personal matter and implies no criticism whatever of those who can still find enjoyment in German music, literature or art. But we have been charged by such persons with being narrowminded. Nothing of the kind; such feelings have nothing to do with the mind and consequently cannot be narrowminded. They belong wholly in the realm of the emotions. Were we now to say disparaging things about German achievements in music or any other field, such as we would not have said four years ago that indeed would be indicative of narrowmindedness; but we do not. We have as high an opinion of the genius of Beethoven, Mozart, Bach, Wagner and the rest as we ever did and we could enjoy their compositions just as much, if by some camouflage they could be so disguised that we did not recognize their German origin, and so could again fall under the spell of their intrinsic power. Unfortunately knowing them to be German, they set up a disagreeable train of thought which leaves us cold where once we were stirred by them. Every one doubtless is not so susceptible to associations of ideas. Some persons plume themselves on their ability to entirely disassociate a work from its author, yet we doubt if any one could listen to lofty and beautiful sentiments uttered by a notoriously base and immoral man with quite the same appreciation of their beauty and truth that would be felt if they came from the lips, or the pen, of a man whose sincerity was unquestionable. The case of the German composers is not analogous to this so far as it applies to the conflict of ideas. Music makes its appeal almost exclusively to the emotions and the imagination unless one is a student of theory or technique, and it is not the fault but the misfortune of German composers and musicians if the emotions they now arouse in American audiences are inextricably mingled with those which the mere name of an outlawed and detested nation inspires.

DEC. 3, 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS TO BE GIVEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, will give its concerts in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Thursday night and in New York on Friday night and Saturday afternoon, arrangements having been made by C. A. Ellis, the manager of the organization, for the full membership to make the trip. The members leave for New York tonight.

It is expected that the orchestra will give its concerts in Boston the rest of the season as originally planned, with Dr. Muck and all the players taking part. It is also understood that the concerts in Brooklyn and New York and those in Worcester, Mass., and other New England cities will be given, according to schedule.

Hartford Cancels Orchestra Dates

HARTFORD, Conn.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was booked to appear here, with Karl Muck conducting, in February and April, is not to give the concerts, the dates having been canceled by mutual agreement, it is said, between the manager of the organization and the concert committee.

ADVERTISER
DEC. 3, 1917

The sale of subscription tickets for the three choral concerts which will be given by the Symphony Orchestra and the newly organized Symphony chorus has been in progress at Symphony Hall for several days with gratifying results. As already announced, the three works to be given are the Ninth, or Choral, Symphony of Beethoven on Tuesday, Nov. 20; Mahler's Second Symphony, Tuesday evening, Jan. 22, and the St. Matthew Passion of Bach on Tuesday, March 26.

From HERALD
Address: New York City
Date DEC 1 19

ASKS THAT DR. MUCK BE INTERNED.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—Acting for the American Defence Society, which has its headquarters in New York, Edward N. Dingley, its representative here, has written a letter to Thomas J. Boynton, United States Attorney, demanding that the Boston Symphony Orchestra be prevented from giving any more concerts in the United States and that its German leader, Dr. Karl Muck, be interned.

n HERALD
ress: New York City
DEC 2 191

Alien Law Bars Boston Symphony from Travelling

Concerts Cancelled and Orchestra May Disband—Action May Be Taken Against Dr. Muck.

BOSTON, Mass., Saturday.—Because of the new Department of Justice regulations which prohibit alien enemies from leaving the States in which they are located, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has cancelled concerts to have been given next week at Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, and Dr. Karl Muck, the orchestra's German leader, will have to remain within the limits of Massachusetts. Of the 101 players of the orchestra twenty-three are affected by the new regulations.

It is believed that within a few days Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the organization, will announce it has been disbanded until after the war. Department of Justice agents and representatives of the American Defence Society are said to be in possession of information which will result soon in action against Dr. Muck.

Concerts to have been given at Philadelphia on Monday, at Washington on Tuesday and Baltimore Wednesday have been cancelled. Ticket money will be refunded.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date DEC 2 - 1917

A New Ban on the Alien

An interesting reaction to the Dr. Muck episode occurred recently in the town of Frederick, Md. A special dispatch to "The Baltimore American" contained the news that "representative men and women of Frederick County," pledging themselves to "put forth every reasonable effort to stamp out pro-Germanism," adopted, at a great patriotic mass meeting, a resolution "in which they call upon the government of the United States to forbid the public singing or playing of the national anthem except by American citizens and those who are loyal to our government."

EVENING STAR
ess: Washington, D. C.
NOV 26 19

An Austrian Violin Silenced.

Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, has canceled his concert tour in this country because he feels that it is incompatible with his honor and self-respect to continue to accept money from the people of a country in which feeling runs as high as at present against Austria, his native land. This is an act of good taste. It is a recognition of a state of popular feeling that was brought to a point of strong expression recently in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the score of the alleged refusal of its conductor to render the national anthem at a concert. Although as an Austrian Kreisler is not now rated as an alien enemy, owing to the fact that the United States has not declared that a state of war exists with Austria, several western cities have specifically barred him from giving recitals. There is, of course, no difference in fact between an Austrian and a German as regards American feeling. The United States will probably soon put the two nationalities on precisely the same plane by a declaration recognizing Austria as an enemy, and thus the violinist's cancellation of his tour may actually be in anticipation of a necessity. However this may be, and whatever Kreisler has been doing with the money received from his concert tour, it cannot be gainsaid that continued appearances before American audiences while American soldiers are aligning for war against an enemy force of which Austria forms a distinct component part could not fail to violate the proprieties, however pleasing the performances may be to the artistic ear. Deprivation of enjoyment of the music of Teutonic artists is one of the least of the burdens of war.

m SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.
e NOV 27 1917

KREISLER.

Whether Kreisler sympathizes with his own country or not, very few Americans can help sympathizing with him. If the Austrian Army and the Austrian Government were made up of Kreislers, it would be hard to quarrel with them, or, at all events, the quarrel could be conducted with decency and chivalry. The difference between him and Dr. Muck is the difference between a self-respecting and generous-minded man and one who has to be kicked out of the house in which he is an unwelcome guest. Whatever his origin, Kreisler is evidently one whom his art has ennobled and who has a dignity and delicacy of mind that are characteristics of the true gentleman everywhere.

We hope when the war is over he will become a legalized American. Nature seems to have given him the moral qualities that belong to Americans of the highest type—manliness, honor and courage—and we should be glad to "annex" him as one of the finest "indemnities" Austria could pay us for the war.

STAATSZEITUNG
ss: New York City.
NOV 29 1917

Deutsche Musiker von Washington verbannt.

Generalanwalt weigert sich, bei Mitglieder des Boston-Orchesters eine Ausnahme zu machen.

(Associated Press.)

Washington, 28. November. Musikalische Verbände und Theater-Truppen, welche während des Krieges in Washington auftreten wollen, dürfen ihre Mitglieder nicht mitbringen, wenn diese feindliche Ausländer sind. Generalanwalt Gregory weigerte sich heute, die in des Präsidenten Proklamation enthaltene Bestimmung, daß keine feindlichen Ausländer im Distrikt Columbia sich aufhalten dürfen, zugunsten von zwanzig Mitgliedern des Boston Symphonie Orchesters zu mildern und betonte, daß in allen ähnlichen Fällen dasselbe Verfahren eingeschlagen werden würde.

m TELEGRAM
ress: New York City.
DEC 1 - 191

Right Again.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—I would suggest for to-day's "Best" Dr. Muck changing his programme from a German to a Russian symphony. Whaddya mean "symphony"? No. That 100 to 1 shot was not Dr. Muck. It was Muckross. M. L.
Bayshore, November 2, 1917.

pen NEWS
ldress: Baltimore, Md.
te DEC 3 - 191

ling Here And In Washington Closes Cities To Orchestra.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was not allowed recently to bring his orchestra to Baltimore after refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence, now is officially barred from the city by the new alien enemy ruling. United States Marshal Stockham said last night that he and all the alien members of his orchestra were barred from Washington as well as Baltimore.

Marshal Stockham referred to the statement of Attorney General Gregory, who said that Dr. Muck and all the Germans in his orchestra would subject themselves to arrest if they go to Washington. "If that German or any of his countrymen in that orchestra should try to come to Baltimore I will arrest them the minute they get in the city," said the Marshal.

LIFE

Brooklyn, N Y

Unsoothing to the Savage Breast.

THERE are two distinct aspects of the comparatively trifling controversy which has been going on over the German musicians we are unfortunate enough to have with us. One is practical and the other is emotional, or sentimental. It is a practical question whether it is conducive to a successful prosecution of the war to have enemy aliens going freely about the country in any capacity. It is a purely personal question and one of sentiment alone how one feels about attending their concerts, or listening to the music of their countrymen. So far as we—meaning of course the editor of this paper—are concerned we would, for prudential reasons, fain see the country entirely rid of all enemy aliens and renegade Americans, while our repugnance for all things German is such that even the greatest German music, if played by an accomplished and thoroughgoing American musician, would no longer give us pleasure. So far as the "Star-Spangled Banner" is concerned, the only satisfaction it could give us to hear it played under the direction of a German, or pro-German conductor, would be in reflecting upon the pain he was enduring and our pleasure would be greatly heightened if instead of being compelled to play our national anthem, he were required to trample on the German flag or recite "Me und Gott" as a preliminary formality. No lesser attraction would tempt us to attend, for personal gratification, a Boston symphony orchestra concert while Mr. Muck or any other German wielded the baton. At that we have nothing against Mr. Muck personally. Indeed he seems to have conducted himself as well as his orchestra, with an eminent degree of discretion and propriety and to be wholly innocuous, though you never can tell, especially in the case of a German. Now, of course, this feeling of repugnance toward anything German is purely a personal matter and implies no criticism whatever of those who can still find enjoyment in German music, literature or art. But we have been charged by such persons with being narrowminded. Nothing of the kind; such feelings have nothing to do with the mind and consequently cannot be narrowminded. They belong wholly in the realm of the emotions. Were we now to say disparaging things about German achievements in music or any other field such as we would not have said four years ago that indeed would be indicative of narrowmindedness; but we do not. We have as high an opinion of the genius of Beethoven, Mozart, Bach, Wagner and the rest as we ever did and we could enjoy their compositions just as much, if by some camouflage they could be so disguised that we did not recognize their German origin, and so could again fall under the spell of their intrinsic power. Unfortunately knowing them to be German, they set up a disagreeable train of thought which leaves us cold where once we were stirred by them. Every one doubtless is not so susceptible to associations of ideas. Some persons plume themselves on their ability to entirely dissociate a work from its author, yet we doubt if any one could listen to lofty and beautiful sentiments uttered by a notoriously base and immoral man with quite the same appreciation of their beauty and truth that would be felt if they came from the lips, or the pen, of a man whose sincerity was unquestionable. The case of the German composers is not analogous to this so far as it applies to the conflict of ideas. Music makes its appeal almost exclusively to the emotions and the imagination unless one is a student of theory or technique, and it is not the fault but the misfortune of German composers and musicians if the emotions they now arouse in American audiences are inextricably mingled with those which the mere name of an outlawed and detested nation inspires.

EVENING STAR

ress: Washington, D. C.

An Austrian Violin Silenced.

Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, has canceled his concert tour in this country because he feels that it is incompatible with his honor and self-respect to continue to accept money from the people of a country in which feeling runs as high as at present against Austria, his native land. This is an act of good taste. It is a recognition of a state of popular feeling that was brought to a point of strong expression recently in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the score of the alleged refusal of its conductor to render the national anthem at a concert. Although as an Austrian Kreisler is not now rated as an alien enemy, owing to the fact that the United States has not declared that a state of war exists with Austria, several western cities have specifically barred him from giving recitals. There is, of course, no difference in fact between an Austrian and a German as regards American feeling. The United States will probably soon put the two nationalities on precisely the same plane by a declaration recognizing Austria as an enemy, and thus the violinist's cancellation of his tour may actually be in anticipation of a necessity. However this may be, and whatever Kreisler has been doing with the money received from his concert tour, it cannot be gainsaid that continued appearances before American audiences while American soldiers are aligning for war against an enemy force of which Austria forms a distinct component part could not fail to violate the proprieties, however pleasing the performances may be to the artistic ear. Deprivation of enjoyment of the music of Teutonic artists is one of the least of the burdens of war.

Dec. 3, Monitor

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS TO BE GIVEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, will give its concerts in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Thursday night and in New York on Friday night and Saturday afternoon, arrangements having been made by C. A. Ellis, the manager of the organization, for the full membership to make the trip. The members leave for New York tonight.

It is expected that the orchestra will give its concerts in Boston the rest of the season as originally planned, with Dr. Muck and all the players taking part. It is also understood that the concerts in Brooklyn and New York and those in Worcester, Mass., and other New England cities will be given, according to schedule.

Hartford Cancels Orchestra Dates

HARTFORD, Conn.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was booked to appear here, with Karl Muck conducting, in February and April, is not to give the concerts, the dates having been canceled by mutual agreement, it is said, between the manager of the organization and the concert committee.

ADVERTISER
DEC. 3, 1917

The sale of subscription tickets for the three choral concerts which will be given by the Symphony Orchestra and the newly organized Symphony chorus has been in progress at Symphony Hall for several days with gratifying results. As already announced, the three works to be given are the Ninth, or Choral, Symphony of Beethoven on Tuesday, Nov. 20; Mahler's Second Symphony, Tuesday evening, Jan. 22, and the St. Matthew Passion of Bach on Tuesday, March 26.

From HERALD

Address: New York City

Date DEC 1 19

ASKS THAT DR. MUCK BE INTERNED.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—Acting for the American Defence Society, which has its headquarters in New York, Edward N. Dingley, its representative here, has written a letter to Thomas J. Boynton, United States Attorney, demanding that the Boston Symphony Orchestra be prevented from giving any more concerts in the United States and that its German leader, Dr. Karl Muck, he interned.

m SUN

ress: Baltimore, Md.

e 7 1917

KREISLER.

Whether Kreisler sympathizes with his own country or not, very few Americans can help sympathizing with him. If the Austrian Army and the Austrian Government were made up of Kreislers, it would be hard to quarrel with them, or, at all events, the quarrel could be conducted with decency and chivalry. The difference between him and Dr. Muck is the difference between a self-respecting and generous-minded man and one who has to be kicked out of the house in which he is an unwelcome guest. Whatever his origin, Kreisler is evidently one whom his art has ennobled and who has a dignity and delicacy of mind that are characteristics of the true gentleman everywhere.

We hope when the war is over he will become a legalized American. Nature seems to have given him the moral qualities that belong to Americans of the highest type — manliness, honor and courage—and we should be glad to "annex" him as one of the finest "indemnities" Austria could pay us for the war.

n HERALD

ress: New York City

DEC 2 191

Alien Law Bars Boston Symphony from Travelling

Concerts Cancelled and Orchestra May Disband—Action May Be Taken Against Dr. Muck.

BOSTON, Mass., Saturday.—Because of the new Department of Justice regulations which prohibit alien enemies from leaving the States in which they are located, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has cancelled concerts to have been given next week at Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, and Dr. Karl Muck, the orchestra's German leader, will have to remain within the limits of Massachusetts. Of the 101 players of the orchestra twenty-three are affected by the new regulations.

It is believed that within a few days Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the organization, will announce it has been disbanded until after the war. Department of Justice agents and representatives of the American Defence Society are said to be in possession of information which will result soon in action against Dr. Muck.

Concerts to have been given at Philadelphia on Monday, at Washington on Tuesday and Baltimore Wednesday have been cancelled. Ticket money will be refunded.

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Date

A New Ban on the Alien

An interesting reaction to the Dr. Muck episode occurred recently in the town of Frederick, Md. A special dispatch to "The Baltimore American" contained the news that "representative men and women of Frederick County," pledging themselves to "put forth every reasonable effort to stamp out pro-Germanism," adopted, at a great patriotic mass meeting, a resolution "in which they call upon the government of the United States to forbid the public singing or playing of the national anthem except by American citizens and those who are loyal to our government."

STAATSZEITUNG

ss: New York City.

NOV 29 1917

Deutsche Muſiker von Waſhington verbannt.

Generalanwalt weigert ſich, bei Mitglieder des Boſton-Orcheſters eine Ausnahme zu machen.

(Aſſociated Preß.)

Waſhington, 28. November. Muſikaliſche Verbände und Theater-Truppen, welche während des Krieges in Waſhington auftreten wollen, dürfen ihre Mitglieder nicht mitbringen, wenn dieſe feindliche Ausländer ſind. Generalanwalt Gregory weigerte ſich heute, die in des Präſidenten Proklamation enthaltene Beſtimmung, daß keine feindlichen Ausländer im Diſtrikt Columbia ſich aufhalten dürfen, zugunſten von zwanzig Mitgliedern des Boſton Symphonie Orcheſters zu mildern und betonte, daß in allen ähnlichen Fällen dasſelbe Verfahren eingeſchlagen werden würde.

m TELEGRAM

iress: New York City.

te DEC 1 - 191

Right Again.

To the Editor of the Evening Telegram:—I would suggest for to-day's "Best" Dr. Muck changing his programme from a German to a Russian symphony. Whaddya mean "symphony"? No. That 100 to 1 shot was not Dr. Muck. It was Muckross. M. L.
Bayshore, November 28, 191

NEWS

ldress: Baltimore, Md.

te DEC

ling Here And In Washington Closes Cities To Orchestra.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was not allowed recently to bring his orchestra to Baltimore after refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence, now is officially barred from the city by the new alien enemy ruling. United States Marshal Stockham said last night that he and all the alien members of his orchestra were barred from Washington as well as Baltimore.

Marshal Stockham referred to the statement of Attorney General Gregory, who said that Dr. Muck and all the Germans in his orchestra would subject themselves to arrest if they go to Washington. "If that German or any of his countrymen in that orchestra should try to come to Baltimore I will arrest them the minute they get in the city," said the Marshal.

om MORNING TELEGRAPH

dress: New York City

DEC 5 - 1917

RULING ON ALIENS CANCELS CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra Unable to Enter Washington Zone During the War.

22 GERMANS ARE MEMBERS

Washington Bureau.
The Morning Telegraph.
Washington, D. C., Dec. 4.

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the New National Theatre to-day was cancelled on account of the ruling of the Attorney General that alien enemies cannot enter the United States Capital during the war.

There are twenty-two alien enemies in the orchestra and as their elimination would have marred the work of the orchestra the whole thing was called off. Before the Attorney General made his ruling under the President's proclamation the orchestra gave one concert here. At that concert it was necessary for Dr. Muck to have his orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" in response to the demand that it be rendered as an overture to the concert.

As a result of the Government's decision Manager C. A. Ellis, in charge of the concert, had to insert the following advertisement in Washington newspapers to take care of those who had bought admission tickets:

"The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for this afternoon at the National Theatre. It will therefore not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert only will be refunded at Mrs. Greene's office in Droops, Thirteenth and G.

"The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holidays, definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon."

rom TIMES

ddress: New York City

ate

Muck Cancels Washington Concert.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra canceled its engagemen to give a concert in Washington this afternoon. An advertisement in local newspapers told purchasers of tickets that their money would be re urned. The cancellation was due to the fact that the leader of the orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, and some of its members were German subjects who, under the recent proclamation of the President concerning enemy aliens, are forbidden to erter the District of Columbia.

NEWS

Baltimore, Md.

MUCK CONCERT CANCELLED

Boston Symphony Will Not Send The Orchestra To Baltimore.

Manager Wilbur Kinsey of the Lyric Theater has received word from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that the concert the organization was scheduled to give next Wednesday night has been canceled.

This action was expected, as it is

n BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

The National Anthem

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: The writer agrees with R. P., that there seems to be a lot of ink and paper wasted on Dr. Muck. If what R. P. says is true about you "Hot Air Patriots" hutting your brains out to escape the draft, I don't blame him for getting peeved. (By the way, I wonder what regiment R. P. enlisted in.) He says you "Hot Airs" won't show a foreigner how to be patriotic. So why not let him tell it, and if he can't fill Dr. Muck chuck full of patriotism, then it is up to him to take his old ukulele and beat it back to Berlin, where he will, in the near future, hear the "Star Spangled Banner" played by a band who are not "Hot Air Americans" and are being led by bandmaster John J. Pershing, who will shortly start on a tour of the principal cities of Germany, giving concerts for the benefit of Democracy and Belgium. Hark! for down the Rhine there comes the blare of bugles and the rattle of drums. A flash of color beneath the skies. Hats off, "Kaiser," the "Star Spangled Banner" is passing by.

YANKEE.

om EVENING SUN

dress: Baltimore, Md.

e

Here's A Nice Tribute To "J. O. L." And The Evening Sun From New York.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN:

Sir—I am not a Baltimorean, as my residence is in New York city, but my business requires me to spend several days of each week in your city.

While in your city several weeks ago I was fortunate in being present at the Lyric Theatre when the Philadelphia Orchestra gave an exquisite performance.

It is a rare treat to hear this organization, and I do not honestly feel the public will suffer by the nonappearance of the Boston Symphony when they can hear such wonderful music as was performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

My family are especially fond of THE EVENING SUN, which is sent me regularly, principally because of the "J. O. L." criticisms and writings. I wish we had such an able writer among our critics here.

L. E. H.

New York, Nov. 24.

om EVENING SUN

dress: Baltimore, Md.

te

Boston Symphony Concert Canceled

Manager Kinsey Notified That Orchestra Will Not Appear Next Wednesday.

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which was scheduled to take place next Wednesday evening at the Lyric has been called off. William Kinsey, manager of the theatre, received a letter today from the manager of the orchestra in which he was told that the orchestra would not use the theatre next Wednesday evening.

Nothing was said in the letter about canceling the other concerts which the orchestra is scheduled to give in this city later in the season. Because of uncertainty about the concert scheduled for next week Mr. Kinsey had not offered for sale single tickets for the concert, so the only money to be refunded is on account of season tickets.

The first concert was called off after the Police Board said it would not allow the orchestra to play in Baltimore at that time because of the refusal of Dr. Carl Muck, the leader of the orchestra, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The members of the board said they were afraid that trouble would result if Dr. Muck appeared in this city.

crease in the antagonistic sentiment created here by the refusal to include "The Star-Spangled Banner" in the orchestra's concert program at Providence several weeks ago.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony, has been notified that it would be unwise for Dr. Muck to come to Baltimore.

From EVENING GLOBE

Address: New York City

3 - 191

Date

A SUCCESSOR FOR MUCK.

Philip Hale, the court of last appeal for music in Boston, commenting in the New Music Review on rumors that the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be disbanded at the end of the season, or even earlier, goes straight to the root of the matter in this fashion: "A conductor, no matter how able he may be, should not be counted greater than an orchestra like that in Boston. If for years to come a German conductor will be persona non grata, are there no Frenchmen, Russians, Italians who could continue the triumphal course of this orchestra? Possibly an American might be caught."

In admiration for Dr. Muck as an orchestral leader The Globe yields to none, but it must recognize the fact that he may be eliminated from the musical life of our country. It would be a calamity indeed if an orchestra which has maintained supremacy under several conductors, notably Nikisch, Gericke, and Dr. Muck, should perish in case the last-named should be interned or deported. Mr. Hale's question hits the centre of the bull's eye.

An available American conductor of the calibre to head the Boston Symphony Orchestra is probably at present out of the question. But how about the Italian Toscanini, the Frenchman Monteux, the Dutchman Mengelberg, the Englishman Henry Wood? The tributes of the press of New York after Mr. Toscanini conducted here a concert programme consisting of Wagner's "A Faust Overture," Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, ought to convey at least the suggestion to Bostonians that in the greatest conductor of opera the world has known they might find the genius who would lead their symphony orchestra to new glories. Mr. Monteux proved himself in the Civic concerts here last summer a conductor of fastidious musicianship, fine imagination, and commanding power. If in music by Debussy, Dukas, and d'Indy he was a revelation, he proved himself as much at home as any German in Bach, Beethoven, and Wagner. Willem Mengelberg, conductor of the famous Amsterdam Concertgebouw, some time before the war had taken his place in Europe among the most sought after "prime donne of the baton" along with Weingartner and Nikisch. As for Sir Henry Wood, the fact that he is English has obscured the fact that real musicians place him in the first rank of European conductors.

Here are four men Boston might well consider if it turns out that Dr. Muck must go. Each is competent to head the premier orchestra of the world, and the engagement of one of them would stop then and there any busy little intrigue to turn the discomfiture of Dr. Muck into a practical joke on the American public. To depose the illustrious doctor because he is enemy and then replace him with a non-German who is notoriously as hostile to the common cause of the Allies would be the sorriest sort of trick for art and our long-suffering country to endure. Stupid, gullible, hypocritical, and generally contemptible we should properly appear in the eyes of the enemy himself.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

Boston Symphony Barred By U. S. Official's Order

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is barred from Washington under a ruling issued by Attorney General Gregory yesterday, based on the President's recent proclamation forbidding alien enemies to reside or come within the limits of the District of Columbia. Twenty-two of the members of the orchestra are alien enemies.

The Attorney General's ruling was handed down in response to a request from Maj. Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, that he be advised what action was necessary to secure permits for the twenty-two members of the symphony orchestra scheduled to give a concert in Washington, December 4, to enter the city.

In his announcement, Attorney General Gregory, added that the same ruling applies to all other musical and theatrical organizations scheduled to appear in Washington. Many noted concert singers and violinists will be barred under the rule.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was scheduled to play at the New National Theater next Tuesday. Those interested in the concert had in no way anticipated official cancellation of the orchestra's appearance and were consequently considerably disappointed last night when they were told of the Attorney General's ruling. Concert lovers in the National Capital, while considering themselves not one whit less patriotic than any other class of citizens here, it was indicated last night, are agreed that this new ruling will abolish many of this season's best offerings.

1.80

STAATSZEITUNG
s: New York City.
DEC 4 - 1917

Das variierte Thema.

Die Nationalhymne, wie sie die Bostoner spielen.

Die Bostoner spielen zur Eröffnung jedes ihrer Konzerte das Star Spangled Banner.

Und Dr. Karl Muck dirigiert. Die Bostoner haben sich nie geweigert, die Nationalhymne zu spielen; sie haben sich nicht geweigert, weil es niemand von ihnen verlangt hat. Als einige Damen die Forderung stellten, wurde sie ohne weiteres als etwas selbstverständliches erfüllt.

Natürlich sah man der zu einem Ereignis, um nicht zu sagen „Sensation", aufgebauschten Handlung mit größtem Interesse entgegen. Es verlief alles in bester Ordnung und Ruhe; nur etliche Nörgler fühlten sich veranlaßt, Kritik zu üben. Sie rügten und bekrittelten die Form der Nationalhymne; sie tadelten die überreiche Instrumentierung und die Verzierungen der Hymne — aber es blieb dabei: die Bostoner spielen die Nationalhymne in jedem Konzert in der von ihnen gewählten Form.

Auch etliche Musikkritiker gefielen sich im Tadel. Da sind — sagten die hochgelehrten Herren — zuviele Schnörkel; die Läufe der Violinen erinnern zu sehr an die Tannhäuser Ouvertüre; die Figuren im Baß haben eine auffallende Aehnlichkeit mit dem Meistersinger Vorspiel. Ueberhaupt klingt die amerikanische Hymne zu Weberisch Jubelouvertürenhaft und zu Wagnerisch Kaisermarschlich. In dieser Weise ging es weiter.

Und während die gelehrten Herren sich nörgelnd gütlich taten, saßen zwei Herren — der eine in Boston, der andere in New York — in ihrem Studierzimmer und lachten, lachten, bis ihnen die Thränen in den Augen standen. Der eine in Boston war natürlich der Dr. Karl Muck. Der andere in New York war . . . . . der Komponist dieser Nationalhymne.

Was, der alte Schotte Samuel Arnold? Der lebt doch längst nicht . . . . . Aber keine Ahnung! Es ist doch die Rede vom Star-Spangled Banner in dieser reich instrumentierten Form. Und die stammt von — Victor Herbert.

Muck spielt die majestätische, gewaltig wirkende Coda der amerikanischen Phantasie von Victor Herbert . . . . . und das hat natürlich keiner der Gelehrten entdeckt. Sie haben Muck verdächtigen wollen, daß er die Hymne camoufliert habe, daß er sie verwagnert und verwebert habe, und haben sich der wahrlich nicht so selten gespielten Herbert'schen Bearbeitung nicht erinnert. Zugegeben, die Herbert'sche Instrumentierung ist stark wagnerisch — welcher moderne Komponist kann sich dem Einfluß des Bayreuter Meisters entziehen? Die Violinen tannhäusern und die Baßgeigen meistersingern, trotzdem ist und bleibt es das Star Spangled Banner. Victor Herbert, der im Orchestrieren weit über allen andern amerikanischen Komponisten steht, hat der Nationalhymne in seiner Ausgestaltung eine Majestät verliehen, eine machtvolle Größe, die ihr sehr zu statten kommt, und gerade darum wird Muck, der feinfühlige Musiker, sie in dieser Form für seine Konzerte gewählt haben.

n TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
DEC 4 1917

Say Dr. Muck Will Come.

No Advices of Cancellation of Boston Symphony Concert Received at Institute.

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, will be given as per schedule, Thursday evening, at the Academy of Music. This was the statement made today by Director Atkins' secretary, notwithstanding the report that concerts by the orchestra in Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore have been cancelled. The cancellations were caused by the Department of Justice regulations, which prohibit alien enemies from leaving the States in which they are located.

At the office of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the concert here is scheduled to be given, it was stated that no advice had been received to the contrary, and that the necessary music had already been received from Boston.

"If the concert was to be cancelled, we should have received word before this time," it was said. "Therefore, there is every reason to believe the performance will take place."

It was reported last Saturday that Dr. Muck, the orchestra's German leader, and twenty-three of the 101 players, would have to remain within the limits of Massachusetts. It was also reported that Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the organization, might announce, "within a few days," that it has been disbanded until after the war.

SUN
New York City.
DEC 2 1917

By W. J. HENDERSON.

THE cancellation of the tour of Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, should be a source of regret to music lovers. Mr. Kreisler has comported himself with great discretion since the entry of this country into the world war. His art is of the highest type, and it would indeed be a pity if he were obliged to cease playing in New York. Up to the present writing the musical public has shown no hostility toward him, but on the contrary has appeared to desire by its attitude to convey to him expressions of its kindly feeling.

But it has been shown in no uncertain manner that this great artist is to suffer . . most places for the sins of the propagandists, who have transformed the mildest of music lovers into determined foes of all things Teutonic. The directors of the Metropolitan Opera House proved themselves to be farsighted business men when they resolved to omit operas in German from the present repertory of the house.

Meanwhile the concert platform reveals a considerable diversity of opinion among artists as to what they may or may not do. Some of them have discarded German songs entirely and are making their programmes from the works of French, Russian, Scandinavian and other masters. But it must be patent to every mind that if war considerations are to enter into the matter at all the problem has by no means been solved by the omission of German songs.

If Russia makes a separate peace with Germany will singers venture to invite patriotic Americans to listen to the lyrics of Moussorgsky and Rachmaninov? Will the advertised "Scriabin movement" have to move?

Thus far the singers who do sing the lieder of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and the rest have met with no opposition, but on the contrary have enjoyed some special demonstrations of pleasure. But it is inevitable that searching inquiry is going to be made into the origin of such demonstrations. If it should appear that they were made by Germans there is reason to fear that the lieder would have to be laid away till more propitious times.

The whole situation is fraught with disagreeable possibilities. We may be deprived even of the pleasure of hearing the symphonies of Beethoven and Brahms. Of course the hostility to German music seems lamentable to those who preserve the historical perspective.

What had the simple, devout soul of Sebastian Bach to do with such ideals as those of contemporaneous Germany? What message other than that of beauty was uttered by Haydn and Mozart, who, though Austrian, are assuredly to be classed with Teutonic masters? Even Wagner, who has been berated more than some of the others, was not a sympathizer with the first young sproutings of modern Prussianism. He was suspected of being a revolutionary and was forced to live for years beyond the borders of Germany.

But the situation which confronts music lovers acknowledges no relation to the past. And its existence is due to the activities of Germans in this country, with a certain amount of assistance from those persons conveniently and very significantly called German Americans.

The root of the matter was planted in the Metropolitan Opera House, where certain singers of German origin flaunted their opinions without hesitation and even went so far as to hold a joyous celebration of the sinking of the Lusitania. This is now an old story. These singers have been dropped from the Metropolitan list. What is still more satisfactory to every honest American is that they appear to be having a sorely hard time in getting anything else to do. The musical journals used to contain many accounts of their appearances in other cities in concert. None can be found in the same pages now.

These people are not now making any loud noise. They have subsided, except when they chance to be where the national anthem of this country is sung, when their voices boom above all others. This of course deceives the "bloedsinnige Yankees," to whom Capt. von Papen so courteously referred.

But since their operations last winter much has happened. The people of the United States, finding that a widespread, cunningly planned and vigorous scheme for defeating them at home before their troops could begin to fight abroad, was engineered by alien spies, Germans and even pro-German Americans, have shown a dangerous tendency to rise up and drive everything Teutonic into the sea of oblivion.

Discerning the slow but irresistible rising of this tide of feeling the writer of this department of THE SUN has recently conversed with a number of music lovers, who do not care to have their names appear in print nor to be directly quoted. The first statement made by one of them revealed the existence of even a social ostracism against certain musical artists of Teutonic birth. Invitations to houses where they were to be present have been flatly refused and the reason

Secondly a number of music lovers have said to this writer that they would not contribute one cent of their money to the support of any German musician. "They should all be deported," declared one of these men, whose catholicity of taste in art is beyond question.

In short there are evidences that since the latter part of last season the entire situation has changed. At that time there was apparently no question as to the acceptability of the offerings of Teutonic musicians or the enjoyment of Teutonic musical compositions.

At this writing there is incontestably a deep feeling about it in the hearts of a large number of American born people and it is impossible to foresee just how powerful the influence of this feeling may grow to be. But regrettable as it may be, there is ground for fear that sooner or later everything German in music will have to be temporarily retired and all the German interpreters or conductors permanently removed from the stage.

As to the fairness or justice of such a proceeding THE SUN'S musical recorder is not obliged to speak. It is most emphatically none of his business. But the indescribable folly of the supercilious Teutons who have fatuously fancied that they could batter down all American tendencies and add a vigorously pumped up enthusiasm for German music and musicians to the rest of the atrocious propaganda with which they have insanely supposed they could forever fool the American people is the real cause of the profound and stern enmity to Teutonic musical performers, which has so suddenly reached the boiling point.

It was not the blundering of the Boston Symphony Orchestra people that caused this hostility. It was there long before that glorious American city, whose indefatigable Journal did so much to expose the treacherous methods of the Germans, lifted up its voice in a demand that the former incumbent of a post in the Berlin opera should conduct the "Star Spangled Banner."

The explosion touched off by the Providence incident was of powder waiting for the touch of the match. Now the fire spreads. The situation is unfortunate in some of its aspects, for no lovers of music wish to be deprived of the pleasure of hearing such masters as Kreisler or of listening to the creations of perfectly innocent Germans long dead.

But on the other hand since there are altogether too many Americans who still need awakening to a realization of the tremendous meaning of the hour and too many Teutons who still believe that the nation is one monumental fool, let music lovers lay their precious aesthetic sensibilities away and bow to that expression of the popular will which seems now to be not far off.

n NORTH AMERICAN
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

German Music

TO THE EDITOR—Tho Doctor Muck, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bowed to the will of the American public and played the nation's hymn at the concert here Monday night, he did it with the air of one who is forced to perform an act much against his will. His program also contained numbers by German—yes, even Prussian composers. Now, it is all right to say that art is not national. It isn't. But just now, when, in spite of all the government's watchfulness, there are spies found daily in our midst, when men in high places are making seditious utterances, I believe it would be well to limit musical programs to selections by Americans and composers of the allied countries. Much of German music, in spite of its beauty, is hectic and inflamnatory. It is warlike and it is filled with pride of the German race and German deeds. It extols the glory of battle, the divine right of the conqueror. It has little of tenderness, nor does it stir emotions of tenderness or justice. We don't need German music while we are at war with Germany. A. J.
Philadelphia, Nov. 6.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

GABRILOWITSCH TALE GIVING

Pianist Says Position of Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Has Not Been Offered Him — Four Men Named as Possible Successors to German Conductor.

The presence in Philadelphia yesterday of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the New York pianist, who has been mentioned as a possible successor to Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stirred renewed gossip. Mr. Garbrilowitsch told "The Press" that there was no truth in a report which came from Boston that he was to succeed Dr. Muck.

"I have not been offered the position and there is no truth in the rumor that I am to be conductor of the Boston Orchestra," Mr. Garbrilowitsch said.

Four men have been named as possible successors to Dr. Muck, if he is forced to resign. Leopold Stowkowski is one, but there is no indication that he is considering a move such as that indicated. It is well known that he has a long-time contract with the Philadelphia Orchestra. A French conductor and a New Yorker are the other two.

CONTRADICTS HIM MUCK'S POST

There is a well-defined possibility that if Dr. Muck is not allowed to continue to lead the orchestra, it may be disbanded. There are about thirty-five alien musicians in the aggregation. If these men are dismissed it may be impossible to replace them. The Boston orchestra is non-union, whereas the remainder of musical America is union. There is difficulty in procuring even union musicians, and no musicians are coming from abroad.

Colonel Higginson, backer of the Boston Orchestra, has said that it will not continue without Dr. Muck.

om CITIZEN
ldress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
te 2 - 1917

MUSICAL "ART" AND THE ANTHEM

Refusal to Play It Rouses a Tempest.

Dr. Karl Muck, the learned and cultured conductor of the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his concerts. Not because he's a German subject, of course. It's because our national anthem is so dreadfully inartistic. He just couldn't think for a moment of incorporating it in a programme of German music. It would be so utterly incongruous, don't you know. It would be a crass insult to Art and Kultur.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra," Dr. Muck explains, "is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations."

Isn't it distressing? Here we've been going along, year after year, never realizing what a pitifully mediocre piece of music our "Star-Spangled Banner" tune really is. We've been so ignorant and uncultured as to like it. We've been especially appreciative of its swell and swing since we entered the war. We like to sing it and we like still better to hear it. It rouses the fire in our blood, it fans the patriotism in our souls. It may be "a poor thing," but it's our own. It's American. It's us. We love it nearly as much as we love the old flag that it celebrates.

And now, for the first time in our history, an orchestra leader refuses to play it in public concerts, when every other orchestra plays it as a matter of course. We can't have it because it's a "merly national or political composition," unworthy to be played from the same platform as the compositions of Herr Wagner and his fellow-Teutons.

Isn't it too bad? Here's that Boston orchestra starting to tour the country, and everywhere the public will expect its national anthem—just as a German audience would expect "Die Wacht am Rhein"—and won't get it.

However, if we know anything about this same American public, before Dr. Muck gets through with it he'll swallow his musical art and play the anthem, or have every instrument in his orchestra broken over his head. Americans will stand no such insolence from alien enemies.—Oil City Blizzard.

STAATSZEITUNG
s: New York City.

DEC 4 - 1917

Das variierte Thema.

Die Nationalhymne, wie sie die Bostoner spielen.

Die Bostoner spielen zur Eröffnung jedes ihrer Konzerte das Star Spangled Banner.

Und Dr. Karl Muck dirigiert. Die Bostoner haben sich nie geweigert, die Nationalhymne zu spielen; sie haben sich nicht geweigert, weil es niemand von ihnen verlangt hat. Als einige Damen die Forderung stellten, wurde sie ohne weiteres als etwas selbstverständliches erfüllt.

Natürlich sah man der zu einem Ereignis, um nicht zu sagen „Sensation", aufgebauschten Handlung mit größtem Interesse entgegen. Es verlief alles in bester Ordnung und Ruhe; nur etliche Nörgler fühlten sich veranlaßt, Kritik zu üben. Sie rügten und bekrittelten die Form der Nationalhymne; sie tadelten die überreiche Instrumentierung und die Verzierungen der Hymne — aber es blieb dabei: die Bostoner spielen die Nationalhymne in jedem Konzert in der von ihnen gewählten Form.

Auch etliche Musikkritiker gefielen sich im Tadel. Da sind — sagten die hochgelehrten Herren — zuviele Schnörkel; die Läufe der Violinen erinnern zu sehr an die Tannhäuser Ouvertüre; die Figuren im Baß haben eine auffallende Aehnlichkeit mit dem Meistersinger Vorspiel. Ueberhaupt klingt die amerikanische Hymne zu Weberisch Jubelouvertürenhaft und zu Wagnerisch Kaisermarschlich. In dieser Weise ging es weiter.

Und während die gelehrten Herren sich nörgelnd gütlich taten, saßen zwei Herren — der eine in Boston, der andere in New York — in ihrem Studierzimmer und lachten, lachten, bis ihnen die Thränen in den Augen standen. Der eine in Boston war natürlich der Dr. Karl Muck. Der andere in New York war . . . . . der Komponist dieser Nationalhymne.

Was, der alte Schotte Samuel Arnold? Der lebt doch längst nicht . . . . . Aber keine Ahnung! Es ist doch die Rede vom Star Spangled Banner in dieser reich instrumentierten Form. Und die stammt von — Victor Herbert.

Muck spielt die majestätische, gewaltig wirkende Coda der amerikanischen Phantasie von Victor Herbert . . . . . und das hat natürlich keiner der Gelehrten entdeckt. Sie haben Muck verdächtigen wollen, daß er die Hymne camoufliert habe, daß er sie verwagnert und verwebert habe, und haben sich der wahrlich nicht so selten gespielten Herbert'schen Bearbeitung nicht erinnert. Zugegeben, die Herbert'sche Instrumentierung ist stark wagnerisch — welcher moderne Komponist kann sich dem Einfluß des Bayreuter Meisters entziehen? Die Violinen tannhäusern und die Baßgeigen meistersingern, trotzdem ist und bleibt es das Star Spangled Banner. Victor Herbert, der im Orchestrieren weit über allen andern amerikanischen Komponisten steht, hat der Nationalhymne in seiner Ausgestaltung eine Majestät verliehen, eine machtvolle Größe, die ihr sehr zu statten kommt, und gerade darum wird Muck, der feinfühlige Musiker, sie in dieser Form für seine Konzerte gewählt haben.

a TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 4 1917

Say Dr. Muck Will Come.

No Advices of Cancellation of Boston Symphony Concert Received at Institute.

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, will be given as per schedule, Thursday evening, at the Academy of Music. This was the statement made today by Director Atkins' secretary, notwithctanding the report that concerts by the orchestra in Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore have been cancelled. The cancellations were caused by the Department of Justice regulations, which prohibit alien enemies from leaving the States in which they are located.

At the office of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the concert here is scheduled to be given, it was stated that no advice had been received to the contrary, and that the necessary music had already been received from Boston.

"If the concert was to be cancelled, we should have received word before this time," it was said. "Therefore, there is every reason to believe the performance will take place."

It was reported last Saturday that Dr. Muck, the orchestra's German leader, and twenty-three of the 101 players, would have to remain within the limits of Massachusetts .It was also reported that Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the organization, might announce, "within a few days," that it has been disbanded until after the war.

SUN
New York City.

DEC 2 1917

By W. J. HENDERSON.

THE cancellation of the tour of Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, should be a source of regret to music lovers. Mr. Kreisler has comported himself with great discretion since the entry of this country into the world war. His art is of the highest type, and it would indeed be a pity if he were obliged to cease playing in New York. Up to the present writing the musical public has shown no hostility toward him, but on the contrary has appeared to desire by its attitude to convey to him expressions of its kindly feeling.

But it has been shown in no uncertain manner that this great artist is to suffer in most places for the sins of the propagandists, who have transformed the mildest of music lovers into determined foes of all things Teutonic. The directors of the Metropolitan Opera House proved themselves to be farsighted business men when they resolved to omit operas in German from the present repertory of the house.

Meanwhile the concert platform reveals a considerable diversity of opinion among artists as to what they may or may not do. Some of them have discarded German songs entirely and are making their programmes from the works of French, Russian, Scandinavian and other masters. But it must be patent to every mind that if war considerations are to enter into the matter at all the problem has by no means been solved by the omission of German songs.

If Russia makes a separate peace with Germany will singers venture to invite patriotic Americans to listen to the lyrics of Moussorgsky and Rachmaninov? Will the advertised "Scriabin movement" have to move?

Thus far the singers who do sing the lieder of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and the rest have met with no opposition, but on the contrary have enjoyed some special demonstrations of pleasure. But it is inevitable that searching inquiry is going to be made into the origin of such demonstrations. If it should appear that they were made by Germans there is reason to fear that the lieder would have to be laid away till more propitious times.

The whole situation is fraught with disagreeable possibilities. We may be deprived even of the pleasure of hearing the symphonies of Beethoven and Brahms. Of course the hostility to German music seems lamentable to those who preserve the historical perspective.

What had the simple, devout soul of Sebastian Bach to do with such ideals as those of contemporaneous Germany? What message other than that of beauty was uttered by Haydn and Mozart, who, though Austrian, are assuredly to be classed with Teutonic masters? Even Wagner, who has been berated more than some of the others, was not a sympathizer with the first young sproutings of modern Prussianism. He was suspected of being a revolutionary and was forced to live for years beyond the borders of Germany.

But the situation which confronts music lovers acknowledges no relation to the past. And its existence is due to the activities of Germans in this country, with a certain amount of assistance from those persons conveniently and very significantly called German Americans.

The root of the matter was planted in the Metropolitan Opera House, where certain singers of German origin flaunted their opinions without hesitation and even went so far as to hold a joyous celebration of the sinking of the Lusitania. This is now an old story. These singers have been dropped from the Metropolitan list. What is still more satisfactory to every honest American is that they appear to be having a sorely hard time in getting anything else to do. The musical journals used to contain many accounts of their appearances in other cities in concert. None can be found in the same pages now.

These people are not now making any loud noise. They have subsided, except when they chance to be where the national anthem of this country is sung, when their voices boom above all others. This of course deceives the "bloedsinnige Yankees," to whom Capt. von Papen so courteously referred.

But since their operations last winter much has happened. The people of the United States, finding that a widespread, cunningly planned and vigorous scheme for defeating them at home before their troops could begin to fight abroad, was engineered by alien spies, Germans and even pro-German Americans, have shown a dangerous tendency to rise up and drive everything Teutonic into the sea of oblivion.

Discerning the slow but irresistible rising of this tide of feeling the writer of this department of THE SUN has recently conversed with a number of music lovers, who do not care to have their names appear in print nor to be directly quoted. The first statement made by one of them revealed the existence of even a social ostracism against certain musical artists of Teutonic birth. Invitations to houses where they were to be present have been flatly refused and the reason

Secondly a number of music lovers have said to this writer that they would not contribute one cent of their money to the support of any German musician. "They should all be deported," declared one of these men, whose catholicity of taste in art is beyond question.

In short there are evidences that since the latter part of last season the entire situation has changed. At that time there was apparently no question as to the acceptability of the offerings of Teutonic musicians or the enjoyment of Teutonic musical compositions.

At this writing there is incontestably a deep feeling about it in the hearts of a large number of American born people and it is impossible to foresee just how powerful the influence of this feeling may grow to be. But regrettable as it may be, there is ground for fear that sooner or later everything German in music will have to be temporarily retired and all the German interpreters or conductors permanently removed from the stage.

As to the fairness or justice of such a proceeding THE SUN'S musical recorder is not obliged to speak. It is most emphatically none of his business. But the indescribable folly of the supercilious Teutons who have fatuously fancied that they could batter down all American tendencies and add a vigorously pumped up enthusiasm for German music and musicians to the rest of the atrocious propaganda with which they have insanely supposed they could forever fool the American people is the real cause of the profound and stern enmity to Teutonic musical performers, which has so suddenly reached the boiling point.

It was not the blundering of the Boston Symphony Orchestra people that caused this hostility. It was there long before that glorious American city, whose indefatigable Journal did so much to expose the treacherous methods of the Germans, lifted up its voice in a demand that the former incumbent of a post in the Berlin opera should conduct the "Star Spangled Banner."

The explosion touched off by the Providence incident was of powder waiting for the touch of the match. Now the fire spreads. The situation is unfortunate in some of its aspects, for no lovers of music wish to be deprived of the pleasure of hearing such masters as Kreisler or of listening to the creations of perfectly innocent Germans long dead.

But on the other hand since there are altogether too many Americans who still need awakening to a realization of the tremendous meaning of the hour and too many Teutons who still believe that the nation is one monumental fool, let music lovers lay their precious aesthetic sensibilities away and bow to that expression of the popular will which seems now to be not far off.

n NORTH AMERICAN
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

German Music

TO THE EDITOR—The Doctor Muck, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bowed to the will of the American public and played the nation's hymn at the concert here Monday night, he did it with the air of one who is forced to perform an act much against his will. His program also contained numbers by German—yes, even Prussian composers. Now, it is all right to say that art is not national. It isn't. But just now, when, in spite of all the government's watchfulness, there are spies found daily in our midst, when men in high places are making seditious utterances, I believe it would be well to limit musical programs to selections by Americans and composers of the allied countries. Much of German music, in spite of its beauty, is hectic and inflammatory. It is warlike and it is filled with pride of the German race and German deeds. It extols the glory of battle, the divine right of the conqueror. It has little of tenderness, nor does it stir emotions of tenderness or justice. We don't need German music while we are at war with Germany.

Philadelphia, Nov. 6. A. J.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

GABRILOWITSCH TALE GIVING CONTRADICTS HIM MUCK'S POST

Pianist Says Position of Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Has Not Been Offered Him — Four Men Named as Possible Successors to German Conductor.

The presence in Philadelphia yesterday of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the New York pianist, who has been mentioned as a possible successor to Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stirred renewed gossip. Mr. Garbrilowitsch told "The Press" that there was no truth in a report which came from Boston that he was to succeed Dr. Muck.

"I have not been offered the position and there is no truth in the rumor that I am to be conductor of the Boston Orchestra," Mr. Garbrilowitsch said.

Four men have been named as possible successors to Dr. Muck, if he is forced to resign. Leopold Stowkowski is one, but there is no indication that he is considering a move such as that indicated. It is well known that he has a long-time contract with the Philadelphia Orchestra. A French conductor and a New Yorker are the other two.

There is a well-defined possibility that if Dr. Muck is not allowed to continue to lead the orchestra, it may be disbanded. There are about thirty-five alien musicians in the aggregation. If these men are dismissed it may be impossible to replace them. The Boston orchestra is non-union, whereas the remainder of musical America is union. There is difficulty in procuring even union musicians, and no musicians are coming from abroad.

Colonel Higginson, backer of the Boston Orchestra, has said that it will not continue without Dr. Muck.

LIEUTENANT PETERSON

om CITIZEN
ldress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
te 1917

MUSICAL "ART" AND THE ANTHEM

Refusal to Play It Rouses a Tempest.

Dr. Karl Muck, the learned and cultured conductor of the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, refuses to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his concerts. Not because he's a German subject, of course. It's because our national anthem is so dreadfully inartistic. He just couldn't think for a moment of incorporating it in a programme of German music. It would be so utterly incongruous, don't you know. It would be a crass insult to Art and Kultur.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra," Dr. Muck explains, "is a purely artistic organization. We stand in the public mind for certain very definite musical attainments. The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business. Art is greater than any national considerations."

Isn't it distressing? Here we've been going along, year after year, never realizing what a pitifully mediocre piece of music our "Star-Spangled Banner" tune really is. We've been so ignorant and uncultured as to like it. We've been especially appreciative of its swell and swing since we entered the war. We like to sing it and we like still better to hear it. It rouses the fire in our blood, it fans the patriotism in our souls. It may be " a poor thing," but it's our own. It's American. It's us. We love it nearly as much as we love the old flag that it celebrates.

And now, for the first time in our history, an orchestra leader refuses to play it in public concerts, when every other orchestra plays it as a matter of course. We can't have it because it's a "merly national or political composition," unworthy to be played from the same platform as the compositions of Herr Wagner and his fellow-Teutons.

Isn't it too bad! Here's that Boston orchestra starting to tour the country, and everywhere the public will expect its national anthem—just as a German audience would expect "Die Wacht am Rhein"—and won't get it.

However, if we know anything about this same American public, before Dr. Muck gets through with it he'll swallow his musical art and play the anthem, or have every instrument in his orchestra broken over his head. Americans will stand no such insolence from alien enemies. Oil City Blizzard.

Post Dec. 10, 1917

SYMPHONY TO PLAY FOR HALIFAX FUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, with Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists, is to give a concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday evening, the entire proceeds of which will be given to the relief of the sufferers at Halifax.

Only twice before has the Symphony Orchestra given a concert of this character, in 1906 for the benefit of the San Francisco fire sufferers and later for those of the Chelsea fire.

This concert will be particularly interesting because of the appearance of Kreisler, as he has cancelled all his professional engagements and appears as soloist only at performances for charity. The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra. Major Henry L. Higginson offered the hall free of charge and both Melba and Kreisler volunteered their services. It is expected that at least $8000 will be raised.

Monitor
Dec. 10, 1917.

Symphony to Give Concert for Fund

Arrangements have been made to give in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon, a great concern, the entire proceeds from which, with the exception of the advertising expenses, will be given for relief of the sufferers in the great Halifax disaster. The concert will be given by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck, with Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. It is hoped and expected to raise by this concert a net sum considerably in excess of $7,000.

The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra and Dr. Muck while they were in New York Saturday. C. A. Ellis, the manager, gave his instant approval. Mr. Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the symphony concert and immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert. Mr. Ellis got into communication with Henry L. Higginson in Boston, who gave his warm approval to the plan and offered Symphony Hall free of charge for the concert. Mr. Ellis suggested that Mme. Melba would be glad to sing and when he asked her yesterday she was most enthusiastic about it.

Last January the Symphony Orchestra with Paderewski and Kreisler as soloists gave a concert for the benefit of the Vacation Fund, in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and realized over $24,000. It is certain that in Boston with the orchestra, Melba and Kreisler at least $8000 should be raised.

Globe
-Dec. 10, 1917-

PLAN SYMPHONY BENEFIT WITH KREISLER AND MELBA

Arrangements have been made to give in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon, a great concert, the entire proceeds from which with the exception of the advertising expenses will be given to the relief of the sufferers of the great Halifax disaster. The concert will be given by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr Karl Muck, with Mme Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. It is expected to raise by this concert a net sum considerably in excess of $7000.

The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra and Dr Muck, while they were in New York Saturday. C. A. Ellis, the manager, gave his instant approval.

Mr Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the Symphony concert and immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert.

Mr Ellis got into communication with Henry L. Higginson in Boston, who gave his warm approval to the plan and offered Symphony Hall, free of charge, for the concert. Mr Ellis suggested that Mme Melba would be glad to sing and, when he asked her yesterday, she was most enthusiastic about it.

It will be Kreisler's only appearance in Boston as a soloist while the war lasts. He has cancelled all his engagements and will not appear again as soloist except for charity. The prices will be $1, $2, $3, $5.

Herald
Dec. 10, 1917.

CONCERT FOR HALIFAX RELIEF

Symphony Orchestra Will Give Proceeds of Sunday's Entertainment

MELBA AND KREISLER TO AID

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Karl Muck, will give a concert in aid of the Halifax sufferers, in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon. Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler will be the soloists.

The entire proceeds of the concert, expected to be considerably more than $7000, will be given, with the exception of the money paid for advertising, for the relief of residents of the Canadian city.

Gave Instant Approval.

Dr. Muck and members of the orchestra, while they were in New York last Saturday, proposed giving the concert and Manager C. A. Ellis gave his instant approval. Mr. Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the Symphony concert, and he immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert.

Mr. Ellis then communicated with Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who gave his heartiest approval of the project, and offered Symphony Hall free of charge for the concert. Later it occurred to Mr. Ellis that Mme. Melba would be glad to sing, and when he asked her yesterday she was enthusiastic about it.

The concert will be all the more interesting because it will be Mr. Kreisler's only appearance in this city while the war lasts. He has cancelled all his engagements and will not perform again except for charity.

This will be the first concert of this kind by the Boston Symphony Orchestra since it played for the benefit of the sufferers from the Chelsea fire. In the spring of 1906 it gave a most successful concert in aid of the relief of the sufferers in the San Francisco fire, and last January it gave a concert, with Paderewski and Kreisler as soloists, for the benefit of the vacation fund, in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The proceeds of the latter concert were more than $24,000. This city has never had a concert of the character planned for next Sunday. The prices will be $1, $2, $3 and $5.

Record
Dec. 8, 1917

182

DR. MUCK NO GERMAN, NEW SWISS FIND

Legation Discovers Director Is Switzer Through Naturalization

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, though a native of Bavaria, is not a German subject, but a citizen of Switzerland, is declared at the Swiss Legation in Washington, according to a dispatch from the capital.

From other sources it is learned that Dr. Muck, born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, was eight years old when his father, a magistrate, took out naturalization papers in Switzerland, the son automatically taking the same status.

This was in 1867. Later, when Dr. Muck had become a man, he also took out papers that strengthened his Swiss citizenship. This he did of his own volition, it is declared.

About two years ago, Dr. Muck secured passports at the Swiss Legation for foreign travel, but it is not known whether he ever used these, or where he went abroad.

"Not a Prussian"

For a time Dr. Muck was director of the National Orchestra in Zurich and lived there at various intervals.

Manager Charles A. Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra, in a letter sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington, declares that Dr. Muck "is not a Prussian; is not an enemy alien of the United States; is not an official of the German Government; is not a citizen of Germany, but a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

Mr. Ellis says that the Federal authorities "have found nothing to incriminate Dr. Muck as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.

"During the more than seven years he has been in America," adds Mr. Ellis, "he has respected our laws and complied with them in letter and spirit."

Sunday Advertiser American Dec. 9, 1917.

McCormack to Be Symphony Soloist

JOHN McCormack, the popular tenor, will make his second appearance as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the eighth pair of concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

As Mr. McCormack did a year ago he has chosen unusual selections for his appearance with the orchestra. The first is Amanta's aria "Di ad Irene" from Handel's pastorale cantata, "Atalanta." This was one of the many pastorales that were so popular in the 18th century in which Watteau shepherds and shepherdesses disported themselves for the amusement of the Court.

The "Atalanta" was given as a part of the celebration of the marriage of the Prince of Wales, son of George II.

Mr. McCormack's second number will be "Jehovah, Hear Me" from Beethoven's oratorio, "The Mount of Olives."

The orchestral selections on the program are of more than usual interest. They contain an important novelty, the second suite from Ravel's Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe." This ballet was written in 1912 for the Russians and played with much success in Paris. The first suite has been played in New York but it is doubtful if this particular "Fragment Symphonique," as it is called, has ever been heard in this country. The other numbers will be Mozart's Symphony in E-flat Major and Balakireff' gorgeous Symphonic Poem "Thamar.

Transcript
Dec 8, 1917.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A New Piece by Ravel on Dr. Muck's Programme in Which Mr. McCormack Assists—The Cecilia in Two Interesting Cantatas—The Pleasurable Miss Torpadie—Mr. Copeland Once More and Two Recitals by Cherished Tenors

NOVEL pieces are still possible at the Symphony Concerts even in the fourth year of war and on Dr. Muck's programme for next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening stands for the first times, probably, in America, the "Symphonic Fragment" drawn by Ravel from his vivid and adroit ballet of "Daphnis and Chloe," as yet unadanced on this side of the seas. As already said in this place and as will be set forth more fully in the course of next week, the "fragment" begins with the music of the vision of Pan to the bereft Daphnis and proceeds with the contrasting music of the rude dances of the abducting pirates, each characteristic tone-picturing alive with Ravel's invention and resource. For other numbers purely orchestral, the programme begins with Mozart's symphony in E-flat and ends with Balakirev's tone-poem of the revels, the wiles and the fate into which the solitary Caucasian queen, Thamar, intrigued unwitting wanderers. The "assisting artist" for the two concerts is Mr. McCormack, the noted tenor, who will be heard in an air resurrected from "Atalanta," one of Händel's pastoral cantatas and in a number from Beethoven's usually neglected oratorio of the Crucifixion, "The Mount of Olives."

On Thursday evening, in Sanders Theatre at Harvard, Dr. Muck and the orchestra will undertake the third concert in the current series at Cambridge, with Mr. Howard Goding for assisting pianist. No programme for the occasion is yet at hand.

Monitor
- Dec. 10, 1917 -

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, will give a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Sunday, Dec. 16. Fritz Kreisler, violinist, and Mme. Nellie Melba, soprano, will be the soloists. This concert will replace that announced to be given by Miss Novaes and Mr. Thibaud.

The use of Symphony Hall has been donated for the concert by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the sustainer of the Symphony Orchestra. The soloists have donated their services. This morning a check for $50 was received at the Symphony Hall box office from a citizen in payment for two $5 seats. Amounts received in excess of the price of tickets are to be acknowledged by the manager of the orchestra and credited to the Halifax relief fund.

Post Dec. 10, 1917

SYMPHONY TO PLAY FOR HALIFAX FUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, with Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists, is to give a concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday evening, the entire proceeds of which will be given to the relief of the sufferers at Halifax.

Only twice before has the Symphony Orchestra given a concert of this character, in 1906 for the benefit of the San Francisco fire sufferers and later for those of the Chelsea fire.

This concert will be particularly interesting because of the appearance of Kreisler, as he has cancelled all his professional engagements and appears as soloist only at performances for charity. The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra. Major Henry L. Higginson offered the hall free of charge and both Melba and Kreisler volunteered their services. It is expected that at least $8000 will be raised.

Monitor
Dec. 10, 1917.

Symphony to Give Concert for Fund

Arrangements have been made to give in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon, a great concern, the entire proceeds from which, with the exception of the advertising expenses, will be given for relief of the sufferers in the great Halifax disaster. The concert will be given by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck, with Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. It is hoped and expected to raise by this concert a net sum considerably in excess of $7,000.

The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra and Dr. Muck while they were in New York Saturday. C. A. Ellis, the manager, gave his instant approval. Mr. Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the symphony concert and immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert. Mr. Ellis got into communication with Henry L. Higginson in Boston, who gave his warm approval to the plan and offered Symphony Hall free of charge for the concert. Mr. Ellis suggested that Mme. Melba would be glad to sing and when he asked her yesterday she was most enthusiastic about it.

Last January the Symphony Orchestra with Paderewski and Kreisler as soloists gave a concert for the benefit of the Vacation Fund, in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and realized over $24,000. It is certain that in Boston with the orchestra, Melba and Kreisler at least $8000 should be raised.

Globe
-Dec. 10, 1917-

PLAN SYMPHONY BENEFIT WITH KREISLER AND MELBA

Arrangements have been made to give in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon, a great concert, the entire proceeds from which with the exception of the advertising expenses will be given to the relief of the sufferers of the great Halifax disaster. The concert will be given by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr Karl Muck, with Mme Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. It is expected to raise by this concert a net sum considerably in excess of $7000.

The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra and Dr Muck, while they were in New York Saturday. C. A. Ellis, the manager, gave his instant approval.

Mr Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the Symphony concert and immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert.

Mr Ellis got into communication with Henry L. Higginson in Boston, who gave his warm approval to the plan and offered Symphony Hall, free of charge, for the concert. Mr Ellis suggested that Mme Melba would be glad to sing and, when he asked her yesterday, she was most enthusiastic about it.

It will be Kreisler's only appearance in Boston as a soloist while the war lasts. He has cancelled all his engagements and will not appear again as soloist except for charity. The prices will be $1, $2, $3, $5.

Herald
Dec. 10, 1917.

CONCERT FOR HALIFAX RELIEF

Symphony Orchestra Will Give Proceeds of Sunday's Entertainment

MELBA AND KREISLER TO AID

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Karl Muck, will give a concert in aid of the Halifax sufferers, in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon. Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler will be the soloists.

The entire proceeds of the concert, expected to be considerably more than $7000, will be given, with the exception of the money paid for advertising, for the relief of residents of the Canadian city.

Gave Instant Approval.

Dr. Muck and members of the orchestra, while they were in New York last Saturday, proposed giving the concert and Manager C. A. Ellis gave his instant approval. Mr. Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the Symphony concert, and he immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert.

Mr. Ellis then communicated with Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who gave his heartiest approval of the project, and offered Symphony Hall free of charge for the concert. Later it occurred to Mr. Ellis that Mme. Melba would be glad to sing, and when he asked her yesterday she was enthusiastic about it.

The concert will be all the more interesting because it will be Mr. Kreisler's only appearance in this city while the war lasts. He has cancelled all his engagements and will not perform again except for charity.

This will be the first concert of this kind by the Boston Symphony Orchestra since it played for the benefit of the sufferers from the Chelsea fire. In the spring of 1906 it gave a most successful concert in aid of the relief of the sufferers in the San Francisco fire, and last January it gave a concert, with Paderewski and Kreisler as soloists, for the benefit of the vacation fund, in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The proceeds of the latter concert were more than $24,000. This city has never had a concert of the character planned for next Sunday. The prices will be $1, $2, $3 and $5.

Record
Dec. 8, 1917

182

DR. MUCK NO GERMAN, NEW SWISS FIND

Legation Discovers Director Is Switzer Through Naturalization

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, though a native of Bavaria, is not a German subject, but a citizen of Switzerland, is declared at the Swiss Legation in Washington, according to a dispatch from the capital.

From other sources it is learned that Dr. Muck, born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, was eight years old when his father, a magistrate, took out naturalization papers in Switzerland, the son automatically taking the same status.

This was in 1867. Later, when Dr. Muck had become a man, he also took out papers that strengthened his Swiss citizenship. This he did of his own volition, it is declared.

About two years ago, Dr. Muck secured passports at the Swiss Legation for foreign travel, but it is not known whether he ever used these, or where he went abroad.

"Not a Prussian"

For a time Dr. Muck was director of the National Orchestra in Zurich and lived there at various intervals.

Manager Charles A. Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra, in a letter sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington, declares that Dr. Muck "is not a Prussian; is not an enemy alien of the United States; is not an official of the German Government; is not a citizen of Germany, but a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

Mr. Ellis says that the Federal authorities "have found nothing to incriminate Dr. Muck as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.

"During the more than seven years he has been in America," adds Mr. Ellis, "he has respected our laws and complied with them in letter and spirit."

Sunday Advertiser American Dec. 9, 1917.

McCormack to Be Symphony Soloist

JOHN McCormack, the popular tenor, will make his second appearance as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the eighth pair of concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

As Mr. McCormack did a year ago, he has chosen unusual selections for his appearance with the orchestra. The first is Amanta's aria "Di ad Irene" from Handel's pastorale cantata, "Atalanta." This was one of the many pastorales that were so popular in the 18th century in which Watteau shepherds and shepherdesses disported themselves for the amusement of the Court.

The "Atalanta" was given as a part of the celebration of the marriage of the Prince of Wales, son of George II.

Mr. McCormack's second number will be "Jehovah, Hear Me" from Beethoven's oratorio, "The Mount of Olives."

The orchestral selections on the program are of more than usual interest. They contain an important novelty, the second suite from Ravel's Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe." This ballet was written in 1912 for the Russians and played with much success in Paris. The first suite has been played in New York but it is doubtful if this particular "Fragment Symphonique," as it is called, has ever been heard in this country. The other numbers will be Mozart's Symphony in E-flat Major and Balakireff' gorgeous Symphonic Poem "Thamar."

Transcript
Dec 8, 1917.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A New Piece by Ravel on Dr. Muck's Programme in Which Mr. McCormack Assists—The Cecilia in Two Interesting Cantatas—The Pleasurable Miss Torpadie—Mr. Copeland Once More and Two Recitals by Cherished Tenors

NOVEL pieces are still possible at the Symphony Concerts even in the fourth year of war and on Dr. Muck's programme for next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening stands for the first times, probably, in America, the "Symphonic Fragment" drawn by Ravel from his vivid and adroit ballet of "Daphnis and Chloe," as yet danced on this side of the seas. As already said in this place and as will be set forth more fully in the course of next week, the "fragment" begins with the music of the vision of Pan to the bereft Daphnis and proceeds with the contrasting music of the rude dances of the abducting pirates, each characteristic tone-picturing alive with Ravel's invention and resource. For other numbers purely orchestral, the programme begins with Mozart's symphony in E-flat and ends with Balakirev's tone-poem of the revels, the wiles and the fate into which the solitary Caucasian queen, Thamar, intrigued unwitting wanderers. The "assisting artist" for the two concerts is Mr. McCormack, the noted tenor, who will be heard in an air resurrected from "Atalanta," one of Händel's pastoral cantatas and in a number from Beethoven's usually neglected oratorio of the Crucifixion, "The Mount of Olives."

On Thursday evening, in Sanders Theatre at Harvard, Dr. Muck and the orchestra will undertake the third concert in the current series at Cambridge, with Mr. Howard Goding for assisting pianist. No programme for the occasion is yet at hand.

Monitor
- Dec. 10, 1917 -

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, will give a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Sunday, Dec. 16. Fritz Kreisler, violinist, and Mme. Nellie Melba, soprano, will be the soloists. This concert will replace that announced to be given by Miss Novaes and Mr. Thibaud.

The use of Symphony Hall has been donated for the concert by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the sustainer of the Symphony Orchestra. The soloists have donated their services. This morning a check for $50 was received at the Symphony Hall box office from a citizen in payment for two $5 seats. Amounts received in excess of the price of tickets are to be acknowledged by the manager of the orchestra and credited to the Halifax relief fund.

Post Dec. 10, 1917

SYMPHONY TO PLAY FOR HALIFAX FUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, with Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists, is to give a concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday evening, the entire proceeds of which will be given to the relief of the sufferers at Halifax.

Only twice before has the Symphony Orchestra given a concert of this character, in 1906 for the benefit of the San Francisco fire sufferers and later for those of the Chelsea fire.

This concert will be particularly interesting because of the appearance of Kreisler, as he has cancelled all his professional engagements and appears as soloist only at performances for charity. The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra. Major Henry L. Higginson offered the hall free of charge and both Melba and Kreisler volunteered their services. It is expected that at least $8000 will be raised.

Monitor
Dec. 10, 1917.

Symphony to Give Concert for Fund

Arrangements have been made to give in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon, a great concern, the entire proceeds from which, with the exception of the advertising expenses, will be given for relief of the sufferers in the great Halifax disaster. The concert will be given by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck, with Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. It is hoped and expected to raise by this concert a net sum considerably in excess of $7,000.

The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra and Dr. Muck while they were in New York Saturday. C. A. Ellis, the manager, gave his instant approval. Mr. Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the symphony concert and immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert. Mr. Ellis got into communication with Henry L. Higginson in Boston, who gave his warm approval to the plan and offered Symphony Hall free of charge for the concert. Mr. Ellis suggested that Mme. Melba would be glad to sing and when he asked her yesterday she was most enthusiastic about it.

Last January the Symphony Orchestra with Paderewski and Kreisler as soloists gave a concert for the benefit of the Vacation Fund, in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and realized over $24,000. It is certain that in Boston with the orchestra, Melba and Kreisler at least $8000 should be raised.

Globe
-Dec. 10, 1917-

PLAN SYMPHONY BENEFIT WITH KREISLER AND MELBA

Arrangements have been made to give in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon, a great concert, the entire proceeds from which with the exception of the advertising expenses will be given to the relief of the sufferers of the great Halifax disaster. The concert will be given by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr Karl Muck, with Mme Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. It is expected to raise by this concert a net sum considerably in excess of $7000.

The concert was proposed by members of the orchestra and Dr Muck, while they were in New York Saturday. C. A. Ellis, the manager, gave his instant approval.

Mr Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the Symphony concert and immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert.

Mr Ellis got into communication with Henry L. Higginson in Boston, who gave his warm approval to the plan and offered Symphony Hall, free of charge, for the concert. Mr Ellis suggested that Mme Melba would be glad to sing and, when he asked her yesterday, she was most enthusiastic about it.

It will be Kreisler's only appearance in Boston as a soloist while the war lasts. He has cancelled all his engagements and will not appear again as soloist except for charity. The prices will be $1, $2, $3, $5.

Herald
Dec. 10, 1917.

CONCERT FOR HALIFAX RELIEF

Symphony Orchestra Will Give Proceeds of Sunday's Entertainment

MELBA AND KREISLER TO AID

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Dr. Karl Muck, will give a concert in aid of the Halifax sufferers, in Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon. Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler will be the soloists.

The entire proceeds of the concert, expected to be considerably more than $7000, will be given, with the exception of the money paid for advertising, for the relief of residents of the Canadian city.

Gave Instant Approval.

Dr. Muck and members of the orchestra, while they were in New York last Saturday, proposed giving the concert and Manager C. A. Ellis gave his instant approval. Mr. Kreisler was at Carnegie Hall for the Symphony concert, and he immediately offered to come to Boston to play at the concert.

Mr. Ellis then communicated with Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who gave his heartiest approval of the project, and offered Symphony Hall free of charge for the concert. Later it occurred to Mr. Ellis that Mme. Melba would be glad to sing, and when he asked her yesterday she was enthusiastic about it.

The concert will be all the more interesting because it will be Mr. Kreisler's only appearance in this city while the war lasts. He has cancelled all his engagements and will not perform again except for charity.

This will be the first concert of this kind by the Boston Symphony Orchestra since it played for the benefit of the sufferers from the Chelsea fire. In the spring of 1906 it gave a most successful concert in aid of the relief of the sufferers in the San Francisco fire, and last January it gave a concert, with Paderewski and Kreisler as soloists, for the benefit of the vacation fund, in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The proceeds of the latter concert were more than $21,000. This city has never had a concert of the character planned for next Sunday. The prices will be $1, $2, $3 and $5.

Record
Dec. 8, 1917

DR. MUCK NO GERMAN, NEW SWISS FIND

Legation Discovers Director Is Switzer Through Naturalization

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, though a native of Bavaria, is not a German subject, but a citizen of Switzerland, is declared at the Swiss Legation in Washington, according to a dispatch from the capital.

From other sources it is learned that Dr. Muck, born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, was eight years old when his father, a magistrate, took out naturalization papers in Switzerland, the son automatically taking the same status.

This was in 1867. Later, when Dr. Muck had become a man, he also took out papers that strengthened his Swiss citizenship. This he did of his own volition, it is declared.

About two years ago, Dr. Muck secured passports at the Swiss Legation for foreign travel, but it is not known whether he ever used these, or where he went abroad.

"Not a Prussian"

For a time Dr. Muck was director of the National Orchestra in Zurich and lived there at various intervals.

Manager Charles A. Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra, in a letter sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington, declares that Dr. Muck "is not a Prussian; is not an enemy alien of the United States; is not an official of the German Government; is not a citizen of Germany, but a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

Mr. Ellis says that the Federal authorities "have found nothing to incriminate Dr. Muck as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.

"During the more than seven years he has been in America," adds Mr. Ellis, "he has respected our laws and complied with them in letter and spirit."

Sunday Advertiser American Dec. 9, 1917.

McCormack to Be Symphony Soloist

JOHN McCormack, the popular tenor, will make his second appearance as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the eighth pair of concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

As Mr. McCormack did a year ago he has chosen unusual selections for his appearance with the orchestra. The first is Amanta's aria "Di ad Irene" from Handel's pastorale cantata, "Atalanta." This was one of the many pastorales that were so popular in the 18th century in which Watteau shepherds and shepherdesses disported themselves for the amusement of the Court.

The "Atalanta" was given as a part of the celebration of the marriage of the Prince of Wales, son of George II.

Mr. McCormack's second number will be "Jehovah, Hear Me" from Beethoven's oratorio, "The Mount of Olives."

The orchestral selections on the program are of more than usual interest. They contain an important novelty, the second suite from Ravel's Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe." This ballet was written in 1912 for the Russians and played with much success in Paris. The first suite has been played in New York but it is doubtful if this particular "Fragment Symphonique," as it is called, has ever been heard in this country. The other numbers will be Mozart's Symphony in E-flat Major and Balakireff's gorgeous Symphonic Poem "Thamar."

Transcript
Dec 8, 1917.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A New Piece by Ravel on Dr. Muck's Programme in Which Mr. McCormack Assists—The Cecilia in Two Interesting Cantatas—The Pleasurable Miss Torpadie—Mr. Copeland Once More and Two Recitals by Cherished Tenors

NOVEL pieces are still possible at the Symphony Concerts even in the fourth year of war and on Dr. Muck's programme for next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening stands for the first times, probably, in America, the "Symphonic Fragment" drawn by Ravel from his vivid and adroit ballet of "Daphnis and Chloe," as yet undanced on this side of the seas. As already said in this place and as will be set forth more fully in the course of next week, the "fragment" begins with the music of the vision of Pan to the bereft Daphnis and proceeds with the contrasting music of the rude dances of the abducting pirates—each characteristic tone-picturing alive with Ravel's invention and resource. For other numbers purely orchestral, the programme begins with Mozart's symphony in E-flat and ends with Balakirev's tone-poem of the revels, the wiles and the fate into which the solitary Caucasian queen, Thamar, intrigued unwitting wanderers. The "assisting artist" for the two concerts is Mr. McCormack, the noted tenor, who will be heard in an air resurrected from "Atalanta," one of Händel's pastoral cantatas and in a number from Beethoven's usually neglected oratorio of the Crucifixion, "The Mount of Olives."

On Thursday evening, in Sanders Theatre at Harvard, Dr. Muck and the orchestra will undertake the third concert in the current series at Cambridge, with Mr. Howard Goding for assisting pianist. No programme for the occasion is yet at hand.

Monitor
- Dec. 10, 1917 -

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, conductor, will give a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Sunday, Dec. 16. Fritz Kreisler, violinist, and Mme. Nellie Melba, soprano, will be the soloists. This concert will replace that announced to be given by Miss Novaes and Mr. Thibaud.

The use of Symphony Hall has been donated for the concert by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the sustainer of the Symphony Orchestra. The soloists have donated their services. This morning a check for $50 was received at the Symphony Hall box office from a citizen in payment for two $5 seats. Amounts received in excess of the price of tickets are to be acknowledged by the manager of the orchestra and credited to the Halifax relief fund.

HERALD
DEC. 8 1917

AMERICAN

New York City.

DR. MUCK NOT AN ENEMY ALIEN

Though Born in Bavaria He Became a Swiss Citizen by Naturalization.

ELLIS MAKES STATEMENT

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7—In response to an inquiry at the Swiss legation it was said today that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, and not a German subject.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Warzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant, when Dr. Muck was eight years old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland and the status of the son followed that of the father.

Son Took Swiss Naturalization

Later when the son had become a man he, of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship. Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had.

It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich and that he has lived there at various intervals.

Manager Ellis's Statement.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiry of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

Find Nothing Incriminating.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the federal authorities 'have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has compiled with them in letter and spirit.

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises 51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, two Bohemians.

"One subject which has caused much unkind and undeserved criticism of Dr. Muck has been a report emanating from Providence and sent broadcast over the country that he refused to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in our concerts. He has never refused. On the contrary, when requested, he willingly complied, and he has since conducted our national anthem in every concert by our organization."

National Music and National Currency

As Discussed by "Abe" and "Mawruss"

Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

By Montague Glass

"IT seems that this here Dr. Muck wouldn't play the national anthem, Mawruss, because he found it was inartistic," Abe Potash said, as he turned to the editorial page of his daily paper.

"Well, how did he find the national currency, Abe?" Morris Perlmutter inquired. "Also inartistic?"

"He didn't say," Abe replied, "but a statement was given out by Major Higginson that"——

"Who's Major Higginson?" Morris asked.

"He's the feller that owns the Boston Symphony Orchestra which this here Dr. Muck is the conductor of it," Abe replied.

"That must be an elegant orchestra, Abe," Morris commented. "A major is running it and a doctor is conducting it. I suppose they've got working for them as fiddlers a lot of attorneys and counsellors-at-law, and the chances is that if a feller was to come there looking for a job operating a trombone on account he had had experience as a practical tromboner with the New York Philharmonics, y'understand, they would probably turn him down unless he could show a diploma from a recognized school of pharmacy."

"For all I know they might insist on having a certified public accountant, Mawruss," Abe said, "but he would have to be a shark on the trombone anyway, because I understand this here Dr. Muck and Major Higginson run a high class orchestra."

"Well, it only goes to show that you don't got to got a whole lot of common sense to run a high grade orchestra, Abe," Morris retorted, "which if I would be a German doctor stranded in Boston, y'understand, and I had to Gott soll huten conduct an orchestra for a living, I would consider to myself that there ain't many Americans in or out of the medical profession conducting orchestras over in Germany just now which is refusing to play Die Wacht am Rhein or Heil im der Siegerkranz on artistic grounds and getting away with it. Furthermore, Abe, Dr. Muck should ought to figure that no matter if he was running the highest grade orchestra in existence or anyhow in the State of Massachusetts, y'understand, and if nobody pays for a ticket to hear it, what is it? Am I right or wrong."

"He probably thought there was enough Americans crazy about music to make his orchestra pay even if he did insult them, Mawruss," Abe said, "because you know as well as I do, Mawruss, there was a lot of sympathy shown by Americans to them German singers which got fired at the Metropolitan Opera House for insulting Americans or being pro-German. It seems that one of them made up a funny song about the sinking of the Lusitania and some of the Americans which heard him sing it said that the tone production was wonderful, and that such a really remarkable breath control, y'understand, they hadn't heard it since Adelina Patti in her palmiest days, and I bet yer if Dr. Muck was to take that song and set it to music so as the Boston Symphony Orchestra could play it, them same people and plenty like them would say that the wood wind was this, the strings was that, and something about the coda and the obligato, y'understand. In fact, Mawruss, they wouldn't care what they said, just so long as they could give the impression that they was regular sharks when it comes to music, but what kind of impression they gave when it come to patriotism and common sense, such people seemingly don't give a nickel.

"Why, you take this here lady singer at the Metropolitan Opera House," Abe continued, "which her husband was agent for the Krupp Manufacturing Company, and when she got fired, y'understand, it looked like some of these here breath control and tone production experts was going to hold a meeting and regularly move and second that a copy of the said resolutions suitably engrossed be transmitted to her care Krupp Manufacturing Company, 2042,4,6 and 8 Buelow Boulevard, Essen, on account she had been working for the Metropolitan Opera House for pretty near twenty years which the way some of them singers goes on singing year after year at the Metropolitan Opera House, Mawruss, sometimes you couldn't tell whether the Metropolitan Opera House was an Opera House or a Home, y'understand."

"That's neither here nor there, Abe," Morris said. "There ain't no reason to my mind why the Metropolitan Opera House shouldn't ought to hire ladies whose husbands is working for American concerns or is out of a job, y'understand, and also it wouldn't be a bad idea to see that some of them baritones and bassos which was formerly sending home every week from two to five hundred dollars apiece to the old folks in Charlottenburg and Wilmersdorf, y'understand, give up their places to a few native born fellers who contributed to the first and second Liberty loans, understand me, and ain't supporting a relation in the world."

"But the point which them coda and obligato fans make is that if a feller like this here Captain Kreisler of the Austrian army is the best fiddler in existence, y'understand, it's up to us Americans to pay two dollars and fifty cents a throw, not including war tax, to hear him fiddle, and that we shouldn't ought to got no Rishus against him even if he would be only over here on a leave of absence dating from January 1st, 1915, up to and including seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars," Abe said, "because it is claimed that the best fiddlers in the world and the best conductors in the world don't belong to any country. They are international."

"Maybe they are, Abe," Morris agreed, "but the money which they earn belongs to the country in which they spend it, understand me which my idea is that these are war times and if the ordinary people is willing to take their wheat bread with a little potato flour in it them big league music fans should ought to be willing to take their fiddle playing with a few sour notes in it, so if the best fiddler in the world is an Austrian who spends his money at home, y'understand, they should ought to be contented with the next best one, and if he is also an Austrian or a German let them work on right straight down the line till they find one who ain't, because trading with the enemy is trading with the enemy, whether you are trading with a German fiddler or a German fish dealer, and if you are going to hand over money to Germany, it don't make much difference if you do it in the name of art or in the name of fish."

"Well, you couldn't exactly feel the same way about an artist with his art as you could about a fish dealer with his fish," Abe protested.

"I didn't say you could," Morris said. "I've got every respect for this here Kreisler as a feller which plays something elegant on the fiddle, but at the same time he has had himself extensively advertised with pictures the same like King C. Gillette and William L. Douglas, and that's probably what made him, Abe, because it's pretty safe to say that if you could by any possibility induce and persuade them people which is hollering about art being international and Kreisler being the best fiddler in existence, y'understand, to go and hear Kreisler at a concert where under the name of Harris Fine and wearing false whiskers he was playing a programme consisting principally of Rabinowitz's Concerto in G, Opus No. 256 B, y'understand, they would come away saying it was awful rotten even for an amateur, and that you should ought to hear Kriesler play Rabinowitz's Concerto in G. Opus No. 256 B, and then you would know how that feller Harris Fine murdered it. So that's why I say, Abe, that advertised art comes under the head of merchandise, and I ain't so sure that the artist who advertises ain't just as much of a business man as we would say, for example, a fish dealer."

"Well, there's one thing about this here trouble with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mawruss," Abe said; "it has put Boston on the map for a few days, which the way New York people was acting about electing a mayor in New York City, y'understand, you would think that New York, England, France and Italy was fighting Germany and Austria, and that if the mayor of New York said so, the war would go on or stop as the case might be and otherwise not."

"You couldn't blame New York at that," Morris said. "People out in Seattle which has never been no nearer New York as Fall City, Wash., or Snoqualmie, goes round singing 'Take Me Back to New York Town, oder 'Give My Regards To Broadway,' and young ladies living in Saint Louis, which is a good sized city, y'understand, reads in a magazine printed in Chicago—also a good sized city—story after story which has got to do with a wealthy New York clubman, or a poor New York working girl, or a beautiful New York actress, while the advertising section has got pictures by the hundreds of automobiles, ready-made clothing, vacuum cleaners, beds and bedding, health underwear and cash registers, and all of them are fixed up with the Grand Central depot across the street, or the Public Library showing through a window, or anyhow the Flatiron Building and Madison Square Garden not half a column away, y'understand. Also there is a New York Store in every village, and a New York letter in every newspaper, and one way or another you would think that the whole United States was trying to prove to New York that it was as important as New York has for a long time already suspected."

"Well, ain't it?" Abe asked.

"It couldn't be," Morris replied. "Take for instance this here election for mayor, and the way the New York papers talked about it you would think the kaiser says to Hindenberg: 'Listen, Max, don't ship no more soldiers nowheres till we hear how things are breaking for Hillkowitz in New York,' or maybe he said Mitchel or Hylan—you couldn't tell, and Hindenberg says: 'But I understand Mitchel is pretty strong up in the 23rd Assembly District in certain parts of the Bronx, so I think, Chief, it might be a good idea to have a couple of dozen divisions of artillery sent to Dvinsk and Riga.' But the kaiser says: 'Now, do as I tell you, Max. I got a wireless from Mexico that Hilikowitz will carry 309 out of 413 election districts in the Borough of Richmond alone.' And Hindenberg says: 'Where did they get get that dope? I tell you they don't know nothing but Hylan down on Staten Island, and if you take my adivce, Chief, you'll phone Ludendorff to hold the Siegfried line, the Lohengrin line, the Trovatore line, the Travvyayter line, the Bohemian Girl line, and all the other lines from Aida to Zampa, because in my opinion Mitchel has a walk-over.'"

"That's where they both made a mistake," Abe commented, "because it was a landslide for Hylan."

"Yow they was mistaken?" Morris said. "Do you suppose for one moment that the kaiser had got so much as an inkling that they were going to elect a mayor in New York? Oser! And with this here Hindenberg, you could tell from the feller's face that for all he understands about the English language, Abe, the word mayor don't exist at all. As for the way they choose a mayor in America, that grobe Kerl couldn't tell you whether they elect a mayor, appoint a mayor or cut for a mayor—aces low. And that's the way it goes in New York, Abe. They think that the whole of Europe is watching with palpitations of the heart to see who is going to be elected mayor of New York, and they never stop to figure that there ain't six persons out of the six millions in New York which could tell you the name of the mayor of London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Petrograd or for that matter Yonkers or Jersey City."

"From the mayor which they finally chose in New York, Mawruss," Abe commented, "a feller needn't got to be so terribly ignorant as all that to suppose that not only did the people of New York instead of voting for mayor cut for him, aces low, y'understand, but that they also turned up the ace."

Next Sunday "Abe" and "Mawruss" Will Discuss "Revolutionizing the Revolution Business."

HERALD
DEC. 8 1917

AMERICAN

New York City.

DR. MUCK NOT AN ENEMY ALIEN

Though Born in Bavaria He Became a Swiss Citizen by Naturalization.

ELLIS MAKES STATEMENT

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7—In response to an inquiry at the Swiss legation it was said today that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, and not a German subject.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Warzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant, when Dr. Muck was eight years old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland and the status of the son followed that of the father.

Son Took Swiss Naturalization

Later when the son had become a man he, of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship. Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had.

It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich and that he has lived there at various intervals.

Manager Ellis's Statement.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiry of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

Find Nothing Incriminating.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the federal authorities 'have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has compiled with them in letter and spirit.

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises 51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, two Bohemians.

"One subject which has caused much unkind and undeserved criticism of Dr. Muck has been a report emanating from Providence and sent broadcast over the country that he refused to conduct 'The Star Spangled Banner' in our concerts. He has never refused. On the contrary, when requested, he willingly complied, and he has since conducted our national anthem in every concert by our organization."

National Music and National Currency

As Discussed by "Abe" and "Mawruss"

Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

By Montague Glass

"IT seems that this here Dr. Muck wouldn't play the national anthem, Mawruss, because he found it was inartistic," Abe Potash said, as he turned to the editorial page of his daily paper.

"Well, how did he find the national currency, Abe?" Morris Perlmutter inquired. "Also inartistic?"

"He didn't say," Abe replied, "but a statement was given out by Major Higginson that"—

"Who's Major Higginson?" Morris asked.

"He's the feller that owns the Boston Symphony Orchestra which this here Dr. Muck is the conductor of it," Abe replied.

"That must be an elegant orchestra, Abe," Morris commented. "A major is running it and a doctor is conducting it. I suppose they've got working for them as fiddlers a lot of attorneys and counsellors-at-law, and the chances is that if a feller was to come there looking for a job operating a trombone on account he had had experience as a practical tromboner with the New York Philharmonics, y'understand, they would probably turn him down unless he could show a diploma from a recognized school of pharmacy."

"For all I know they might insist on having a certified public accountant, Mawruss," Abe said, "but he would have to be a shark on the trombone anyway, because I understand this here Dr. Muck and Major Higginson run a high class orchestra."

"Well, it only goes to show that you don't got to got a whole lot of common sense to run a high grade orchestra, Abe," Morris retorted, "which if I would be a German doctor stranded in Boston, y'understand, and I had to Gott soll huten conduct an orchestra for a living, I would consider to myself that there ain't many Americans in or out of the medical profession conducting orchestras over in Germany just now which is refusing to play Die Wacht am Rhein or Heil im der Siegerkranz on artistic grounds and getting away with it. Furthermore, Abe, Dr. Muck should ought to figure that no matter if he was running the highest grade orchestra in existence or anyhow in the State of Massachusetts, y'understand, and if nobody pays for a ticket to hear it, what is it? Am I right or wrong."

"He probably thought there was enough Americans crazy about music to make his orchestra pay even if he did insult them, Mawruss," Abe said, "because you know as well as I do, Mawruss, there was a lot of sympathy shown by Americans to them German singers which got fired at the Metropolitan Opera House for insulting Americans or being pro-German. It seems that one of them made up a funny song about the sinking of the Lusitania and some of the Americans which heard him sing it said that the tone production was wonderful, and that such a really remarkable breath control, y'understand, they hadn't heard it since Adelina Patti in her palmiest days, and I bet yer if Dr. Muck was to take that song and set it to music so as the Boston Symphony Orchestra could play it, them same people and plenty like them would say that the wood wind was this, the strings was that, and something about the coda and the obligato, y'understand. In fact, Mawruss, they wouldn't care what they said, just so long as they could give the impression that they was regular sharks when it comes to music, but what kind of impression they gave when it come to patriotism and common sense, such people seemingly don't give a nickel.

"Why, you take this here lady singer at the Metropolitan Opera House," Abe continued, "which her husband was agent for the Krupp Manufacturing Company, and when she got fired, y'understand, it looked like some of these here breath control and tone production experts was going to hold a meeting and regularly move and second that a copy of the said resolutions suitably engrossed be transmitted to her care Krupp Manufacturing Company, 2042,4,6 and 8 Buelow Boulevard, Essen, on account she had been working for the Metropolitan Opera House for pretty near twenty years which the way some of them singers goes on singing year after year at the Metropolitan Opera House, Mawruss, sometimes you couldn't tell whether the Metropolitan Opera House was an Opera House or a Home, y'understand."

"That's neither here nor there, Abe," Morris said. "There ain't no reason to my mind why the Metropolitan Opera House shouldn't ought to hire ladies whose husbands is working for American concerns or is out of a job, y'understand, and also it wouldn't be a bad idea to see that some of them baritones and bassos which was formerly sending home every week from two to five hundred dollars apiece to the old folks in Charlottenburg and Wilmersdorf, y'understand, give up their places to a few native born fellers who contributed to the first and second Liberty loans, understand me, and ain't supporting a relation in the world."

"But the point which them coda and obligato fans make is that if a feller like this here Captain Kreisler of the Austrian army is the best fiddler in existence, y'understand, it's up to us Americans to pay two dollars and fifty cents a throw, not including war tax, to hear him fiddle, and that we shouldn't ought to got no Rishus against him even if he would be only over here on a leave of absence dating from January 1st, 1915, up to and including seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars," Abe said, "because it is claimed that the best fiddlers in the world and the best conductors in the world don't belong to any country. They are international."

"Maybe they are, Abe," Morris agreed, "but the money which they earn belongs to the country in which they spend it, understand me which my idea is that these are war times and if the ordinary people is willing to take their wheat bread with a little potato flour in it them big league music fans should ought to be willing to take their fiddle playing with a few sour notes in it, so if the best fiddler in the world is an Austrian who spends his money at home, y'understand, they should ought to be contented with the next best one, and if he is also an Austrian or a German let them work on right straight down the line till they find one who ain't, because trading with the enemy is trading with the enemy, whether you are trading with a German fiddler or a German fish dealer, and if you are going to hand over money to Germany, it don't make much difference if you do it in the name of art or in the name of fish."

"Well, you couldn't exactly feel the same way about an artist with his art as you could about a fish dealer with his fish," Abe protested.

"I didn't say you could," Morris said. "I've got every respect for this here Kreisler as a feller which plays something elegant on the fiddle, but at the same time he has had himself extensively advertised with pictures the same like King C. Gillette and William L. Douglas, and that's probably what made him, Abe, because it's pretty safe to say that if you could by any possibility induce and persuade them people which is hollering about art being international and Kreisler being the best fiddler in existence, y'understand, to go and hear Kreisler at a concert where under the name of Harris Fine and wearing false whiskers he was playing a programme consisting principally of Rabinowitz's Concerto in G, Opus No. 256 B, y'understand, they would come away saying it was awful rotten even for an amateur, and that you should ought to hear Kriesler play Rabinowitz's Concerto in G. Opus No. 256 B, and then you would know how that feller Harris Fine murdered it. So that's why I say, Abe, that advertised art comes under the head of merchandise, and I ain't so sure that the artist who advertises ain't just as much of a business man as we would say, for example, a fish dealer."

"Well, there's one thing about this here trouble with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mawruss," Abe said; "it has put Boston on the map for a few days, which the way New York people was acting about electing a mayor in New York City, y'understand, you would think that New York, England, France and Italy was fighting Germany and Austria, and that if the mayor of New York said so, the war would go on or stop as the case might be and otherwise not."

"You couldn't blame New York at that," Morris said. "People out in Seattle which has never been no nearer New York as Fall City, Wash., or Snoqualmie, goes round singing 'Take Me Back to New York Town, oder 'Give My Regards To Broadway,' and young ladies living in Saint Louis, which is a good sized city, y'understand, reads in a magazine printed in Chicago—also a good sized city—story after story which has got to do with a wealthy New York clubman, or a poor New York working girl, or a beautiful New York actress, while the advertising section has got pictures by the hundreds of automobiles, ready-made clothing, vacuum cleaners, beds and bedding, health underwear and cash registers, and all of them are fixed up with the Grand Central depot across the street, or the Public Library showing through a window, or anyhow the Flatiron Building and Madison Square Garden not half a column away, y'understand. Also there is a New York Store in every village, and a New York letter in every newspaper, and one way or another you would think that the whole United States was trying to prove to New York that it was as important as New York has for a long time already suspected."

"Well, ain't it?" Abe asked.

"It couldn't be," Morris replied. "Take for instance this here election for mayor, and the way the New York papers talked about it you would think the kaiser says to Hindenberg: 'Listen, Max, don't ship no more soldiers nowheres till we hear how things are breaking for Hillkowitz in New York," or maybe he said Mitchel or Hylan—you couldn't tell, and Hindenberg says: 'But I understand Mitchel is pretty strong up in the 23rd Assembly District in certain parts of the Bronx, so I think, Chief, it might be a good idea to have a couple of dozen divisions of artillery sent to Dvinsk and Riga.' But the kaiser says: 'Now, do as I tell you, Max. I got a wireless from Mexico that Hilikowitz will carry 309 out of 413 election districts in the Borough of Richmond alone.' And Hindenberg says: 'Where did they get get that dope? I tell you they don't know nothing but Hylan down on Staten Island, and if you take my adivce, Chief, you'll phone Ludendorff to hold the Siegfried line, the Lohengrin line, the Trovatore line, the Travvyayter line, the Bohemian Girl line, and all the other lines from Aida to Zampa, because in my opinion Mitchel has a walk-over.'"

"That's where they both made a mistake," Abe commented, "because it was a landslide for Hylan."

"Yow they was mistaken?" Morris said. "Do you suppose for one moment that the kaiser had got so much as an inkling that they were going to elect a mayor in New York? Oser! And with this here Hindenberg, you could tell from the feller's face that for all he understands about the English language, Abe, the word mayor don't exist at all. As for the way they choose a mayor in America, that grobe Kerl couldn't tell you whether they elect a mayor, appoint a mayor or cut for a mayor—aces low. And that's the way it goes in New York, Abe. They think that the whole of Europe is watching with palpitations of the heart to see who is going to be elected mayor of New York, and they never stop to figure that there ain't six persons out of the six millions in New York which could tell you the name of the mayor of London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Petrograd or for that matter Yonkers or Jersey City."

"From the mayor which they finally chose in New York, Mawruss," Abe commented, "a feller needn't got to be so terribly ignorant as all that to suppose that not only did the people of New York instead of voting for mayor cut for him, aces low, y'understand, but that they also turned up the ace."

Next Sunday "Abe" and "Mawruss" Will Discuss "Revolutionizing the Revolution Business."

m Journal

dress Providence, R. I.

e DEC 3-1917

Commenting on a recent concert in this city when "The Star Spangled Banner" was not played as requested, the New Music Review has this to say: "There are rumors about the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that it may be disbanded at the end of the season. This would, indeed, be a national loss. A conductor, no matter how able he may be, should not be counted greater than an orchestra like that in Boston. If for years to come a German conductor will be persona non grata, are there no Frenchmen, Russians, Italians who could continue the triumphal course of this orchestra? Possibly an American could be caught. But let us not insist on this or that conductor simply because he is an American."

In another paragraph the same publication makes this suggestion:

"To go back to 'The Star Spangled Banner.' Is there not a use of the national anthem that will soon be an abuse, if it is not already one? We refer to the performance at theatres either before the curtain is raised, or as the audience is dismissed. In the latter case, officers and soldiers present, stand at attention and salute. The others in the audience, 99 per cent. of them, rush out, regardless of any exhibition of patriotism. Played at every theatrical performance, the orchestra soon looks on the matter as a perfunctory task."

* * *

In view of

TRIBUNE

s: Providence, R. I.

DEC 2 - 1917

ALIEN ENEMY LAW PREVENTS CONCERTS

Three Boston Symphony Cancelled as Law Hits 23 Musicians.

Boston, Dec. 1.—On account of the enemy alien regulations which went into effect to-lay, the concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra was to have given next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week in Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, respectively, have been cancelled.

This was announced by the management of the orchestra in telegrams sent to those cities to-night. The telegrams said the regulations concerning aliens affected 23 members of the orchestra and made it impossible properly to give the concerts.

aper Cutting

Journal

Providence, R. I.

DEC 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY FORCED TO CANCEL THREE CONCERTS

Orchestra's Action Due to Alien Enemy Regulations.

Boston, Dec. 1.—On account of the alien enemy regulations which went into effect to-day, the concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra was to have given Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, respectively, have been cancelled.

This was announced by the management of the orchestra in telegrams sent to those cities to-night. The telegrams said the regulations concerning aliens affected 23 members of the orchestra and made it impossible properly to give the concerts.

Teuton Musicians Dropped.

Philadelphia, Dec. 1.—The Philadelphia Orchestra Association announced to-day that it had dispensed with the services of eight alien German and Austrian players of the orchestra. The action was based, said the announcement, upon the President's recent proclamation, which, in effect, would have made it impossible to carry out the season's programme, particularly with respect to touring. The vacated positions will be filled by American musicians.

n PUBLIC Ledger

ess PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The automobile driver escaped. and is 290 feet

ALIEN ENEMY BAN CUTS BOSTON AND PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRAS

Hub Organization Cancels Concert Scheduled Here for Tomorrow.

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Dec. 1.

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

THE regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for Monday evening at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia.

It will therefore not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Heppe's. The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Local Body Drops Eight Unnaturalized German and Austrian Musicians.

THE Philadelphia Orchestra Association announces that it has dispensed with the services of eight German and Austrian players for the reason that they hold only first papers of citizenship. A statement last night added:

"The Philadelphia Orchestra Association is a patriotic institution, and it is felt that the adoption of the course indicated is the only one which can be regarded as being compatible with the spirit and obligation of the times.

"The foregoing action is based upon the President's recent proclamation, which, in effect, would have made it impossible to carry out the season's program, particularly with respect to touring. However, the vacated positions will be filled by American musicians, thus enabling the orchestra to maintain its standard of efficiency without prejudice to the remaining concerts, which will be given as originally planned."

HERALD

ss: Washington, D. C.

TIMES

s: Washington, D. C.

DEC 2 - 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CANCELS

Telegraphic word from C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to the effect that the new enemy alien law will not permit the orchestra to play at the New National Theater Tuesday afternoon as scheduled.

Persons holding concert tickets may receive refunds at Droop's Music Store, Thirteenth and G streets northwest.

Mr. Ellis explained in a message last night that it was impossible for him to give proper notice through the newspapers, as required by law, as the management was not certain of the effect of the enemy alien regulations until Saturday afternoon.

GET YOUR MONEY BACK, SYMPHONY MGR. WIRES

Money will be refunded at Droop's music store to persons holding tickets for the canceled concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was to have been held here Tuesday, according to a telegram to The Times today from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, in Boston. The concert was canceled because twenty-three members of the orchestra are affected by the alien enemy regulations which bar them from the District.

From ENQUIRER

Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Date DEC 3 - 1917

No Boston Symphony Concert Tonight

The announced abandonment of the concert which was to have been given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music this evening will be greatly regretted by the music lovers of Philadelphia, but they may be expected to accept it cheerfully as a sacrifice which patriotism entails. Circumstances rendered it unavoidable. Acting upon the authority with which he has been very properly invested with a view to the protection of the public welfare and to the most successful prosecution of the war, President Wilson lately issued a proclamation forbidding the residence in or entrance of enemy aliens into the District of Columbia. As there are twenty-three members of the Boston orchestra to which this proclamation applies, it could not be taken there in its entirety, and as these musicians who come under the ban could not be replaced, the tour in which this city and Washington were included had to be given up.

Whether this means that Colonel Higginson's organization will make no more visits to Philadelphia during the present season does not yet appear. It presumably will not do so unless the enemy aliens within its ranks shall be displaced by men who do not come within the prohibitions of the law, and there are two good reasons why it is not likely that such a substitution will be effected. One reason is that Colonel Higginson, by whom alone the orchestra is maintained, has indicated in his public utterances that he would not be willing to make so radical a change in its personnel. He takes a natural and legitimate pride in the unity and solidarity of its membership, whose continuance, with very little modification, from one year to another is regarded as an important if not essential factor in its efficiency.

There is another reason why a reorganization of the orchestra to the extent which the ban on alien enemies necessitates is highly improbable. It is that outside of the union, to which the Boston orchestra does not belong, musicians of the requisite ability could only be obtained if at all with the greatest difficulty. We may therefore assume that it will give no more concerts, at least for the present season if not as long as the war lasts, on the Washington circuit, and that our music lovers will have to make out as best they can without it. At one time its defection would have made a serious gap in our musical entertainment, but happily that time has passed. We are no longer dependent upon Boston for music of the symphony class. We have an orchestra of our own which compares with it very favorably in all respects, and as the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has been brought within the provisions of the law, will continue its admirable ministrations, the deprivation which circumstances have compelled is no great matter.

A community which used to get along quite comfortably with five symphony concerts in a season will not suffer with its own orchestra furnishing five times as many.

RECORD

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 2 1917

SYMPHONY CONCERT OFF

Boston Organization Crippled by Loss of Alien Musicians.

The regulations concerning aliens, which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington, affect 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for Monday evening in the Academy of Music. It will, therefore, not be given, and the price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Heppe's.

"The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier," said Manager C. A. Ellis last night, "but owing to the holiday definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon."

dress

e UEC

Current Topics of the Town

MANY Philadelphians who did not take note of the detailed provisions of the President's proclamation of November 16, with regard to enemy aliens, are asking how it affects the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, dispensing with the services of twenty-three members, canceled its Academy concert last evening, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, which has reluctantly let eight German and Austrian players go.

Austrians, to be sure, are not yet enemy aliens, because we have not yet declared war on their country, but at any time they may become such, through the action of Congress.

One of the stipulations that hit at the touring orchestra is this:

"An alien enemy shall not enter or be found within the District of Columbia."

Both the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras—to the manifest satisfaction of large audiences—visit Washington several times in the course of the season, and this they could not do with the unreformed personnel.

ANOTHER provision that interposes an insuperable obstacle to travel for the Germans who are members is the one that forbids an enemy alien to go within 100 yards of a wharf or pier used by "any vessel or vessels of more than 500 tons gross engaged in foreign or domestic trade other than fishing"; and again, "An alien enemy shall not, except on public ferries, be found on any ocean, bay, river or other waters within three miles of the shore line of the United States."

The exception in favor of ferries would technically permit the Philadelphia Orchestra, as at present manned, to go to Camden for talking-machine records—but in so doing Mr. Rahmig or Mr. Conrad or Mr. Pleier or Mr. Lindemann might find himself within 100 yards of a 500-ton ship engaged in trade, and thus the law would be contravened.

Monarchs are not the only ones whose heads have lain upon uneasy pillows since the war began. The orchestra manager and the operatic impresario can shake hands over a whole Pandora's box of troubles of their own.

SOLOISTS have their discomfitures, too, through no fault of theirs. Madame Melba was to have sung here last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As it was, she dropped quietly into town, kept a breakfast engagement with her friend, Mrs. Scammon-Jones, and pursued the even soprano of her way to other cities that share Philadelphia's admiring approval of the great British prima donna.

Madame Melba, of course, is an Australian, taking her name from Melbourne. She has raised hundreds of thousands of dollars since the war began for Red Cross work. On a previous visit to Philadelphia Mrs. Scammon-Jones arranged a visit to the theatre for her guest. The play was "Daddy Long Legs." Madame Melba, who laughed and wept alternately, told me it was the first time since August, 1914, that she had been in the playhouse.

om ENQUIRER

dress: Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 2 - 1

e DEC 2 -

RULING ON ALIENS HOLDS UP SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Cancels Date at Academy of Music—23 Members Are Foreigners

The regulations concerning aliens recently issued by the Department of Justice at Washington affect twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and made it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for tomorrow, Monday evening, at the Academy of Music. It will, therefore, not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Heppe's.

The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon.

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 4 1917

QUERY STATUS OF 2 OUT OF ORCHESTRA

Department of Justice to Be Asked to Decide Problem

UNION TO VIEW CASES

Hardship on Men Regretted by Manager of Musical Organization

Arthur Judson, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said yesterday he had invoked the aid of the Department of Justice to ascertain the real status of two of the eight alien musicians dismissed at the close of Saturday night's performance

One of these, so it is said, is in reality a Russian, although he has always deemed himself an Austrian The other, it is understood, had already declared his intention of becoming a British citizen when he came to this country.

Mr. Judson again emphasized the position of the orchestra in this and allied matters. He declared not only were these men never pro-German during the entrance of this country into the war, but he insisted they were always "pro-American." He said:

"It is a hardship on them, but our position is plain. Here is an orchestra that has 4000 or 5000 members, all of whom are intensely patriotic, and want to obey the President and do everything to help win the war. Not only do they want to conform to the Government orders, but they want to voluntarily do anything that will aid our cause.

"We want, so far as possible, to wed patriotism and art; but, if one thing must go, then it will be art. It is with a conception of the real feelings of the patriotic people who support the orchestra that we took this step, for you can see for yourself how this would appear to the public. We could have kept these eight men in our organization to play the concerts here, while we took others with us on our tour. But the effect of that we felt would be bad."

DR. MUCK NOT A PRUSSIAN, CONCERT PATRONS TOLD

Manager of Boston Orchestra Sends Letter to Subscribers

Subscribers to the concerts here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have received the following letter, signed by C. A. Ellis, the manager:

For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Carl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

Doctor Muck is not a Prussian.

He is not an "enemy alien" of the United States.

He is not an official of the German Government.

He is not a citizen of Germany.

While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Doctor Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities "have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country."

Doctor Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit.

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City

Date

"A Successor for Muck."

Editor Globe:—Your recent editorial "A Successor for Muck," written, I suppose, by your always interesting Mr. Sanborn, calls attention to a phase of this notorious matter that, in so far as I know, has been completely ignored. Although Dr. Muck is not indispensable to the future welfare of the Boston Symphony, an impression has gone out from the interests in control of this organization to the effect that if the public would not accept him the orchestra would be disbanded. This attitude, although defensible on personal grounds, is absolutely indefensible from the standpoints of patriotism, philanthropy, and esthetics. The Muck incident is to be regretted, but now that we are face to face with it we should surely turn it to good account if the directors of the Boston Symphony secured in place of Dr. Muck one of the world's really great conductors. With the exception of Arthur Nikisch, the Boston Symphony has never possessed a conductor of a degree of greatness commensurate with its significance. In suggesting for consideration the incomparable Toscanini (to say nothing of the other names mentioned), The Globe has advanced the most interesting idea that we have seen contributed to this subject.

CHARLES L. BUCHANAN.

New York, Dec. 4.

BULLETIN
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 3 1917

ANTI-ALIEN PROCLAMATION WON'T WEAKEN ORCHESTRAS

Musicians Here Say Organizations Will Survive Forced Withdrawal of Certain Members

The growing influence and importance of the great symphony orchestras in the United States, as musicians here view the situation, will not be lessened by the forced dissolution of the organizations which, like the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be compelled to oust all so-called enemy aliens from among their players.

Eight German and Austrian musicians in Mr. Stokowski's organization were compelled to sever their connection with the Philadelphia Orchestra after the concert on Saturday night and now every member of the big band is an American citizen.

Under the terms of the recent Presidential proclamation which forbids an enemy alien to travel outside the bounds of the State in which he happens to reside, the various big orchestras of the country will be compelled to eliminate all unnaturalized Germans and Austrians or abandon their profitable concert tours.

Arthur Judson, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, made it plain in the formal announcement of the retirement of eight of the players that they were without exception alien enemies in a technical sense only, and that the orchestra management had had no reason to feel prejudiced against them personally. Mr. Judson called attention to the fact that these musicians no longer have the privilege of going from State to State. They will not be permitted hereafter to go even as far as Camden.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau, the

From NEW YORKER

Jou

Address: New York City.

Date

Dr. Karl Muck wird Symphonie-Konzert in Academy leiten.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, der Leiter des „Brooklyn Institute", kündigte gestern an, daß das Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters unter der persönlichen Leitung seines Kapellmeisters Dr. Karl Muck bestimmt, wie auch ursprünglich angekündigt wurde, heute Abend in der Academy of Music stattfinden werde. Die Gerüchte, daß das Konzert aufgehoben worden sei, entsprächen nicht den Tatsachen.

HERALD
New York City

DEC 7 1917

BROOKLYN MAKES KARL MUCK LEAD NATIONAL ANTHEM TWICE

Audience in Academy of Music Demands Repetition—Huge Flags Draped Across Platform—Mme. Melba Sings Arias from Operas at Concert.

Dr. Karl Much conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" in the Brooklyn Academy of Music last night. He conducted it not once, but twice. Brooklyn's music lovers saw that he did a good job. As he led the national anthem two huge American flags formed a background for his men.

Just how the men of the orchestra were enabled to dodge the barred zones in Boston and New York and keep the date in Brooklyn could not be learned at the concert. Reports from Boston had been that most of the concerts in other cities were being cancelled because of the government's regulations regarding the movements of alien enemies. When W. H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra, was asked about it he said:—

"The fact that the orchestra is here should be sufficient answer. I can say nothing more."

Every one in the big audience arose at the first strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," and the applause that rolled up at the end of the anthem fairly shook the chandelier. The demonstration was prolonged far beyond the limit of applause that usually greets the anthem. A few persons sat down. The handclapping swelled in volume.

Dr. Muck stood like a graven image, his back to the tumult, his arms at his sides. Two minutes of the applause provoked a few hisses. Whether they were for the German conductor and the aliens in the orchestra or from impatient music lovers who wanted the real concert performance to start could not be learned.

Finally, when it seemed as if the applause might last all night, Dr. Muck motioned to his men, and "The Star Spangled Banner" was done all over again, and well done, too. Then everybody sat down, as if a good night's work had been accomplished.

Mme. Nellie Melba was the soloist. It was her first public appearance in New York in a long time. She had a hearty welcome. She sang arias from "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Idoneneo" and "The Prodigal Son." The orchestra's big number was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony—that is, next to "The Star Spangled Banner."

It was announced that the orchestra would give its concert in Carnegie Hall to-night.

Department of Justice Permitted Orchestra to Leave Boston.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday.—Permission to leave Massachusetts and go to New York was given to Dr. Karl Muck and the other twenty-two alien members of the Boston Orchestra by the Department of Justice in Washington, D. C. Permission to cross New York city to Brooklyn was granted by Francis J. Coffey, United States Attorney of New York.

DRY GOODS, &C.

QUERY STATUS OF 2 OUT OF ORCHESTRA

Department of Justice to Be Asked to Decide Problem

UNION TO VIEW CASES

Hardship on Men Regretted by Manager of Musical Organization

Arthur Judson, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said yesterday he had invoked the aid of the Department of Justice to ascertain the real status of two of the eight alien musicians dismissed at the close of Saturday night's performance

One of these, so it is said, is in reality a Russian, although he has always deemed himself an Austrian The other, it is understood, had already declared his intention of becoming a British citizen when he came to this country.

Mr. Judson again emphasized the position of the orchestra in this and allied matters. He declared not only were these men never pro-German during the entrance of this country into the war, but he insisted they were always "pro-American." He said:

"It is a hardship on them, but our position is plain. Here is an orchestra that has 4000 or 5000 members, all of whom are intensely patriotic, and want to obey the President and do everything to help win the war. Not only do they want to conform to the Government orders, but they want to voluntarily do anything that will aid our cause.

"We want, so far as possible, to wed patriotism and art; but, if one thing must go, then it will be art. It is with a conception of the real feelings of the patriotic people who support the orchestra that we took this step, for you can see for yourself how this would appear to the public. We could have kept these eight men in our organization to play the concerts here, while we took others with us on our tour. But the effect of that we felt would be bad."

DR. MUCK NOT A PRUSSIAN, CONCERT PATRONS TOLD

Manager of Boston Orchestra Sends Letter to Subscribers

Subscribers to the concerts here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have received the following letter, signed by C. A. Ellis, the manager:

For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Carl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

Doctor Muck is not a Prussian.

He is not an "enemy alien" of the United States.

He is not an official of the German Government.

He is not a citizen of Germany.

While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Doctor Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities "have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country."

Doctor Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit.

From EVENING GLOBE

Address: New York City

Date .....

"A Successor for Muck."

Editor Globe:—Your recent editorial "A Successor for Muck," written, I suppose, by your always interesting Mr. Sanborn, calls attention to a phase of this notorious matter that, in so far as I know, has been completely ignored. Although Dr. Muck is not indispensable to the future welfare of the Boston Symphony, an impression has gone out from the interests in control of this organization to the effect that if the public would not accept him the orchestra would be disbanded. This attitude, although defensible on personal grounds, is absolutely indefensible from the standpoints of patriotism, philanthropy, and esthetics. The Muck incident is to be regretted, but now that we are face to face with it we should surely turn it to good account if the directors of the Boston Symphony secured in place of Dr. Muck one of the world's really great conductors. With the exception of Arthur Nikisch, the Boston Symphony has never possessed a conductor of a degree of greatness commensurate with its significance. In suggesting for consideration the incomparable Toscanini (to say nothing of the other names mentioned), The Globe has advanced the most interesting idea that we have seen contributed to this subject.

CHARLES L. BUCHANAN.

New York, Dec. 4.

BULLETIN

Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 3 - 1917

ANTI-ALIEN PROCLAMATION WON'T WEAKEN ORCHESTRAS

Musicians Here Say Organizations Will Survive Forced Withdrawal of Certain Members

The growing influence and importance of the great symphony orchestras in the United States [illegible] the situation, will not be lessened by the [illegible] of the prejudice which, like the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be compelled to oust all so-called enemy aliens from among their players.

Eight German and Austrian musicians in Mr. Stokowski's organization were compelled to sever their connection with the Philadelphia Orchestra after the concert on Saturday night and now every member of the big band is an American citizen.

Under the terms of the recent Presidential proclamation which forbids an enemy alien to travel outside the bounds of the State in which he happens to reside, the various big orchestras of the country will be compelled to eliminate all unnaturalized Germans and Austrians or abandon their profitable concert tours.

Arthur Judson, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, made it plain in the formal announcement of the retirement of eight of the players that they were without exception alien enemies in a technical sense only, and that the orchestra management had had no reason to feel prejudiced against them personally. Mr. Judson called attention to the fact that these musicians no longer have the privilege of going from State to State. They will not be permitted hereafter to go even as far as Camden.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau, the

From NEW YORKER.

Address: New York City.

Date .....

Dr. Karl Muck wird Symphonie-Konzert in Academy leiten.

Dr. Charles D. Atkins, der Leiter des „Brooklyn Institute", kündigte gestern an, daß das Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters unter der persönlichen Leitung seines Kapellmeisters Dr. Karl Muck bestimmt, wie auch ursprünglich angekündigt wurde, heute Abend in der Academy of Music stattfinden werde. Die Gerüchte, daß das Konzert aufgehoben worden sei, entsprächen nicht den Tatsachen.

HERALD

New York City

DEC 7 1917

BROOKLYN MAKES KARL MUCK LEAD NATIONAL ANTHEM TWICE

Audience in Academy of Music Demands Repetition—Huge Flags Draped Across Platform—Mme. Melba Sings Arias from Operas at Concert.

Dr. Karl Much conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" in the Brooklyn Academy of Music last night. He conducted it not once, but twice. Brooklyn's music lovers saw that he did a good job. As he led the national anthem two huge American flags formed a background for his men.

Just how the men of the orchestra were enabled to dodge the barred zones in Boston and New York and keep the date in Brooklyn could not be learned at the concert. Reports from Boston had been that most of the concerts in other cities were being cancelled because of the government's regulations regarding the movements of alien enemies. When W. H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra, was asked about it he said:—

"The fact that the orchestra is here should be sufficient answer. I can say nothing more."

Every one in the big audience arose at the first strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," and the applause that rolled up at the end of the anthem fairly shook the chandelier. The demonstration was prolonged far beyond the limit of applause that usually greets the anthem. A few persons sat down. The handclapping swelled in volume.

Dr. Muck stood like a graven image, his back to the tumult, his arms at his sides. Two minutes of the applause provoked a few hisses. Whether they were for the German conductor and the aliens in the orchestra or from impatient music lovers who wanted the real concert performance to start could not be learned.

Finally, when it seemed as if the applause might last all night, Dr. Muck motioned to his men, and "The Star Spangled Banner" was done all over again, and well done, too. Then everybody sat down, as if a good night's work had been accomplished.

Mme. Nellie Melba was the soloist. It was her first public appearance in New York in a long time. She had a hearty welcome. She sang arias from "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Idoneneo" and "The Prodigal Son." The orchestra's big number was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony—that is, next to "The Star Spangled Banner."

It was announced that the orchestra would give its concert in Carnegie Hall to-night.

Department of Justice Permitted Orchestra to Leave Boston.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday.—Permission to leave Massachusetts and go to New York was given to Dr. Karl Muck and the other twenty-two alien members of the Boston Orchestra by the Department of Justice in Washington, D. C. Permission to cross New York city to Brooklyn was granted by Francis J. Coffey, United States Attorney of New York.

DRY GOODS, &C.

POST, DEC. 15, 1917

M'CORMACK SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Tenor's Great Virtuosity Creates a Deep Impression

BY OLIN DOWNES

John McCormack was the soloist at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestra played Mozart's symphony in E flat; orchestral fragments from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Cloe," and Balakireff's "Thamar." The music of Ravel was heard for the first time here.

Mr. McCormack sang the air, "Di ad Irene" from Handel's opera, "Atlantis"; the recitative, "Jehovah, Oh Hear Me," and air, "Oh, My Heart Is Sore Within Me," from Beethoven's oratorio, "Christ on the Mount of Olives."

M'CORMACK'S VIRTUOSITY

Again the art of Mr. McCormack made a deep impression. Not only is he master of vocal difficulties, but his mastery includes the clear enunciation of the English language, and the making of this tongue beautiful in song. For vocal virtuosity alone his performance of the air of Handel would have been memorable for the control of the breath, the ease and finish with which he executed the most taxing vocal passages. At the same time, Mr. McCormack never forgot the expressive import of the music. He sang the delicious pastoral music with astonishing virtuosity, yet he always subordinated the music to the text. To give this aria, in addition to the vocal finish of its performance, the meaning and the coherency, the length of line, the fineness and logic of proportion shown yesterday by Mr. McCormack is to deserve far more than the tribute instinctively paid to a talented singer.

Schindler said that Beethoven, years after writing "The Mount of Olives," wished to revise the music of Jesus, for it seemed to him too dramatic. Perhaps he was right. It is drama rather than oratorio that one hears in the supplicating air sung by Mr. McCormack, and the orchestra as well as the voice suggests a situation in the opera house. The musical declamation of the recitative, however, is admirable, and the simplicity of the air, not one of Beethoven's most individual inspirations, nevertheless commends itself because of its directness and sincerity.

Needs Stage Action

Ravel's ballet was performed by the Russian Ballet in Paris in 1912. Originally there were choral as well as orchestral parts. With this version Mr. Diaghileff dispensed as soon as possible, and the recriminations of Ravel when the later version was presented in London make entertaining reading in the programme book. Appropriately to its subject, the music is simple and pastorale, albeit ultra-modern in texture when it accompanies pantomime. The opening piece, "Day-Break," is all of the cooing of doves, the whispering of breezes, the burbling of brooks. It is simplicity itself, and a charming effect of color.

The music for the Pantomime is valueless in the concert hall; it should be heard as the accompaniment of action on the stage. The "Danse General," which makes the last piece heard yesterday, is effective but conventional and ordinary in its material. In fact, there seems to be very little material in this music, which must depend almost wholly for its existence on the stage spectacle.

Early Russian Music

Balakireff's "Thamar" is another matter. Despite its orchestration, which is old fashioned indeed by the side of Ravel's, and despite its rather unsatisfactory form, it is music of genuine fantasy and strikingly representative of an element in music that was new when "Thomas" was produced. In that day the Russians were only just evolving their own style of composing and orchestrating, and fighting free of the customs of the German school. The stockiness, the solidity, the "keep-something-sounding-all-the time" of so much German orchestral music is dispensed with. Percussion instruments with Balakireff contribute not merely rhythm, but fascinating color. There are old-fashioned instrumental combinations for which Balakireff's thorough training in the music of the classic school is largely to be blamed, but there is also a freedom and variety of coloring that were extremely modern in his day.

Compared with a Russian composition that came a little later—Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade"—this orchestra is tame, for Rimsky carried out in a much finer and more artistic manner the principles Balakireff was struggling with. But where would any of these men have been without him, their leader, and how many composers of Russia have profited by Balakireff's example—even by

HERALD
DEC. 15, 1917

SYMPHONY GIVES EIGHTH CONCERT

Music for Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," Splendidly Presented.

JOHN McCORMACK SINGS

By PHILIP HALE.

The program of the eighth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, which took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, was as follows: Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Handel, Air, "Di ad Irene," from "Atalanta"; Ravel, second suite from the ballet music of "Daphnis and Chloe" (first time in Boston); Beethoven, Recitative and Air from "Christ on the Mount of Olives"; Balakireff, "Thamar," symphony poem. John McCormack was the singer.

The concert was a brilliant one. Mozart's Symphony may not be the equal of its two companions, but its purity of outline, its artistic simplicity, the tenderness with the tinge of melancholy peculiar to Mozart that characterizes the Andante—these keep it ever fresh and beautiful.

Two suites were made by Ravel from his music for "Daphnis and Chloe," a ballet produced in Paris by the Russian visitors in 1912. The first suite was played in Paris in 1911, for the music was written in 1910; it has been played in New York. The performance of the second suite yesterday was probably the first in this country. The music is taken from the latter half of the ballet, which is in one act. The day dawns. Daphnis is distracted by the absence of Chloe, who had been borne away by pirates. She returns, having been rescued through the intervention of Pan. Daphnis is told that the god did this, remembering his adventure with the nymph Syrinx, who, running away from his hot pursuit, was changed into a reed, out of which Pan fashioned his pipe. Daphnis and Chloe then relate in pantomime this adventure to shepherds and shepherdesses. He swears fidelity to Chloe on the altar. There is then a joyous, tumultuous dance, in which all join.

As a rule, music for a ballet suffers when it is played on a concert stage. It may be said, on the other hand, that when it is performed in the theatre the eyes are more occupied, more receptive, than the ears. In this instance the music, even without the little explanatory argument that accompanies the score, would be engrossing, if the only clue were "Music for a Ballet, 'Daphnis and Chloe,'" or only "Music for a Ballet." Not everyone in these days is acquainted with the pretty romance written by Longus, but any hearer with imagination would know from the music that it was for pastoral scenes and for delirious dancing.

Nor is this music effective only by reason of pronounced rhythms and ingeniously gorgeous instrumentation. There are entrancing melodic phrases; there are seductive harmonies; there is beauty, spirit, passion. The picture of daybreak is an admirable example of true program music; it is not photographic; it is not like unto an interlinear translation; it is something more than a sketch by a musical impressionist, while there is no undue fidelity to nature. The scene is pictured vividly with an artist's restraint.

The instrumentation is astonishingly brilliant; dazzling is the word for certain pages; but the composer never loses his sense of beauty. He charms the musician and every lover of the beautiful, but not for a moment does he strive to make the bourgeois sit up. While there are countless exquisite details, there is a breadth, there is a sweep, a swing to the whole, that we have missed in other works by this rarely gifted composer, who at times seemed a miniaturist, a cameo-cutter.

Appreciation of the music and the performance was immediate. The applause was spontaneous, hearty, prolonged.

Bostonians have heard Balakireff's "Thamar" in concert halls and as music for a ballet. As a symphonic poem it does not in imaginative qualities come up to the sensuous and cruel subject. Here is a case where music not designed for a ballet is glorified by scenery, costumes, mimes and dancers. Balakireff thus fares better than Rimsky-Korsakoff, whose "Scheherazade" suite was sadly perverted by the employment of it for incongruous stage scenes and adventures.

Mr. McCormack sang an air from an Italian opera by Handel, the great melodist, and a Recitative and Aria from Beethoven's early and forgotten oratorio. He sang neither in Italian nor in German, but in English. By his distinct enunciation and fine diction he made us all realize that English is after all a noble and eloquent tongue when it is not clipped, smeared, snuffed, barked. Mr. McCormack sang with a breadth, a fervor, a differentiation in emotions, that surprised even his warmest admirers. Very seldom do we hear singing of so marked excellence at Symphony concerts or in opera.

The concert will be repeated this evening. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Cherubini, overture to "Anacreon"; Chausson "Poeme" for violin and orchestra; Saint-Saens, Havanaise for violin and orchestra (Mr. Noack, violinist); Beethoven, "Pastoral" Symphony.

ADVERTISER
DEC. 15, 1917

186

M'CORMACK SINGS WITH SYMPHONY

Balakireff's "Thamar" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Are Played

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.
Mozart, Symphony in E flat.
Handel, Aria from "Atalanta."
Vocalist, John McCormack.
Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe." Orchestral fragments from suite.
Beethoven, "Jehovah, Hear Me."
Mr. McCormack.
Balakireff, "Thamar," Poeme Symphonique.

Of course, on this occasion the tail wagged the dog; of course, the singer was the great attraction, and the Symphony Orchestra was merely the background to his appearance. It was not to hear Mozart's E flat symphony that a line of ticket-seekers stretched from the Symphony Hall doors into the blue distance in the morning. It was "Vox McCormack, Vox Populi," to make bad Latin out of the old proverb.

Nevertheless even the crabbed critic can here acquiesce with the popular verdict. Mr. McCormack is the only tenor that we know of who can give a folk-song without spoiling it by exaggeration, and can also phrase a Handelian aria, or sing a difficult operatic role, in the most perfect technical manner. He is the most versatile of artists and his scope extends from the simplest to the most difficult in vocal art. His dramatic action is not on a par with his vocalism, but that does not count in the concert-room.

UNFAMILIAR ARIA.

The "Atlanta" aria was an unfamiliar selection, but it had all the familiar roulades, long phrases and melodic contrapuntal touches of the old master. It was received with favor by the audience, and its shading, pure intonation, and general delivery deserved the recognition.

Mr. McCormack's second number, from Beethoven's one oratorio, "The Mount of Olives," was also an unfamiliar one. Beethoven's oratorio is almost never performed and is not one of his most successful works. Beethoven's vocal solos are never entirely vocal in effect. Even his "Adelaide" is overrated. The number which Mr. McCormack sang, the opening number in the "Mount of Olives," has some striking recitative, which was very dramatically done, and in the aria the orchestral accompaniment plays an important part. The ensemble was creditable, both to Dr. Muck and the vocalist. If the singer did not arouse the frenzy of enthusiasm that he usually does (he won very much applause, however) it was because he chose unusual numbers, preferring on this occasion to reveal John McCormack, the splendid vocal technician, the thorough musician, and the classiciest, rather than the popular singer.

FIRST USE OF CLARINET.

The Mozart symphony in E-flat is the one in which the clarinet was first introduced into the symphonic orchestra, in 1788.

Ravel is one of the moderns for whom (with Rachmaninoff) we have a good deal of respect. He is not a dealer in mere eccentricities, but has something to say, a new message to bear. The so-called "Symphonic Fragments" are from a ballet, but they are much more dramatic than the music which we usually associate with this short-skirted side of art. The work begins by picturing dawn. We have had dawn all the way from Grieg to Mascagni, and Ravel had no new day-breaking thoughts. But the subsequent dances of Daphnis and Chloe were tremendously effective, the best orchestral work of the concert and superbly played. It is a work for the large modern orchestra, and is full of caprice and sharp contrasts.

ORIENTAL BALLET.

Balakinreff's "Thamar" has also reached the ballet stage, although in this case it was against the wishes of the composer's family, and Balakireff had no thought of ballet when composing it. This is also a modern work which does not run to extremes and to puzzles. Yet the story of the legend is but vaguely told. The tale is not unlike Gautier's "Une Nuit de Cleopatra," for the attractive Thamar has a fashion of being most loving in the evening and very deadly the next morning, when her lover finds his career suddenly cut short.

The work begins with growls in the depths, a la Tschaikowski, and there were passages that were portentous enough to scare away the lady's suitors. The rush of the river was easy to identify. There were Oriental dance suggestions, with tambourine and triangle. There were also the reiterated taps of the drum and repetitions of figures, which any visitor to a Midway Plaisance recognizes as Eastern. There was also much of passionate utterance and some mysterious passages which suited to the picture. But the end was so ecstatic and blissful that it suggested that the murdered lovers did not greatly mind their sudden taking off, but rather liked it. Altogether "Thamar" made a spicy dessert to a musical banquet that was not heavy enough to be indigestible; but why follow French dance themes with Russian ones? Why follow Love a la Grecque with Love a la Russe? One could criticize with Solomon's outburst—"Stay me with flagone, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of Love"!

om HERALD
ldress: New York City

te DEC 8 1917

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

At its second Saturday concert of the season in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented a programme composed chiefly of American and French music.

Dr. Karl Muck directed his men through an admirable performance of MacDowell's "Indian" suite, opus 48, which followed the national anthem, now a fixture at the Boston Symphony concerts. The suite is based upon Indian themes. Rather harsh and barbaric at times, it is nevertheless one of the most intersting native works for orchestra. Next came Debussy's beautiful "La Mer," composed of three atmospheric, mysterious sea pictures. They are full of whole tone intervals and of Debussy's characteristic harmonies and colorful orchestration. They were played exceptionaly well. The programme closed with Beethoven's Overture "Leonore," No. 3.

n TELEGRAM

ress: New York City.

DEC 11 1917

DR. MUCK TO LEAD HALIFAX AID CONCERT

BOSTON, Mass., Tuesday.—With Dr. Karl Muck leading and Fritz Kreisler on the programme, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, twenty-three of whose members, including Dr. Muck, are alien enemies, will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon for the aid of the Halifax explosion sufferers.

Major Henry L. Higginson will give the use of the hall, and the entire gross receipts of the performance, less the advertising bills, will be given to the stricken inhabitants of Halifax.

1 AMERICAN

ess: New York City.

DEC 8 1917

Varied Program Given by Boston Symphony

By MAX SMITH.

DEPARTING from a custom of many years' standing, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second Manhattan concert of the season on Friday, instead of Thursday. But in spite of this change and the inconvenience it must have caused to those subscribers who had seats for that evening in the Metropolitan Opera House or were bound by other engagements, few empty chairs could be seen last night in Carnegie Hall when Dr. Muck and his musicians had played the "Star Spangled Banner" as a patriotic introduction to the programme.

There was much applause after the national anthem, which the visiting organization presented this time in a simple version, discarding the violently assailed, though by no means ineffective, orchestration borrowed from Victor Herbert's "American Fantasy." But the demonstration did not continue long enough to bring an encore as in the Brooklyn Academy of Music twenty-four hours earlier.

In his Siymphony in E minor, No. 2, which took up most of the evening, Rachmaninoff has written a work of Bruckneresque proportions, though hardly equal in originality and inspiration to the great Anton's stupendous creations. No wonder, then, if some listeners were rather satiated after feasting for an hour and a quarter on the luscious and highly flavored banquet provided by the Russian composer and had a distinct sense of relief when Dr. Muck was offered as a post-prandial tonic the Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music.

Nothing, however, could have served to set forth more strikinly the extraordinary qualities of what now unquestionably is the finest orchestra in the world than the richly colored tonal tapestries of Rachmaninoff and the delicately spun tone-poetry of Mendelssohn thus placed in juxtaposition. Rarely indeed have the men from the Hub given a more impressive demonstration of their powers than they did last night.

n EVENING GLOBE

ress: New York City

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

MacDowell, Debussy, and Beethoven—in that order—were Dr. Karl Muck's selections for the second matinée of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on Saturday. "The Star-Spangled Banner," selected for the eminent conductor by the American people, opened the concert. MacDowell's "Indian" orchestral suite in E minor, full of interest and variety and beautifully set forth, was followed by "La Mer" of Debussy, whose delicate charm Dr. Muck did not fail to communicate. The final number was Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, which the Boston orchestra always plays superbly.

rom TIMES
Address: New York City

DR. MUCK, CITIZEN OF SWITZERLAND

Boston Symphony Director Is Not a German Subject, Swiss Legation Declares.

BAVARIA IS HIS BIRTHPLACE

But, Following Father, He Took Out His Papers in Switzerland—Manager Ellis's Statement.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, and not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss Legation today in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant, when Dr. Muck was 8 years old his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father. Later, when the son had become a man, he of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss Legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss Legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich, and that he has lived there at various intervals.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Doctor Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German Government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit.

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises 54 American citizens, (17 native-born,) 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians, 2 Bohemians."

REVIEW
ss: New York City.
DEC 8 - 1917

ALIEN ENEMIES BARRED FROM CITY OF WASHINGTON

Theatrical Companies Must Halt in Order to Replace German Members.

(Special to The New York Review.)

Washington, D. C., Sept. 7.—As a result of President Wilson's order barring all alien enemies from the District of Columbia, many theatrical attractions headed for Washington may be halted en route, long enough at least to enable them to replace actors, musicians or stage employes who are subjects of enemy countries, and a number of vaudeville acts booked here cannot play.

The executive order issued this week positively forbids all alien enemies from entering Washington. There are many companies which carry German musicians, and if war is declared against Austria-Hungary this week the number barred will be materially increased. None of the big orchestras, such as the Boston Symphony and the Philharmonic of New York will be able to play in the capital. Already theatrical companies are reported to be seriously embarrassed by the order.

STAATSZEITUNG
New York City.

Boston Symphonie-Konzerte.

Die Bostoner hatten sich anläßlich des zweiten diesjährigen Konzertpaars des glänzenden Erfolgs zu erfreuen, der dieser Meisterschaar unter der großen Leitung von Dr. Muck jederzeit blüht. Gestern nachmittag war MeDowells schöne „Indian"-Suite, das reifste Werk des allzu früh dahingeschiedenen bedeutenden amerikanischen Komponisten, die Hauptdarbietung. Muck brachte das großangelegte Werk, in dem Original-Indianermelodien mit so viel Geschick verwendet sind, zu starker Höhe und entfesselte den wärmsten Beifall des ausverkauften Saales in Carnegie Hall.

Alle Mac Dowellschen Besonderheiten treten in diesem Werk ganz besonders scharf in die Erscheinung: der Adel des thematischen Materials, straffe Rhytmik, eine gelegentliche, etwas überwürzte Harmonik, Eigenwilligkeit der Modulationen neben ausgesprochen liebenswürdigen Zügen. Dies Alles hat Mac Dowell in diesem Werk zu etwas wirklich Bedeutendem verschmolzen, wodurch der Vorwurf entkräftet wird, daß der Amerikaner nur in kleinen Formen Hervorragendes geleistet habe. In kleinen Formen à la Chopin und Grieg etwa, denn wer, wie Mac Dowell zwei große Pianokonzerte, vier bedeutende Pianosonaten und die „Indian Suite" geschaffen hat, obwohl die ihm vergönnte Spanne Zeit keine allzureichliche war, der hat auch im großen fein gut Teil geleistet.

Debussys drei symphonische Skizzen „La Mer" brachten wahre Wunder an aparter Klangpracht, und die dritte „Leonoren"-Ouverture rauschte wie flüssiges Feuer durch den Saal. Alle diese Darbietungen wurden vom Publikum begeistert anerkannt.

Am vorangegangenen Abend hatte Dr. Muck mit Rachmaninoffs Zweiter Symphonie in E Moll seinen Haupttrumpf ausgespielt. Ich möchte Rachmaninoff den Mann der kleinen Formen nennen, denn alle großen Arbeiten dieses liebenswürdigen und kenntnisreichen russischen Komponisten befriedigen mich nicht. Ganz abgesehen von der übermäßigen Redseligkeit des Werks, das eine Dauer von über einer Stunde bedingt, ist das an sich bedeutende Material zumteil flüchtig, zumteil breit und pedantisch ausgearbeitet. Als ob dem Komponisten bei großen Linien der Atem ausginge! Muck dirigierte das Werk ragend schön und seine Mannen spielten es tadellos. Der Beifall war namentlich am Schluß sehr warm. Ganz anders aber wirkten auf das Publikum die drei Excerpte aus Mendelssohns „Sommernachtstraummusik" ein. Die Ouverture, das Nocturne und das Scherzo kamen erquickend und poetisch. Das Orchester hob diesen holden Elfenspuck in unnachahmlicher Weise. H.

rom EVENING GLOBE
ddress: New York City

ate DEC 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

There was a capacity audience at Carnegie Hall last evening to hear the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The recent controversy concerning Dr. Muck and the national anthem seems to be settled, and after the anthem the audience settled itself to enjoy the Rachmaninoff symphony in E minor, number two, which has been eagerly awaited by music lovers of discrimination.

Especially beautiful was the adagio movement, which was read by Dr. Muck with much appreciation for the finer shadings and a distinctive sense for lyric values. The final movement, the allegro vivace, won enthusiastic approval for its perfect rhythm and precision.

The second number, Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "Mid-Summer Night's Dream," was happily chosen and gave much joy to those familiar with its singing melodies. The overture, nocturne, and scherzo were played with finish, and Dr. Muck was called to acknowledge the appreciation of his hearers many times.

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.

Dr. Muck, läßt die „Times" sich aus Washington melden, ist, einer Erklärung der Schweizer Gesandtschaft nach, gar kein Reichsdeutscher, kein „feindlicher Ausländer", kein „Preuße". Sondern ein in Würzburg (Darmstadt wäre richtiger) geborener, als Kind schon naturalisierter Schweizer... Wie wird nun der Körnel, der den großen Künstler gleich auf dem Scheiterhaufen verbrennen wollte, sich wieder herausreden? Und wie die tobenden „Patrioten" von Boston und Baltimore und Providence.

TRIBUNE DEC 11 1917
ess: New York City

Fritz Kreisler Not a Martyr, Says Vigilante

Member of Society Declares Sympathy Is Wasted on Violinist

Too much sympathy has been wasted upon Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, because he feels that the United States has treated him badly since the war began, in the opinion of Charles J. Rosebault of the Vigilantes.

"Press agents, friends and admirers," said Mr. Rosebault yesterday, "have united to make him appear a martyr to art and American chauvinism."

He then went on to say that if Kreisler has been persecuted in the United States, Germany has dealt out far more bitter punishment upon musicians of enemy nations caught inside her borders when war began.

"Germany Does Same Thing"

Yet, Mr. Rosebault continued, people have pointed the finger of scorn at Americans who objected to the appearance of an enemy alien in the limelight, no matter how great an artist he might be. He says:

"Perhaps these are justified. Possibly art should be judged solely as an impersonal thing of beauty and the artist held superior to decisions affecting common folk. When all the world agrees upon this America will surely not be found to lag behind. But what is the record of Mr. Kreisler's own country and what is the record of Germany in respect to art and artists?

"There is in this country to-day a very wonderful Russian violinist by the name of Heifetz. This artist, who has been acclaimed by all critics and music lovers, was playing in Berlin when the war broke out. He was highly regarded by the music lovers there. Did the Prussians uphold the exemption of the artist? Mr. Heifetz spent two years—two long, valuable years—in an internment camp.

"Joseph Joachim was almost a musical god in Germany. When he died his place at the head of the Hochschule was given to Henri Marteau, a Frenchman. This placing of a foreigner upon Joachim's musical throne created a furor. But Marteau had caught the Kaiser's good will. Moreover, he had been a pupil—and the ablest—of Joachim. So the storm of Prussian chauvinism broke against him in vain. But what happened when the war came? Marteau lost his place and was interned as an enemy.

Gabrilowitch Arrested

"Gabrilowitch, the great pianist, was a resident of Munich and strongly pro-German in his sympathies. So was his wife, daughter of our Mark Twain. He was arrested, and obtained his release only with great difficulty.

"Adolph Brodsky, the distinguished Russian violinist, who had been a favorite of the music lovers of Vienna, was there on a holiday visit when the war came. He was placed in an internment camp in Hungary.

"He was past sixty, had spent the greater part of his life in Vienna and was known to be attached to the people; moreover, the Viennese were proud to acclaim him as a product of their schools.

"And it remained for certain musicians resident in this country (a lot of the pro-German musicians refused to sign the petition) to secure Dr. Brodsky's release. At that time Austria was desirous of continuing friendly relations with Americans.

"In the light of these various instances, America's narrowness of spirit is not so clear. Nor is this all that is to be said. Some of these distinguished musical artists who are posing as martyrs are not altogether what they seem. Protest as much as they wish, it is difficult to accept their assertions of detachment from the German cause. They have been too outspoken heretofore.

"Dr. Muck Admits Sympathies"

"There has been a great to-do about the opposition to Mr. Muck, the very able conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here again American chauvinism was held up to scorn. But reverse the case. Imagine an American conductor at Berlin or Vienna! Where would he be now? We must allow Mr. Muck credit for having made no secret of his sympathies. Nor has he concealed the fact that he still holds a place under the Prussian government and is looking forward to a Prussian pension for his old age.

"Of late, many of our visiting musicians have been more than zealous in performing 'The Star Spangled Banner.' Even pianists have pounded out the national anthem. But this has not succeeded in breaking down all the opposition. Some suspicious Americans talk of camouflage. And they add that they see no reason why American dollars should go into enemy pockets when American musicians like Albert Spaulding, Roderick White and many others are sacrificing their careers and risking their lives for America."

MORNING TELEGRAPH
ss: New York City

DEC 9 1917

DR. MUCK PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Second Concert Satisfied Record Audience With Fine Progam.

PHILHARMONIC PLEASES ALL

A thought of the possibility of waning popularity may have entered into the choosing of yesterday's second matinee program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for it commenced with "The Star Spangled Banner" and was largely devoted to the well-belored aboriginal and nature descriptives of MacDowell and Debussy. The national anthem was played and received with about the same degree of indifference, Dr. Muck and his men performing with automatic precision and the audience responding "in spots."

MacDowell's orchestral suite in E minor will challenge any orchestra's box of tricks, and Dr. Muck read it for all it was worth in this direction yesterday, the surpassing efficiency of every division of his band commanding fresh admiration if not enthusiasm. In spite of the storm the audience at Carnegie Hall yesterday was one of the largest of the season's symphony concerts, but it was not a demonstrative gathering. Probably the third part of the Indian suite was most impressively played for the reason that it came closer to the vigorous and declarative temperament of the orchestra. The Dirge, too, was done with the unsurpassed finesse, if not feeling, which marks the precise method of Dr. Muck.

"La Mer," treasured for its lyrical descriptiveness rather than for any epical majesty, was played faultlessly, unless the Muck emanation of a kind of inevitability in expression may be considered a fault, the dialogue of the wind and the water in the third movement fully displaying the divisional balance and individual proficiency of the organization. The Beethoven overture for "Leonore," however, concluded the program with the finest performance of the afternoon, and the audience was aroused almost to the point of enthusiasm.

EVENING SUN
ss: New York City

DEC 8 - 1917

Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by the widely advertised Dr. Muck, made its second appearance of the season at Carnegie Hall last night. There was a very large and what is known as a distinguished audience present to hear the symphonic offerings of this accomplished band of musicians. That the orchestra played brilliantly and with flawless finish almost goes without saying, and this was very well evidenced by the spellbound attention of the auditors during the concert.

It appears that Dr. Muck's attitude toward the American national anthem has changed very much since the recent Boston incident. He now seems to regard the "Star Spangled Banner" as coming well within the realms of Boston orchestral art and now begins every concert with this much discussed hymn, although he did not take part in its standardization, according to the latest lists.

Two compositions made up last night's programme — Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, No. 2, and Mendelssohn's beautiful music to Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," consisting of the overture, nocturne and scherzo. The latter is a most interesting composition, from a historic as well as musical point of view. The overture was written in the summer of 1826, when the Hamburg master was but 17 years old. "The music was composed in Mendelssohn's garden near the Potsdam gate, Berlin," says a footnote. "It was written in the summer in the open air."

It is truly a song of summer, of trees and flowers. Long and lovely passages are written into it for the violins and wood-winds. The three movements are almost uninterrupted melodic poetry, with a minimum of brass and drumfire. The orchestra's rendition of it was rich in harmonic artistry.

The Rachmaninoff symphony was also played with faultless effect. In this there is a recurrence of a martial theme, where the rhythmic drums and brass suggest that the Cossacks may be coming—or any one of half a dozen other clans, which Russia seems to possess in such unlimited quantities. This symphony was composed in Dresden and first played in 1908 by the Imperial Music Society of Moscow, with the composer conducting.

om HERALD
ldress: New York City

ite

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

At its second Saturday concert of the season in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented a programme composed chiefly of American and French music.

Dr. Karl Muck directed his men through an admirable performance of MacDowell's "Indian" suite, opus 48, which followed the national anthem, now a fixture at the Boston Symphony concerts. The suite is based upon Indian themes. Rather harsh and barbaric at times, it is nevertheless one of the most intersting native works for orchestra. Next came Debussy's beautiful "La Mer," composed of three atmospheric, mysterious sea pictures. They are full of whole tone intervals and of Debussy's characteristic harmonies and colorful orchestration. They were played exceptionaly well. The programme closed with Beethoven's Overture "Leonore," No. 3.

a TELEGRAM
ress: New York City.

DEC 1 1 19

DR. MUCK TO LEAD HALIFAX AID CONCERT

BOSTON, Mass., Tuesday.—With Dr. Karl Muck leading and Fritz Kreisler on the programme, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, twenty-three of whose members, including Dr. Muck, are alien enemies, will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon for the aid of the Halifax explosion sufferers.

Major Henry L. Higginson will give the use of the hall, and the entire gross receipts of the performance, less the advertising bills, will be given to the stricken inhabitants of Halifax.

1 AMERICAN
ess: New York City.

Varied Program Given by Boston Symphony

By MAX SMITH.

DEPARTING from a custom of many years' standing, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second Manhattan concert of the season on Friday, instead of Thursday. But in spite of this change and the inconvenience it must have caused to those subscribers who had seats for that evening in the Metropolitan Opera House or were bound by other engagements, few empty chairs could be seen last night in Carnegie Hall when Dr. Muck and his musicians had played the "Star Spangled Banner" as a patriotic introduction to the programme.

There was much applause after the national anthem, which the visiting organization presented this time in a simple version, discarding the violently assailed, though by no means ineffective, orchestration borrowed from Victor Herbert's "American Fantasy." But the demonstration did not continue long enough to bring an encore as in the Brooklyn Academy of Music twenty-four hours earlier.

In his Siymphony in E minor, No. 2, which took up most of the evening, Rachmaninoff has written a work of Bruckneresque proportions, though hardly equal in originality and inspiration to the great Anton's stupendous creations. No wonder, then, if some listeners were rather satiated after feasting for an hour and a quarter on the luscious and highly flavored banquet provided by the Russian composer and had a distinct sense of relief when Dr. Muck was offered as a post-prandial tonic the Overture, Nocturne and Scherzo of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music.

Nothing, however, could have served to set forth more strikinly the extraordinary qualities of what now unquestionably is the finest orchestra in the world than the richly colored tonal tapestries of Rachmaninoff and the delicately spun tone-poetry of Mendelssohn thus placed in juxtaposition. Rarely indeed have the men from the Hub given a more impressive demonstration of their powers than they did last night.

n EVENING GLOBE
ress: New York City

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

MacDowell, Debussy, and Beethoven—in that order—were Dr. Karl Muck's selections for the second matinée of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on Saturday. "The Star-Spangled Banner," selected for the eminent conductor by the American people, opened the concert. MacDowell's "Indian" orchestral suite in E minor, full of interest and variety and beautifully set forth, was followed by "La Mer" of Debussy, whose delicate charm Dr. Muck did not fail to communicate. The final number was Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, which the Boston orchestra plays superbly.

From TIMES
Address: New York City

DR. MUCK, CITIZEN OF SWITZERLAND

Boston Symphony Director Is Not a German Subject, Swiss Legation Declares.

BAVARIA IS HIS BIRTHPLACE

But, Following Father, He Took Out His Papers in Switzerland—Manager Ellis's Statement.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, and not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss Legation today in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant, when Dr. Muck was 8 years old his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father. Later, when the son had become a man, he of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss Legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss Legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich, and that he has lived there at various intervals.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Doctor Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German Government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.

"Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit.

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises 54 American citizens, (17 native-born,) 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians, 2 Bohemians."

ss: New York City.

DEC 8 - 1917

ALIEN ENEMIES BARRED FROM CITY OF WASHINGTON

Theatrical Companies Must Halt in Order to Replace German Members.

(Special to The New York Review.)

Washington, D. C., Sept. 7.—As a result of President Wilson's order barring all alien enemies from the District of Columbia, many theatrical attractions headed for Washington may be halted en route, long enough at least to enable them to replace actors, musicians or stage employes who are subjects of enemy countries, and a number of vaudeville acts booked here cannot play.

The executive order issued this week positively forbids all alien enemies from entering Washington. There are many companies which carry German musicians, and if war is declared against Austria-Hungary this week the number barred will be materially increased. None of the big orchestras, such as the Boston Symphony and the Philharmonic of New York will be able to play in the capital. Already theatrical companies are reported to be seriously embarrassed by the order.

STAATSZEITUNG
New York

Boston Symphonie-Konzerte.

Die Bostoner hatten sich anläßlich des zweiten diesjährigen Konzertpaars des glänzenden Erfolgs zu erfreuen, der dieser Meisterschaar unter der großen Leitung von Dr. Muck jederzeit blüht. Gestern nachmittag war MeDowells wundeschöne „Indian"-Suite, das reifste Werk des allzu früh dahingeschiedenen bedeutenden amerikanischen Komponisten, die Hauptdarbietung. Muck brachte das großangelegte Werk, in dem Original-Indianermelodien mit so viel Geschick verwendet sind, zu starker Höhe und entfesselte den wärmsten Beifall des ausverkauften Saales in Carnegie Hall.

Alle Mac Dowellschen Besonderheiten treten in diesem Werk ganz besonders scharf in die Erscheinung: der Adel des thematischen Materials, straffe Rhytmik, eine gelegentliche, etwas überwürzte Harmonik, Eigenwilligkeit der Modulationen neben ausgesprochen liebenswürdigen Zügen. Dies Alles hat Mac Dowell in diesem Werk zu etwas wirklich Bedeutendem verschmolzen, wodurch der Vorwurf entkräftet wird, daß der Amerikaner nur in kleinen Formen Hervorragendes geleistet habe. In kleinen Formen à la Chopin und Grieg etwa, denn wer, wie Mac Dowell zwei große Pianokonzerte, vier bedeutende Pianosonaten und die „Indian Suite" geschaffen hat, obwohl die ihm vergönnte Spanne Zeit keine allzureichliche war, der hat auch im großen sein gut Teil geleistet.

Debussys drei symphonische Skizzen „La Mer" brachten wahre Wunder an aparter Klangpracht, und die dritte „Leonoren"-Ouverture rauschte wie flüssiges Feuer durch den Saal. Alle diese Darbietungen wurden vom Publikum begeistert anerkannt.

Am vorangegangenen Abend hatte Dr. Muck mit Rachmaninoffs Zweiter Symphonie in E Moll seinen Haupttrumpf ausgespielt. Ich möchte Rachmaninoff den Mann der kleinen Formen nennen, denn alle großen Arbeiten dieses liebenswürdigen und kenntnisreichen russischen Komponisten befriedigen mich nicht. Ganz abgesehen von der übermäßigen Redseligkeit des Werks, das eine Dauer von über einer Stunde bedingt, ist das an sich bedeutende Material zumteil flüchtig, zumteil breit und pedantisch ausgearbeitet. Als ob dem Komponisten bei großen Linien der Atem ausginge! Muck dirigierte das Werk ragend schön und seine Mannen spielten es tadellos. Der Beifall war namentlich am Schluß sehr warm. Ganz anders aber wirkten auf das Publikum die drei Excerpte aus Mendelssohns „Sommernachtstraummusik" ein. Die Ouverture, das Nocturne und das Scherzo kamen erquickend und poetisch. Das Orchester hob diesen holden Elfenspuck in unnachahmlicher Weise. H.

rom EVENING GLOBE
ddress: New York City

ate

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

There was a capacity audience at Carnegie Hall last evening to hear the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The recent controversy concerning Dr. Muck and the national anthem seems to be settled, and after the anthem the audience settled itself to enjoy the Rachmaninoff symphony in E minor, number two, which has been eagerly awaited by music lovers of discrimination.

Especially beautiful was the adagio movement, which was read by Dr. Muck with much appreciation for the finer shadings and a distinctive sense for lyric values. The final movement, the allegro vivace, won enthusiastic approval for its perfect rhythm and precision.

The second number, Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "Mid-Summer Night's Dream," was happily chosen and gave much joy to those familiar with its singing melodies. The overture, nocturne, and scherzo were played with finish, and Dr. Muck was called to acknowledge the appreciation of his hearers many times.

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.

Dr. Muck, läßt die „Times" sich aus Washington melden, ist, einer Erklärung der Schweizer Gesandtschaft nach, gar kein Reichsdeutscher, kein „feindlicher Ausländer", kein „Preuße". Sondern ein in Würzburg (Darmstadt wäre richtiger) geborener, als Kind schon naturalisierter Schweizer... Wie wird nun der Körnel, der den großen Künstler gleich auf dem Scheiterhaufen verbrennen wollte, sich wieder herausreden? Und wie die tobenden „Patrioten" von Boston und Baltimore und Providence.

TRIBUNE
ess: New York City

Fritz Kreisler Not a Martyr, Says Vigilante

Member of Society Declares Sympathy Is Wasted on Violinist

Too much sympathy has been wasted upon Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, because he feels that the United States has treated him badly since the war began, in the opinion of Charles J. Rosebault of the Vigilantes.

"Press agents, friends and admirers," said Mr. Rosebault yesterday, "have united to make him appear a martyr to art and American chauvinism."

He then went on to say that if Kreisler has been persecuted in the United States, Germany has dealt out far more bitter punishment upon musicians of enemy nations caught inside her borders when war began.

"Germany Does Same Thing"

Yet, Mr. Rosebault continued, people have pointed the finger of scorn at Americans who objected to the appearance of an enemy alien in the limelight, no matter how great an artist he might be. He says:

"Perhaps these are justified. Possibly art should be judged solely as an impersonal thing of beauty and the artist held superior to decisions affecting common folk. When all the world agrees upon this America will surely not be found to lag behind. But what is the record of Mr. Kreisler's own country and what is the record of Germany in respect to art and artists?

"There is in this country to-day a very wonderful Russian violinist by the name of Heifetz. This artist, who has been acclaimed by all critics and music lovers, was playing in Berlin when the war broke out. He was highly regarded by the music lovers there. Did the Prussians uphold the exemption of the artist? Mr. Heifetz spent two years—two long, valuable years—in an internment camp.

"Joseph Joachim was almost a musical god in Germany. When he died his place at the head of the Hochschule was given to Henri Marteau, a Frenchman. This placing of a foreigner upon Joachim's musical throne created a furor. But Marteau had caught the Kaiser's good will. Moreover, he had been a pupil—and the ablest—of Joachim. So the storm of Prussian chauvinism broke against him in vain. But what happened when the war came? Marteau lost his place and was interned as an enemy.

Gabrilowitch Arrested

"Gabrilowitch, the great pianist, was a resident of Munich and strongly pro-German in his sympathies. So was his wife, daughter of our Mark Twain. He was arrested, and obtained his release only with great difficulty.

"Adolph Brodsky, the distinguished Russian violinist, who had been a favorite of the music lovers of Vienna, was there on a holiday visit when the war came. He was placed in an internment camp in Hungary.

"He was past sixty, had spent the greater part of his life in Vienna and was known to be attached to the people; moreover, the Viennese were proud to acclaim him as a product of their schools.

"And it remained for certain musicians resident in this country (a lot of the pro-German musicians refused to sign the petition) to secure Dr. Brodsky's release. At that time Austria was desirous of continuing friendly relations with Americans.

"In the light of these various instances, America's narrowness of spirit is not so clear. Nor is this all that is to be said. Some of these distinguished musical artists who are posing as martyrs are not altogether what they seem. Protest as much as they wish, it is difficult to accept their assertions of detachment from the German cause. They have been too outspoken heretofore.

"Dr. Muck Admits Sympathies"

"There has been a great to-do about the opposition to Mr. Muck, the very able conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here again American chauvinism was held up to scorn. But reverse the case. Imagine an American conductor at Berlin or Vienna! Where would he be now? We must allow Mr. Muck credit for having made no secret of his sympathies. Nor has he concealed the fact that he still holds a place under the Prussian government and is looking forward to a Prussian pension for his old age.

"Of late, many of our visiting musicians have been more than zealous in performing 'The Star Spangled Banner.' Even pianists have pounded out the national anthem. But this has not succeeded in breaking down all the opposition. Some suspicious Americans talk of camouflage. And they add that they see no reason why American dollars should go into enemy pockets when American musicians like Albert Spaulding, Roderick White and many others are sacrificing their careers and risking their lives for America."

MORNING TELEGRAPH
is: New York City

DR. MUCK PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Second Concert Satisfied Record Audience With Fine Progam.

PHILHARMONIC PLEASES ALL

A thought of the possibility of waning popularity may have entered into the choosing of yesterday's second matinee program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for it commenced with "The Star Spangled Banner" and was largely devoted to the well-beloved aboriginal and nature descriptives of MacDowell and Debussy. The national anthem was played and received with about the same degree of indifference. Dr. Muck and his men performing with automatic precision and the audience responding "in spots."

MacDowell's orchestral suite in E minor will challenge any orchestra's box of tricks, and Dr. Muck read it for all it was worth in this direction yesterday, the surpassing efficiency of every division of his band commanding fresh admiration if not enthusiasm. In spite of the storm the audience at Carnegie Hall yesterday was one of the largest of the season's symphony concerts, but it was not a demonstrative gathering. Probably the third part of the Indian suite was most impressively played for the reason that it came closer to the vigorous and declarative temperament of the orchestra. The Dirge, too, was done with the unsurpassed finesse, if not feeling, which marks the precise method of Dr. Muck.

"La Mer," treasured for its lyrical descriptiveness rather than for any epical majesty, was played faultlessly, unless the Muck emanation of a kind of inevitability in expression may be considered a fault, the dialogue of the wind and the water in the third movement fully displaying the divisional balance and individual proficiency of the organization. The Beethoven overture for "Leonore," however, concluded the program with the finest performance of the afternoon, and the audience was aroused almost to the point of enthusiasm.

EVENING SUN
ss: New York City

DEC 8 - 19

Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by the widely advertised Dr. Muck, made its second appearance of the season at Carnegie Hall last night. There was a very large and what is known as a distinguished audience present to hear the symphonic offerings of this accomplished band of musicians. That the orchestra played brilliantly and with flawless finish almost goes without saying, and this was very well evidenced by the spellbound attention of the auditors during the concert.

It appears that Dr. Muck's attitude toward the American national anthem has changed very much since the recent Boston incident. He now seems to regard the "Star Spangled Banner" as coming well within the realms of Boston orchestral art and now begins every concert with this much discussed hymn, although he did not take part in its standardization, according to the latest lists.

Two compositions made up last night's programme — Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, No. 2, and Mendelssohn's beautiful music to Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," consisting of the overture, nocturne and scherzo. The latter is a most interesting composition, from a historic as well as musical point of view. The overture was written in the summer of 1826, when the Hamburg master was but 17 years old. "The music was composed in Mendelssohn's garden near the Potsdam gate, Berlin," says a footnote. "It was written in the summer in the open air."

It is truly a song of summer, of trees and flowers. Long and lovely passages are written into it for the violins and wood-winds. The three movements are almost uninterrupted melodic poetry, with a minimum of brass and drumfire. The orchestra's rendition of it was rich in harmonic artistry.

The Rachmaninoff symphony was also played with faultless effect. In this there is a recurrence of a martial theme, where the rhythmic drums and brass suggest that the Cossacks may be coming—or any one of half a dozen other clans, which Russia seems to possess in such unlimited quantities. This symphony was composed in Dresden and first played in 1908 by the Imperial Music Society of Moscow, with the composer conducting.

From HERALD
Address: New York City
Date DEC 8

SAYS DR. MUCK MAY BE SWISS

Member of Boston Orchestra Asserts Conductor Never Became German Citizen.

The controversy about Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who aroused country wide criticism because he did not conduct "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first concert of the orchestra in Boston or at a concert in Providence, R. I., acquired a new phase yesterday when doubt was cast on the nationality of Dr. Muck, it being said he might be not a German, but a Swiss. Dr. Muck has refused to be interviewed on any subject and he refused yesterday to discuss his ancestors.

A man in the orchestra who is in a position to know the facts said to friends in the intermission last night at the concert of the orchestra in Carnegie Hall:—

"No one seems to be quite sure just what nationality Dr. Muck is. His father was a Swiss professor. He happened to be teaching in Bavaria when his son was born. Dr. Muck has not taken any German citizenship papers. But he has lived most of his life in Germany and he is a court official—court conductor, I believe. Whether that makes him a German subject or not I cannot tell. But I am sure that his parents were Swiss."

Because Dr. Muck was considered a German the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were cancelled in Providence and in Baltimore. Other difficulties arose when barred zones were extended so that enemy aliens could not leave Boston.

There are twenty-three aliens in the orchestra. All of them have taken out their first United States citizenship papers, but that does not change their nationality. Their status is certain, but Dr. Muck now appears to be a man without a country.

Last night's concert, as usual, was opened with "The Star Spangled Banner." The audience applauded as if it wanted a repetition, but Dr. Muck stood quietly facing his men until the applause stopped. The orchestra was heard in a stirring performance of Rachmaninoff's second symphony and in three numbers from Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" music, all played with superlative skill.

TELEGRAM
ss: New York City.
DEC 7 - 1917

DR. MUCK, GIVEN PERMIT, IS HERE WITH ORCHESTRA

Department of Justice Allows Boston Symphony Leader to Pass Through Barred Zones.

PLAYS NATIONAL ANTHEM TWICE IN BROOKLYN.

Passing through barred zones with special permits readily granted to him by the Department of Justice at Washington, Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which twenty-two members are aliens, is in New York city, where to-night that organization will give a concert in Carnegie Hall.

On the trip from Boston, in order to avoid as many of the barred zones as possible, the orchestra used the Boston and Albany Railroad as far as the New York State capital and then it took the New York Central to this city.

Dr. Muck's first engagement in this city was in Brooklyn, where he gave a concert at the Academy of Music. He obtained permission to go from New York to Brooklyn from Francis J. Coffey, United States Attorney of New York, when he presented his credentials from the Department of Justice.

The Brooklyn audience went wild with enthusiasm when the orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and, either because of the masterful way in which the orchestra rendered the National Anthem or because of recent stories of alleged refusals on the part of Dr. Muck to lead the piece, the orchestra was obliged to play it twice in succession.

At the end of the first rendition, when the dignified applause which usually greets the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" had about run its course, the audience became wild with enthusiasm, rose to its feet, and the Academy fairly shook with handclapping and cheers. Finally some of those present sat down and a few hisses were heard, but the demonstration kept up, and, after a few minutes, Dr. Muck motioned to his men, and the anthem was repeated.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
Date

BIG AUDIENCE ENJOYS BOSTON SYMPHONY'S ART.

Orchestra Begins Programme of Two Numbers With "The Star Spangled Banner."

The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season was given in Carnegie Hall last evening before the customary large and appreciative audience.

The programme offered by Carl Muck, director, comprised two numbers only, Rachmaninoff's E minor symphony—first played here in 1909 by the Russian Symphony Society—and three selections from Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream." This was a fine contrast and one the audience apparently enjoyed.

The Russian's symphony—although somewhat lengthy, especially the adagio movement—is a noble, stirring and brilliant work replete with attractive rhythmic figures, lovely melodies, suggestions of dance tunes, quiet passages that induce a reflective mood, snatches of marches of primitive type and rousing climaxes.

The concert was opened with "The Star Spangled Banner." It had a different orchestration from that offered by the Boston men on their appearance here last month.

As an item of interest, it may be added that, according to report in the lobby, Dr. Muck was born in Bavaria, but his father was a citizen of Switzerland.

rom EVENING POST
ddress: New York City
ate

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Once upon a time the Russian composer Rachmaninoff wrote a prelude which made him famous. It was short—too short; but being too short is infinitely better than being too long—in pieces of music as in women. The same composer's symphony in his second symphony is too long—much too long; it lasted last night at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Carnegie Hall exactly an hour and nine minutes, a deplorable thing which shows that the German composers like Bruckner and Mahler, who wrote symphonies longer than a dachshund, worked their peace propaganda in Russia long before the war began.

In spite of its undue length it is a minor work (this does not refer to its being in E minor). There is a great deal of clever craftsmanship in it, and lots of beautiful orchestration, some of which is very effective—so effective that it blinds, or rather deafens, many listeners into the belief that it is great music. But it isn't; it is mediocre, and for the most part purely professorial—reminding one of what Schopenhauer used to say about German "Professorenphilosophie."

The orchestra played it superbly from beginning to end, and there was tremendous applause for the admirable players and their most efficient leader, Dr. Muck, who, as is now made known, is a Swiss citizen. He conducted also some pleasing excerpts from Mendelsohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, which never gets stale.

From HERALD
Address: New York City
Date DEC

DR. MUCK AND ALIENS IN HALIFAX BENEFIT

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—With Dr. Karl Muck leading and Fritz Kreisler on the programme, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, twenty-three of whose members, including Dr. Muck, are alien enemies, will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon for the aid of the Halifax explosion sufferers.

Major Henry L. Higginson will give the use of the hall, and the entire gross receipts of the performance, less the advertising bills, will be given to the stricken inhabitants of Halifax.

m TRIBUNE
iress: New York City
e 1917

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Two Concerts in Carnegie Hall

It is customary to say that Mr. Gericke "stored up" the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Fiedler "used it up"—that the one imparted discipline without evoking eloquence, while the other secured eloquence without maintaining discipline. But Dr. Muck, who conducted the second pair of the orchestra's New York concerts at Carnegie Hall Friday night and yesterday afternoon, has admirably maintained the balance. He used his orchestra to the utmost of its expressive possibilities, and at the same time fostered the mechanical virtues to an ever increasing degree. Perfect ensemble execution has become second nature to these men, who have worked together year after year, with scarcely a change of personnel. What is a tour de force to other orchestras is habit to them.

Dr. Muck's strings have all the eloquence of massed instruments, with the purity of one. His brass has the smoothness of a flute and an amazing virtuosity in the pianissimo. Even the bourgeois kettledrum becomes under his baton an instrument of fine art.

With such a band, Dr. Muck was able to give readings of the familiar "Leonore" overture and the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music of flawless purity and delicacy. The Rachmaninoff Second Symphony held the unfaltering attention of the audience, in spite of its prodigious length and the insufficiency of its subject matter. Debussy's "The Sea" became an exquisite work of pointillage impressionism, whereas it is usually a cubistic smudge. And MacDowell's "Indian Suite" took on a profound beauty that should warm the heart of the American musical patriot. Yet, even one who is not a patriot in matters of art will admit how richly this work deserves to remain in the concert repertory. It has traces of old-fashioned conventionalism, especially in the "love song." It is by no means faithful to the primitive spirit of Indian music. But MacDowell worked so much closer to his materials than his contemporaries that he produced music with the genuine ring which has rarely been captured by the American composer.

Mr. Stransky, at Carnegie Hall, last night, conducted an "all-French" programme, with Louis Graveure as soloist. It is a second-rate France which this music represents, especially in Godard's exotic suite. Mr. Stransky put abundant color into it all. Yet how rough and many-voiced his string section sounds after that of Dr. Muck!

There is more, probably, than the disciplinary genius of a great conductor to explain the perfection of the musicians from Boston. Such a material factor as Major Higginson's admirable pension system, with its resultant sense of security to the players and ardent esprit de corps, must have been highly potent.

NEW YORKER
s: New York City. HERALD

Dr. Muck ist ein Schweizer Bürger.

Obgleich in Würzburg geboren, erwarb er das Bürgerrecht der Eidgenossenschaft.

Washington, 8. Dez. Die Schweizer Gesandtschaft machte infolge einer Anfrage bekannt, daß Dr. Karl Muck, Direktor des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters, ein schweizer Bürger sei. Er wurde in Würzburg, Bayern, geboren, doch wurde sein Vater schweizer Bürger, als Dr. Muck acht Jahre alt war. Später erwarb auch Dr. Muck das Bürgerrecht in der Schweiz; er leitete auch eine Zeitlang das Nationalorchester in Zürich, wo er auch in Zwischenräumen verschiedentlich wohnte.

Charles A. Ellis, Geschäftsführer des Bostoner Orchesters, erklärte in einem Brief an Washingtoner Freunde des bekannten Dirigenten, daß Dr. Muck ein Schweizer und kein deutscher Unterian sei. Eine Untersuchung der vielfachen verdächtigenden Gerüchte habe nichts ergeben, was Dr. Muck als deutschen Agenten im geringsten belasten könne. Dieser habe es verstanden, während der sieben Jahre seiner Dirigentenschaft das Orchester zur höchsten Blüte zu bringen. Er sei stets ein gesetzliebender Mann gewesen, solange er in Amerika sei. Während der drei Kriegsjahre habe sein Einfluß genügt, volle Harmonie unter dem kosmopolitisch zusammengesetzten Orchester zu bewahren. Dieses bestehe aus 54 Amerikanern (17 hier geborenen), 22 Deutschen, 8 Oesterreichern, 2 Italienern, 2 Engländern, 6 Holländern, 2 Russen, 3 Franzosen, 2 Belgiern und 2 Böhmen.

STAATSZEITUNG
ess: New York City.
9

Dr. Muck angeblich Schweizer Bürger.

Sein Vater soll schon das Bürgerrecht jener Republik erlangt haben.

Herr Charles A. Ellis, der Geschäftsleiter des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, hat an Freunde Dr. Karl Mucks, Kapellmeister des Orchesters, folgenden Brief gerichtet: „Zur Information von Subskribenten der Konzerte des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters und um falschen Eindrücken zu begegnen, welche durch Behauptungen über Dr. Karl Muck gemacht wurden, Behauptungen, die teils durch die Zeitungen, teils anderweitig verbreitet worden sind, gestatte ich mir, die folgende Erklärung abzugeben, welche durch Anfragen bei den zuständigen Behörden leicht bestätigt werden kann:

„Doktor Muck ist kein Preuße.

„Er ist kein feindlicher Ausländer in den Ver. Staaten.

„Er ist kein Beamter der deutschen Regierung.

„Er ist kein deutscher Bürger.

„Obgleich in Bayern geboren, ist er doch ein Schweizer Bürger, wie auch sein Vater es war.

„Nach sorgfältiger Untersuchung zahlreicher phantastischer und malitiöser Gerüchte über Dr. Muck, welche zu ihrer Kenntnis gebracht wurden, haben die Bundesbehörden nichts gefunden, das ihn als deutschen Agenten inkriminieren könnte, auch habe sie ihm keine Handlung nachgewiesen, durch welche die Interessen dieses Landes geschädigt worden wären".

„Dr. Muck ist ein Mann von hoher Bildung und seine ungewöhnliche Begabung als Musik-Direktor ist allgemein bekannt. Während der sieben Jahre, welche er in Amerika zugebracht, hat er unsere Gesetze hochgeachtet und sie nach Buchstaben und Geist befolgt.

„Seit den drei Jahren des Krieges hat er unser kosmopolitisches Orchester mit seltenem Takt in täglichen Proben und Konzerten geleitet. Er hat keine Diskussion politischer Angelegenheiten aufkommen lassen und unter unseren, so vielen Nationen entstammenden Musikern ist es nicht zu der geringsten Reibung gekommen. Wir zählen in unserem Orchester 51 Amerikaner (darunter 17 hier Geborene), 22 Deutsche, 8 Oesterreicher, 2 Italiener, 2 Briten, 6 Holländer, 2 Russen, 3 Franzosen, 2 Belgier und 2 Böhmen".

(Nach Hugo Riemanns Musik-Lexikon ist Dr. Karl Muck am 22. Oktober 1859 als der Sohn eines bayrischen Ministerialrats in Darmstadt geboren. Anm. der Redaktion.)

AMERICAN
ess: New York City.
DEC 9 1917

Boston Symphony in Splendid Programme

IT may be doubted whether MacDowell's Indian suite in E minor, dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its former conductor, Emil Paur, ever received a finer performance than yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall under the direction of Dr. Muck.

This work of America's most distinguished composer is sufficiently familiar to the public. Yet on this occasion it seemed as if new beauties, hitherto concealed, emerged from the score. Never, surely, had the mournful measures of the fourth movement, depicting an Indian woman's lament over the departure of her son, assumed such breadth and nobility of expression.

In Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "La Mer," which came as the second number of the Boston Orchestra's matinee programme, Dr. Muck brought to a hearing once more a work he had introduced to New Yorkers in 1907. This marvellous composition is not as much of a riddle now as it was ten years ago. But no public performance in this city has more than skimmed over the surface of the music; yesterday's was not an exception.

The shimmering instrumental shell, to be sure, was presented brilliantly. But it must be confessed that Dr. Muck failed to penetrate to the marrow of the music.

These three little masterpieces are not merely impressionist tone-paintings. They are charged with the burning intensity of white heat.

The programme closed with an inspiring interpretation of Beethoven's "Leonore" No. 3 overture.

128

EVENING JOURNAL

New York. DEC 10 1917

3 ORCHESTRAS IN WEEK-END CONCERTS

Three Pianists Also Add Their Bit to Saturday and Sunday Music.

The music of Edward MacDowell is still subject of as stubborn controversy as though it were "music of the future," instead of quite the day before yesterday. Its embattled defenders come forward with flourish of lance ready to pin to the ground any who differ with them. But the dust they stir always settles once more where it rose, and their fierce belligerency becomes warmed-over apologetics. Meanwhile the music itself remains quiescent, opening its eyes wearily now and again only when an orchestral conductor, at his wits' end for material, prods it into an unwilling wakefulness.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appears nowadays to be frequently in the state of mind of the man with the divining rod waiting for it to turn. Some of his programs sound as though they had been the result of the crooked stick being passed over the Boston Symphony library and the scores hauled out as the rod wavered. And one of these programs was assuredly that of Saturday. MacDowell yielded to the fillip of the stick, and also did Debussy, and the third of the "Leonore" overtures filled out the gap in time at the end.

It was MacDowell's "Indian" suite that Dr. Muck chose for resuscitation, but it did not breathe the breath of life, much as he and the men from Boston labored over it. MacDowell sentimentalized the several aboriginal moods in the accustomed fashion, in especial the theme of the Indian's lovemaking. The music, in itself, is merely second-hand Liszt.

Debussy's sketches comprised in his three moods, superinduced by rather impersonal contemplation and meditation at sea, are a sort of atmospheric suite of perhaps superficial, but, nevertheless, rare charm. In them the master of novel orchestral utterance seems to have been dallying with the light task of a Summer's afternoon, knowing full well what he was at, playing brilliantly with his instrumentation and smilingly evolving three delightful sea pictures—Toulousse-Lautrec in a mist.

EVENING NEW YORKER

ress: New York City.

Dr. Muck ein Schweizer

Obgleich in Würzburg geboren, erwarb er das schweizer Bürgerrecht.

Washington, 8. Dez. Die Schweizer Gesandtschaft machte infolge einer Anfrage bekannt, daß Dr. Karl Muck, Direktor des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, ein schweizer Bürger sei. Er wurde in Würzburg, Bayern, geboren, doch wurde sein Vater schweizer Bürger, als Dr. Muck acht Jahre alt war. Später erwarb auch Dr. Muck das Bürgerrecht in der Schweiz. Er leitete auch ein zeitlang das Nationalorchester in Zürich, wo er auch in Zwischenräumen verschiedentlich wohnte.

Charles A. Ellis, Geschäftsführer des Bostoner Orchesters, erklärte in einem Brief an Washingtoner Freunde des bekannten Dirigenten, daß Dr. Muck ein Schweizer und kein deutscher Unterian sei. Eine Untersuchung der vielfachen verdächtigenden Gerüchte habe nichts ergeben, was Dr. Muck als deutschen Agenten im geringsten belasten könne. Dieser habe es verstanden, während der sieben Jahre seiner Dirigentenschaft das Orchester zur höchsten Blüte zu bringen. Er sei stets ein gesetzliebender Mann gewesen, solange er in Amerika sei. Während der drei Kriegsjahre habe sein Einfluß genügt, volle Harmonie unter dem kosmopolitisch zusammengesetzten Orchester zu bewahren. Dieses würde aus 54 Amerikanern (17 hier geborenen), 22 Deutschen, 8 Oesterreichern, 2 Italienern, 2 Engländern, 6 Gallän-

SUN

: New York City.

DEC 8 - 1917

APPLAUSE FOR DR. MUCK.

"Star Spangled Banner" Feature of Symphony Concert.

The evening concert of the second pair given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Carl Muck, conductor, took place in Carnegie Hall last night, the change made from the visiting organization's customary evening of Thursday having been due to certain complications in bookings.

At the beginning of the concert Dr. Muck led his orchestra in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and with an arrangement more simple than the one he had before.

The programme which followed consisted of but two numbers and of these neither one was a novelty. Rachmaninoff's second symphony in E minor took up the first half and more of the time allotted to the hearing of the evening's music. The other part was devoted to Mendelssohn and the selections were the overture, nocturne and scherzo from his "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The Rachmaninoff symphony had its first New York hearing in January, 1909, at a concert of the Russian Symphony Society. In performance it makes elaborate demands upon the skill of the orchestra. That it received a superb reading last night from Dr. Muck and his men it is almost needless to note. There was much applause throughout the evening, and following the playing of the national anthem it was prolonged.

EVENING GLOBE

ess: New York City

DEC 8 191

American Conductors.

Editor Globe:—Your editorial anent Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra touched a subject in which I am deeply interested. Your suggestion as to the availability of such a man as Mr. Monteux is eminently germane. He undoubtedly would give a fine account of himself. Nevertheless, I am sorry to disagree with you when you say that "an American conductor of the calibre to head the Boston orchestra is probably out of the question at present."

To me it has always seemed little short of an outrage that practically all the conductors of our leading opera houses and orchestras (with the exception of the New York Symphony) are foreigners. Surely the absence of the native American betokens the fact that he has not been given the proper opportunity to develop along this line. Personally I can say that I never had an opportunity to conduct an orchestra of any reasonable size and pretensions until I had to face an audience of 5,000 people conducting one of my own compositions after a fifteen-minute rehearsal. As an American composer I have ever cherished the belief that if we are ever to find the musical Messiah who will lead us out of the slough of neglect he will be found in the person of the American conductor. Just so long as the American singer, instrumentalist, and composer have to humbly kiss the hand of the foreign conductor just so long will they be denied the recognition which is the just meed of their actual achievement.

Now, to take up the point of my disagreement with you, may I say that there are several Americans who could conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra with credit to themselves and to that institution? To mention only one of several let me name Mr. Franz X. Arens. For over fifteen years this gentleman has been giving concerts in New York City, which have been of the highest artistic and educational value, and this with what is called in musical slang "a picked-up orchestra," wthout the multiplicity of rehearsals enjoyed by permanent bodies. During this time he has produced the works of a large number of American composers and in general achieved a record which on its face entitles him to consideration for even so high a post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is only one of several who might be mentioned. Why not give such gentlemen an opportunity? Let us put aside the foreigner. America first!

JAMES P. DUNN.

Jersey City, Dec. 3.

EVENING POST

ss: New York City

DEC 1 - 2 /

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Saturday and Sunday Concerts.

Dr. Karl Muck, who, everybody is relieved to hear, is a citizen of Switzerland, began Saturday afternoon's Carnegie Hall concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in patriotic American fashion by conducting "The Star-Spangled Banner," this time without any contrapuntal stunts by the violins, and following it up with the best orchestral piece by America's foremost composer, Edward MacDowell's Indian Suite, which was played with ingratiating tenderness and melancholy in the love song and the dirge, and in the movement marked "In War Time," with the rough, savage vigor which to Mr. Apthorp suggested an Indian scalp dance, and which on Saturday greatly delighted the audience. Debussy's three orchestra pieces, entitled "La Mer," which followed, called for little of this vigor, except at the end, for this modern Frenchman, who excluded the rude brass from most of his "Pelléas" score, delights chiefly in the gentler frolics of wind and waves.

From EVENING GLOBE

Address: New York City

Date DEC 8 1917

ONE SERVICE OF DR. MUCK.

(Samuel Carr in the Boston Herald.)

Dr. Muck is doing one important piece of work for this community and wherever he appears with his orchestra throughout the country and plays "The Star-Spangled Banner" in showing the American people how it ought to be played and sung.

Those of us who have been accustomed all our lives to hear the liberties taken with the tempo by some of the so-called great singers and the almost interminable hold some of them make on the final note of the last line but one are very thankful to Dr. Muck for enabling us to hear the fine rhythm in which the music ought to be rendered, in contrast to the usual pauses, which are ineffective and unmusical. As he plays the anthem we are getting to feel a much greater respect and love for the music than ever before.

TELEGRAM

: New York City.

DEC 9 - 1917

Dr. Muck Again Leads U. S. Anthem.—Headline. That's all right. He'll get to like it directly.

om WORLD

dress: New York City

te DEC 9 - 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES VARIED MUSIC EXQUISITELY.

A programme of splendid proportion and of utmost interest to the large audience was given in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It consisted of MacDowell's "Indian" suite, the Debussy Trois Symphoniques "La Mer" and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3.

Offering abundant contrast and containing sufficient weight, it was received with manifest approbation—as it should have been, because Dr. Muck showed an admirable degree of sympathy for each of the compositions, which were wholly dissimilar.

The charming MacDowell work, with its color and American characteristics, never had a finer interpretation. The smoothness of the strings, their impeccable unanimity and the cohesiveness of the remaining choirs in the orchestra made for an achievement that will not soon be forgotten.

Equally finished was the playing of the Debussy work, and more sympathetic tonal quality has not been heard here in orchestral playing in a long time. The three sketches, which represent Debussy at his best, had all the delightful dissonance and unique orchestration which are a part of the gifted Frenchman. The concluding number, the "Leonore" overture, was almost perfectly performed.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date DEC 10 1917

After all, it seems Dr. Muck of the Boston Orchestra is not a Prussian but a Swiss. Will the musical tempest in a teapot now subside?

EVENING STAATSZEITU

ss: New York City.

* * *

Man muß nach Brooklyn gehen, zu sehen, wie die wirklich Gebildeten es machen. In Brooklyn wurde Dr. Karl Muck an der Spitze seines berühmten Orchesters, in dem 23 „Alien Enemies" fidbeln, aber künstlerisch, von einer großen Zuhörerschaft, in der man viel Uniformen sah, jubelnd begrüßt, weil er Künstler, dann erst Alien Enemy ist. In Brooklyn gab's sogar ein Encore zum „Star Spangleb Banner", und Muck dirigierte das „Encore". In Brooklyn hob und senkte sich der Taktstock des Doktor Karl auf Wagner und Mozart auf Debussy, Berlioz und Beethoven, in der einzigen Internationalität, die es heute noch gibt — der Macht der Musik.

EVENING WORLD

ress: New York City.

DEC 8 1917

New York subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts gave to Dr. Karl Muck and his orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night an exceptionally warm greeting. Upon his entrance there was what might be termed without exaggeration an ovation. He directed the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and discarded the flipperies with which he had embellished it at his last visit. This gave opportunity for a demonstration of loyalty that was loud and prolonged. Dr. Muck, as before, kept his back turned to the audience until it was over. Never has this world-famous orchestra played so superlatively. The programme consisted of Rachmaninoff's second symphony and some of Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The former, too long drawn out, in its half barbaric construction, was gripping as Dr. Muck and his musicians played it, and although Mendelsohn's music seemed somewhat thin after it, the old time measures were made fresh and delightful by contrast.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World PUBLIC Ledger

From

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date DEC 7 - 1917

KREISLER VERSUS MUCK

Contrasting Attitude of Aliens Shown by Their Actions

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—Fritz Kreisler, like the great character he is, has wisely canceled all musical engagements. My admiration for him as a musician and as a character is unbounded, and is confirmed by this act. Being an enemy alien, he immediately adopts a dignified attitude worthy of respect.

Dr. Karl Muck, on the contrary, sneers openly at our thrilling national anthem (which John C. Freund, editor of Musical America, calls "a fine expression of the democratic soul of the American people") and when forced to play it or lose an outrageously large salary of good, if much scorned, American dollars, gratuitously insults the American people by dressing up its dignified and inspiring measures in the frills and furbelows of musical trimming till its own composer would not know it and completely destroying, as he insultingly intended to do, its dignity and power.

I feel thoroughly and forever shamed to think that an audience of my townspeople should have sat meekly through such an impertinence of musical kultur, i. e., vandalism, with true Quaker nonresistance, perhaps characteristic of Philadelphia as evidenced in our city politics, but none the less contemptible. If this supine attitude is not giving traitorous "comfort to the enemy," I do not know how to characterize it.

ELLA DAY BLAIR.

Philadelphia, December 5, 1917.

Germany as Tartuffe

EVENING JOURNAL

New York. DEC 1917

3 ORCHESTRAS IN WEEK-END CONCERTS

Three Pianists Also Add Their Bit to Saturday and Sunday Music.

The music of Edward MacDowell is still subject of as stubborn controversy as though it were "music of the future," instead of quite the day before yesterday. Its embattled defenders come forward with flourish of lance ready to pin to the ground any who differ with them. But the dust they stir always settles once more where it rose, and their fierce belligerency becomes warmed-over apologetics. Meanwhile the music itself remains quiescent, opening its eyes wearily now and again only when an orchestral conductor, at his wits' end for material, prods it into an unwilling wakefulness.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appears nowadays to be frequently in the state of mind of the man with the divining rod waiting for it to turn. Some of his programs sound as though they had been the result of the crooked stick being passed over the Boston Symphony library and the scores hauled out as the rod wavered. And one of these programs was assuredly that of Saturday. MacDowell yielded to the fillip of the stick, and also did Debussy, and the third of the "Leonore" overtures filled out the gap in time at the end.

It was MacDowell's "Indian" suite that Dr. Muck chose for resuscitation, but it did not breathe the breath of life, much as he and the men from Boston labored over it. MacDowell sentimentalized the several aboriginal moods in the accustomed fashion, in especial the theme of the Indian's lovemaking. The music, in itself, is merely second-hand Liszt.

Debussy's sketches comprised in his three moods, superinduced by rather impersonal contemplation and meditation at sea, are a sort of atmospheric suite of perhaps superficial, but, nevertheless, rare charm. In them the master of novel orchestral utterance seems to have been dallying with the light task of a Summer's afternoon, knowing full well what he was at, playing brilliantly with his instrumentation and smilingly evolving three delightful sea pictures—Toulousse-Lautrec in a mist.

EVENING NEW YORKER

ress: New York City.

Dr. Muck ein Schweizer

Obgleich in Würzburg geboren, erwarb er das schweizer Bürgerrecht.

Washington, 8. Dez. Die Schweizer Gesandtschaft machte infolge einer Anfrage bekannt, daß Dr. Karl Muck, Direktor des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters, ein schweizer Bürger sei. Er wurde in Würzburg, Bayern, geboren, doch wurde sein Vater schweizer Bürger, als Dr. Muck acht Jahre alt war. Später erwarb auch Dr. Muck das Bürgerrecht in der Schweiz. Er leitete auch ein zeitlang das Nationalorchester in Zürich, wo er auch in Zwischenräumen verschiedentlich wohnte.

Charles A. Ellis, Geschäftsführer des Bostoner Orchesters, erklärte in einem Brief an Washingtoner Freunde des bekannten Dirigenten, daß Dr. Muck ein Schweizer und kein deutscher Unterian sei. Eine Untersuchung der vielfachen verdächtigenden Gerüchte habe nichts ergeben, was Dr. Muck als deutschen Agenten im geringsten belasten könne. Dieser habe es verstanden, während der sieben Jahre seiner Dirigentenschaft das Orchester zur höchsten Blüte zu bringen. Er sei stets ein gesetzliebender Mann gewesen, solange er in Amerika sei. Während der drei Kriegsjahre habe sein Einfluß genügt, volle Harmonie unter dem kosmopolitisch zusammengesetzten Orchester zu bewahren. Dieses würde aus 54 Amerikanern (17 hier geborenen), 22 Deutschen, 8 Oesterreichern, 2 Italienern, 2 Engländern, 6 Schwe-

SUN

: New York City.

DEC 8 - 1917

APPLAUSE FOR DR. MUCK.

"Star Spangled Banner" Feature of Symphony Concert.

The evening concert of the second pair given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Carl Muck, conductor, took place in Carnegie Hall last night, the change made from the visiting organization's customary evening of Thursday having been due to certain complications in bookings.

At the beginning of the concert Dr. Muck led his orchestra in the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and with an arrangement more simple than the one he had before.

The programme which followed consisted of but two numbers and of these neither one was a novelty. Rachmaninoff's second symphony in E minor took up the first half and more of the time allotted to the hearing of the evening's music. The other part was devoted to Mendelssohn and the selections were the overture, nocturne and scherzo from his "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The Rachmaninoff symphony had its first New York hearing in January, 1909, at a concert of the Russian Symphony Society. In performance it makes elaborate demands upon the skill of the orchestra. That it received a superb reading last night from Dr. Muck and his men it is almost needless to note. There was much applause throughout the evening, and following the playing of the national anthem it was prolonged.

EVENING GLOBE

ess: New York City

DEC 8 - 1917

American Conductors.

Editor Globe:—Your editorial anent Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra touched a subject in which I am deeply interested. Your suggestion as to the availability of such a man as Mr. Monteux is eminently germane. He undoubtedly would give a fine account of himself. Nevertheless, I am sorry to disagree with you when you say that "an American conductor of the calibre to head the Boston orchestra is probably out of the question at present."

To me it has always seemed little short of an outrage that practically all the conductors of our leading opera houses and orchestras (with the exception of the New York Symphony) are foreigners. Surely the absence of the native American betokens the fact that he has not been given the proper opportunity to develop along this line. Personally I can say that I never had an opportunity to conduct an orchestra of any reasonable size and pretensions until I had to face an audience of 5,000 people conducting one of my own compositions after a fifteen-minute rehearsal. As an American composer I have ever cherished the belief that if we are ever to find the musical Messiah who will lead us out of the slough of neglect he will be found in the person of the American conductor. Just so long as the American singer, instrumentalist, and composer have to humbly kiss the hand of the foreign conductor just so long will they be denied the recognition which is the just meed of their actual achievement.

Now, to take up the point of my disagreement with you, may I say that there are several Americans who could conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra with credit to themselves and to that institution? To mention only one of several let me name Mr. Franz X. Arens. For over fifteen years this gentleman has been giving concerts in New York City, which have been of the highest artistic and educational value, and this with what is called in musical slang "a picked-up orchestra," wthout the multiplicity of rehearsals enjoyed by permanent bodies. During this time he has produced the works of a large number of American composers and in general achieved a record which on its face entitles him to consideration for even so high a post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is only one of several who might be mentioned. Why not give such gentlemen an opportunity? Let us put aside the foreigner. America first!

JAMES P. DUNN.

Jersey City, Dec. 3.

EVENING POST

ss: New York City

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Saturday and Sunday Concerts.

Dr. Karl Muck, who, everybody is relieved to hear, is a citizen of Switzerland, began Saturday afternoon's Carnegie Hall concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in patriotic American fashion by conducting "The Star-Spangled Banner," this time without any contrapuntal stunts by the violins, and following it up with the best orchestral piece by America's foremost composer, Edward MacDowell's Indian Suite, which was played with ingratiating tenderness and melancholy in the love song and the dirge, and in the movement marked "In War Time," with the rough, savage vigor which to Mr. Apthorp suggested an Indian scalp dance, and which on Saturday greatly delighted the audience. Debussy's three orchestra pieces, entitled "La Mer," which followed, called for little of this vigor, except at the end, for this modern Frenchman, who excluded the rude brass from most of his "Pelléas" score, delights chiefly in the gentler frolics of wind and waves.

From EVENING GLOBE

Address: New York City

Date DEC

ONE SERVICE OF DR. MUCK.

(Samuel Carr in the Boston Herald.)

Dr. Muck is doing one important piece of work for this community and wherever he appears with his orchestra throughout the country and plays "The Star-Spangled Banner" in showing the American people how it ought to be played and sung.

Those of us who have been accustomed all our lives to hear the liberties taken with the tempo by some of the so-called great singers and the almost interminable hold some of them make on the final note of the last line but one are very thankful to Dr. Muck for enabling us to hear the fine rhythm in which the music ought to be rendered, in contrast to the usual pauses, which are ineffective and unmusical. As he plays the anthem we are getting to feel a much greater respect and love for the music than ever before.

TELEGRAM

: New York City.

DEC 9 - 1917

Dr. Muck Again Leads U. S. Anthem.—Headline. That's all right. He'll get to like it directly.

om WORLD

dress: New York City

te DEC 9 - 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES VARIED MUSIC EXQUISITELY.

A programme of splendid proportions and of utmost interest to the large audience was given in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It consisted of MacDowell's "Indian" suite, the Debussy Trois Symphoniques "La Mer" and Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3.

Offering abundant contrast and containing sufficient weight, it was received with manifest approbation—as it should have been, because Dr. Muck showed an admirable degree of sympathy for each of the compositions, which were wholly dissimilar.

The charming MacDowell work, with its color and American characteristics, never had a finer interpretation. The smoothness of the strings, their impeccable unanimity and the cohesiveness of the remaining choirs in the orchestra made for an achievement that will not soon be forgotten.

Equally finished was the playing of the Debussy work, and more sympathetic tonal quality has not been heard here in orchestral playing in a long time. The three sketches, which represent Debussy at his best, had all the delightful dissonance and unique orchestration which are a part of the gifted Frenchman. The concluding number, the "Leonore" overture, was almost perfectly performed.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date DEC 10 1917

After all, it seems Dr. Muck of the Boston Orchestra is not a Prussian but a Swiss. Will the musical tempest in a teapot now subside?

EVENING STAATSZEITUNG

ss: New York City.

* * *

Man muß nach Brooklyn gehen, zu sehen, wie die wirklich Gebildeten es machen. In Brooklyn wurde Dr. Karl Muck an der Spitze seines berühmten Orchesters, in dem 23 „Alien Enemies" fiddeln, aber künstlerisch, von einer großen Zuhörerschaft, in der man viel Uniformen sah, jubelnd begrüßt, weil er Künstler, dann erst Alien Enemy ist. In Brooklyn gab's sogar ein Encore zum „Star Spangleb Banner", und Muck dirigierte das „Encore". In Brooklyn hob und senkte sich der Taktstock des Doktor Karl auf Wagner und Mozart auf Debussy, Berlioz und Beethoven, in der einzigen Internationalität, die es heute noch gibt — der Macht der Musik.

EVENING WORLD

ress: New York City.

New York subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts gave to Dr. Karl Muck and his orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night an exceptionally warm greeting. Upon his entrance there was what might be described without exaggeration an ovation. He directed the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and discarded the flipperies with which he had embellished it at his last visit. This gave opportunity for a demonstration of loyalty that was loud and prolonged. Dr. Muck, as before, kept his back turned to the audience until it was over. Never has this world-famous orchestra played so superlatively. The programme consisted of Rachmaninoff's second symphony and some of Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The former, too long drawn out, in its half barbaric construction, was gripping as Dr. Muck and his musicians played it, and although Mendelsohn's music seemed somewhat thin after it, the old time measures were made fresh and delightful by contrast.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World PUBLIC Ledger

From

Address Phila. Pa.

Date DEC - 9

KREISLER VERSUS MUCK

Contrasting Attitude of Aliens Shown by Their Actions

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—Fritz Kreisler, like the great character he is, has wisely canceled all musical engagements. My admiration for him as a musician and as a character is unbounded, and is confirmed by this act. Being an enemy alien, he immediately adopts a dignified attitude worthy of respect.

Dr. Karl Muck, on the contrary, sneers openly at our thrilling national anthem (which John C. Freund, editor of Musical America, calls "a fine expression of the democratic soul of the American people") and when forced to play it or lose an outrageously large salary of good, if much scorned, American dollars, gratuitously insults the American people by dressing up its dignified and inspiring measures in the frills and furbelows of musical trimming till its own composer would not know it and completely destroying, as he insultingly intended to do, its dignity and power.

I feel thoroughly and forever shamed to think that an audience of my townspeople should have sat meekly through such an impertinence of musical kultur, i. e., vandalism, with true Quaker nonresistance, perhaps characteristic of Philadelphia as evidenced in our city politics, but none the less contemptible. If this supine attitude is not giving traitorous "comfort to the enemy," I do not know how to characterize it.

ELLA DAY BLAIR.

Philadelphia, December 5, 1917.

Germany as Tartuffe

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 7 - 1917

ARL MUCK LEADS U. S. HYMN TWICE

Again Declines to Acknowledge Applause, But Repeats "Star-Spangled Banner."

NELLIE MELBA WELCOMED.

Boston Orchestra Plays Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Karl Muck, of Boston, late of Berlin, has a stubborn disposition. So, it proved last night, has that portion of Brooklyn which forms the audiences for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which Dr. Muck conducts at the Academy of Music.

The result of this conflict of wills and purposes was curious. It will be recalled that a month ago, when the first of the season's series of Boston Symphony concerts was given here, Dr. Muck opened it, more or less under protest, with "The Star Spangled Banner," and that when the audience applauded noisily and at length he remained rigidly oblivious of the patriotic tumult. Last night the situation was duplicated, and again the applause was loud and persistent when the national anthem in its Boston-Berlin setting, with all the string instruments playing an unfamiliar obligato, was finished.

Again Dr. Muck kept his back militantly rigid and ignored the tribute. But the audience was as determined as he to fight the issue out. The applause became louder and seemed to be spreading. After several minutes of this the conductor's arm was raised, the auditors quieted down expectantly and, to everybody's astonishment, the patriotic tune was started and was played all over again.

It was the first time within memory that "The Star Spangled Banner" has been repeated in response to a popular and patriotic clamor. It was the first Boston Symphony encore since Paderewski's last appearance here with that orchestra about three years ago. It had last night the effect of proving a most amusing outcome of a tense situation, and it undoubtedly made both the German conductor and his Brooklyn hearers feel they had not been worsted in this test of stubborn dispositions.

The exciting moment passed, the orchestra went on with its scheduled programme, which was one of unusual interest and enjoyment. Mme. Nellie Melba, of immortal operatic memory, was the incidental soloist, singing two Mozart arias and one from Debussy. Her glorious voice seemingly as fresh and surely as powerful as ever, she was an impressive figure in her gown of Nile green, with long tra[illegible] wearing at her throat a single gem that seemed to illumine the auditorium. She won a record reception from the big audience.

The orchestra opened the programme with the most famous of all symphonies—the C minor, Beethoven's Fifth. It served to exploit the inimitable tonal excellence and instrumental balance of the Bostonians. At times there seemed an inclination toward over-emphasizing the accenting and making the reading vigorous rather than graceful, but the total effect was more than satisfying. The strings were particularly noteworthy in the trio of the famous third movement. Dr. Muck led the third and fourth without a break. The other orchestral numbers were the Berlioz "Ball at the Capulets'" from "Romeo and Juliet," which proved more technically brilliant than intrinsically interesting, and that fine old standby, "Tannhauser" overture.

Insult, Says Subscriber.

To the Editor of The Standard Union:

Dr. Muck's contemptuous insult to America and her national anthem at the Academy last evening should be resented with scorn and indignation by every citizen, no matter of what nationality. If the Institute cannot be prevailed on by appeal and protest to spare us the indignity of sitting silently under the taunts and insults of this alien enemy it will be necessary to save our self-respect by absent treatment, i. e., to staying away and leaving to the Institute and its disloyal followers and supporters a "beggarly array of empty boxes." Compared with Muck, he should use the complete description, "mucker," ler's fro[illegible] ly se[illegible] ar[illegible] b[illegible] th[illegible] a[illegible]

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 7 - 1917

MUCK FORCED TO REPEAT ANTHEM

German Conductor Impassive at Academy Demonstration.

The audience which filled the opera house of the Academy of Music last night to hear the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, compelled Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" twice before the program commenced. A storm of applause which went on for many minutes with no diminution in volume, caused the repetition. During the outburst, Dr. Muck remained standing with his back to the audience, impassive. If the spectators intended to break down his immobile attitude, they failed, but at length he signalled the orchestra to rise and, lifting his baton, launched a second time into the National anthem, which was magnificently rendered.

The elaborate filigree work for the strings which marked its performance at the memorable first concert was eliminated, and a dignified, hymn-like renditions, of rich and splendid tonal qualities took its place.

With Mme. Melba as soloist, the orchestra gave a program of outstanding merit. There was not a mediocre moment from the first bars of Beethoven's matchless symphony No. 5 in C minor to the last glorious measures of the "Tannhauser" overture.

Mme. Melba sang with accustomed brilliancy and was repeatedly recalled. Particularly appealing was the canzona, "Voi, che sapete," from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." She preceded that well-known aria with another selection from a less familiar opera by the same composer, the "Zefferetti lusinghieri" aria from "Idomeneo, Re di Creta." Her final number was the recitative and aria of Lia from Debussy's "The Prodigal Son."

The consistently fine tonal qualities of the orchestral ensemble were shown at their best in the symphony. The first movement, with its passionate rhythms and burning chords, the andante con moto, with its melancholy soberness and touching grace, the sombre mystery of the scherzo and the final triumphal march were all interpreted with classic clarity, breadth and restraint.

The orchestra played, beside the symphony and the "Tannhauser" overture, Hector Berlioz's "Ball at the Caulets," from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony.

Just how the orchestra were enabled to dodge the barred zones in Boston and New York and keep the date in Brooklyn could not be learned at the concert. Reports from Boston had been that most of the concerts in other cities were being cancelled because of the Government's regulations regarding the movements of alien enemies. When W. H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra, was asked about it, he said:

"The fact that the orchestra is here should be sufficient answer. I can say nothing more."

from EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 6 -

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The program to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the Academy of Music was considered, yesterday afternoon, in a lecture-recital at the Institute by Professor Hamilton C. Macdougal of Wellesley College. He first played the melodies of the two Mozart airs that Mme. Melba is to sing tonight, a recitative and aria from "Idomeneo, Re di Creta," and the canzona, "Voi, che sapete," from "Le Nozze di Figaro."

The lecturer then turned to Beethoven's beautiful Fifth Symphony, in C minor, playing the distinctive themes of each of the four movements. The symphony was epoch-making as regards its musical form, said the professor, for the great thing that Beethoven did was to unite the fourth movement to the third by employing similar material, making the music coherent. The symphony has come to be regarded as a landmark and wonderfully helpful in the art of music that later composers followed.

The work is also remarkable for stoutness of construction, said Professor Macdougal, especially in the first movement. In the "andante," the familiar and favorite second movement, which is a theme with variations, he called attention to the 'cello melodies. Beethoven's basses, he said, always have virility and power and contain great melodic interest. He also commented on the note of C of the kettledrums in the third movement, the connecting of two movements requiring courage on the part of the composer. The final numbers on the program, those by Berlioz, Debussy and Wagner, were not discussed.

STANDARD UNION

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

- 1917

KAHL MUCK A SWISS CITIZEN, IT IS LEARNED

Musical circles were not surprised to-day at the report from Washington that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a Swiss citizen and not a Prussian. Dr. Muck was born in Bavaria, and when eight years old his father took out his Swiss citizenship papers. The status of the son followed that of the father, and later, it is said, when the musical director reached his majority, he took out his own papers.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in a statement sent to friends of Dr. Muck, calls attention to his neutral citizenship and adds:

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises 54 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians, 2 Bohemians."

CITIZEN

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC. 7 - 19

MME. MELBA AT ACADEMY.

oston Symphony Gives Fine Program[illegible].

Mme. Melba receiv[illegible] come when Brooklyn that had in fact grown into an appreciative friendship when she appeared at the Academy of Music last evening. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has always occupied a warm spot in the heart of local lovers of music, and last night's performance contributed largely to deepening and widening of the appreciative feeling and love for this distinguished exponent of musical culture.

The concert was the second of the season, given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The house was filled to its capacity, and when the notes of the national anthem resounded there was a natural and instinctive movement forward to discover which of the conductors was officiating. Dr. Karl Muck was in his place and not a ripple of discord was to be observed in orchestra or house.

Mme. Melba, the soloist of the evening, was in splendid voice. The wide range and extensive sweep of her performance taxed her somewhat, but the singer never faltered, and the performance was musically popular and artistically perfect.

The programme was as follows:

Symphony in C Minor, No. 5, Op. 67 ..... Beethoven
- Allegro con ario.
- Andante con mato.
- Allegro, trio.
- Allegro.

a. Aria from "Idomeneo," "Zefferetti lusinghieri" ..... Mozart

b. Aria from "The Marriage of Figaro," "Voi che sapete" ..... Mozart
Madame Melba.

"Ball at the Capulets," from the Symphony, "Romeo and Juliett" ..... Berlioz

Recitative and aria of Lia, from "The Prodigal Son" ..... Debussy
Madame Melba.

Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner

EAGLE

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC -7 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS AT ACADEMY

Through Permission of Department of Justice and of State Authorities.

NATIONAL ANTHEM TWICE.

Program Goes Smoothly, With Nellie Melba Singing in Fine Style and Excellent Orchestral Playing.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second concert of the Brooklyn series at the Academy of Music last evening. Apparently the reports of the past few days were without foundation, for all the members of the band were present, including the twenty-three Germans and Austrians, and Dr. Muck conducted. That all the members of the orchestra might make the trip from Boston to New York, permission was secured from the Department of Justice, and, that they might journey to Brooklyn, from Francis J. Coffey, United States Attorney of New York.

There was no manifestation of disapproval on the part of the audience. A silent protest against supporting Dr. Muck was undoubtedly the cause of the few empty seats in two of the boxes and on the floor of the house, but they were subscribers' seats, and paid for, so they could not be sold to the public, which, to the number of fifty or so,, were refused seats at the box office and had to stand during the performance.

National Anthem Is Played Twice.

Before the regular program Dr. Muck conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner," not once, but twice, due to the insistent applause. This time a new arrangement was substituted for that by Victor Herbert, which, when played here before, was severely criticised as undignified. The new version is a straightforward one without any embellishment in the strings and cannot be objected to on either artistic or patriotic grounds.

Melba Sings in Glorious Style.

Madame Nellie Melba was the soloist singing with the orchestra the air "Zeffiretti Lusinghiari" from Mozart's "Idameneo," the canzona "Voi, che sapete" from the same composer's "Le Nozzedi Figaro," and Lia's recitative and air from Debussy's Cantata-opera "L'Enfant Prodigue." The passing years have left their impress upon Welba's glorious voice primarily in a lessening of its lovely flexibility and in an uncertainty in the upper register, but the glory of it is still compelling in its beautiful purity of tone, its fluency of utterance, and the simplicity of her style of singing. Last evening she experienced greater difficulty with her first selection, but as the voice warmed to its work she delivered the two last with a loveliness of design and content that would put to shame most of the younger singers of the day. Dr. Muck, as always, furnished the perfect accompaniment.

The orchestral numbers included the Fifth Beethoven Symphony, the Grand Fete music from Berlioz's stupendous symphony "Romeo and Juliet" and the overture to Wagner's "Tannhaeuser." Dr. Muck's reading of the symphony is familiar and one that in its incisiveness of rhythm, glory of tone, balance of choir, regard for the Beethoven convention is preeminent. Last evening's performance was no exception, for if anything the band played better than ever.

Berlioz has his enthusiasts, Romain Rolland among them, and he would have more if more could hear his music played as it was, last evening, with a finesse that revealed the composer's masterly handling of the resources of the orchestra. Certainly he deserves a higher place than is usually accorded him; his contribution to modern music was great, his influence upon Wagner and all who came after incalculable.

The "Tannhaeuser" March Splendidly Played.

What need is there of speaking again of Dr. Muck's conducting of the "Tannhaeuser" overture? He makes it a genuine overture and not as so many others do a triumphal march, especially in the middle portion. It embodies the subject matter of the entire opera, revealing the two contending forces of good and evil, and as such was proclaimed by Dr. Muck.

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 7 - 1917

ARL MUCK LEADS U. S. HYMN TWICE

Again Declines to Acknowledge Applause, But Repeats "Star-Spangled Banner."

NELLIE MELBA WELCOMED.

Boston Orchestra Plays Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Karl Muck, of Boston, late of Berlin, has a stubborn disposition. So, it proved last night, has that portion of Brooklyn which forms the audiences for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which Dr. Muck conducts at the Academy of Music.

The result of this conflict of wills and purposes was curious. It will be recalled that a month ago, when the first of the season's series of Boston Symphony concerts was given here, Dr. Muck opened it, more or less under protest, with "The Star Spangled Banner," and that when the audience applauded noisily and at length he remained rigidly oblivious of the patriotic tumult. Last night the situation was duplicated, and again the applause was loud and persistent when the national anthem in its Boston-Berlin setting, with all the string instruments playing an unfamiliar obligato, was finished.

Again Dr. Muck kept his back militantly rigid and ignored the tribute. But the audience was as determined as he to fight the issue out. The applause became louder and seemed to be spreading. After several minutes of this the conductor's arm was raised, the auditors quieted down expectantly and, to everybody's astonishment, the patriotic tune was started and was played all over again.

It was the first time within memory that "The Star Spangled Banner" has been repeated in response to a popular and patriotic clamor. It was the first Boston Symphony encore since Paderewski's last appearance here with that orchestra about three years ago. It had last night the effect of proving a most amusing outcome of a tense situation, and it undoubtedly made both the German conductor and his Brooklyn hearers feel they had not been worsted in this test of stubborn dispositions.

The exciting moment passed, the orchestra went on with its scheduled programme, which was one of unusual interest and enjoyment. Mme. Nellie Melba, of immortal operatic memory, was the incidental soloist, singing two Mozart arias and one from Debussy. Her glorious voice seemingly as fresh and surely as powerful as ever, she was an impressive figure in a gown of Nile green, with long train, wearing at her throat a single gem that seemed to illumine the auditorium. She won a record reception from the big audience.

The orchestra opened the programme with the most famous of all symphonies—the C minor, Beethoven's Fifth. It served to exploit the inimitable tonal excellence and instrumental balance of the Bostonians. At times there seemed an inclination toward over-emphasizing the accenting and making the reading vigorous rather than graceful, but the total effect was more than satisfying. The strings were particularly noteworthy in the trio of the famous third movement. Dr. Muck led the third and fourth without a break. The other orchestral numbers were the Berlioz "Ball at the Capulets'" from "Romeo and Juliet," which proved more technically brilliant than intrinsically interesting, and that fine old standby, "Tannhauser" overture.

Insult, Says Subscriber.

To the Editor of The Standard Union:

Dr. Muck's contemptuous insult to America and her national anthem at the Academy last evening should be resented with scorn and indignation by every citizen, no matter of what nationality. If the Institute cannot be prevailed on by appeal and protest to spare us the indignity of sitting silently under the taunts and insults of this alien enemy it will be necessary to save our self-respect by absent treatment, i. e., to staying away and leaving to the Institute and its disloyal followers and supporters a "beggarly array of empty boxes." Compared with Muck, he should use the complete description, "muck-

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 7 - 1917

MUCK FORCED TO REPEAT ANTHEM

German Conductor Impassive at Academy Demonstration.

The audience which filled the opera house of the Academy of Music last night to hear the second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, compelled Dr. Karl Muck to play "The Star Spangled Banner" twice before the program commenced. A storm of applause which went on for many minutes with no diminution in volume, caused the repetition. During the outburst, Dr. Muck remained standing with his back to the audience, impassive. If the spectators intended to break down his immobile attitude, they failed, but at length he signalled the orchestra to rise and, lifting his baton, launched a second time into the National anthem, which was magnificently rendered.

The elaborate filigree work for the strings which marked its performance at the memorable first concert was eliminated, and a dignified, hymn-like renditions, of rich and splendid tonal qualities took its place.

With Mme. Melba as soloist, the orchestra gave a program of outstanding merit. There was not a mediocre moment from the first bars of Beethoven's matchless symphony No. 5 in C minor to the last glorious measures of the "Tannhauser" overture.

Mme. Melba sang with accustomed brilliancy and was repeatedly recalled. Particularly appealing was the canzona, "Voi, che sapete," from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." She preceded that well-known aria with another selection from a less familiar opera by the same composer, the "Zefferetti lusinghieri" aria from "Idomeneo, Re di Creta." Her final number was the recitative and aria of Lia from Debussy's "The Prodigal Son."

The consistently fine tonal qualities of the orchestral ensemble were shown at their best in the symphony. The first movement, with its passionate rhythms and burning chords, the andante con moto, with its melancholy soberness and touching grace, the sombre mystery of the scherzo and the final triumphal march were all interpreted with classic clarity, breadth and restraint.

The orchestra played, beside the symphony and the "Tannhauser" overture, Hector Berlioz's "Ball at the Cauplets," from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony.

Just how the orchestra were enabled to dodge the barred zones in Boston and New York and keep the date in Brooklyn could not be learned at the concert. Reports from Boston had been that most of the concerts in other cities were being cancelled because of the Government's regulations regarding the movements of alien enemies. When W. H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra, was asked about it, he said:

"The fact that the orchestra is here should be sufficient answer. I can say nothing more."

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 6 -

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The program to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the Academy of Music was considered, yesterday afternoon, in a lecture-recital at the Institute by Professor Hamilton C. Macdougal of Wellesley College. He first played the melodies of the two Mozart airs that Mme. Melba is to sing tonight, a recitative and aria from "Idomeneo, Re di Creta," and the canzona, "Voi, che sapete," from "Le Nozze di Figaro."

The lecturer then turned to Beethoven's beautiful Fifth Symphony, in C minor, playing the distinctive themes of each of the four movements. The symphony was epoch-making as regards its musical form, said the professor, for the great thing that Beethoven did was to unite the fourth movement to the third by employing similar material, making the music coherent. The symphony has come to be regarded as a landmark and wonderfully helpful in the art of music that later composers followed.

The work is also remarkable for stoutness of construction, said Professor Macdougal, especially in the first movement. In the "andante," the familiar and favorite second movement, which is a theme with variations, he called attention to the 'cello melodies. Beethoven's basses, he said, always have virility and power and contain great melodic interest. He also commented on the note of C of the kettledrums in the third movement, the connecting of two movements requiring courage on the part of the composer. The final numbers on the program, those by Berlioz, Debussy and Wagner, were not discussed.

STANDARD UNION

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

KARL MUCK A SWISS CITIZEN, IT IS LEARNED

Musical circles were not surprised to-day at the report from Washington that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a Swiss citizen and not a Prussian. Dr. Muck was born in Bavaria, and when eight years old his father took out his Swiss citizenship papers. The status of the son followed that of the father, and later, it is said, when the musical director reached his majority, he took out his own papers.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in a statement sent to friends of Dr. Muck, calls attention to his neutral citizenship and adds:

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises 54 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians, 2 Bohemians."

CITIZEN

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC 7 - 19

MME. MELBA AT ACADEMY.

Boston Symphony Gives Fine Program

Mme. Melba repeats

come when Brooklyn that had in fact grown into an appreciative [illegible] when she appeared at the Academy of Music last evening. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has always occupied a warm spot in the heart of local lovers of music, and last night's performance contributed largely to deepening and widening of the appreciative feeling and love for this distinguished exponent of musical culture.

The concert was the second of the season, given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The house was filled to its capacity, and when the notes of the national anthem resounded there was a natural and instinctive movement forward to discover which of the conductors was officiating. Dr. Karl Muck was in his place and not a ripple of discord was to be observed in orchestra or house.

Mme. Melba, the soloist of the evening, was in splendid voice. The wide range and extensive sweep of her performance taxed her somewhat, but the singer never faltered, and the performance was musically popular and artistically perfect.

The programme was as follows:

Symphony in C Minor, No. 5, Op. 67.....Beethoven
Allegro con ario.
Andante con mato.
Allegro trio.
Allegro.

a. Aria from "Idomeneo," "Zefferetti lusinghieri".....Mozart

b. Aria from "The Marriage of Figaro," "Voi che sapete".....Mozart
Madame Melba.

"Ball at the Capulets," from the Symphony, "Romeo and Juliett".....Berlioz

Recitative and aria of Lia, from "The Prodigal Son".....Debussy
Madame Melba.

Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner

EAGLE

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEC - 7 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS AT ACADEMY

Through Permission of Department of Justice and of State Authorities.

NATIONAL ANTHEM TWICE.

Program Goes Smoothly, With Nellie Melba Singing in Fine Style and Excellent Orchestral Playing.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its second concert of the Brooklyn series at the Academy of Music last evening. Apparently the reports of the past few days were without foundation, for all the members of the band were present, including the twenty-three Germans and Austrians, and Dr. Muck conducted. That all the members of the orchestra might make the trip from Boston to New York, permission was secured from the Department of Justice, and, that they might journey to Brooklyn, from Francis J. Coffey, United States Attorney of New York.

There was no manifestation of disapproval on the part of the audience. A silent protest against supporting Dr. Muck was undoubtedly the cause of the few empty seats in two of the boxes and on the floor of the house, but they were subscribers' seats, and paid for, so they could not be sold to the public, which, to the number of fifty or so,, were refused seats at the box office and had to stand during the performance.

National Anthem Is Played Twice.

Before the regular program Dr. Muck conducted "The Star-Spangled Banner," not once, but twice, due to the insistent applause. This time a new arrangement was substituted for that by Victor Herbert, which, when played here before, was severely criticised as undignified. The new version is a straightforward one without any embellishment in the strings and cannot be objected to on either artistic or patriotic grounds.

Melba Sings in Glorious Style.

Madame Nellie Melba was the soloist singing with the orchestra the air "Zeffiretti Lusinghiari" from Mozart's "Idameneo," the canzona "Voi, che sapete" from the same composer's "Le Nozzedi Figaro," and Lia's recitative and air from Debussy's Cantata-opera "L'Enfant Prodigue." The passing years have left their impress upon Welba's glorious voice primarily in a lessening of its lovely flexibility and in an uncertainty in the upper register, but the glory of it is still compelling in its beautiful purity of tone, its fluency of utterance, and the simplicity of her style of singing. Last evening she experienced greater difficulty with her first selection, but as the voice warmed to its work she delivered the two last with a loveliness of design and content that would put to shame most of the younger singers of the day. Dr. Muck, as always, furnished the perfect accompaniment.

The orchestral numbers included the Fifth Beethoven Symphony, the Grand Fete music from Berlioz's stupendous symphony "Romeo and Juliet" and the overture to Wagner's "Tannhaeuser." Dr. Muck's reading of the symphony is familiar and one that in its incisiveness of rhythm, glory of tone, balance of choir, regard for the Beethoven convention is pre-eminent. Last evening's performance was no exception, for if anything the band played better than ever.

Berlioz has his enthusiasts, Romain Rolland among them, and he would have more if more could hear his music played as it was, last evening, with a finesse that revealed the composer's masterly handling of the resources of the orchestra. Certainly he deserves a higher place than is usually accorded him; his contribution to modern music was great, his influence upon Wagner and all who came after incalculable.

The "Tannhaeuser" March Splendidly Played.

What need is there of speaking again of Dr. Muck's conducting of the "Tannhaeuser" overture? He makes it a genuine overture and not as so many others do a triumphal march, especially in the middle portion. It embodies the subject matter of the entire opera, revealing the two contending forces of good and evil, and as such was proclaimed by Dr. Muck.

m BULLETIN
lress: Philadelphia, Pa.
DEC 7 - 1917
e

Wants No More of Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I read in The Bulletin the salve that C. A. Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, put out about Dr. Muck.

It does not make any difference who the leader of the orchestra may be or where he was born. After the way our National Anthem was played by an organization that could play it perfectly, they and their leader should have been kicked out of Philadelphia and kept out forever.

WM. CURTIS.

From PUBLIC Ledger Philadelphia, Pa.

Address

Date DEC 6 - 1917

Music as an Exotic

THE war inevitably brings certain things to a head which might have taken years to reach their culmination, though long before the inevitable end every one could see the trend and the direction. What is going on in the musical world, therefore, through the more or less searching issue of alienism in the interpretation of opera and symphony is nothing new save that with startling swiftness things are being done which would perhaps have taken another generation to accomplish. The issue, indeed, raised by the troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for instance, is one that has been discussed by the musical papers for the last twenty years. And there have not been wanting warning voices in the shape of competent American musicians, composers, conductors, interpreters and educators, who have urged that so far as possible all musical organizations in America should be built up with the view of making them as thoroughly American as the circumstances called for. They also urged that the time had come when great art institutions, such as permanent orchestras, could only be considered as on a firm foundation when they were so essentially American as not to be disturbed in any of their relationships whenever the foreign supply of conductors or performers or virtuosi happened to be cut off.

In a way it is a credit to the Philadelphia Orchestra Association's advisers that they had this ideal state of things for America in their mind for years. They were not ignorant of century-old conditions abroad which turned out annually a larger number of expert musicians, conductors and impresarios than was the case in America. But they did realize that unless an orchestra sank its roots deep into the local life and aimed at becoming an orchestra of Americans, even if a certain percentage inevitably would be American by adoption, at best it would be an exotic and not have the educational and spiritual value which such an organization should possess. And the result is that the war test finds the Philadelphia Orchestra virtually untouched and intact, while the Boston Orchestra, which for thirty-six years has avowedly been maintained by one man, remains an exotic. It is the nature of exotics only to flourish under specially prepared conditions, protected from the ordinary stress of competition that the ordinary plant must meet.

Naturally, at the start the ideals of the Maecenas who instituted the Boston Orchestra were admirable; but the mere fact that Boston itself has had nothing to do except to sit in the hothouse atmosphere and enjoy the perfectitude, which through nonunionism and other influences did not reach out for an indigenous existence, has made for this exoticism which finds the war hostile to its extended development. The real worth of the orchestra remains, as before, a great local asset for Boston; but the issue is one that is full of suggestion for musical America as a whole, for we must get over the purely exotic in music whose inspiration is almost wholly derived from abroad.

m EVENING Ledger
lress PHILADELPHIA, P.

MUST BOSTON BAND BE SCRAPPED?

ARTISTIC ideals and energies of a full generation are summed up in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Must the time, labor, money and devotion expended in perfecting this musical mechanism with a soul be wasted on account of the war? Must this band, one of the world's greatest, be scrapped?

For the first time in more than thirty years the Boston Orchestra passed its Philadelphia program last night. Twenty-three out of the personnel of 100 players come under the classification of enemy aliens. They are prohibited entrance into the nation's capital and passage across water fronts. The band cannot maintain its artistic integrity without these players.

The law is clear in defining their privileges and restrictions. But cannot the law, even of military expediency, be tempered with discretion? The Boston Symphony Orchestra as a body cannot be held responsible for the stubbornness of its leader in the "Star Spangled Banner" complication. Americans have tolerantly forgotten that teapot tempest. Members of the Boston band join it for life—it is their career.

Art in America will suffer from the forced disintegration of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, if this must come. There is a simple way of salvaging this artistic asset. National interests may be fully conserved by assigning Government agents to the organization's tours and concerts. If the public thinks the preservation of the Boston Orchestra is worth this much trouble, managers and men could not justly take offense at such surveillance. It would be a war measure for American safety. It would be no reflection on art.

PUBLIC Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa.
DEC 6 - 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S PAPER DEFENDS DR. MUCK

One Who Received It Thinks He Has Not Demonstrated Loyalty

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—Having for the last three years attended every concert given in Philadelphia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I feel privileged to criticize the circular now issued by the organization through its manager, A. C. Ellis, in defense of its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck.

Many statements concerning Doctor Muck's birth, citizenship and personal affairs are made in this circular. Among them are these:

"Doctor Muck is not a Prussian. He is not an enemy alien. He is not a citizen of Germany."

The circular failed to add this statement: Doctor Muck is not loyal to America, the country which for the last seven years has given him protection and most generous financial support.

The circular also states that he never refused to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" when asked to do so. It would have been better had he refused at the opening concert given in Philadelphia. For, while no one could doubt Doctor Muck's ability to interpret most artistically the finest musical composition, every true American should now regard Doctor Muck with the greatest disfavor, as well as with a shade at least of suspicion for having dared to conduct so indifferently our national anthem. His lukewarmness on that occasion was an insult, not to the anthem, but to every loyal American who holds this anthem sacred.

Next the circular states that the Federal Government has made careful investigation and has found nothing done by Doctor Muck prejudicial to the interests of our country. Whether the Government has or has not made such investigation, it remains for it to go one step further and forbid Doctor Muck ever again to attempt the conducting of our national anthem. For he showed himself, on the opening night in Philadelphia, either too indifferent to the high honor accorded him or too small a man in every respect to interpret rightly the beautiful sentiments and lofty principles contained in our "Star Spangled Banner."

Doctor Muck's attitude at this time has shaken to a very great degree the confidence of the public. A proper degree of loyalty is more to be desired and commended than the very highest and greatest of musical attainments. That proper degree of loyalty has not yet been expressed in any form by Doctor Muck.

L. H. KILLEN.

Philadelphia, December 5, 1917.

n PUBLIC Ledger
ress Phila., Pa.
DEC 7 - 1917

SWITZERLAND DEFRAUDED

Biographies Point to Darmstadt as Doctor Muck's Birthplace

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—One often hears of the romance of biographies, and many an innocent piece of fiction has passed current as a true story of the lives of the great. And I have been pondering over this after reading the beautiful tribute of C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to Doctor Muck's shining record of origin in gemuthlich Bavaria and citizenship in dear old neutral Switzerland. For, suspecting a possible blurred memory on the part of Doctor Muck and his manager, I looked up the biographical references, all written and printed years before the derivation of Doctor Muck was in question, and I find the thing stated thusly: In "Wer Ist's," the German "Who's Who," "Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians," the great standard work in English, and in two other standard biographical dictionaries, it is calmly stated that Doctor Muck was born at Darmstadt, and poor Switzerland is never even referred to in the returns. Moreover, to make assurance doubly sure, I looked up the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by M. A. De Wolf Howe, published in 1914, and on page 209 I find the following:

"Of all the men who have directed the orchestra, Doctor Muck came to his work with the most firmly established reputation as a conductor. Born in Darmstadt, October 22, 1859, broadly educated at the Universities of Leipzig and Heidelberg," etc., etc.

Of course this was in 1914, but it seems, according to Mr. Ellis, that all the biographers were mistaken, even his own, and that Switzerland is now the happy country that can claim Doctor Muck; which raises the question again as to what is truth and whether the question of Muck's native land is to remain in controversy or be settled by the fiat of the Kaiser, who released him for service over here, for, as all know, Darmstadt is the capital of the grand duchy of Hesse.

PUZZLED.

Philadelphia, December 5, 1917.

WILL SEND A SOLDIER?

rom STAR
ddress: Baltimore, Md.

DECLARES DR. MUCK IS NOT A PRUSSIAN

Boston Symphony Manager Says Instead He Is Citizen of Switzerland.

"NEVER REFUSED" HYMN

Saying that Dr. Karl Muck "is not a Prussian," and that "he is a citizen of Switzerland," and repeating that Dr. Muck "has never refused" to conduct The Star-spangled Banner, etc., C. A. Ellis, Symphony Hall, Boston, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent out the following letter under date of December 4:

"Dear Sir or Madam:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by anyone who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities.

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the federal authorities 'have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit.

"For the first three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises: Fifty-one American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians, 2 Bohemians.

"One subject which has caused much unkind and undeserved criticism of Dr. Muck has been a report emanating from Providence and sent broadcast over the country that he refused to conduct The Star-spangled Banner in our concerts. He has never refused. On the contrary, when requested, he willingly complied, and he has since conducted our national anthem in every concert by our organization."

om STAR
dress: Baltimore, Md.

NO BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Regulations Concerning Aliens Prevent Orchestra Appearing Here.

"Game called on account of rain," or words to that effect, is the statement made by advertisement today concerning the second scheduled concert of the season's series of five in Baltimore of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, which was to have been given in the Lyric tonight.

C. A. Ellis, the orchestra's manager, does not use the sporting man's vernacular, of course, but explains the circumstances this way:

"The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for this evening at the Lyric Theater. It will, therefore, not be given."

Mr. Ellis then says the price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded, and regrets that certain circumstances prevented publication of earlier notice.

From the fact that no statement has been made as yet concerning the remaining projected concerts in Baltimore by the orchestra, it is inferred that the idea of holding them in some manner is being considered. The dates of these are January 9, February 13 and March 1[illegible]

m BULLETIN

lress: Philadelphia, Pa.

e

Wants No More of Muck

To the Editor of The Bulletin.

Sir: I read in The Bulletin the salve that C. A. Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, put out about Dr. Muck.

It does not make any difference who the leader of the orchestra may be or where he was born. After the way our National Anthem was played by an organization that could play it perfectly, they and their leader should have been kicked out of Philadelphia and kept out forever.

WM. CURTIS.

From

Address

Date

Music as an Exotic

THE war inevitably brings certain things to a head which might have taken years to reach their culmination, though long before the inevitable end every one could see the trend and the direction. What is going on in the musical world, therefore, through the more or less searching issue of alienism in the interpretation of opera and symphony is nothing new save that with startling swiftness things are being done which would perhaps have taken another generation to accomplish. The issue, indeed, raised by the troubles of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for instance, is one that has been discussed by the musical papers for the last twenty years. And there have not been wanting warning voices in the shape of competent American musicians, composers, conductors, interpreters and educators, who have urged that so far as possible all musical organizations in America should be built up with the view of making them as thoroughly American as the circumstances called for. They also urged that the time had come when great art institutions, such as permanent orchestras, could only be considered as on a firm foundation when they were so essentially American as not to be disturbed in any of their relationships whenever the foreign supply of conductors or performers or virtuosi happened to be cut off.

In a way it is a credit to the Philadelphia Orchestra Association's advisers that they had this ideal state of things for America in their mind for years. They were not ignorant of century-old conditions abroad which turned out annually a larger number of expert musicians, conductors and impresarios than was the case in America. But they did realize that unless an orchestra sank its roots deep into the local life and aimed at becoming an orchestra of Americans, even if a certain percentage inevitably would be American by adoption, at best it would be an exotic and not have the educational and spiritual value which such an organization should possess. And the result is that the war test finds the Philadelphia Orchestra virtually untouched and intact, while the Boston Orchestra, which for thirty-six years has avowedly been maintained by one man, remains an exotic. It is the nature of exotics only to flourish under specially prepared conditions, protected from the ordinary stress of competition that the ordinary plant must meet.

Naturally, at the start the ideals of the Maecenas who instituted the Boston Orchestra were admirable; but the mere fact that Boston itself has had nothing to do except to sit in the hothouse atmosphere and enjoy the perfectitude, which through nonunionism and other influences did not reach out for an indigenous existence, has made for this exoticism which finds the war hostile to its extended development. The real worth of the orchestra remains, as before, a great local asset for Boston; but the issue is one that is full of suggestion for musical America as a whole, for we must get over the purely exotic in music whose inspiration is almost wholly derived from abroad.

m EVENING Ledger

PHILADELPHIA, P

lress

MUST BOSTON BAND BE SCRAPPED?

ARTISTIC ideals and energies of a full generation are summed up in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Must the time, labor, money and devotion expended in perfecting this musical mechanism with a soul be wasted on account of the war? Must this band, one of the world's greatest, be scrapped?

For the first time in more than thirty years the Boston Orchestra passed its Philadelphia program last night. Twenty-three out of the personnel of 100 players come under the classification of enemy aliens. They are prohibited entrance into the nation's capital and passage across water fronts. The band cannot maintain its artistic integrity without these players.

The law is clear in defining their privileges and restrictions. But cannot the law, even of military expediency, be tempered with discretion? The Boston Symphony Orchestra as a body cannot be held responsible for the stubbornness of its leader in the "Star Spangled Banner" complication. Americans have tolerantly forgotten that teapot tempest. Members of the Boston band join it for life—it is their career.

Art in America will suffer from the forced disintegration of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, if this must come. There is a simple way of salvaging this artistic asset. National interests may be fully conserved by assigning Government agents to the organization's tours and concerts. If the public thinks the preservation of the Boston Orchestra is worth this much trouble, managers and men could not justly take offense at such surveillance. It would be a war measure for American safety. It would be no reflection on art.

PUBLIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S PAPER DEFENDS DR. MUCK

One Who Received It Thinks He Has Not Demonstrated Loyalty

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—Having for the last three years attended every concert given in Philadelphia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I feel privileged to criticize the circular now issued by the organization through its manager, A. C. Ellis, in defense of its conductor, Dr. Karl Muck.

Many statements concerning Doctor Muck's birth, citizenship and personal affairs are made in this circular. Among them are these:

"Doctor Muck is not a Prussian. He is not an enemy alien. He is not a citizen of Germany."

The circular failed to add this statement: Doctor Muck is not loyal to America, the country which for the last seven years has given him protection and most generous financial support.

The circular also states that he never refused to conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" when asked to do so. It would have been better had he refused at the opening concert given in Philadelphia. For, while no one could doubt Doctor Muck's ability to interpret most artistically the finest musical composition, every true American should now regard Doctor Muck with the greatest disfavor, as well as with a shade at least of suspicion for having dared to conduct so indifferently our national anthem. His lukewarmness on that occasion was an insult, not to the anthem, but to every loyal American who holds this anthem sacred.

Next the circular states that the Federal Government has made careful investigation and has found nothing done by Doctor Muck prejudicial to the interests of our country. Whether the Government has or has not made such investigation, it remains for it to go one step further and forbid Doctor Muck ever again to attempt the conducting of our national anthem. For he showed himself, on the opening night in Philadelphia, either too indifferent to the high honor accorded him or too small a man in every respect to interpret rightly the beautiful sentiments and lofty principles contained in our "Star Spangled Banner."

Doctor Muck's attitude at this time has shaken to a very great degree the confidence of the public. A proper degree of loyalty is more to be desired and commended than the very highest and greatest of musical attainments. That proper degree of loyalty has not yet been expressed in any form by Doctor Muck.

L. H. KILLEN.

Philadelphia, December 5, 1917.

n ress

SWITZERLAND DEFRAUDED

Biographies Point to Darmstadt as Doctor Muck's Birthplace

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—One often hears of the romance of biographies, and many an innocent piece of fiction has passed current as a true story of the lives of the great. And I have been pondering over this after reading the beautiful tribute of C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to Doctor Muck's shining record of origin in gemuthlich Bavaria and citizenship in dear old neutral Switzerland. For, suspecting a possible blurred memory on the part of Doctor Muck and his manager, I looked up the biographical references, all written and printed years before the derivation of Doctor Muck was in question, and I find the thing stated thusly: In "Wer Ist's," the German "Who's Who," "Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians," the great standard work in English, and in two other standard biographical dictionaries, it is calmly stated that Doctor Muck was born at Darmstadt, and poor Switzerland is never even referred to in the returns. Moreover, to make assurance doubly sure, I looked up the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by M. A. De Wolf Howe, published in 1914, and on page 209 I find the following:

"Of all the men who have directed the orchestra, Doctor Muck came to his work with the most firmly established reputation as a conductor. Born in Darmstadt, October 22, 1859, broadly educated at the Universities of Leipzig and Heidelberg," etc., etc.

Of course this was in 1914, but it seems, according to Mr. Ellis, that all the biographers were mistaken, even his own, and that Switzerland is now the happy country that can claim Doctor Muck; which raises the question again as to what is truth and whether the question of Muck's native land is to remain in controversy or be settled by the fiat of the Kaiser, who released him for service over here, for, as all know, Darmstadt is the capital of the grand duchy of Hesse.

PUZZLED.

Philadelphia, December 5, 1917.

WILL SEND A SOLDIER?

rom STAR

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

DECLARES DR. MUCK IS NOT A PRUSSIAN

Boston Symphony Manager Says Instead He Is Citizen of Switzerland.

"NEVER REFUSED" HYMN

Saying that Dr. Karl Muck "is not a Prussian," and that "he is a citizen of Switzerland," and repeating that Dr. Muck "has never refused" to conduct The Star-spangled Banner, etc., C. A. Ellis, Symphony Hall, Boston, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent out the following letter under date of December 4:

"Dear Sir or Madam:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by anyone who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities.

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the federal authorities 'have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit.

"For the first three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises: Fifty-one American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians, 2 Bohemians.

"One subject which has caused much unkind and undeserved criticism of Dr. Muck has been a report emanating from Providence and sent broadcast over the country that he refused to conduct The Star-spangled Banner in our concerts. He has never refused. On the contrary, when requested, he willingly complied, and he has since conducted our national anthem in every concert by our organization."

m STAR

dress: Baltimore, Md.

NO BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Regulations Concerning Aliens Prevent Orchestra Appearing Here.

"Game called on account of 'rain,'" or words to that effect, is the statement made by advertisement today concerning the second scheduled concert of the season's series of five in Baltimore of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, which was to have been given in the Lyric tonight.

C. A. Ellis, the orchestra's manager, does not use the sporting man's vernacular, of course, but explains the circumstances this way:

"The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for this evening at the Lyric Theater. It will, therefore, not be given."

Mr. Ellis then says the price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded, and regrets that certain circumstances prevented publication of earlier notice.

From the fact that no statement has been made as yet concerning the remaining projected concerts in Baltimore by the orchestra, it is inferred that the idea of holding them in some manner is being considered. The dates of these are January 9, February 13 and March 13.

GLOBE
DEC 17, 1917

RAISE $10,000 AT HALIFAX BENEFIT

The concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon given for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr Karl Muck, and by Mme Melba and Fritz Kreisler, who gave their services, brought in more money than any concert that has ever been given in that hall.

The actual sale of tickets on the $5 scale amounted to $9034. The sale of seats opened at 8:30 Tuesday morning at the box office and at 3 o'clock the house had been sold out. At least $5000 in mail orders had to be returned and the money refused at the box office for lack of seats must have amounted to at least as much more.

In addition to the actual sale of tickets there were gifts amounting to $485 from Mrs Elizabeth S. Cheney, Mrs E. C. Kaufmann, Mrs C. G. Weld, Charlotte L. Bullens, G. J. Fowkes, A. M. Wright, Philip Hale, Edward R. Warren and Mrs Hall McAllister, thus making the total receipts from tickets $9513.

In addition to this there was a souvenir program, the sales of which, with the advertising contained therein, will run to several hundred dollars. As Maj Henry L. Higginson gave the use of Symphony Hall, and all the attaches of the hall gave their services, the only expenditures were in newspaper advertising and a few minor items. Altogether the concert will net to the Halifax Fund more than $10,000.

The souvenir programs were sold by Mme Melba, Lady Susan Fitzclarence and some young women from Radcliffe. Mme Melba took in $200 and Lady Susan Fitzclarence $100.

ADVERTISER
DEC. 17, 1917

RECORD SUM FOR HALIFAX VICTIMS

Concert at Symphony Hall Nets More Than $10,000 for the Fund

The concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, given for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, brought in more money than any concert that has ever been given in that hall. The actual sale amounted to $9,034. The sale began Tuesday at 8:30 a. m., and at 3 p. m. the house had been sold out. Fully $5,000 in mail orders had to be returned. Money refused at the box office for lack of seats must have amounted to as much more.

In addition to the actual sale of tickets there were donations amounting to $485 from Mrs. Elizabeth S. Cheney, Mrs. E. C. Kaufmann, Mrs. Hale McAllister, Mrs. C. G. Weld, Mrs. Charlotte L. Bullens, G. J. Fowkes, A. M. Wright, Philip Hale and Edward R. Warren.

There was also a souvenir program, the sales of which, with the advertising contained therein, will add several hundred dollars to the fund. As Major Henry L. Higginson gave the use of Symphony Hall and all the attaches gave their services, the concert will net to the Halifax fund well over $10,000.

HERALD
DEC. 17. 1917

SYMPHONY CONCERT ADDS $10,000 TO HALIFAX FUND

Largest Sum Ever Received for One Performance in Hall.

More than $10,000 will be added to the Halifax relief fund, it is estimated as a result of the benefit concert given in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, with Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler as soloists. In amount it was the largest sum ever brought in by a single performance at that hall.

The actual sale of tickets amounted to $9034. This sale began on last Tuesday morning, at the box office at 8:30 o'clock and at 3 o'clock the house had been sold out. At least $5000 in mail orders had to be returned and the money refunded at the box office for lack of seats must have totalled as much more at least.

In addition to the actual sale of seats there were donations amounting to $485 from Mrs. Elizabeth S. Cheney, Mrs. E. C. Haufmann, Mrs. C. G. Weld, Charlotte L. Bulens, G. J. Fowkes, A. M. Wright, Philip Hale, Edward R. Warren and Mrs. Hall McAllister.

Prior to the concert Mme. Melba and Lady Susan FitzClarence, assisted by girls from Radcliffe College sold souvenir programs in the lobby. Mme. Melba in this way obtained an additional $200 and Lady FitzClarence $100. The advertisements in the souvenin program also accounted for an additional several hundred dollars.

As Maj. Higginson gave the use of Symphony Hall and all the attaches of the hall gave their services, the only actual expenditures were in advertising and a few minor items.

POST
DEC. 17, 1917

GREAT TRIO IN CONCERT FOR HALIFAX

Kreisler, Melba and the Symphony at One Hearing

12/17

BY OLIN DOWNES

Mme. Nellie Melba, Fritz Kreisler and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their services in aid of the Halifax sufferers at the concert of yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. For this concert the hall had been sold out almost before the tickets were on public sale. All available standing room was taken. Fortunate was the public which could contribute so effectively to an urgent need and at the same time benefit by such a concert.

KREISLER AT HIS BEST

The concert opened with a performance of the Star Spangled Banner, followed by the imposing overture of Sullivan, "In Memoriam." The names of celebrated soloists do not invariably presuppose worthy performances, but yesterday Mr. Kreisler excelled himself in the Mendelssohn concerto, and his performance set the pitch for what was to follow. Possibly because of his recent decision only to play for charity and engagements made at the beginning of the season which could not be cancelled, during the duration of the war, Mr. Kreisler played with a freshness and enthusiasm and felicity rare, even, with him.

He made no attempt to give a new interpretation of the suave and poetically colored Mendelssohn concerto, but played the music as it was written, without undue sentimentality, without unnecessary speed in the pyrotechnics of the finale, and with incomparable tone, sentiment, and taste.

Melba's Great Art

The difference between a talented young person in a first season of success and a past master of an art may be slight, according to the letter, but profoundly significant in its actual artistic results. Both Mr. Kreisler and Mme. Melba showed this distinguishing quality in a wonderful way yesterday—a quality which cannot be gained by mere talent, or voice, or enthusiasm, or callow youth, but must be earned and paid for by years of thinking and living.

Mme. Melba surprised her oldest admirers by the beauty, finish and proportion of her singing of Duparc's exquisite song "Phidyle" to which Dr. Muck conducted an exquisite accompaniment. It lay in the best register of her voice. In her perfect control of her breath, her sculpturing of a long melodic line, her treatment of the phrase, Mme. Melba was thrice admirable.

The Great Soloist

Thus these celebrated soloists gave their audience as much and more than it had anticipated. But the greatest soloist of all was to come: the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Even for such a conductor as Dr. Muck, even for such a renowned body of instrumentalists, the performance of Rimsky-Kordakoff's symphonic suite after the Arabian Nights, "Scheherazade," was memorable.

It has never been played with such spirit, such imagination, such inimitable and fascinating mastery of detail, within the memory of the writer, at any concert in this city. It thrilled the most hardened concertgoer. It made the most sophisticated dream again of glowing sands and shining mosques, and the tales told by those of whom it was Henely who said that they would "contract immensity to the limits of desire."

With the breath of a genius you could have whiffed away the sober hall where this incomparable band of musical manikins performs from time to time its sacred rites, and found yourself on the magical carpet, suspended somewhere in mid-air, over the Golden Horn—a performance that made strange and incredible the sober realities of Huntington avenue and Boylston street.

A Master Orchestra

With due respect to Mr. Kreisler and Mme. Melba, violinists may come and singers may go, but one such impression of the magic of a great orchestra with a master of the baton at its head will outlast the memory of them all. It was good that the outside public which has yet to be aware of the fascinating of the most wonderful musical instrument in the world—the modern orchestra, should have had this example of its powers, on such an occasion. Enthusiasm ran high.

Solos by Mme. Melba and Mr. Kreisler brought the programme to an end. The artists were recalled again and again, and responded generously to the tribute. It was long before the audience was willing to leave the hall.

Herald
Dec. 17, 1917

CONCERT FOR HALIFAX RELIEF

Symphony Orchestra, Assisted by Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler.

14/17

MEMORABLE PERFORMANCE

By PHILIP HALE

A relief concert for the benefit of sufferers by the catastrophe at Halifax was given in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The hall was crowded. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, all gave their services. Maj. Henry L. Higginson gave the use of Symphony Hall.

The program was as follows: Sullivan, overture, "In Memoriam"; Mendelssohn, Violin Concerto (Mr. Kreisler); Dupare, "Phidyle," song with orchestra (Mme. Melba); Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite; songs with piano: Chausson, "Le Temps des Lilacs," "Les Papillons"; Bemberg, "Les Anges Pleurent" (Mme. Melba); violin pieces with piano: Pugnani, Prelude and Allegro; Mozart, Rondo in G major. Frank St. Leger accompanied Mme. Melba; Carl Lamson, Mr. Kreisler.

Sullivan's overture was played, not on account of its intrinsic worth, which is very slight—although an enthusiastic biographer, H. Saxe Wyndham, characterizes it as "glorious" also "a work of genius," but because a memorial composition by an Irish-Englishman seemed appropriate to the occasion. Sullivan wrote the overture in memory of his father, Thomas Sullivan, a bandmaster at Sandhurst, and professor of the Brass Bass Instruments at Kneller Hall, who died in 1866. It was performed at the Norwich Festival of that year. In 1879 Sullivan came to Boston and conducted his "Prodigal Son," at a Handel and Haydn concert (Nov. 23). The overture was then played under his direction. This was the first appearance in the United States of a composer whose fame will rest on a number of delightful operettas. Rimsky-Korsakoff's suite is familiar to all through performances in concert halls and by its perversion for the ballet first made known to us by Gertrude Hoffmann at the Shubert Theatre in February, 1912, and later by Diaghileff's Ballet Russe at the Boston Opera House in January, February and November, 1916. Frequent repetitions do not tarnish the gorgeousness of this music or break its spell. It is as rhapsodic in the spirit of the Vast as are the wondrous tales themselves. Nor is there an attempt at literal portrayal of any particular tale except in the music that paints the seas through which Sinbad sailed and the shipwreck off the magnetic mountain. A Kalandar tells his story, but which one of the three that met with strange and perilous adventures? Who were the young prince and the young princess that the composer had in mind? Were they Kamar al-Zaman and Budur? Rimsky-Korsakoff smiles and answers: "They are in the book of tales and in my music. There are so many princes and princesses in 'The Thousand Nights and a Night.'"

Mme. Melba sang "Phidyle," a song by Henri Duparc, music to Leconte de Lisle's poem. Duparc, asked when it was composed, answered that he could not give the exact date; that all his songs were written before 1885, for since then his poor health has forbidden composition. Surely Duparc is to be reckoned among the greatest of modern song writers, although his songs are few in number. This may account in measure for their excellence. Duparc orchestraed the accompaniment of "Phidyle," "Chanson triste," "Invitation au Voyage," "La Vague et la Cloche." Do they gain by the transference of the accompaniment from the piano to the orchestra? Composers have not always been fortunate with this experiment. Hugo Wolf's "Er ist's" is more effective when it is sung with piano accompaniment. It is an open question whether songs of Shubert have been improved by the labors of Liszt, Mottl and others. But there can be only one answer to the question in the case of "Phidyle": the instrumentation is exquisite in its delicate support and embroidery of the melody, its fine poetic feeling. There is no superfluity of invention. The various instruments in their allotted say speak significantly.

Singer, violinist and orchestra vied in art. Mme. Melba sang charmingly. Mr. Kreisler played the hackneyed concerto as though it were a new and fresh work, not turning the Andante into sentimentalism; playing the Finale with rare vivacity and in the spirit of Mendelssohnion lightness and grace. The orchestra gave a magnificent performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite. Long as the program was there were additions to it by the soloists.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has given several concerts for the benefit of the city or a fellow-member. The two conspicuous concerts of this nature were the one for the benefit of the San Francisco fund, April 29, 1906, when Mr. Gericke conducted and Mme. Samaroff was the pianist; the other for the Chelsea relief fund, April 27, 1908, when Dr. Muck conducted and Harold Bauer was the pianist.

These concerts were in time of peace. The concert of yesterday will be still more memorable in the history of the orchestra, not only because of its extraordinary nature and its pecuniary success, but because it showed that the highest humanity knows no national boundaries, no political differences. They that volunteered their services gave generously to a sorely afflicted town. They

Herald
Dec. 20, 1917

182

CAPITAL STILL BARRED TO MUCK

Washington Police Refuse to Lift Ban on Director and Musicians.

SWISS LEGATION SILENT

[Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19—Agents of the department of justice and the local police have refused to lift the ban on Dr. Karl Muck and 22 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are scheduled to give a series of concerts here. They are listed as German citizens and shall remain as such until better proof is given to the contrary, the officials say.

Meantime, the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

Must Be Special Ruling.

A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Maj. Pullman, police superintendent. Maj. Pullman today stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members may come to Washington unless the police department receives a special ruling from the department of justice ordering their admission.

John Lord O'Brien, special assistant to the attorney general in charge of the enforcement of the alien enemy proclamation, reiterated today:

"Dr. Muck is a German subject, and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the district."

The Swiss legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Hubscher, secretary of legation, stated:

"No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by the local agent of the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and 22 of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow Germans be admitted to the district. Refund of his money for the remaining three concerts was declined.

Hdld adverlise Dec. 22, 1917

SYMPHONY POINTS FOR NON-MUSICIAN

Beethoven's Pastoral to Be Given Today and Tomorrow Night

21

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

Program music is instrumental music which, by means of its title, or by notes printed upon the program or on the music, is intended to give a definite picture. The "Pastoral Symphony," to be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon and tomorrow night, was the first great classical work in this school. The meaning of the different movements will be sufficiently explained by the notes upon the program, but the non-musician may also note the following points in the music:

At the very beginning a very short and strikingly rustic phrase (four measures long) is played, with a pause at its end. In this phrase there are contained seven little figures which are used afterward in many combinations. Almost immediately after, the horns give a figure, which will reappear in the middle of the movement and be transformed in many ways. In the middle and near the end of the movement the first phrase will be changed into many new combinations. Note part of it on the flute quite alone, at the very end.

In the second movement, the "Brook," the murmuring figure of the rippling waves is constant, but the warbling of the yellow hammer is often heard upon the clarinette, and at the end the calls of cuckoo, quail and nightingale are blended together.

The third movement, "Jolly Gathering of the Country People," is a picture of a regular country fair. They are alike all over Europe—some drinking, some dancing and some fighting. All these can be found in the music, but note especially the little country band which plays for dancing; it is about like a hastily gathered street band, and its bassoon player has a battered old instrument with only three notes left upon it. These three notes (F-C-F) he gives as often as they can be brought into the harmony, but it makes the bass part comically intermittent. When the mountaineers come stamping into the festival there is a little scrimmage, but it is soon over and the dance is resumed.

Now comes a thunderstorm. Notice the anxious hush of nature before the elements break loose. The thunder and lightning are easily recognized, even if the lightning does frequently come after the thunder. The rumble and roar of the tempest is given by a simple device upon contrabasses and cellos, the playing of four notes against five, an intentional confusion. There are two extra large (five-stringed) contrabasses used in our orchestra in this part of the work. Trombones are used here (very unusual in symphony in Beethoven's day) to add to the tumult, and the piccolo pictures the rising wind at the height of the storm. When the clouds begin to break note the strip of blue sky upon the flute; it is very graphic.

After the storm clears off we hear the herdsmen calling their cattle. All modern composers use the English horn (a large oboe) to picture the shepherd's pipe, but Beethoven practically never used this instrument, and we hear the shepherds and herdsmen upon clarinette and French horn. Much of the succeeding music is grown out of the herdsman's call, and it comes back even at the very end of the symphony on the horn.

Then comes a hymn of thanksgiving for safety during the tempest and the work ends with joy and happiness. Musician and non-musician may unite in loving such a symphony, but the latter must avoid the idea that the chief mission of instrumental music is picture-painting, which Richard Strauss and some of the moderns would have us believe.

Advertiser Dec. 22

SYLVAIN NOACK IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Plays Works by Chausson and Saint-Saens on Light Classic Program

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Cherubini, "Anacreon" Overture.
Chausson, St. Saens, two violin pieces.
Soloist, Sylvain Noack.
Beethoven, Pastoral Symphony.

Cherubini's overtures are always a serene delight. Clear in form, perfect in the leading of the voices, sufficiently contrapuntal yet never straining after a display of learning, such works are an antidote to the neurotic style of the latter-day composers. Dr. Muck gave a powerful dramatic effect to the overture which made it sound like anything but ancient music—it was composed in 1803. Naturally there were no technical difficulties in an orchestral work of that epoch for our brilliant orchestra, but the powerful contrasts, the crashing chords, the distant horn calls and the final climax were well read and executed, and the work seemed heartily appreciated.

Then came one of our orchestral players in two solos. It ought to show that our volin band is the foremost of the present, when we remember that there are a half dozen soloists of first rank in this department, and Mr. Sylvain Noack is one of the most sterling of these. He is to be congratulated upon taking two numbers which have not been done to death in these concerts. There are very few effective violin works with orchestra. Many play at the concerto of Beethoven or of Brahms, both great works, but only for the giants of the violin world. Then we get the concerto of Mendelssohn or those of Brush "ad nauseam."

WELL-CONTRASTED SOLOS.

On this occasion we had two interesting pieces by Chausson and Saint-Saens, new, well contrasted and not too long. Both were played in the proper spirit, and, of course, one does not need to speak of Mr. Noack's intonation, or of his points of technique, his double-stopping, harmonics, his broad bowing, or phrasing, for he is a well equipped artist in these points.

The Havanaise (Saint-Saens) was full of the striking rhythms with which Bizet has made us familiar in his "Carmen," and it had much work in the high positions, which was excellently done. The "Poeme" (Chausson) was in thorough contrast with this sharply defined composition, being tender and dreamy, elegiac at first, more fiery later, ending quietly. The "Poeme" gave good display of temperament and emotion, the "Havanaise" of technique, and both were successful. It was wise to have the technical display come last, for violin fireworks, when brilliantly given, always arouse an audience to enthusiasm. They certainly did in this case, for Mr. Noack was recalled with very much enthusiasm.

MUSICAL TABLESPOON.

Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was the first great piece of that program—music, which has now become such a graphic school that Richard Strauss says that the composer can today picture a definite tablespoon in a dinner service and be sure of having it identified. No wonder that Mendelssohn said, "When Beethoven has opened the door any one may enter in." The pictures were strongly drawn. The figure development of the first movement was very clearly delfneated. The second movement ("By the Brook") always seems like Tennyson's waterscape;

"Men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever,"

for it is too long drawn out. But the rollicking Scherzo, with its dancers and village band, and especially the storm, with its thunder ('cellos and contrabasses) and its rising wind (piccolo) was gloriously read and performed. The Finale always seems in the nature of an anti-climax. Horns and clarinets deserve especial mention for clear work and the strings always.

Herald Dec. 22

ANACREON GIVEN BY SYMPHONY

Cherubini Overture and the Beethoven "Pastoral" Feature the Program.

REPEAT CONCERT TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE.

The ninth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral pieces were Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony. Mr. Noack, the second concert-master of the orchestra, played Chausson's "Poeme" and Saint-Saens's "Havanaise."

The names of Cherubini and Beethoven go well together on a program. Beethoven held the Italian at Paris in great respect. Not only did he declare him to be the greatest composer living—probably with a mental reservation in his own favor—but he once wrote to him about his own great Mass in terms almost obsequious. This overture to "Anacreon," is over 100 years old, but it is still heard with pleasure; not only on account of its classic workmanship, but by reason of its inherent grace and nobility. The word "nobility" is loosely used, too frequently applied, no doubt; but here it is no out of place; for the music of Cherubini, even when it is less important than his better overtures, his requiem in C minor, his Coronation Mass, is written in the grand style and with the cunning simplicity of the artist. It is said that as a man he was cold, austere, forbidding; but his music does not show it. This generation might not listen patiently to his operas, "The Water Carrier" and "Medea," yet there are dramatic strokes in them worthy of Gluck.

The musical season is so arranged that overtures entitled "Spring" are played when the ground is covered with snow and the wind bites furiously. This, too, may be said of the "Pastoral" Symphony with its murmuring brook, jovial country folk, thunder storm and thankful peasants. But the music is welcome at any time when it is played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The violin pieces chosen by Mr. Noack were played at these concerts for the first time. Chausson's "Poeme" has been heard in Boston several times, but with piano accompaniment. Even when thus performed by Mr. Ysaye or by Mr. Thibaud the music suffers i na way, for the "Poeme" is really an orchestral piece with a solo violin. Chausson was rich, happy in his family, a man of fine tastes, which he could gratify, respected by all, blessed with warm friends. Why is much of his music so sombre, so profoundly sad? Had he a premonition of his untimely and tragic ending? This "Poeme" is steeped in melancholy. Beautiful in its sadness, it needs a contrasting piece, if the violinist is anxious for popular success. Mr. Noack chose the "Havanaise" of Saint-Saens, constructed on the rhythm of the Habanera. The charming music has been played here with piano, also at Pop concerts. Yesterday it might have been more effective if Mr. Noack had taken the habanera measures at a little faster pace, and not played the episodes so quickly that at times some of the notes were hardly audible. Mr. Noack has a pure, fine tone. Technical difficulties do not daunt him. There is, however, a greater depth of feeling in Chausson's "Poeme" than was disclosed yesterday, and the "Havanaise" admits of more dash and brilliance in the performance.

The word "Anacreon" on the program reminded us that the old English tune "To Anacreon in Heaven" was borrowed or lifted, in this country to fit the words of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The concert will be repeated this evening. The orchestral pieces to be played next week are Brahms's "Tragic" overture, Siberlius's "Swan of Tuenda" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Mme. Melba will sing a recitative and aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo"; Voi che Sapte" from "Nozze di Figaro" and Lia's air from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue."

Post 12/22/17

NOACK SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Concert Master Is Warmly Welcomed

22

Sylvain Noack, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the soliost at the Symphony concert given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Noack, a most accomplished musician, played Chausson's "Poeme" and Saint-Saens' "Havanaise." He has conspicuously the refinement and finish of style that the latter work demands, and he met successfully the bigger requirements of Chausson's "Poeme." A musician as well as a technician of parts, a man of sensitive taste and feeling, Mr. Noack was warmly welcomed by the audience.

The orchestral pieces of a rather conventional programme were Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony. This symphony is very effectively played by Dr. Muck. It is more than a mere piece of programme music of "nature-faking." the peace of the country-side, the fury of the elments, are felt as well as the mere sounds that these things convey.

The orchestra, long familiar with this amiable music, played it as admirably as usual.

Globe 12/22/17

SYMPHONY CONCERT

GLOBE—— 12/22

The Symphony concert yesterday began with Cherubini and ended with Beethoven—a fitting juxtaposition. Beethoven esteemed above all his contemporaries this visiting Italian, born in Florence, abiding in London, then in Paris, finally in July, 1805, came to Vienna with an opera for the Imperial Theatre, Napoleon having disprized him in favor of the soothing tones of Paisello. Cherubini was honest enough to say Beethoven did not write sympathetically for the voice and that in person he was "toujours brusque."

The introduction to Cherubini's overture to his opera-ballet "Anacreon," whom his succeeding directors of the Conservatoire—Auber, Ambroise Thomas or Dubois—hardly could have equalled, might have been written by Beethoven. But the lightness, the recurring winged and delicately rhythmed passages reflecting the spirit of the ballet cannot conceal either the Italian limpidity nor the French grace. There is, too, the grand manner in the vein of Gluck, whose foundations for a noble musical art had been buried under the latter fripperies of a frivolous Parisian taste.

Chausson's genius for poignant, intimate, intensely personal expression in tone wed to a text to be sung is almost that of a man who in all writes autobiography, who transcribes in every bar from his heart's blood. His "Poeme" for violin and orchestra yesterday, by curious previous omission, heard for the first time at these concerts, is as vital, as instinct with sensibility, as reflective of a poetic mind and noble spirit as his songs. Some have said that his idiom drips with melancholy. But it is not merely lachrymose nor repining. It is the speech of a soul for whom all images take on oftenest a somber beauty, whether reflective, tender or nobly impassioned.

Mr Noack of the orchestra played as one caught under its spell, with sensitive regard for the long, winged lines of the composer's thought, emotional in every bar, weaving among the strands of a score which makes orchestra vie with soloist and permits the conductor to become the recreator of all, as Dr Muck did yesterday. Saint-Saens' superficial music for the salon, the "Havanaise," followed, also a first time at these concerts. Mr Noack properly made no attempt to read beneath its polished surface, playing with taste, facility and the characteristic elegance Saint-Saens requires. The performance of Beethoven's pastoral symphony in all the unctious flavor of its bucolic moods was a superb one, both in tribute to the joys of men and of nature.

Hera adverlise Dec. 23, 1917

SYMPHONY POINTS FOR NON-MUSICIAN

Beethoven's Pastoral to Be Given Today and Tomorrow Night

21

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

Program music is instrumental music which, by means of its title, or by notes printed upon the program or on the music, is intended to give a definite picture. The "Pastoral Symphony," to be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon and tomorrow night, was the first great classical work in this school. The meaning of the different movements will be sufficiently explained by the notes upon the program, but the non-musician may also note the following points in the music:

At the very beginning a very short and strikingly rustic phrase (four measures long) is played, with a pause at its end. In this phrase there are contained seven little figures which are used afterward in many combinations. Almost immediately after, the horns give a figure, which will reappear in the middle of the movement and be transformed in many ways. In the middle and near the end of the movement the first phrase will be changed into many new combinations. Note part of it on the flute quite alone, at the very end.

In the second movement, the "Brook," the murmuring figure of the rippling waves is constant, but the warbling of the yellow hammer is often heard upon the clarinette, and at the end the calls of cuckoo, quail and nightingale are blended together.

The third movement, "Jolly Gathering of the Country People," is a picture of a regular country fair. They are alike all over Europe—some drinking, some dancing and some fighting. All these can be found in the music, but note especially the little country band which plays for dancing; it is about like a hastily gathered street band, and its bassoon player has a battered old instrument with only three notes left upon it. These three notes (F-C-F) he gives as often as they can be brought into the harmony, but it makes the bass part comically intermittent. When the mountaineers come stamping into the festival there is a little scrimmage, but it is soon over and the dance is resumed.

Now comes a thunderstorm. Notice the anxious hush of nature before the elements break loose. The thunder and lightning are easily recognized, even if the lightning does frequently come after the thunder. The rumble and roar of the tempest is given by a simple device upon contrabasses and cellos, the playing of four notes against five, an intentional confusion. There are two extra large (five-stringed) contrabasses used in our orchestra in this part of the work. Trombones are used here (very unusual in symphony in Beethoven's day) to add to the tumult, and the piccolo pictures the rising wind at the height of the storm. When the clouds begin to break note the strip of blue sky upon the flute; it is very graphic.

After the storm clears off we hear the herdsmen calling their cattle. All modern composers use the English horn (a large oboe) to picture the shepherd's pipe, but Beethoven practically never used this instrument, and we hear the shepherds and herdsmen upon clarinette and French horn. Much of the succeeding music is grown out of the herdsman's call, and it comes back even at the very end of the symphony on the horn.

Then comes a hymn of thanksgiving for safety during the tempest and the work ends with joy and happiness. Musician and non-musician may unite in loving such a symphony, but the latter must avoid the idea that the chief mission of instrumental music is picture-painting, which Richard Strauss and some of the moderns would have us believe.

Advertiser Dec. 22

SYLVAIN NOACK IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Plays Works by Chausson and Saint-Saens on Light Classic Program

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Cherubini, "Anacreon" Overture.
Chausson, St. Saens, two violin pieces.
Soloist, Sylvain Noack.
Beethoven. Pastoral Symphony.

Cherubini's overtures are always a serene delight. Clear in form, perfect in the leading of the voices, sufficiently contrapuntal yet never straining after a display of learning, such works are an antidote to the neurotic style of the latter-day composers. Dr. Muck gave a powerful dramatic effect to the overture which made it sound like anything but ancient music—it was composed in 1803. Naturally there were no technical difficulties in an orchestral work of that epoch for our brilliant orchestra, but the powerful contrasts, the crashing chords, the distant horn calls and the final climax were well read and executed, and the work seemed heartily appreciated.

Then came one of our orchestral players in two solos. It ought to show that our volin band is the foremost of the present, when we remember that there are a half dozen soloists of first rank in this department, and Mr. Sylvain Noack is one of the most sterling of these. He is to be congratulated upon taking two numbers which have not been done to death in these concerts. There are very few effective violin works with orchestra. Many play at the concerto of Beethoven or of Brahms, both great works, but only for the giants of the violin world. Then we get the concerto of Mendelssohn or those of Brush "ad nauseam."

WELL-CONTRASTED SOLOS.

On this occasion we had two interesting pieces by Chausson and Saint-Saens, new, well contrasted and not too long. Both were played in the proper spirit, and, of course, one does not need to speak of Mr. Noack's intonation, or of his points of technique, his double-stopping, harmonics, his broad bowing, or phrasing, for he is a well equipped artist in these points.

The Havanaise (Saint-Saens) was full of the striking rhythms with which Bizet has made us familiar in his "Carmen," and it had much work in the high positions, which was excellently done. The "Poeme" (Chausson) was in thorough contrast with this sharply defined composition, being tender and dreamy, elegiac at first, more fiery later, ending quietly. The "Poeme" gave good display of temperament and emotion, the "Havanaise" of technique, and both were successful. It was wise to have the technical display come last, for violin fireworks, when brilliantly given, always arouse an audience to enthusiasm. They certainly did in this case, for Mr. Noack was recalled with very much enthusiasm.

MUSICAL TABLESPOON.

Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was the first great piece of that program—music, which has now become such a graphic school that Richard Strauss says that the composer can today picture a definite tablespoon in a dinner service and be sure of having it identified. No wonder that Mendelssohn said, "When Beethoven has opened the door any one may enter in." The pictures were strongly drawn. The figure development of the first movement was very clearly delineated. The second movement ("By the Brook") always seems like Tennyson's waterscape:

"Men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever,"

for it is too long drawn out. But the rollicking Scherzo, with its dancers and village band, and especially the storm, with its thunder ('cellos and contrabasses) and its rising wind (piccolo) was gloriously read and performed. The Finale always seems in the nature of an anti-climax. Horns and clarinets deserve especial mention for clear work and the strings always.

Herald Dec. 22

ANACREON GIVEN BY SYMPHONY

Cherubini Overture and the Beethoven "Pastoral" Feature the Program.

REPEAT CONCERT TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE.

The ninth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral pieces were Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony. Mr. Noack, the second concert-master of the orchestra, played Chausson's "Poeme" and Saint-Saens's "Havanaise."

The names of Cherubini and Beethoven go well together on a program. Beethoven held the Italian at Paris in great respect. Not only did he declare him to be the greatest composer living—probably with a mental reservation in his own favor—but he once wrote to him about his own great Mass in terms almost obsequious. This overture to "Anacreon," is over 100 years old, but it is still heard with pleasure; not only on account of its classic workmanship, but by reason of its inherent grace and no bility. The word "nobility" is loosely used, too frequently applied, no doubt: but here it is no out of place; for the music of Cherubini, even when it is less important than his better overtures, his requiem in C minor, his Coronation Mass, is written in the grand style and with the cunning simplicity of the artist. It is said that as a man he was cold, austere, forbidding; but his music does not show it. This generation might not listen patiently to his operas, "The Water Carrier" and "Medea," yet there are dramatic strokes in them worthy of Gluck.

The musical season is so arranged that overtures entitled "Spring" are played when the ground is covered with snow and the wind bites furiously. This, too, may be said of the "Pastoral" Symphony with its murmuring brook, jovial country folk, thunder storm and thankful peasants. But the music is welcome at any time when it is played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The violin pieces chosen by Mr. Noack were played at these concerts for the first time. Chausson's "Poeme" has been heard in Boston several times, but with piano accompaniment. Even when thus performed by Mr. Ysaye or by Mr. Thibaud the music suffers i na way, for the "Poeme" is really an orchestral piece with a solo violin. Chausson was rich, happy in his family, a man of fine tastes, which he could gratify, respected by all, blessed with warm friends. Why is much of his music so sombre, so profoundly sad? Had he a premonition of his untimely and tragic ending? This "Poeme" is steeped in melancholy. Beautiful in its sadness, it needs a contrasting piece, if the violinist is anxious for popular success. Mr. Noack chose the "Havanaise" of Saint-Saens, constructed on the rhythm of the Habanera. The charming music has been played here with piano, also at Pop concerts. Yesterday it might have been more effective if Mr. Noack had taken the habanera measures at a little faster pace, and not played the episodes so quickly that at times some of the notes were hardly audible. Mr. Noack has a pure, fine tone. Technical difficulties do not daunt him. There is, however, a greater depth of feeling in Chausson's "Poeme" than was disclosed yesterday, and the "Havanaise" admits of more dash and brilliance in the performance.

The word "Anacreon" on the program reminded us that the old English tune "To Anacreon in Heaven" was borrowed or lifted, in this country to fit the words of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The concert will be repeated this evening. The orchestral pieces to be played next week are Brahms's "Tragic" overture, Siberlius's "Swan of Tuenda" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Mme. Melba will sing a recitative and aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo"; Voi che Sapte" from "Nozze di Figaro" and Lia's air from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue."

Post 12/22/17

NOACK SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Concert Master Is Warmly Welcomed

22

Sylvain Noack, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the soliost at the Symphony concert given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Noack, a most accomplished musician, played Chausson's "Poeme" and Saint-Saens' "Havanaise." He has conspicuously the refinement and finish of style that the latter work demands, and he met successfully the bigger requirements of Chausson's "Poeme." A musician as well as a technician of parts, a man of sensitive taste and feeling, Mr. Noack was warmly welcomed by the audience.

The orchestral pieces of a rather conventional programme were Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony. This symphony is very effectively played by Dr. Muck. It is more than a mere piece of programme music of "nature-faking." the peace of the country-side, the fury of the elments, are felt as well as the mere sounds that these things convey.

The orchestra, long familiar with this amiable music, played it as admirably as usual.

Globe 12/22/17

SYMPHONY CONCERT

GLOBE—— 12/22

The Symphony concert yesterday began with Cherubini and ended with Beethoven—a fitting juxtaposition. Beethoven esteemed above all his contemporaries this visiting Italian, born in Florence, abiding in London, then in Paris, finally in July, 1805, came to Vienna with an opera for the Imperial Theatre, Napoleon having disprized him in favor of the soothing tones of Paisello. Cherubini was honest enough to say Beethoven did not write sympathetically for the voice and that in person he was "toujours brusque."

The introduction to Cherubini's overture to his opera-ballet "Anacreon," whom his succeeding directors of the Conservatoire—Auber, Ambroise Thomas or Dubois—hardly could have equalled, might have been written by Beethoven. But the lightness, the recurring winged and delicately rhythmed passages reflecting the spirit of the ballet cannot conceal either the Italian limpidity nor the French grace. There is, too, the grand manner in the vein of Gluck, whose foundations for a noble musical art had been buried under the latter fripperies of a frivolous Parisian taste.

Chausson's genius for poignant, intimate, intensely personal expression in tone wed to a text to be sung is almost that of a man who in all writes autobiography, who transcribes in every bar from his heart's blood. His "Poeme" for violin and orchestra yesterday, by curious previous omission, heard for the first time at these concerts, is as vital, as instinct with sensibility, as reflective of a poetic mind and noble spirit as his songs. Some have said that his idiom drips with melancholy. But it is not merely lachrymose nor repining. It is the speech of a soul for whom all images take on oftenest a somber beauty, whether reflective, tender or nobly impassioned.

Mr Noack of the orchestra played as one caught under its spell, with sensitive regard for the long, winged lines of the composer's thought, emotional in every bar, weaving among the strands of a score which makes orchestra vie with soloist and permits the conductor to become the recreator of all, as Dr Muck did yesterday. Saint-Saens' superficial music for the salon, the "Havanaise," followed, also a first time at these concerts. Mr Noack properly made no attempt to read beneath its polished surface, playing with taste, facility and the characteristic elegance Saint-Saens requires. The performance of Beethoven's pastoral symphony in all the unctious flavor of its bucolic moods was a superb one, both in tribute to the joys of men and of nature.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md.

Da

But, As We Said Editorially, There Is All The Difference In The World Between Muck And Kreisler—Muck Played The National Anthem Under Compulsion—Kreisler Did It Graciously And Voluntarily.

Es

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: With your kind permission I would like to recall a few of the facts printed about the Dr. Muck controversy while the excitement was at its height. Now and then a belated shot is fired reminding us that the hot fusillade directed at the Boston Symphony conductor early in the month is not entirely at an end even now; still it may be that certain statements already published stand a better chance for a calm, judicial hearing at the present time than when they first appeared in print.

Please note that I quote exclusively from THE SUN. Major Higginson, whose standing is above dispute, the managers of the orchestra and the individual members of the organization, all, as one man, deny that Dr. Muck ever refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." In your morning issue for November 3 Major Higginson is quoted as saying: "They (i. e., both conductor and orchestra) have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. The matter rests with me."

Again, on Tuesday, 6th, THE SUN'S correspondent (special) tells us that Mr. Ellis and Mr. Brennan, the two managers already mentioned, "both of whom declare themselves to be as good Americans as any of those who have criticized Dr. Muck, say that the Doctor has never refused to play the national anthem and has never said anything critical of it, except that, because of the character of the music, it is not fitted for performance by an orchestra." In this opinion, it may be added, most scientific musicians concur. Dr. Muck knew nothing before the concert of the request that he would conduct the anthem in Providence, so say the witnesses; when he was told of it the concert was over. "The Doctor's resignation?" continues Mr. Ellis. "He offered his resignation because he did not wish to embarrass the organization. No; it has not been accepted. It has not been determined whether it will be accepted or not. If Dr. Muck resigned the organization would disband at once and 100 men, Frenchmen, Russians, Germans and Americans, would be robbed of their means of earning their living." Is it more manly to withdraw to a peaceful retirement, and by so doing bring hardship on 100 men and their families, or to remain and, for the men's sake, endure and bravely face bitter attack?

Your special correspondent sums up the results of his interviews with nearly every one concerned thus: "One gets the impression that the dispute over Dr. Muck's attitude toward 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is the inevitable result of the fact that his country and the United States are at war—and not the result of any special or studied insult to the national anthem by Dr. Muck." Such is the evidence and such the verdict in the case as found in THE SUN.

THE SUN'S generous tribute to Kreisler's nobility of character which was printed in the November 27 issue was duly appreciated. But what of Kreisler's fellow-musician!

FIAT JUSTITIA, RUAT CAELUM.

Baltimore, Nov. 30.

NORTH AMERICAN

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK IS A SWISS, NOT GERMAN, CITIZEN

Boston Symphony Director Took Papers in Switzerland, Washington Legation Says

WAS BORN IN BAVARIA

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss legation today in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Doctor Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant, when Doctor Muck was 8 years old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father, later, when the son had become a man, he of his own notion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Doctor Muck could be obtained at the Swiss legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Doctor Muck obtained passports at the Swiss legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

DEC 10 19

DR. KARL MUCK SWISS SUBJECT, SAYS LEGATION

Boston Symphony Director, Born in Bavaria, Naturalized in Republic.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss Legation yesterday in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant when Dr. Muck was 8-years-old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father. Later, when the son had become a man, he of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss Legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss Legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich, and that he has lived there at various intervals.

Defines Muck's Status.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudical to the interests of our country.'

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs, and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicans of many nationalities—51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians and 2 Bohemians."

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Date Dec. 7, 1917

Dr. Muck and Kreisler Raise $10,000 for Halifax Fund

BOSTON, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years for the benefit of the sufferers from the Halifax disaster.

Over five thousand dollars in mail orders were returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses, except nominal ones, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall. The concert netted considerably over $10,000.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

DEC 10 1917

DR. KARL MUCK SWISS SUBJECT, SAYS LEGATION

Boston Symphony Director, Born in Bavaria, Naturalized in Republic.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss Legation yesterday in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant when Dr. Muck was 8-years-old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father. Later, when the son had become a man, he of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss Legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss Legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich, and that he has lived there at various intervals.

Defines Muck's Status.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudical to the interests of our country.'

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs, and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicans of many nationalities—51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 8 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians and 2 Bohemians."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

REPUBLICAN

om

dress Springfield, Mass.

e

GERMANS MUST KEEP OUT

Attorney-General Refuses Special Permission for Alien Enemy Members of Boston Symphony to Visit Washington

Musical and theatrical organizations going to Washington during the war must leave alien enemy members behind. Attorney General Gregory refused at Washington yesterday to relax in favor of 22 members of the Boston symphony orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

TELEGRAM

ess: New York City

DEC 17 1917

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor; Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, contributing their services, gave a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund Sunday.—Ten thousand dollars was raised, all of which was given to the fund.

n PUBLIC

ress

e

THE American Defense Society, with its headquarters in New York, wishes to behold the Boston Symphony Orchestra put out of business entirely. It would have the Department of Justice forbid it to give concerts anywhere in the country. Here is its declaration, upon which Major Henry L. Higginson, whose patriotism any man is rash to question, declined to comment:

"Having learned that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been denied entrance to the District of Columbia, the American Defense Society urges the Department of Justice to take immediate action to prohibit this organization from giving concerts in other cities of the United States.

"Dr. Karl Muck, an enemy alien, is its conductor. He acknowledges that his sympathies are with the Kaiser. He is said to be traveling on a Swiss passport the genuineness of which has been subject to some discussion. The American Defense Society urges that Doctor Muck be interned and the symphony concerts be suspended for the duration of the war. We do not believe that Doctor Muck should be permitted to convey the information he has secured in this country to the German War Office or be permitted to learn of our military operations while he travels with immunity. Other men, perhaps some of them far less dangerous than he, are in detention camps.

"It is an insult to our national anthem to have it played by men who are secretly hoping for our destruction and advancing the cause of the enemy with treacherous propaganda.

"American soldiers have given their lives before German cannon, peaceful citizens have been killed and murdered by German agents within our boundaries. The American public is in no mood to listen to music played by these men, no matter how wonderful that music may be.

"Baltimore, Providence and Springfield have voiced their opinions on this matter. The District of Columbia forbade them, and, with due respect to its venerable patron, Major Henry L. Higginson, we know that loyal Americans are with us in this appeal."

TIMES

ess: Washington, D. C.

DEC 3 1917

DR. KARL MUCK NOT ALIEN ENEMY, IS CLAIM

lished

C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent letters to the subscribers to the Washington concerts in which he states that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the orchestra, is not a Prussian citizens, that he is not an alien enemy of the United States. that his father was a Swiss, and that, therefore, Dr. Muck might claim that citizenship and thus make himself still possible as the leader of the orchestra.

om TIMES

ldress: New York City

te

Boston Symphony Helps Halifax.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, Mme. Melba, and Fritz Kreisler, united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years for the benefit of the sufferers from the Halifax disaster. More than $5,000 in mail orders were returned, and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. Major H. L. Higginson contributed Symphony Hall and its attaches. The concert netted considerably more than $10,000.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md.

Da

But, As We Said Editorially, There Is All The Difference In The World Between Muck And Kreisler—Muck Played The National Anthem Under Compulsion—Kreisler Did It Graciously And Voluntarily.

Es

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: With your kind permission I would like to recall a few of the facts printed about the Dr. Muck controversy while the excitement was at its height. Now and then a belated shot is fired reminding us that the hot fusillade directed at the Boston Symphony conductor early in the month is not entirely at an end even now; still it may be that certain statements already published stand a better chance for a calm, judicial hearing at the present time than when they first appeared in print.

Please note that I quote exclusively from THE SUN. Major Higginson, whose standing is above dispute, the managers of the orchestra and the individual members of the organization, all, as one man, deny that Dr. Muck ever refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." In your morning issue for November 3 Major Higginson is quoted as saying: "They (i. e., both conductor and orchestra) have never refused to play it. Last spring it was my earnest request of Dr. Muck that he remain in charge, as I considered it essential to the continued success of these concerts. He has placed his resignation in my hands that no personal feeling against him may prejudice the welfare of the orchestra. To lose him would be a disaster. The matter rests with me."

Again, on Tuesday, 6th, THE SUN'S correspondent (special) tells us that Mr. Ellis and Mr. Brennan, the two managers already mentioned, "both of whom declare themselves to be as good Americans as any of those who have criticized Dr. Muck, say that the Doctor has never refused to play the national anthem and has never said anything critical of it, except that, because of the character of the music, it is not fitted for performance by an orchestra." In this opinion, it may be added, most scientific musicians concur. Dr. Muck knew nothing before the concert of the request that he would conduct the anthem in Providence, so say the witnesses; when he was told of it the concert was over. "The Doctor's resignation?" continues Mr. Ellis. "He offered his resignation because he did not wish to embarrass the organization. No; it has not been accepted. It has not been determined whether it will be accepted or not. If Dr. Muck resigned the organization would disband at once and 100 men, Frenchmen, Russians, Germans and Americans, would be robbed of their means of earning their living." Is it more manly to withdraw to a peaceful retirement, and by so doing bring hardship on 100 men and their families, or to remain and, for the men's sake, endure and bravely face bitter attack?

Your special correspondent sums up the results of his interviews with nearly every one concerned thus: "One gets the impression that the dispute over Dr. Muck's attitude toward 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is the inevitable result of the fact that his country and the United States are at war—and not the result of any special or studied insult to the national anthem by Dr. Muck." Such is the evidence and such the verdict in the case as found in THE SUN.

THE SUN'S generous tribute to Kreisler's nobility of character which was printed in the November 27 issue was duly appreciated. But what of Kreisler's fellow-musician!

FIAT JUSTITIA, RUAT CAELUM.

Baltimore, Nov. 30.

NORTH AMERICAN

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK IS A SWISS, NOT GERMAN, CITIZEN

Boston Symphony Director Took Papers in Switzerland, Washington Legation Says

WAS BORN IN BAVARIA

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss legation today in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Doctor Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant, when Doctor Muck was 8 years old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father, later, when the son had become a man, he of his own notion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Doctor Muck could be obtained at the Swiss legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Doctor Muck obtained passports at the Swiss legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

DR. KARL MUCK SWISS SUBJECT, SAYS LEGATION

Boston Symphony Director, Born in Bavaria, Naturalized in Republic.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss Legation yesterday in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant when Dr. Muck was 8-years-old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father. Later, when the son had become a man, he of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss Legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss Legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich, and that he has lived there at various intervals.

Defines Muck's Status.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudical to the interests of our country.'

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs, and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicans of many nationalities—51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 6 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians and 2 Bohemians."

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Date Dec. 7, 1917

Dr. Muck and Kreisler Raise $10,000 for Halifax Fund

BOSTON, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years for the benefit of the sufferers from the Halifax disaster.

Over five thousand dollars in mail orders were returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except nominal ones, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall. The concert netted considerably over $10,000.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

Date DEC 17 1917

DR. KARL MUCK SWISS SUBJECT, SAYS LEGATION

Boston Symphony Director, Born in Bavaria, Naturalized in Republic.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a citizen of Switzerland, not a German subject, was the statement made at the Swiss Legation yesterday in response to an inquiry.

In other informed circles it was said that Dr. Muck was born in Wurzburg, Bavaria, where his father was a magistrate. In 1867, according to this informant when Dr. Muck was 8-years-old, his father took out his naturalization papers in Switzerland, and the status of the son followed that of the father. Later, when the son had become a man, he of his own motion, it was explained, also took out his papers, strengthening his Swiss citizenship.

Only the confirmation of the fact of the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck could be obtained at the Swiss Legation and beyond that no discussion of the matter was to be had. It was learned, however, that about two years ago, since the war began, Dr. Muck obtained passports at the Swiss Legation here for the purpose of foreign travel, but no particulars could be had as to whether he used the passports or where he went abroad. It is known that he was for a time director of the National Orchestra at Zurich, and that he has lived there at various intervals.

Defines Muck's Status.

In line with the disclosure of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has sent to friends of Dr. Muck in Washington the following letter:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudical to the interests of our country.'

"For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs, and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicans of many nationalities—51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, 6 Austrians, 2 Italians, 2 British, 6 Dutch, 2 Russians, 3 French, 2 Belgians and 2 Bohemians."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

om

REPUBLICAN

dress

Springfield, Mass.

e

GERMANS MUST KEEP OUT

Attorney-General Refuses Special Permission for Alien Enemy Members of Boston Symphony to Visit Washington

Musical and theatrical organizations going to Washington during the war must leave alien enemy members behind. Attorney General Gregory refused at Washington yesterday to relax in favor of 22 members of the Boston symphony orchestra the regulations under President Wilson's proclamation barring enemy aliens from the District of Columbia, and gave notice that similar action might be expected in all other such cases.

TELEGRAM

ess: New York City

DEC 17 1917

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor; Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, contributing their services, gave a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund Sunday.—Ten thousand dollars was raised, all of which was given to the fund.

n ress

e

THE American Defense Society, with its headquarters in New York, wishes to behold the Boston Symphony Orchestra put out of business entirely. It would have the Department of Justice forbid it to give concerts anywhere in the country. Here is its declaration, upon which Major Henry L. Higginson, whose patriotism any man is rash to question, declined to comment:

"Having learned that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been denied entrance to the District of Columbia, the American Defense Society urges the Department of Justice to take immediate action to prohibit this organization from giving concerts in other cities of the United States.

"Dr. Karl Muck, an enemy alien, is its conductor. He acknowledges that his sympathies are with the Kaiser. He is said to be traveling on a Swiss passport the genuineness of which has been subject to some discussion. The American Defense Society urges that Doctor Muck be interned and the symphony concerts be suspended for the duration of the war. We do not believe that Doctor Muck should be permitted to convey the information he has secured in this country to the German War Office or be permitted to learn of our military operations while he travels with immunity. Other men, perhaps some of them far less dangerous than he, are in detention camps.

"It is an insult to our national anthem to have it played by men who are secretly hoping for our destruction and advancing the cause of the enemy with treacherous propaganda.

"American soldiers have given their lives before German cannon, peaceful citizens have been killed and murdered by German agents within our boundaries. The American public is in no mood to listen to music played by these men, no matter how wonderful that music may be.

"Baltimore, Providence and Springfield have voiced their opinions on this matter. The District of Columbia forbade them, and, with due respect to its venerable patron, Major Henry L. Higginson, we know that loyal Americans are with us in this appeal."

TIMES

ess: Washington, D. C.

DR. KARL MUCK NOT ALIEN ENEMY, IS CLAIM

lished

C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent letters to the subscribers to the Washington concerts in which he states that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the orchestra, is not a Prussian citizens, that he is not an alien enemy of the United States, that his father was a Swiss, and that, therefore, Dr. Muck might claim that citizenship and thus make himself still possible as the leader of the orchestra.

om TIMES

dress: New York City

te

Boston Symphony Helps Halifax.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, Mme. Melba, and Fritz Kreisler, united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years for the benefit of the sufferers from the Halifax disaster. More than $5,000 in mail orders were returned, and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. Major H. L. Higginson contributed Symphony Hall and its attaches. The concert netted considerably more than $10,000.

1915

CHURCHMAN

Address: New York City.

Date DEC 8 1917

Nervous Patriotism

MOST of the people who are making so noisy a demonstration just now against Dr. Muck and Mr. Kreisler have never in all probability lent a dollar or an ear to good music. Mr. Higginson, one of America's most honorable patriots, who in spite of his four score years has gone about the country urging preparation for the War and has devoted an ample fortune to the encouragement and upbuilding of a great orchestra for the benefit of his fellow countrymen, was satisfied with the deportment of his conductor; but a clamorous public opinion says that Karl Muck must go. Even Springfield, Massachusetts, always so restrained in its decorum, has spoken in strident tones. Mr. Kreisler, the world's greatest living violinist, must never again affront the patriotism of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Kreisler has given his word that accumulations of his earnings are being used for the assistance of needy artists and their families—artists in France, Italy and Russia, as well as in his native Austria. It is a pity that America is giving way to this hysteria. By all means let us hunt down the spies in our midst; but let us not waste our energy over destroying the one permanent bond of internationalism—the fellowship of art. Mr. Wilson has spoken a fine and inspiring word on this matter.

TELEGRAM

New York City DEC 17 1917

Metropolitan Solving Question of Collection of Opera Ticket War Tax

Persons Subscribing or Purchasing Seats Before Federal Levy Went Into Effect, to Whom Money was Refunded, Will Be Sent Bills for Re-Collection.

Subscribers to seats at the Metropolitan Opera House, to whom war tax payments have been refunded, but who by a new government ruling will have to pay the tax again, will not be held up at the door of the Opera House for the ten per cent tax. Instead bills will be sent to all those who procured seats before the war tax went into effect.

This statement has just been made by a person conversant with the affairs of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who declared the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the opera company's officials are now trying to determine the best way of straightening out the tangle caused by a reversal of the original order on the subject. Nearly $250,000 is said to be involved.

For the present all tickets for theatres, operas and concerts will be taxed regardless of when they were sold. A previous ruling of Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, had made all tickets purchased prior to November 1 exempt from taxation, but last Thursday the ruling was reversed.

The man who discussed the subject said:—

"While we understand that the ruling exempting subscribers from taxation has been reversed, subscribers will not be held up at the door for the tax when they come to the opera to-morrow night. If the tickets are taxable we will send bills to the subscribers for ten per cent of the value of their seats. This money was collected before the law went into effect, and was returned later when the tickets were held to be free from taxation. The Metropolitan Opera Company, I believe, will question the right of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the matter of the date from which the collection of the theatre tax should be operated."

It was stated that the Metropolitan still holds that the law went into effect on November 1.

Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District, has a different view. He said:—

"The report which appeared in the papers on last Friday was correct. The action is final, and beginning now there will be a tax on all admissions. It is not the intention of the department to inflict trouble upon patrons of opera or the drama. The opera house may collect in its own way, as returns to the government are made monthly."

A similar condition exists with the Philharmonic and Symphony societies and the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Felix Leifels, manager of the Philharmonic Society, said he had not been notified officially of the new ruling. He added:—

"It will be almost impossible to sort out the tickets of subscribers from those of purchasers of single admissions. We will admit all who have seats without requiring that they buy separate war tax tickets for each performance. We will, however, send a bill covering the tax to all subscribers notifying them of the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which makes us liable for the tax. We will pay the tax until the question is adjusted, so that no one will be inconvenienced at the door."

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

New York City DEC 9 - 1917

The latest—and, one hopes, the last—chapter in the terrible disclosures regarding Dr Muck is that he is not a German subject and is therefore not an alien enemy. A few weeks ago the public learned that Dr Muck was not a Prussian, but a Bavarian. Now the public learns, on the authority of the Swiss embassy, that Dr Muck is not a German subject but a citizen of Switzerland. He was born in Bavaria, it is true, but his father moved to Switzerland, and Dr Muck himself, when he became a young man, further strengthened his Swiss citizenship by taking out papers. Another recent disclosure regarding this eminent musicidn, whom Boston will probably retain at the head of its symphony orchestra in spite of some silly public clamor, comes from the federal authorities themselves. They affirm that they "have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country." Compared with this statement, the aspersions of the Providence Journal will appear to have been made out of whole cloth.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa

New York City

DEC 13 1917

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY HUBBUB.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—It seems to me that sentiment has run mad in America, to judge by the ridiculous attitude that many of our citizens are taking against music and musicians made in Germany. There is one thing in being patriotic, and quite another in being foolish. Of course, it is only fair to say that we have not had a war in this country for so many years, and we had hoped that we never would have again, so that, being forced into it, we have, in a measure, lost our heads. We ridicule Germany and her pretences at Kulture. Are we going to make the same mistake?

Several years ago, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was in need of a new director, they looked over the available material and found that Dr. Karl Muck most nearly represented their ideal, and the man who would carry out their ideals. He was prevailed upon to come to this country to conduct the Boston Orchestra. He did not force himself upon us, and therefore is entitled to fair treatment.

When the announcement was made that Dr. Muck was to direct the Boston Symphony, only words of praise were showered upon Mr. Higginson and others connected with that orchestra, for having secured such a great musician for America. He was applauded all over the country and in nowhere more heartily than in Philadelphia. Why this change of spirit? Simply because we are at war with Germany, are we willing to drive out of existence the greatest art organization in our country?

If Dr. Muck has done aught against us it is for the Federal authorities to handle him. That they have not done so would seem to me as proof that they do not look upon him as an alien enemy. Great orchestra leaders are a rarity, and instead of criticising Mr. Higginson we should have patience, hoping that everything will come out all right in the end.

I notice in another paper in this city that Ella Day Blair, who is known in musical circles here, has a scathing article against Dr. Muck, and only high praise for Fritz Kreisler. Why is there any difference? Fritz Kreisler has been refused permission to play in many cities by a lot of petty, would-be patriots, and in consequence canceled his engagements. Miss Blair tries to shame Dr. Muck for not having done the same. It is an entirely different condition. Dr. Muck is merely at the head of an organization and under contract. Like Fritz Kreisler, he also has resigned, but Mr. Higginson, not being able, it is assumed, to find some one to take his place, thus far has not accepted his resignation.

Does not Miss Blair know that by putting the Boston Symphony Orchestra out of business she is not only taking a livelihood from Dr. Muck and the small number of alien musicians in the orchestra, but also the opportunity to make a living out of the hands of fourscore good American musicians, who are members of the orchestra. Do persons of her type not consider the full side of such a misfortune? Music will go on forever, and the war will be of short duration. Are we to drive out of existence the only one great American orchestra, and throw art in this country back several decades, merely because certain people have suddenly acquired a patriotic mania, which, like all other mania, should place those acquiring them out of harm's way.

ERNEST D. SOUTHARD.

Philadelphia, December 7, 1917.

HERALD

ss: New York City

DEC 17 1917

$10,000 RAISED FOR HALIFAX SUFFERERS

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor; Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, contributing their services, gave a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund to-day. Ten thousand dollars was raised, all of which was given to the fund.

EVENING PUBLIC Ledger

From Philadelphia, Pa.

Address

Date DEC 10 1917

FOR MUSICAL AMERICANISM

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—In reference to your editorial, "Must Boston Band Be Scrapped?" as a general thing, your patriotism is at fever heat, but why make fish of one and fowl of the other? Doctor Muck and his twenty-three musicians are alien enemies and must be treated as such. If these members join for life and it is their career, then they ought to wake up, and as soon as they get a job with the orchestra they should get busy and declare their intentions of becoming citizens.

Doctor Muck can do more injury to our country in the circles he moves than all of the poor enemy aliens who are forced to give up their positions and homes because they happen to live in a restricted zone created by the Government. The Government has other things to do than chaperon them around the country.

Regarding Mr. Kreisler, he has not been fiddling in these dear old United States for the last eighteen years, not because he loves us so, but for the reason that the American dollars roll quicker into his pockets than those of any other country. If they were more plentiful in the Fiji Islands he would soon kick the dust of this country off his feet and fiddle like dear life for the dear old cannibals, because they have the artistic temperament.

Mr. McCormack had the right idea. After traveling around the world for a half dozen years on concert tours, he no doubt found out this was the land of golden opportunities, and then immediately took out his first papers.

We are told that music is elevating, brings out the esthetic soul, etc., but it seems that our German and Austrian friends, who have so much of it, have taken an overdose from the way they are acting now. No doubt "kultur" covers it all.

CHARLES F. EISELE.

Camden, December 8

n AMERICAN

ress: New York City DEC 14 1

ENEMY ARTISTS CRITICIZED BY DAMROSCH

Symphony Conductor at Concert Attacks Those Who Disguise Their Nationality for Money, but Praises Kreisler's Stand

By MAX SMITH.

BOTH of New York's leading concert orchestras played in Carnegie Hall yesterday—the New York Symphony Society, Walter Damrosch, conductor, in the afternoon; the Philharmonic Society, Joseph Stransky, conductor, in the evening.

The programme of the former organization dove-tailed into that of last Sunday, with Miss Mabel Garrison once more as soloist. The numbers already heard were the recitative and aria, "Crudele! Ah, no! mio bene!" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and the Bacchanale from Saint-Saens's "Samson et Dalila." The American soprano gave as her second offering, however, the Queen of Night's fireworks from the first act of "Die Zauberfloete," instead of Zerbinetta's sky-rocketing music from Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos," and the principal symphonic selections this time were Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Edward Elgar's symphonic poem, "Falstaff."

In order to facilitate the understanding of the distinguished English composer's Shakespearean portraiture, Mr. Damrosch gave a brief exposition at the piano of the thematic material employed by him. But before entering into a discussion of the work he delivered an extempore address, in which he intimated strongly that not all "alien enemies" among musicians residing in this country had taken as noble a stand as Fritz Kreisler.

"I believe in internationalism in art," said Mr. Damrosch. "But I do not believe in internationalism among artists. They should share the responsibilities of their citizenship with others.

"I have no sympathy," the conductor continued, after the applause evoked by his first remarks had subsided, "for those artists who try to disguise their nationality for the sake of the American dollar. A shining example of one who does not is Fritz Kreisler. (Loud applause.) He was man enough and gentleman enough to withdraw from the concert stage when America had gone to war with his country. The American people are nothing if not chivalrous. He will not be the loser in the end."

The Philharmonic Society's programme embraced Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, No. 2, performed last week by the Boston Orchestra under Dr. Muck, and five excerpts from Wagner's music dramas—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and the third acts of "Tristan" and "Meistersinger," the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and the "Ride of the Valkyries" from "Die Walkuere."

Perhaps the management had fears that some persons might object to the performance of the German master's music. At any rate W. H. Humiston's programme notes

CHRONICLE

Address: New York City.

Date

Nervous Patriotism

MOST of the people who are making so noisy a demonstration just now against Dr. Muck and Mr. Kreisler have never in all probability lent a dollar or an ear to good music. Mr. Higginson, one of America's most honorable patriots, who in spite of his four score years has gone about the country urging preparation for the War and has devoted an ample fortune to the encouragement and upbuilding of a great orchestra for the benefit of his fellow countrymen, was satisfied with the deportment of his conductor; but a clamorous public opinion says that Karl Muck must go. Even Springfield, Massachusetts, always so restrained in its decorum, has spoken in strident tones. Mr. Kreisler, the world's greatest living violinist, must never again affront the patriotism of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Kreisler has given his word that accumulations of his earnings are being used for the assistance of needy artists and their families—artists in France, Italy and Russia, as well as in his native Austria. It is a pity that America is giving way to this hysteria. By all means let us hunt down the spies in our midst; but let us not waste our energy over destroying the one permanent bond of internationalism—the fellowship of art. Mr. Wilson has spoken a fine and inspiring word on this matter.

TELEGRAM

New York City DEC 1 - 1917

Metropolitan Solving Question of Collection of Opera Ticket War Tax

Persons Subscribing or Purchasing Seats Before Federal Levy Went Into Effect, to Whom Money was Refunded, Will Be Sent Bills for Re-Collection.

Subscribers to seats at the Metropolitan Opera House, to whom war tax payments have been refunded, but who by a new government ruling will have to pay the tax again, will not be held up at the door of the Opera House for the ten per cent tax. Instead bills will be sent to all those who procured seats before the war tax went into effect.

This statement has just been made by a person conversant with the affairs of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who declared the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the opera company's officials are now trying to determine the best way of straightening out the tangle caused by a reversal of the original order on the subject. Nearly $250,000 is said to be involved.

For the present all tickets for theatres, operas and concerts will be taxed regardless of when they were sold. A previous ruling of Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, had made all tickets purchased prior to November 1 exempt from taxation, but last Thursday the ruling was reversed.

The man who discussed the subject said:—

"While we understand that the ruling exempting subscribers from taxation has been reversed, subscribers will not be held up at the door for the tax when they come to the opera to-morrow night. If the tickets are taxable we will send bills to the subscribers for ten per cent of the value of their seats. This money was collected before the law went into effect, and was returned later when the tickets were held to be free from taxation. The Metropolitan Opera Company, I believe, will question the right of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the matter of the date from which the collection of the theatre tax should be operated."

It was stated that the Metropolitan still holds that the law went into effect on November 1.

Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District, has a different view. He said:—

"The report which appeared in the papers on last Friday was correct. The action is final, and beginning now there will be a tax on all admissions. It is not the intention of the department to inflict trouble upon patrons of opera or the drama. The opera house may collect in its own way, as returns to the government are made monthly."

A similar condition exists with the Philharmonic and Symphony societies and the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Felix Leifels, manager of the Philharmonic Society, said he had not been notified officially of the new ruling. He added:—

"It will be almost impossible to sort out the tickets of subscribers from those of purchasers of single admissions. We will admit all who have seats without requiring that they buy separate war tax tickets for each performance. We will, however, send a bill covering the tax to all subscribers notifying them of the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which makes us liable for the tax. We will pay the tax until the question is adjusted, so that no one will be inconvenienced at the door."

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

New York City.

The latest, and one hopes, the last chapter in the terrible disclosures regarding Dr Muck is that he is not a German subject and is therefore not an alien enemy. A few weeks ago the public learned that Dr Muck was not a Prussian, but a Bavarian. Now the public learns, on the authority of the Swiss embassy, that Dr Muck is not a German subject but a citizen of Switzerland. He was born in Bavaria, it is true, but his father moved to Switzerland, and Dr Muck himself, when he became a young man, further strengthened his Swiss citizenship by taking out papers. Another recent disclosure regarding this eminent musician, whom Boston will probably retain at the head of its symphony orchestra in spite of some silly public clamor, comes from the federal authorities themselves. They affirm that they "have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country." Compared with this statement, the aspersions of the Providence Journal will appear to have been made out of whole cloth.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa

New York City

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY BUBBUB.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—It seems to me that sentiment has run mad in America, to judge by the ridiculous attitude that many of our citizens are taking against music and musicians made in Germany. There is one thing in being patriotic, and quite another in being foolish. Of course, it is only fair to say that we have not had a war in this country for so many years, and we had hoped that we never would have again, so that, being forced into it, we have, in a measure, lost our heads. We ridicule Germany and her pretences at Kulture. Are we going to make the same mistake?

Several years ago, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was in need of a new director, they looked over the available material and found that Dr. Karl Muck most nearly represented their ideal, and the man who would carry out their ideals. He was prevailed upon to come to this country to conduct the Boston Orchestra. He did not force himself upon us, and therefore is entitled to fair treatment.

When the announcement was made that Dr. Muck was to direct the Boston Symphony, only words of praise were showered upon Mr. Higginson and others connected with that orchestra, for having secured such a great musician for America. He was applauded all over the country and in nowhere more heartily than in Philadelphia. Why this change of spirit? Simply because we are at war with Germany, are we willing to drive out of existence the greatest art organization in our country?

If Dr. Muck has done aught against us it is for the Federal authorities to handle him. That they have not done so would seem to me as proof that they do not look upon him as an alien enemy. Great orchestra leaders are a rarity, and instead of criticising Mr. Higginson we should have patience, hoping that everything will come out all right in the end.

I notice in another paper in this city that Ella Day Blair, who is known in musical circles here, has a scathing article against Dr. Muck, and only high praise for Fritz Kreisler. Why is there any difference?—Fritz Kreisler has been refused permission to play in many cities by a lot of petty, would-be patriots, and in consequence canceled his engagements. Miss Blair tries to shame Dr. Muck for not having done the same. It is an entirely different condition. Dr. Muck is merely at the head of an organization and under contract. Like Fritz Kreisler, he also has resigned, but Mr. Higginson, not being able, it is assumed ,to find some one to take his place, thus far has not accepted his resignation.

Does not Miss Blair know that by putting the Boston Symphony Orchestra out of business she is not only taking a livelihood from Dr. Muck and the small number of alien musicians in the orchestra, but also the opportunity to make a living out of the hands of fourscore good American musicians, who are members of the orchestra. Do persons of her type not consider the full side of such a misfortune? Music will go on forever, and the war will be of short duration. Are we to drive out of existence the only one great American orchestra, and throw art in this country back several decades, merely because certain people have suddenly acquired a patriotic mania, which, like all other mania, should place those acquiring them out of harm's way.

ERNEST D. SOUTHARD.

Philadelphia, December 7, 1917.

HERALD

ss: New York City

$10,000 RAISED FOR HALIFAX SUFFERERS

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor; Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, contributing their services, gave a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund to-day. Ten thousand dollars was raised, all of which was given to the fund.

From RLJ

Address

Date

FOR MUSICAL AMERICANISM

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger:

Sir—In reference to your editorial, "Must Boston Band Be Scrapped?" as a general thing, your patriotism is at fever heat, but why make fish of one and fowl of the other? Doctor Muck and his twenty-three musicians are alien enemies and must be treated as such. If these members join for life and it is their career, then they ought to wake up, and as soon as they get a job with the orchestra they should get busy and declare their intentions of becoming citizens.

Doctor Muck can do more injury to our country in the circles he moves than all of the poor enemy aliens who are forced to give up their positions and homes because they happen to live in a restricted zone created by the Government. The Government has other things to do than chaperon them around the country.

Regarding Mr. Kreisler, he has not been fiddling in these dear old United States for the last eighteen years, not because he loves us so, but for the reason that the American dollars roll quicker into his pockets than those of any other country. If they were more plentiful in the Fiji Islands he would soon kick the dust of this country off his feet and fiddle like dear life for the dear old cannibals, because they have the artistic temperament.

Mr. McCormack had the right idea. After traveling around the world for a half dozen years on concert tours, he no doubt found out this was the land of golden opportunities, and then immediately took out his first papers.

We are told that music is elevating, brings out the esthetic soul, etc., but it seems that our German and Austrian friends, who have so much of it, have taken an overdose from the way they are acting now. No doubt "kultur" covers it all.

CHARLES F. EISELE.

Camden, December 8

n AMERICAN

ress: New York City.

ENEMY ARTISTS CRITICIZED BY DAMROSCH

Symphony Conductor at Concert Attacks Those Who Disguise Their Nationality for Money, but Praises Kreisler's Stand

By MAX SMITH.

BOTH of New York's leading concert orchestras played in Carnegie Hall yesterday—the New York Symphony Society, Walter Damrosch, conductor, in the afternoon; the Philharmonic Society, Joseph Stransky, conductor, in the evening.

The programme of the former organization dove-tailed into that of last Sunday, with Miss Mabel Garrison once more as soloist. The numbers already heard were the recitative and aria, "Crudele! Ah, no! mio bene!" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and the Bacchanale from Saint-Saens's "Samson et Dalila." The American soprano gave as her second offering, however, the Queen of Night's fireworks from the first act of "Die Zauberfloete," instead of Zerbinetta's sky-rocketing music from Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos," and the principal symphonic selections this time were Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Edward Elgar's symphonic poem, "Falstaff."

In order to facilitate the understanding of the distinguished English composer's Shakespearean portraiture, Mr. Damrosch gave a brief exposition at the piano of the thematic material employed by him. But before entering into a discussion of the work he delivered an extempore address, in which he intimated strongly that not all "alien enemies" among musicians residing in this country had taken as noble a stand as Fritz Kreisler.

"I believe in internationalism in art," said Mr. Damrosch. "But I do not believe in internationalism among artists. They should share the responsibilities of their citizenship with others.

"I have no sympathy," the conductor continued, after the applause evoked by his first remarks had subsided, "for those artists who try to disguise their nationality for the sake of the American dollar. A shining example of one who does not is Fritz Kreisler. (Loud applause.) He was man enough and gentleman enough to withdraw from the concert stage when America had gone to war with his country. The American people are nothing if not chivalrous. He will not be the loser in the end."

The Philharmonic Society's programme embraced Rachmaninoff's symphony in E minor, No. 2, performed last week by the Boston Orchestra under Dr. Muck, and five excerpts from Wagner's music dramas—the preludes to "Lohengrin" and the third acts of "Tristan" and "Meistersinger," the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and the "Ride of the Valkyries" from "Die Walkuere."

Perhaps the management had fears that some persons might object to the performance of the German master's music. At any rate W. H. Humiston's programme notes

HERALD
New York City

Will Send Bills for War Taxes to Subscribers

With about a quarter of a million dollars in the balance the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Metropolitan Opera Company are trying to straighten out the problem of the war taxes on seats sold before the war tax went into effect.

For the present all tickets for theatres, operas and concerts will be taxed regardless of when they were sold. A previous ruling of Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, had made all tickets purchased prior to November 1 exempt from taxation, but on last Thursday the ruling was reversed.

A man conversant with things at the Metropolitan Opera House last night said:—

"While we understand that the ruling exempting subscribers from taxation has been reversed, subscribers will not be held up at the door for the tax when they come to the opera to-morrow night. If the tickets are taxable we will send bills to the subscribers for ten per cent of the value of their seats. This money was collected before the law went into effect, and was returned later when the tickets were held to be free from taxation. The Metropolitan Opera Company, I believe, will question the right of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the matter of the date from which the collection of the theatre tax should be operated."

It was stated that the Metropolitan still holds that the law went into effect on November 1.

Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District, has a different view. He said:—

"The report which appeared in the HERALD on last Friday was correct. The action is final, and beginning now there will be a tax on all admissions. It is not the intention of the department to inflict trouble upon patrons of opera or the drama. The opera house may collect in its own way, as returns to the government are made monthly."

A similar condition exists with the Philharmonic and Symphony societies and the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Felix Leifels, manager of the Philharmonic Society, said last night that he had not been notified officially of the new ruling. He added:—

"It will be almost impossible to sort out the tickets of subscribers from those of purchasers of single admissions. We will admit all who have seats without requiring that they buy separate war tax tickets for each performance. We will, however, send a bill covering the tax to all subscribers notifying them of the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which makes us liable for the tax. We will pay the tax until the question is adjusted, so that no one will be inconvenienced at the door."

Globe
12/29/17

MELBA IN FINE VOICE AS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Globe — 12/29

The orchestra concert yesterday was a brilliant one. Dr Muck surpassed himself in Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony. He read Brahms' tragic overture as a noble piece of dramatic literature. The sad song of "The Swan of Tuonela" had superlative, haunting qualities. Added to these, Mme Melba sang as she has not sung within recent years.

In his symphony of "fate," particularly in the first movement, also in the last, Tschaikowsky is the Slav, morbid, passionate, at times banal, but an individual. It is rare to hear as yesterday the barbaric fury, gorgeous, untrammeled, of the final movement set off in appropriate contrast with the Latin graces, the limpidity and folk snatches of the two middle movements, which are of Italy and autobiographical of the composer's sojourns. The scherzo, of which he wrote with eager enthusiasm from Venice to the friend and patroness whom he had not seen, the widow von Meck, to whom the symphony was dedicated, yesterday won a tribute of applause, deferring the last movement until Dr Muck had brought the string players to their feet.

Mme Melba kept in the recitative and aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo" and in the familiar "Vol, che sapete," the fine line of a stradivarius. It is not necessary to inquire into her age. The dictionaries gave it as that of Mme Nordica within a few months. It is enough to pay tribute to this remarkable woman, who first took time to build the voice upon native principles and has adhered to them during the years. While others shrieked and shouted, she has not forgotten the secrets of vocal beauty and therefore of endurance. The purity of her singing of Mozart yesterday becomes a reasonable miracle. Lia's air from Debussy's "Prodigal Son" was a second number.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
NOTICE

The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for this evening at the Academy of Music. It will therefore not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Heppe's.

The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday, definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

PROOF FROM
"THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS" and
"THE EVENING TELEGRAPH"
SUNDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1917.

TRANSCRIPT
12/24/1917

Because of the restrictions laid by the Government upon the movements of German and Austrian subjects in this country in war time the management of the Symphony Orchestra has cancelled the concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago and Detroit which it had arranged for the week of Jan. 28. Justly it decided that to give them with less than the full forces of the band was not to keep faith with an expectant public.

Traveler
12/29/17

Mme. Melba Charms Audience at Symphony

Traveler 12/29

Mme. Melba's appearance as soloist at the weekly symphony concert proved quite a magnet, drawing a good sized audience. The great singer may not be any longer in her prime, but still can give many an ambitious singer several points regarding phrasing and interpretation. There are few who can equal her today in her best points. There are still some wonderful places in her voice and her exceptional artistry goes a long way toward minimizing the weaker points.

Mme. Melba sang the aria, "Zeffiretti Lusinghiere" from Mozart's "Idomeneo"; "Voi che Sapete," from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," and Lia's air from Debussy's "Prodigal Son."

The orchestral pieces were these: Brahms, "Tragic" overture; Sibelius, "The Swan of Tuonela"; Tschaikowsky, Sympony No. 4, F minor.

Dr. Muck and his players won well deserved recognition of the artistry displayed throughout the concert.

The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Shumann, overture to "Genoveva"; Dohnayni, concert-piece for orchestra with violoncello obligato (Mr. Warnke, violoncellist); Handel, concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, op. 6; Ropartz, Symphony No. 4, C bajor; Ravel, "Daybreak, Pantomime, General Dance" from the ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

Monitor
- Dec. 27, 1917 -

ORCHESTRA MAY GO TO AYER

The manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been requested by those in charge of musical arrangements at Camp Devens to send men to Ayer, Mass., next Sunday to give a concert in the camp auditorium, using such a number of his artists as can be accommodated on the stage.

It is not certain that the players will be disengaged from regular duties at the time indicated, inasmuch as next week is the time when they go on their monthly tour. It is understood, nevertheless, that on some Sunday before long a selected group of Symphony musicians will visit the camp.

Post
12/29/17

MELBA THE SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Brahms, Tschaikowsky and Sibelius Pieces Played

Post 12/29

BY OLIN DOWNES

Mme. Melba was soloist at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral compositions were Brahms' tragic overture, Silbelius' "Swan of Tuonela" and Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony.

Mme. Melba sang the aria "Zeffiretti Lusinghieri" from Mozart's "Idomeneo," the "Voi che Sapete" from "Nozze di Fiagro" and the recitative and aria of Lia from Debussy's cantata "L'Enfant Prodigue."

MELBA'S ADMIRABLE ART

She sang with compelling art, chiselling her phrases like a master sculptor, sustaining a melodic line with a control of her vocal means that was thrice admirable; giving a dramatic interpretati by her of text as well as music, and bestowing on Debussy's air a significance which it seldom has, since the Debussy of the canata, "L'Enfant Prodigue" is the Debussy of Massenet, and not of the "L'Apres midi d' un Faun" or the "Iberia" for orchestra. The occasional physical shortcoming in Mme. Melba's performance was more than made up for by the finish, intelligence and vitality of her art.

Brahm's overture has the impersonal, Greek spirit which he more than once achieved in his music. This is the more astonishing, when one recalls the ultra-romanticism that reigned in Brahm's time, the modern and exotic quality of Wagner, the glowing, subjective emotion that was then carrying composers farther and farther from the classic Greek ideal. It was something to so stem the torrent and quietly attain mastery in one's own chosen field.

There were very sympathetic performances of the music of Sibelius and Tschaikowsky. The mystical spirit of "The Swan of Tuonela," the dark and mysterious color cast about the melody played by the English horn, are essentially of the north, and the mood haunts one long after the music has sounded. As for Tschaikowsky's symphony, it seems made of material often cheap and even vulgar, yet it keeps its place in the repertory year after year. It must, then, say something. It does. The best audience for this symphony might be a crowd of moujiks thoroughly saturated with vodka, drunken and in Russian despair. Yet there is a broader note in the work. There is a message heard and felt by everybody, whether born in the Caucasus or Kalamazoo. First of all Tschaikowsky was a human being, and then a composer, even at his poorest of enormous gifts. Yesterday Dr. Muck helped this supremely subjective composer to give reign to his emotions.

Record
Dec. 15, 1917

JOHN McCORMACK SYMPHONY SOLOIST

John McCormack, the tenor, is the soloist at the Symphony concerts this week. He sang at the first yesterday "Di ad Irene" from Handel's "Atlantis" and the recitative, "Jehovah, Oh Hear Me," and the air, "Oh My Heart Is Sore Within Me," from Beethoven's oratorio, "Christ on the Mount of Olives."

Mr. McCormack yesterday made even a happier impression than when he first appeared with the Symphony last year. His delightful diction, he sang in English, his breath control, his mastery of technical difficulties and his keen appreciation of the import of text, were those of the real artist.

The orchestra played Mozart's flat symphony fragments of Ravel's ballet, "Daphnie and Chloe," and Belakireff's "Thamar."

Transcript
12/29/17

MUCK NOT TO LEAD CAMP DEVENS CONCERT

NO ALIEN ENEMIES IN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO GO TO AYER TOMORROW

Forty-six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will go to Camp Devens tomorrow afternoon to give the concert under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Muck will not conduct on this occasion and "alien enemies" who are members of the orchestra will not go to Ayer. The conductor will be Mr. Clement Lenom, who in years past has been one of the best-liked conductors of the "Pop" Concerts. It was originally intended that this concert should be given on Dec. 16, but the Halifax Concert intervened and so it was postponed until tomorrow. The programme which has been arranged is one of popular character.

It is as follows:

Star Spangled Banner
Battle Hymn of the Republic
1—Overture, "Zampa".....Herold
2—Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
(a) Morning Mood
(b) Anitra's Dance
(c) In the Hall of the Mountain King
3—Solo for trumpet, "The Rosary".....Nevin
4—March, "Damnation of Faust".....Berlioz
5—Grand Fantasia, "Aida".....Verdi
6—Adagietto and Farandole, from the Suite, "L'Arlésienne".....Bizet
7—Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 31, 1917

WEEK-END CONCERTS

An Ancient Delusion About the Symphony Orchestra Once More Refuted—Mr. McCormack at the Top of His Powers—Programmes in Prospect

From 12/31

FROM the years in the nineties of the nineteenth century, when Mr. Gericke as conductor was refining the Symphony Orchestra into sensibility to quality of tone, to euphony, to finesse of accent and shading, dates the tradition—or better the superstition—that it is incapable of power. To this day the delusion persists especially in cities, like New York, where there are rival orchestras and musical partisanship runs high, or like Chicago whither the band in present estate seldom journeys. The audience in these instances may have heard by unmistakable evidence of ear, might of tone, fire of progress, clash of rhythm, magnitude of climax. Mr. Paur and Mr. Fiedler often sought and gained these qualities, though, sometimes at the cost of others as essential; Dr. Muck has maintained all alike in equal balance. Yet still do hearers depart repeating the ancient shibboleth: "The Boston Orchestra is over-refined. It sacrifices everything to finesse."

Those that harbor this nearly imperishable delusion should have heard conductor and band as on Saturday evening they played Brahms's "Tragic Overture" and Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor, here in Boston, and as they will play them next week in New York. For stark power of tone, it would be hard to surpass the epic force that they give to the beginning and the end of Brahms's impassioned music. raining the blows of fate upon the troubled world of the overture, summoning for close a very catastrophe upon hero and tumult. Again, those that deny fire and wildness to Dr. Muck and the orchestra should have heard them sweep through the rushes and the languors of the first movement of Chaikovsky's symphony, heating his fervors, roughening his harshness, speeding his frenzies and then, as vividly, lapping the music in the contrast of soft sensuousness. Again, in the finale, the leaping rhythms might hardly have beat higher; the transitions sprung with a fiercer energy. There was not merely the mass of tone that a doubled wind-choir and vehement "fortes" and "fortissimi" may swell, there were the fire of march and the flame and force of climax that only enkindled imagination and a veritable passion for full transmission of the spirit no less than the sound of the music, may bring. After such performances to deny power to conductor and orchestra—power grave and grim as with the overture and power wild and whirling as with the symphony—is merely to shut ears and lock them with an absurd tradition.

HERALD
New York City

Will Send Bills for War Taxes to Subscribers

With about a quarter of a million dollars in the balance the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Metropolitan Opera Company are trying to straighten out the problem of the war taxes on seats sold before the war tax went into effect.

For the present all tickets for theatres, operas and concerts will be taxed regardless of when they were sold. A previous ruling of Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, had made all tickets purchased prior to November 1 exempt from taxation, but on last Thursday the ruling was reversed.

A man conversant with things at the Metropolitan Opera House last night said:—

"While we understand that the ruling exempting subscribers from taxation has been reversed, subscribers will not be held up at the door for the tax when they come to the opera to-morrow night. If the tickets are taxable we will send bills to the subscribers for ten per cent of the value of their seats. This money was collected before the law went into effect, and was returned later when the tickets were held to be free from taxation. The Metropolitan Opera Company, I believe, will question the right of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the matter of the date from which the collection of the theatre tax should be operated."

It was stated that the Metropolitan still holds that the law went into effect on November 1.

Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District, has a different view. He said:—

"The report which appeared in the HERALD on last Friday was correct. The action is final, and beginning now there will be a tax on all admissions. It is not the intention of the department to inflict trouble upon patrons of opera or the drama. The opera house may collect in its own way, as returns to the government are made monthly."

A similar condition exists with the Philharmonic and Symphony societies and the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Felix Leifels, manager of the Philharmonic Society, said last night that he had not been notified officially of the new ruling. He added:—

"It will be almost impossible to sort out the tickets of subscribers from those of purchasers of single admissions. We will admit all who have seats without requiring that they buy separate war tax tickets for each performance. We will, however, send a bill covering the tax to all subscribers notifying them of the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which makes us liable for the tax. We will pay the tax until the question is adjusted, so that no one will be inconvenienced at the door."

Globe
12/29/17

MELBA IN FINE VOICE AS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Globe — 12/29

The orchestra concert yesterday was a brilliant one. Dr Muck surpassed himself in Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony. He read Brahms' tragic overture as a noble piece of dramatic literature. The sad song of "The Swan of Tuonela" had superlative, haunting qualities. Added to these, Mme Melba sang as she has not sung within recent years.

In his symphony of "fate," particularly in the first movement, also in the last, Tschaikowsky is the Slav, morbid, passionate, at times banal, but an individual. It is rare to hear as yesterday the barbaric fury, gorgeous, untrammeled, of the final movement set off in appropriate contrast with the Latin graces, the limpidity and folk snatches of the two middle movements, which are of Italy and autobiographical of the composer's sojourns. The scherzo, of which he wrote with eager enthusiasm from Venice to the friend and patroness whom he had not seen, the widow von Meck, to whom the symphony was dedicated, yesterday won a tribute of applause, deferring the last movement until Dr Muck had brought the string players to their feet.

Mme Melba kept in the recitative and aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo" and in the familiar "Voi, che sapete," the fine line of a stradivarius. It is not necessary to inquire into her age. The dictionaries gave it as that of Mme Nordica within a few months. It is enough to pay tribute to this remarkable woman, who first took time to build the voice upon native principles and has adhered to them during the years. While others shrieked and shouted, she has not forgotten the secrets of vocal beauty and therefore of endurance. The purity of her singing of Mozart yesterday becomes a reasonable miracle. Lia's air from Debussy's "Prodigal Son" was a second number.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
NOTICE

The regulations concerning aliens which have recently been promulgated by the Department of Justice at Washington affect twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and make it impossible properly to give the concert which has been announced for this evening at the Academy of Music. It will therefore not be given. The price of the tickets for this concert will be refunded at Heppe's.

The management regrets that this notice could not have been published earlier, but owing to the holiday, definite information concerning the effect of the regulation was not received until late Saturday afternoon.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

PROOF FROM
"THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS" and
"THE EVENING TELEGRAPH"
SUNDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1917.

TRANSCRIPT
12/24/1917

Because of the restrictions laid by the Government upon the movements of German and Austrian subjects in this country in war time the management of the Symphony Orchestra has cancelled the concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago and Detroit which it had arranged for the week of Jan. 28. Justly it decided that to give them with less than the full forces of the band was not to keep faith with an expectant public.

Traveler
12/29/17

Mme. Melba Charms Audience at Symphony

12/29

Mme. Melba's appearance as soloist at the weekly symphony concert proved quite a magnet, drawing a good sized audience. The great singer may not be any longer in her prime, but still can give many an ambitious singer several points regarding phrasing and interpretation. There are few who can equal her today in her best points. There are still some wonderful places in her voice and her exceptional artistry goes a long way toward minimizing the weaker points.

Mme. Melba sang the aria, "Zeffiretti Lusinghiere" from Mozart's "Idomeneo"; "Voi che Sapete," from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," and Lia's air from Debussy's "Prodigal Son."

The orchestral pieces were these: Brahms, "Tragic" overture; Sibelius, "The Swan of Tuonela"; Tschaikowsky, Sympony No. 4, F minor.

Dr. Muck and his players won well deserved recognition of the artistry displayed throughout the concert.

The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Shumann, overture to "Genoveva"; Dohnayni, concert-piece for orchestra with violoncello obligato (Mr. Warnke, violoncellist); Handel, concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, op. 6; Ropartz, Symphony No. 4, C bajor; Ravel, "Daybreak, Pantomime, General Dance" from the ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

Monitor
Dec. 27, 1917

ORCHESTRA MAY GO TO AYER

The manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been requested by those in charge of musical arrangements at Camp Devens to send men to Ayer, Mass., next Sunday to give a concert in the camp auditorium, using such a number of his artists as can be accommodated on the stage.

It is not certain that the players will be disengaged from regular duties at the time indicated, inasmuch as next week is the time when they go on their monthly tour. It is understood, nevertheless, that on some Sunday before long a selected group of Symphony musicians will visit the camp.

Post
12/29/17

MELBA THE SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Brahms, Tschaikowsky and Sibelius Pieces Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

Mme. Melba was soloist at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The orchestral compositions were Brahms' tragic overture, Silbelius' "Swan of Tuonela" and Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony.

Mme. Melba sang the aria "Zeffiretti Lusinghieri" from Mozart's "Idomeneo," the "Voi che Sapete" from "Nozze di Fiagro" and the recitative and aria of Lia from Debussy's cantata "L'Enfant Prodigue."

MELBA'S ADMIRABLE ART

She sang with compelling art, chiselling her phrases like a master sculptor, sustaining a melodic line with a control of her vocal means that was thrice admirable; giving a dramatic interpretati by her of text as well as music, and bestowing on Debussy's air a significance which it seldom has, since the Debussy of the canata, "L'Enfant Prodigue" is the Debussy of Massenet, and not of the "L'Apres midi d' un Faun" or the "Iberia" for orchestra. The occasional physical shortcoming in Mme. Melba's performance was more than made up for by the finish, intelligence and vitality of her art.

Brahm's overture has the impersonal, Greek spirit which he more than once achieved in his music. This is the more astonishing, when one recalls the ultra-romanticism that reigned in Brahm's time, the modern and exotic quality of Wagner, the glowing, subjective emotion that was then carrying composers farther and farther from the classic Greek ideal. It was something to so stem the torrent and quietly attain mastery in one's own chosen field.

There were very sympathetic performances of the music of Sibelius and Tschaikowsky. The mystical spirit of "The Swan of Tuonela," the dark and mysterious color cast about the melody played by the English horn, are essentially of the north, and the mood haunts one long after the music has sounded. As for Tschaikowsky's symphony, it seems made of material often cheap and even vulgar, yet it keeps its place in the repertory year after year. It must, then, say something. It does. The best audience for this symphony might be a crowd of moujiks thoroughly saturated with vodka, drunken and in Russian despair. Yet there is a broader note in the work. There is a message heard and felt by everybody, whether born in the Caucasus or Kalamazoo. First of all Tschaikowsky was a human being, and then a composer, even at his poorest of enormous gifts. Yesterday Dr. Muck helped this supremely subjective composer to give reign to his emotions.

Record
Dec. 15, 1917

JOHN McCORMACK SYMPHONY SOLOIST

John McCormack, the tenor, is the soloist at the Symphony concerts this week. He sang at the first yesterday "Di ad Irene" from Handel's "Atlantis" and the recitative, "Jehovah, Oh Hear Me," and the air, "Oh My Heart Is Sore Within Me," from Beethoven's oratorio, "Christ on the Mount of Olives."

Mr. McCormack yesterday made even a happier impression than when he first appeared with the Symphony last year. His delightful diction, he sang in English, his breath control, his mastery of technical difficulties and his keen appreciation of the import of text, were those of the real artist.

The orchestra played Mozart's flat symphony fragments of Ravel's ballet, "Daphnie and Chloe," and Belakireff's "Thamar."

Transcript
12/29/17

96

MUCK NOT TO LEAD CAMP DEVENS CONCERT

NO ALIEN ENEMIES IN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO GO TO AYER TOMORROW

Forty-six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will go to Camp Devens tomorrow afternoon to give the concert under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Muck will not conduct on this occasion and "alien enemies" who are members of the orchestra will not go to Ayer. The conductor will be Mr. Clement Lenom, who in years past has been one of the best-liked conductors of the "Pop" Concerts. It was originally intended that this concert should be given on Dec. 16, but the Halifax Concert intervened and so it was postponed until tomorrow. The programme which has been arranged is one of popular character.

It is as follows:

Star Spangled Banner
Battle Hymn of the Republic
1—Overture, "Zampa".....Herold
2—Suite, "Peer Gynt".....Grieg
(a) Morning Mood
(b) Anitra's Dance
(c) In the Hall of the Mountain King
3—Solo for trumpet, "The Rosary".....Nevin
4—March, "Damnation of Faust".....Berlioz
5—Grand Fantasia, "Aida".....Verdi
6—Adagietto and Farandole, from the Suite, "L'Arlésienne".....Bizet
7—Overture, "William Tell".....Rossini

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 31, 1917

WEEK-END CONCERTS

An Ancient Delusion About the Symphony Orchestra Once More Refuted—Mr. McCormack at the Top of His Powers—Programmes in Prospect

12/31

FROM the years in the nineties of the nineteenth century, when Mr. Gericke as conductor was refining the Symphony Orchestra into sensibility to quality of tone, to euphony, to finesse of accent and shading, dates the tradition—or better the superstition—that it is incapable of power. To this day the delusion persists especially in cities, like New York, where there are rival orchestras and musical partisanship runs high, or like Chicago whither the band in present estate seldom journeys. The audience in these instances may have heard by unmistakable evidence of ear, might of tone, fire of progress, clash of rhythm, magnitude of climax. Mr. Paur and Mr. Fiedler often sought and gained these qualities, though, sometimes at the cost of others as essential; Dr. Muck has maintained all alike in equal balance. Yet still do hearers depart repeating the ancient shibboleth: "The Boston Orchestra is over-refined. It sacrifices everything to finesse."

Those that harbor this nearly imperishable delusion should have heard conductor and band as on Saturday evening they played Brahms's "Tragic Overture" and Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor, here in Boston, and as they will play them next week in New York. For stark power of tone, it would be hard to surpass the epic force that they give to the beginning and the end of Brahms's impassioned music raining the blows of fate upon the troubled world of the overture, summoning for close a very catastrophe upon hero and tumult. Again, those that deny fire and wildness to Dr. Muck and the orchestra should have heard them sweep through the rushes and the languors of the first movement of Chaikovsky's symphony, heating his fervors, roughening his harshness, speeding his frenzies and then, as vividly, lapping the music in the contrast of soft sensuousness. Again, in the finale, the leaping rhythms might hardly have beat higher; the transitions sprung with a fiercer energy. There was not merely the mass of tone that a doubled wind-choir and vehement "fortes" and "fortissimi" may swell, there were the fire of march and the flame and force of climax that only enkindled imagination and a veritable passion for full transmission of the spirit no less than the sound of the music, may bring. After such performances to deny power to conductor and orchestra—power grave and grim as with the overture and power wild and whirling as with the symphony—is merely to shut ears and lock them with an absurd tradition.

191

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 15, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

VIVID MUSIC IN THRILLING PERFORMANCE

12/15

Conductor and Orchestra Outstrip Themselves—Even a "Star-Spangled Banner" Glorified—The Perfections of Mozart in a Symphony, the Grim Concentration of Balakirev in "Thamar," and the Beauty and Power of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" — Mr. McCormack's Singing in Full Complement to the Rest

TO begin at the very beginning of the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon, how many in the audience, to which the weekly repetition of "The Star Spangled Banner" has already become routine, note how well Dr. Muck and the orchestra now play the hymn? According to his custom with whatever music he undertakes, the conductor has not spared pains upon performance. He has emended the orchestral version of the piece to the exclusion of all extraneous ornament; he gives the melody large, deep, songful voice; he points the rhythm so that the anthem moves amply, vigorously; he ends in truly upswelling climax. From the first measure to the last Dr. Muck and his men glamor the music with an eloquence and an exaltation by no means intrinsic. In the hearing of few has "The Star Spangled Banner" been played as it is now played at Symphony Hall. The contrast between the performance there and the fashion in which our "co-belligerents," the conductors of the Metropolitan Opera House, orchestras in theatres or bands at "patriotic" meetings rattle or skimp through the hymn speaks for itself. No wonder that once upon a time, President Roosevelt invited Dr. Muck to join a committee about to revise the anthem.

This same mingling in the conductor of the imagination that perceives and designs performance in the revealing and characteristic voice of the music, and of the executive faculties that then order the accomplishment shone—and in a far more exacting mirror—out of Mozart's symphony in E-flat. Precedent prescribes that this music of the eighteenth century, if played in the twentieth within a large hall and before a numerous audience, shall be played by an orchestra twice and thrice as many as the comparatively little bands for which the composer wrote it. Balance his amplified choirs as the conductor may, lighten his tone to the utmost of which the virtuosi of Symphony Hall are capable, tint his shadings with the most adroit of fingers, not a little of the figuration and arabesque will still sound more thickly, move more heavily than was Mozart's or Haydn's intent in composition or performance. The Mozartean pattern when it is lightest, as for example in the Minuet of yesterday; the Mozartean shimmer when it is most glinting as, again, in the Finale of this symphony in E-flat; the Mozartean shading when as in the Andante it is as the very tremors of fancy, inevitably under present conditions of performance lose a measure of lace-like and transparent quality. Once again, even though the resonance that ears of 1917 expect would be missing, it does seem worth while to try for once even in the acoustics, by no means ideal, of Symphony Hall, the performance of eighteenth-century music by a diminutive but expertly proportioned orchestra. After all did not Strauss's twenty-two instruments, eighteenth-century wise, sound the other day when in that same room Miss Garrison sang the ornate air from "Ariadne on Naxos?"

Within this reservation—doubtless one of those chimerical counsels of perfection which most of us like to nurse—the performance of Mozart's symphony was well-nigh flawless in imagination and execution. The graceful flow, the light beat of the Minuet was a superlative feat of tonal and technical eloquence. The limpid fleetness, the springy precision of the Finale—familiar qualities of conductor and orchestra with these ancient pieces—less pleasured the ear than yielded a new sensation as of the dancing and sporting of the music into the prescribed pattern upon the ear as leaves and flowers sometimes make pattern to the eye in the play of breeze and sunshine. Pattern, again, like all ancient music, like all music, indeed, until the great emancipation of Beethoven and the romantics began, were the slow introduction and the quicker Allegro beginning the symphony. But how rich and warm the sheer fertility in tonal invention that filled the design, and how glowing the tonal beauty in which the mingled virtuosity and verve of the orchestra imparted it. The Andante is music of another quality—the quality that set Mozart above all the composers of his time and manner. By intuition and practice he wove his pattern almost as though it were second nature, while he shot it through with the wistful beauty of melody, the tender musing upon modulation and ornament that make this instrumental song the melancholy of music incarnate. As Virgil wrote "the tears of things," so here Mozart put to everlasting music-paper the tears of tones.

Akin to this perfection of Dr. Muck and the orchestra in the performance of the symphony was Mr. McCormack's felicity in the designing, the imagining and the accomplishment of his song. From the neglected treasure-house of Händel's half-forgotten operas the tenor had resurrected an air in "Atalanta" and from Beethoven's oratorio of the Mount of Olives nearly as unknown an air for Jesus. The first piece—a lover's plaint to insignificant verse, whether in the original Italian or in the English which Mr. McCormack used—teems with the method and the ornaments of eighteenth century song—repetitions, roulades, "shakes" and nearly all the rest; while sustaining them and keeping them in motion are serenely flowing periods of broad melody. Scarcely a tenor of opera house, or concert-hall except Mr. McCormack, is now capable of this florid song—alike in the ease and sparkle of the decorative measures, the deftness with which he makes them ripple upon the main current of melody, the smooth spinning of transitions and modulations, the maintenance of the opulent flow of the whole music. Only a slight nasality here and there marred his tones; while always they mingled the poised eloquence and elegance, the mastery of music, method and the singer's self—the ideals of eighteenth-century song. In it Mr. McCormack, studious still and now in the flower of his powers, recalls a subtle virtuosity believed to have vanished from the earth.

The air of Jesus gave the tenor different opportunity. Long, largely phrased recitative of impassioned and mounting entreaty, between the periods of which Beethoven's orchestra makes not a few dramatic strokes, precedes a soliloquy of woe and fear that in intensity of voice falls little short of some more celebrated and familiar passages in "Fidelio." Both in the declamation and in the sustained song, Mr. McCormack was dramatic singer in a degree that he has hardly disclosed hitherto in Boston. His tones were his means to project upon his hearers the graphic power of Beethoven's music and his own puissant response to it in the voice alike of entreaty and of agony. Give Mr. McCormack the impetus of such a music and he can evoke passion—and the more surely because therein he uses his voice and his artistry only the more discriminatingly, expertly, masterfully. Seldom nowadays do the distinctions of florid and of dramatic song and the vocal wisdom and skill which are the means to both meet in a single singer as they met on Friday in Mr. McCormack. Idol of the popular audience, if you will, but on the way, also, to be idol of the connoisseurs of song.

So was the way cleared for what seemed the two pieces of ballet music upon the programme. True, Balakirev wrote his tone-poem of "Thamar," with never a thought that a quarter of a century later other Russians would mime and dance to it. In those that admire the music, admiration has already risen into an irascible devotion. If the piece fails to impress others as it impressed them, they will have it that the performance is at fault. Clearly, yesterday, Dr. Muck and the orchestra had ripened their original version of "Thamar" first heard a year ago. The prologue that sets the scene sounded more grim and ominous; the epilogue that ends the legend more sinister and fateful. The dances and revelry between moved with more tonal freedom, rhythmic elasticity and sensual bite. More vivid were the sharp-edged foreboding harmonic strokes that once and again cut balefully through them. By all the tests of memory Dr. Muck's version of the tone-poem falls hardly a whit short of Mr. Monteux's, for example, in graphic and penetrating eloquence. Yet still the impression prevails that the besetting dryness of Balakirev, theorist, propagandist, apostle, rather than imaginative and eloquent composer haunts the music.

The prologue does work the illusion of grim, gray, sombre and boding solitude and with no little reflective skill in the delineative manipulation of tones. The epilogue conveys and concentrates with like skill a malignant, a dismal fate. Steely vivid the music begins; in death and bane, as the old ballads put it, the music ends But between, in spite of all the impinging folk-melodies and harmonies that Balakirev discovered or imagined out of the Caucasus is only a music of a willed wantonness, a meditated sensuality, a contrived foreboding. It will not rise into vital image from the engraved page or even from such a performance as Dr. Muck and the orchestra may give it in the concert hall. It needs to do so, Bakst's tower of flaming reds; Mr. Bolm to mime the fated, frenzied wayfarer; Miss Karsavina for the insatiate, sinister, tricking queen, the exotic spectacle, the wiling and tingling dances of the Russians. With them remembered, long pages of "Thamar" in the concert-room or the library are but mute.

In sharp contrast, Ravel's music of "Daphnis and Chloe," written for the stage with constant thought of pictorial background, play of lights, dresses and other scenic accessories, mimed action and narrative or decorative dance, lost little in the "Symphonic Fragments" played for the first time in a Bostonian (and probably an American) concert-room. Those that know the ballet in the theatre—the Russians, unfortunately did not venture it in the United States—could hardly have felt the music depleted unless it was in the miming of the pursuit of Syrinx by Pan. Yet even there the music held its own in nervous and sinuous progress, in fleeting, amorous suggestion, in melancholy whisper of old, forgotten, far-off things when the present and ardent loves of swain and shepherdess creep within it, flood and hush it. Enough has already been said in this place of Ravel's mastery of his means—of his fertility of matter and method in the interweaving of motives, of his inexhaustible and adroit invention of harmonic background and sggestion of his command of old capacities and his divination of new, not only in the choirs, but in the single instruments of his orchestra. Enough also has been written of the unique blending throughout the ballet, of so to say, symphonic sense of music as such and scenic sense of music primarily designed for the theatre. To the students of music from the printed page "in their closets" as well as from the impressions of stage and concert-hall may be left to determine the springs of the technical and tonal inventions, imagination and resource that fill the ballet. At the end of their inquiries, the fountain thereof will still remain the genius and the cultivation, at once musical and poetical of Maurice Ravel.

Moreover, these rare possessions and distinctions would be unavailing did they not impress and illude the answering imagination, vision and emotion of listening men. Dull-eared and dull-fancied, indeed, was he in the audience of yesterday who did not feel the beauty, the imagery, the illusion of the mysterious shiverings, the mounting tremors, the brightening tonal colors, the quickening rhythms in which the day dawns and life stirs anew in Ravel's music. Not merely his birds, his shepherds but a whole quivering and gladdening world piped in his tones the morning miracle of renewed life and light. And then the instrumental song that in deepening, broadening, more and more glowing voice sings the ecstasy of the lovers. The sweep, the passion, the climax of the music is of Wagnerian exaltation. So may the poetry of tones transfigure the amours even of shepherd folk. Next to open way for fancy, the music thins that with the skill, the elegance, the piquancy and the subtlety of Ravel it may mirror the pursuit of Pan, amorous but regretful god, upon the nymph, Syrinx, whom, evasive, he transformed into reeds to whisper his song of disillusion. But again, the triumphant melody of the lovers in presence and desire, who did but so do him honor; and out of it, through leading, pricking figures, the dance, which is as a shower of crackling timbres, of flashing harmonies, of ever-renewed and sharply beating rhythms.

A kaleidoscopic music, if ever man wrote it, yet a music that perpetually springs from itself; a prismatic music in which each flashing color of harmony or timbre falls on the instant into jewelled place; music that marvels of rhythm whip into sharper and more vivid frenzies, changeable as the moment, yet insistent as time itself; music that moves in sweeps of dynamic power as the music of the lovers moved in as deep and glowing periods of beauty. And through it all the dart of a sudden detail that stings to fresh pace the listening imagination. The performance, with conductor and orchestra fired as they have hardly been this autumn, matched the music. An audience, lifted at the end from illusion to reward, applauded a masterpiece—even of genius.

H. T. P.

GLOBE. DEC. 16, 1917.

Halifax Concert Today in Symphony Hall

A most unusual concert, having been prompted by an unusual and tragic event, will occur this afternoon at 3:30, when Mme Melba and Mr Kreisler, both giving their services, will appear as soloists on a program at Symphony Hall, which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr Muck conducting, will share for the relief of the Halifax sufferers. All seats were sold before the end of the first day of the announcement and standing room alone remained.

The program will be as follows: Overture, "In Memoriam," Sir Arthur Sullivan; Mendelssohn's concerto for violin and orchestra in E minor; Phidyle song with orchestra, Duparc; Schererzade, symphonic suite, Rimsky-Korsakoff; songs with piano: "Le Tempo des Lilacs" and "Les Papillons," Chausson; "Les Anges Pleurent," Bember; soli for violin, Prelude and Allegro, Pugnani, Rondo in G major, Mozart.

HERALD
DEC. 15, 1917

SYMPHONY GIVES EIGHTH CONCERT

Music for Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," Splendidly Presented.

JOHN McCORMACK SINGS

By PHILIP HALE.

The program of the eighth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, which took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, was as follows: Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Handel, Air, "Di ad Irene," from "Atalanta"; Ravel, second suite from the ballet music of "Daphnis and Chloe" (first time in Boston); Beethoven, Recitative and Air from "Christ on the Mount of Olives"; Balakireff, "Thamar," symphony poem. John McCormack was the singer.

The concert was a brilliant one. Mozart's Symphony may not be the equal of its two companions, but its purity of outline, its artistic simplicity, the tenderness with the tinge of melancholy peculiar to Mozart that characterizes the Andante—these keep it ever fresh and beautiful.

Two suites were made by Ravel from his music for "Daphnis and Chloe," a ballet produced in Paris by the Russian visitors in 1912. The first suite was played in Paris in 1911, for the music was written in 1910; it has been played in New York. The performance of the second suite yesterday was probably the first in this country. The music is taken from the latter half of the ballet, which is in one act. The day dawns, Daphnis is distracted by the absence of Chloe, who had been borne away by pirates. She returns having been rescued through the intervention of Pan. Daphnis is told that the god did this, remembering his adventure with the nymph Syrinx, who, running away from his hot pursuit, was changed into a reed, out of which Pan fashioned his pipe. Daphnis and Chloe then relate in pantomime this adventure to shepherds and shepherdesses. He swears fidelity to Chloe on the altar. There is then a joyous, tumultuous dance, in which all join.

As a rule, music for a ballet suffers when it is played on a concert stage. It may be said, on the other hand, that when it is performed in the theatre the eyes are more occupied, more receptive, than the ears. In this instance the music, even without the little explanatory argument that accompanies the score, would be engrossing, if the only clue were "Music for a Ballet, 'Daphnis and Chloe;'" or only "Music for a Ballet." Not everyone in these days is acquainted with the pretty romance written by Longus, but any hearer with imagination would know from the music that it was for pastoral scenes and for delirious dancing.

Nor is this music effective only by reason of pronounced rhythms and ingeniously gorgeous instrumentation. There are entrancing melodic phrases; there are seductive harmonies; there is beauty, spirit, passion. The picture of daybreak is an admirable example of true program music; it is not photographic; it is not like unto an interlinear translation; it is something more than a sketch by a musical impressionist, while there is no undue fidelity to nature. The scene is pictured vividly with an artist's restraint.

The instrumentation is astonishingly brilliant; dazzling is the word for certain pages; but the composer never loses his sense of beauty. He charms the musician and every lover of the beautiful, but not for a moment does he strive to make the bourgeois sit up. While there are countless exquisite details, there is a breadth, there is a sweep, a swing to the whole, that we have missed in other works by this rarely gifted composer, who at times seemed a miniaturist, a cameo-cutter.

Appreciation of the music and the performance was immediate. The applause was spontaneous, hearty, prolonged.

Bostonians have heard Balakireff's "Thamar" in concert halls and as music for a ballet. As a symphonic poem it does not in imaginative qualities come up to the sensuous and cruel subject. Here is a case where music not designed for a ballet is glorified by scenery, costumes, mimes and dancers. Balakireff thus fares better than Rimsky-Korsakoff, whose "Scheherazade" suite was sadly perverted by the employment of it for incongruous stage scenes and adventures.

Mr. McCormack sang an air from an Italian opera by Handel, the great melodist, and a Recitative and Aria from Beethoven's early and forgotten oratorio. He sang neither in Italian nor in German, but in English. By his distinct enunciation and fine diction he made us all realize that English is after all a noble and eloquent tongue when it is not clipped, smeared, snuffed, barked. Mr. McCormack sang with a breadth, a fervor, a differentiation in emotions that surprised even his warmest admirers. Very seldom do we hear singing of so marked excellence at Symphony concerts or in opera.

The concert will be repeated this evening. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Cherubini,

9-1

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 15, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

VIVID MUSIC IN THRILLING PERFORMANCE

12/15

Conductor and Orchestra Outstrip Themselves—Even a "Star-Spangled Banner" Glorified—The Perfections of Mozart in a Symphony, the Grim Concentration of Balakirev in "Thamar," and the Beauty and Power of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" — Mr. McCormack's Singing in Full Complement to the Rest

TO begin at the very beginning of the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon, how many in the audience, to which the weekly repetition of "The Star Spangled Banner" has already become routine, note how well Dr. Muck and the orchestra now play the hymn? According to his custom with whatever music he undertakes, the conductor has not spared pains upon performance. He has emended the orchestral version of the piece to the exclusion of all extraneous ornament; he gives the melody large, deep, songful voice; he points the rhythm so that the anthem moves amply, vigorously; he ends in truly upswelling climax. From the first measure to the last Dr. Muck and his men glamor the music with an eloquence and an exaltation by no means intrinsic. In the hearing of few has "The Star Spangled Banner" been played as it is now played at Symphony Hall. The contrast between the performance there and the fashion in which our "co-belligerents," the conductors of the Metropolitan Opera House, orchestras in theatres or bands at "patriotic" meetings rattle or skimp through the hymn speaks for itself. No wonder that once upon a time, President Roosevelt invited Dr. Muck to join a committee about to revise the anthem.

This same mingling in the conductor of the imagination that perceives and designs performance in the revealing and characteristic voice of the music, and of the executive faculties that then order the accomplishment shone—and in a far more exacting mirror—out of Mozart's symphony in E-flat. Precedent prescribes that this music of the eighteenth century, if played in the twentieth within a large hall and before a numerous audience, shall be played by an orchestra twice and thrice as many as the comparatively little bands for which the composer wrote it. Balance his amplified choirs as the conductor may, lighten his tone to the utmost of which the virtuosi of Symphony Hall are capable, tint his shadings with the most adroit of fingers, not a little of the figuration and arabesque will still sound more thickly, move more heavily than was Mozart's or Haydn's intent in composition or performance. The Mozartean pattern when it is lightest, as for example in the Minuet of yesterday; the Mozartean shimmer when it is most glinting as, again, in the Finale of this symphony in E-flat; the Mozartean shading when as in the Andante it is as the very tremors of fancy, inevitably under present conditions of performance lose a measure of lace-like and transparent quality. Once again, even though the resonance that ears of 1917 expect would be missing, it does seem worth while to try for once even in the acoustics, by no means ideal, of Symphony Hall, the performance of eighteenth-century music by a diminutive but expertly proportioned orchestra. After all did not Strauss's twenty-two instruments, eighteenth-century wise, sound the other day when in that same room Miss Garrison sang the ornate air from "Ariadne on Naxos?"

Within this reservation—doubtless one of those chimerical counsels of perfection which most of us like to nurse—the performance of Mozart's symphony was well-nigh flawless in imagination and execution. The graceful flow, the light beat of the Minuet was a superlative feat of tonal and technical eloquence. The limpid fleetness, the springy precision of the Finale—familiar qualities of conductor and orchestra with these ancient pieces—less pleasured the ear than yielded a new sensation as of the dancing and sporting of the music into the prescribed pattern upon the ear as leaves and flowers sometimes make pattern to the eye in the play of breeze and sunshine. Pattern, again, like all ancient music, like all music, indeed, until the great emancipation of Beethoven and the romantics began, were the slow introduction and the quicker Allegro beginning the symphony. But how rich and warm the sheer fertility in tonal invention that filled the design, and how glowing the tonal beauty in which the mingled virtuosity and verve of the orchestra imparted it. The Andante is music of another quality—the quality that set Mozart above all the composers of his time and manner. By intuition and practice he wove his pattern almost as though it were second nature, while he shot it through with the wistful beauty of melody, the tender musing upon modulation and ornament that make this instrumental song the melancholy of music incarnate. As Virgil wrote "the tears of things," so here Mozart put to everlasting music-paper the tears of tones.

Akin to this perfection of Dr. Muck and the orchestra in the performance of the symphony was Mr. McCormack's felicity in the designing, the imagining and the accomplishment of his song. From the neglected treasure-house of Händel's half-forgotten operas the tenor had resurrected an air in "Atalanta" and from Beethoven's oratorio of the Mount of Olives nearly as unknown an air for Jesus. The first piece—a lover's plaint to insignificant verse, whether in the original Italian or in the English which Mr. McCormack used—teems with the method and the ornaments of eighteenth century song—repetitions, roulades, "shakes" and nearly all the rest; while sustaining them and keeping them in motion are serenely flowing periods of broad melody. Scarcely a tenor of opera house or concert-hall except Mr. McCormack, is now capable of this florid song—alike in the ease and sparkle of the decorative measures, the deftness with which he makes them ripple upon the main current of melody, the smooth spinning of transitions and modulations, the maintenance of the opulent flow of the whole music. Only a slight nasality here and there marred his tones; while always they mingled the poised eloquence and elegance, the mastery of music, method and the singer's self—the ideals of eighteenth-century song. In it Mr. McCormack, studious still and now in the flower of his powers, recalls a subtle virtuosity believed to have vanished from the earth.

The air of Jesus gave the tenor different opportunity. Long, largely phrased recitative of impassioned and mounting entreaty, between the periods of which Beethoven's orchestra makes not a few dramatic strokes, precedes a soliloquy of woe and fear that in intensity of voice falls little short of some more celebrated and familiar passages in "Fidelio." Both in the declamation and in the sustained song, Mr. McCormack was dramatic singer in a degree that he has hardly disclosed hitherto in Boston. His tones were his means to project upon his hearers the graphic power of Beethoven's music and his own puissant response to it in the voice alike of entreaty and of agony. Give Mr. McCormack the impetus of such a music and he can evoke passion—and the more surely because therein he uses his voice and his artistry only the more discriminatingly, expertly, masterfully. Seldom nowadays do the distinctions of florid and of dramatic song and the vocal wisdom and skill which are the means to both meet in a single singer as they met on Friday in Mr. McCormack. Idol of the popular audience, if you will, but on the way, also, to be idol of the connoisseurs of song.

So was the way cleared for what seemed the two pieces of ballet music upon the programme. True, Balakirev wrote his tone-poem of "Thamar," with never a thought that a quarter of a century later other Russians would mime and dance to it. In those that admire the music, admiration has already risen into an irascible devotion. If the piece fails to impress others as it impressed them, they will have it that the performance is at fault. Clearly, yesterday, Dr. Muck and the orchestra had ripened their original version of "Thamar" first heard a year ago. The prologue that sets the scene sounded more grim and ominous; the epilogue that ends the legend more sinister and fateful. The dances and revelry between moved with more tonal freedom, rhythmic elasticity and sensual bite. More vivid were the sharp-edged foreboding harmonic strokes that once and again cut balefully through them. By all the tests of memory Dr. Muck's version of the tone-poem falls hardly a whit short of Mr. Monteux's, for example, in graphic and penetrating eloquence. Yet still the impression prevails that the besetting dryness of Balakirev, theorist, propagandist, apostle, rather than imaginative and eloquent composer haunts the music.

The prologue does work the illusion of grim, gray, sombre and boding solitude and with no little reflective skill in the delineative manipulation of tones. The epilogue conveys and concentrates with like skill a malignant, a dismal fate. Steely vivid the music begins; in death and bane, as the old ballads put it, the music ends But between, in spite of all the impinging folk-melodies and harmonies that Balakirev discovered or imagined out of the Caucasus is only a music of a willed wantonness, a meditated sensuality, a contrived foreboding. It will not rise into vital image from the engraved page or even from such a performance as Dr. Muck and the orchestra may give it in the concert hall. It needs to do so, Bakst's tower of flaming reds: Mr. Bolm to mime the fated, frenzied wayfarer; Miss Karsavina for the insatiate, sinister, tricking queen, the exotic spectacle, the wiling and tingling dances of the Russians. With them remembered, long pages of "Thamar" in the concert-room or the library are but mute.

In sharp contrast, Ravel's music of "Daphnis and Chloe," written for the stage with constant thought of pictorial background, play of lights, dresses and other scenic accessories, mimed action and narrative or decorative dance, lost little in the "Symphonic Fragments" played for the first time in a Bostonian (and probably an American) concert-room. Those that know the ballet in the theatre—the Russians, unfortunately did not venture it in the United States—could hardly have felt the music depleted unless it was in the miming of the pursuit of Syrinx by Pan. Yet even there the music held its own in nervous and sinuous progress, in fleeting, amorous suggestion, in melancholy whisper of old, forgotten, far-off things when the present and ardent loves of swain and shepherdess creep within it, flood and hush it. Enough has already been said in this place of Ravel's mastery of his means—of his fertility of matter and method in the interweaving of motives, of his inexhaustible and adroit invention of harmonic background and sggestion of his command of old capacities and his divination of new, not only in the choirs, but in the single instruments of his orchestra. Enough also has been written of the unique blending throughout the ballet, of so to say, symphonic sense of music as such and scenic sense of music primarily designed for the theatre. To the students of music from the printed page "in their closets" as well as from the impressions of stage and concert-hall may be left to determine the springs of the technical and tonal inventions, imagination and resource that fill the ballet. At the end of their inquiries, the fountain thereof will still remain the genius and the cultivation, at once musical and poetical of Maurice Ravel.

Moreover, these rare possessions and distinctions would be unavailing did they not impress and illude the answering imagination, vision and emotion of listening men. Dull-eared and dull-fancied, indeed, was he in the audience of yesterday who did not feel the beauty, the imagery, the illusion of the mysterious shiverings, the mounting tremors, the brightening tonal colors, the quickening rhythms in which the day dawns and life stirs anew in Ravel's music. Not merely his birds, his shepherds but a whole quivering and gladdening world piped in his tones the morning miracle of renewed life and light. And then the instrumental song that in deepening, broadening, more and more glowing voice sings the ecstasy of the lovers. The sweep, the passion, the climax of the music is of Wagnerian exaltation. So may the poetry of tones transfigure the amours even of shepherd folk. Next to open way for fancy, the music thins that with the skill, the elegance, the piquancy and the subtlety of Ravel it may mirror the pursuit of Pan, amorous but regretful god, upon the nymph, Syrinx, whom, evasive, he transformed into reeds to whisper his song of disillusion. But again, the triumphant melody of the lovers in presence and desire, who did but so do him honor; and out of it, through leading, pricking figures, the dance, which is as a shower of crackling timbres, of flashing harmonies, of ever-renewed and sharply beating rhythms.

A lyrical symphonic music, if ever man wrote it, yet a music that perpetually springs from itself; a prismatic music in which each flashing color of harmony or timbre fails on the instant into jewelled place; music that marvels of rhythm whip into sharper and more vivid frenzies, changeable as the moment, yet insistent as time itself; music that moves in sweeps of dynamic power as the music of the lovers moved in as deep and glowing periods of beauty. And through it all the dart of a sudden detail that stings to fresh pace the listening imagination. The performance, with conductor and orchestra fired as they have hardly been this autumn, matched the music. An audience, lifted at the end from illusion to reward, applauded a masterpiece—even of genius.

H. T. P.

GLOBE. DEC. 16
1917.

Halifax Concert Today in Symphony Hall

A most unusual concert, having been prompted by an unusual and tragic event, will occur this afternoon at 3:30, when Mme Melba and Mr Kreisler, both giving their services, will appear as soloists on a program at Symphony Hall, which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr Muck conducting, will share for the relief of the Halifax sufferers. All seats were sold before the end of the first day of the announcement and standing room alone remained.

The program will be as follows: Overture, "In Memoriam," Sir Arthur Sullivan; Mendelssohn's concerto for violin and orchestra in E minor; Phidyle song with orchestra, Duparc; Schererzade, symphonic suite, Rimsky-Korsakoff; songs with piano: "Le Tempo des Lilacs" and "Les Papillons," Chausson: "Les Anges Pleurent," Bember; soli for violin, Prelude and Allegro, Pugnani, Rondo in G major, Mozart.

HERALD
DEC. 15, 1917

SYMPHONY GIVES EIGHTH CONCERT

Music for Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," Splendidly Presented.

JOHN McCORMACK SINGS

By PHILIP HALE.

The program of the eighth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, which took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, was as follows: Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Handel, Air, "Di ad Irene," from "Atalanta"; Ravel, second suite from the ballet music of "Daphnis and Chloe" (first time in Boston); Beethoven, Recitative and Air from "Christ on the Mount of Olives"; Balakireff, "Thamar," symphony poem. John McCormack was the singer.

The concert was a brilliant one. Mozart's Symphony may not be the equal of its two companions, but its purity of outline, its artistic simplicity, the tenderness with the tinge of melancholy peculiar to Mozart that characterizes the Andante—these keep it ever fresh and beautiful.

Two suites were made by Ravel from his music for "Daphnis and Chloe," a ballet produced in Paris by the Russian visitors in 1912. The first suite was played in Paris in 1911, for the music was written in 1910; it has been played in New York. The performance of the second suite yesterday was probably the first in this country. The music is taken from the latter half of the ballet, which is in one act. The day dawns, Daphnis is distracted by the absence of Chloe, who had been borne away by pirates. She returns having been rescued through the intervention of Pan. Daphnis is told that the god did this, remembering his adventure with the nymph Syrinx, who, running away from his hot pursuit, was changed into a reed, out of which Pan fashioned his pipe. Daphnis and Chloe then relate in pantomime this adventure to shepherds and shepherdesses. He swears fidelity to Chloe on the altar. There is then a joyous, tumultuous dance, in which all join.

As a rule, music for a ballet suffers when it is played on a concert stage. It may be said, on the other hand, that when it is performed in the theatre the eyes are more occupied, more receptive, than the ears. In this instance the music, even without the little explanatory argument that accompanies the score, would be engrossing, if the only clue were "Music for a Ballet, 'Daphnis and Chloe,'" or only "Music for a Ballet." Not everyone in these days is acquainted with the pretty romance written by Longus, but any hearer with imagination would know from the music that it was for pastoral scenes and for delirious dancing.

Nor is this music effective only by reason of pronounced rhythms and ingeniously gorgeous instrumentation. There are entrancing melodic phrases; there are seductive harmonies; there is beauty, spirit, passion. The picture of daybreak is an admirable example of true program music; it is not photographic; it is not like unto an interlinear translation; it is something more than a sketch by a musical impressionist, while there is no undue fidelity to nature. The scene is pictured vividly with an artist's restraint.

The instrumentation is astonishingly brilliant; dazzling is the word for certain pages; but the composer never loses his sense of beauty. He charms the musician and every lover of the beautiful, but not for a moment does he strive to make the bourgeois sit up. While there are countless exquisite details, there is a breadth, there is a sweep, a swing to the whole, that we have missed in other works by this rarely gifted composer, who at times seemed a miniaturist, a cameo-cutter.

Appreciation of the music and the performance was immediate. The applause was spontaneous, hearty, prolonged.

Bostonians have heard Balakireff's "Thamar" in concert halls and as music for a ballet. As a symphonic poem it does not in imaginative qualities come up to the sensuous and cruel subject. Here is a case where music not designed for a ballet is glorified by scenery, costumes, mimes and dancers. Balakireff thus fares better than Rimsky-Korsakoff, whose "Scheherazade" suite was sadly perverted by the employment of it for incongruous stage scenes and adventures.

Mr. McCormack sang an air from an Italian opera by Handel, the great melodist, and a Recitative and Aria from Beethoven's early and forgotten oratorio. He sang neither in Italian nor in German, but in English. By his distinct enunciation and fine diction he made us all realize that English is after all a noble and eloquent tongue when it is not clipped, smeared, snuffed, barked. Mr. McCormack sang with a breadth, a fervor, a differentiation in emotions that surprised even his warmest admirers. Very seldom do we hear singing of so marked excellence at Symphony concerts or in opera.

The concert will be repeated this evening. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Cherubini,

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 12, 1917.

Better Late Than Never

The belated and little emphasized announcement of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship does not lessen the validity of the fact which the most sceptical Vigilante may verify to the letter at the Legation of Switzerland in Washington. The conductor is neither a Prussian nor a Bavarian subject, either by birth or residence, but a citizen of Switzerland in which country his father was naturalized when the son was a child of six. Thereby the boy became automatically of like nationality with his parents, attaining and acknowledging at his majority full Swiss citizenship. The predisposing cause to the action of both father and son was their preference for the Swiss city of Zurich as a place of residence. Until the confusions and the exactions of the war began, Dr. Muck, like most of us engrossed in exacting work, gave little heed to his own or to any one's else nationality. Then long process was necessary to validate his Swiss citizenship and to secure Swiss passports, permitting him such freedom of travel as neutrals may enjoy during a widespread war.

It was quite possible for Dr. Muck to make known his legal standing as a naturalized Swiss when he was most bitterly assailed as a Prussian and an "enemy alien," but it was not in his temperament or in his code of conduct, as is easy to understand, to take such cover in such stress. Accordingly, he hid his neutral citizenship and, even now, would hardly have disclosed it had not the management of the Symphony Orchestra wished to include the fact in a circular sent to the subscribers to its interrupted concerts in Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia. That circular, however, falls into one error. Dr. Muck was not born, as is commonly reported, at Wurzburg in Bavaria, but at Darmstadt in the Grand Duchy of Hesse, as it was in 1859, where his parents happened to be travelling. On the other hand, the circular justly reminds the recipients and many another more in need of such prompting, that because the conductor ha received the "courtesy title" of "Genera Music-Director in Prussia," he is no mor a member of the Prussian official hierar chy than are the American holders o German orders bestowed in time past b the Imperial or the Royal Government. I fact, Dr. Muck's connection with the Roya Opera in Berlin ended summarily and i some irritation on the part of the Inten dant and the court when he quit it defini tively at the expiration of his contract i the summer of 1912. The informed in suc matters will also recall that the Parisian Meyerbeer and the Franco-Italian Spontin was each in his day and by title a "Genera Music-Director in Prussia." The circular which might advisedly have been sent t the subscribers to the concerts of the or chestra in New York and in Boston as wel as to those elsewhere, runs:

> For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, the management submits the following statements, which can be verified by anyone who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities: Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; he is not an enemy alien of the United States; he is not an official of the German Government; he is not a citizen of Germany; while he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father. After careful investigation of many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities "have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country."

Dr. Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit. For three years of the war he has directed our cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permited no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among our musicians of many nationalities—fifty-one American citizens (seventeen native-born), twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians and two Bohemians.

One subject which has caused much unkind and undeserved criticism of Dr. Muck has been a report that he refused to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" in our concerts. He has never refused. On the contrary, when requested he willingly complied, and he has since conducted our national anthem in every concert by our organization.

Here in Boston

Every seat for the concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon to increase the Halifax Relief Funds has now been sold and further application for places either by letter or in person to the box office is useless. The programme for the concert awaits Mr. Kreisler's and Mme. Melba's choice of pieces; but the principal orchestral number has already been determined—Rimsky-Korsakov's suite, "Scheherazade," a pictorial and readily comprehensible music suggested by The Arabian Nights, and giving much room for individual skill among the players.

POST
DEC. 16, 1917.

CONCERTS

For Halifax Fund

The concert in Symphony Hall this (Sunday) afternoon, at 3:30, in aid of the Halifax sufferers, will begin promptly at 3:30 and will run in the neighborhood of two hours. All the seats were sold before the end of the first day of the sale and only standing room remains. The programme in its entirety is as follows:

"THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER."
Overture—"In Memoriam". Sir Arthur Sullivan
Concerto for violin and orchestra in E-minor. Opus 64.....Mendelssohn
Mr. Kreisler.
"Phidyle"—Song with orchestra
Henri Duparc
Mme. Melba.
Intermission of 10 Minutes.
"Scheherazade"—Symphonic Suite (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"). Opus 35.....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Songs with piano:
Le Temps des Lilacs.....Chaussen
Les Papillons .....Chausson
Les Anges Pleurent.....Bemberg
Mme. Melba.
Soli for violin:
Prelude and Allegro .....Pugnani
Rondo in G-major .....Mozart
Mr. Kreisler.

Guiomar Novaes, the Brazilian pianist, and Jacques Thibaud, the brilliant French violinist, were to have given the concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon, but have graciously postponed their appearance in order that the Halifax concert might be given. On account of other engagements in the West they cannot give their concert in Boston until Sunday afternoon, March 24.

Next Tuesday evening, in Steinert Hall, song recital by Laura Littlefield, soprano. Mrs. Dudley Fitts will accompany. The programme:

Pastourelle (from "La Basoce")..Messenger
La Route, Sous Bois.....Ropartz
Chanson des Moisettes.....Dupont
Effit de Neige, Serenade, Colombine.Poldowski
The Cave.....Schneider
Come hither, lyttel childe.....Spalding
The Bairnies Cuddle Doon.....Homer
The Bird, Reve du Midi.....Fiske
Her Songs, To a Dancer.....Endicott
Chanson d'Avignon (from "Griselidis")
Massenet
Villanelles des Petits Canards.....Chabrier
Voici des Fruits.....Ebell
Le The .....Koechlin
Jardin d'Amour.....Vuillermoz
Hymne d'Amour.....Pierne

Next Wednesday, Dec. 19, at 8:15, in the John Knowles Paine Concert Hall of the Harvard Music building, Ralph Lawton, who has been recently making some experiments at the new Greenwich Village Theatre in New York, in combination of colored settings and sympathetic lighting with pianoforte music, will demonstrate his theories.

Next Tuesday afternoon in Steinert Hall: Piano recital by Yolanda Mero. The proceeds will be devoted to the relief of Halifax sufferers. Programme:

Stradal's arrangement of Bach's concerto for the organ; Schumann's "Davidsbundlertanze"; Debussy's "Jardin sous la pluie" and "Clair de lune"; Rachmaninoff's "Serenade"; Dohnanyi's "Rhapsodie in C minor"; Liszt's "Liebestraum" and "Polonaise in E-flat major"; and the pianist's own arrangement of Merkler's "Valse Intermezzo."

It has become necessary to postpone the first of the chamber music concerts announced for next Thursday afternoon, Dec. 20, in Jordan Hall by the former Kneisel players and Mr. Kreisler, to a date which will be announced later. The postponement is due to the delay caused in securing special permits for some of the members of the organization to travel.

Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall—Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sylvain Noack, violinist, who shares the first desk of the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Witck, will be soloist. The programme:

Overture, "Anacreon" .....Cherubini
Two solo pieces for violin:
Poeme .....Chausson
Havanaise .....Saint-Saens
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastorale" .....Beethoven

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 14, 1917

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

The Symphony Orchestra at Cambridge with Mr. Goding, Pianist, for MacDowell's Second Concerto—For the Coming of Miss Torpadie—Mme. Melba's and Mr. Kreisler's Pieces Next Sunday

THE programme of the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge last evening took a pleasing and somewhat shallow turn, innocent alike of deep emotion and large vigor. Debussy's "The Sea" loomed almost imposing and forceful, as it stood beside the light and pretty conceits of Mendelssohn's overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and the slight and almost insipid substance of MacDowell's Concerto in D minor. With such environment, the climaxes of the first and the last sections of the "symphonic sketches" sounded unwontedly powerful and positive from the Parisian painter in pastel tints—"the oversensitized hedonist," as a ruddier English composer has called him, "with his delicate subtleties, mainly in transparent pearl-grays." To this generalization those pages are an emphatic denial; they are finely calculated and long prepared, and as the trombones flare forth for once in solid and long-drawn voice at the end of the whole piece, piled up with rich polyphony and stinging dissonance of the full orchestra, the effect might stir the envy of many a composer of sturdier individuality. Debussy is certain a versatile genius of many aspects. But there is one inescapable and hounding limitation: Whatever he does, is mainly "effect." Possibly his distinction rests upon the number and originality of those effects, and the unquestionable truth that they are unsurpassed in their time. For instance, the orchestral usage of "La Mer" is often distinctive and exclusive to the immediate design. There is nothing very much like it in any other music, not even Debussy's own: the constant and various use of the harps, the violins in topmost register, and elsewhere their exotic, pungently set figurations, the unprecedented hues in the peculiar combinations of woodwind and brass, th elaborate and mysterious percussion. Also—and this with no loss of picturesque atmosphere—sound, integrated and enduring melody in the last section. For the minutely and intricately careful setting forth of all these attribute there can scarcely be as fine a hand in all France as that of Mr. Muck. It will always be a matter for marvel to hear him and his orchestra interpret "La Mer." In the profusion and subtlety of detail, the rapid scattering and instantaneous assembling, the necessity for finest maintenance of balance, the virtuosity exacted in discreet and lightning figures from the trumpets, trombones, and wood-wind, no single slip or miss was audible yesterday.

After "The Sea," the concerto and the overture inevitably sounded rather tame. But a soloist is always welcomed by the Cambridgites as food for comfortable diversion and comment. Mr. Howard Goding, the elect of the evening, descended upon his part with fine energy and incisiveness. He strove hard to live up to the conductor's standard of scrupulous precision, and succeeded well, albeit at the sacrifice of the poetic plasticity and the sensuous grace and beauty of tone, which qualities alone signal the individuality of the composer, and save his concerto from mediocrity. There are concertos which assertive virility becomes; perhaps this one is more attractive under the softer persuasion of a woman's touch, partially hiding over-much dead wood of uninspired incident. Mendlessohn's fairy overture, on the other hand, "wears" well in parts. Happy of conception, thematically delightful and aptly turned to its subject, it is one of those isolated achievements upon which a composer comes as if by pure good fortune. Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture is another such and so is the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" of Dukas. Thus Mendelssohn's youthful overture in its freshness and charm, holds place beside the fruits of his maturity, and usually surpasses them.

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 14, 1917

Items and Announcements

Sir Arthur Sullivan's overture, "In Memoriam," written in 1866 upon the death of his father, and nowadays seldom heard anywhere, will begin the concert at Symphony Hall, next Sunday afternoon. for the profit of the Halifax Relief Funds. The concert will end with songs for Mme. Melba and short violin-pieces for Mr. Kreisler so that both may be heard in extra numbers. In full, the programme stands:

Concert Overture, "In Memoriam".....Sullivan
Concerto in E minor for Violin and Orchestra .....Mendelssohn
Mr. Kreisler
Song with Orchestra, "Phidylé" .....Duparc
Mme. Melba
Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov
Songs with Piano;
Le Temps des Lilacs—Les Papillons, Chausson
Les Anges Pleurent.....Bemberg
Mme. Melba
Soli for Violin:
Prelude and Allegro.....Pugnani
Rondo in G major.....Mozart
Mr. Kreisler

A happy innovation signalizes the programme for the Symphony Concerts of next week. Mr. Noack of the first violins will then have his annual opportunity to play a concerto; but instead of such a piece he has chosen two shorter numbers: Chausson's imaginative and eloquent "Poem" and Saint-Saëns's light and fanciful "Havanaise." Both, of course, are pieces with orchestra. The remaining items of the programme are Cherubini's overture to his opera "Anacreon" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony.

American
Dec. 17, 1917

Benefit Breaks All Symphony Hall Records

Melba, Kreisler, Muck and Orchestra Raise $10,000 for Halifax

It is thought that between $9,000 and $10,000 was realized for the Halifax sufferers at the biggest benefit concert ever held in Boston yesterday afternoon, when Melba, Kreisler and the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared on one bill.

Although the seats were sold at $5 instead of the customary $2 for Sunday concerts, every seat in the house was snapped up and all available standing room. All records for Symphony Hall were broken.

The concert was one of unusual excellence, the program popular in character. Doctor Muck conducted the orchestra and was enthusiastically applauded, while Kreisler was shown that the declaration of war on Austria had not made Bostonians forget his merits. Mme. Melba was in good voice and sang in an unequalled manner.

Globe
Dec. 19, 1917

John McCormack Soloist at Symphony Concerts

As soloist at this week's Symphony concerts, John McCormack again has chosen unhackneyed music. He will sing Aminta's aria "Di ad Irene" from Handel's pastorale cantata, "Atalanta." This was one of the many pastorales that were so popular in the 18th century in which Watteau shepherds and shepherdesses disported themselves for the amusement of the court. The "Atalanta" was given as a part of the celebration of the marriage of the Prince of Wales, son of George II. Mr McCormack's second number will be "Jehovah, Hear Me," from Beethoven's oratorio, "The Mount of Olives."

Of the orchestral numbers, the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" will be a novelty. This ballet was written in 1912 for the Russians and played with much success in Paris. The first suite has been played in New York, but it is doubtful if this particular "Fragment Symphonique," as it is called, has ever been heard in this country.

In its entirety the program will be as follows: Mozart symphony in E-flat major, aria from "Atalanta," Ravel "Fragment Symphonique," aria, "Jehovah, Hear Me"; Balakireff, "Thamar."

199

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 17, 1917.

WEEK-END CONCERTS

THREE, AND EACH GIVING RARE PLEASURE 12/17

Ravel's Ballet Suggests Others for the Symphony Orchestra—The Notable Audience and Occasion of Sunday for the Halifax Relief Funds—Mme. Melba in Old Glories, Mr. Kreisler Exceptionally Applauded and the Rest Outdoing Themselves—The Charm and Skill of Miss Torpadie—A New War-Tax?

RAVEL'S "symphonic fragments" of "Daphnis and Chloe" are not the only music from ballets and mimodramas written in recent years in Europe that deserves hearing at the Symphony Concerts and the score and the parts of which may even now be obtainable in America. Dukas's one piece in the species, "The Peri," is a symphonic poem in itself, and as such has been played oftener in Paris and in other cities than as music for dancing and miming. It is a pity, besides, that American ears in the concert-hall should know so various a composer by a single, and now somewhat hackneyed, jeu d'esprit, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Like Ravel, Stravinsky long since drew from his ballet of "The Firebird" a suite for orchestra, keeping much of the beauty, the fancy, the graphic suggestion of the music within the theatre. This very season Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra have played it with no little pleasure to hearers. In Paris, and, if memory serves, in London, under Sir T. Beecham, Stravinsky's other ballets, "Pétrouchka" and "The Rite of the Spring," have been played in entirety as so much symphonic music—an interesting experiment almost deserving trial here, though admittedly the impression was sometimes confused and obscure when the composer was writing in closest complement to action on the stage. It is within possibility that Debussy's "Jeux" and "Khamma," both ballets seldom heard or seen anywhere, would interest played as symphonic pieces; while in the library of Symphony Hall may still lie Schmitt's mimodrama, "The Tragedy of Salome," once ventured by Dr. Muck as a curious and occasionally illusive tone-poem. Moreover, to complete the catalogue for the moment, the other "symphonic fragment" from "Daphnis and Chloe," already heard in New York from Mr. Damrosch, ought surely to be obtainable for performance in Boston.

Be the future harvest what it may, there is no questioning the stimulus of Ravel's music upon orchestra and conductor or the eagerness and satisfaction with which, on Saturday evening as on Friday afternoon, the audience listened with ear, mind and heart. The performance, indeed, already has place among the superlative feats of Dr. Muck and the band he has now wrought in his image. Never have they been more various and vivid masters of rhythm; more excelled themselves in the instant revelation and coördination of detail; more graphically compassed sharp or suave transition or multitudinous and songful climax. The tone of the orchestra matched the beauty, the power, the manifold implications of the music while the felicities and the subtleties of Ravel's play with harmonies and timbres must have rejoiced its virtuoso soul. To sit before "Daphnis and Chloe" in the theatre is to divide perception and reception between the music and the action, the settings, the lights, the dancers, the mimes. To hear the music apart from the stage, and in such performance as that of Saturday, was to discover anew and to the full the ardent sweep, yet flawless proportion, of design, the mingled splendor and finesse of invention, the manifold delineative and emotional imagination, the command of means that body forth the poetry and the passion of the illusion from a masterpiece of a time blessed with no small portion of remarkable music. Never before in Boston has Ravel so affirmed his signal and still mounting powers.

The "Halifax Concert"

Still more largely in the annals of the Symphony Orchestra, since, after all, the fragments of "Daphnis and Chloe" made but a single piece, will be written the concert of Sunday afternoon for the profit of the Halifax Relief Funds. In every respect and in full degree it fulfilled the expectations of the conduetor and the orchestra proposing it; of Mr. Kreisler and Mme. Melba joining readily in it; of Mr. Higginson and Mr. Ellis undertaking the external details; when catastrophe, as swift and scarifying as are such bolts of fate, shook our little world of Northeastern America. The receipts of the concert from the sale of tickets, from the vending of an autographed and pictured programme, from incidental additions to box-office prices exceeded $10,000—the largest sum a concert for charitable purposes, or indeed for any other, has ever gathered in Boston. Not a seat stood empty in Symphony Hall on Sunday; the standing room was stretched to the last square inch of floor and the last legal inch of municipal regulation: yet even so hundreds had been turned away. The audience was representative of the manifold life of the city and of the manifold sympathy the occasion had encouraged—desirably a miscellaneous company in which the British and the Canadian colonies were conspicuous, in which new hearers of the Symphony Orchestra were many and in which not a few came to bask under such planets of the musical firmament as Mme. Melba and Mr. Kreisler.

From such a company the more significant was the applause, exceeding that lavished upon either conductor or prima donna, with which Mr. Kreisler was first welcomed and then, at every pause in his pieces, acclaimed. The master-violinist of this present day indeed shone out of his playing of Mendelssohn's concerto and of a long array (as the insistence of the audience made it) of lighter numbers, but it was the man, the recent and proudly patient victim of lying calumnies, malignant enmities and obvious self-seeking, whom it also, and clearly, applauded. Such token of the sympathy of a miscellaneous audience may well comfort Mr. Kreisler in a perturbed hour; while no less good and significant to hear were the general and hearty plaudits accompanying every entrance and exit of Dr. Muck and crowning him and the orchestra at the end of the most eloquent performance of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" that even they have yet wrought No less in degree was Mme. Melba rewarded: but she, unlike her companions in artistry for compassion, is exempt from superfluous and unreasonable antagonisms of wartime.

Musically, the concert interested most in the beauty and the power of voice that the conductor and the orchestra gave to Rimsky-Korsakov's music of legend and fantasy, in the discovery for most of us, of the felicity and fancy of the orchestral version of Duparc's thrice familiar song of "Phidylé"; and in the renewal to the surprise of not a few, of the soft and silvery lustres, unique in kind, of Mme. Melba's tones. The beginning with Sullivan's resurrected overture, "In Memoriam," was justified of the occasion and bespoke the breadth of sympathy in the givers of the concert, even if in itself it is commonplace music-making of a vanished British time. To be expected out of many a memory, was the vitality that from ardor of tone, rhythm, phrase and progress, Mr. Kreisler infuses into the tame and academic Allegro "appassionato" of Mendelssohn's concerto, to flow thereafter into the suave, shadowed and, yesterday, exquisitely tempered song of the Andante and the shimmering grace of a finale in which the composer writes that light, flying, glinting music in which few have surpassed him. To be expected, likewise, were the slight musical confections, appointed and extra, with which he and Mme. Melba gratified their own virtuosity and the eager ears of the audience. But hardly to be foreseen, since "Phidylé," favorite though it be, is rarely heard with orchestra, was the adroit use of harmonies and timbres, the delicate adjustments, the limpidity, the fancy, the mirror-like quality of Duparc's softly crystalline instrumentation. It was the complement of a like perfection of means, of a like loveliness in Mme. Melba's tones. For the instant, and again in her subsequent pieces, her voice sounded as in the silvery glow, the velvety texture of her noon of song; while it sounded also with an intuitive and a practised artistry that knows no twilight.

Even so, the glory of the concert in itself and in performance was "Scheherazade"—notably well chosen for the occasion since the voice of the music is sunlight clear and changeful, since it suggests or the instant the composer's imagery, and since it gives plentiful room for the individual skill that Mr. Witek, Mr. Sand, Mr. Holy, Mr. Longy, Mr. Maquarre, the bassoonists and the players upon the instruments of percussion proved and re-proved. A year ago when Dr. Muck and the orchestra first set themselves to the piece, they characterized the music as never before in Bostonian hearing, gave it the golden atmosphere of legend that enwraps it, adorned it from end to end with feat upon feat of imaginative finesse. Yesterday, under the just stimulus of an exceptional occasion—their own occasion as it were—they surpassed even this memory of themselves. To hear them in the sea-music of the beginning and the end was to believe for the time that no such music of the sweep, the surge, the vastness of ocean has come from other composer's pen. The music of the fete in Baghdad was the sensuality, frenzied or languorous, of the Arabian Nights made glowing or biting tones. Fortunate the embraced youth, sitting in the still and solitary garden and "talking of love" who could speak with the loveliness of fancy and of speech that yesterday tipped their tongues; while the humor and the gayety of the Kalendar's tale caught as tones may seldom do the fantastic grotesquerie, the rush of endless high spirits that have kept Scheherazade's tales immortal. She, happy Sultana, had the voice of Mr. Witek's violin at once fine and ardent. Various as it is, the suite is long, since Rimsky-Korsakov is inexhaustible of new rhythms, harmonies and timbres, but from first measure to last the spell upon the audience held unbroken.

Signing Their Gift

Nellie Melba

Fritz Kreisler

Dr. Karl Muck

W. L. Higginson

Four Notable Signatures From the Programme of the Concert Yesterday for the Halifax Relief Fund

American
Dec. 16, 1917

Concert Today at 3:30 for Halifax

Amer. 12/16

THE concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon in aid of the Halifax sufferers will begin promptly at 3:30 and will run in the neighborhood of two hours. All the seats were sold before the end of the first day of the sale and only standing room remains. The program in its entirety is as follows:

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER.
Overture, "In Memoriam," Sir Arthur Sullivan
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E. Minor, Opus 64.....Mendelssohn
Mr. Kreisler
"Phidyle": Song with Orchestra.....Henry Duparc
Madame Melba
Intermission of Ten Minutes
"Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), Opus 35.....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Songs with piano:
a Le Temps des Lilacs.....Chausson
b Les Papillons.....Chausson
c Les Anges Pleurent.....Bemberg
Madame Melba
Soli for Violin:
a Prelude and Allegro.....Pugnani
b Ronde in G Major.....Mozart
Mr. Kreisler

* * *

Sylvain Noack, the admirable violinist, who shares the first desk of the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Witek, will be soloist at the coming Symphony Concerts on Friday afternoon, December 21st, and Saturday evening, December 22d. Mr. Noack has not appeared as soloist since season before last and his return in this capacity will be warmly welcomed. He will play two pieces, both of them out of the ordinary for Symphony Concerts, but nonetheless interesting and attractive. The first piece will be the Poeme of Shausson and the second piece will be the "Havanaise" of Saint-Saens. The orchestral numbers will be Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture and the Pastoral Symphony of Beethoven. The program in its proper form is as follows:

Cherubini, Overture, "Anacreon."
Chausson, Poeme; Saint-Saens, Havanaise,
Two solo pieces for Violin.
Beethoven, Symphony No. 6, in F-Major, "Pastorale."

199

TRANSCRIPT
DEC. 17, 1917-

WEEK-END CONCERTS

THREE, AND EACH GIVING RARE PLEASURE 12/17

Ravel's Ballet Suggests Others for the Symphony Orchestra—The Notable Audience and Occasion of Sunday for the Halifax Relief Funds—Mme. Melba in Old Glories, Mr. Kreisler Exceptionally Applauded and the Rest Outdoing Themselves—The Charm and Skill of Miss Torpadie—A New War-Tax?

RAVEL'S "symphonic fragments" of "Daphnis and Chloe" are not the only music from ballets and mimo-dramas written in recent years in Europe that deserves hearing at the Symphony Concerts and the score and the parts of which may even now be obtainable in America. Dukas's one piece in the species, "The Peri," is a symphonic poem in itself, and as such has been played oftener in Paris and in other cities than as music for dancing and miming. It is a pity, besides, that American ears in the concert-hall should know so various a composer by a single, and now somewhat hackneyed, jeu d'esprit, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Like Ravel, Stravinsky long since drew from his ballet of "The Firebird" a suite for orchestra, keeping much of the beauty, the fancy, the graphic suggestion of the music within the theatre. This very season Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra have played it with no little pleasure to hearers. In Paris, and, if memory serves, in London, under Sir T. Beecham, Stravinsky's other ballets, "Pétrouchka" and "The Rite of the Spring," have been played in entirety as so much symphonic music—an interesting experiment almost deserving trial here, though admittedly the impression was sometimes confused and obscure when the composer was writing in closest complement to action on the stage. It is within possibility that Debussy's "Jeux" and "Khamma," both ballets seldom heard or seen anywhere, would interest played as symphonic pieces; while in the library of Symphony Hall may still lie Schmitt's mimodrama, "The Tragedy of Salome," once ventured by Dr. Muck as a curious and occasionally illusive tone-poem. Moreover, to complete the catalogue for the moment, the other "symphonic fragment" from "Daphnis and Chloe," already heard in New York from Mr. Damrosch, ought surely to be obtainable for performance in Boston.

Be the future harvest what it may, there is no questioning the stimulus of Ravel's music upon orchestra and conductor or the eagerness and satisfaction with which, on Saturday evening as on Friday afternoon, the audience listened with ear, mind and heart. The performance, indeed, already has place among the superlative feats of Dr. Muck and the band he has now wrought in his image. Never have they been more various and vivid masters of rhythm; more excelled themselves in the instant revelation and coördination of detail; more graphically compassed sharp or suave transition or multitudinous and songful climax. The tone of the orchestra matched the beauty, the power, the manifold implications of the music while the felicities and the subtleties of Ravel's play with harmonies and timbres must have rejoiced its virtuoso soul. To sit before "Daphnis and Chloe" in the theatre is to divide perception and reception between the music and the action, the settings, the lights, the dancers, the mimes. To hear the music apart from the stage, and in such performance as that of Saturday, was to discover anew and to the full the ardent sweep, yet flawless proportion, of design, the mingled splendor and finesse of invention, the manifold delineative and emotional imagination, the command of means that body forth the poetry and the passion of the illusion from a masterpiece of a time blessed with no small portion of remarkable music. Never before in Boston has Ravel so affirmed his signal and still mounting powers.

The "Halifax Concert"

Still more largely in the annals of the Symphony Orchestra, since, after all, the fragments of "Daphnis and Chloe" made but a single piece, will be written the concert of Sunday afternoon for the profit of the Halifax Relief Funds. In every respect and in full degree it fulfilled the expectations of the conductor and the orchestra proposing it; of Mr. Kreisler and Mme. Melba joining readily in it; of Mr. Higginson and Mr. Ellis undertaking the external details; when catastrophe, as swift and scarifying as are such bolts of fate, shook our little world of Northeastern America. The receipts of the concert from the sale of tickets, from the vending of an autographed and pictured programme, from incidental additions to box-office prices exceeded $10,000—the largest sum a concert for charitable purposes, or indeed for any other, has ever gathered in Boston. Not a seat stood empty in Symphony Hall on Sunday; the standing room was stretched to the last square inch of floor and the last legal inch of municipal regulation; yet even so hundreds had been turned away. The audience was representative of the manifold life of the city and of the manifold sympathy the occasion had encouraged—desirably a miscellaneous company in which the British and the Canadian colonies were conspicuous, in which new hearers of the Symphony Orchestra were many and in which not a few came to bask under such planets of the musical firmament as Mme. Melba and Mr. Kreisler.

From such a company the more significant was the applause, exceeding that lavished upon either conductor or prima donna, with which Mr. Kreisler was first welcomed and then, at every pause in his pieces, acclaimed. The master-violinist of this present day indeed shone out of his playing of Mendelssohn's concerto and of a long array (as the insistence of the audience made it) of lighter numbers, but it was the man, the recent and proudly patient victim of lying calumnies, malignant enmities and obvious self-seeking, whom it also, and clearly, applauded. Such token of the sympathy of a miscellaneous audience may well comfort Mr. Kreisler in a perturbed hour; while no less good and significant to hear were the general and hearty plaudits accompanying every entrance and exit of Dr. Muck and crowning him and the orchestra at the end of the most eloquent performance of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" that even they have yet wrought. No less in degree was Mme. Melba rewarded; but she, unlike her companions in artistry for compassion, is exempt from superfluous and unreasonable antagonisms of wartime.

Musically, the concert interested most in the beauty and the power of voice that the conductor and the orchestra gave to Rimsky-Korsakov's music of legend and fantasy, in the discovery for most of us, of the felicity and fancy of the orchestral version of Duparc's thrice familiar song of "Phidylé"; and in the renewal to the surprise of not a few, of the soft and silvery lustres, unique in kind, of Mme. Melba's tones. The beginning with Sullivan's resurrected overture, "In Memoriam," was justified of the occasion and bespoke the breadth of sympathy in the givers of the concert, even if in itself it is commonplace music-making of a vanished British time. To be expected out of many a memory, was the vitality that from ardor of tone, rhythm, phrase and progress, Mr. Kreisler infuses into the tame and academic Allegro "appassionato" of Mendelssohn's concerto, to flow thereafter into the suave, shadowed and, yesterday, exquisitely tempered song of the Andante and the shimmering grace of a finale in which the composer writes that light, flying, glinting music in which few have surpassed him. To be expected, likewise, were the slight musical confections, appointed and extra, with which he and Mme. Melba gratified their own virtuosity and the eager ears of the audience. But hardly to be foreseen, since "Phidylé," favorite though it be, is rarely heard with orchestra, was the adroit use of harmonies and timbres, the delicate adjustments, the limpidity, the fancy, the mirror-like quality of Duparc's softly crystalline instrumentation. It was the complement of a like perfection of means, of a like loveliness in Mme. Melba's tones. For the instant, and again in her subsequent pieces, her voice sounded as in the silvery glow, the velvety texture of her noon of song; while it sounded also with an intuitive and a practised artistry that knows no twilight.

Even so, the glory of the concert in itself and in performance was "Scheherazade"—notably well chosen for the occasion since the voice of the music is sunlight clear and changeful, since it suggests or the instant the composer's imagery, and since it gives plentiful room for the individual skill that Mr. Witek, Mr. Sand, Mr. Holy, Mr. Longy, Mr. Maquarre, the bassoonists and the players upon the instruments of percussion proved and re-proved. A year ago when Dr. Muck and the orchestra first set themselves to the piece, they characterized the music as never before in Bostonian hearing, gave it the golden atmosphere of legend that enwraps it, adorned it from end to end with feat upon feat of imaginative finesse. Yesterday, under the just stimulus of an exceptional occasion—their own occasion as it were—they surpassed even this memory of themselves. To hear them in the sea-music of the beginning and the end was to believe for the time that no such music of the sweep, the surge, the vastness of ocean has come from other composer's pen. The music of the fete in Baghdad was the sensuality, frenzied or languorous, of the Arabian Nights made glowing or biting tones. Fortunate the embraced youth, sitting in the still and solitary garden and "talking of love" who could speak with the loveliness of fancy and of speech that yesterday tipped their tongues; while the humor and the gayety of the Kalendar's tale caught as tones may seldom do the fantastic grotesquerie, the rush of endless high spirits that have kept Scheherazade's tales immortal. She, happy Sultana, had the voice of Mr. Witek's violin at once fine and ardent. Various as it is, the suite is long, since Rimsky-Korsakov is inexhaustible of new rhythms, harmonies and timbres, but from first measure to last the spell upon the audience held unbroken.

Signing Their Gift

Nellie Melba

Fritz Kreisler

Dr. Karl Muck

H. L. Higginson

Four Notable Signatures From the Programme of the Concert Yesterday for the Halifax Relief Fund

American
Dec. 16, 1917

Concert Today at 3:30 for Halifax

Amer. 12/16

THE concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon in aid of the Halifax sufferers will begin promptly at 3:30 and will run in the neighborhood of two hours. All the seats were sold before the end of the first day of the sale and only standing room remains. The program in its entirety is as follows:

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER.
Overture, "In Memoriam," Sir Arthur Sullivan
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in E. Minor, Opus 64.....Mendelssohn
Mr. Kreisler
"Phidyle": Song with Orchestra.....Henry Duparc
Madame Melba
Intermission of Ten Minutes
"Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite (after "The Thousand Nights and a Night"), Opus 35.....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Songs with piano:
a Le Temps des Lilacs.....Chausson
b Les Papillons.....Chausson
c Les Anges Pleurent.....Bemberg
Madame Melba
Soli for Violin:
a Prelude and Allegro.....Pugnani
b Ronde in G Major.....Mozart
Mr. Kreisler

* * *

Sylvain Noack, the admirable violinist, who shares the first desk of the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Witek, will be soloist at the coming Symphony Concerts on Friday afternoon, December 21st, and Saturday evening, December 22d. Mr. Noack has not appeared as soloist since season before last and his return in this capacity will be warmly welcomed. He will play two pieces, both of them out of the ordinary for Symphony Concerts, but nonetheless interesting and attractive. The first piece will be the Poeme of Shausson and the second piece will be the "Havanaise" of Saint-Saens. The orchestral numbers will be Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture and the Pastoral Symphony of Beethoven. The program in its proper form is as follows:

Cherubini, Overture, "Anacreon."
Chausson, Poeme; Saint-Saens, Havanaise, Two solo pieces for Violin.
Beethoven, Symphony No. 6, in F-Major, "Pastorale."

MONITOR
DEC. 15, 1917

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Muck, Conductor; John McCormack, Soloist—Eighth program, presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon of Dec. 14, 1917: Mozart, symphony in E flat major; Handel, aria from "Atalanta," "Di ad Irene"; Ravel, "Daphnis et Chloe," orchestral fragments; Beethoven, aria, "Jehovah, Hear Me"; Balakireff, symphonic poem, "Thamar."

The first concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the season of 1906-07, many persons interested in music will recall, began with Beethoven's fifth symphony, which was said to sound like a work just composed, so novel was the style of its performance. The concert subscribers on that occasion fancied the interpretation which they applauded to be that of a German conductor. They could hardly suppose anything else; for in the program-book of the day was an official biographical sketch, to read which was to understand that the subject of it, the conductor, then appearing for the first time, was a German musician.

The question may be asked, Would the subscribers of 11 years ago have been so deeply moved as they were by that presentation of the fifth symphony, had they known that the interpreter to whose work they were listening was not a German, but a Swiss?

No, indeed; the very mention of Swiss conducting in Boston at any time during the opening decade of the present century would have met with nothing but scorn. Today, however, things have a different look, both on the side of art and on the side of expediency.

To take account of the artistic side a Swiss conductor, Mr. Ansermet came to the United States two winters ago with the Russian ballet and succeeded, with the acclaim of the dancers to help him, in giving certain symphonic pieces a vogue that is likely to last for years. One of these pieces, the "Thamar" symphonic poem of Balakireff, was on the program of yesterday afternoon. Furthermore, a Swiss composer, Mr. Bloch, came last season and made more or less stir with works for orchestra and with a chamber music work. So the thought of "Swiss" and that of "music" do not exclude each other the way they once did.

And then, on the side of expediency, there is to be noted the revision of the official biography, issued by the Boston Symphony management early this month in Philadelphia and a little later in Boston, a revision which could appropriately have been celebrated on Friday by a performance of the overture to "William Tell."

Considering how art and expediency take turns in the matter it must be that a musical public, as represented by its concert managers, is like a nation, as represented by its diplomats, which, says Dr. Cornejo, the Peruvian political critic, prefers alternately ideal and interest, being impelled at one time by enthusiasm and at another by egotism. In extenuation, however, of the present emphasis on the doctrine of interest, there is to be recorded a splendidly sonorous and stirringly rythmical reading of the poem, "Thamar," at the eighth Boston Symphony matinee. Dr. Muck fairly outdid other conductors in this piece from the Russian repertory, as he has formerly outdone them in Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Schéhérazade" suite.

Give him music in which the structural plan is reasonably conservative, in which the instrumental coloring is conceived in a not too anarchistic or too pretentious vein, in which the descriptive intention is clear and in which the narrative method is straightforward, and he is pretty sure to reach the peak of interpretative excellence.

The same praise is not to be accorded for the reading of the Ravel fragments from the "Daphnis" ballet, accurately though the conductor patterned out with his baton the irregular bars of the score, and mechanically nice as he was with the whole thing. How delightful it was to watch him put that sharp stress, without-ward swing of hand, on the second beat of the measures in five-quarter time! But music is to be heard, not seen. Had Ravel been in witty instead of pictorial mood, his purpose would not have been missed.

The program was unusually well put together. The Mozart symphony, openly scored for the wind choirs and omitting the oboe, left hearers fresh for the elaborate color combinations of Ravel and the full-sounding harmonies of Balakireff.

The singing of the soloist relieved the audience from continuous attention to instrumental detail, and at the same time it heightened the symphonic idea of the day, for Mr. McCormack kept in close association with the orchestra. He sang as one interpreting arias, not as one performing ballads. But he did not in the slightest degree neglect his English texts for the sake of showing off his voice. He hardly could have done that, though, even if he had wanted to, because his tone was not at its best. The merit of the tenor's work was in his distinct and smooth delivery of his words, in his finely polished phrasing and in his adaptation of delivery and phrasing to the demands of both poetic and musical expression

Boston Music Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Fritz Kreisler and Mme. Nellie Melba assisting, gives a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund, presenting the following program:

"The Star-Spangled Banner," arr. for orchestra; overture, "Memoriam," Sullivan; concerto for violin and orchestra in E minor, Mendelssohn (Mr. Kreisler); "Phidyle," song with orchestra, Duparc (Mme. Melba); "Schéhérazade," symphonic suite, Rimsky-Korsakoff; songs with piano: "Le temps des lilacs" and "Les papillons," Chausson, and "Les anges pleurent," Bemberg (Mme. Melba);

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 3, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

In Three Weeks Mahler's Second Symphony for the First Time—Dr. Muck's Newest Choral Undertaking—Other Concerts in Prospect—Mr. Hadley Wins a Prize—Items, Incidents, Opinions

THE Symphony Orchestra, the chorus that set a new standard for choral singing in Boston when it was lately heard in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and Dr. Muck, as leader of both forces, are now in full tide of preparation for the performance of Mahler's second symphony on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 22, at Symphony Hall. Hitherto the music has been played and sung only once in the United States—at New York while Mahler was the conductor of the Philharmonic Society and could himself train the orchestra, the chorus and the solo voice—an alto—that it requires. As in Beethoven's choral symphony, the voices share only in the Finale, which is the fifth movement of a symphony designed and wrought with Mahler's usual zest for magnitude and expanse. Nominally this second symphony is in the key of C minor, and it is written for modern orchestra reënforced by wind and percussion instruments to be played from a distance. Dr. Muck has increased the number of players accordingly; while Miss Merle Alcock, an excellent singer for such work, will undertake the little song that is preface to the Finale. The length of the symphony makes the performance an hour and forty minuts long, quite sufficient duration for the concert containing it.

In briefly summarized course, the symphony begins with three purely orchestral movements—a turbulent first allegro, the bustling theme of which is given out on the basses; an andante moderato founded upon a mildly graceful theme for strings, and a scherzo, which impresses the hearer by sustained energy, wit and point. Then comes the first vocal number, a setting for alto voice of a simple little poem from the collection "Das Knaben Wunderhorn," in which folk-pieces, Mahler found words for several of his symphonies. The chosen verses set forth the distress of men and the children of men on earth and their longing for heaven. The music clothing this song is as simple as the verse and much more lyrical.

Thereafter begins the finale with emphatic drum rhythms, making harp arpeggios and fortissimo wind chords. A distant call on the horn interrupts the movement before the entrance of the chief theme, one of those square and obvious tunes which Mahler sought when he would bear his music to swelling climax. After considerable extension the distant horn call comes again, this time with more insistence and with answering trumpets also in the distance. A flute in the orchestra trills the song of a morning bird, and then the chorus enters unaccompanied, and from this point takes possession of the music until the symphony ends with voices and orchestra driven to the utmost of ascending power. As usual, Mahler protests there is no programme.

Here in Boston

The Symphony Orchestra will depart on Sunday for what has now become its monthly visit to New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia. Its series of concerts in Baltimore was cancelled last autumn because of the furious outcries, now somewhat amusing in retrospect, raised there against Dr. Muck. More recently, the management has abandoned the similar series in Washington because of the regulation forbidding the entrance of German subjects, of whom there are some twenty in the orchestra, into the District of Columbia. There remain the series in Philadelphia, on Monday evenings; in Brooklyn, on Friday evenings;

ADVERTISER, JAN. 21, 1918.

HEROIC MUSIC FOR SYMPHONY CONCERT

Novel Entertainment Tuesday Evening, When Mahler Will Discard Program Recital

By LOUIS C. ELSON

In the "Resurrection Symphony," which will be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday night, there are no definite titles to the movements until the finale. Mahler was averse to programme music. Yet in a general way this is a struggle with fate, and final apotheosis.

Modern symphonies are always long and heavily scored; all the modern composers are wholesalers. This score calls for all the regular instruments and also four trombones, tuba, harps, organ, six kettle-drums with two drummers (and at the end a third one), two pair of cymbals, two gongs (high and low), triangle and bells.

The first movement is dramatic, the second pastoral, the third playful, with intimations of a tragedy in the background, and the finale, consisting of several movements, heroic. Note the powerful contrasts in the first movement, and the beauty of the second theme.

MELODIES AND TONE.

There are also simple melodies in the second movement, and plenty of tune, almost dances, in the third; decidedly Mahler is not one of the ugly noise-makers.

The finale is a picture of resurrection and final triumph. Here we at last find a title—"Urlicht"—the beginning of light. The alto sings:

"Oh, crimson rose,
Mna lies in troubles and in woes,
Man has but sorrow and distress,
Only in Heaven is Happiness."

The finale becomes a most massive movement with two female soloists and tremendous tonal forces with chorus. But Mahler is justified in this wholesale effect, for he achieves absolute grandeur by it. A heroic march follows the above words and then a sombre chorale. The last-named was suggested by Von Bulow's funeral in Hamburg.

Then the great struggle is renewed in the orchestra. This leads to the climax—"The Great Summons"—the Day of Judgment. At the very beginning of this portion notice the horn call against a trill on the bass drum, and the echo of the call. This is repeated. Then comes the carol of a bird, done by piccolo and flute, still against the trill of bass drum and kettle-drum, a strange touch of suspense. Finally, after this carol has died away, comes the mighty resurrection chorus:

"My dust thou shalt arise,
Exalted to the skies,
Eternal Life enthralls thee,
Given by Him who calls thee."

WORK COMPREHENSIBLE.

This solves the riddle and ends the struggle triumphantly. It almost seems like a premonition of Mahler's own fate. He was hounded to his very death by petty opposition and criticism in New York, and now he is beginning to have his posthumous triumph.

In spite of the great forces employed, the work will be comprehensible to almost every auditor, whether musician or not. The melodies of the purely instrumental movements, and the grandeur of the last, appeal to all alike.

MISS MAY PETERSON TO SING IN BIG SYMPHO

Photograph ©

AMERICAN & ADVERTISER
JAN. 20, 1918

Giant Symphony by Mahler to Be Given

LOVERS of choral music, lovers of the new in music, in addition to the great Symphoney public have their interest centred in the performance in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening of Gustav Mahler's stupendous "Resurrection" Symphony, which will enlist the services of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, materially augmented, especially in the brass section, the chorus of 350 singers which had such phenomenal success in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Merle Alcock, contralto, and May Peterson, soprano, all under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck. A special article on the Symphony will appear in the ADVERTISER tomorrow.

The production of this Symphony, which will be the first performance in Boston and the second in the United States, has been with Dr. Muck in a certain sense a loving tribute to a great genius that has passed away and a man with whom Dr. Muck in his youth was closely associated in music.

* * *

Mischa Elman, the popular Russian violinist, will play at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 3.

Next Wednesday evening Beatriz Barrington will give a monologue recital "in costume" at Steinert Hall.

Tuesday afternoon, January 29, at Steinert Hall, Miss Alice Allen will give a piano recital with a program made up of pieces by Brahams, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Arensky, Rubinstein, Cyril Scott and Liszt.

Tuesday evening, January 29, at Steinert Hall, Marjorie Church will give a piano recital. Godowsky, her former teacher, is well represented on her program with arrangements of pieces by Rameau and Loeilly. A new composition by Hans Ebell, "Katinka," and Schumann's sonata in G minor are also on the program.

* * *

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

16

Mahler's Manifold and Mighty Symphony of Life, Death and Resurrection

Man, Mind, Moods and Medium Fused Into Music at White Heat

NOT the easiest thing in the world is the reconstruction of a by-gone period in terms of viewpoint and character. When the war had continued for several months many persons were shrewd enough to realize that its readjustments in every mental and spiritual field would be great and varied; in music it became fashionable to prophesy a return to quasi-Mozartean simplicity, on the alleged ground that most of what has come to be regarded as modern in music is unwholesome and artificial, and that a period of pre-occupation with grim realities should purge the common soul of all but that which is sane and clean. After three years of a pretty severe application of the curative it seems less apparent that the regeneration of music in terms of an approved insipidity is immediately at hand; but one very curious effect the war has had upon the musical taste of the concertgoers; it has made much that only recently held the centre of attention as "modern" seem decidedly old-fashioned and once and for all of the past. In truth, we have already changed greatly, and the truth of this change is the more surely proved in that we have not felt the change in process, but only now are amazedly gaping at it in retrospect.

As to Mozartean simplicity, we have returned but little to it or anything like it. We have rediscovered Liszt, Berlioz, Mr. Huneker's "greater Chopin" and other writers who in the past have been accorded seats elsewhere than at the head of the table; we are finding Wagner a classicist, and learning to appreciate his melodic line, orchestral reserve and symphonic feeling (shades of Hanslick!); we are heeding the contemporary Frenchmen and finding them unexpectedly normal. On the other hand, we are becoming suspicious of Strauss, and of many lesser composers whom we admired before the war for their restless energy and broad sweep; do we fear in them the germs of the present war or of a war yet to come? Are we all at heart pacifists? Or do we at bottom deny these men our attention, not because of their driving energy, but because we suspect that this energy is not spontaneous; not because we are tired and distrustful of enthusiasm and aspiration, but because we have learned to make salutary discriminations and to demand that these qualities shall not be trumped up?

Recalling the Man

Next Tuesday evening Boston will have its first hearing of Gustav Mahler's second symphony for orchestra with chorus, often called the "Resurrection" symphony. I am rash enough to believe that in it are the qualities of power and sincerity which the world is seeking at present, and that consequently the audience will greet it with the enthusiasm of a wanderer at last finding his true home; yet, after all, Mahler as a name seems to belong to a bygone era, and so it seems tactful and strategic to approach him and his work at first in something of the spirit of the archæologist.

Gustav Mahler was a Bohemian Jew, born in Kalischt in 1860. His parents were interested in mental cultivation of every sort; but they lacked money and made up for this lack with a surplus of children. Gustav received a good education according to the standards of that remote epoch; that is to say, he was thoroughly trained in the studies of the "gymnasium," looking toward a course in the university. The probability is that he never heard of efficiency, the conservation of one's own energy, or how to live twenty-four hours a day. These educational shortcomings, which possibly had something to do with his later precepts and actions, are no doubt directly responsible for the fact that at one time he was a student in both the University of Vienna and the Vienna Conservatory of Music, while at the same time he supported himself by giving private lessons. His subsequent professional career was no less unmodern. His sensational series of operatic and orchestral conductorships had an almost uniform history. He usually began by having to face the task of overcoming the effects of his predecessors' sloth, after which he accomplished results which were the pride and delight of the earnest element in his public and among his colleagues. Always he was idolized by the serious musicians among his subordinates, and hated and feared by the rest. Invariably he startled the conservative among his patrons, seriously annoyed the indifferent, and was a veritable thorn in the flesh to the politicians and profiteers who infested the operatic field as they always infest any field in which they can be sure of a "good thing." He always ended his engagement with a quarrel, sometimes of his own making and sometimes of his opponents, but he never smoothed them over by any exercise of tact on his part; for he was as devoid of tact as a saint.

Mahler's most distinguished post, that of director at the Imperial Opera in Vienna, he eventually resigned because he believed, evidently with reason, that other than artistic considerations were weighing and would continue to weigh too heavily in the conduct of operatic affairs; and his subsequent incumbency as conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society was a long round of battles with the box office, with the union, and with one social and professional faction after another. Mahler died in 1911 of a formidable combination of diseases, worn out by over-work, over-worry, and almost ceaseless fighting. There is no doubt that most of his battles could have been [illegible] flinching was not in Mahler's nature, and the world is the richer by a series of symphonic compositions which for sheer forthrightness have never been surpassed, and probably never will be.

It was a part of Mahler's good or bad fortune to show his character very plainly in his face, and there are a number of portraits which may be profitably studied by the would-be analyst. There is a fairly youthful picture, from perhaps the period of the second symphony, which is exceptionally attractive: the cheeks are fuller and the texture of the skin smoother than in later portraits; a gentle, poetic, dreamy, idealistic expression occupies the features which afterward showed so much pugnacity; the chronic squint with which Mahler's near sight afflicted him has not yet deepened into a scowl, but takes the form of a not unpleasant concentration of rather visionary character. Orlik's etching of Mahler in his prime gives a very clear idea of his intelligence and force; in this picture he is beginning to look severe, and there is a tightening of the lips and jaw which suggests the disharmony of an indomitable will which is no longer ignorant of the taste of defeat. Many of the later pictures recall the familiar classroom witticism of the irresistible force meeting the immovable object; there is in particular a caricature in which all the ugly features of Mahler's face are exaggerated only enough to reveal his fighting qualities as they really were. Finally there is an extraordinary death-mask, in which an uncanny smile seems to suggest that its wearer has solved the eternal mystery, and like the Sphinx, is silent.

Noting the Personality

Mahler's personality in life was unbelievably dynamic. I saw him in Rome in the spring of 1910, when he was conducting a few symphony concerts with an orchestra which was not to his liking. The auditorium was so arranged that seats were to be had in a gallery at the rear of the stage, in a position such that the conductor's facial expressions were clearly and minutely visible. The orchestra was far from adequate to Mahler's exacting standards of interpretation; but under his vigorous and compelling leadership it played several degrees better than its real best. By the second concert, however, under the provocation of remarks which they could not relish—I believe Mahler celebrated a particularly bad rehearsal by calling them a lot of bootblacks—they plucked up enough courage to conspire against him, and brought a number to grief. Unfortunately for them, they chose the number before the intermission; after the pause the audience had the rare pleasure of seeing a hundred men return to the stage looking like whipped curs, followed in a few moments by a physically small man with the face of a demon, before whom they all cowered abjectly.

A few months later I saw Mahler under conditions made to his order, when he produced his eighth symphony in Munich with orchestral and choral forces to the number of a thousand. With unlimited opportunities to do exactly as he pleased, Mahler was in fine fettle; he shut grand dukes out of his rehearsals, frightened the lives out of his adult helpers, and won the hearts of his children's chorus. At the performance he seemed to be on fire, and to kindle his musicians; one might have sworn to seeing blue lightnings at his fingertips and about his head. At the close, the children presented him with a wreath; and his acknowledgment of it was one of the most unstudiedly graceful, generous, and touching acts which I have ever witnessed in a public place.

An incomprehensible person—to the respectable routineer—a man who thought artistic principles important enough to fight his fellow-men about; a man who, when he had a task in hand, regarded his associates and himself not as fallible human beings, but as tools which required only will power to render them capable of practicable perfection, and who would not content himself with even a very high order of approximation, so long as only self-indulgence stood in the way of something better; a titan of intellect and will, and a demon when angry! yet as simple at heart as a child, a friend of babies and animals, quiet, almost shy, unselfish, with an almost naive faith in human nature, in many respects as gentle as in others he was overbearing. Whether the ogre of the rehearsal-room which was once held up to frighten musical children out of their five wits ever really existed or not, Mahler certainly made enemies right and left, and bitter ones too; but on the other hand he won and retained the firm friendship and artistic respect of such men as Brahms, Bulow, Rodin, Hauptmann, Hoffmannsthal, Bahr, Schnitzler, Strauss, Reger, Rolland, Charpentier, Dukas, Casella, and many others.

The Symphony of Tuesday

Mahler left behind him a youthful cantata, forty-two songs, eight numbered symphonies, which were produced during his lifetime, a posthumous unnumbered symphony entitled "The Song of the Earth," a posthumous symphony numbered "ninth," and fragments of a tenth symphony, which are not to be given to the world.

Dr. Paul Stefan is responsible for the statement that Mahler began the composition of his second symphony during the period of his stay in Leipzig—that is to say, at some time during the years 1886-1888. He finished it in 1894. It was always one of his favorites, so far as may be judged from his activity in seeking and directing performances of it, that he took endless pains with the composition is known, and there is a [illegible]

Gustav Mahler

From the Portrait by Erler in the Conservatory at Vienna of Klopstock a text exactly suited to his needs and desires.

Of course, the symphony has an underlying philosophical or religious idea, and all dispute as to whether it is "programme music" or not is ridiculous. That in fact is entirely a matter of definition, and definitions are a vain thing for safety. Mahler, of course, went through the usual hocus-pocus of asking public and critics to listen to the work as "absolute music," and even exceeded the zeal of his brother-writers under like circumstances by publicly drinking a toast to the eternal confusion of analytical programmes. Afterwards, like many another, he confided his basic programme to friends, allowed it to leak out slowly, but refused to supply details.

This very composer-like trick excites critical ire at each new instance, and those of us who read our Symphony programme books are familiar with a plausible "entr'acte" on the subject. But who understands or defends the composer's point of view? In the first place, the critic and the layman are alike convinced that there are two sharply defined methods of writing, according to one of which the composer at every point sacrifices every musical consideration to the prescriptions of a perfectly definite programme—every detail of which is as obvious and tangible as the items in a building contract; according to the other of which he devotes himself purely to musical considerations solely by religiously excluding from his mind every trace of a literary basis. In reality, both on great occasions and in the ordinary drift of routine, a composer is as likely as not to write in a style which has its basis in some tangible mood, emotion, or idea of a very general sort, but which involves no detailed musical narrative or description, leaving him free, instead, to devote most of his attention to writing an interesting piece.

But what shall he do? If he admits any programme at all, the critics will demand a plethora of literal details, the public will religiously set about hunting them out, and both will probably ridicule his best effects as though they were unsuccessful attempts at description, when he meant them for nothing of the kind. If, on the other hand, he washes his hands of programme altogether, he is held to account for having strayed away from the strict letter of the sonata form, or for having introduced a fifth movement or a chorus, or for having dropped into "the" (! ! !) dramatic style, and no matter how obvious his true programme may be, nobody detects it, because nobody is looking for it. The easiest, and by all odds the usual, way out is to allow a few hints to leak out indirectly. It is true that the commentators, like other conscientious folk, will make the most out of what little they can get, and that what they make out of what they can get will be of a nature to make the angels weep, but the composer can always evade critical ler allowed the information to leak through that in it he had sought to express a modern view of life, death and resurrection. That all this is fairly evident from the music and the text themselves made little difference to the reviewers; your modern critic is a fellow much intimated by the errors of his forebears, and his ears are sadly calloused by the hard labor exacted of him by his employers. In judging a new and unusual work, his chances of escaping from the habitual cowardice of his tribe are slight, unless he's fortunate enough to possess a vindictive temper. Moreover, there is the demand for a literal detailed programme or none. Who is the composer, that he should write as though the art were of his making? When the reviewers were obliged to stop discussing whether Mahler had a programme or not, they began to wrangle as to whether his treatment of the symbolism of resurrection should be regarded as Catholic, Protestant, Judaic, early Pagan, neo-Darwinian, materialistic, spiritualistic, pantheistic, nihilistic, ideal, literal, hyperbolic, diabolic, satiric, lyric, angelic or commercially strategic. Mahler was wise enough not to shed further light on the subject, with the happy result that after a year or so the critics were thoroughly irritated and out of sorts with the very idea of the piece, and could agree only in heartily damning it to the nethermost hell; so its success was assured.

Toward the Finale

The second symphony is divided into five movements. The first three, in which the traditionalist may take comfort in recognizing his accustomed sonata-allegro, adagio, and scherzo, are orchestral. The fourth movement is an alto solo. The fifth, which is the longest, is an extended, free form of dramatic character, with choral climax. The prevailing key is C minor.

The first movement opens with restless and stormy music, after the manner of a sombre march. Suddenly there is a change: a lyrical theme of ethereal beauty for the moment entirely obliterates the first impression, and substitutes for it a mood of tenderness rare in modern music—but only for a moment. The stormy music returns, and the pious academician in the corner who consented to come only to prove his own breadth of mind and the inferiority of the music is startled at the prospect of a modern writer's repeating his exposition; but this time the second theme fails to return, and its place is taken by a march of specifically funereal character. The development begins with a repetition of the second theme which is like the sun breaking through clouds; but the ping rest-less strains break rudely in upon it. The evolution of the original sombre marches through two mighty crescendos; in the second a new theme is introduced, and its first four notes are those of the "Dies Irae." The climax of this [illegible]

The music of this movement is warmly melodious, with a light but rich orchestral accompaniment in which ideal and hymn-like passages alternate. It is the most sensuously beautiful bit in the symphony, and is the favorite with many audiences.

The Finale Itself

The final movement is the longest, most complex, most pictorial, and most dramatic of the five. Of the problems presented by the "programme" I shall speak later; for the present, a summary of the musical procedure of the movement seems necessary, although such a summary is not too easy to give without the use of copious thematic illustrations.

The opening is a restatement of the climax of St. Anthony's sermon. After this there are mysterious rumblings and stirrings. Horns behind the stage utter a solemn call. Now comes a series of elaborations of that theme in the first movement, the first four notes of which were those of the "Dies Irae," and there is a new answering theme which later, in the setting of the text, identifies itself with the thought of the resurrection, as well as one which is likewise associated with the idea of faith. These lead up to a majestic climax.

A formidable series of long drum-rolls ushers in a wild and fantastical march, in which all the themes of the movement are freely bandied about. In this march, one can believe anything possible; trumpets scream, bells toll, piccolos shriek, drums beat, hidden players' instruments cut across with fantastic martial strains at a seemingly infinite distance. It is the ghastly panoply of a mediæval vision of the Judgment Day; one can almost hear the rattling bones of the dead rising from their graves. All leads up to a mighty and terrific crash, which is immediately followed by a general quiet and a return to the mysterious sounds of the beginning of the movement.

Far behind the stage, the horns again sound their summons, and are answered from various directions by trumpets. On the stage, there is only a mysterious rumbling of the bass drum and the piping of bird-calls by flute and piccolo, and then silence. So softly as to seem almost a whisper, the chorus sings the words of Klopstock's "Great Summons":

> Rise again, yes, rise again
> Shalt thou, my dust, after brief rest!
> Immortal life, immortal life
> He who hath called thee shall give.

A peaceful orchestral interlude, in which the motive of the resurrection dominates, leads to a second stanza:

> To bloom again art thou sown,
> To bloom again art thou sown,
> The Lord of harvests cometh,
> And reapeth us who died.

Another orchestral interlude; then the alto soloist sings:

> Believe, my heart oh! believe,
> Naught shall be lost to thee!
> Thine, yes, thine shall be what thou hast longed for,
> What thou hast loved, what thou hast striven for!
> Believe, for naught else wast thou born,
> For naught else hast thou lived and suffered!

The chorus answers::

> What has existed must pass;
> What has passed must rise again!
> Hear, to tremble!
> Prepare to live!

The music quickens, and swings into a duet between alto and soprano voices:

> Oh, pain! thou all-pervader!
> I am wrung by thee!
> Oh, death! conqueror of all,
> Now thou art conquered!
>
> I will take unto myself wings;
> With them in love and striving
> I will fly into the light
> To which no eye hath attained!

The chorus takes up this last stanza in a passage notable for the beautiful interweaving of the different voices; then in a broad unison passage as simple as the immediate predecessor was complex, the chorus proclaims:

> I shall die, that I may live!
> I shall die, that I may live!
> Rise again, yes, rise again
> Shalt thou, my heart!
>
> What thou hast beaten,
> What thou hast beaten,
> To God, to God shall it bear thee!

Then, with organ and bells, there is a serenely triumphant close.

Why, in the light of this modern view of resurrection, did Mahler go out of his way to introduce all the gruesome terrors of the mediæval "day of wrath and sorrow"? Was he, as his detractors hastened to insist, so intoxicated by a love of musical sensationalism that the opportunities for making a loud noise offered by the conventional notion of the Day of Judgment led him astray from the paths of artistic virtue? Mahler was guilty not even of so great an offense as Maeterlinck in "The Blue Bird," when the children go to the graveyard at midnight to ask the dead for the secret of happiness, are terrified by apparitions and sounds, and then learn that "there are no dead." Maeterlinck deliberately builds up an artificial fright in order to lend point to an idea in itself beautiful, but lacking in what theatrical managers call "punch." Mahler's symphony, however, is not even symbolically descriptive, in any objective sense: Mahler is not describing the life, death and resurrection of a man or of Man; he is contemplating life, death and resurrection, and recording his own thoughts and emotions that others may hear and find faith.

An answer to the bitterness of the scherzo is forthcoming in the ensuing alto solo. The following unmetric transliteration shows a division into lines of the poem, and the setting in the main follows this division:

> Oh, rosebud red!
> Man lies in greatest need!
> Man lies in greatest pain!
> Rather would I be in Heaven!
>
> Then I came to a broad way:

[illegible] first and second move-forgiveness for its shortcomings, so in the last one experiences under the guidance of a poetic seer, first a sense of the solemn majesty of death, then that of its horror, and eventually of the hope held out by faith. To most men who think at all, these problems have had to be solved in one way or another, and to many of the finest Mahler's presentation of doubt and faith must be familiar in detail and outcome. To sum up: Mahler in his second symphony writes subjectively and introspectively; one might entitle the first four movements Struggle, Peace, Scorn, and Pity, and the last Awe, Dread, and Faith—remembering always to recognize in these terms only the names of moods, each reflecting a point of view, not a story of action. Naturally, this will not satisfy the technicians, with their careful discrimination between abstract beauty and description, and their demands for a literal detailed programme, but of them one must say, as Stevenson said of words, "The world was made first, and on a different plan."

The Super-Orchestra

Of course, a man preoccupied with grandiose ideas is likely to evolve a magniloquent habit of expressing them; and in this respect, Mahler has not disappointed the type of person who fashes his head overmuch concerning methods and conventions. The size of the orchestral forces demanded for a performance of this second symphony was a more than nine days' wonder. Some of the abusive things said about Mahler's "extravagance" and "sensationalism" suggest, indeed, that he perhaps later wrote his "Symphony of a Thousand" to divert attention from his second. In addition to the usual string body, which must be "as large as possible" and must possess double-basses with the deep C-string, Mahler demands four flutes, all of which have to play piccolo at one time and another; four oboes, two of which exchange with English horns; two small E-flat clarinets; three ordinary clarinets; a bass clarinet; four bassons, two of which have to keep a double-bassoon warm between them; six horns in the orchestra and four behind the stage; six trumpets in the orchestra and four behind the stage, two of whom, however, may save money to their employer by a willing use of shoe-leather; four trombones; a tuba of the deepest-dyed bass-ness; two sets of kettledrums, with as many drummers; bass drum; cymbals; high tam-tam; deep tam-tam; triangle; military drum, if possible reinforced by several others; little bells; three large bells; ruthe (a bundle of light rods swished over a drum-head); bass drum, kettle-drum, and triangle behind the stage; and organ. Of course, the conventional comment is, "Mozart used only two horns, and made greater effects"—I recall this for fear it may not occur to some one—but did he?

Mahler's use of this really enormous orchestra is his own, and more than justifies itself. Instead of increasing the contrapuntal complexity of his score by writing more independent parts, he uses the different families of instruments in self-sufficient groups, remaining faithful for the most part to fairly simple diatonic harmony, and cleverly doubling and trebling his melody in such a way as to make it always stand out without forcing. Such groups he balances against one another rather than combines—a few at a time and simply for the most part, but in formidable numbers and with electrifying dissonances at moments of climax. His themes are ugly, undecorative and bare as a range of mountains above the timber line; but like them they have grandeur and profile. For the most part his blended tone-qualities are mellow, but not luscious. The trait in his scoring which most violently attracts or repels the hearer according to taste is his tremendous sonority, which very frequently surpasses that even of Wagner and Strauss. This is not an increase in noise, but rather in sound; many people's ears, however, get uncomfortably full of it in a short while. Most of us young fellows revel in it!

Intrinsic Quality

Two qualities of Mahler's music stand out from all others: its tremendous energy, and its uncompromising forthrightness. With Mahler everything is always at white heat; he overpowers you with the force of his presentation; a moment after he has struck you dumb with the dogmatic certainty of his thematic ideas. He convinces you by knocking you down first, paralyzing you next, and eventually transforming you into an altogether new, rather involuntary, and wholly Mahlerian person as, in "Androcles and the Lion," Ferrovius makes conversions. Whether you enjoy this sort of thing depends a great deal upon whether your blood is of the kind that reacts at once when you step out of your bath, or whether you are the sort of person whose happy field is the "polite gathering." People who live their lives on the supposition that a civilized man is a domesticated savage, tamed to the amenities by suppression of desire, lift a deprecating eyebrow at Mahler; but those whose ideal of civilized life is an intensifying and intelligent direction of all man's instincts and energies, to the achievement of desiderata unattainable by the sluggish brute, find in Mahler a brother made articulate by a greater vision.

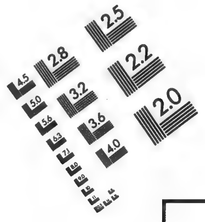
It will be interesting to see, next Tuesday evening, whether the war has directed our artistic instincts toward soothing unrealities, or toward a greater receptivity than heretofore to the essentials of life seen in the light of courageous prophecy. The performance will of course be excellent; and I expect to find an audience of people who of late have had serious things to think of, eagerly according de-

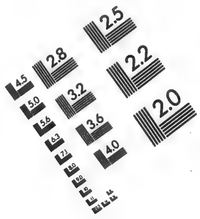
REDUCTION RATIO 12x

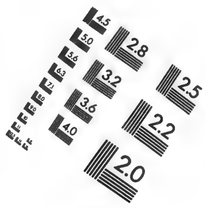
2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

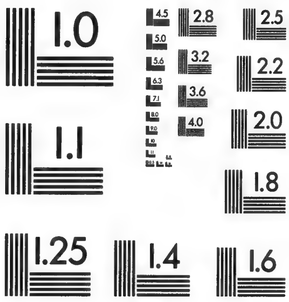






150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

1.0 mm

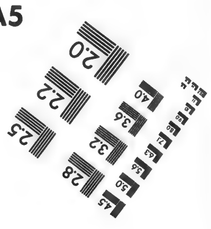
1.5 mm

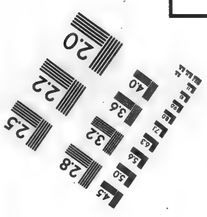
2.0 mm

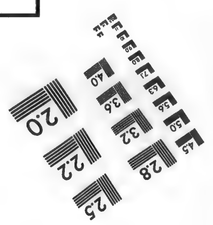
2.5 mm

A5

A4







PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
3.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

Mah

NOT the e is the gone point a war ha months many pers to realize that its mental and spirit and varied; in mu to prophesy a re simplicity, on the
of what has come ern in music is ur and that a perio grim realities sh soul of all but clean. After th vere application less apparent t
music in terms o immediately at h effect the war h taste of the conce
that only recently tion as "modern" ioned and once a truth, we have and the truth o surely proved in change in proces
edly gaping at it

As to Mozartea turned but little
We have rediscc
Huneker's "grea writers who in th seats elsewhere
table; we are fi and learning to a orchestral resery (shades of Hansl contemporary Fr unexpectedly no we are becoming of many lesser mired before tho ergy and broad s
the germs of the
yet to come?
ifiists? Or do w men our attentic driving energy, bu
this energy is not we are tired and and aspiration, bu to make salutar demand that the trumped up?

Recalling the Ma

Next Tuesday its first hearing symphony for or called the "Resu am rash enough the qualities of p
the world is seek consequently the the enthusiasm o
ing his true home
a name seems to and so it seems approach him a something of the

Gustav Mahler
born in Kalisch were interested every sort; but made up for this children. Gustav tion according to remote epoch; t thoroughly traine
"gymnasium," loc
the university. T never heard of ef of one's own ener
four hours a day.
comings, which do with his later
no doubt directly that at one time the University of Conservatory of time he supporte vate lessons. Hi career was no le tional series of op ductorships had a
He usually begar task of overcomin
decessors' sloth, plished results wi delight of the ear and among his co idolized by the s his subordinates, the rest. Invaria servative among noyed the indiffer thorn in the fles profiteers who in as they always they can be sure always ended his rel, sometimes sometimes of his smoothed them tact on his part of tact as a sa

Mahler's most director at the he eventually res evidently with re
tistic considerat would continue the conduct of subsequent incun
New York Phil long round of b with the union, professional factic died in 1911 of a f diseases, worn ou worry, and almost is no doubt that m have been

Symphony Concert --- Art and

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

OVERTURE, SERENADE, CONCERTO IN CONTRAST

Berlioz in an Unfamiliar Piece, Romantic and Rhetorical—Chaikovsy in Suave and Elegant Artifice, Salted Finally with Folk-Tune—Brahms's Second Piano Concerto, with Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the Orchestra All Enriching and Releasing the Music

CONTRAST abounded in the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon. romantic music—Berlioz's overture to his unsung opera, "Les Francs-Juges"—for beginning; salon music—Chaikovsky's Serenade for Strings—for ending; in long space between and in substitute, perhaps, for the usual symphony, Brahms's symphonic and standard concerto in B-flat with Mr. Gabrilowitsch playing the piano part. None of the three pieces was too familiar, though the concerto was heard for the third time in successive seasons; while the overture sounded almost novel and the serenade proved one of those light, graceful numbers too seldom set by a long line of conductors upon their programmes. Berlioz's music disclosed anew the large sonorities, the graphic contrasts, the vivid tonal rhetoric of which Dr. Muck and the orchestra are capable. Chaikovsky's serenade confirmed afresh the varied voice, elegance and artifice of leader and string choir; while the concerto set in many-sided aspect the imparting and the heightening abilities of band, conductor and pianist.

Whether these three were animating the first movement with incisive rhythm and energetic, mounting progress, joining ardent voices in the second, crystallizing the third in songful beauty, or more lightly weaving the glinting pattern of the finale, they clarified, vitalized and glamored the music in a fashion that would have set the laboring audiences, say of the nineties, with Brahms the abstruse and arid, into rejoicing wonder. He passes as a composer of the last quarter of the nineteenth century; but not until the twentieth has his music hereabouts been opened and vivified. A great gap indeed separates Mr. Fiedler and Dr. Muck as conductors, but together, with incidental aid from the passing Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Stock, they have made Brahms keen pleasure to the audiences of Symphony Hall. Nor, as yesterday, have they lacked aid in the good work from such pianists as Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Mr. Bauer, such violinists as Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Witek. By so much, then, and the more for many-sidedness a concert to be enjoyed.

No doubt, Berlioz's overture needs the aid of an expatiating programme-book to inform the casual listener (who may not have the Encyclopædia Britannica in his head, long as he has had it in his mail), that the "Francs-Juges" or the Fehmic Judges were a secret, sardonic, savage tribunal, looming grim and grisly out of mediæval Westphalia. As little may he know, until he has scanned learned pages, that they and the gruesome deeds told or imagined of them kindled Berlioz's romantic imagination until he wrote an opera in which they figured and of which only this overture survives. Yet even were he of those keeping the pleasures of the programme-book for "the closet" rather than the concert-room, to him the music may have spoken by intrinsic voice. There is formidable, perhaps awesome, beginning, when brass and bassoons join in hollow and sonorous thunders; there is no mistaking mystery and foreboding when the strings shake and shudder, the cymbals shiver and the bass-drum lugubriously murmurs. Between this music of the scene, as it might be called in the mute opera which suggested it, a characteristic melody, saved from commonplace by clear warmth of imagination and expression, peoples the invisible stage with devotion pitted against doom.

Berlioz songful, Berlioz in romantic agitation, Berlioz graphic, but, most of all, Berlioz loving the ardors of melodramatic tonal contrast and situation, and more and more possessed by the tonal rhetoric which turns the end into the "grand crescendo" which was the strepitous fashion of a voluble and exuberant operatic day. Programme-book or no programme-book, the overture to "Les Francs-Juges" still speaks for itself, and the more forcefully when there is a Muck to release and swell this romantic rhetoric, this power of vivid tones, as though they were as real and sincere to him as to Berlioz himself. In life he was always blaming conductors; now in the Elysian Fields he must be praising not a few.

For itself also, as limpidly, brightly and changefully as sunshine, dappled here and there with shadow, speaks Chaikovsky's Serenade. However hysterical and hackneyed, shallow and faded he may seem in some of his symphonies and overture-fantasias, there is no reproaching him in these light, tranquil, fanciful pieces. The little sonatina with which the Serenade begins is amiable, agreeable artifice. Sonorities, full and fine, recall the voice of such pieces in the eighteenth century; suave are the phrases; ingenious yet unlabored the workmanship; dexterous and imaginative the play with the timbres a string choir yields. The waltz escapes fluent commonplace by adept and playful modulation of pace and rhythm, by a Viennese alternation of languor and animation. Wistful sentiment, never swelled into incongruous or too personal emotion, colors with melancholy the songful little "elegy."

So far the eighteenth century, which heard serenade after serenade in this fashion, might have listened pleasured, approving. If it questioned at all, the final movement would have been the prompting. Unmistakably [illegible] and of mere music-making for the composer; yet it is not so when the horns color with light and shadow a melody that the strings send penetrating into the listening imagination. Rather, the whole concerto, in such releasing performance as it received Friday, seems like an upspringing piece of tonal architecture, rising in sharp and energetic line, setting above frieze of fancy, frieze of quiet beauty and culminating in airy pattern and light pinnacle. Seldom can it have sounded so musically clear and warm, in such sensuous voice and ardor of mood as it did from Dr. Muck and Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

The unity of accomplishment and impression in the whole performance was indeed so integral that it is hard to part the several factors in it. Conductor, pianist, orchestra were throughout as of a single understanding, sensibility and imparting voice. To Dr. Muck and to Mr. Gabrilowitsch equally, the music of the first movement seemed to owe clarity of outline, rhythmic verve and animated progress. To the orchestra the second and the third movements owed not a little richness of tonal color. From all three sprang the lightness and the brightness with which the Finale spun itself. The pianist as virtuoso shone most clearly in the prismatic loveliness of tone with which he glamored the Andante, in the felicity of his touch with accent and ornament in the last movement. In the incisive-commingled the ways of his illustrious predecessors and added to them his own.

By, and For, Mahler

For the first time in Boston and for the second in America, the second symphony, in C minor, of Gustav Mahler—the so-called Resurrection Symphony — will be played and sung in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, beginning promptly at eight o'clock. Elsewhere on these pages Professor Philip Greeley Clapp of the Department of Music in Dartmouth College, has written an extended, interesting and illuminating account of the music with appropriate digression to the career and the personality of the composer. The forces concerned in the performance are Miss Peterson of the Metropolitan Opera House for the soprano part in the choral finale; Mme. Merle Alcock, the concert-singer of rising reputation, for the alto preface to it; the chorus, 350 strong, that Mr. Townsend has trained for Mahler's symphony as he trained it for Beethoven's ninth, with result unsurpassed in the musical annals of the city; the Symphony Orchestra in full force and increased in the brass choir; and to guide and sway all these forces Dr. Muck, stirred alike by wonted zeal for the task in hand and by a personal admiration and friendship for the composer. By [illegible] there is pro[illegible]

Church Organist at Fourteen

Joseph Bonnet

Who Will Make His First Appearance Here in Concert at Symphony Hall, Wednesday Evening, Jan. 23, in Behalf of Edith Wharton's French War Charities — Relief Work Deserving Generous Public Support

THERE is no doubt about the excellence of the concert to be given at Symphony Hall, Wednesday evening, Jan. 23, in behalf of the Edith Wharton war charities, for besides Madame Gills, the soprano, and the playing by the Société des Instruments Anciens, Joseph Bonnet, who has had a distinguished career as an organist, will give several numbers. This is Mr. Bonnet's first public appearance in Boston, except at a church recital, and his coming, therefore, affords an opportunity which music-lovers, particularly lovers of organ music, will not be likely to miss.

A Church Organist at 14

Joseph Bonnet was born in Bordeaux in 1884. His father, organist of the Church of Ste. Eulalie, began to teach him and Joseph showed extraordinary aptitude. At fourteen, he was appointed organist of St. Nicholas, and then of St. Michael's Church in his native town, where he gave his first recital. He went to Paris, and immediately entered the Conservatoire under the tuition of Alexander Guilmant.

After some years of study the first prize for organ-playing and improvisation was awarded him after a brilliant rendering of Liszt's "Fantasia" in the chorale, "Le Prophète"—a work little known and seldom played on account of its difficulty. After obtaining the Alexander Guilmant prize, Bonnet entered as candidate in the open competition for the post of organist of St. Eustache. All the competitors were first prize men of the Paris Conservatoire. The judges unanimously awarded Bonnet the palm.

Bonnet's repertoire comprises the whole of organ literature, from Frescobaldi, Buxtehude, Clerambault, de Grigny, Scarlatti, Händel and Bach to Schumann and César Franck. Aided by a marvellous memory, he plays without score works of Thiele, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Liszt to Max Reger and his contemporaries. During 1910-11, Bonnet gave more than forty recitals at St Eustache, no single piece being played more than once. He has composed for his instrument a large number of concert pieces, including Variations de Concert, Poemes d' automne, and three other volumes of twelve pieces each.

An Interesting Programme

As the net proceeds of this concert are all for Mrs. Wharton's work—which is one of the most deserving of all the relief efforts in France—so all the artists are French people; and although special mention is made of Mr. Bonnet's organ-playing, all the musicians are so talented that it would be a fine matter to draw distinctions.

The programme is as follows:

Concerto Pour les Violes..Ph. Em. Bach 1714-1788
Allegro, Adiago, Allegretto.
(Quatour des Violes.)
Recit de tierce en taille...N. de Grigny 1671-1703
Prelude .....Clerambault 1676-1749
Fantasie and Fugue in G minor.....
J. S. Bach 1685-1750
(Organ, Mr. Joseph Bonnet.)
Suite En quatre Parties.....Lorenziti 1740-1794
(Viole d'Amour: Mr. Henri Casadesus.)
Chanson triste .....Duparc
Mandoline .....Gabrielle Faure
Souvenances ..... Rachmaninow
The Bird.....Dwight Fiske
Noel des Enfants qui n'ont plus de maison
Debussy
(Mme. Gabrielle Gills.)
Concerto in D.....G. F. Händel
Adiago, Allegro, Aria, Allegro.
(Mr. Joseph Bonnet and Societe des Instruments Anciens.)

Mme. Gabrielle Gills will sing the "Marseillaise" by special request at the conclusion of the programme.

Nicolai Schneer at the Piano for Mme. Gills.

The Boston Committee

On the Boston committee for the Edith Wharton war charities are the following-named persons:

Mrs. George R. Fearing, Jr. (chairman),
Mrs. R. L. Agassiz,
Mrs. F. L. Ames,
Mrs. Gaspar G. Bacon,
Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Bigelow,
Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby,
Mrs. Fulton Cutting, Jr.,
W. C. Endicott,
Mrs. Allan Forbes,
Judge and Mrs. Grant,
Mrs. F. L. Higginson, Jr.,
Mrs. F. L. Higginson,
Mrs. George C. Lodge,
Mrs. Harold Peabody,
Mr. and Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman,
William K. Richardson,
Mrs. Bayard Thayer,
Mrs. Henry G. Vaughan,
Mrs. F. S. Whitwell,

Tickets may be had of Herrick, or at Symphony Hall, and persons who feel disposed to contribute to Mrs. Wharton's charities, otherwise than by buying tickets, may send checks to Dudley S. Pickman, treasurer, 53 State street. Any amount, however small, will be gratefully received.

Post Jan. 21, 1918

TO GIVE MAHLER'S SYMPHONY

Aided by a Chorus of 350 Singers — Rendition Expected to Be Season's Best — Concerts of the Week

The performance of Gustav Mahler's second symphony, next Tuesday night in Symphony Hall, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, and a chorus of 350 singers, who distinguished themselves highly in the recent performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony, will be one of the most important musical events of the season.

The magnitude of Mahler's symphonic compositions, the vast instrumental, and, often, vocal forces employed, has made performances of them rare in this country. We in Boston know only the fifth symphony in C-sharp minor, which has been performed here by Mr. Gericke, in 1906, and Dr. Muck. The eighth symphony has been performed in Philadelphia and New York under Mr. Stokowski. The second symphony was given in New York, under Mahler's direction, by the New York Symphony Society, in 1908. It has been called the "Resurrection Symphony." It calls for an immense orchestra—as many strings as possible—and some of the double basses with strings tuned to the contra-C; 2 harps, 4 flutes, interchangeable with 4 piccolos; 4 oboes, two interchangeable with English horns; 5 clarinets, one interchangeable with a bass clarinet, and when possible the two clarinets in E-flat doubled in the loudest passages; 4 bassoons, one interchangeable with double bassoon; 6 horns, with four horns in the distance added at times to the six; 4 trombones, 1 tuba, organ, 2 sets of three kettledrums for three three drummers; bass drum, snare drum (when possible several of them); cymbals, a gong of high pitch and a gong of low pitch, triangle, glockenspiel, 3 bells, a ruthe (an instrument also used by Strauss in "Electra"); in the distance a pair of kettle drums, 1 bass drum, cymbals, triangle, soprano solo, alto solo and mixed chorus. The performance takes an hour and 40 minutes.

It was this work which Doctor Muck had planned to do in conjunction with the celebrated Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto in the spring of 1915. The war, however, prevented all that, and it was not until the Symphony Orchestra's own chorus was formed last summer that it became again possible to present this masterpiece. The chorus, under Mr. Stephen Townsend, has been working on it at weekly rehearsals since early in November and the orchestra has devoted many hours on the score. The first complete rehearsal of orchestra and chorus was held last Wednesday night with much success, and another rehearsal will be held tomorrow night, with the performance Tuesday evening.

The soloists will be Merle Alcock, contralto, to whom is allotted a very important part in the fourth movement, and May Peterson, soprano.

The symphony was composed by Mahler between 1886 and 1894. It is in five movements. The first three are purely instrumental. The fourth is planned for contralto voice and orchestra, while in the last movement contralto and soprano solo voices are used in addition to the chorus.

The symphony gets its name "Resurrection" from the fact that the last movement is built about Klopstock's Ode with that title. This is sung by the chorus a capella.

Mahler, before his death, stated that in the first movement he has outlined the death of a hero who has fallen in Promethean struggle for his ideal, for his knowledge of life and death. The general scheme of the symphony is as follows:

Scope of Work

First Movement — Allegro maestoso (with earnest and solemn expression throughout). The chief great theme is that of a funeral march, with episodes of consolation. A chorale is heard in the march.

Second Movement—Andante con moto (in a very easy-going manner). The chief theme is a dance tune announced by the strings. As one commentator finds an ironical view of human enjoyment in this music, another finds joy in the contemplation of nature.

Third movement—Scherzo (with a quietly flowing movement.) According to some the Scherzo was suggested by Mahler's song taken from the Wunderhorn of St. Anthony of Padua's sermon to the fishes. The Scherzo is a second typical figure. "The hero in manhood goes forth into the world, and sees how stupidity and vulgarity, like the fishes of the legend, are incorrigible." There is at last an outcry of disgust.

Fourth movement (very solemn, but in a simple manner). An alto voice begins with the words, "O, rosebud red! Mankind lies in sorest need!" etc., concluding, "I am from God, to him must I return! The dear God will give me a light, will lighten me to eternal, blessed life."

Fifth movement. After the first tormented section, there is a reference to the coming "Resurrection" motive. The chorus with soprano solo sings a capella Klopstock's "Resurrection Ode." She also continues with words by Mahler: "Oh, believe, my heart, to thee shall naught be lost! Thine is what thou didst long for, thine what thou has loved, for which thou has strived." Chorus: "With wings that I myself have won, shall I soar upwards . . . I shall die in order to live! Yes, my heart, thou wilt rise up in a trice. What thou hast conquered will bear thee up to God." Mahler himself wrote to Arthur Seidl that he had searched literature to find the liberating word for his finale. He happened to be in Hamburg at the burial ceremony of Hans von Bulow (1904). Klopstock's Ode was then sung. Then did he find the inspiration for the finale of his second symphony.

Mahler may be said to stand between the realistic and dramatic talent of Strauss and the gigantic and mystical Bruckner, with whom Mahler was in close contact during his formative years. It is not surprising that Mahler's conceptions are grandiose. It is a characteristic of his "school," and neither Strauss nor Bruckner have been men who hesitated at works of cyclopean proportions. "His works," says Felix Weingartner in his "Symphony Since Beethoven," referring to Mahler, "are of colossal dimensions, and require an unusually large number of executants, which makes their performance the more difficult and delays fame. If, however, we overlook these considerations, which are secondary, and view the composer himself, we find in him a deep, strong feeling which has its own mode of expression and says its say without any concern about possibilities of performance and success. His most striking characteristic is the remarkable breadth of his themes, which are of a very musical nature. He resembles Bruckner, his teacher." (This statement is erroneous; Bruckner was never Mahler's teacher) "in many ways, but he is better able to treat his themes and construct his movements. There are perhaps bizarre passages and unnecessary difficulties in his works; we may find a certain prolixity; perhaps he is not severely critical in the selection of his themes; but everything he writes bears the stamp of a rich imagination and of a vital, passionate, well-nigh fanatical enthusiasm that has always kindled my sympathy."

Gustav Mahler (1860-1911) was the son of tradespeople. He early showed phenomenal talent for music. A shy, supersensitive boy, his first musical experiences were hymns of Moravians and the music of military bands which he heard in Kalischt, Bohemia, his birthplace. In 1875 Mahler became a pupil of Julius Epstein, the father of Richard Epstein, the admirable accompanist and teacher who now makes New York his home. With Epstein he studied the piano at the Vienna Conservatory, and he studied composition with Franz Krem. In his second year at the conservatory he was excused from the counterpoint classes because of the skill he had attained in this branch of the musical art. Mahler lived to regret this leniency on the part of his teachers. Being a man of the widest cultural ideals, he took special courses in history and philosophy at the Vienna University, while continuing his studies at the conservatory. He was deeply interested in philosophy, read Kant, Schopenhauer, Fechner; also Goethe, Schiller, E. A. T. Hoffman, Jean Paul Richter and Dostoievsky. When he left the conservatory he had to conduct music for performances of all kinds in summer theatres, for a pittance. He also gave music lessons and in other ways struggled with poverty. In 1883 he commenced his first symphony. In 1885 he went to Prague, where he conducted jointly with Anton Seidl.

Dr. Muck knew Mahler at this time. From then on Mahler's career was that of a hard working composer and conductor, a man of unremitting industry and of the highest ideals, of the broadest and most catholic tastes, who raised the musical standards of any community into which he came. Early recognized for his services in interpreting the music of Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, Mahler did not stop there. He made propaganda for the Bohemian, Smetana. He succeeded Wilhelm Jahns as conductor of the Vienna opera in 1897. There he performed Charpentier's "Louise." The composer was invited to attend the rehearsals. He told Mahler that he wholly misconceived his score. Mahler had the opera prepared again from the very beginning and Charpentier could not say enough in praise of the performance. Mahler came to New York in 1907 and was for three years chief conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House. He visited Boston with the Metropolitan in 1908, and his performances of the "Valkyrie," "Don Giovanni" and "Tristan and Isolde" will not be forgotten by those who heard them. He also conducted a memorable performance of Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique and other works by the Philharmonic Society of New York, Feb. 26, 1910, in Symphony Hall. He had been made director of the orchestral concerts of this society in 1909. Toward the end of 1911 he was forced to give up his work on account of ill health. He had a disease of the heart. Inflammation of the lungs set in. He wished to die in Vienna. He was buried there in the Grinzing Cemetery May 22, 1911.

Mahler left behind him eight symphonies and other works which might have laid claim to the same title, which he bestowed freely on colossal compositions which often failed to conform to the characteristics of the symphony of classic tradition. Of these symphonies the second and the eighth are the most important. The eighth demands even greater forces than the second, and has therefore been called the "symphony of a thousand." Mahler seldom gave titles to his symphonies, although they often had poetic text affixed, either as a motto, or as actually sung by soloists or chorus. He did not like to impose too definite a programme on his hearers, or commit himself to a detailed plot.

"Away with programme books," he once said at a dinner in Vienna, after conducting the symphony which is to be heard next Tuesday evening. "Away with programme books, which breed false ideas. The audience should be left to its own thoughts over a work that is performing; it should not be forced to read during the performance; it should not be prejudiced in any manner.

"If a composer by his music forces on his hearers the sensations which streamed through his mind, then he reaches his goal." The speech of tones has then approached the language of words, but it is far more capable of expression and declaration. "Mahler's music," said a commentator, "comes to a programme as to the ultimate ideal explanation of its meaning in language; with Strauss the programme is a task set to be accomplished." Mahler himself once said, referring to this same second symphony: "When I conceive a great musical picture I always arrive at the point where I must employ 'the word' as the bearer of my musical idea. My experience with the last movement of my second symphony was such that I ransacked the literature of the world, up to the Bible, to find the expository word."

TRANSCRIPT JAN. 21, 1918

WEEK-END CONCERTS

A MIRACLE, A VETERAN AND A BEGINNER

Brahms's Second Concerto Carried to New Heights by Orchestra, Conductor, Pianist—Mr. Ysaye in Hampering Circumstance, but Vivid Powers — Mr. Breeskin as a Year Has Ripened the Young Violinist

As it seemed—to risk a pardonable exaggeration—Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the orchestra began on Saturday evening with Brahms's concerto in B-flat, where they had ended with it on Friday afternoon. Seldom is the second in each pair of concerts merely an exact repetition of the first, since human abilities are not wont to achieve such precise equalities. Almost invariably one or another number will go a shade better or a shade less well by night than it did by day. With this concerto of Brahms' however, it was as though conductor, pianist and orchestra had been stirred by their masterful performance of Friday to yet more eloquent proclamation of the music on Saturday. Moreover, as the most auspicious of fates would have it, all three were at the top of their powers. Individually even, the members of the orchestra felt the impetus of the music and the occasion. Mr. Warnke, for example, excelled himself in the sustained song, warm, broad, deep, undulated and inflected with equal sense and skill of tonal beauty, with which his violoncello began the Andante. In it, in the Scherzo of the second movement and, indeed as the whole concerto yielded him opportunity, Mr. Hess at the third horn achieved no less beauty of tone, richness and suppleness of phrase; alike in passages of song and of ornament, Mr. Sand was once more one of the master-clarinetists and Mr. Longy one of the master-oboists of our time, and so forth through the whole orchestra. Nor were these distinctions feats of technical and tonal virtuosity alone. Without both, they would have been impossible; but they would have been equally so had not the doers of them wrought also with fine perception and imagination alike upon the music before them and upon the tone and accent by which they imparted it.

As for Dr. Muck and Mr. Gabrilowitsch, they were as one in the pursuit and—for once—the attainment of an ideal perfection. The animation of march, the rhythmic incisiveness, the pulse of phrase, the sharpness of climax, with which they had made the first Allegro seem on Friday, as a noble, passionate, self-creating music, they bore over as fully on Saturday into the succeeding Scherzo. Together and with the orchestra quick to their will they struck fire from measures which may seem, which have seemed often, as so much dry "passage-work"; together and with the string choir in particular to aid they suffused the songful melody between with the deep, the shadowed, the serenely Brahmsian beauty. The Andante melted the hearts of those that heard by the loveliness of the orchestral song, tender, musing, more penetrating than though a human voice had sung it, while in soft and luminous shower fell the ornaments of the piano upon it. The euphonies of the music seemed to still the very air. Similarly, the Finale touched a lightness, a brightness, a scintillant and playful grace that made it a starry music. From a veritable enchantment within which piece and performance had caught and held the audience it returned to the comparative prose of recall upon recall for all concerned. In a season of wondrous performance upon wondrous performance by the Symphony Concerts, this playing on Saturday of Brahms's concerto seemed for the instant, to surpass all the rest. Even the orchestra and the conductor did not forbear to applaud the pianist who had been as one with it in the glories of the deed.

Mr. Ysaye [illegible]

TRANSCRIPT JAN. 19, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

manuscript Jan 19

A Succession of Notable Occasions—Mahler's Magniloquent Symphony, Mr. Kreisler in Chamber Music, the Flonzaley Quartet Anew, Mr. Ysaye Returning, and Three Light Symphonies to Make Dr. Muck's Programme

IT is Dr. Muck's justifiable belief that eighteenth-century music is heard to most advantage when it is isolated from the fuller voiced and more emotionally voluble music of a latter day. He can further persuade himself that on occasion a programme of three eighteenth-century symphonies has novel interest, when it sets Haydn, Mozart and the youthful Beethoven side by side. Accordingly at the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the audiences will listen to Haydn's symphony in G major—the symphony of the "surprising" drum stroke; Mozart's symphony in G minor, not least of his music in melodic loveliness and lyric feeling, and Beethoven's symphony No. 1 in C major, in which he commingled the ways of his illustrious predecessors and added to them his own.

By, and For, Mahler

For the first time in Boston and for the second in America, the second symphony, in C minor, of Gustav Mahler—the so-called Resurrection Symphony — will be played and sung in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, beginning promptly at eight o'clock. Elsewhere on these pages Professor Philip Greeley Clapp of the Department of Music in Dartmouth College, has written an extended, interesting and illuminating account of the music with appropriate digression to the career and the personality of the composer. The forces concerned in the performance are Miss Peterson of the Metropolitan Opera House for the soprano part in the choral finale; Mme. Merle Alcock, the concert-singer of rising reputation, for the alto preface to it; the chorus, 350 strong, that Mr. Townsend has trained for Mahler's symphony as he trained it for Beethoven's ninth, with result unsurpassed in the musical annals of the city; the Symphony Orchestra in full force and increased in the brass choir; and to guide and sway all these forces Dr. Muck, stirred alike by wonted zeal for the task in hand and by a personal admiration and friendship for the composer. By these signs there is prospect of a masterly performance of one of the masterpieces of music in our time.

JAN. 19 HERALD

13TH SYMPHONY

Once every two or three years a program is devoted to symphonies by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, and these programs are always welcomed by the patrons of the Symphony concerts. Such a one has been arranged for the coming Friday and Saturday. Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, which will be followed by the G minor Symphony of Mozart. Then after intermission will come the First Symphony of Beethoven in C major. This program recalls Dr. Muck's famous mot in the season of 1906-07. He arranged this program for Cambridge and great was the stir thereat, the idea of putting three symphonies on one program! When a protest was made he asked where in the world could three symphonies be on a program if not at Harvard University. They were then played with much success.

JAN. 20 HERALD

SYMPHONY KNITTERS DEFENDED.

To the Editor of the Herald:

In the Saturday morning issue of the Boston Herald and Journal in the Mail Bag column, occurs a short article on "Knitting Limitations." True it is, that everything can be overdone, but it is doubtful that too much knitting will be done to meet the very great need as it exists today.

The perfect harmony of the Symphony would likely be interrupted in our minds as our knitting would suggest the Miserere of the trench and battlefield. But, we can give up the pleasures in which we indulged before the world tragedy came upon us.

It is reported that when some friend of Mr. William A. Sunday told him that she was very much afraid he would overdo—that he quickly replied that he was "equally afraid that she would underdo." Let us go on with the knitting even at a sacrifice. It has already put cards on the shelf.

AMANDA M. WALLACE.

Framingham, Jan. 14.

Post Jan. 21, 1918

TO GIVE MAHLER'S SYMPHONY

Aided by a Chorus of 350 Singers — Rendition Expected to Be Season's Best — Concerts of the Week

The performance of Gustav Mahler's second symphony, next Tuesday night in Symphony Hall, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, and a chorus of 350 singers, who distinguished themselves highly in the recent performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony, will be one of the most important musical events of the season.

The magnitude of Mahler's symphonic compositions, the vast instrumental, and, often, vocal forces employed, has made performances of them rare in this country. We in Boston know only the fifth symphony in C-sharp minor, which has been performed here by Mr. Gericke, in 1906, and Dr. Muck. The eighth symphony has been performed in Philadelphia and New York under Mr. Stokowski. The second symphony was given in New York, under Mahler's direction, by the New York Symphony Society, in 1908. It has been called the "Resurrection Symphony." It calls for an immense orchestra—as many strings as possible—and some of the double basses with strings tuned to the contra-C; 2 harps, 4 flutes, interchangeable with 4 piccolos; 4 oboes, two interchangeable with English horns; 5 clarinets, one interchangeable with a bass clarinet, and when possible the two clarinets in E-flat doubled in the loudest passages; 4 bassoons, one interchangeable with double bassoon; 6 horns, with four horns in the distance added at times to the six; 4 trombones, 1 tuba, organ, 2 sets of three kettledrums for three three drummers; bass drum, snare drum (when possible several of them); cymbals, a gong of high pitch and a gong of low pitch, triangle, glockenspiel, 3 bells, a ruthe (an instrument also used by Strauss in "Electra"); in the distance a pair of kettle drums, 1 bass drum, cymbals, triangle, soprano solo, alto solo and mixed chorus. The performance takes an hour and 40 minutes.

It was this work which Doctor Muck had planned to do in conjunction with the celebrated Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto in the spring of 1915. The war, however, prevented all that, and it was not until the Symphony Orchestra's own chorus was formed last summer that it became again possible to present this masterpiece. The chorus, under Mr. Stephen Townsend, has been working on it at weekly rehearsals since early in November and the orchestra has devoted many hours on the score. The first complete rehearsal of orchestra and chorus was held last Wednesday night with much success, and another rehearsal will be held tomorrow night, with the performance Tuesday evening.

The soloists will be Merle Alcock, contralto, to whom is allotted a very important part in the fourth movement, and May Peterson, soprano.

The symphony was composed by Mahler between 1886 and 1894. It is in five movements. The first three are purely instrumental. The fourth is planned for contralto voice and orchestra, while in the last movement contralto and soprano solo voices are used in addition to the chorus.

The symphony gets its name "Resurrection" from the fact that the last movement is built about Klopstock's Ode with that title. This is sung by the chorus a capella.

Mahler, before his death, stated that in the first movement he has outlined the death of a hero who has fallen in Promethean struggle for his ideal, for his knowledge of life and death. The general scheme of the symphony is as follows:

Scope of Work

First Movement — Allegro maestoso (with earnest and solemn expression throughout). The chief great theme is that of a funeral march, with episodes of consolation. A chorale is heard in the march.

Second Movement—Andante con moto (in a very easy-going manner). The chief theme is a dance tune announced by the strings. As one commentator finds an ironical view of human enjoyment in this music, another finds joy in the contemplation of nature.

Third movement—Scherzo (with a quietly flowing movement.) According to some the Scherzo was suggested by Mahler's song taken from the Wunderhorn of St. Anthony of Padua's sermon to the fishes. The Scherzo is a second typical figure. "The hero in manhood goes forth into the world, and sees how stupidity and vulgarity, like the fishes of the legend, are incorrigible." There is at last an outcry of disgust.

Fourth movement (very solemn, but in a simple manner). An alto voice begins with the words, "O, rosebud red! Mankind lies in sorest need!" etc., concluding, "I am from God, to him must I return! The dear God will give me a light, will lighten me to eternal, blessed life."

Fifth movement. After the first tormented section, there is a reference to the coming "Resurrection" motive. The chorus with soprano solo sings a capella Klopstock's "Resurrection Ode." She also continues with words by Mahler: "Oh, believe, my heart, to thee shall naught be lost! Thine is what thou didst long for, thine what thou has loved, for which thou has strived." Chorus: "With wings that I myself have won, shall I soar upwards . . . I shall die in order to live! Yes, my heart, thou wilt rise up in a trice. What thou hast conquered will bear thee up to God." Mahler himself wrote to Arthur Seidl that he had searched literature to find the liberating word for his finale. He happened to be in Hamburg at the burial ceremony of Hans von Bulow (1904). Klopstock's Ode was then sung. Then did he find the inspiration for the finale of his second symphony.

Mahler may be said to stand between the realistic and dramatic talent of Strauss and the gigantic and mystical Bruckner, with whom Mahler was in close contact during his formative years. It is not surprising that Mahler's conceptions are grandiose. It is a characteristic of his "school," and neither Strauss nor Bruckner have been men who hesitated at works of cyclopean proportions. "His works," says Felix Weingartner in his "Symphony Since Beethoven," referring to Mahler, "are of colossal dimensions, and require an unusually large number of executants, which makes their performance the more difficult and delays fame. If, however, we overlook these considerations, which are secondary, and view the composer himself, we find in him a deep, strong feeling which has its own mode of expression and says its say without any concern about possibilities of performance and success. His most striking characteristic is the remarkable breadth of his themes, which are of a very musical nature. He resembles Bruckner, his teacher." (This statement is erroneous; Bruckner was never Mahler's teacher) "in many ways, but he is better able to treat his themes and construct his movements. There are perhaps bizarre passages and unnecessary difficulties in his works; we may find a certain prolixity: perhaps he is not severely critical in the selection of his themes; but everything he writes bears the stamp of a rich imagination and of a vital, passionate, well-nigh fanatical enthusiasm that has always kindled my sympathy."

Gustav Mahler (1860-1911) was the son of tradespeople. He early showed phenomenal talent for music. A shy, supersensitive boy, his first musical experiences were hymns of Moravians and the music of military bands which he heard in Kalischt, Bohemia, his birthplace. In 1875 Mahler became a pupil of Julius Epstein, the father of Richard Epstein, the admirable accompanist and teacher who now makes New York his home. With Epstein he studied the piano at the Vienna Conservatory, and he studied composition with Franz Krem. In his second year at the conservatory he was excused from the counterpoint classes because of the skill he had attained in this branch of the musical art. Mahler lived to regret this leniency on the part of his teachers. Being a man of the widest cultural ideals, he took special courses in history and philosophy at the Vienna University, while continuing his studies at the conservatory. He was deeply interested in philosophy, read Kant, Schopenhauer, Fechner; also Goethe, Schiller, E. A. T. Hoffman, Jean Paul Richter and Dostoievsky. When he left the conservatory he had to conduct music for performances of all kinds in summer theatres, for a pittance. He also gave music lessons and in other ways struggled with poverty. In 1883 he commenced his first symphony. In 1885 he went to Prague, where he conducted jointly with Anton Seidl.

Dr. Muck knew Mahler at this time. From then on Mahler's career was that of a hard working composer and conductor, a man of unremitting industry and of the highest ideals, of the broadest and most catholic tastes, who raised the musical standards of any community into which he came. Early recognized for his services in interpreting the music of Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, Mahler did not stop there. He made propaganda for the Bohemian, Smetana. He succeeded Wilhelm Jahns as conductor of the Vienna opera in 1897. There he performed Charpentier's "Louise." The composer was invited to attend the rehearsals. He told Mahler that he wholly misconceived his score. Mahler had the opera prepared again from the very beginning and Charpentier could not say enough in praise of the performance. Mahler came to New York in 1907 and was for three years chief conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House. He visited Boston with the Metropolitan in 1908, and his performances of the "Valkyrie," "Don Giovanni" and "Tristan and Isolde" will not be forgotten by those who heard them. He also conducted a memorable performance of Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique and other works by the Philharmonic Society of New York, Feb. 26, 1910, in Symphony Hall. He had been made director of the orchestral concerts of this society in 1909. Toward the end of 1911 he was forced to give up his work on account of ill health. He had a disease of the heart. Inflammation of the lungs set in. He wished to die in Vienna. He was buried there in the Grinzing Cemetery May 22, 1911.

Mahler left behind him eight symphonies and other works which might have laid claim to the same title, which he bestowed freely on colossal compositions which often failed to conform to the characteristics of the symphony of classic tradition. Of these symphonies the second and the eighth are the most important. The eighth demands even greater forces than the second, and has therefore been called the "symphony of a thousand." Mahler seldom gave titles to his symphonies, although they often had poetic text affixed, either as a motto, or as actually sung by soloists or chorus. He did not like to impose too definite a programme on his hearers, or commit himself to a detailed plot.

"Away with programme books," he once said at a dinner in Vienna, after conducting the symphony which is to be heard next Tuesday evening. "Away with programme books, which breed false ideas. The audience should be left to its own thoughts over a work that is performing; it should not be forced to read during the performance; it should not be prejudiced in any manner.

"If a composer by his music forces on his hearers the sensations which streamed through his mind, then he reaches his goal." The speech of tones has then approached the language of words, but it is far more capable of expression and declaration. "Mahler's music," said a commentator, "comes to a programme as to the ultimate ideal explanation of its meaning in language; with Strauss the programme is a task set to be accomplished." Mahler himself once said, referring to this same second symphony: "When I conceive a great musical picture I always arrive at the point where I must employ 'the word' as the bearer of my musical idea. My experience with the last movement of my second symphony was such that I ransacked the literature of the world, up to the Bible, to find the expository word."

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 21, 1918

WEEK-END CONCERTS

A MIRACLE, A VETERAN AND A BEGINNER

Brahms's Second Concerto Carried to New Heights by Orchestra, Conductor, Pianist—Mr. Ysaye in Hampering Circumstance, but Vivid Powers — Mr. Breeskin as a Year Has Ripened the Young Violinist

As it seemed—to risk a pardonable exaggeration—Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the orchestra began on Saturday evening with Brahms's concerto in B-flat, where they had ended with it on Friday afternoon. Seldom is the second in each pair of concerts merely an exact repetition of the first, since human abilities are not wont to achieve such precise equalities. Almost invariably one or another number will go a shade better or a shade less well by night than it did by day. With this concerto of Brahms however, it was as though conductor, pianist and orchestra had been stirred by their masterful performance of Friday to yet more eloquent proclamation of the music on Saturday. Moreover, as the most auspicious of fates would have it, all three were at the top of their powers. Individually even, the members of the orchestra felt the impetus of the music and the occasion. Mr. Warnke, for example, excelled himself in the sustained song, warm, broad, deep, undulated and inflected with equal sense and skill of tonal beauty, with which his violoncello began the Andante. In it, in the Scherzo of the second movement and, indeed as the whole concerto yielded him opportunity, Mr. Hess at the third horn achieved no less beauty of tone, richness and suppleness of phrase; alike in passages of song and of ornament, Mr. Sand was once more one of the master-clarinetists and Mr. Longy one of the master-oboists of our time, and so forth through the whole orchestra. Nor were these distinctions feats of technical and tonal virtuosity alone. Without both, they would have been impossible; but they would have been equally so had not the doers of them wrought also with fine perception and imagination alike upon the music before them and upon the tone and accent by which they imparted it.

As for Dr. Muck and Mr. Gabrilowitsch, they were as one in the pursuit and—for once—the attainment of an ideal perfection. The animation of march, the rhythmic incisiveness, the pulse of phrase, the sharpness of climax, with which they had made the first Allegro seem on Friday, as a noble, passionate, self-creating music, they bore over as fully on Saturday into the succeeding Scherzo. Together and with the orchestra quick to their will they struck fire from measures which may seem, which have seemed often, as so much dry "passage-work"; together and with the string choir in particular to aid they suffused the songful melody between with the deep, the shadowed, the serenely Brahmsian beauty. The Andante melted the hearts of those that heard by the loveliness of the orchestral song, tender, musing, more penetrating than though a human voice had sung it, while in soft and luminous shower fell the ornaments of the piano upon it. The euphonies of the music seemed to still the very air. Similarly, the Finale touched a lightness, a brightness, a scintillant and playful grace that made it a starry music. From a veritable enchantment within which piece and performance had caught and held the audience it returned to the comparative prose of recall upon recall for all concerned. In a season of wondrous performance upon wondrous performance at the Symphony Concerts, this playing on Saturday of Brahms's concerto seemed for the instant, to surpass all the rest. Even the orchestra and the conductor did not forbear to applaud the pianist who had been as one with it in the glories of the deed.

Mr. Ysaye [illegible]

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 19, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A Succession of Notable Occasions—Mahler's Magniloquent Symphony, Mr. Kreisler in Chamber Music, the Flonzaley Quartet Anew, Mr. Ysaye Returning, and Three Light Symphonies to Make Dr. Muck's Programme

It is Dr. Muck's justifiable belief that eighteenth-century music is heard to most advantage when it is isolated from the fuller voiced and more emotionally voluble music of a latter day. He can further persuade himself that on occasion a programme of three eighteenth-century symphonies has novel interest, when it sets Haydn, Mozart and the youthful Beethoven side by side. Accordingly at the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the audiences will listen to Haydn's symphony in G major—the symphony of the "surprising" drum stroke; Mozart's symphony in G minor, not least of his music in melodic loveliness and lyric feeling, and Beethoven's symphony No. 1 in C major, in which he commingled the ways of his illustrious predecessors and added to them his own.

By, and For, Mahler

For the first time in Boston and for the second in America, the second symphony, in C minor, of Gustav Mahler—the so-called Resurrection Symphony — will be played and sung in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, beginning promptly at eight o'clock. Elsewhere on these pages Professor Philip Greeley Clapp of the Department of Music in Dartmouth College, has written an extended, interesting and illuminating account of the music with appropriate digression to the career and the personality of the composer. The forces concerned in the performance are Miss Peterson of the Metropolitan Opera House for the soprano part in the choral finale; Mme. Merle Alcock, the concert-singer of rising reputation, for the alto preface to it; the chorus, 350 strong, that Mr. Townsend has trained for Mahler's symphony as he trained it for Beethoven's ninth, with result unsurpassed in the musical annals of the city; the Symphony Orchestra in full force and increased in the brass choir; and to guide and sway all these forces Dr. Muck, stirred alike by wonted zeal for the task in hand and by a personal admiration and friendship for the composer. By these signs there is prospect of a masterly performance of one of the masterpieces of music in our time.

JAN. 19
HERALD

13TH SYMPHONY

Once every two or three years a program is devoted to symphonies by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, and these programs are always welcomed by the patrons of the Symphony concerts. Such a one has been arranged for the coming Friday and Saturday. Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, which will be followed by the G minor Symphony of Mozart. Then after intermission will come the First Symphony of Beethoven in C major. This program recalls Dr. Muck's famous mot in the season of 1906-07. He arranged this program for Cambridge and great was the stir thereat, the idea of putting three symphonies on one program! When a protest was made he asked where in the world could three symphonies be on a program if not at Harvard University. They were then played with much success.

JAN. 20
HERALD

SYMPHONY KNITTERS DEFENDED.

To the Editor of the Herald:

In the Saturday morning issue of the Boston Herald and Journal in the Mail Bag column, occurs a short article on "Knitting Limitations." True it is, that everything can be overdone, but it is doubtful that too much knitting will be done to meet the very great need as it exists today.

The perfect harmony of the Symphony would likely be interrupted in our minds as our knitting would suggest the Miserere of the trench and battlefield. But, we can give up the pleasures in which we indulged before the world tragedy came upon us.

It is reported that when some friend of Mr. William A. Sunday told him that she was very much afraid he would overdo—that he quickly replied that he was "equally afraid that she would underdo." Let us go on with the knitting even at a sacrifice. It has already put cards on the shelf.

AMANDA M. WALLACE.

Framingham, Jan. 11.

103

TRANSCRIPT. JAN. 19, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

OVERTURE, SERENADE, CONCERTO IN CONTRAST

Berlioz in an Unfamiliar Piece, Romantic and Rhetorical—Chaikovsy in Suave and Elegant Artifice, Salted Finally with Folk-Tune—Brahms's Second Piano Concerto, with Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the Orchestra All Enriching and Releasing the Music

CONTRAST abounded in the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon, romantic music—Berlioz's overture to his unsung opera, "Les Francs-Juges"—for beginning; salon music—Chaikovsky's Serenade for Strings—for ending; in long space between and in substitute, perhaps, for the usual symphony, Brahms's symphonic and standard concerto in B-flat with Mr. Gabrilowitsch playing the piano part. None of the three pieces was too familiar, though the concerto was heard for the third time in successive seasons; while the overture sounded almost novel and the serenade proved one of those light, graceful numbers too seldom set by a long line of conductors upon their programmes. Berlioz's music disclosed anew the large sonorities, the graphic contrasts, the vivid tonal rhetoric of which Dr. Muck and the orchestra are capable. Chaikovsky's serenade confirmed afresh the varied voice, elegance and artifice of leader and string choir; while the concerto set in many-sided aspect the imparting and the heightening abilities of band, conductor and pianist.

Whether these three were animating the first movement with incisive rhythm and energetic, mounting progress, joining ardent voices in the second, crystallizing the third in songful beauty, or more lightly weaving the glinting pattern of the finale, they clarified, vitalized and glamored the music in a fashion that would have set the laboring audiences, say of the nineties, with Brahms the abstruse and arid, into rejoicing wonder. He passes as a composer of the last quarter of the nineteenth century; but not until the twentieth has his music hereabouts been opened and vivified. A great gap indeed separates Mr. Fiedler and Dr. Muck as conductors, but together, with incidental aid from the passing Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Stock, they have made Brahms keen pleasure to the audiences of Symphony Hall. Nor, as yesterday, have they lacked aid in the good work from such pianists as Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Mr. Bauer, such violinists as Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Witek. By so much, then, and the more for many-sidedness a concert to be enjoyed.

No doubt, Berlioz's overture needs the aid of an expatiating programme-book to inform the casual listener (who may not have the Encyclopædia Britannica in his head, long as he has had it in his mail), that the "Francs-Juges" or the Fehmic Judges were a secret, sardonic, savage tribunal, looming grim and grisly out of mediæval Westphalia. As little may he know, until he has scanned learned pages, that they and the gruesome deeds told or imagined of them kindled Berlioz's romantic imagination until he wrote an opera in which they figured and of which only this overture survives. Yet even were he of those keeping the pleasures of the programme-book for "the closet" rather than the concert-room, to him the music may have spoken by intrinsic voice. There is formidable, perhaps awesome, beginning, when brass and bassoons join in hollow and sonorous thunders; there is no mistaking mystery and foreboding when the strings shake and shudder, the cymbals shiver and the bass-drum lugubriously murmurs. Between this music of the scene, as it might be called in the mute opera which suggested it, a characteristic melody, saved from commonplace by clear warmth of imagination and expression, peoples the invisible stage with devotion pitted against doom.

Berlioz songful, Berlioz in romantic agitation, Berlioz graphic, but, most of all, Berlioz loving the ardors of melodramatic tonal contrast and situation, and more and more possessed by the tonal rhetoric which turns the end into the "grand crescendo" which was the strepitous fashion of a voluble and exuberant operatic day. Programme-book or no programme-book, the overture to "Les Francs-Juges" still speaks for itself, and the more forcefully when there is a Muck to release and swell this romantic rhetoric, this power of vivid tones, as though they were as real and sincere to him as to Berlioz himself. In life he was always blaming conductors; now in the Elysian Fields he must be praising not a few.

For itself also, as limpidly, brightly and changefully as sunshine, dappled here and there with shadow, speaks Chaikovsky's Serenade. However hysterical and hackneyed, shallow and faded he may seem in some of his symphonies and overture-fantasias, there is no reproaching him in these light, tranquil, fanciful pieces. The little sonatina with which the Serenade begins is amiable, agreeable artifice. Sonorities, full and fine, recall the voice of such pieces in the eighteenth century; suave are the phrases; ingenious yet unlabored the workmanship; dexterous and imaginative the play with the timbres a string choir yields. The waltz escapes fluent commonplace by adept and playful modulation of pace and rhythm, by a Viennese alternation of languor and animation. Wistful sentiment, never swelled into incongruous or too personal emotion, colors with melancholy the songful little "elegy."

So far the eighteenth century, which heard serenade after serenade in this fashion, might have listened pleasured, approving. If it questioned at all, the final movement would have been the prompting. Unmistakably it is folk-song that tramps along Russian tow-path or jigs in Russian streets—the Bolshevik note, as these days might call it, in a music that is elsewhere of drawing-room voice. But if Chaikovsky keeps the mettle of his Bolshevik tunes, he also bids them mind their manners. For this finale, as in the persistent bass figure, does not spare the smiling ingenuity, the ready fancy of the preceding movements. The rest of Chaikovsky's Russian generation—the stark Musorgsky, the explicit Balakirev, the luscious Rimsky-Korsakov—knew not grace. At will he could summon it. They sought to impress; he was content sometimes merely to please out of a more supple fancy, a lighter artistry. With reason the audience listened as in its own music-room.

In contrast with overture and serenade, Brahms's concerto seemed to speak by will of Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the orchestra; for all three were as one in the opening and the enhancing of the music. Successive repetitions have made conductor and men sympathetic, communicating, almost affectionate masters of the piece; while the pianist plays hardly a concerto until he is in like case with it. The ruminant and sluggish Brahms when yesterday the first movement rose sharp of outline, animate of rhythm, energetic of period, resonant of climax—music, if the hearer will, of thought and prescription, but of both, as it sounded, winged with creative emotion! Propulsive power sped its course and in the progress generated warmth. The dry and calculating Brahms when the Andante flowed out of the orchestra in gentle, musing, tender song, phrased as though a human voice was singing the melancholy melody, while Mr. Gabrilowitsch let as gently fall upon it the crystal shower of the piano's figure and ornament! The abstruse and ponderous Brahms when the finale ran in shimmering pattern of lightly threading tones!

Only upon the second Allegro might rest the reproach of dryness in the piano part and of mere music-making for the composer; yet it is not so when the horns color with light and shadow a melody that the strings send penetrating into the listening imagination. Rather, the whole concerto, in such releasing performance as it received Friday, seems like an upspringing piece of tonal architecture, rising in sharp and energetic line, setting above frieze of fancy, frieze of quiet beauty and culminating in airy pattern and light pinnacle. Seldom can it have sounded so musically clear and warm, in such sensuous voice and ardor of mood as it did from Dr. Muck and Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

The unity of accomplishment and impression in the whole performance was indeed so integral that it is hard to part the several factors in it. Conductor, pianist, orchestra were throughout as of a single understanding, sensibility and imparting voice. To Dr. Muck and to Mr. Gabrilowitsch equally, the music of the first movement seemed to owe clarity of outline, rhythmic verve and animated progress. To the orchestra the second and the third movements owed not a little richness of tonal color. From all three sprang the lightness and the brightness with which the Finale spun itself. The pianist as virtuoso shone most clearly in the prismatic loveliness of tone with which he glamored the Andante, in the felicity of his touch with accent and ornament in the last movement, in the incisiveness of phrase and period in the first. As musician, he shone as clear in his perfect proportioning of his part to the symphonic whole, in his sense of the design and progress of the piece from first measure to last, in a fineness of ear measuring both the quality of his own tone, and its euphonies or contrasts with the orchestral voices. In him, in Dr. Muck, in the orchestra, there seemed to be thought only of the music. They infused themselves into it until they became less its interpreting than its newly creating voice. The arts, the imagination, the power of transmitting musicians could hardly go further. Rarely have they more richly deserved the applause a rapt audience gave them.

H. T. P.

ADVERTISER JAN. 22, 1918

TO GIVE MAHLER'S SYMPHONY TONIGHT

Boston is to have its first performance of Gustav Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony in Symphony Hall tonight, beginning at 8 o'clock sharp. The performance will last about an hour and a half. The entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will be used, with the brass and percussion sections largely augmented. There will be a chorus of 350 voices. Merle Alcock, contralto, and May Peterson, soprano, will be the soloists. The first three movements of the symphony are instrumental. The fourth movement has a short episode for contralto voice and orchestra. The fifth and last movement is partly instrumental, partly choral and partly solo.

RECORD JAN. 23, 1918

SYMPHONY BY MAHLER GREAT DISAPPOINTMENT

Dr. Muck Lavishes Care on Presentation—Notes of Stage Favorites

By J. V. Clark 1/23

The Second, or "Resurrection," Symphony by Gustave Mahler was given at Symphony Hall last evening. The work calls for enlarged orchestra, a great chorus and two women soloists. The orchestra was the Boston Symphony, enlarged, the chorus was that used recently in the performance of the Beethoven Choral Symphony, and the soloists were Mmes. May Peterson and Merle Alcock. Dr. Karl Muck was the conductor. The performance, save in choral singing, did not compare in interest or performance with that of the Beethoven Symphony.

Since Dr. Muck announced the performance of the Mahler symphony there has been much discussion in lectures on Mahler and his work in newspapers and in program books as to Mahler's attitude on program music and absolute music. Let us forget for the moment whether this "Resurrection" symphony is program music or not. It is not inspired music. Its thematic material is not marked by spontaneous melody. Mahler was a great conductor, a great intellect, a philosopher, but he was not a great melodist. The work in many portions, especially the last half of the final movement, is sheer bombast. It is sound and fury. It is dynamically effective. Noise is added to noise. There are 200, 300—or was it 400?—instrumentalists and choristers all at fortissimo. There was not inherent melodic beauty nor dramatic feeling.

Much of the harmony is effective in a rather old fashioned way. There were pages when the score seemed modern. There were progressions that owed their being to one Richard Wagner. In sweep, in grandeur of conception much of this symphony was impressive—but in sheer beauty it almost always missed fire.

The symphony's finest portions—we write from only one hearing and never having seen the score—is the first part of the first movement, portions of the last movement, the very effective pages for the chorus and the elaboration of the waltz, which starts the second movement. This waltz is in itself cheap. One can hear the German band on the street corner playing it. It might have been written by a retire (female) music teacher. But in the elaboration of this waltz—scored for strings piccicato, flute (or piccolo) and harp—there is a certain mechanical cleverness which makes it highly effective.

Dr. Muck did everything possible for the work. He held his forces well in hand. The symphony was built with care for every detail. The chorus, singing mostly a capella, sang with a beautiful tone. Mmes. Peterson and Alcock were sufficient.

MONITOR JAN. 23, 1918

MUSIC 1/23

Mahler Work Presented

Mahler's Second Symphony in C Minor—Presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by a chorus of 350 voices (trained by Stephen Townsend); Miss May Peterson, soprano; and Mrs. Merle Alcock, contralto. Evening of Jan. 22, 1918. The concert opened with "The Star Spangled Banner," played by the orchestra and sung by the chorus.

Mahler's gift for melodic invention, never so rich as certain other of his talents, is at its best in his second symphony, especially in the early parts of the work. His knack at building up sonorities, which is perhaps the greatest resource he has, everything considered, rather waits on his rarer power in the preliminary, voiceless movements of this composition. The opening allegro and the following andante, written for orchestra alone, are in strict musical forms; but while planned on familiar structural lines, they bring forward some themes of striking contour and take them through an unusual and altogether interesting scheme of development.

Those who look at things from the Beethoven standpoint and who hold that a symphonic theme must be indeterminate, instead of comprising a definitely measured off set of phrases, will perhaps deny that the melodies in the allegro are themes at all, and will declare them to be tunes. Such as say this are not lightly to be contradicted. For the main themes of the movement are veritably little songs, as though Schubert had written them. But Mahler, some will object, Mahler, with his bigness of plan, is as far as possible from being like Schubert; yet he is clearly like that great melodist in his architectural methods. When Rolland, the French critic, reviewed the Strasbourg festival of 1905, he described Mahler as the traditional, schoolmaster type of German musician, à la Schubert. The critic was accounting, to be sure, for Mahler's social outlook chiefly, but he could just as well have made the resemblance of the modern to the classical composer include artistic habits.

Still more accurately considered, the two main themes of the opening movement of this symphony are not even independent tunes. They are really a double tune; and the characteristic charm of the movement, and of the second movement, too, in almost the same degree, arises from an ingenious working out, through remarkably effective contrast of orchestral colors, of the double-theme idea.

As long as the composer keeps at the double-theme method, his work goes along smoothly. But when, near the middle, he abandons it, interest drags. A few inspired moments for solo contralto make listening a pleasure again. Inconsequent pages of orchestral preparation for the entrance of the chorus follow; but when, at last, the choral voices break in, the music begins to move with great majesty. It continues, with the soprano and contralto voices occasionally taking part, to a solemn, uplifting close.

Instrumentally, the second symphony is less splendid than Mahler's fifth, which is without voices; but it is more given to carefully wrought detail than the fifth. It makes use principally of the strings and brass as elements of contrast. In an uncommon way it makes the second violins and the violas influential. It rather subordinates the wood-wind choir, but here and there, as in the accompanying music to the contralto solo, it shows a master touch of oboe or other wood color.

Chorally, as far as it goes, it is quite the equal of the eighth symphony, or the "Symphony of the Thousand," which the Philadelphia Orchestra and its chorus performed two years ago.

The work had its first Boston presentation at this concert, which is the second in a series of three choral performances given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Townsend Chorus. It was admirably interpreted by both players and singers and it was warmly applauded by an audience that nearly filled Symphony Hall.

TRANSCRIPT. JAN. 19, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

OVERTURE, SERENADE, CONCERTO IN CONTRAST

Berlioz in an Unfamiliar Piece, Romantic and Rhetorical—Chaikovsy in Suave and Elegant Artifice, Salted Finally with Folk-Tune—Brahms's Second Piano Concerto, with Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the Orchestra All Enriching and Releasing the Music

CONTRAST abounded in the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon, romantic music—Berlioz's overture to his unsung opera, "Les Francs-Juges"—for beginning; salon music—Chaikovsky's Serenade for Strings—for ending; in long space between and in substitute, perhaps, for the usual symphony, Brahms's symphonic and standard concerto in B-flat with Mr. Gabrilowitsch playing the piano part. None of the three pieces was too familiar, though the concerto was heard for the third time in successive seasons; while the overture sounded almost novel and the serenade proved one of those light, graceful numbers too seldom set by a long line of conductors upon their programmes. Berlioz's music disclosed anew the large sonorities, the graphic contrasts, the vivid tonal rhetoric of which Dr. Muck and the orchestra are capable. Chaikovsky's serenade confirmed afresh the varied voice, elegance and artifice of leader and string choir; while the concerto set in many-sided aspect the imparting and the heightening abilities of band, conductor and pianist.

Whether these three were animating the first movement with incisive rhythm and energetic, mounting progress, joining ardent voices in the second, crystallizing the third in songful beauty, or more lightly weaving the glinting pattern of the finale, they clarified, vitalized and glamored the music in a fashion that would have set the laboring audiences, say of the nineties, with Brahms the abstruse and arid, into rejoicing wonder. He passes as a composer of the last quarter of the nineteenth century; but not until the twentieth has his music hereabouts been opened and vivified. A great gap indeed separates Mr. Fiedler and Dr. Muck as conductors, but together, with incidental aid from the passing Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Stock, they have made Brahms keen pleasure to the audiences of Symphony Hall. Nor, as yesterday, have they lacked aid in the good work from such pianists as Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Mr. Bauer, such violinists as Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Witek. By so much, then, and the more for many-sidedness a concert to be enjoyed.

No doubt, Berlioz's overture needs the aid of an expatiating programme-book to inform the casual listener (who may not have the Encyclopædia Britannica in his head, long as he has had it in his mail), that the "Francs-Juges" or the Fehmic Judges were a secret, sardonic, savage tribunal, looming grim and grisly out of mediæval Westphalia. As little may he know, until he has scanned learned pages, that they and the gruesome deeds told or imagined of them kindled Berlioz's romantic imagination until he wrote an opera in which they figured and of which only this overture survives. Yet even were he of those keeping the pleasures of the programme-book for "the closet" rather than the concert-room, to him the music may have spoken by intrinsic voice. There is formidable, perhaps awesome, beginning, when brass and bassoons join in hollow and sonorous thunders; there is no mistaking mystery and foreboding when the strings shake and shudder, the cymbals shiver and the bass-drum lugubriously murmurs. Between this music of the scene, as it might be called in the mute opera which suggested it, a characteristic melody, saved from commonplace by clear warmth of imagination and expression peoples the invisible stage with devotion pitted against doom.

Berlioz songful, Berlioz in romantic agitation, Berlioz graphic, but, most of all, Berlioz loving the ardors of melodramatic tonal contrast and situation, and more and more possessed by the tonal rhetoric which turns the end into the "grand crescendo" which was the strepitous fashion of a voluble and exuberant operatic day. Programme-book or no programme-book, the overture to "Les Francs-Juges" still speaks for itself, and the more forcefully when there is a Muck to release and swell this romantic rhetoric, this power of vivid tones, as though they were as real and sincere to him as to Berlioz himself. In life he was always blaming conductors; now in the Elysian Fields he must be praising not a few.

For itself also, as limpidly, brightly and changefully as sunshine, dappled here and there with shadow, speaks Chaikovsky's Serenade. However hysterical and hackneyed, shallow and faded he may seem in some of his symphonies and overture-fantasias, there is no reproaching him in these light, tranquil, fanciful pieces. The little sonatina with which the Serenade begins is amiable, agreeable artifice. Sonorities, full and fine, recall the voice of such pieces in the eighteenth century; suave are the phrases; ingenious yet unlabored the workmanship; dexterous and imaginative the play with the timbres a string choir yields. The waltz escapes fluent commonplace by adept and playful modulation of pace and rhythm, by a Viennese alternation of languor and animation. Wistful sentiment, never swelled into incongruous or too personal emotion, colors with melancholy the songful little "elegy."

So far the eighteenth century, which heard serenade after serenade in this fashion, might have listened pleasured, approving. If it questioned at all, the final movement would have been the prompting. Unmistakably it is folk-song that tramps along Russian tow-path or jigs in Russian streets—the Bolshevik note, as these days might call it, in a music that is elsewhere of drawing-room voice. But if Chaikovsky keeps the mettle of his Bolshevik tunes, he also bids them mind their manners. For this finale, as in the persistent bass figure, does not spare the smiling ingenuity, the ready fancy of the preceding movements. The rest of Chaikovsky's Russian generation—the stark Musorgsky, the explicit Balakirev, the luscious Rimsky-Korsakov—knew not grace. At will he could summon it. They sought to impress; he was content sometimes merely to please out of a more supple fancy, a lighter artistry. With reason the audience listened as in its own music-room.

In contrast with overture and serenade, Brahms's concerto seemed to speak by will of Dr. Muck, Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the orchestra; for all three were as one in the opening and the enhancing of the music. Successive repetitions have made conductor and men sympathetic, communicating, almost affectionate masters of the piece; while the pianist plays hardly a concerto until he is in like case with it. The ruminant and sluggish Brahms when yesterday the first movement rose sharp of outline, animate of rhythm, energetic of period, resonant of climax—music, if the hearer will, of thought and prescription, but of both, as it sounded, winged with creative emotion! Propulsive power sped its course and in the progress generated warmth. The dry and calculating Brahms when the Andante flowed out of the orchestra in gentle, musing, tender song, phrased as though a human voice was singing the melancholy melody, while Mr. Gabrilowitsch let as gently fall upon it the crystal shower of the piano's figure and ornament! The abstruse and ponderous Brahms when the finale ran in shimmering pattern of lightly threading tones!

Only upon the second Allegro might rest the reproach of dryness in the piano part and of mere music-making for the composer; yet it is not so when the horns color with light and shadow a melody that the strings send penetrating into the listening imagination. Rather, the whole concerto, in such releasing performance as it received Friday, seems like an upspringing piece of tonal architecture, rising in sharp and energetic line, setting above frieze of fancy, frieze of quiet beauty and culminating in airy pattern and light pinnacle. Seldom can it have sounded so musically clear and warm, in such sensuous voice and ardor of mood as it did from Dr. Muck and Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

The unity of accomplishment and impression in the whole performance was indeed so integral that it is hard to part the several factors in it. Conductor, pianist, orchestra were throughout as of a single understanding, sensibility and imparting voice. To Dr. Muck and to Mr. Gabrilowitsch equally, the music of the first movement seemed to owe clarity of outline, rhythmic verve and animated progress. To the orchestra the second and the third movements owed not a little richness of tonal color. From all three sprang the lightness and the brightness with which the Finale spun itself. The pianist as virtuoso shone most clearly in the prismatic loveliness of tone with which he glamored the Andante, in the felicity of his touch with accent and ornament in the last movement, in the incisiveness of phrase and period in the first. As musician, he shone as clear in his perfect proportioning of his part to the symphonic whole, in his sense of the design and progress of the piece from first measure to last, in a fineness of ear measuring both the quality of his own tone, and its euphonies or contrasts with the orchestral voices. In him, in Dr. Muck, in the orchestra, there seemed to be thought only of the music. They infused themselves into it until they became less its interpreting than its newly creating voice. The arts, the imagination, the power of transmitting musicians could hardly go further. Rarely have they more richly deserved the applause a rapt audience gave them.

H. T. P.

ADVERTISER JAN. 22, 1918

TO GIVE MAHLER'S SYMPHONY TONIGHT

Boston is to have its first performance of Gustav Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony in Symphony Hall tonight, beginning at 8 o'clock sharp. The performance will last about an hour and a half. The entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will be used, with the brass and percussion sections largely augmented. There will be a chorus of 350 voices. Merle Alcock, contralto, and May Peterson, soprano, will be the soloists. The first three movements of the symphony are instrumental. The fourth movement has a short episode for contralto voice and orchestra. The fifth and last movement is partly instrumental, partly choral and partly solo.

RECORD JAN. 23, 1918

SYMPHONY BY MAHLER GREAT DISAPPOINTMENT

Dr. Muck Lavishes Care on Presentation—Notes of Stage Favorites

By J. V. Clark 1/23

The Second, or "Resurrection," Symphony by Gustave Mahler was given at Symphony Hall last evening. The work calls for enlarged orchestra, a great chorus and two women soloists. The orchestra was the Boston Symphony, enlarged, the chorus was that used recently in the performance of the Beethoven Choral Symphony, and the soloists were Mmes. May Peterson and Merle Alcock. Dr. Karl Muck was the conductor. The performance, save in choral singing, did not compare in interest or performance with that of the Beethoven Symphony.

Since Dr. Muck announced the performance of the Mahler symphony there has been much discussion in lectures on Mahler and his work in newspapers and in program books as to Mahler's attitude on program music and absolute music. Let us forget for the moment whether this "Resurrection" symphony is program music or not. It is not inspired music. Its thematic material is not marked by spontaneous melody. Mahler was a great conductor, a great intellect, a philosopher, but he was not a great melodist. The work in many portions, especially the last half of the final movement, is sheer bombast. It is sound and fury. It is dynamically effective. Noise is added to noise. There are 200, 300—or was it 400?—instrumentalists and choristers all at fortissimo. There was not inherent melodic beauty nor dramatic feeling.

Much of the harmony is effective in a rather old fashioned way. There were pages when the score seemed modern. There were progressions that owed their being to one Richard Wagner. In sweep, in grandeur of conception much of this symphony was impressive—but in sheer beauty it almost always missed fire.

The symphony's finest portions—we write from only one hearing and never having seen the score—is the first part of the first movement, portions of the last movement, the very effective pages for the chorus and the elaboration of the waltz, which starts the second movement. This waltz is in itself cheap. One can hear the German band on the street corner playing it. It might have been written by a retire (female) music teacher. But in the elaboration of this waltz—scored for strings piccicato, flute (or piccolo) and harp—there is a certain mechanical cleverness which makes it highly effective.

Dr. Muck did everything possible for the work. He held his forces well in hand. The symphony was built with care for every detail. The chorus, singing mostly a capella, sang with a beautiful tone. Mmes. Peterson and Alcock were sufficient.

MONITOR JAN. 23, 1918

MUSIC 1/23

Mahler Work Presented

Mahler's Second Symphony in C Minor—Presented in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by a chorus of 350 voices (trained by Stephen Townsend); Miss May Peterson, soprano; and Mrs. Merle Alcock, contralto. Evening of Jan. 22, 1918. The concert opened with "The Star Spangled Banner," played by the orchestra and sung by the chorus.

Mahler's gift for melodic invention, never so rich as certain other of his talents, is at its best in his second symphony, especially in the early parts of the work. His knack at building up sonorities, which is perhaps the greatest resource he has, everything considered, rather waits on his rarer power in the preliminary, voiceless movements of this composition. The opening allegro and the following andante, written for orchestra alone, are in strict musical forms; but while planned on familiar structural lines, they bring forward some themes of striking contour and take them through an unusual and altogether interesting scheme of development.

Those who look at things from the Beethoven standpoint and who hold that a symphonic theme must be indeterminate, instead of comprising a definitely measured off set of phrases, will perhaps deny that the melodies in the allegro are themes at all, and will declare them to be tunes. Such as say this are not lightly to be contradicted. For the main themes of the movement are veritably little songs, as though Schubert had written them. But Mahler, some will object, Mahler, with his bigness of plan, is as far as possible from being like Schubert; yet he is clearly like that great melodist in his architectural methods. When Rolland, the French critic, reviewed the Strasbourg festival of 1905, he described Mahler as the traditional, schoolmaster type of German musician, à la Schubert. The critic was accounting, to be sure, for Mahler's social outlook chiefly, but he could just as well have made the resemblance of the modern to the classical composer include artistic habits.

Still more accurately considered, the two main themes of the opening movement of this symphony are not even independent tunes. They are really a double tune; and the characteristic charm of the movement, and of the second movement, too, in almost the same degree, arises from an ingenious working out, through remarkably effective contrast of orchestral colors, of the double-theme idea.

As long as the composer keeps at the double-theme method, his work goes along smoothly. But when, near the middle, he abandons it, interest drags. A few inspired moments for solo contralto make listening a pleasure again. Inconsequent pages of orchestral preparation for the entrance of the chorus follow; but when, at last, the choral voices break in, the music begins to move with great majesty. It continues, with the soprano and contralto voices occasionally taking part, to a solemn, uplifting close.

Instrumentally, the second symphony is less splendid than Mahler's fifth, which is without voices; but it is more given to carefully wrought detail than the fifth. It makes use principally of the strings and brass as elements of contrast. In an uncommon way it makes the second violins and the violas influential. It rather subordinates the wood-wind choir, but here and there, as in the accompanying music to the contralto solo, it shows a master touch of oboe or other wood color.

Chorally, as far as it goes, it is quite the equal of the eighth symphony, or the "Symphony of the Thousand," which the Philadelphia Orchestra and its chorus performed two years ago.

The work had its first Boston presentation at this concert, which is the second in a series of three choral performances given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Townsend Chorus. It was admirably interpreted by both players and singers and it was warmly applauded by an audience that nearly filled Symphony Hall.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK NOT WANTED BY PATRIOTIC CITIZENS HERE

Thousands Are Determined Alien Enemy Conductor Shall Not Again Butcher 'Star-Spangled Banner' in Philadelphia

Dr. Karl Muck will not conduct the concert scheduled to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music next Monday night if the protests of patriotic women and men of the city are heeded.

The doctor is not wanted in Philadelphia, they say; and if the thousands of members of patriotic and war aid organizations are successful in their efforts, he will not be permitted to make any public appearance here.

Doctor Muck and his garbled version of "The Star-Spangled Banner" is jazz style will not be given the same healthy applause that his Philadelphia audience accorded him on November 5.

Even tho Doctor Muck is of Swiss birth, there are thousands of persons in Philadelphia who are doing all they can to prevent him from presenting another burlesque on the national anthem in this city.

"It's an outrage to allow Doctor Muck to play anywhere in America," was the manner in which Mrs. George Dallas Dixon gave vent to her patriotic feeling last night. Mrs. Dixon was one of the city's prominent women who last month signed petitions which were intended for Mayor Smith, demanding that the concert scheduled for December 3 be given without the doctor. "Pittsburgh will not allow Doctor Muck to play there. Baltimore raised a great fuss. Are Philadelphians less patriotic than other cities of this country?"

Mrs. James Starr, president of the Colonial Dames of America, declared last night that any person with sympathy for the central powers should not be publicly recognized in America.

What part the Colonial Dames will take in the city-wide uprising of patriotic people to prevent Doctor Muck's appearance here Mrs. Starr was unprepared to tell last night. This organization, however, was foremost a month ago in circulating petitions to prevent the concert which was canceled because twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were alien enemies. Since that time those objectionable members have been removed.

"Because he allowed 'The Star-Spangled Banner' to be played and permitted the American flag to be used is no reason why Doctor Muck should be permitted to conduct the concert here," was the manner in which Mrs. Reed A. Morgan, secretary of the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania, voiced her indignation. "I feel very strong on the subject," declared Mrs. Morgan.

John F. Braun, a director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, while declining to express publicly his views on the Doctor Muck question, is emphatic in expressing his belief that "The Star-Spangled Banner" should be played at every symphony concert.

"Whether Doctor Muck should conduct the Boston Syhpmony Orchestra or not at the concert here I won't say," said Mr. Braun. "The Philadelphia Orchestra for years has been a competitor, and it would not be proper for me to make a public declaration of my views on this matter."

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
JAN 5- 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY BACK ON SCHEDULE

Dr. Muck Will Direct Noted Orchestral Organization in Academy Monday

Dr. Karl Muck still directs the artistic fortunes of the Boston Symphony, and that celebrated orchestra, having successfully emerged from the alien enemy entanglements which prevented its last scheduled appearance here, will be heard in the Academy of Music on next Monday evening. Evidence has lately been advanced to show that Doctor Muck is a Swiss citizen. Whatever his national status, however, no governmental bar to his direction of the forthcoming concert in this city now exists.

According to the ante-season announcement, Fritz Kreisler was to have been soloist at this concert; but, as is generally known, Mr. Kreisler has given up all concert work during the war. Doctor Muck, however, has arranged a program of purely orchestral music of marked interest. It will begin with Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, which will constitute the first part of the program. In the second part of the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, Op. 6, with Doctor Muck at the piano; Cherubini's overture, "Anacreon," and the second suite arranged from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Chloe."

This is in three parts, entitled, respectively, "Daybreak," "Pantomime" and "General Dance," and was given for the first time in this country, so far as is known, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, December 14 and 15. It had such extraordinary success that Doctor Muck has just repeated it at the concerts of the last week. The ballet was composed in 1910 with the expectation that it would be performed by the Russian Ballet in Paris in 1911. As a matter of fact it had its first performances in June, 1912, in Paris.

The scenario of the ballet was by Fokine, from the romance of Longus. In 1914 when the ballet was produced in London by the Diaghileff forces there ensued a saucy correspondence between Diaghileff and Ravel because the former cut out part of the ballet, particularly the choruses.

The program in its entirety is as follows:

Symphony in F minor, No. 4, Opus 36 ..... Tschaikowsky
Concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, Opus 6 ..... Handel
Overture, "Anacreon" ..... Cherubini
"Lever du Jour," "Pantomime," "Danse Generale" ..... Ravel
("Daybreak," "Pantomime," "General Dance")
Orcehstra fragments from "Daphnis et Chloe." Ballet in one act.

At his coming annual violin recital, to take place in the Academy of Music Saturday afternoon next, January 12, at 3 o'clock, Mischa Elman will present the following:

1. Concerto, G minor ..... Vivaldi-Nachez
Allegro—Adagio—Allegro
2. Symphonie Espagnole ..... Lalo
Allegro non troppo—Andante—Allegro
3. Sonata, II E major ..... Handel
Adagio—Cantabile—Allegro—Largo—Allegro non troppo
4. (a) Deep River (paraphrase) ..... Elman
(b) Tango ..... Albaniz-Elman
(c) Nocturne ..... Chopin-Wilhelmi
(d) Hungarian Dance No. 7. ..... Brahms-Joachim
5. I Palpiti ..... Paganini

EVENING TELEGRAM
Philadelphia, Pa.
JAN 5- 1918

MUCK AT THE PIANO.

The Boston Symphony will be heard Monday evening next at the Academy of Music. It will be an orchestral program only, no soloist assisting, and includes Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, with Dr. Muck at the piano; Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture, and a suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Chloe." This latter work achieved such a success when given recently in December by the Boston organization that Dr. Muck, we are told, was compelled to repeat it. The ballet was first performed in London by the Diaghileff forces in 1914. It had been presented in Paris two years previously. Dr. Muck, who remains the conductor, will be given an opportunity to display his musical versatility, as he will not only wield the baton in his masterly fashion but manifest his supremacy at the keyboard. The program is one of exceptional merit and will be the only occasion that lovers of orchestral music will enjoy next week of hearing favorite compositions, as the local organization leaves Monday next for a tour of neighboring States. Consequently there will be no concerts on Friday and Saturday of the coming week.

From PUBLIC LEDGER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

PATRIOTISM OF CITY RISES AGAINST MUCK

Thousands Join to Oppose Appearance of German as Orchestra Leader

Protests against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appearing at the head of his men when the orchestra plays here next Monday night at the Academy of Music have been made by many patriotic men and women of the city.

The doctor is not wanted in Philadelphia, they say, and if thousands of members of patriotic and war-aid organizations are successful in their efforts he will not be permitted to make a public appearance here.

Doctor Muck and his garbled version of "The Star Spangled Banner," as he played it in jazz style when he appeared here November 5, will not be countenanced by Philadelphia's patriotic organizations.

"It's an outrage to allow Doctor Muck to play anywhere in America," was the manner in which Mrs. George Dallas Dixon gave vent to her patriotic feeling last night. Mrs. Dixon was one of the city's prominent women who last month signed petitions which were intended for Mayor Smith, demanding that the concert scheduled for December 3 be given without the doctor. "Pittsburgh will not allow Doctor Muck to play there. Baltimore raised a fuss. Are Philadelphians less patriotic than other cities of this country?"

Mrs. James Starr, president of the Colonial Dames of America, declared last night that any person with sympathy for the Central Powers should not be publicly recognized in America.

"Because he allowed 'The Star Spangled Banner' to be played and permitted the American flag to be used is no reason why Doctor Muck shou'd be permitted to conduct the concert here," was the manner in which Mrs. Reed A. Morgan, secretary of the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania, voiced her indignation. "I feel very strong on the subject," declared Mrs. Morgan.

PUBLIC LEDGER
ress Philadelphia, Pa.
JAN 7- 1918

DR. MUCK AND HIS CRITICS

He Never Refused to Play the "Star Spangled Banner" and He Is Not a Prussian

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—An article containing attacks on Doctor Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared in a Philadelphia paper on January 4. The only ground of complaint specified is the allegation ~~that~~ the "Star Spangled Banner" was played in "jazz style" at the concert on November 5. It would seem to be a sufficient commentary on this complaint to say that at the time one account stated that the anthem was played at a "funeral pace" and another that it was "raced through." The probable truth is that these authors, like other similar complainants, had no personal knowledge of what occurred and used their imagination in place of facts. The librarian of Congress informed the symphony management that there is no official orchestration of the anthem. The arrangement used was that of Victor Herbert, and was the only one available.

The most difficult errors to set right are those which have no foundation. But it should be repeated again that Doctor Muck did not refuse to play the "Star Spangled Banner." He is not and never was a Prussian. He is and has been for fifty years a citizen of the republic of Switzerland. The Department of Justice of the United States has stated that the Government has no ground to complain of his conduct. Such attacks as have been made upon him are based upon nothing but irresponsible gossip.

C. A. ELLIS,
Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Boston, January 5, 1917.

rom RECORD
.ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.
ate JAN 7- 1

Anonymous communications will not be noticed.

Hounding Dr. Muck.

Editor of The Record:

An article containing attacks on Dr. Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared in a Philadelphia paper of January 4. The only ground of complaint specified is the allegation that "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played in "jazz style" at the concert on November 5.

It would seem to be a sufficient commentary on this complaint to say that at the time one paper stated that the anthem was played at a "funeral pace," and another, that it was "raced through." The probable truth is that these authors, like other similar complainants, had no personal knowledge of what occurred and used their imagination in place of facts. The Librarian of Congress informed the Symphony management that there is no official orchestration of the anthem. The arrangement used was that of Victor Herbert, and was the only one available.

The most difficult errors to set right are those which have no foundation. But it should be repeated again that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." He is not and never was a Prussian. He is and has been for 50 years a citizen of the Republic of Switzerland. The Department of Justice of the United States has stated that the Government has no ground to complain of his conduct. Such attacks as have been made upon him are based upon nothing but irresponsible gossip. G. A. ELLIS.
Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Boston, Mass., Jan. 5, 1918.

ENQUIRER
ss: Philadelphia, Pa.
1918

Letters to the Editor

The Boston Symphony Explains

To the Editor of The Inquirer:

An article containing attacks on Dr. Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared in several Philadelphia papers of January 4th. The only ground of complaint specified is the allegation that "The Star Spangled Banner" was played in "jazz style" at the concert on November 5.

It would seem to be a sufficient commentary on this complaint to say that at the time one paper stated that the anthem was played at a "funeral pace," and another, that it was "raced through." The probable truth is that these authors like other similar complainants had no personal knowledge of what occurred and used their imagination in place of facts. The Librarian of Congress informed the Symphony management that there is no official orchestration of the anthem. The arrangement used was that of Victor Herbert, and was the only one available.

The most difficult errors to set right are those which have no foundation. But it should be repeated again that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play "The Star Spangled Banner." He is not and never was a Prussian. He is and has been for fifty years a citizen of the Republic of Switzerland. The Department of Justice of the United States has stated that the government has no ground to complain of his conduct. Such attacks as have been made upon him are based upon nothing but irresponsible gossip.

C. A. Ellis,
Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NORTH AMERICAN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

LEADING WOMEN HERE JOIN TO BAR DR. MUCK

His Admission Aid to Hun Propagandists, Mrs. Gazzam Asserts

'SCORNS US,' SAYS ONE

Patriotic women joined the protest here yesterday against the scheduled appearance of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music next Monday night.

The fact that Doctor Muck, under pressure, finally consented to lead his orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at his concerts alter the situation very little, these women said.

"To admit Doctor Muck here at this crisis is to acknowledge ourselves as willing to assist German propagandists," said Mrs. Joseph M. Gazam, a director of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

"Doctor Muck is only laughing up his sleeve at us," said Mrs. George Dunning, director of the woman's registration for patriotic service, 1607 Walnut street. "He has no real regard for us as Americans, and no real understanding of our earnest, patriotic and national loyalty."

"When we permit among us a musical leader with latent German sympathy, how can we expect to have an undiluted feeling of American patriotism?" asked Miss Anna Harries Snyder, chairman of the finance committee of the woman suffrage board.

BULLETIN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

The Boston Orchestra

RESUMING its series of concerts at the Academy of Music last evening, after having omitted the concert scheduled for December, because of the rule of the Government prohibiting the transportation at the present time of unnaturalized residents in this country, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, still under the direction of Karl Muck, and with former difficulties evidently overcome, was heard by a large audience in the presentation of a program which, with Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, in F minor, as its principal number, included compositions of Handel, Cherubini and Ravel.

It will be seen that the four composers named represent widely separated periods and a varied style of music, from the old-style Concerto Gross, No. 10, in D minor, of Handel, which was something of a novelty in that it introduced Dr. Muck as pianist as well as conductor; Italian opera-ballet music, in the overture to Cherubini's "Anacreon," (1803); the comparatively recent symphonic work of the great Russian, and the distinctly "modern" impressionist ballet excerpts, or fragments, from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe."

The symphony probably ranks next in popularity to Tschaikowsky's favorite "Pathetique." The composer acknowledged that the work is a reflection of Beethoven's fifth symphony, with the same knock-knock-knocking of Fate, sounded at the opening, as the prevailing theme of the intricate orchestral construction. This composition, with its famous pizzicato scherzo, is wonderful in its breadth, its power and in its melodious and dramatic appeal, when played as last night's audience heard it played. The splendid unity and precision of the orchestra were demonstrated anew. The rapid pizzicato measures of the scherzo were so deftly executed that the members of the orchestra who did it had to rise and acknowledge the applause.

In the Handel concerto—arranged by Seiffert—Dr. Muck sat at the piano, facing the orchestra, part of the time playing with the left hand and conducting with the right, and again playing with both hands. It was beautiful, old-time music, admirably interpreted and greatly enjoyed. Dr. Muck, who had been cordially received upon his first entrance, to begin the concert, after his exhibition of pianistic ability was recalled and again enthusiastically applauded, as if the audience—at least a portion of it—were over-anxious to convince him of its good will.

In this connection might be mentioned the fact that the concert was preceded by the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," which, this time, was offered in a straightforward manner, with more sincerity and none of the fancifying frills of the unacceptable musical comedy version of the anthem which the orchestra presented at its first concert of the season.

om PUBLIC LEDGER
ldress Philadelphia, Pa.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA RETURNS

Doctor Muck and the Members Cordially Received at Academy Concert

With Doctor Muck at the piano the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with its leader restored to the good graces of the Government by the prim and correct neutrality of Doctor Muck's citizenship in little Switzerland and with the members somewhat compacted for traveling purposes, also in countenance of the authorities, gave a delightful concert at the Academy of Music last evening, the second of its series, though on the date of the third, and through the agency of a Handelian concerto grosso for strings and harpsichord for one thing carried the audience far from the dark things of this troubled time into the periwigged and peruqued salons of the eighteenth century, while the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky gave the Russian tang and the Cherubini overture to "Anacreon" and Ravel's ballet suite the Latin touch to a program that was everything that a symphonic program should be in the way of contrast and balance.

If there were any present who were enjoying the "fearful joy" of listening to one who had been accused of being an enemy alien against the call of their conscience they very carefully disguised it, since the applause after every composition interpreted was cordial and almost ovational at times, while if there was any doubt as to the good graces of the audience when it came to the interpretation of the national anthem, this time, not caught napping with a Victor Herbert summer garden version under his elbow, Doctor Muck gave a dignified rendering of the music that was a frankly solemn, hymn-like harmonization of the "Star Spangled Banner" that had all the character that the air should have orchestrally as a symbol, and consequently the concert thus patriotically opened, moved triumphantly from the symphony through the concerto and the Cherubini number to Ravel's hectic modernities at the close, gathering favor as the evening went on. Of the Tschaikowsky number there can be little new asid save to note that it came in for a spirited and finished reading, while the Handel number had an element of novelty, since Dr. Muck, as was the habit of conductors in the 1700's, sat at the piano and filled in the figured bass with emphasis and sonority, at the same time dexterously leading the strings through the solemn and merry paces of the five movements. This was quite the hit of the evening, and since Handel was quite as much of an Englishman as the Hanoverian sovereigns who patronized him, perhaps it was intended by Doctor Muck as a tribute to the British cause. In the concerto the attack and precision of the strings and their swing in unison and quality made the old concerto prove that it had red blood, indeed, though curiously enough in this matter of the sureness of the strings in the famous "scherzo pizzicato" of the symphony there was a "thumbing unhandily" at one moment that was quite noticeable.

Naturally the Ravel number was nothing if not absolutely up to date, being fragments from the ballet "Daphnis and Chloe," written for the Russian dancers and calling for a formidable group of instruments to give the full color splashes and the vertiginous effects to the choreographic scene painting which is its definite metier. The first movement, "Daybreak," after the usual waldweben murmurs and the somewhat overloud twitter of birds, developed into an effect in tutti fortissimo that made the "dawn come up," in the regular Kiplingesque manner, "like thunder out of China cross the bay." The second movement, "Pantomime," was perhaps the most Debussyized part of the ballet and was full of weird and unexpected outburst that needed, however, the visualization of the dance folly to "register." But the conclusion, the "General Dance," was a wild Maenadic revel, reaching to a superb climax that kept all the players busily at work and needed no explanation nor even the presence of the dancers to set the pulse tingling and the feet in motion. While several boxes were unfilled the audience was of the usual Boston Symphony type as to size and personnel, and Doctor Muck and the orchestra were welcomed back cordially after the lapse of two months in no uncertain manner.

EVENING TELEGRAM
Philadelphia, Pa.

BOSTON SYMPHONY WARMLY GREETED

Dr. Muck Receives Ovation in Dual Capacity of Conductor and Piano Soloist.

Dr. Muck has been officially investigated by the United States Government, freed from the suspicion of disloyalty and accorded the privilege of untrammeled passage throughout the nation. Naturally the writer then assumes that he, not Muck, will be granted the right of freedom of the press in his review of last evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He also announces for the benefit of those who might doubt his Americanism that he is a member of the Sons of the Revolution and the Colonial Society of Pennsylvania and boasts a family tie with John Marshall, the great Chief Justice of the United States, known as "the expounder of the Constitution," and the intimate friend of George Washington.

This review is chronicled from the standpoint of artistic and musical neutrality. Therefore, if the writer, who is designated, in the present order of mundane things, "a critic," should find it necessary to state with absolute impartiality that Dr. Muck is a piano virtuoso of eminence, and surpasses all other orchestral conductors in this country he must be ready, for the sake of conscience, to reap the whirlwind. This "critic" now commits himself to these statements. Having done so, he is prepared to make full restitution to his tailor, be shriven by no less august ecclesiastic than the Archbishop of Titipu and most reluctantly welcomes death or banishment, as did Huss, Evangeline, Savonarola, Jeanne d'Arc, Roosevelt and Saint Ursula and her eleven thousand virgins. And so endeth this hurricane in a coffee pot.

Dr. Muck aroused his auditors to a most pronounced state of enthusiasm when he conducted the Handel concerto grosso in D minor and was piano soloist of the composition at the same time. While his two hands were engaged with the keyboard he directed with his head, and with the right hand on occasions when the score did not call for the employment of that member. His mastery of the instrument was complete, both as to interpretative powers and technique. Authority was the dominant characteristic of this achievement. At the conclusion of the number there was a veritable ovation. There is not another conductor now before the American public who can duplicate this performance as did Mr. Muck.

Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor gave the orchestra every opportunity to display the many and varied merits which have long constituted its undisputed claim to being America's premiere orchestral organization. As usual the salient feature was the musical unanimity of the instrumentalists. They played as one man and the tonal quality was, as ever, superbly rich. The different choirs were perfectly attuned and followed the conductor's beat with precision. The vastly unalike movements, from the initial valse inflections through the almost vocal qualities of the secondary part, including pissicati passages and ending with the fiery finale were magnificently accomplished. The applause was of so emphatic a duration that the entire organization was compelled to rise twice and acknowledge the ovation.

The overture to Cherubini's opera-ballet, "Anacreon," was given with consummate attention to the delightful melodies with which it abounds. Orchestral fragments from a one act ballet by Ravel, "Daphnis et Chloe," served to illustrate the versatility of the players. The compositions were of no great musical value, yet in their illustration of the demands exacted by their rendition, for the measures were replete with harmonic pitfalls, they proved a test which was easily surmounted. "The Star Spangled Banner" was played before the concert. The audience was large and applause was persistent and sincere. Incidentally it may be noted that recently in Boston Melba, Muck and Kreisler gave a concert for the Halifax sufferers. The receipts were $10,000, all of which was sent to the unfortunates.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK BACK WITH UNDIMINISHED ART

Reconstructed Boston Symphony Gives Brilliant Concert in Academy of Music

NATIONAL AIR SIMPLIFIE

Art had first place at last night's concert of the reconstructed Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music. Patriotic excitement over the status of Doctor Muck and his relations with "The Star Spangled Banner" seemed to have spent itself. The national anthem, played with simplicity, if not pulse-tingling brilliancy and happily wholly devoid of the frivilous instrumentation devised by the Irish-born Victor Herbert, which evoked so much comment at the "Bostons'" last performance here, called forth less applause than any number on the program.

The patriotic air was respectfully heard and perfunctorily applauded. Enthusiasm was reserved not for the now familiar prelude, but for the major orchestral eatures of a delightful concert. In acknowledgment of the spontaneous plaudits, members of the orchestra were several times compelled to rise, and Doctor Muck was repeatedly called to the stage "apron."

His taste as a leader was displayed with potent brilliancy in an exquisite suite fro mRavel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," while his gifts as a pianist had effective display in Handel's Grosso Concerto in D minor. This latter number was quickened into new life by the engaging interpretation it received from the orchestra's masterly string choir and the leader's talents has a virtuoso. The eighteenth century charm of such a performance all but effaced the impression of monotony which much of Handel's music gives today.

The concert opened with the melodious Tschaikowsky symphony No. 4 in F minor, played with unrivaled technical finish, impeccable in brass effects, dulcet in perfection of woodings and yet a trifle lacking in the romantic surge that seems requisite to a fitting reading of this work. Doctor Muck's abilities are better displayed in scores less impetuous than those of modern Muscovy.

Almost flawless instrumental execution distinguished the old "An Acreon" overture of Cherubini, but both the conductor's resources and those of his associates were exploited to the full in the haughtingly lovely Ravel suite. The scoring is here intensely modern, trickily intricate, redolent with atmospheric suggestions of Debussy and Charpentier and yet stamped with the vital distinction discernable in the same composer's impressionistic Spanish suite recently given here by Mr. Stokowski.

Its appeal would undoubtedly be intensified in direction connection with the pantomime ballet for which it was written. Divorced from the choreographic aid, the demands on orchestral finish were increased. The Boston players met them triumphantly. Supremely polyphonic clarity, rare precision of execution and lace-like delicacy were salient artistic factors in a rendition which disclosed the equipment of one of the world's finest symphonic organizations in its highest estate.

H. T. C.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK, CHASTENED, PLAYS U. S. HYMN FOR SLIM CROWD

Boston Symphony Performs Excellently in Fine Program; Big Improvement Over Last Visit in Nation's Anthem

By Janet Stewart

Dr. Karl Muck returned to Philadelphia last night with his Boston Symphony Orchestra, or as much of it as the unfortunate necessity to restrain some of the activities of alien enemies has left him with. It was, however, a full orchestra; whether Doctor Muck had been compelled to fill it out with Americans, naturalized or native, as his advertisements in Philadelphia papers would lead one to suppose, or whether his own twenty-one alien enemies were admitted with extra precautions was not announced from the platform. But native or alien talent, they played well.

It was the same Doctor Muck who, a short time since, conducted a funeral march with a refrain of "The Star-Spangled Banner" to the hysterical delight and gratitude of a Philadelphia audience, just as it was the same orchestra which faultlessly followed him; but both in Doctor Muck and in his orchestra it was a sameness with a difference.

The doctor was less superciliously scornful of his audience and less openly scornful of the anthem; he played it acceptably, if he did not play it well. The accentuation was not that which an American would give it, but, under the circumstances, it was perhaps as good as could be expected from a naturalized Swiss citizen who does not admire our taste in national airs.

Blocks of Seats Vacant

There was a corresponding difference in the audience. For the first time, probably, in the history of the Boston Symphony's concerts in Philadelphia, whole blocks of seats thruout the house remained vacant. In the lower tier of boxes six were without occupants; the proscenium boxes and the entire orchestra pit were empty; empty, too, were ten boxes on the balcony. No warmest adherent of the musical doctor could have called it a full house.

What there was of it, however, gave the doctor a cordial greeting when he appeared; it was cordial, but it was in no sense boisterous. The hysterical eagerness to do him honor that greeted his last entry was lacking; only here and there did some excitable partisan woman lean far forward in her seat clapping ecstatic hands, as if to attract his attention and to give him comfort for all the mean things the papers have said about him.

To such an extent, even, had Philadelphia recovered from its attack of Muck-hysteria that it permitted him to play the anthem thru before it broke into its applause, thus doing almost as much honor to the anthem as to Doctor Muck.

There was a difference also in the program. Instead of a whole evening devoted to German music, Doctor Muck had carefully chosen a program which could hurt no one's sensibilities. The symphony was the exquisite No. 4 in F Minor of Tschaikowsky, and certainly neither Doctor Muck nor his orchestra ever acquitted themselves better. It was a masterpiece played as a masterpiece should be and the last movement, the allegro con fuoco, caught the audience into such high reaches of delight that it brought the conductor back three times and made the whole orchestra stand to receive its thanks.

Accompanies on Piano

That happened once again, after the final movement of Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, in which Doctor Muck himself accompanied his orchestra in the rather minor part allotted to the piano. This is the first time that Doctor Muck has ever himself played to a Philadelphia audience, and his audience showed its appreciation by applauding him warmly.

The two other numbers on the program were the overture to the opera ballet, "Anacreon," by Cherubini, and orchestral fragments from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." Neither one caused much enthusiasm, but both were exceedingly well played.

The fifth movement of the concerto, the allegro moderato, played in one movement with only the strings, was as lovely a thing as it is well possible to imagine; the shading was perfect; the lightness and cheerfulness of the theme comes with most beautiful contrast after the churchly solemnity of the overture.

But the gem of the evening, par excellence, was the wonderful third movement of the symphony, the scherzo. Its gay caprices, its military music, its bizarre and vague appeals to the imagination, with its underlying knowledge of the vanity of all human endeavor, make of this bit of music in itself one of the wonder themes of art.

ENQUIRER
s: Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 1918

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Concert Enjoyed by Large Audience at the Academy Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra whose December visit was, it will be remembered, omitted, returned to the city yesterday and gave a concert under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck which was evidently greatly enjoyed by the large assemblage which the occasion had attracted. If there were any who had anticipated trouble, they were either disappointed or otherwise according to their point of view. Nothing of a sensation or unpleasant character occurred. Dr. Muck, who was received with the cordial courtesy to which he is entitled, and which a Philadelphia audience is too fair and too well bred to deny him, at once signaled his men to their feet and the "Star Spangled Banner" was played in a straight forward, dignified version which was free from the elaborate accompaniment supplied by the strings to which some had objected two months ago.

That tribute paid and duty done, Dr. Muck proceeded with the performance of a programme which included a Handel Concerto, the "Anacreon" overture of Cherubini, and some ballet music by Ravel, and which had for its salient feature Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony in F minor. This is the one with the well-known pizzicato movement, and while it is less popular and generally appealing than the "Pathetique," it must be recognized as a work of greater artistic value and of a finer melodic charm. It was regarded by the composer himself as one of his very best creations, and this opinion is shared by most of those who are qualified to form an expert judgment. It was admirably played under Dr. Muck's sympathetic and wholly competent direction, played with the utmost refinement of detail and eloquence of expression, and with an accomplished virtuosity which was conspicuously displayed in the vertiginous rapidity and impeccable precision by which the execution of the difficult pizzicato was distinguished.

In the other things and especially in the dance music of Ravel, the work of the orchestra was not less satisfying and commendable, and the well pleased audience was appropriately prodigal with its applause.

om WORLD
ddress: New York City

JAN 13 19

BEETHOVEN'S "PASTORAL" PLAYED BY BOSTONIANS.

Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet Is Performed Here by Orchestra for First Time.

A commendable programme which had variety, much musical substance, yet was not too formal, was well played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall at its fifth New York concert this season.

Dr. Muck led off with Beethoven's Sixth Symphony (the "Pastoral"), and this charming work could not have been more ideally played. Less interesting to the average listener was the concerto grosso in D of Handel, save the "air," which was fairly sung by the instruments. Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" also had a tonally and technically finished interpretation, save in the closing phrases, which found the brasses and wood-winds at odds.

The novelty of the evening was Ravel's one-oct ballet music, "Daphnis et Chloe," which the Boston Symphony never before offered in this city. Typically Debussy-like in its agreeable dissonances, shifting in a myriad of tonal colors—the middle portion of "Daybreak" and the beginning of "Pantomime" proved aural delights.

But when Ravel arrived at the "General Dance," the final fragment in the composition, he strayed from the fields and nymphs and permitted himself the color and many phrases of "Scheherazade." The audience was large and enthusiastic.

om RECORD
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.
e

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Dr. Muck's Piano Playing as a Novelty in Haendel Offering.

A rousing reception was given last night to the Boston Orchestra on the resumption of the regular concerts in the Academy of Music. Last month's concert, owing to an extensive unnaturalized membership, was omitted from the series of five, and the program previously arranged for last night's performance was altered, inasmuch as Fritz Kreisler, the expected soloist, has renounced public playing. Dr. Muck is resourceful, however, and, while Kreisler's absence was to be regretted, the program offered was so well arranged and was so attractive that enjoyment was general.

Dr. Muck's conducting of the Tchaikowsky F minor Symphony was the high point of the concert. His conception of the work is marked by a lucidity that communicates itself to the auditor in the clearness of themes, their balanced and finely rhythmic development and a dramatic intensity that found a climax in a truly magnificent performance of the fourth movement. The symphony in its entirety is a great work for displaying the virtuosity of an organization, and Dr. Muck's players did not fail to work with a style no other orchestra can approach.

The novelty of the evening was the piano playing of the conductor, who did the piano part of the Haendel D Minor Concerto. Surrounded by the strong choir of the orchestra, Dr. Muck both played and conducted the musicians through the work, bringing to mind many vivid descriptions of the type of playing prevalent in the Haendel period, when fine ensemble flourished to the mutual enjoyment of musicians and audience, without the intrusion of the conspicuous conductor of modern days. The Haendel Concerto was a joy to the musically inclined, but was probably a great bore to those who like only full orchestra. The piano part is in no sense a solo, has comparatively little of difficult writing and can be played largely with the left hand, leaving the player free to conduct with the right.

A striking novelty was the Ravel offering, a suite from the ballet "Daphnis and ..." very modern in style, employing ...al instruments and presenting a ...s of exquisite tonal pictures. The audience was emphatic in applause, Dr. Muck being recalled three times after the final selection. Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture was a pleasing contribution to the program.

From AMERICAN
Address: New York City.
Da

206 12

ORCHESTRAS GIVE FEAST OF MUSIC

New York and Boston Symphony Organizations Render Generous Programmes at Carnegie Hall. Miss Muzio Heard as Soloist

By MAX SMITH.

WHAT with the concerts of the New York and Boston Symphony orchestras, both given in Carnegie Hall, the musical market yesterday offered enough instrumental viands to satisfy all but the most voracious appetite. Those aesthetic gourmands, however, who did not belong to the visiting organization's privileged throng of devotees, were restricted in their choice of banquets; for regular subscribers controlled practically all the seats at the evening's feast.

Walter Damrosch had made generous preparations for his matinee guests. His menu embraced not only Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" symphony, Ernest Bloch's "Trois Poemes Juifs" ("Danse," "Rite" and "Cortege"), and Weber's "Freischuetz" overture, but also two operatic selections, sung by Claudia Muzio, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Dr. Muck, on the other hand, following the Boston Orchestra's now firmly established custom, limited his bill-of-fare to symphonic courses, presenting Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture, and three fragments from Ravel's Ballet "Daphis et Chloe," entitled "Lever du Jour," "Pantomime" and "Danse Generale." The virtuosi from the Hub, however, can well afford to dispense with prima donna persuasions.

Signorina Muzio quite startled the Symphony Society's audience with a swagger stick that emphasized the military character of her visored cap. In a close-fitting gown of white, the tall and statuesque soprano made a striking picture as she stood close to the conductor's platform, clutching her little cane in both hands at right angles to her body.

But Signorina Muzio had something more than her unusual costume to attract attention. The "Casta Diva" aria from Bellini's "Norma" offered problems, to be sure, which she did not entirely solve. She was more at home in the "Depuis le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise." Yet, taking everything into consideration, it must be acknowledged that she sang both numbers remarkably well—with a command of sustained phrasing, of dynamic modulation and even of coloratura for which few habitues of the opera house, perhaps, would have given her credit. Whether given out in full or in half voice, her tones were at all times beautiful in quality, and she had no difficulty in the closing measures of the "Louise" aria, in spinning out a delicate and finely resonant pianissimo on high B natural.

Ernest Bloch's masterfully orchestrated Jewish tone-poems, heard for the first time at these concerts, though by no means new to the public, confirmed the favorable impression they had made when produced here by the Society of Friends of Music under the direction of Artur Bodanzky. They were capitally played under Damrosch's direction and the composer, who occupied a box in the first tier with his family, rose in acknowledgment of the applause.

Praise is due to Mr. Lifschey of the Symphony Orchestra for his excellent performance of the viola obligato part in the Berlioz symphony, which Mr. Damrosch conducted con amore.

The most unusual feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert came in the second part of the programme, which had opened with a masterly performance of Beethoven's Symphony in F major—a performance that few listeners are likely to forget.

Much to the surprise of the audience, which broke into spontaneous applause, Dr. Muck sat down at the grand piano that had been brought to the middle of the stage in the intermission and himself played the cembalo part in Dr. Max Seiffert's arrangement of the Handel concerto, conducting the collaborating three solo instruments of the "concertino," as well as the performers of the "ripieni" or "tutti," whenever his right hand was not occupied on the keyboard.

No wonder that the crowd renewed its expression of delight at the end, for the performance proved to be as delectable in its intrinsic results as in its unconventional setting.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK, CHASTENED, PLAYS U. S. HYMN FOR SLIM CROWD

Boston Symphony Performs Excellently in Fine Program; Big Improvement Over Last Visit in Nation's Anthem

By Janet Stewart

Dr. Karl Muck returned to Philadelphia last night with his Boston Symphony Orchestra, or as much of it as the unfortunate necessity to restrain some of the activities of alien enemies has left him with. It was, however, a full orchestra; whether Doctor Muck had been compelled to fill it out with Americans, naturalized or native, as his advertisements in Philadelphia papers would lead one to suppose, or whether his own twenty-one alien enemies were admitted with extra precautions was not announced from the platform. But native or alien talent, they played well.

It was the same Doctor Muck who, a short time since, conducted a funeral march with a refrain of "The Star-Spangled Banner" to the hysterical delight and gratitude of a Philadelphia audience, just as it was the same orchestra which faultlessly followed him; but both in Doctor Muck and in his orchestra it was a sameness with a difference.

The doctor was less supercilliously scornful of his audience and less openly scornful of the anthem; he played it acceptably, if he did not play it well. The accentuation was not that which an American would give it, but, under the circumstances, it was perhaps as good as could be expected from a naturalized Swiss citizen who does not admire our taste in national airs.

Blocks of Seats Vacant

There was a corresponding difference in the audience. For the first time, probably, in the history of the Boston Symphony's concerts in Philadelphia, whole blocks of seats thruout the house remained vacant. In the lower tier of boxes six were without occupants; the proscenium boxes and the entire orchestra pit were empty; empty, too, were ten boxes on the balcony. No warmest adherent of the musical doctor could have called it a full house.

What there was of it, however, gave the doctor a cordial greeting when he appeared; it was cordial, but it was in no sense boisterous. The hysterical eagerness to do him honor that greeted his last entry was lacking; only here and there did some excitable partisan woman lean far forward in her seat clapping ecstatic hands, as if to attract his attention and to give him comfort for all the mean things the papers have said about him.

To such an extent, even, had Philadelphia recovered from its attack of Muck-hysteria that it permitted him to play the anthem thru before it broke into its applause, thus doing almost as much honor to the anthem as to Doctor Muck.

There was a difference also in the program. Instead of a whole evening devoted to German music, Doctor Muck had carefully chosen a program which could hurt no one's sensibilities. The symphony was the exquisite No. 4 in F Minor of Tschaikowsky, and certainly neither Doctor Muck nor his orchestra ever acquitted themselves better. It was a masterpiece played as a masterpiece should be and the last movement, the allegro con fuoco, caught the audience into such high reaches of delight that it brought the conductor back three times and made the whole orchestra stand to receive its thanks.

Accompanies on Piano

That happened once again, after the final movement of Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, in which Doctor Muck himself accompanied his orchestra in the rather minor part allotted to the piano. This is the first time that Doctor Muck has ever himself played to a Philadelphia audience, and his audience showed its appreciation by applauding him warmly.

The two other numbers on the program were the overture to the opera ballet, "Anacreon," by Cherubini, and orchestral fragments from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." Neither one caused much enthusiasm, but both were exceedingly well played.

The fifth movement of the concerto, the allegro moderato, played in one movement with only the strings, was as lovely a thing as it is well possible to imagine; the shading was perfect; the lightness and cheerfulness of the theme comes with most beautiful contrast after the churchly solemnity of the overture.

But the gem of the evening, par excellence, was the wonderful third movement of the symphony, the scherzo. Its gay caprices, its military music, its bizarre and vague appeals to the imagination, with its underlying knowledge of the vanity of all human endeavor, make of this bit of music in itself one of the wonder themes of art.

ENQUIRER
s: Philadelphia, Pa.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Concert Enjoyed by Large Audience at the Academy Last Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra whose December visit was, it will be remembered, omitted, returned to the city yesterday and gave a concert under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck which was evidently greatly enjoyed by the large assemblage which the occasion had attracted. If there were any who had anticipated trouble, they were either disappointed or otherwise according to their point of view. Nothing of a sensation or unpleasant character occurred. Dr. Muck, who was received with the cordial courtesy to which he is entitled, and which a Philadelphia audience is too fair and too well bred to deny him, at once signaled his men to their feet and the "Star Spangled Banner" was played in a straight forward, dignified version which was free from the elaborate accompaniment supplied by the strings to which some had objected two months ago.

That tribute paid and duty done, Dr. Muck proceeded with the performance of a programme which included a Handel Concerto, the "Anacreon" overture of Cherubini, and some ballet music by Ravel, and which had for its salient feature Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony in F minor. This is the one with the well-known pizzicato movement, and while it is less popular and generally appealing than the "Pathetique," it must be recognized as a work of greater artistic value and of a finer melodic charm. It was regarded by the composer himself as one of his very best creations, and this opinion is shared by most of those who are qualified to form an expert judgment. It was admirably played under Dr. Muck's sympathetic and wholly competent direction, played with the utmost refinement of detail and eloquence of expression, and with an accomplished virtuosity which was conspicuously displayed in the vertiginous rapidity and impeccable precision by which the execution of the difficult pizzicato was distinguished.

In the other things and especially in the dance music of Ravel, the work of the orchestra was not less satisfying and commendable, and the well pleased audience was appropriately prodigal with its applause.

---

om RECORD
dress: Philadelphia, Pa.
e

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Dr. Muck's Piano Playing as a Novelty in Haendel Offering.

A rousing reception was given last night to the Boston Orchestra on the resumption of the regular concerts in the Academy of Music. Last month's concert, owing to an extensive unnaturalized membership, was omitted from the series of five, and the program previously arranged for last night's performance was altered, inasmuch as Fritz Kreisler, the expected soloist, has renounced public playing. Dr. Muck is resourceful, however, and, while Kreisler's absence was to be regretted, the program offered was so well arranged and was so attractive that enjoyment was general.

Dr. Muck's conducting of the Tchaikowsky F minor Symphony was the high point of the concert. His conception of the work is marked by a lucidity that communicates itself to the auditor in the clearness of themes, their balanced and finely rhythmic development and a dramatic intensity that found a climax in a truly magnificent performance of the fourth movement. The symphony in its entirety is a great work for displaying the virtuosity of an organization, and Dr. Muck's players did not fail to work with a style no other orchestra can approach.

The novelty of the evening was the piano playing of the conductor, who did the piano part of the Haendel D Minor Concerto. Surrounded by the strong choir of the orchestra, Dr. Muck both played and conducted the musicians through the work, bringing to mind many vivid descriptions of the type of playing prevalent in the Haendel period, when fine ensemble flourished to the mutual enjoyment of musicians and audience, without the intrusion of the conspicuous conductor of modern days. The Haendel Concerto was a joy to the musically inclined, but was probably a great bore to those who like only full orchestra. The piano part is in no sense a solo, has comparatively little of difficult writing and can be played largely with the left hand, leaving the player free to conduct with the right.

A striking novelty was the Ravel offering, a suite from the ballet "Daphnis and ..." very modern in style, employing ...al instruments and presenting a ...s of exquisite tonal pictures. The audience was emphatic in applause, Dr. Muck being recalled three times after the final selection. Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture was a pleasing contribution to the program.

---

om WORLD
ddress: New York City
ate

BEETHOVEN'S "PASTORAL" PLAYED BY BOSTONIANS.

Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet Is Performed Here by Orchestra for First Time.

A commendable programme which had variety, much musical substance, yet was not too formal, was well played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall at its fifth New York concert this season.

Dr. Muck led off with Beethoven's Sixth Symphony (the "Pastoral"), and this charming work could not have been more ideally played. Less interesting to the average listener was the concerto grosso in D of Handel, save the "air," which was fairly sung by the instruments. Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" also had a tonally and technically finished interpretation, save in the closing phrases, which found the brasses and wood-winds at odds.

The novelty of the evening was Ravel's one-oct ballet music, "Daphnis et Chloe," which the Boston Symphony never before offered in this city. Typically Debussy-like in its agreeable dissonances, shifting in a myriad of tonal colors—the middle portion of "Daybreak" and the beginning of "Pantomime" proved aural delights.

But when Ravel arrived at the "General Dance," the final fragment in the composition, he strayed from the fields and nymphs and permitted himself the color and many phrases of "Scheherazade." The audience was large and enthusiastic.

From AMERICAN
Address: New York City.
Da

206

ORCHESTRAS GIVE FEAST OF MUSIC

New York and Boston Symphony Organizations Render Generous Programmes at Carnegie Hall. Miss Muzio Heard as Soloist

By MAX SMITH.

WHAT with the concerts of the New York and Boston Symphony orchestras, both given in Carnegie Hall, the musical market yesterday offered enough instrumental viands to satisfy all but the most voracious appetite. Those aesthetic gourmands, however, who did not belong to the visiting organization's privileged throng of devotees, were restricted in their choice of banquets; for regular subscribers controlled practically all the seats at the evening's feast.

Walter Damrosch had made generous preparations for his matinee guests. His menu embraced not only Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" symphony, Ernest Bloch's "Trois Poemes Juifs" ("Danse," "Rite" and "Cortege"), and Weber's "Freischuetz" overture, but also two operatic selections, sung by Claudia Muzio, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Dr. Muck, on the other hand, following the Boston Orchestra's now firmly established custom, limited his bill-of-fare to symphonic courses, presenting Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture, and three fragments from Ravel's Ballet "Daphis et Chloe," entitled "Lever du Jour," "Pantomime" and "Danse Generale." The virtuosi from the Hub, however, can well afford to dispense with prima donna persuasions.

Signorina Muzio quite startled the Symphony Society's audience with a swagger stick that emphasized the military character of her visored cap. In a close-fitting gown of white, the tall and statuesque soprano made a striking picture as she stood close to the conductor's platform, clutching her little cane in both hands at right angles to her body.

But Signorina Muzio had something more than her unusual costume to attract attention. The "Casta Diva" aria from Bellini's "Norma" offered problems, to be sure, which she did not entirely solve. She was more at home in the "Depuis le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise." Yet, taking everything into consideration, it must be acknowledged that she sang both numbers remarkably well—with a command of sustained phrasing, of dynamic modulation and even of coloratura for which few habitues of the opera house, perhaps, would have given her credit. Whether given out in full or in half voice, her tones were at all times beautiful in quality, and she had no difficulty in the closing measures of the "Louise" aria, in spinning out a delicate and finely resonant pianissimo on high B natural.

Ernest Bloch's masterfully orchestrated Jewish tone-poems, heard for the first time at these concerts, though by no means new to the public, confirmed the favorable impression they had made when produced here by the Society of Friends of Music under the direction of Artur Bodanzky. They were capitally played under Damrosch's direction and the composer, who occupied a box in the first tier with his family, rose in acknowledgment of the applause.

Praise is due to Mr. Lifschey of the Symphony Orchestra for his excellent performance of the viola obligato part in the Berlioz symphony, which Mr. Damrosch conducted con amore.

The most unusual feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert came in the second part of the programme, which had opened with a masterly performance of Beethoven's Symphony in F major—a performance that few listeners are likely to forget.

Much to the surprise of the audience, which broke into spontaneous applause, Dr. Muck sat down at the grand piano that had been brought to the middle of the stage in the intermission and himself played the cembalo part in Dr. Max Seiffert's arrangement of the Handel concerto, conducting the collaborating three solo instruments of the "concertino," as well as the performers of the "ripieni" or "tutti," whenever his right hand was not occupied on the keyboard.

No wonder that the crowd renewed its expression of delight at the end, for the performance proved to be as delectable in its intrinsic results as in its unconventional setting.

rom TRIBUNE
ddress: New York City

Music

Boston Symphony Heard in Second Suite of "Daphnis and Chloe"

Maurice Ravel's mimed drama, "Daphnis and Chloe," which excited unusual interest at the time of its production, was promised to Americans by the Russian Ballet, but, like many another boon promised in pre-Bolshevik days, was withdrawn. New Yorkers heard the first of the two suites, which the composer arranged from his music, under the baton of Mr. Damrosch three years ago, but the second was not played here until last night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed it at Carnegie Hall, following close upon the first American production, in Boston a few weeks ago.

The music reveals Ravel as something very different from the understudy of Debussy which he is widely supposed to be. He is a composer of fresh and fluent invention, vigorous imagination and acutely disciplined taste. He possesses the virtuoso command of the orchestra which is the common property of the French "ultra-moderns," but he is bolder than Debussy alike in thematic material and in harmonic treatment. Best of all, he has a structural power which was not a characteristic of the earlier French impressionists. Though the specific theatrical implications of the music were of course missing in the concert hall, the audience was able to appreciate amply the warm emotions, the physical verve, the color and sunlight which are in this music.

The same audience was intrigued with the sight of Dr. Muck playing the piano and conducting his orchestra with upraised hand and outstretched finger in the D minor "Concerto Grosso" of Handel, arranged by Seiffert for large orchestra. This delightful work was rapidly and energetically played by the Boston musicians. One might further tell about the "Pastoral Symphony," which opened the programme, but it is not "news," and hence not part of the journalist's work to record that Dr. Muck plays Beethoven superbly.

The remaining piece on the programme was the "Anacreon" overture, written by "Citouyen Cherubini," in 1803. Why not an overture by Tavaristh Stravinsky?

n HERALD
ress: New York City
JAN 11 19

Dr. Muck Conducts with 1 Hand, Plays Piano with Other,

Leads Boston Orchestra and "Doubles on Brass"—Directs National Anthem, Too.

Starting quietly with Beethoven's sixth (Pastoral) symphony, but ending with the furious strains of Ravel's "Daphnis & Chloe" (second series), the Boston Sympony Orchestra gave one of its concerts in Carnegie Hall last night. Dr. Karl Muck conducted and in Haendel's Concerto Grosse, opus 6, No. 10, played the part scored for the piano. Directing his men when not using his right hand at the keyboard, he played with the same strength that marks his conducting. It was his first appearance here as a pianist. While not exactly a solo part, the piano has the most important work to do in the concerto. It was a spirited performance, though the work is somewhat formal for great popularity nowadays.

Wonderfully clear and exceedingly beautiful was the performance of the Beethoven symphony. Never has the orchestra played in New York with more polish or more lovely tone.

Dr. Muck once remarked that Ravel was the greatest orchestrator in the world Probably the "Daphnis and Chloe" music is his best piece of orchestration. Its standing as music may still be considered doubtful, it is so complicated and so new. But as a piece of orchestral coloring it is unexcelled. The sound of the wood, winds and strings is marvelous. It represents the highest type of modern French experimental music. Only an orchestra of virtuosos could have played it with such thrilling effect.

Was "The Star Spangled Banner" played and did Dr. Muck conduct it?

It was. And he did.

om EVENING JOURNAL
ddress: New York.
ate

BOSTON AND N. Y. ORCHESTRAS IN CONCERTS

Dr. Muck Gives First Performance Here of "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite by Ravel.

One of the distinctively disappointing omissions of the Diaghileff Ballet direction during its several periods of stimulation administered to New York, was its failure to bring forward Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." One imagined that this might have produced Warslav Nijinsky's greatest triumph against the background of this intriguing modern Frenchman's most intriguing music. But the thing was not to be, and the Metropolitan Opera does not do these things—not even to vary the interminable boredom of incessant couplings of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci," or to eke out the half-portion evenings of "La Figlia del Reggimento" and other items of insufficiency.

Curiosity over "Daphnis et Chloe" was first aroused by Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra, who played a suite made up of several portions of Ravel's work from which one remembers chiefly a nocturne, an astonishing study in both the sensous and the sensual. There was also a "danse guerriere," whose originality of conception and execution outdid anything produced of late years in France.

Ravel has made a second suite out of remaining portions of his ballet music—of course, not at all ballet music in the accepted or the usual sense, but music that characteristically depicts and explains and heightens the action of pantomime, as the music of opera so often does not for drama. This second suite was the item of greatest interest on the program of Dr. Karl Muck for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening. It is made up of three numbers, presented separately as "Lever du jour," "Pantomime" and "Danse generale," but played as a single continuous piece. Day dawns in a new orchestral fashion, Daphnis and Chloe—the latter restored to him by the intervention of Pan—enact their ravelesque love for each other, they mime the story of Pan and Syrinx and the action ends in an orgiastic bacchanale. Ravel employs everything the modern orchestra holds, and even adds voices without words, which were not used in last evening's performance. He secures effects of great beauty—for he can also invent a sustained and appropriate melody—effects of reiterative, cumulative dramatic elan and startling originality.

Dr. Muck played the Ravel piece with evident devotion, but he is both temperamentally and otherwise unable to find and communicate the sophisticated clamor, the languorous sensuousness and the conscious riotousness of this Gallic music. The orchestra played it with great virtuosity and particularly lovely was Mr. Maquarre's flute.

Last evening's program opened with Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, whose simple but often rhapsodic beauties sounded like balm in these days. Then followed the tenth of Handel's twelve concerti grossi, with Dr. Muck playing the basso continuo on a grand piano, and coincidently conducting, in the eighteenth century manner—and elicitating much applause for the novelty. But the essential quality of Handel's music was quite metamorphosed by the intrusion of the great modern piano's tone. The harpsichord alone would have been in place. The program was too long by the addition of Cherubini's "Anacrean" overture.

1 EVENING MAIL
ess: New York City

DR. MUCK A PIANIST.

AT last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Karl Muck surprised his audience by appearing in the rolo of pianist as well as conductor. The revelation came in Handel's concerto grosso in D minor, which was played in the old style, with three soloists grouped around the piano, answering the full strings of the orchestra, Dr. Muck himself beating time whenever the music permitted or the players demanded.

It was a naively intimate performance of a thoroughly charming work, and its success was instantaneous and legitimate. In some way the audience seemed to feel that the sight of Dr. Muck seated in a chair, waving his right hand, offered the most convincing proof possible that he was after all a human being.

The familiar Bostonese interpretation of Beethoven's pastoral symphony opened the programme. Later there was Cherubini's exceedingly attractive "Anacreon" overture, and at the close came excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," an extraordinary exhibition of orchestral virtuosity.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City
JAN 11 1918

The usual Boston Symphony audience gathered in Carnegie Hall last evening for one of the most inspiriting concerts the celebrated band from the New England capital has ever given here. It opened with a vivid, stirring, and exquisitely finished performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony. Then came Handel's tenth concerto grosso, as edited by Dr. Max Seiffert of Berlin. When Dr. Muck seated himself at the piano, used in filling in, the house went quite wild (did any one present suppose Dr. Muck could not play the piano?), and the superb performance of the really stunning concerto of Mr. George Frideric Handel, with Dr. Muck playing and conducting from his piano stool, finished amid the most formidable applause of an enthusiastic evening.

Then came in flawless style and intoxicating spirit the "Anacreon" overture of Cherubini, a radiant masterpiece 114 years have been powerless to dim, constituting a classic prelude to the second of two concert suites drawn by Ravel from his ballet "Daphnis et Chloé." This ballet, composed in 1910, entered the repertory of the Diaghileff Ballet Russe, for which it was written, in June, 1912. Nijinsky and Karsavina danced the name parts. Like Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," it did not figure in the American repertory of the Diaghileff troupe, but Walter Damrosch had already introduced the first of the suites drawn from its music at a concert of the Symphony Society, Nov. 29, 1914. The second suite seems not to have been played here until yesterday.

It is enough for the moment to affirm that the suite in question is a glorious example of modern orchestral music and that the men from Boston played it with a corresponding glory.

PITTS SANBORN.

SUN
ess: New York City.

TWO CONCERTS STIR LARGE AUDIENCES

Boston Symphony and Ossip Gabrilowitsch Play Brilliantly.

Two concerts offered superior attractions to music lovers in New York yesterday afternoon and both were attended by audiences that packed the auditoriums.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third matinee programme at Carnegie Hall. The compositions comprised Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony, Brahms's "Tragic" overture, the symphonic legend by Sibelius entitled "The Swan of Tuonela," and Strauss's tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

Dr. Muck gave a masterly reading of each work, and the performance of his orchestra was of great beauty throughout. The Sibelius music afforded the different orchestral choirs a scope somewhat unusual for displaying their virtuosity in the finesse of color and the work was played with a surpassing tonal loveliness.

n EVENING POST
ress: New York City

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by that loyal Helvetian, Dr. Karl Muck, gave a programme in Carnegie Hall last night ranging from Handel to Ravel. The opening number was the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven, played in Dr. Muck's most classic style—with due regard, however, for its programmatic aspect. The Handel Concerto Grosso, for strings, in D minor, was an interesting exhumation from the great rival of Bach. In this number Dr. Muck played the piano part, conducting at the same time, in the fashion of Handel, but reminding one to-day of a comic opera conductor "on the road," who plays with his left hand and conducts with his right.

Cherubini's clean-cut "Anacreon" overture completed the classical half, when a great leap was made to the modernity of Ravel. One doesn't say "ultra-modern" of Ravel now, when Schönberg and others have all but used quarter-tones. Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" is undoubtedly far more interesting as a ballet, but the tonal color effects are iridescent in the extreme. There were, of course, many effects of muted horns, trumpets, and strings—and dissonant chords—the effect of the whole was rather one of splotches of color than of a consistent musical development. But it was written for a ballet, so it must be listened to with the pantomime in mind.

n MORNING TELEGRAPH
ress: New York City

DR. MUCK LEADS, THEN PLAYS SOLO

Portrays Protean Role at Concert of the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall.

HANDEL'S GROSSE CONCERTO

Dr. Karl Muck was both soloist and conductor at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra held at Carnegie Hall last night.

In an arrangement made by Seiffert, he played solo piano in Handel's Grosse Concerto. It is not surprising. Walter Damrosch paved the way for a soloist-conductor last Sunday when he astonished the Symphony Society subscribers by singing the main theme of the new Kaliunnow Symphony.

The audience gave Dr. Muck an ovation after the concerto. That is to say, the applause came as near being an ovation as could any demonstration made by the Boston orchestra's conservative hearers. The attempt was artistically good. Dr. Muck sat with his back to the audience. The top of the piano was closed. For the most part he played with his left hand and conducted with his right.

He made the piano the leading rather than the solo instrument. It was the leader of the orchestral choir and not a show performer playing, with a background of accompaniment.

In Spirit of Handel Work.

Altogether the performance was in the spirit of the Handel work. It was something like hearing a first playing of it with the composer at the piano. One could not, of course, expect a conductor to play the Beethoven "Emperor" concerto or the Tschaikowsky work in B minor and conduct the orchestra at the same time. But in presenting the Handel concerto Dr. Muck's method is eminently proper.

Much credit must go to the concert master who acted as assistant conductor. While, at first, the tempo of the work was apt to drag, the performance was, on the whole, a pleasant success.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony opened the program. This beautiful work, which represents the middle ground between absolute and romantic music, was splendidly played. During the first two movements Dr. Muck was inclined to let the music play itself, with only a little perfunctory guidance on his part.

Ravel's Music Heard.

But with the beginning of the storm section he assumed command and gave it his usual clear-cut reading.

After the playing of the concerto the character of the concert changed. Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" did not seem to have a legitimate place in the evening's program. A Ravel suite and ballet proved pleasant to listen to, but was an abrupt change from the majestic and organ-like harmonies of Handel's music.

Of course Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner." He led it as though it were the easiest thing he did. In fact, he is getting quite blase about it. But the attitude of the audience still savors of Dr. Muck's early superiority. One woman, a regular subscriber, was heard to say: "Why do they applaud it? It is quite as silly as waving a flag."

No wonder, after many seasons of contact with the Boston Symphony audience, that Dr. Muck got so far from the spirit of the country at large.

Free Music Instruction.

The Public Academy of Music, 146 East 115th street, through the board of directors has decided to open their registration lists from January 14 to January 31 in the vocal, piano, violin and all other instrumental departments: lessons day and evening for children and adults. Instruction is free. All applications must be made personally between the hours of 1 to 8.30 P. M.

From HERALD
Address: New York City

BOSTON ORCHESTRA STOPS CONCERTS IN PROVIDENCE

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Saturday.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra notified its subscribers here today that the three remaining concerts in the series here had been withdrawn. The announcement reads:—

"The hostile feeling of a portion of the public and press of Providence toward the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor has manifested itself in such ways that the management of the Ellis Concerts has decided to withdraw the remaining concerts."

It was here that opposition to Karl Muck and the Boston Orchestra first found expression when the subscribers were unable to induce them to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first concert. Since that time, however, the orchestra has been playing the National air.

rom TRIBUNE

ddress: New York City

Music

Boston Symphony Heard in Second Suite of "Daphnis and Chloe"

Maurice Ravel's mimed drama, "Daphnis and Chloe," which excited unusual interest at the time of its production, was promised to Americans by the Russian Ballet, but, like many another boon promised in pre-Bolshevik days, was withdrawn. New Yorkers heard the first of the two suites, which the composer arranged from his music, under the baton of Mr. Damrosch three years ago, but the second was not played here until last night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed it at Carnegie Hall, following close upon the first American production, in Boston a few weeks ago.

The music reveals Ravel as something very different from the understudy of Debussy which he is widely supposed to be. He is a composer of fresh and fluent invention, vigorous imagination and acutely disciplined taste. He possesses the virtuoso command of the orchestra which is the common property of the French "ultra-moderns," but he is bolder than Debussy alike in thematic material and in harmonic treatment. Best of all, he has a structural power which was not a characteristic of the earlier French impressionists. Though the specific theatrical implications of the music were of course missing in the concert hall, the audience was able to appreciate amply the warm emotions, the physical verve, the color and sunlight which are in this music.

The same audience was intrigued with the sight of Dr. Muck playing the piano and conducting his orchestra with upraised hand and outstretched finger in the D minor "Concerto Grosso" of Handel, arranged by Seiffert for large orchestra. This delightful work was rapidly and energetically played by the Boston musicians. One might further tell about the "Pastoral Symphony," which opened the programme, but it is not "news," and hence not part of the journalist's work to record that Dr. Muck plays Beethoven superbly.

The remaining piece on the programme was the "Anacreon" overture, written by "Citouyen Cherubini," in 1803. Why not an overture by Tavaristh Stravinsky?

n HERALD

ress: New York City

Dr. Muck Conducts with 1 Hand, Plays Piano with Other,

Leads Boston Orchestra and "Doubles on Brass"—Directs National Anthem, Too.

Starting quietly with Beethoven's sixth (Pastoral) symphony, but ending with the furious strains of Ravel's "Daphnis & Chloe" (second series), the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave one of its concerts in Carnegie Hall last night. Dr. Karl Muck conducted and in Haendel's Concerto Grosse, opus 6, No. 10, played the part scored for the piano. Directing his men when not using his right hand at the keyboard, he played with the same strength that marks his conducting. It was his first appearance here as a pianist. While not exactly a solo part, the piano has the most important work to do in the concerto. It was a spirited performance, though the work is somewhat formal for great popularity nowadays.

Wonderfully clear and exceedingly beautiful was the performance of the Beethoven symphony. Never has the orchestra played in New York with more polish or more lovely tone.

Dr. Muck once remarked that Ravel was the greatest orchestrator in the world. Probably the "Daphnis and Chloe" music is his best piece of orchestration. Its standing as music may still be considered doubtful, it is so complicated and so new. But as a piece of orchestral coloring it is unexcelled. The sound of the wood, winds and strings is marvelous. It represents the highest type of modern French experimental music. Only an orchestra of virtuosos could have played it with such thrilling effect.

Was "The Star Spangled Banner" played and did Dr. Muck conduct it?

It was. And he did.

om EVENING JOURNAL

ddress: New York.

BOSTON AND N. Y. ORCHESTRAS IN CONCERTS

Dr. Muck Gives First Performance Here of "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite by Ravel.

One of the distinctively disappointing omissions of the Diaghileff Ballet direction during its several periods of stimulation administered to New York, was its failure to bring forward Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." One imagined that this might have produced Warslav Nijinsky's greatest triumph against the background of this intriguing modern Frenchman's most intriguing music. But the thing was not to be, and the Metropolitan Opera does not do these things—not even to vary the interminable boredom of incessant couplings of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci," or to eke out the half-portion evenings of "La Figlia del Reggimento" and other items of insufficiency.

Curiosity over "Daphnis et Chloe" was first aroused by Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra, who played a suite made up of several portions of Ravel's work from which one remembers chiefly a nocturne, an astonishing study in both the sensous and the sensual. There was also a "danse guerriere," whose originality of conception and execution outdid anything produced of late years in France.

Ravel has made a second suite out of remaining portions of his ballet music—of course, not at all ballet music in the accepted or the usual sense, but music that characteristically depicts and explains and heightens the action of pantomime, as the music of opera so often does not for drama. This second suite was the item of greatest interest on the program of Dr. Karl Muck for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening. It is made up of three numbers, presented separately as "Lever du jour," "Pantonime" and "Danse generale," but played as a single continuous piece. Day dawns in a new orchestral fashion, Daphnis and Chloe—the latter restored to him by the intervention of Pan—enact their ravelesque love for each other, they mime the story of Pan and Syrinx and the action ends in an orgiastic bacchanale. Ravel employs everything the modern orchestra holds, and even adds voices without words, which were not used in last evening's performance. He secures effects of great beauty—for he can also invent a sustained and appropriate melody—effects of reiterative, cumulative dramatic elan and startling originality.

Dr. Muck played the Ravel piece with evident devotion, but he is both temperamentally and otherwise unable to find and communicate the sophisticated clamor, the languorous sensuousness and the conscious riotousness of this Gallic music. The orchestra played it with great virtuosity and particularly lovely was Mr. Maquarre's flute.

Last evening's program opened with Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, whose simple but often rhapsodic beauties sounded like balm in these days. Then followed the tenth of Handel's twelve concerti grossi, with Dr. Muck playing the basso continuo on a grand piano, and coincidently conducting, in the eighteenth century manner—and elicitating much applause for the novelty. But the essential quality of Handel's music was quite metamorphosed by the intrusion of the great modern piano's tone. The harpsichord alone would have been in place. The program was too long by the addition of Cherubini's "Anacreau" overture.

1 EVENING MAIL

ess: New York City

DR. MUCK A PIANIST.

AT last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Karl Muck surprised his audience by appearing in the rolo of pianist as well as conductor. The revelation came in Handel's concerto grosso in D minor, which was played in the old style, with three soloists grouped around the piano, answering the full strings of the orchestra, Dr. Muck himself beating time whenever the music permitted or the players demanded.

It was a naively intimate performance of a thoroughly charming work, and its success was instantaneous and legitimate. In some way the audience seemed to feel that the sight of Dr. Muck seated in a chair, waving his right hand, offered the most convincing proof possible that he was after all a human being.

The familiar Bostonese interpretation of Beethoven's pastoral symphony opened the programme. Later there was Cherubini's exceedingly attractive "Anacreon" overture, and at the close came excerpts from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," an extraordinary exhibition of orchestral virtuosity.

EVENING GLOBE

New York City

The usual Boston Symphony audience gathered in Carnegie Hall last evening for one of the most inspiriting concerts the celebrated band from the New England capital has ever given here. It opened with a vivid, stirring, and exquisitely finished performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony. Then came Handel's tenth concerto grosso, as edited by Dr. Max Seiffert of Berlin. When Dr. Muck seated himself at the piano, used in filling in, the house went quite wild (did any one present suppose Dr. Muck could not play the piano?), and the superb performance of the really stunning concerto of Mr. George Frideric Handel, with Dr. Muck playing and conducting from his piano stool, finished amid the most formidable applause of an enthusiastic evening.

Then came in flawless style and intoxicating spirit the "Anacreon" overture of Cherubini, a radiant masterpiece 114 years have been powerless to dim, constituting a classic prelude to the second of two concert suites drawn by Ravel from his ballet "Daphnis et Chloé." This ballet, composed in 1910, entered the repertory of the Diaghileff Ballet Russe, for which it was written, in June, 1912. Nijinsky and Karsavina danced the name parts. Like Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," it did not figure in the American repertory of the Diaghileff troupe, but Walter Damrosch had already introduced the first of the suites drawn from its music at a concert of the Symphony Society, Nov. 29, 1914. The second suite seems not to have been played here until yesterday.

It is enough for the moment to affirm that the suite in question is a glorious example of modern orchestral music and that the men from Boston played it with a corresponding glory.

PITTS SANBORN.

SUN

ess: New York City.

TWO CONCERTS STIR LARGE AUDIENCES

Boston Symphony and Ossip Gabrilowitsch Play Brilliantly.

Two concerts offered superior attractions to music lovers in New York yesterday afternoon and both were attended by audiences that packed the auditoriums.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third matinee programme at Carnegie Hall. The compositions comprised Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony, Brahms's "Tragic" overture, the symphonic legend by Sibelius entitled "The Swan of Tuonela," and Strauss's tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

Dr. Muck gave a masterly reading of each work, and the performance of his orchestra was of great beauty throughout. The Sibelius music afforded the different orchestral choirs a scope somewhat unusual for displaying their virtuosity in the finesse of color and the work was played with a surpassing tonal loveliness.

n EVENING POST

ress: New York City

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by that loyal Helvetian, Dr. Karl Muck, gave a programme in Carnegie Hall last night ranging from Handel to Ravel. The opening number was the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven, played in Dr. Muck's most classic style—with due regard, however, for its programmatic aspect. The Handel Concerto Grosso, for strings, in D minor, was an interesting exhumation from the great rival of Bach. In this number Dr. Muck played the piano part, conducting at the same time, in the fashion of Handel, but reminding one to-day of a comic opera conductor "on the road," who plays with his left hand and conducts with his right.

Cherubini's clean-cut "Anacreon" overture completed the classical half, when a great leap was made to the modernity of Ravel. One doesn't say "ultra-modern" of Ravel now, when Schönberg and others have all but used quarter-tones. Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" is undoubtedly far more interesting as a ballet, but the tonal color effects are iridescent in the extreme. There were, of course, many effects of muted horns, trumpets, and strings—and dissonant chords—the effect of the whole was rather one of splotches of color than of a consistent musical development. But it was written for a ballet, so it must be listened to with the pantomime in mind.

n MORNING TELEGRAPH

ress: New York City

e

DR. MUCK LEADS, THEN PLAYS SOLO

Portrays Protean Role at Concert of the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall.

HANDEL'S GROSSE CONCERTO

Dr. Karl Muck was both soloist and conductor at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra held at Carnegie Hall last night.

In an arrangement made by Seiffert, he played solo piano in Handel's Grosse Concerto. It is not surprising. Walter Damrosch paved the way for a soloist-conductor last Sunday when he astonished the Symphony Society subscribers by singing the main theme of the new Kalinninow Symphony.

The audience gave Dr. Muck an ovation after the concerto. That is to say, the applause came as near being an ovation as could any demonstration made by the Boston orchestra's conservative hearers. The attempt was artistically good. Dr. Muck sat with his back to the audience. The top of the piano was closed. For the most part he played with his left hand and conducted with his right.

He made the piano the leading rather than the solo instrument. It was the leader of the orchestral choir and not a show performer playing, with a background of accompaniment.

In Spirit of Handel Work.

Altogether the performance was in the spirit of the Handel work. It was something like hearing a first playing of it with the composer at the piano. One could not, of course, expect a conductor to play the Beethoven "Emperor" concerto or the Tschaikowsky work in B minor and conduct the orchestra at the same time. But in presenting the Handel concerto Dr. Muck's method is eminently proper.

Much credit must go to the concert master who acted as assistant conductor. While, at first, the tempo of the work was apt to drag, the performance was, on the whole, a pleasant success.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony opened the program. This beautiful work, which represents the middle ground between absolute and romantic music, was splendidly played. During the first two movements Dr. Muck was inclined to let the music play itself, with only a little perfunctory guidance on his part.

Ravel's Music Heard.

But with the beginning of the storm section he assumed command and gave it his usual clear-cut reading.

After the playing of the concerto the character of the concert changed. Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon" did not seem to have a legitimate place in the evening's program. A Ravel suite and ballet proved pleasant to listen to, but was an abrupt change from the majestic and organ-like harmonies of Handel's music.

Of course Dr. Muck played "The Star Spangled Banner." He led it as though it were the easiest thing he did. In fact, he is getting quite blase about it. But the attitude of the audience still savors of Dr. Muck's early superiority. One woman, a regular subscriber, was heard to say: "Why do they applaud it? It is quite as silly as waving a flag."

No wonder, after many seasons of contact with the Boston Symphony audience, that Dr. Muck got so far from the spirit of the country at large.

Free Music Instruction.

The Public Academy of Music, 146 East 115th street, through the board of directors has decided to open their registration lists from January 14 to January 31 in the vocal, piano, violin and all other instrumental departments; lessons day and evening for children and adults. Instruction is free. All applications must be made personally between the hours of 1 to 8.30 P. M.

from HERALD

Address: New York City

BOSTON ORCHESTRA STOPS CONCERTS IN PROVIDENCE

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Saturday.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra notified its subscribers here today that the three remaining concerts in the series here had been withdrawn. The announcement reads:—

"The hostile feeling of a portion of the public and press of Providence toward the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor has manifested itself in such ways that the management of the Ellis Concerts has decided to withdraw the remaining concerts."

It was here that opposition to Karl Muck and the Boston Orchestra first found expression when the subscribers were unable to induce them to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at the first concert. Since that time, however, the orchestra has been playing the National air.

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date JAN 11 1

MUCK PLAYS PIANO IN BOSTON SYMPHONY

Conductor's Novel Performance as He Directs Wins Ovation—New York Symphony Matinee.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, making its third visit since the new war tax rules, the abbreviated tours, and the longer, inland travel, of an unusual season, appeared at Carnegie Hall last night with all its hundred men and with three instruments over the quota; three that were sent on and off like stars of the occasion, a celeste and glockenspiel in the newest of Ravel's dances for a Russian ballet in Paris, and—what seemed to interest the New York audience more—a grand pianoforte, played in novel fashion by Dr. Karl Muck. During intermission the piano was quietly set in place of the conductor's stand, and there the chief musician seated himself on a level with his first string players, as he now performed and now directed, with bent head or with upraised finger, the Concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, from a series of twelve composed by Handel.

Dr. Muck restored more than the noble old music, akin to the famous "Largo," with quickened vigor in style; he brought back an air of intimate musical feeling missed in many local concerts of late. The applause as he appeared was renewed before he began to play, and the ovation afterward he chose to share by beckoning the orchestra to stand with him. A rising recall followed Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony just before, as the performance of that master's expression of feelings, "serene," "jovial," "glad and thankful," in sun and storm, richly deserved.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" opened the evening, and after the concerto came an overture to Cherubini's "Anacreon," a classic not related to the "Anacreon in Heaven," that furnished America's patriotic air. Ravel's "Daphne and Chloe," new at these concerts, was a superb piece of sheer virtuosity by the whole band, not often to be excelled, its sweep of harmony and rhythm portraying a god Pan's invitation to the dance.

From EVENING WORLD
Address: New York City.
JAN 14

Other concerts of Saturday were by the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon, Dr. Muck chosing for his chief numbers Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony and Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," one by Walter Damrosch and the Symphony Orchestra in the series for children at Aeolian Hall in the morning, and a joint recital by Frances Sonin, soprano, and Aaron Kaufman, pianist, at Aeolian Hall in the evening. There was an overflowing audience at the Metropolitan Opera House in the evening to hear a fine performance of "La Boheme," with Martinelli as Rodolfo and May Peterson as Mimi.

HERALD
New York City
JAN 13 1918

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

It was with the keenest appreciation that a large audience heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra play in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. All the numbers on the programme were more or less familiar, but the manner of their interpretation made them the more delightful because of their familiarity.

Tschaikowsky's Symphony in F minor, No. 4, op. 36, the first number, revealed the beauties of the wood wind choir and the virtuosity of the string choir. After the third movement, one chiefly of picked strings, and at the end of the symphony the whole orchestra was called to its feet by the applause. Brahms' "Tragic Overture," Sibelius' "The Swan of Tuonela," played with beautiful shimmering effect, and Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" composed the remainder of the pro-

From AMERICAN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
JAN 6-

GABRILOWITSCH MAY SUCCEED KARL MUCK

Believed Celebrated Concert Pianist Will Lead Boston Symphony Next Season.

It is probable that Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the celebrated concert pianist, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season, succeeding Dr. Karl Muck.

Well - informed musicians have known for some time that negotiations were under way between the Boston Symphony management and Mr. Gabrilowitsch. The latter is regarded by many as one of the best-fitted men in the country for the post. It is also believed that Major Higginson, who is the patron of the Boston Orchestra, is disposed to accept Dr. Muck's resignation at the close of the present season, and that he has so far swerved from his original intention of disbanding the orchestra if Dr. Much left, that he is ready to consider a conductor to take his place.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch is a favorite pianist with Baltimore audiences. He has appeared here on many occasions, both in concert and as soloist, with orchestras.

Behind these negotiations there is an intimate bit of Baltimore musical history. Before the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra was founded Frederick R. Huber, business manager of the orchestra and one of the bulwarks of the Peabody staff, had endeavored to found an orchestra of a semi-civic character, and it was planned at that time that Gabrilowitsch should be the leader. The pianist had planned to move his headquarters from Philadelphia to this city, and he would have made quite a sacrifice in concert engagements to build up the new organization.

It was hoped by Mr. Huber that the city would associate with several private interests in sustaining the new venture, but when Mr. Huber submitted the proposition to Mayor Preston the latter decided that if the city went into the matter it must do so unhampered; that it was a question of all or nothing. From these preliminaries the present Baltimore Symphony Orchestra was evolved, and under the new arrangement Gustav Strube was the logical choice. Under Mr. Strube's direction the orchestra has made astonishing progress.

Meanwhile Mr. Gabrilowitsch was not given the baton of a Baltimore orchestra. However, when the Boston Symphony tangle became acute and it was learned here that the pianist might be selected to succeed Dr. Muck, there were a number of prominent musicians here who gave him their warmest indorsement for the post.

From TOWN & COUNTRY
Address: New York City
JAN 1 - 1

A STORY was recently published to the effect that Doctor Karl Muck is a citizen of Switzerland, but even if he had been one, according to the German law, his acceptance of an Imperial Court position at Berlin would have made it necessary for him to become a subject of the Kaiser before accepting the office. Under President Wilson's enemy alien proclamation of April sixth, Doctor Ernst Kunwald, an Austrian and conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was recently placed under arrest, but afterwards was released on parole. His artistic work in Cincinnati was of great importance to that city; nevertheless, his resignation from the orchestra has been accepted by the directors, and Walter Henry Rothwell of New York has been engaged in his place. One wonders why Doctor Kunwald was to have been interned, while Doctor Muck still retains his freedom.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
Date JAN 15 1918

Then of course there was the woman at the last Boston Symphony concert who overheard a woman sitting behind her criticize the audience for applauding "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Isn't it silly of them to clap?" asked the apparently pro-German. "It's just as if they waved their flag."

Whereupon our heroine stared squarely around, observed the number of the offender's seat and appeared to make a memorandum of it on her cigarette case. There was no more pro-German perflage passed out in her vicinity that

EVENING WORLD
New York City.
JAN 11 1918

Dr. Karl Muck, conducting the third evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night, did a "stunt" worthy of Walter Damrosch. He played the piano part in Handel's tenth concerto grosso while leading the orchestra. And he played it well, too. Did Major Higginson mean to give us an object lesson in economy by cutting out the cost of an extra pianist? More likely it was Dr. Muck's whim. The two-hour programme held the overture to Cherubini's opera-ballet, "Anacreon," orchestral fragments from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe," unfamiliar but full of charm as well as up-to-date orchestration, and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony. All were played with the superlative musicianship of this band, save for the slow entrance of the second violins before the thunder storm in the symphony, which might have caused a mishap, but didn't. Dr. Muck is a master conductor.

From TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
Date JAN 11 1918

Beethoven's luminous Sixth symphony—the Pastoral—was beautifully played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck's leadership, last night. Another luminous work concluded the programme in Joseph Maurice Ravel's "Daphne et Chloe," a ballet which has already been played here by the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck proves his right to his nickname, "The Metronome," by his precise playing on the pianoforte of "the thorough-bass for the harpsichord" in Handel's grand concerto No. 10, at the same time conducting the players of the other instruments. One of Cherubini's overtures concluded this two hours of playing by the justly famous orchestra.

From EVENING WORLD
Address: New York City.

Other concerts of Saturday were by the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon, Dr. Muck chosing for his chief numbers Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony and Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," one by Walter Damrosch and the Symphony Orchestra in the series for children at Aeolian Hall in the morning, and a joint recital by Frances Sonin, soprano, and Aaron Kaufman, pianist, at Aeolian Hall in the evening. There was an overflowing audience at the Metropolitan Opera House in the evening to hear a fine performance of "La Boheme," with Martinelli as Rodolfo and May Peterson as Mimi.

From JOURNAL
Address Providence, R. I.
JAN -4 1918

Karl Muck, German

If Dr. Karl Muck claims to have been born in Switzerland, he is a plain liar.

Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, published by the Macmillan Company, 1907, says, vol. 3, page 314:

"Muck, Karl, was born at Darmstadt, October 22, 1859, his father being a Bavarian Magistrate (Ministerialrat), and studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig. At the latter place he visited both University and Conservatorium, and graduated as Doctor of Philosophy. The same year (1880) he made his debut as a pianist in the Gewanhaus. Shortly afterwards he became capellmeister at Salzburg, then at Brunn, Graz, and in 1836 first capellmeister at Prague. As director of Neumann's Travelling Opera Company he appeared in Berlin, and was appointed in 1892 capellmeister at the Royal Opera in that capital, a post he resigned in June, 1906, going to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Concerts. He conducted at the Bayreuth Festival of 1902."

This information was furnished by Dr. Muck himself.

From EAGLE
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
JAN 1 1918

Dr. Muck Conducts From the Piano.

Dr. Muck followed his custom of having no soloist on his Carnegie Hall program. After a stirring performance of the Beethoven Pastoral, marked by rare tone and unerring rhythmic precision, he conducted, from the piano, the Haendel Grosso Concerto in D minor, using the arrangement by Seifert. All the rare charm of this old music found eloquence in the band's playing. The overture to Cherubini's "Anacreon" and the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," followed.

The first suite was played by the New York Symphony three years ago and we were promised the ballet by the Russian dancers. That promise was never fulfilled and so last evening's performance of the Second Suite was New York's first hearing. Of course, this music suffers from the lack of stage representation, for only such would justify many a phrase that otherwise is without meaning. The scoring is for a huge orchestra, including little used wood-winds, a celesta and certain variants throughout the entire orchestra as a substitute for a chorus of mixed voices. The composition is distinctly Ravel, which is to say that the influences of Debussy finds a tempered outlet; but also, the composer had seen the Russian ballet in their best dances, for there is measure after measure which recalls the Scheherezade of Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Newspaper Cutting
From EVENING Bulletin
Address Providence, R. I.
Date DEC 31 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES CONCERT AT AYER CANTONMENT

National Army Men Applaud Programme.—Suffering from Intense Cold Caused Abandonment of Much of Work.—New York's Fun Planned.

Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., Dec. 31. Four thousand soldiers packed the Y. M. C. A. auditorium with its biggest audience to date yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra give the best entertainment Camp Devens has had. This soldier audience, said members of the orchestra, was the best audience it had played before in years, meaning appreciative and attentively silent.

The shuffling feet, constant leaving and entering and constant coughing, which disturbs most entertainments in such a camp, was missing. The men were feasting on what they had longed for, and every number they applauded long, except "The Star Spangled Banner." That had been the first number on the programme, with audience and orchestra standing. Only a few soldiers thought applause was expected for the national anthem.

Dr. Muck was not scheduled for this concert. Clement Lenom, who conducted, is a Belgian and none of the alien enemy members of the orchestra came yesterday. There were 48 players. Gustav Heim, first trumpeter, who carried the audience more than any other number with his solo, "The Rosary," has been a naturalized American for about 10 years.

The programme was one of the lighter ones in the orchestra repertoire, of the sort usually given at pop concerts in Symphony Hall. The hundreds from the Three Hundred and First Engineers who raced over from their barracks liked it. It was announced that another concert will be given next Sunday afternoon.

EVENING SUN
New York City
JAN 11 1918

The Boston Symphony.

Dr. Muck, here with his Boston orchestra to play their third pair of concerts, gave New Yorkers an extra treat last night in Carnegie Hall. For, added to the usual electrification which his conducting does inspire in both players and listeners, he performed the double task of leading and playing the piano at the same time. In the telling it sounds like a circus "stunt"; in sober and vertical truth it was a performance of the Haydn Concerto Grosso so remarkably fine as to leave the audience deeply moved.

As a matter of catalogue history, the only new selections came at the end: They were a second series of orchestral fragments from Ravel's "Daphnis and Cloe." These were made up of "Daybreak," "Pantomime" and "General Dance," made to drift one into the other with ravelesque abandon. It is, as the first series proved, when Mr. Damrosch first gave it here in 1914, such music as Arthur Rackham would want to sketch to, fuller of dryads than triads, loose limbed, wanly expressive, until it comes to its climactic revel, when it revenges itself in the utmost dissonance of the modern muse. The beginning of the "Daybreak," however, has the very dawn in it, and all things that brighten and stir therein.

The programme began with the sixth Beethoven symphony. The Boston orchestra has given us this "Pastoral" times enough before; to hear them play it, however, means to find that always new delight which belongs to the classics alone.

rom TIMES

ddress New York City

ate JAN 11

MUCK PLAYS PIANO IN BOSTON SYMPHONY

Conductor's Novel Performance as He Directs Wins Ovation—New York Symphony Matinee.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, making its third visit since the new war tax rules, the abbreviated tours, and the longer, inland travel, of an unusual season, appeared at Carnegie Hall last night with all its hundred men and with three instruments over the quota; three that were sent on and off like stars of the occasion, a celeste and glockenspiel in the newest of Ravel's dances for a Russian ballet in Paris, and—what seemed to interest the New York audience more—a grand pianoforte, played in novel fashion by Dr. Karl Muck. During intermission the piano was quietly set in place of the conductor's stand, and there the chief musician seated himself on a level with his first string players, as he now performed and now directed, with bent head or with upraised finger, the Concerto Grosso in D minor, No. 10, from a series of twelve composed by Handel.

Dr. Muck restored more than the noble old music, akin to the famous "Largo," with quickened vigor in style; he brought back an air of intimate musical feeling missed in many local concerts of late. The applause as he appeared was renewed before he began to play, and the ovation afterward he chose to share by beckoning the orchestra to stand with him. A rising recall followed Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony just before, as the performance of that master's expression of feelings, "serene," "jovial," "glad and thankful," in sun and storm, richly deserved.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" opened the evening, and after the concerto came an overture to Cherubini's "Anacreon," a classic not related to the "Anacreon in Heaven," that furnished America's patriotic air. Ravel's "Daphne and Chloe," new at these concerts, was a superb piece of sheer virtuosity by the whole band, not often to be excelled, its sweep of harmony and rhythm portraying a god Pan's invitation to the dance.

From EVENING WORLD

Address: New York City.

JAN 14

Other concerts of Saturday were by the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon, Dr. Muck chosing for his chief numbers Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony and Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," one by Walter Damrosch and the Symphony Orchestra in the series for children at Aeolian Hall in the morning, and a joint recital by Frances Sonin, soprano, and Aaron Kaufman, pianist, at Aeolian Hall in the evening. There was an overflowing audience at the Metropolitan Opera House in the evening to hear a fine performance of "La Boheme," with Martinelli as Rodolfo and May Peterson as Mimi.

HERALD

New York City

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD.

It was with the keenest appreciation that a large audience heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra play in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. All the numbers on the programme were more or less familiar, but the manner of their interpretation made them the more delightful because of their familiarity.

Tschaikowsky's Symphony in F minor, No. 4, op. 36, the first number, revealed the beauties of the wood wind choir and the virtuosity of the string choir. After the third movement, one chiefly of picked strings, and at the end of the symphony the whole orchestra was called to its feet by the applause. Brahms' "Tragic Overture," Sibelius' "The Swan of Tuonela," played with beautiful shimmering effect, and Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" composed the remainder of the pro-

om MORNING TELEGRAPH

dress: New York City

te JAN 15 1918

Then of course there was the woman at the last Boston Symphony concert who overheard a woman sitting behind her criticize the audience for applauding "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Isn't it silly of them to clap?" asked the apparently pro-German. "It's just as if they waved their flag."

Whereupon our heroine stared squarely around, observed the number of the offender's seat and appeared to make a memorandum of it on her cigarette case.

There was no more pro-German persiflage passed out in her vicinity that evening.

rom AMERICAN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

JAN 6

GABRILOWITSCH MAY SUCCEED KARL MUCK

Believed Celebrated Concert Pianist Will Lead Boston Symphony Next Season.

It is probable that Ossaip Gabrilowitsch, the celebrated concert pianist, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season, succeeding Dr. Karl Muck.

Well-informed musicians have known for some time that negotiations were under way between the Boston Symphony management and Mr. Gabrilowitsch. The latter is regarded by many as one of the best-fitted men in the country for the post. It is also believed that Major Higginson, who is the patron of the Boston Orchestra, is disposed to accept Dr. Muck's resignation at the close of the present season, and that he has so far swerved from his original intention of disbanding the orchestra if Dr. Much left, that he is ready to consider a conductor to take his place.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch is a favorite pianist with Baltimore audiences. He has appeared here on many occasions, both in concert and as soloist, with orchestras.

Behind these negotiations there is an intimate bit of Baltimore musical history. Before the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra was founded Frederick R. Huber, business manager of the orchestra and one of the bulwarks of the Peabody staff, had endeavored to found an orchestra of a semi-civic character, and it was planned at that time that Gabrilowitsch should be the leader. The pianist had planned to move his headquarters from Philadelphia to this city, and he would have made quite a sacrifice in concert engagements to build up the new organization.

It was hoped by Mr. Huber that the city would associate with several private interests in sustaining the new venture, but when Mr. Huber submitted the proposition to Mayor Preston the latter decided that if the city went into the matter it must do so unhampered; that it was a question of all or nothing. From these preliminaries the present Baltimore Symphony Orchestra was evolved, and under the new arrangement Gustav Strube was the logical choice. Under Mr. Strube's direction the orchestra has made astonishing progress.

Meanwhile Mr. Gabrilowitsch was not given the baton of a Baltimore orchestra. However, when the Boston Symphony tangle became acute and it was learned here that the pianist might be selected to succeed Dr. Muck, there were a number of prominent musicians here who gave him their warmest indorsement for the post

rom TOWN & COUNTRY

ddress: New York City

A STORY was recently published to the effect that Doctor Karl Muck is a citizen of Switzerland, but even if he had been one, according to the German law, his acceptance of an Imperial Court position at Berlin would have made it necessary for him to become a subject of the Kaiser before accepting the office. Under President Wilson's enemy alien proclamation of April sixth, Doctor Ernst Kunwald, an Austrian and conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was recently placed under arrest, but afterwards was released on parole. His artistic work in Cincinnati was of great importance to that city; nevertheless, his resignation from the orchestra has been accepted by the directors, and Walter Henry Rothwell of New York has been engaged in his place. One wonders why Doctor Kunwald was to have been interned, while Doctor Muck still retains his freedom.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

JAN 11 1918

Dr. Karl Muck, conducting the third evening concert of the Boston Symphony [illegible] Carnegie Hall last night, did a "stunt" worthy of Walter Damrosch. He played the piano part in [illegible] concerto grosso [illegible]. And he played it [illegible] Major Higginson [illegible] as a subject for [illegible] More likes [illegible] Muck's [illegible]. The two-[illegible] overture to [illegible] entitled, "Anacreon." [illegible] from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe," unfamiliar [illegible] form, as well as up-to-date [illegible], and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony. All were played with the superlative musicianship of this band, save for the slow entrance of the second violins before the thunder storm in the symphony, which might have caused a mishap, but didn't. Dr. Muck is a master conductor.

rom TELEGRAM

ddress: New York City.

Date

Beethoven's luminous Sixth symphony—the Pastoral—was beautifully played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck's leadership, last night. Another luminous work concluded the programme in Joseph Maurice Ravel's "Daphne et Chloe," a ballet which has already been played here by the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck proves his right to his nickname, "The Metronome," by his precise playing on the pianoforte of "the thorough-bass for the harpsichord" in Handel's grand concerto No. 10, at the same time conducting the players of the other instruments. One of Cherubini's overtures concluded this two hours of playing by the justly famous orchestra.

JOURNA

ress Providence, R. I.

JAN -4 1918

Karl Muck, German

If Dr. Karl Muck claims to have been born in Switzerland, he is a plain liar.

Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, published by the Macmillan Company, 1907, says, vol. 3, page 314:

"Muck, Karl, was born at Darmstadt, October 22, 1859, his father being a Bavarian Magistrate (Ministerialrat), and studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig. At the latter place he visited both University and Conservatorium, and graduated as Doctor of Philosophy. The same year (1880) he made his debut as a pianist in the Gewanhaus. Shortly afterwards he became capellmeister at Salzburg, then at Brunn, Graz, and in 1886 first capellmeister at Prague. As director of Neumann's Travelling Opera Company he appeared in Berlin, and was appointed in 1892 capellmeister at the Royal Opera in that capital, a post he resigned in June, 1903, going to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Concerts. He conducted at the Bayreuth Festival of 1902."

This information was furnished by Dr. Muck himself.

m EAGLE

lress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Muck Conducts From the Piano.

Dr. Muck followed his custom of having no soloist on his Carnegie Hall program. After a stirring performance of the Beethoven Pastoral, marked by rare tone and unerring rhythmic precision, he conducted, from the piano, the Haendel Grosso Concerto in D minor, using the arrangement by Seifert. All the rare charm of this old music found eloquence in the band's playing. The overture to Cherubini's "Anacreon" and the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," followed.

The first suite was played by the New York Symphony three years ago and we were promised the ballet by the Russian dancers. That promise was never fulfilled and so last evening's performance of the Second Suite was New York's first hearing. Of course, this music suffers from the lack of stage representation, for only such would justify many a phrase that otherwise is without meaning. The scoring is for a huge orchestra, including little used wood-winds, a celesta and certain variants throughout the entire orchestra as a substitute for a chorus of mixed voices. The composition is distinctly Ravel, which is to say that the influences of Debussy finds a tempered outlet; but also, the composer had seen the Russian ballet in their best dances, for there is measure after measure which recalls the Scheherezade of Rinisky-Korsakoff.

Newspaper Cutting

From EN1NG Bulletin

Address Providence, R. I.

Date DEC 31 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES CONCERT AT AYER CANTONMENT

National Army Men Applaud Programme.—Suffering from Intense Cold Caused Abandonment of Much of Work.—New York's Fun Planned.

Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., Dec. 31. Four thousand soldiers packed the Y. M. C. A. auditorium with its biggest audience to date yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra give the best entertainment Camp Devens has had. This soldier audience, said members of the orchestra, was the best audience it had played before in years, meaning appreciative and attentively silent.

The shuffling feet, constant leaving and entering and constant coughing, which disturbs most entertainments in such a camp, was missing. The men were feasting on what they had longed for, and every number they applauded long, except "The Star Spangled Banner." That had been the first number on the programme, with audience and orchestra standing. Only a few soldiers thought applause was expected for the national anthem.

Dr. Muck was not scheduled for this concert. Clement Lenom, who conducted, is a Belgian and none of the alien enemy members of the orchestra came yesterday. There were 48 players. Gustav Heim, first trumpeter, who carried the audience more than any other number with his solo, "The Rosary," has been a naturalized American for about 10 years.

The programme was one of the lighter ones in the orchestra repertoire, of the sort usually given at pop concerts in Symphony Hall. The hundreds from the Three Hundred and First Engineers who raced over from their barracks liked it. It was announced that another concert will be given next Sunday afternoon.

EVENING SUN

New York City

The Boston Symphony.

Dr. Muck, here with his Boston orchestra to play their third pair of concerts, gave New Yorkers an extra treat last night in Carnegie Hall. For, added to the usual electrification which his conducting does inspire in both players and listeners, he performed the double task of leading and playing the piano at the same time. In the telling it sounds like a circus "stunt"; in sober and vertical truth it was a performance of the Haydn Concerto Grosso so remarkably fine as to leave the audience deeply moved.

As a matter of catalogue history, the only new selections came at the end: They were a second series of orchestral fragments from Ravel's "Daphnis and Cloe." These were made up of "Daybreak," "Pantomime" and "General Dance," made to drift one into the other with ravelesque abandon. It is, as the first series proved, when Mr. Damrosch first gave it here in 1914, such music as Arthur Rackham would want to sketch to, fuller of dryads than triads, loose limbed, wanly expressive, until it comes to its climactic revel, when it revenges itself in the utmost dissonance of the modern muse. The beginning of the "Daybreak," however, has the very dawn in it, and all things that brighten and stir therein.

The programme began with the sixth Beethoven symphony. The Boston orchestra has given us this "Pastoral" times enough before; to hear them play it, however, means to find that always new delight which belongs to the classics alone.

STANDARD UNION

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

JAN 12 1918

...nts.

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS ALL-MODERN PROGRAMME

The third Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season, played last night at the Academy of Music before a good-sized audience, had a programme of all-modern music that served to exploit the surpassing beauty of the tone-production of the most famous of instrumental organizations. Beginning with Brahms, whose death came less than twenty years ago, the programme went on to Jan Sibelius, the Finn, now alive; Balakireff, Russian, dead only recently, and Ravel, a Frenchman of to-day.

Even if the audience was inordinately fed up with the rare tone-coloring that distinguishes the compositions of the newest schools, it was nevertheless a profitable musical evening because of the inimitable qualities of the Bostonians in that sort of interpretation. The Brahms number, which occupied at least half of the allotted time, was the Fourth Symphony, in E minor, a work seldom played here and without emotional appeal to the multitude. It was played with rare delicacy, particularly the slow movement and the brilliant "allegro giocoso" that serves as its scherzo. The orchestra's violas had a solo passage in that second movement that will remain a superlative musical delight to those who have seen concerts come and go in Brooklyn for many years.

"The Swan of Tuonela" was Sibelius' contribution to the evening—a rare, exotic tone-poem by a composer whose popularity is fast growing. Next came Balakireff's symphonic poem, "Thamar." It will be remembered from recent visits of the Diaghileff Russian dancers, and it is concerned with that jolly little story about the lady in the tower who lured passersby to visit her airy abode and hurled them into the river beneath. In its orchestral form it seemed overlong, with some moments of contagious oriental coloring.

Three fragments from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet came last. More ultra-modern than any of the rest of this curious bill, they occasioned a wonderful display of instrumental excellence, and the dance number which concluded the suite was quite captivating. All in all it was an evening of quiet though sometimes obscure harmonies, and it was not attended by any great show of enthusiasm on the part of the audience.

There was no soloist, because Fritz Kreisler, who was to have played, has withdrawn from his engagement. Dr. Karl Muck's leading of "The Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of the concert passed without incident.

SUN

New York City.

JAN 11 1918

BERLIOZ SYMPHONY GIVEN AT CONCERT

Claudia Muzio Sings Seldom Heard "Casta Diva," by Bellini.

TWO ORCHESTRAS HEARD

Fragments From Ravel Ballet Evening Novelty at Carnegie Hall.

Concert goers were invited to enjoy two orchestral concerts yesterday. In the afternoon the Symphony Society gave the seventh of its matinee entertainments in the Carnegie Hall series. The programme was one of pleasing, if not profound, quality. It began with Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" symphony, and the other important orchestral feature was the "Trois Poemes Juifs" of Ernest Bloch. The soloist was Claudia Muzio of the Metropolitan Opera House, whose numbers were the now seldom heard "Casta Diva" from Bellini's "Norma" and the familiar "Depuis le Jour" from "Louise." Very few prima donnas of this time can sing "Casta Diva." Most of them are wise enough not to try.

Samuel Lifschey, the first viola of the orchestra, played the obligato in the "Harold" symphony very well. Conductors are fond of Berlioz, probably because the perfect idiom of his orchestral effects makes them easy to bring out successfully. Music lovers in general find a gentle pleasure in listening to the "Harold" composition, whose most pointed movement is the march of pilgrims. Berlioz's music has a certain clearly marked character which probably will continue to hold its interest for a long period.

Mr. Bloch's Jewish poems were produced here under the composer's direction and made a favorable impression. They are good music, with a strong racial color and a well conveyed expression of the melancholy of the Hebrew people. They are admirably orchestrated, and when well played in a miscellaneous programme produce a good effect.

In the same hall in the evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its third Thursday concert. The programme was composed of Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, Handel's concerto grosso in D minor, Cherubini's "Anacreon" overture and the second series of orchestral fragments from Ravel's one act ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe." Only the last was new. The first suite was given here by Mr. Damrosch in 1914. The movements heard last evening were entitled "Daybreak," "Pantomime" and "General Dance."

The scenario of this ballet is by Michael Fokine, who was the original Daphnis. Scenery and costumes were designed by Bakst. Of the music Alfred Bruneau, himself an aggressive composer of some note, wrote in 1912: "Harmonic and polyphonic anarchy here reign supreme." In the minds of the younger generation of commentators this has stamped it as a work of genius.

EAGLE

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAS A FULL HOUSE

Orchestra at the Academy Meets Every Demand of Dr. Muck's Baton.

PROGRAM WITHOUT SOLOIST

Brahms, Sibelius, Balakineff and Ravel Numbers Splendidly Given, Latter Needing Stage Presentation.

The spirit of antagonism to Dr. Muck and through him to the Boston Symphony Orchestra which was so violent two months ago, seems to have died, for last evening's concert in the Academy—third of the Brooklyn series—was played to practically a full house. With the exception of two of the boxes and a few scattered chairs down stairs every seat was occupied and there were a number of attendants standing. When it is taken into consideration that there was no soloist, a rare condition in Brooklyn, the attendance would seem to indicate that animus had given way to a desire to hear the best music well presented. As has become the rule, this season, the concert opened with the playing of the National Anthem.

Brahms Fourth Symphony Perfectly Played.

The symphony which began the program was the Fourth of Brahms, that in E minor. Mr. Muck's reading of all that master's works is distinguished by intelligence and love for his thorough command of style and beauty of design. Last evening's performance was no exception. On the whole, the band met every demand of the conductor with rare beauty of tone and delightful balance, but, in addition, there was a richness of emotional utterance that at other times has seemed too subdued. One or two rough places were noticeable in the second movement, when the brass faltered in its attack of certain passages.

"The Swan of Tuonela" of Sibelius and Balakireff's symphonic poem, "Thamar," followed. Both works are familiar in this form and the "Thamar" was danced by the Ballet Russe, its second season in this country. The band and Dr. Muck collaborated in giving to both compositions remarkably eloquent performances.

Ravel Number Has First Interpretation Here.

The final number, the Second Suite, from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe," was new to Brooklyn; it had been played on the previous evening in Carnegie Hall. This suite consists of three orchestral fragments, "Daybreak," "Pantomime" and "General Dance," played without interruption. The first depicts the awakening of Daphnis and his meeting with Chloe; the second, their miming of the story of Pan and Syrieux, and the last forms a general dance for all the characters of the ballet. The ballet was danced in London by the Russians for whom Ravel composed the work and was promised here, but, though prepared under the direction of Mr. Monteux, was never performed. One choreography was invented by Fokine.

Stage Presentation Needed for Ravel Number.

Music composed for so definite a stage purpose really requires stage representation for its full appreciation. Many a phrase, many an orchestral effect, meaningless in concert, then takes on significance. Probably that was the reason why the work last evening made so little effect upon the audience except as a display of virtuosity on the part of the orchestra. Yet, in this regard, it is well to state that such composition as this requires more than a single hearing for even a partial appreciation of its beauties. So inexhaustible are its manifold varieties of orchestration that its score would make a rich study for any student. Using an enlarged band, particularly in the departments of wood and percussion, Ravel gives innumerable variations of tonal color, innumerable figures that are novel and piquant. But apart from the tone-painting the work is rich in its thematic material, powerful in its development and combination of such material, and as it is so essential for its purpose, striking in its rhythmic variety. There are in its pages subtle recollections of other compositions, but these have been so touched by the individuality of Ravel as to become distinctly his own.

As presented last evening the choral passages were included in their orchestral variants. The band played the work with an amazing power of virtuosity, and, under the spell of such magic, its tremendous difficulties vanished, or, at least, seemed an ordinary achievement.

m TIMES

dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUSIC NOTES.

The Boston Symphony.

Dr. Muck Directs Program of Melancholy Music at the Academy of Music.

Dr. Karl Muck indulged his liking for the more sombre and melancholy aspects of musical literature at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music. He directed with masterly finish that ineffably sad symphony in E minor of Brahms and followed it with the heart-rending swan melody in "The Swan of Tuonela" by Jean Silbelius and the sighs, sobs and passion of Mily Balakireff's tragic symphonic poem, "Thamar." The final selection, although more spirited and replete with strange and brilliant tone color, seemed also to fall under the impalpable mood of melanchoy. It was a selection of orchestral fragments from the one-act ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe" by Joseph Maurice Ravel, played for the first time at these concerts.

The difficult Brahms symphony was magnificently played. Knowing that the composer had been reading the tragedies of Sophocles while he was writing the work, it is easy to believe that the music is an expression of the tragedy of human life. The finale, an artfully contrived ciacona of antique form, but modern contents, was given a dignified and speaking reading. Dr. Muck was recalled several times and at length caused the orchestra to rise in acknowledgement of the applause.

The "Daphnis et Chloe" ballet music proved to have quite piquant, in fact futuristic, qualities. All sorts of orchestral combinations and the peculiar tone color of the celesta and glockenspiel contributed to the eerie atmosphere. The three fragments, "Daylight," "Pantomime" and "General Dance," began with the murmur of rivulets and pictured the dawn, the song of birds, the entrance of shepherds, the search of Daphnis for Chloe, the intervention of Pan, the efforts of Pan to win Chloe by his flute playing, the love of Daphnis and Chloe and a final joyous dance. The ultra-modern tendencies of the music were evident throughout and one of outstanding features was the use made of two harps in almost unbroken, gust-like runs.

"The Swan of Tuonela" was exquisite in its melancholy, the melody at first being played by the cor anglais against the sombre roll of the drums and the mournful accompaniment of muted strings. The delicacy of the treble pianissimo which the strings played with the back of the bow was a noteworthy bit of technique.

Balakireff's "Thamar" is a descriptive portrayal of the magic arts of the siren queen, who combines in her person ethereal beauty and reductiveness with demonic cunning and cruelty.

The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" at the beginning of the program.

The Bagby Musicale.

The artists who will appear at Mr. Bagby's next musical morning, Monday, January 14, are: Geraldine Farrar and Giuseppe de Luca.

POST
8 1/23/18

BIG CHORUS HEARD WITH SYMPHONY

350 Voices Sing Part in "Resurrection" Symphony

BY OLIN DOWNES

Gustav Mahler's second symphony was given last night in Symphony Hall for the first time in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, a chorus of 350 voices, rehearsed for this occasion by Stephen Townsend; Merle Alcock, contralto, and May Peterson, soprano, assisting soloists.

The symphony, which has been called the "Resurrection" symphony, is one of vast dimensions, requiring an hour and forty minutes in performance. The orchestra was considerably augmented to meet the enormous demands of Mahler's score. At the close of the performance there was an ovation for Dr. Muck and the performers.

SINCERITY IMPRESSES

One is immediately impressed, first by the broad and simple outlines and the profound sincerity of the composer in this work, and then by the curiously incongruous characteristics of the music. Now it is deeply impressive, as in the choral conclusion of the last movement; now it is theatrical, bombastic, and tedious in its reiteration of unimportant themes. Now the harmony is pungently modern—although this is comparatively seldom the case—while most of the time it is so simple as to be old-fashioned. In fact there are no measures in the work which show a pronouncedly original quality of musical invention.

The themes tell because of their broad outlines, their passionate sweep, or because of instrumentation which is not only effective but at times crudely sensational. The composer is frankly indebted to Wagner and Bruckner. Probably neither the suggestion of the sleep motive from "The Valkyrie" at the end of the first movement, nor the quotation of certain progressions from the "Love-death" of Isolde in the duet between the contralto and the soprano, where there is reference made to the welcoming of death, are accidental.

From Bruckner there are derived certain broad progressions, but also, alas, some of the tireless reiterations of thematic material, which was at times the strength, but more often the weakness of that master whom Mahler adored. But, at least, as regards passionate feeling and symphonic intention, the first and last movements of this work avow the vision and the intense conviction of the composer.

One Gay Little Tune

This is not the case with the rest of the work. After the opening movement, which alternates between deep gloom and mystical exaltation, and presents thematic material referred to again in the finale, we have in the following section a happy and naive tune, a sort of landler, in which the composer is wholly at his ease and felicitous in his invention. But this gay little tune has neither the substance nor importance to justify its so frequent repetition, or the unsuccessful efforts to give its variety of effect by changes of instrumentation. What is obvious, of course, is that in alternating his dramatic opening and this landler the composer had in mind a definite programme which he has not given us. But that does not excuse or condole the fact that as music pure and simple and as a movement of a dramatic symphony the music is at first pleasing and then trivial.

Between this movement and the next there is too little variety of character, although the third movement has a certain grotesquerie which the second has not. Then suddenly the alto voice is heard in a charming, tender song, "Thou red, red rose," from "Das Knaben Wunderhorn," an expression of faith in the mercy of God and the hereafter.

"Resurrection" Music

The last movement commences with orchestral pandemonium, then a mystic call from horns off stage, then again pandemonium, in which motives of the first movement are treated in various guises, including that of the plain chant, the Dies Irae; and after much of this and of reiterated preparations for the "resurrection" music, the chorus, with the two solo voices, sing Klopstock's ode, "Auferstehen, ja auferstehen," which Mahler heard sung at the funeral of Hans von Bulow in the Church of St. Michael. The simplest harmonies are employed. The chorus sings for the greater part without accompaniment, the orchestra supplying joyous interludes, and the solo voices woven in from time to time. The effect is very simple, beautiful and full of feeling, and moved the audience profoundly.

A spirit of devotion was to be felt throughout this performance, which for its brilliancy and eloquence will long be remembered. As for the work itself

ADVERTISER 1/23/18

DVERTISER, WEDNESI

MAHLER SYMPHONY TRIUMPH FOR MUCK

Concert Proves Memorable Event in Musical Annals of Boston

By LOUIS C. ELSON

Last night, in Symphony Hall, before a large audience, Mahler's second symphony was performed for the first time in Boston. These symphonic choral concerts are memorable events in our musical annals. They attain a grandeur that is far beyond even the regular symphony concerts. The score of this work is tremendous, and the orchestra was much augmented for the performance, yet there is nothing crabbed or puzzling in the symphony and the large forces are used legitimately to build up mighty climaxes.

The score is filled with the minutest directions and these were followed with fidelity. Rehearsal upon rehearsal led to a performance that would have satisfied the "pernicketty" Mahler himself. The enthusiasm evoked by the grandest portions of the work, such as the mighty marches of the first and last movements, was very marked and spontaneous.

The contrasts between the turbulence of the chief theme and the tenderness of the second, in the opening movement, were very finely drawn. The dramatic character here suggests a definite story, but Mahler gives it no title and declines to have the work judged as "Program" (pictorial) music. It is, however, undoubtedly a picture of the struggle with Destiny, of Sorrow, Joy and grim Determination.

The Schubertian melody and simplicity of theme in the second movement was a foil to the touches of the first. Quite as popular is the playful shimmering of the third movement, almost a Viennese waltz at times, but there is something of bitterness, of musical sarcasm, intermingled. It was all directly and unaffectedly attractive. Now followed the alto solo, very expressively sung by Miss Merle Alcock. It forms practically a movement by itself, but it serves to usher in the great finale. And here, where words are first attached, we also get a title—"Urlicht"—the Primal Light.

The finale is a reflection of both Beethoven's ninth symphony and of Berlioz' Requiem, but treated in a different manner from either. As in the ninth there is complaining, contention, struggle and final triumph, but Beethoven's is an earthly triumph, while Mahler's is beyond the grave.

The alto solo is not so good a bridge to the chorus work as Beethoven's bass phrases were in his symphony, but it is direct and attractive and one of the popular points of the expressive composition.

There is some massive instrumental work before the vocal climax, and this was performed with heroic power. All this but leads into "The Great Summons, which is a movement far beyond Berlioz' picture of the Day of Judgment. Wonderfully effective, full of suspense and hope, was the simple beginning of this. A horn call against a trill upon bass drum, an echo, (both repeated) and then the song of a bird, the entire orchestra silent, only a piccolo and flute chirruping against the drum trill, now upon kettle-drums. It was as if Mahler had set Byron's words:

"A light broke in upon my brain,
It was the carol of a bird.
It ceased, and then it came again,
The sweetest song I ever heard."

The duet for soprano and alto (Miss May Peterson being the soprano, Miss Alcock the alto) was excellently given. It was noticeable how much more vocal the singer's parts were than those of Beethoven, in the preceding concert. And now the chorus had its opportunity. Stephen Townsend's training of the chorus has been most thorough, and even in the "A Capella" (unaccompanied) portion of the work, the intonation was sure and the shading commendable. The chorus has become a great adjunct to the orchestra in these concerts. The climaxes of the finale were great. If Mahler has used extremely large forces in this, surely the end has justified the means, which can be said of very few modern composers. The power of the finale and the dramatic yet clear character of the earlier movements show Mahler a genius, even if an unequal one. It was certainly a more grateful work to do than Beethoven's choral symphony which was given in the preceding concert. In that we felt that almost insurmountable difficulties had been overcome, but last night it seemed as if the performers enjoyed the work almost as much as the audience.

The performance was a triumph for our orchestra and for Mr. Townsend's carefully prepared chorus. Those who were present last night assisted at a very important occasion in Boston's symphonic history. Especially noticeable was the work of the brasses (the trumpets had most difficult passages) and the kettledrums. The enthusiasm at the end was boundless.

HERALD 1/23/18

PLAY MAHLER'S SYMPHONY HERE

Work Shows Little Genuine Musical Value—Chorus Is Powerful

PERFORMANCE IS TRIUMPH FOR MUCK

By PHILIP HALE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, assisted by May Peterson, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto, and the great chorus trained by Mr. Townsend, performed Gustav Mahler's Second Symphony last night in Symphony Hall. There was a very large audience. The symphony was performed for the first time in this city.

The final chorus by its sheer dynamic force, with the voices of many singers, the frenzy of an enlarged orchestra, the roar of organ and the peal of bells, undoubtedly affected the nerves of the hearers. They were for the moment thrilled. The question is whether it was worth while listening for an hour or more to the preceding movements of the symphony to experience a thrill.

It is known that Mahler was bitterly opposed to the program notes when his symphonies were performed. It was his habit to ask that only the indications for the movements should be printed on a program. Notes he abhorred, whether they were biographical, analytical, explanatory. Yet we find his biographer Stefan saying that Mahler explained the first movement of the second symphony as portraying the death of a hero who is fallen in Promethean struggle for his ideal, for the knowledge of life and death. This is a high-sounding phrase. Other ingenious commentators find the movement an expression of pessimism. An unsophisticated hearer knows that the movement is chiefly a funeral march, and realizes that Mahler wrote a more effective, a more emotional and imaginative one for the first movement of a later symphony, the one that has been played here several times.

We are also told that the Scherzo was suggested by St. Anthony of Padua preaching a sermon to the fishes; that the movement is a piscatorial Scherzo; that a keen-eared hearer can distinguish in the music the carp from the eels.

No doubt Mahler had some sort of a program in his mind, for in a letter to a friend he wrote that he had searched from the Bible down to contemporaneous literature in hope of finding the "liberating word" for the Finale. He found it when attending Buelow's funeral; he heard the choir sing Klopstock's "Resurrection" ode. Klopstock—who is now best remembered by the answer of Coleridge to a German clergyman who insisted that Klopstock was "the German Milton." "Yes," replied Coleridge, "a very German Milton indeed."

As we have said, the funeral march is not nearly so dramatic, so impressive as the mighty dirge in the later symphony. The dramatic material is commonplace: the treatment is laborious, the various episodes furnish little contrast or relief.

The second movement with its dance tune is most honest, the most pleasing of the five. The tune itself is common, but it has folk-character; it brings before one the thought of the country and joyous peasants. Never mind the deep-thinking commentator who detects irony in the movement, a sardonic view of human enjoyment. The music might have been written by any honest Kapellmeister of the second or third rank, but here at least Mahler is frank and comparatively simple. His music is homely in the good old meaning of the word.

Then we come to the Scherzo—ye gods and little fishes! Hagiologists say, by the way, that the sermon to the fish is falsely attributed to St. Anthony of Padua, who came from Lisbon. Here is a fine opportunity for an elaborate digression in a program book. Let the Saint rest! The Scherzo, with or without the fish, is mildly amusing, not significant.

In the fourth movement "Primal Light," the alto sings an old song from "The Boy's Magic Horn," a quaint old song. Would that Mahler had treated it sympathetically! Would that he had given Mme. Alcock better music for her rich and beautiful voice!

In the last movement there are convulsive measures; there is music that is theatrical, not dramatic; there are phrases that recall moments in the last act of Verdi's "Otello," accidental no doubt—and how much more effective are Verdi's! There are pages, now boisterously tiresome, now lethargically dull, until the chorus enters. The choral pages are the most striking in the Symphony. They gain greatly by the bombast and the dulness of what has gone before.

It is to be regretted that Dr. Muck spent his rare talent and the excellent resources at his command in the preparation and performance of a work that has so little genuine musical value. Mahler could not have complained of the performance. In his lifetime, when he conducted the symphony abroad and in New York, he never had such an admirable orchestra and chorus. If he had been present last night he would have shaken warmly the hand of the conductor; he might have embraced him. But the splendor of the performance did not glorify the music itself. It still remained now blatant, now wildly pretentious, now of leaden dulness; with here and there hints at ideas that came to nought in the expression; with a few pages of pleasing commonplace; showing too often a surprising lack of taste, a clumsiness in orchestration, the belief that din is necessarily dramatic, that brute force is artistic strength.

HERALD
JAN. 23, 1918

PLAY MAHLER'S SYMPHONY HERE

Work Shows Little Genuine Musical Value—Chorus Is Powerful

PERFORMANCE IS TRIUMPH FOR MUCK

1/23

By PHILIP HALE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, assisted by May Peterson, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto, and the great chorus trained by Mr. Townsend, performed Gustav Mahler's Second Symphony last night in Symphony Hall. There was a very large audience. The symphony was performed for the first time in this city.

The final chorus by its sheer dynamic force, with the voices of many singers, the frenzy of an enlarged orchestra, the roar of organ and the peal of bells, undoubtedly affected the nerves of the hearers. They were for the moment thrilled. The question is whether it was worth while listening for an hour or more to the preceding movements of the symphony to experience a thrill.

It is known that Mahler was bitterly opposed to the program notes when his symphonies were performed. It was his habit to ask that only the indications for the movements should be printed on a program. Notes he abhorred, whether they were biographical, analytical, explanatory. Yet we find his biographer Stefan saying that Mahler explained the first movement of the second symphony as portraying the death of a hero who is fallen in Promethean struggle for his ideal, for the knowledge of life and death. This is a high-sounding phrase. Other ingenious commentators find the movement an expression of pessimism. An unsophisticated hearer knows that the movement is chiefly a funeral march, and realizes that Mahler wrote a more effective, a more emotional and imaginative one for the first movement of a later symphony, the one that has been played here several times.

We are also told that the Scherzo was suggested by St. Anthony of Padua preaching a sermon to the fishes; that the movement is a piscatorial Scherzo; that a keen-eared hearer can distinguish in the music the carp from the eels.

No doubt Mahler had some sort of a program in his mind, for in a letter to a friend he wrote that he had searched from the Bible down to contemporaneous literature in hope of finding the "liberating word" for the Finale. He found it when attending Buelow's funeral; he heard the choir sing Klopstock's "Resurrection" ode. Klopstock—who is now best remembered by the answer of Coleridge to a German clergyman who insisted that Klopstock was "the German Milton." "Yes," replied Coleridge, "a very German Milton indeed."

As we have said, the funeral march is not nearly so dramatic, so impressive as the mighty dirge in the later symphony. The dramatic material is commonplace; the treatment is laborious, the various episodes furnish little contrast or relief.

The second movement with its dance tune is most honest, the most pleasing of the five. The tune itself is common, but it has folk-character; it brings before one the thought of the country and joyous peasants. Never mind the deep-thinking commentator who detects irony in the movement, a sardonic view of human enjoyment. The music might have been written by any honest Kapellmeister of the second or third rank, but here at least Mahler is frank and comparatively simple. His music is homely in the good old meaning of the word.

Then we come to the Scherzo—ye gods and little fishes! Hagiologists say, by the way, that the sermon to the fish is falsely attributed to St. Anthony of Padua, who came from Lisbon. Here is a fine opportunity for an elaborate digression in a program book. Let the Saint rest! The Scherzo, with or without the fish, is mildly amusing, not significant.

In the fourth movement "Primal Light," the alto sings an old song from "The Boy's Magic Horn," a quaint old song. Would that Mahler had treated it sympathetically! Would that he had given Mme. Alcock better music for her rich and beautiful voice!

In the last movement there are convulsive measures; there is music that is theatrical, not dramatic; there are phrases that recall moments in the last act of Verdi's "Otello," accidental no doubt—and how much more effective are Verdi's! There are pages, now boisterously tiresome, now lethargically dull, until the chorus enters. The choral pages are the most striking in the Symphony. They gain greatly by the bombast and the dulness of what has gone before.

It is to be regretted that Dr. Muck spent his rare talent and the excellent resources at his command in the preparation and performance of a work that has so little genuine musical value. Mahler could not have complained of the performance. In his lifetime, when he conducted the symphony abroad and in New York, he never had such an admirable orchestra and chorus. If he had been present last night he would have shaken warmly the hand of the conductor; he might have embraced him. But the splendor of the performance did not glorify the music itself. It still remained now blatant, now wildly pretentious, now of leaden dulness; with here and there hints at ideas that came to nought in the expression; with a few pages of pleasing commonplace; showing too often a surprising lack of taste, a clumsiness in orchestration, the belief that din is necessarily dramatic, that brute force is artistic strength.

TRANSCRIPT, JAN. 23, 1918

MAHLER'S SYMPHONY

MUSIC IN WHICH DESIGN EXCELS ACCOMPLISHMENT

A Scheme Too Vast and Epic, a Canvas Stretched Too Wide and High for the Composer's Invention, Imagination and Procedure to Fill — The Persistent Impression of Shortcoming — Occasional Moments of Achievement—A Performance That With All Its Virtues Raised Questioning Here and There

1/23

FORTUNATE the composer and the man who can awaken and sustain such devoted loyalties as did Mahler. His enemies, his detractors abounded; but against them persisted an apostolic band. Eminent conductors were among these disciples and as he wrote one symphony after another they made or seized opportunity to play it. Eminent writers kept them company in printed exposition and praise. Even artists, like Rodin or Orlik, liked to set Mahler on canvas or in bronze. Now that he is eight years dead, as many of these apostles as survive him, multiply rather than abate these loyalties. Here in the United States, for instance, Mr. Stokowski prepares with endless pains and accomplishes in New York and Philadelphia, performances of the huge "Symphony of a Thousand." In Chicago, Mr. Stock makes that symphony the chief item in a series of festival concerts. Mahler's fifth symphony, requiring no more than the usual orchestra; his fourth, asking only an incidental singing voice, are now well established in American repertories. His sets of orchestrated songs have made their way into symphony concerts, occasionally singers set his simpler pieces on the programmes of their recitals. In Boston, the fifth symphony was heard in Mr. Gericke's final year at Symphony Hall, and at three pairs of concerts Dr. Muck has repeated it. From him came first in America the "Songs of a Wandering Journeyman"; while last evening he brought to hearing for the second time on this side of the Atlantic, Mahler's second symphony, known by a single performance in 1908 to the ears of New York, unknown hitherto to Boston. Side by side with these apostolic conductors have wrought the apostles of print and speech. Both questioned as to this zeal, return a single answer: "It is for Mahler." Only a Parisian composer or two enjoys in the United States so steadfast, so loyal a following. Perhaps it is in America, rather than in his own Austria and Germany that Mahler's music now most flourishes.

Possibly these devotions on the one hand and on the other the huge forces and the arduous preparation required for several of Mahler's symphonies tend to raise too high the anticipations of audiences. Last evening, for example, the expectant company that filled nearly every place in Symphony Hall, looked upon a platform extending the stage an appreciable distance into the parquet. Upon it sat the Symphony Orchestra, "augmented" in wind and brass choirs, with two women actually disposed among the horn, with yet more "additional instruments" hidden without for distant voices. Above this band, five score and more, rose the chorus in tier upon tier, three hundred at least in numbers, strong with the prestige gained two months ago by its singing in the Finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. From New York and elsewhere had come musicians of note and amateurs of music, hardly less noted in kind and degree, to hear this second symphony of Mahler. It was known that weeks had been spent in preparation for the performance; that Dr. Muck, preparing and conducting, was not the least of the Mahlerian apostolic band. There was little need for devoted and diligent expositors to whet anticipation in article and on programme sheet. Already it ran quite as high as the outcome of music and performance was to warrant. Intent, impressed, the audience listened; through the Finale it was plainly rapt and stirred; at the end of the concert—and on these Storrovian nights—it lingered for recall upon recall to all concerned. Yet, as manifestly, this second symphony of Mahler had swept it into no such emotion and exaltation as did, of old, the merely orchestral fifth.

Perhaps Mahler stretched too wide a canvas for even his fecundity of invention and fire of imagination to fill; perhaps he conceived a musical and quasi-dramatic design too large, too exacting for achieving mind, will and hand to compass. That design, on the poetizing, the quasi-dramatic side is clear enough in the music, whether the expositors and the commentators clarify or confuse. Consider, the composer is obviously saying, the spiritual, the emotional life of man. He may waste it in tranquil existence, easy futilities, placid pastimes. He may stifle it in self-satisfactions, cynical disdains, commonplaces of pleasure. He may see his ideal as in the heavens opened; he may press manfully upward toward it; yet while he is yet afar and struggling, death descends and the mourning of his fellows less swells his achievement than proclaims his failures. "Vanity of vanities," saith the preacher, "all is vanity." Then, of a sudden, out of this murk and mock, shall sound a song of simple things—an elemental, universal voice entreating the divine aid and hope, the divine consolation and compensation. Centuries before Mahler, Saint Paul wrote the divine answer: "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incor-on and this mortal must put on im-
"ty."

There is no questioning the emotional, the poetic, the dramatic, perhaps even the epic quality of this design. It is spacious, sweeping, human, universal. By as clear token it lends itself to expression in tones and in music of the expanding dimensions, the upswelling course, the massed forces that Mahler loved. As little is there just quarrel with his scheming of the frame for this design. For beginning, a proclamation of death and mourning as present end to this manful battling for the ideal. In contrasting sequence tonal image of the placid life shunned, of the cynical and sensual life scorned. Thereafter, the prayer of faith and need; upon it the ascent heavenward to the Divine Justice, the entrance into the glories and ecstasies of resurrection. Readily does this design join with the formal prescriptions of symphonic course—the stormy Allegro of beginning; next a tranquil and shimmering slow movement; a sardonic and spirited Scherzo; the intermezzo of songful entreaty; the free Finale in which to crowd tonal imagery of the emptied earth, the great judgment, the final beatification. There might Mahler have his hosts of instruments and voices; there might he fling himself first upon a music of stress and pang, then upon music of ecstatic radiance, eternal exaltation. The design is worthy of a symphonic imagination and ambition, ever burning to conquer summits, to sustain itself upon them.

By experience and test, as the performance of last evening afforded them, it is in the execution of this design that Mahler falls short. His tonal invention, his tonal imagination too often decline from his "great argument," while an excess of handling, as a painter might say, with his musical material does not enable him to fill the gap. The long-breathed, far-flung Mahlerian theme—in the narrow sense of the word in music—the motive that in itself arrests the ear by songful eloquence or tonal pith and point, is an old story. Other of his symphonies abound in them; but there is hardly one in this second so laying and maintaining hold upon the hearer. The short and simple, almost naive Mahlerian theme, on the instant charm to ear and fancy, is familiar. One such gladdens this second symphony—the motive that quickly expands into the Andante of the placid and futile life. Whoever recollects the fifth symphony of Mahler recalls the darkling splendors and the poignant passion of lament, the epic mourning, with which it begins. The like passage at the beginning of the second symphony is pale beside it in matter and treatment, misses quite the wild plangency. There can come rifts in Mahler's gloomiest music—again recall his fifth symphony—in which the sheer radiance of a melody pierces and rends the settled blackness. The like rift, in the first movement of the second symphony, sounds very like a willed and workmanlike effect.

Mahler has written sardonic music in which a bitter tonal wit seethes and crackles; or Scherzi of light and smiling humor, or playful measures of apt delineative strokes. Of all three, seemingly, would be the Scherzo of sermon and fishes in the second symphony; yet the invention, the zest to make it tingle, flash, bite, enter not the music. Mahler excels in passages in which he launches his whole orchestra, like some mighty tonal enginry, to proclaim the passionate struggle of man in as riven and writhing music. He essays such passages in the first movement of the symphony of yesterday. They serve their purpose; but they rend neither the ears nor the hearts of hearers. Mahler is capable of epic fresco in tones, of a musical canvas like to those that sometimes Michael Angelo stretched and filled. There is one such in the Finale of the second symphony—the tonal panorama of the dreads and pangs, the confusions, the concealments, the torture, the awe of the Last Judgment. Again it serves, but the mind does not flash back to the fresco above the altar in the Sistine Chapel to find fit analogy for it.

Thrice and thrice only, as it seemed last evening, is Mahler with this "Resurrection Symphony," at the heights of the beauty, the power, the illusion that the scope and substance of his design exactingly demanded; that his mind, heart and hand passionately sought. Once, at the beginning of the Finale, when faint and far, yet with soft pulse that is irresistible goading, and bell-like clear the blended horns and trumpets of the resurrection morning seem to call to a world quickened in celestial light. Again, a little further into the Finale, when the chorus sing the divine pity, the divine redemption upon the the dead in measures of a deep and radiant, a longing and serene beauty alike of confidence and compassion. Yet again, when the choral song of the beatified is like the voice of a great host streaming, elate but grave, through the gateways of Paradise. Near to them, through the rest of the symphony is only the clear, stark voice of simple, universal tremulous entreaty that rises in such measure of beauty between the music of life and the music of resurrection.

These rare moments of Mahler at last in full achievement, gained the more of beauty, rose the higher in power, wrought the deeper illusion for the song of the releasing and upbearing voices and instruments. To hear the chorus sustain the long phrases with which they begin, keep them in a solemn motion, intensify the tonal lustres, hold the music in grave ecstasy of mood and speech was to hear the choir at that acme of choral singing in which in all but volume, it is as one perfect voice. To hear the chorus again, when the hosts redeemed pour upward into Paradise was to know as never before hereabouts the mingled majesty and elation to which choral song may rise. Conductor—whether Mr. Townsend practicing or Dr. Muck culminating—and singers attained the grave exaltation, the rejoicing yet noble ecstasy that Mahler believed he had wrought into his music. The clear texture, the soft vibrancy of Mme. Alcock's tones was at one with the voice of the song of entreaty, while she also entered into Mahler's artful simplicity. any one else in [illegible] priority is

Sense of the illusion that music may work might hardly farther go than it did in conductor and orchestra with the summonings of the resurrection morning. Their distinctions of tone, rhythm, phrase, modulation, saved the placid, fluent, pretty Andante (as it should be in Mahler's purpose) from the commonplace besetting it, if the ear listens without thought of his design. They did their utmost to make the Scherzo sound mordant or graphic; they flung themselves upon the writhing and shrieking, or the awed and racked music of the Great Judgment. They pitched high the plangent lament of the beginning; they tore off, so to say, the ensuing music of struggle. Yet, somehow the impression does persist that neither conductor nor orchestra rose quite to the heights of all Mahler's frenzies aid fervors; that not always did they fully gain the opened and shining beauty that he believed, for example, he had wrought into his melody of the ideal. Perhaps the seeming shortcoming is inherent in the music; perhaps it lay in the glorified memory of their voices united to Mahler's in mighty and magnificent progress through his fifth symphony.

H. T. P.

Advertiser 1/23

MAHLER'S GREAT SYMPHONY IS PLAYED

1/23

Splendidly Trained Chorus Aids Augmented Orchestra of Dr. Muck

By FRED J. McISAAC.

The colossal second symphony of Gustav Mahler, which requires a huge chorus and an orchestra of 125 musicians, was given in Symphony Hall last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 350 trained by Stephen Townsend.

It was the same organization which performed Beethoven's Ninth Symphony a few weeks ago.

It was rather curious to see sitting at instrument desks in the orchestra several women musicians. Augmenting the Boston Symphony is fraught with considerable difficulty as most musicians outside that organization are union members and cannot play with it.

Gustav Mahler was an Austrian composer and conductor who died in Vienna in 1911. For several seasons he conducted at the Metropolitan Opera in New York and toured the country with one of New York's symphony orchestras.

FIRST BOSTON PERFOMANCE.

His second symphony was written in 1895. It was performed in New York in 1908 by the New York Symphony, directed by Mahler, himself, but Boston never heard it until last night.

An ordinary symphony occupies forty minutes. Mahler's second is longer even than Beethoven's ninth. It occupied an hour and three quarters. In addition to the huge chorus, the score calls for twice the ordinary number of brasses and woodwinds and the services of a contralto and soprano. Merle Alcock and May Peterson were soloists last evening.

The central idea of this amazing work is vast and confused. It typifies mankind, his woes and his triumph. The first movement inspired by the line "Mankind liés in sorest need" is melancholy, solemn and grandly sombre. The second movement suggests content and happiness, the third weird scherzo said to be inspired by the legend of St. Anthony and the fishes. The fourth movement, called "The Primal Light," is a pure lyric sung by the alto with very effective accompaniment, and the finale introduces the great chorus and a horde of extra instruments in the Resurrection chorale.

Mahler was a master of instrumentation, a clever harmonist, a remarkable builder of climaxes, but he gives little evidence of any melodic genius in this symphony. His lyric passages are always suggesting other composers, usually Wagner. His ambition in this work was boundless, but he achieved far less than Mozart or Haydn with an orchestra a quarter the size in a third the time.

RACKET DEAFENING.

The uproar and racket in the finale is positively deafening and apparently intended to overpower the auditor and prevent him discovering the lack of anything worth while in it. The chorus comes in grandly; there are admirable effects, but even the chorale is lacking in real inspiration.

Dr. Muck conducted this vast affair with his extraordinary grasp of the most minute detail. The chorus, splendidly trained by Stephen Townsend, responded to his slightest touch. In fact it behaved far better than the orchestra, for there was playing out of tune and bad phrasing among the brasses now and again.

Merle Alcock, the contralto, made a very agreeable impression, and May Peterson, the soprano, gave evidence of excellent vocal qualities.

HERALD, JAN. 17.

MAHLER'S SYMPHONY

Mahler's huge "Resurrection" Symphony had its first complete performance here in Symphony Hall last evening, at the first full rehearsal of chorus and orchestra under Dr. Muck. Those who heard it received a profound impression of grandeur and beauty. The work is on a huge scale, as most of Mahler's symphonies are. The choral part at the end contains much music of true folk quality. Again the chorus organized for these concerts showed its skill and volume. There will be another full rehearsal next Monday evening. The performance on Tuesday evening promises to be a memorable event.

ADVERTISER JAN. 17, 1918

MAHLER'S SYMPHONY GIVEN A REHEARSAL

Mahler's huge "Resurrection" symphony had its first complete performance in Symphony Hall last evening, the occasion being the first full rehearsal of chorus and orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck. Those who heard it received a most profound impression of grandeur and beauty. The work is on a huge scale as most of Mahler's symphonies are. The choral part at the end contains music of extraordinary beauty, much of it of true folk quality. Again the remarkable chorus organized for these concerts showed its skill in singing and its unusual quality of voice.

There will be another full rehearsal next Monday evening, and the performance, which comes next Tuesday evening, January 22, promises to be a memorable event in the history of Boston music.

JAN. 18, 1918
ADVERTISER

WIDE INTEREST IN MAHLER SYMPHONY

Famous Musicians Coming to Boston to Hear It

Interest in the performance of Mahler's stupendous "Resurrection" symphony in Symphony Hall next Tuesday evening, January 22, is not by any means confined to Boston.

Ossip Gabrilowitch, who came to Boston for the performance of the ninth symphony, is to be here again for the performance of the Mahler work. Arthur Bodansky, principal conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, has engaged seats for himself and a party of musicians who are coming over here next Tuesday.

A delegation is also coming from New York representing the Society of the Friends of Music. It was this society that was responsible for the performance in New York of Mahler's eighth symphony two years ago. Reservations have also been made by music-lovers in Providence, Springfield and Hartford. The performance is regarded generally among musicians, of the country as the most important feature of its kind scheduled for the current season.

MALDEN WOMAN IS

Record
Jan. 17, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY IN FIRST REHEARSAL

Mahler's huge "Resurrection" Symphony had its first complete performance in Symphony Hall last evening, the occasion being the first full rehearsal of chorus and orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck. Those who heard it received a most profound impression of grandeur and beauty.

There will be another full rehearsal Monday evening, and the performance, which comes Tuesday evning, promises to be a memorable event in the history of Boston music.

~AMERICAN~
JAN. 20, 1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Once every two or three years Dr. Muck devotes a program to symphonies by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, and these programs are always greeted with enthusiasm by the patrons of the Symphony concerts. Such a one he has arranged for the coming week. Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, the beautiful G-minor symphony of Mozart and the first symphony of Beethoven in C major will be played.

MONITOR
JAN. 19, 1918

MUSIC

Mr. Gabrilowitsch as Soloist

In Symphony Hall, on Friday afternoon, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presenting the Brahms second piano concerto in B flat major, op. 83. On the program with the concerto were the Berlioz overture, "Les Francs-Juges," op. 3, and the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings, op. 48.

The second Brahms concerto is long, measured by the number of pages which the score fills, and measured also by the time it takes in performance. But so clear it its structural design and so continuous is the appeal of its melody, it seems of no more than normal length. It stoutly challenges the technical skill of the solo performer, and it provokes his powers of expression to full activity. Likewise, it invites the orchestral players to their best execution and to their most earnest utterance. In fine, it has all the merits a work should have, both as something to interpret and as something to hear, to make it deserve a place on the Symphony programs for three years running.

One reason, perhaps, why this concerto, which contains one movement more than the rules authorize, seems of reasonable length is because the orchestral part of it, in order not to overbalance the piano, must be played with a moderate volume of tone. It may be that ordinary time computation does not count where music is concerned and that some such formula, therefore, as this applies—the duration of a piece increases with the magnitude of the sonority. Under this scheme of measurement, the overture of Berlowz, though written in what is commonly regarded as a short form, was a long composition, as played on Friday afternoon. The immoderate shoutings of the brass choir in certain of the episodes drew the piece out vastly. And in the same way the heavy-handed bowing of the violins, the violas, the violoncellos and the basses in the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings meant undue protraction for the closing part of the program.

It is fortunate for the orchestra, probably, that the schedule of soloists has lately been enlarged back to the basis of a number of years ago. A fair number of the selections presented in the course of the year must now be played with tempered sound.

The soloist of this occasion won the enthusiastic approval of the audience for his service in modifying the voice of the orchestra and for bringing interpretation around to terms of polished style and gentle mood. Possibly he overdid his method in those portions of his text where passage work prevailed. But he was perfectly in command of affairs where he had his part to sustain in dialogue, directing his conversation now fervently, now wittily, as the subject changed; and politely through everything.

Monitor
Jan. 19, 1918

Music Notes

Mahler's second, or "Resurrection," symphony will be performed in Symphony Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 22, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Townsend Chorus, with Miss May Peterson, soprano, and Mrs. Merle Alcock, contralto, assisting. The work, which belongs to the early nineties, contains three movements for orchestra alone, a third movement for orchestra and contralto, and a fourth for orchestra, organ, chorus, soprano and contralto, built on the "Resurrection" ode of Klopstock.

The first movement (allegro maestoso) contains a funeral march, with contrasting passages.

The second movement (andante) has been described as expressing the joy of the composer in contemplating nature.

In the third movement (scherzo) the composer has been said to satirize the stupidity and vulgarity which he found in certain elements of society.

The fourth movement (in solemn, simple manner) brings forward the contralto with the words, "Mankind lies in sorest need!"

The fifth movement opens with a symphonic episode; it continues with the Klopstock poem, sung by the soprano and chorus, unaccompanied; and it concludes with full orchestra,

TRAVELER
JAN. 19, 1918

GABRILOWITSCH WITH ORCHESTRA

Traveler 1/19

Great Pianist Thrills Symphony Audience in Brahms Concerto

The memorable performance of the Brahms concerto by Ossip Gabrilowitsch was the outstanding feature of yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program was Berlioz, overture to "Les Francs-Juges"; Brahms, Piano Concerto No. 2; Tschaikowsky, Serenade for string orchestra.

Nothing comparable with the wonderful playing of Mr. Gabrilowitsch has been heard in this city in years, not even by this great artist. He played as though inspired and was ably seconded by Dr. Muck and the orchestra, making of the number a red-letter event in the orchestra's glorious history.

Berlioz, although finely given, seemed out of place in such a concert. The Tschaikowsky number furnished a restful closing.

The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Haydn, "Surprise" symphony; Mozart, Symphony in G minor; Beethoven, Symphony No. 1.

HERALD
JAN. 19, 1918

SECOND CHORAL CONCERT

Herald 1/6

The first full chorus rehearsal for the second choral concert of the three given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and special chorus under Dr. Muck, will be held in Symphony hall next Wednesday evening. After the successful performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the chorus under Mr. Townsend began work on Mahler's Second Symphony which will have its first performance in Boston, Tuesday evening, Jan. 22d. There is every reason to believe that the standard attained by the first concert will be maintained at the second, and at the third in March.

This Symphony was begun at Leipsic and completed at Steinbach in June, 1894. The three instrumental movements were performed at a Philharmonic concert conducted by Richard Strauss in Berlin, March 4,1895. Mahler conducted the whole of the work in Berlin on Dec. 13, 1895.

The first performance in the United States was on Dec. 8, 1908, by the Symphony Orchestra, of New York. Laura Combs and Gertrude Stein-Bailey were the solo singers. Mahler conducted.

The Symphony is built on the large lines that characterize all of Mahler's orchestral works. It is in four movements. The performance runs considerably over an hour and a half, and thus an entire evening's entertainment of itself. In the last movement a large chorus is used. In addition to the chorus there is important solo work for contralto voice. The orchestra will be materially augmented in the brass sections.

For the contralto solo the management has engaged Merle Alcock, who has done much orchestral and oratorio work. She has appeared a number of times with the New York Symphony Society in New York and elsewhere; she has appeared as soloist in the Worcester Festival, and was one of the soloists at the recent performances of "The Messiah" by the Handel and Haydn Society. She is an American and all her training has been done in this country, but she has won success in London.

HERALD
JAN. 18, 1918

TO HEAR MAHLER

Interest in the performance of the Bohemian composer Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony, in Symphony hall, next Tuesday evening, is not confined to Boston. Mr. Gabrilowitsch will be here, and Arthur Bodanzky, of the Metropolitan Opera House, has engaged seats for himself and a party of musicians. A delegation is coming from New York, representing the Society of the Friends of Music. Reservations have also been made by music lovers in Providence, Springfield and Hartford. The performance is regarded among musicians of the country as the most important feature of its kind this season.

HERALD
JAN. 16, 1918

KNITTING AT SYMPHONY.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

I wish to heartily indorse the letter in Saturday morning's paper, signed Marion F. Brainerd, in which she expresses so admirably the sentiment of all who attend the Symphony concerts to enjoy them intelligently, toward the knitters.

I am giving every possible moment to war relief work and attend the concerts for much needed refreshment for tired nerves. At the last one a charming young woman beside me knitted industriously all through the concert, stopping only at intermission.

The slight clicking of her needles made it impossible to enjoy the music and the constant motion was anything but restful to the eye.

I feel sure it is thoughtlessness on the part of most knitters who, being, perhaps, not keenly sensitive themselves, are therefore quite unaware of the torture inflicted upon others.

ANNIE F. MORSE.

Brookline, Jan. 12.

Transcript
Jan 14 1918

Items and Announcements

Transcript 1/14

In recompense for the absence of Mr. Paderewski, withdrawn by other preoccupations from the schedule of "assisting artists" for the Symphony Concerts, Mr. Gabrilowitsch will be heard at them on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week and in Brahms's long concerto in B-flat, exacting upon pianist, conductor and audience all alike. Berlioz's overture, "Les Francs Juges," long unheard in Symphony Hall, begins the programme; and Chaikovsky's Serenade for Strings—a piece in several divisions, ends it. No programme for the concert of the orchestra on Thursday evening in Cambridge has yet been handed to the newspapers. After the repeated experiences of the winter with belatedly announced programmes, it is high time that whoever is at fault in these matters bestirred himself to promptness. The public of the concerts has a right to know what it is to hear and these are not days in which orchestra, conductor or management may wisely forfeit one jot of the good will of their public.

RECORD
JAN. 14, 1918

MAE PETERSON TO SING AT MAHLER SYMPHONY

Mae Peterson is in the limelight in musical Boston and New York these days. Saturday evening she sang Mimi in "La Boheme" at the Metropolitan and gave the best performance she has yet given at that house. Yesterday afternoon she sang at the Symphony Hall concert in Boston, substituting for Mme. Louise Homer, ill. She sang beautifully in a wide rangs of songs.

This morning, following her success of yesterday, the Symphony management announced that she had been selected to sing the soprano soloist role with Mahler's Symphony Tuesday evening, Jan. 22.

With her in concert yesterday appeared Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, who gave much pleasure to a large audience.

Record 1/14

HERALD
JAN. 18, 1918

KNITTING EVERYWHERE.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

It is to be hoped that none of our frostbitten soldiers and sailors will hear of the Herald letter protesting against the Symphony Hall knitting. These letters could hardly fail to give an added pain to ourself-sacrificing defenders if they should learn that American women, for whose lives and honor they offer their lives, can wish to stop for an hour and a half every week the manufacture of many sorely, pitifully needed garments.

Our brave boys might well wonder that an American woman could find more "refreshment" in the movements of the baton of a well and comfortably clad subject of the Kaiser than in the motions of the needles which are working to cover the ill-protected, the freezing, bodies of our saviors.

Boston, Jan. 21. I. H. DANA.

Transcript
Jan 17, 1918

212

NEWS OF MUSIC

Impending Mahler

WHEN Bostonian ears hear Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—the title is not the composer's but the fancy of an admiring analyst—for the first time next Tuesday evening, Dr. Muck and the management of the Symphony Orchestra will fulfill a long-meditated purpose. Originally they planned the performance of the symphony for a concert, after the regular series was done, in the spring of 1915. The assisting chorus was then to be the celebrated Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto. It was preparing for a journey to England and Germany; it intended to take ship from Boston; and the arrangement was that in May it should join the Symphony Orchestra in two concerts—one for Beethoven's Choral Symphony and the other for this symphony of Mahler. War-time conditions put a European tour by the Mendelssohn Choir out of the question; indeed soon dissolved it; and the whole project for the performance of the two symphonies lay in abeyance until the decision last spring, in counsel with Mr. Townsend, to organize his present chorus. Singers, orchestra and conductors forthwith made ready Beethoven's symphony, with outcome in such graphic and eloquent performance that not once, but twice, the public demanded to hear it. Then they passed to the rehearsal of Mahler's music, and next Tuesday the end is expected again to crown the work.

It is easy to say, of course, that Mahler is not Beethoven: that, while the Choral Symphony is a mighty classic of music, the "Resurrection Symphony" is seldom heard either in Europe or in America. Mahler's music undergoes this fate, in part because of the exceptional forces and preparation required for the performance; in part because it still has its way to make to recurrent place in concerts; in part because the composer took his own course outside the symphonic currents of his time. None but him among the eminent composers of the last decade of the nineteenth century and the first decade of the twentieth conceived huge symphonies in which movement should pile upon movement, like some monument in tones; in which chorus and solo voices should swell the power and the range of the orchestra; in which large and elemental emotion should mount in grandiose ascent and proclamation. Mahler wrote these symphonies with the energy of an intensely nervous being, with questionless devotion to an ideal enkindled, at a time when the course of music was more and more setting to concision of substance, perfection of detail and adroit rather than massive use of means: when many a composer was seeking intimate and very personal, rather than large and elemental, impression upon his hearers. For Mahler, however, to express himself in symphonic music—unless he resolutely held himself to some other end—was to work on the largest possible scale of tonal idea, structure, method and effect. He wrote grandiloquent symphonies because fervent inclination and high ambition prompted him to them above all other. The more, then, will this "Resurrection Symphony" be strange and stimulating in kind.

Here in Boston

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge this evening, Dr. Muck and his men will play Brahms's fourth symphony, in E minor; Sibelius's tone-poem, "The Swan of Tuonela"; and a fragment of Berlioz's glowing music of Romeo and Juliet, "The Fete at Capulet's House." Mrs. Littlefield, appearing for the first time with the orchestra, will sing two familiar numbers—the coloratura air from Mozart's opera, "The Shepherd King" and the orchestral version of Duparc's song, "Phidylé"—and one unfamiliar—an air from Rameau's eighteenth-century opera, "Platée."

In New York last week, Dr. Muck and the string choir of the Symphony Orchestra repeated Händel's Concerto Grosso, as they had played it on the preceding Friday and Saturday in Boston, with the conductor seated at the piano and Mr. Witek and Mr. Habenicht as "violini concertini" on either hand. The secret of this placement of the musicians and of Dr. Muck's mingled leading and playing had been well kept. Discovering it with surprise, the audience broke into pleased applause that was still heartier at the end of the concerto. Indeed, on every occasion that the two concerts of last week in New York offered, the hearers of the orchestra and the conductor heaped them with plaudits beyond even those usually bestowed.

The American String Quartet and Mr. Gebhard, the pianist, are soon to repeat in New York, with a slight change in the programme, the chamber concert, with pieces from Franck and Debussy, that they lately gave auspiciously in this town.

MONITOR
JAN. 19, 1918

MUSIC

Mr. Gabrilowitsch as Soloist

In Symphony Hall, on Friday afternoon, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presenting the Brahms second piano concerto in B flat major, op. 83. On the program with the concerto were the Berlioz overture, "Les Francs-Juges," op. 3, and the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings, op. 48.

The second Brahms concerto is long, measured by the number of pages which the score fills, and measured also by the time it takes in performance. But so clear it its structural design and so continuous is the appeal of its melody, it seems of no more than normal length. It stoutly challenges the technical skill of the solo performer, and it provokes his powers of expression to full activity. Likewise, it invites the orchestral players to their best execution and to their most earnest utterance. In fine, it has all the merits a work should have, both as something to interpret and as something to hear, to make it deserve a place on the Symphony programs for three years running.

One reason, perhaps, why this concerto, which contains one movement more than the rules authorize, seems of reasonable length is because the orchestral part of it, in order not to overbalance the piano, must be played with a moderate volume of tone. It may be that ordinary time computation does not count where music is concerned and that some such formula, therefore, as this applies—the duration of a piece increases with the magnitude of the sonority. Under this scheme of measurement, the overture of Berlowz, though written in what is commonly regarded as a short form, was a long composition, as played on Friday afternoon. The immoderate shoutings of the brass choir in certain of the episodes drew the piece out vastly. And in the same way the heavy-handed bowing of the violins, the violas, the violoncellos and the basses in the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings meant undue protraction for the closing part of the program.

It is fortunate for the orchestra, probably, that the schedule of soloists has lately been enlarged back to the basis of a number of years ago. A fair number of the selections presented in the course of the year must now be played with tempered sound.

The soloist of this occasion won the enthusiastic approval of the audience for his service in modifying the voice of the orchestra and for bringing interpretation around to terms of polished style and gentle mood. Possibly he overdid his method in those portions of his text where passage work prevailed. But he was perfectly in command of affairs where he had his part to sustain in dialogue, directing his conversation now fervently, now wittily, as the subject changed; and politely through everything.

monitor
Jan. 19, 1918

Music Notes

Mahler's second, or "Resurrection," symphony will be performed in Symphony Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 22, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Townsend Chorus, with Miss May Peterson, soprano, and Mrs. Merle Alcock, contralto, assisting. The work, which belongs to the early nineties, contains three movements for orchestra alone, a third movement for orchestra and contralto, and a fourth for orchestra, organ, chorus, soprano and contralto, built on the "Resurrection" ode of Klopstock.

The first movement (allegro maestoso) contains a funeral march, with contrasting passages.

The second movement (andante) has been described as expressing the joy of the composer in contemplating nature.

In the third movement (scherzo) the composer has been said to satirize the stupidity and vulgarity which he found in certain elements of society.

The fourth movement (in solemn, simple manner) brings forward the contralto with the words, "Mankind lies in sorest need!"

The fifth movement opens with a symphonic episode; it continues with the Klopstock poem, sung by the soprano and chorus, unaccompanied; and it concludes with full orchestra,

TRAVELER
JAN. 19, 1918

GABRILOWITSCH WITH ORCHESTRA

Traveler 1/19

Great Pianist Thrills Symphony Audience in Brahms Concerto

The memorable performance of the Brahms concerto by Ossip Gabrilowitsch was the outstanding feature of yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program was Berlioz, overture to "Les Francs-Juges"; Brahms, Piano Concerto No. 2; Tschaikowsky, Serenade for string orchestra.

Nothing comparable with the wonderful playing of Mr. Gabrilowitsch has been heard in this city in years, not even by this great artist. He played as though inspired and was ably seconded by Dr. Muck and the orchestra, making of the number a red-letter event in the orchestra's glorious history.

Berlioz, although finely given, seemed out of place in such a concert. The Tschaikowsky number furnished a restful closing.

The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Haydn, "Surprise" symphony; Mozart, Symphony in G minor; Beethoven, Symphony No. 1.

HERALD
JAN. 19, 1918

SECOND CHORAL CONCERT

The first full chorus rehearsal for the second choral concert of the three given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and special chorus under Dr. Muck, will be held in Symphony hall next Wednesday evening. After the successful performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the chorus under Mr. Townsend began work on Mahler's Second Symphony which will have its first performance in Boston, Tuesday evening, Jan. 22d. There is every reason to believe that the standard attained by the first concert will be maintained at the second, and at the third in March.

This Symphony was begun at Leipsic and completed at Steinbach in June, 1894. The three instrumental movements were performed at a Philharmonic concert conducted by Richard Strauss in Berlin, March 4,1895. Mahler conducted the whole of the work in Berlin on Dec. 13, 1895.

The first performance in the United States was on Dec. 8, 1908, by the Symphony Orchestra, of New York. Laura Combs and Gertrude Stein-Bailey were the solo singers. Mahler conducted.

The Symphony is built on the large lines that characterize all of Mahler's orchestral works. It is in four movements. The performance runs considerably over an hour and a half, and thus an entire evening's entertainment of itself. In the last movement a large chorus is used. In addition to the chorus there is important solo work for contralto voice. The orchestra will be materially augmented in the brass sections.

For the contralto solo the management has engaged Merle Alcock, who has done much orchestral and oratorio work. She has appeared a number of times with the New York Symphony Society in New York and elsewhere; she has appeared as soloist in the Worcester Festival, and was one of the soloists at the recent performances of "The Messiah" by the Handel and Haydn Society. She is an American and all her training has been done in this country, but she has won success in London.

HERALD
JAN. 18, 1918

TO HEAR MAHLER

Interest in the performance of the Bohemian composer Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony, in Symphony hall, next Tuesday evening, is not confined to Boston. Mr. Gabrilowitsch will be here, and Arthur Bodanzky, of the Metropolitan Opera House, has engaged seats for himself and a party of musicians. A delegation is coming from New York, representing the Society of the Friends of Music. Reservations have also been made by music lovers in Providence, Springfield and Hartford. The performance is regarded among musicians of the country as the most important feature of its kind this season.

HERALD
JAN. 16, 1918

KNITTING AT SYMPHONY.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

I wish to heartily indorse the letter in Saturday morning's paper, signed Marion F. Brainerd, in which she expresses so admirably the sentiment of all who attend the Symphony concerts to enjoy them intelligently, toward the knitters.

I am giving every possible moment to war relief work and attend the concerts for much needed refreshment for tired nerves. At the last one a charming young woman beside me knitted industriously all through the concert, stopping only at intermission.

The slight clicking of her needles made it impossible to enjoy the music and the constant motion was anything but restful to the eye.

I feel sure it is thoughtlessness on the part of most knitters who, being, perhaps, not keenly sensitive themselves, are therefore quite unaware of the torture inflicted upon others.

ANNIE F. MORSE.

Brookline, Jan. 12.

Transcript
Jan 14 1918

Items and Announcements

In recompense for the absence of Mr. Paderewski, withdrawn by other preoccupations from the schedule of "assisting artists" for the Symphony Concerts, Mr. Gabrilowitsch will be heard at them on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week and in Brahms's long concerto in B-flat, exacting upon pianist, conductor and audience all alike. Berlioz's overture, "Les Francs Juges," long unheard in Symphony Hall, begins the programme: and Chaikovsky's Serenade for Strings—a piece in several divisions, ends it. No programme for the concert of the orchestra on Thursday evening in Cambridge has yet been handed to the newspapers. After the repeated experiences of the winter with belatedly announced programmes, it is high time that whoever is at fault in these matters bestirred himself to promptness. The public of the concerts has a right to know what it is to hear and these are not days in which orchestra, conductor or management may wisely forfeit one jot of the good will of their public.

RECORD
JAN. 14, 1918

MAE PETERSON TO SING AT MAHLER SYMPHONY

Mae Peterson is in the limelight in musical Boston and New York these days. Saturday evening she sang Mimi in "La Boheme" at the Metropolitan and gave the best performance she has yet given at that house. Yesterday afternoon she sang at the Symphony Hall concert in Boston, substituting for Mme. Louise Homer, ill. She sang beautifully in a wide rangs of songs.

This morning, following her success of yesterday, the Symphony management announced that she had been selected to sing the soprano soloist role with Mahler's Symphony Tuesday evening, Jan. 22.

With her in concert yesterday appeared Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, who gave much pleasure to a large audience.

HERALD
JAN. 18, 1918

KNITTING EVERYWHERE.

To Editor of Herald and Journal:

It is to be hoped that none of our frostbitten soldiers and sailors will hear of the Herald letter protesting against the Symphony Hall knitting. These letters could hardly fail to give an added pain to ourself-sacrificing defenders if they should learn that American women, for whose lives and honor they offer their lives, can wish to stop for an hour and a half every week the manufacture of many sorely, pitifully needed garments.

Our brave boys might well wonder that an American woman could find more "refreshment" in the movements of the baton of a well and comfortably clad subject of the Kaiser than in the motions of the needles which are working to cover the ill-protected, the freezing, bodies of our saviors.

Boston, Jan. 21. I. H. DANA.

Transcript
Jan 17, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

Impending Mahler

WHEN Bostonian ears hear Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony"—the title is not the composer's but the fancy of an admiring analyst—for the first time next Tuesday evening, Dr. Muck and the management of the Symphony Orchestra will fulfill a long-meditated purpose. Originally they planned the performance of the symphony for a concert, after the regular series was done, in the spring of 1915. The assisting chorus was then to be the celebrated Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto. It was preparing for a journey to England and Germany; it intended to take ship from Boston; and the arrangement was that in May it should join the Symphony Orchestra in two concerts—one for Beethoven's Choral Symphony and the other for this symphony of Mahler. War-time conditions put a European tour by the Mendelssohn Choir out of the question; indeed soon dissolved it; and the whole project for the performance of the two symphonies lay in abeyance until the decision last spring, in counsel with Mr. Townsend, to organize his present chorus. Singers, orchestra and conductors forthwith made ready Beethoven's symphony, with outcome in such graphic and eloquent performance that not once, but twice, the public demanded to hear it. Then they passed to the rehearsal of Mahler's music, and next Tuesday the end is expected again to crown the work.

It is easy to say, of course, that Mahler is not Beethoven; that, while the Choral Symphony is a mighty classic of music, the "Resurrection Symphony" is seldom heard either in Europe or in America. Mahler's music undergoes this fate, in part because of the exceptional forces and preparation required for the performance; in part because it still has its way to make to recurrent place in concerts; in part because the composer took his own course outside the symphonic currents of his time. None but him among the eminent composers of the last decade of the nineteenth century and the first decade of the twentieth conceived huge symphonies in which movement should pile upon movement, like some monument in tones; in which chorus and solo voices should swell the power and the range of the orchestra; in which large and elemental emotion should mount in grandiose ascent and proclamation. Mahler wrote these symphonies with the energy of an intensely nervous being, with questionless devotion to an ideal enkindled, at a time when the course of music was more and more setting to concision of substance, perfection of detail and adroit rather than massive use of means: when many a composer was seeking intimate and very personal, rather than large and elemental, impression upon his hearers. For Mahler, however, to express himself in symphonic music—unless he resolutely held himself to some other end—was to work on the largest possible scale of tonal idea, structure, method and effect. He wrote grandiloquent symphonies because fervent inclination and high ambition prompted him to them above all other. The more, then, will this "Resurrection Symphony" be strange and stimulating in kind.

Here in Boston

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge this evening, Dr. Muck and his men will play Brahms's fourth symphony, in E minor; Sibelius's tone-poem, "The Swan of Tuonela"; and a fragment of Berlioz's glowing music of Romeo and Juliet, "The Fete at Capulet's House." Mrs. Littlefield, appearing for the first time with the orchestra, will sing two familiar numbers—the coloratura air from Mozart's opera, "The Shepherd King" and the orchestral version of Duparc's song, "Phidylé"—and one unfamiliar—an air from Rameau's eighteenth-century opera, "Platée."

In New York last week, Dr. Muck and the string choir of the Symphony Orchestra repeated Händel's Concerto Grosso, as they had played it on the preceding Friday and Saturday in Boston, with the conductor seated at the piano and Mr. Witek and Mr. Habenicht as "violini concertini" on either hand. The secret of this placement of the musicians and of Dr. Muck's mingled leading and playing had been well kept. Discovering it with surprise, the audience broke into pleased applause that was still heartier at the end of the concerto. Indeed, on every occasion that the two concerts of last week in New York offered, the hearers of the orchestra and the conductor heaped them with plaudits beyond even those usually bestowed.

The American String Quartet and Mr. Gebhard, the pianist, are soon to repeat in New York, with a slight change in the programme, the chamber concert, with pieces from Franck and Debussy, that they lately gave auspiciously in this town.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

B POST JAN. 27, 1918

TRANSCRIPT JAN. 26, 1918

FLAWS IN MAHLER'S MUSIC

Symphony of Last Week Reveals the Limitations of the Composer—Gluck and McCormack Features of Coming Concerts

What will be the fate of the compositions of Gustave Mahler? Long-standing and creditable curiosity on the part of this public was satisfied, so far at least as one of the most celebrated of his symphonies was concerned, last Tuesday night in Symphony Hall. Dr. Muck then performed the 2nd symphony in C minor in a manner which more than did justice to the work. The composer would have been delighted, beyond doubt, had he been present. The audience was more than appreciative. It assembled with the enthusiasm and breadth of appreciation which are characteristic of representative American audiences. It was easily moved by the more obvious beauties of the score, and always ready to applaud. But when the roar and the smoke of Mahler's heavy instrumental artillery had cleared away, there was not very much left of the symphony.

People say that it is unwise to rush to conclusions about a new and complex work of art. Sometimes that is true and sometimes it is not true. Music may be palpably poor and palpably great. The judgments of long deliberation and scholarly research are not infrequently as far or farther astray than the white-hot impressions of a sensitive and sympathetic listener. It does not seem to us rash or thoughtless to say that the symphony of Mahler is far more remarkable for what it betrays of its composer's personal problems than for its intrinsic, lasting musical value.

As a product of a great mind and of its times, the composition is full of interest and significance. Its elements are many and disparate. It is, on the whole, old-fashioned and without originality in its themes and its harmonies. Its instrumentation is singularly ineffective in proportion to the number of instruments employed. With all the fire and conviction, the broad humanity felt in this music, it remains groping and unsatisfactory in its effect. It reaches out, usually vainly, for the great things of the spirit. It is sometimes naive and almost ludicrous in its attempts to say the big and simple or mystical and dramatic thing in an impressive manner. The mountain labors tremendously, and scarce a mouse. How is it, then, that this music has been so highly praised abroad, and not only in Germany, where the musicians are proverbially blind to their own faults and hyper-critical of the shortcomings of others?

First of all, the music lives because of the earnestness and imagination of the composer. Then because of the breadth and humanity of his purpose. Mahler does not speak of his own "resurrection," but of the resurrection of all humanity, of the brotherhood of the peoples, of understanding, love, faith in the future, even before the open grave. In this spirit he writes plainly for the multitude. We do not mean this in a contemptuous sense. He seeks for the simple, holy word. But he is led astray.

Why? First of all, as it seems to us, because of the limitations of his musically creative nature, for his invention is never markedly original, and secondly because of the spiritual limitations of his school. That school is the German school, although Mahler was a Bohemian. And that school, the most faithful reflection possible of the psychology of the German people under a tyrannical and materialistic government, was already, prior to 1914, dying of dry rot. The composer scaled his ladder. Like Strauss, for instance, he came into the arena with his share of vision and ideals. He worked like Hercules to acquire solid mastery of his craft. He climbed that long ladder step by step, and at the top found nothing but the ground beneath him. No new roads. No fresh vistas of the spirit opening before him. He knocked wildly at the door of the universe as Strauss knocked in the most audacious and imperious dream ever dreamed by a musician—his "Also Sprach Zarathusta"—and behold, it was not opened unto him. Then the German spirit, in art as in politics and social development, reacted on itself, struggled for air, for light, for freedom, and in so doing spent itself without avail, shrivelled up, retired into itself, cynical as a result of the quest. Strauss, whom we think of as a more intellectual nature than Mahler, at first struggled against this spiritual confinement, then capitulated, and in his later works went to seed. Mahler was too much of an idealist ever to acknowledge such a defeat. His burden grew heavier, he squared his shoulders to face it. Symphony after symphony of unheard-of dimensions came from his pen.

In view of the difference between the second and fifth symphonies, which have been heard here, and the authoritative and coolly reasoned accounts of some who have heard the eighth symphony, we are justified in believing that he grew stronger as a musician with the years, an abler technican, a more masterly architect of tones. But it requires more than all this to produce a great work of art. Such a work must be the result of freedom and fertilization of the spirit, and the long accretions of dreams and ideals made possible, not only by the artist's vision, but by the sentiments and ideals of the community about him. These sentiments and ideals were not to be found in the community or the artistic influences among which Mahler passed his days. He alone struggled on. Wherever he went there was a renaissance of the musical spirit, a reminder of the nobility of art and its mission to the world. But he was alone. There have been many stories, much exaggerated, as to the reasons of Mahler's death in 1911. Critical abuse, it was said, hastened his end. It was doubtless much more than the pen of a critic, favorable, friendly, or not, and a bodily ailment that sent him to his grave. His death was the end of a man who found no resting place and no fulfilment in the world. He found that which he sought, and when a man dies it is far oftener because his spirit is tired of its quest than because of delinquencies of the flesh.

It is, of course, easy to say that this is all fantastical supposition, but there are more things to be reckoned with in the career, personal and artist, of such a man as Mahler than is generally realized or believed, and a man's music is the true touchstone of his soul.

Hence there are few things more pathetic to the writer than this music of Mahler, for the reasons aforesaid, and also for the evident incongruities of his works. Even he was not guiltless of that theatricalism, that desire for the vast spectacle, the sensational effect, which found so representative an expression, for instance, in the stage effect of Max Rinehart. Dr. Muck told us once of seeing a performance of Shakspere's "Taming of the Shrew" in Germany, when Ptruchio turned cartwheels as he came on the stage, by way of showing in a novel manner his high spirits and his independence of Katherine! Well, that, too—that restless experimentation and effect for effects sake—are in Mahler's music. Not wholly unconscious characteristics, either. Mixed with all the other elements of his nature was surely the love of spectacle and sensation. He was as capable of planning his enormous instrumental effects, as plain and as crude as though achieved by the brush of a sign painter, as he was incapable of realizing the naive and ill-balanced contrast between his heroic music in the second symphony and the trivialities of the tunes that follow it.

Then there are his unconscious emulations of Brunckner, of Wagner, and even of Strauss. Mahler had to build his bricks at times without straw. Having neither the technic nor the flaming originality of Richard Strauss, he was not so successful as him when it came time to conceal a poor idea. Because of the foregoing, Mahler's art appears today as a chaotic confusion of these and other ingredients. He was rather unfortunately, we think, a literary musician. Goethe, Schiller, Shakspere, Dostoievsky and a hundred other leading intelligences possessed his mind and moulded his music. There was never a more fascinating revelation of the mind of a great man, or a picture more arresting of the substance and evolution of it. Nor must we forget, in considering Mahler, his racial eclecticism. He understood everyone except himself. He investigated all literatures and found the "liberating word" for the finale in a funeral ode of Klopstock. If he could have maintained a personality more intact, absorbed from without less, if his liberating word had been, for instance, a grand phrase of the Old Testament, then we might have had another story and a new musical speech. As it is, we must remove the hat and salute the passing of a great man.

HERALD JAN. 27, 1918

NO SYMPHONY

There will be no Symphony concerts this week, Feb. 1 and 2. The following week the soloist will be Anton Witek, concert-master of the orchestra. He will play Bruch's concerto in G-minor for violin and orchestra. The orchestral numbers will be Wallace's "Villon," which was played here in 1912, and Alfven's Symphony No. 3 in E-major. This symphony will be heard in Boston for the first time. It is said to be melodious, bright and pleasing.

POST JAN. 26, 1918

OLD PIECES BY SYMPHONY

Three Symphonies of Same Period Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, consisted of Haydn's "Surprise" symphony; Mozart's symphony in G minor; Beethoven's first symphony in C major. The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays these pieces to perfection—could play them, no doubt, in its sleep, and perhaps in the case of Beethoven's symphony without awaking the audience from theirs.

Beethoven's early symphony is inferior to either of the works by Hadyn and Mozart. It was composed when Beethoven was principally conspicuous as an imitator of the other two men. This programme, then, does not invite comment, save to remark on its inexcusable lack of variety and sameness of effect. We do not object to the fact that it is exclusively a programme of German music, but that this German music is all of a period and a kind, and that it would be difficult to find a good reason ...y Dr. Muck should have inflicted it ...a lump on a Boston Symphony audi...e.

...might be urged that the time re...ed in preparing Mahler's symphony, ...d last Tuesday night, took many ...us hours of rehearsal. But the ...n Symphony Orchestra has in its ...ory literally hundreds of compo... which it knows as well as ... the pieces played yesterday, and it could have played with just preparation.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

FIRST HAYDN; THEN MOZART; LAST BEETHOVEN

Three Old Symphonies One Upon Another—A Singular Programme Plainly Pleasuring Audience and Players—Dr. Muck's Happy Contrasts and Discernments to Diversify Such Music—The Flawless Orchestra

IF pleasure to the audience is the full measure of a concert, then was that of the Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon, wholly delightful. Three symphonies, one upon another, filled Dr. Muck's programme and eighteenth-century symphonies to boot—Haydn's in G major, with the stout chord to break the flow of the Andante and win it the label "Surprise"; Mozart's in G minor of the year near the end of his life when he was most fertile in such composition, and Beethoven's, in C major No. 1, written in his young years when he more followed models than himself. Yet in spite—or more probably because—of so singular a list of pieces, the open second balcony was filled to the last seat; not a subscriber returned tickets to be sold to chance comers, while some two hundred of these were turned away. Furthermore: from beginning to end of the concert, the audience did not spare sign of general and hearty pleasure. Few departed before the close; all applauded warmly at each opportunity; on every side there was intent and rewarded listening. By the outcome of yesterday, Dr. Muck would be well warranted to venture a second and similar experiment. After all, a conductor, if he is honest to nimself, his music and his work, does not shape his programmes with half an eye and ear on the reviewers.

The likelihood of monotony is the peril that threatens such a list. True, a symphony of Haydn does not sound like a symphony by Mozart, and even a first symphony by Beethoven ventures an occasional departure from Viennese orthodoxy of 1800. Yet all three are written in the form that such orthodoxy prescribed—the introductory slow measures at will of the composer; the first Allegro, sonata-wise; the slow movement—Andante in each piece of yesterday; the Minuet, where on quick-coming day was to stand the Scherzo, and the lively Finale—in Mozart's symphony, by exception, freer and more imaginative than the usual rondo. Thus, if the listener yesterday were minded to the formal procedures of music, thrice over he traversed the same design. Yet again, each of these symphonies is intrinsically pattern-weaving in tones for the felicity of the chosen motives flowing on the instant into melody; for the aptness, ease and elegance of the workmanship within familiar prescriptions; for the play of happy tonal fancy in figure, arabesque, modulation; for the pleasure of ordered, imaginative, adept musical sound for its own sake. Songful sentiment may warm the slow movements, grace animate the Minuets; high spirits lilt through the Finales; but of the expression of emotion, in the sense in which the word applies to the whole succeeding century of music from Beethoven through Strauss, there is none. And obviously the twentieth century does not listen to three such symphonies with the ears, minds, tastes and habits, with which the eighteenth might—and often did—hear a like programme.

Not one of Dr. Muck's hearers was more aware of these perils to his programme than the conductor himself; while it was incumbent on him to avert them by keenness and suppleness of differentiating mind and hand laid upon the three several musics. Acutely, he applied both when, for example, by choice of pace, division of periods, emphasis of accent, he made Beethoven's stouter-bodied, more amply phrased and fancifully dialogued Minuet sound rather as an anticipation of the composer's later Scherzos than as an imitation of the graceful and often purely formal measures, in such movements, of Haydn and Mozart. The Minuet of the "Surprise" symphony is no more than pretty and deft pattern-weaving. The Minuet of Mozart's symphony in E minor contrasts a flowing trio with sharp-set counterpoint before and behind it. The Minuet-Scherzo of Beethoven's first symphony takes on fuller body, larger voice, freer stride. Again in the slow movement of Beethoven's symphony, Dr. Muck persuaded the music by like imaginative and adept handling into some suggestion of the fashion in which a maturer Beethoven was to dwell upon song... idea and mood in answer upon answer ... later Andantes and Adagios. But not eve... the racing pace, the dancing rhythm and the... lightest accents of a flying orchestra could... save Beethoven's Finale from commonplace... of eighteenth-century practice. An hour... before, Haydn in a like Rondo had altogether outdone him in charm of motives, liveliness and freshness of handling.

It was these felicities of discernment and treatment, this sense of the individuality of each symphony that saved the concert from monotony and heightened pleasure to all but those who listen impatiently to any of this elder music. The charm of Haydn is homely, simple, direct—the charm of a natural, a spontaneous music flowing as easily into prescribed form as a river into smooth channel and as lightly flecked by the composer's workmanship as is the same stream by sun and breeze. Even ... hearers of 1792—for the eighteenth century did not lack sophistication—may have thought his "crashing" chord in the ... dante rather a naive stroke, though ... town-gossips — the equivalent of pr... agents in that day—made much of it. ... when he sets to variations upon his th... thus interrupted, he is cunning and me... luous beyond time and change to cl... The animation of his Finale, the smi... progress of his Minuet abide as well ... years and the fashions of music. Ha... had Czech blood in him and peasant b... no less. When Czech peasant happen... evolve into composer, his native sens... rhythm only sharpens and sparkles ... more.

In contrast with this homely and shad... less charm of Haydn in the usual pract... of his calling, with the interesting, agr... able but too rarely individual exercise ... Beethoven "upon the best models," D... Muck set the manifold beauty of the chose... symphony by Mozart. The music had no... numbered fifty measures before there wa... a hint of the quality differentiating hi... from all his fellows. He seemed as son... ful as Haydn, but where Haydn w... merely mellifluous and pleasurable ... zart lifted charm of melody into an amp... deeper, more touching beauty. Mozart ... be as simple as his fellows, but his is ... aristocratic and glamorous, not a n... and fluent simplicity. Mozart's m... sounds as spontaneous as Haydn's, b... less savors of a happy facility with mate... method, means than of an imaginativ... genuity, a very poetry of tonal fa... Haydn rounds off the "Surprise" ... phony in the ease of an old and ever-r... hand at these Rondo-Finales. Mozart ... to his and the imagination within him, ... moody and musical, permits no such ... tine. Away goes prescription, and ... Allegro shapes itself, in flowing form, ... a music as truly conditioned by the ... pulse behind, first restless and groping ... then subdued to song, as though the ... phony were of today. No doubt, ... pure genius of music, Mozart's moods ... imaginings were as spontaneous as ... melodic invention, as fertile as his ... manship. Being real genius, he may ... taken them for granted; but they e... into his music and give it a sentimen... a poetry that no pattern-weaving, how... lovely, may exhale. Had not Mozart ... such, "Figaro's Wedding," "Don ... vanni," "The Magic Flute," perhaps ... "Idomeneo" and "La Clemenza di T..., would have been impossible for him. ... Muck perceives, summons this beauty, ... never labors it. Intrinsically Mozart, d... his daily stint at Salzburg or Vienna, ... seem genius unawares.

Yet sense of all these fine contrasts ... adroit discriminations, the whole un... yet varied pleasure of the afternoon w... have been less with all the conduc... penetration and pains, had not the orc... tra been the perfect instrument it is ... these eighteenth-century symphonies. ... them, perhaps, above any other musi... seems an orchestra—to all but Dr. M... endlessly exacting ear—of impeccable ... tuosi. Where else does it sing with ... voice of sustained melody and m... phrase, with finer euphonies and ... sensitive modulations than in these ... dantes of Haydn and Mozart? Where ... it match in fleetness of pace, supple... of tone, lightness of accent, its seem... sport with Haydn's or Beethoven's Ro... Finales? Where does it attain to ... smooth articulation, bright enuncia... pliancy of modulation and gradua... felicity of contrasting or blended vo... as in the half formal, half songful Alleg... of these eighteenth-century compose...

Into the unclouded outline of the ... flows the clear, bright, changeful str... of the music. The sense of tonal be... severally and collectively in these virt... of strings and reeds and occasional b... is as just as their measure of the se... ment behind it. Usually, they are so s... and light of hand that with all th... zest for accent their mere numbers, ... acted by the necessities of twentieth c... tury concert rooms, never stays or weigh... a music written for what would now seem ... salon performance. Twenty slips may pass ... unheeded in the intricacies, the manifold ... stress and colors, the nervously fused and ... divided voices—confused, some would say—... of much music of our time. Yesterday ... with Mozart, with Haydn, with early Beet... hoven, the orchestra played a music a... clear as crystal—a very mirror for slight... est shortcoming. Yet, from end to end o... the afternoon the mirror stood speckless...

H. T. P.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

POST, JAN. 27, 1918

FLAWS IN MAHLER'S MUSIC

Symphony of Last Week Reveals the Limitations of the Composer—Gluck and McCormack Features of Coming Concerts

What will be the fate of the compositions of Gustave Mahler? Long-standing and creditable curiosity on the part of this public was satisfied, so far at least as one of the most celebrated of his symphonies was concerned, last Tuesday night in Symphony Hall. Dr. Muck then performed the 2nd symphony in C minor in a manner which more than did justice to the work. The composer would have been delighted, beyond doubt, had he been present. The audience was more than appreciative. It assembled with the enthusiasm and breadth of appreciation which are characteristic of representative American audiences. It was easily moved by the more obvious beauties of the score, and always ready to applaud. But when the roar and the smoke of Mahler's heavy instrumental artillery had cleared away, there was not very much left of the symphony.

People say that it is unwise to rush to conclusions about a new and complex work of art. Sometimes that is true and sometimes it is not true. Music may be palpably poor and palpably great. The judgments of long deliberation and scholarly research are not infrequently as far or farther astray than the white-hot impressions of a sensitive and sympathetic listener. It does not seem to us rash or thoughtless to say that the symphony of Mahler is far more remarkable for what it betrays of its composer's personal problems than for its intrinsic, lasting musical value.

As a product of a great mind and of its times, the composition is full of interest and significance. Its elements are many and disparate. It is, on the whole, old-fashioned and without originality in its themes and its harmonies. Its instrumentation is singularly ineffective in proportion to the number of instruments employed. With all the fire and conviction, the broad humanity felt in this music, it remains groping and unsatisfactory in its effect. It reaches out, usually vainly, for the great things of the spirit. It is sometimes naive and almost ludicrous in its attempts to say the big and simple or mystical and dramatic thing in an impressive manner. The mountain labors tremendously, and scarce a mouse. How is it, then, that this music has been so highly praised abroad, and not only in Germany, where the musicians are proverbially blind to their own faults and hyper-critical of the shortcomings of others?

First of all, the music lives because of the earnestness and imagination of the composer. Then because of the breadth and humanity of his purpose. Mahler does not speak of his own "resurrection," but of the resurrection of all humanity, of the brotherhood of the peoples, of understanding, love, faith in the future, even before the open grave. In this spirit he writes plainly for the multitude. We do not mean this in a contemptuous sense. He seeks for the simple, holy word. But he is led astray.

Why? First of all, as it seems to us, because of the limitations of his musically creative nature, for his invention is never markedly original, and secondly because of the spiritual limitations of his school. That school is the German school, although Mahler was a Bohemian. And that school, the most faithful reflection possible of the psychology of the German people under a tyrannical and materialistic government, was already, prior to 1914, dying of dry rot. The composer scaled his ladder. Like Strauss, for instance, he came into the arena with his share of vision and ideals. He worked like Hercules to acquire solid mastery of his craft. He climbed that long ladder step by step, and at the top found nothing but the ground beneath him. No new roads. No fresh vistas of the spirit opening before him. He knocked wildly at the door of the universe as Strauss knocked in the most audacious and imperious dream ever dreamed by a musician—his "Also Sprach Zarathusta"—and behold, it was not opened unto him. Then the German spirit, in art as in politics and social development, reacted on itself, struggled for air, for light, for freedom, and in so doing spent itself without avail, shrivelled up, retired into itself, cynical as a result of the quest. Strauss, whom we think of as a more intellectual nature than Mahler, at first struggled against this spiritual confinement, then capitulated, and in his later works went to seed. Mahler was too much of an idealist ever to acknowledge such a defeat. His burden grew heavier, he squared his shoulders to face it. Symphony after symphony of unheard-of dimensions came from his pen.

In view of the difference between the second and fifth symphonies, which have been heard here, and the authoritative and coolly reasoned accounts of some who have heard the eighth symphony, we are justified in believing that he grew stronger as a musician with the years, an abler technican, a more masterly architect of tones. But it requires more than all this to produce a great work of art. Such a work must be the result of freedom and fertilization of the spirit, and the long accretions of dreams and ideals made possible, not only by the artist's vision, but by the sentiments and ideals of the community about him. These sentiments and ideals were not to be found in the community or the artistic influences among which Mahler passed his days. He alone struggled on. Wherever he went there was a renaissance of the musical spirit, a reminder of the nobility of art and its mission to the world. But he was alone. There have been many stories, much exaggerated, as to the reasons of Mahler's death in 1911. Critical abuse, it was said, hastened his end. It was doubtless much more than the pen of a critic, favorable, friendly, or not, and a bodily ailment that sent him to his grave. His death was the end of a man who found no resting place and no fulfilment in the world. He found that which he sought, and when a man dies it is far oftener because his spirit is tired of its quest than because of delinquencies of the flesh.

It is, of course, easy to say that this is all fantastical supposition, but there are more things to be reckoned with in the career, personal and artist, of such a man as Mahler than is generally realized or believed, and a man's music is the true touchstone of his soul.

Hence there are few things more pathetic to the writer than this music of Mahler, for the reasons aforesaid, and also for the evident incongruities of his works. Even he was not guiltless of that theatricalism, that desire for the vast spectacle, the sensational effect, which found so representative an expression, for instance, in the stage effect of Max Rinehart. Dr. Muck told us once of seeing a performance of Shakspere's "Taming of the Shrew" in Germany, when Ptruchio turned cartwheels as he came on the stage, by way of showing in a novel manner his high spirits and his independence of Katherine! Well, that, too—that restless experimentation and effect for effects sake—are in Mahler's music. Not wholly unconscious characteristics, either. Mixed with all the other elements of his nature was surely the love of spectacle and sensation. He was as capable of planning his enormous instrumental effects, as plain and as crude as though achieved by the brush of a sign painter, as he was incapable of realizing the naive and ill-balanced contrast between his heroic music in the second symphony and the trivialities of the tunes that follow it.

Then there are his unconscious emulations of Bruncknер, of Wagner, and even of Strauss. Mahler had to build his bricks at times without straw. Having neither the technic nor the flaming originality of Richard Strauss, he was not so successful as him when it came time to conceal a poor idea. Because of the foregoing, Mahler's art appears today as a chaotic confusion of these and other ingredients. He was rather unfortunately, we think, a literary musician. Goethe, Schiller, Shakspere, Dostoievsky and a hundred other leading intelligences possessed his mind and moulded his music. There was never a more fascinating revelation of the mind of a great man, or a picture more arresting of the substance and evolution of it. Nor must we forget, in considering Mahler, his racial eclecticism. He understood everyone except himself. He investigated all literatures and found the "liberating word" for the finale in a funeral ode of Klopstock. If he could have maintained a personality more intact, absorbed from without less, if his liberating word had been, for instance, a grand phrase of the Old Testament, then we might have had another story and a new musical speech. As it is, we must remove the hat and salute the passing of a great man.

HERALD
JAN. 27, 1918

NO SYMPHONY

There will be no Symphony concerts this week, Feb. 1 and 2. The following week the soloist will be Anton Witek, concert-master of the orchestra. He will play Bruch's concerto in G-minor for violin and orchestra. The orchestral numbers will be Wallace's "Villon," which was played here in 1912, and Alfven's Symphony No. 3 in E-major. This symphony will be heard in Boston for the first time. It is said to be melodious, bright and pleasing.

POST
JAN. 26, 1918

OLD PIECES BY SYMPHONY

Three Symphonies of Same Period Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, consisted of Haydn's "Surprise" symphony; Mozart's symphony in G minor; Beethoven's first symphony in C major. The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays these pieces to perfection—could play them, no doubt, in its sleep, and perhaps in the case of Beethoven's symphony without awaking the audience from theirs.

Beethoven's early symphony is inferior to either of the works by Haydn and Mozart. It was composed when Beethoven was principally conspicuous as an imitator of the other two men. This programme, then, does not invite comment, save to remark on its inexcusable lack of variety and sameness of effect. We do not object to the fact that it is exclusively a programme of German music, but that this German music is all of a period and a kind, and that it would be difficult to find a good reason why Dr. Muck should have inflicted it as a lump on a Boston Symphony audience.

It might be urged that the time required in preparing Mahler's symphony, played last Tuesday night, took many previous hours of rehearsal. But the Boston Symphony Orchestra has in its library literally hundreds of compositions which it knows as well as it knows the pieces played yesterday, and for which it could have played with just as little preparation.

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 26, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

FIRST HAYDN; THEN MOZART; LAST BEETHOVEN

Three Old Symphonies One Upon Another—A Singular Programme Plainly Pleasuring Audience and Players—Dr. Muck's Happy Contrasts and Discernments to Diversify Such Music—The Flawless Orchestra

IF pleasure to the audience is the full measure of a concert, then was that of the Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon, wholly delightful. Three symphonies, one upon another, filled Dr. Muck's programme and eighteenth-century symphonies to boot—Haydn's in G major, with the stout chord to break the flow of the Andante and win it the label "Surprise"; Mozart's in G minor of the year near the end of his life when he was most fertile in such composition, and Beethoven's, in C major No. 1, written in his young years when he more followed models than himself. Yet in spite—or more probably because—of so singular a list of pieces, the open second balcony was filled to the last seat; not a subscriber returned tickets to be sold to chance comers, while some two hundred of these were turned away. Furthermore: from beginning to end of the concert, the audience did not spare sign of general and hearty pleasure. Few departed before the close; all applauded warmly at each opportunity; on every side there was intent and rewarded listening. By the outcome of yesterday, Dr. Muck would be well warranted to venture a second and similar experiment. After all, a conductor, if he is honest to nimself, his music and his work, does not shape his programmes with half an eye and ear on the reviewers.

The likelihood of monotony is the peril that threatens such a list. True, a symphony of Haydn does not sound like a symphony by Mozart, and even a first symphony by Beethoven ventures an occasional departure from Viennese orthodoxy of 1800. Yet all three are written in the form that such orthodoxy prescribed—the introductory slow measures at will of the composer; the first Allegro, sonata-wise; the slow movement—Andante in each piece of yesterday; the Minuet, where on quick-coming day was to stand the Scherzo, and the lively Finale—in Mozart's symphony, by exception, freer and more imaginative than the usual rondo. Thus, if the listener yesterday were minded to the formal procedures of music, thrice over he traversed the same design. Yet again, each of these symphonies is intrinsically pattern-weaving in tones for the felicity of the chosen motives flowing on the instant into melody; for the aptness, ease and elegance of the workmanship within familiar prescriptions; for the play of happy tonal fancy in figure, arabesque, modulation; for the pleasure of ordered, imaginative, adept musical sound for its own sake. Songful sentiment may warm the slow movements, grace animate the Minuets; high spirits lilt through the Finales; but of the expression of emotion, in the sense in which the word applies to the whole succeeding century of music from Beethoven through Strauss, there is none. And obviously the twentieth century does not listen to three such symphonies with the ears, minds, tastes and habits, with which the eighteenth might—and often did—hear a like programme.

Not one of Dr. Muck's hearers was more aware of these perils to his programme than the conductor himself; while it was incumbent on him to avert them by keenness and suppleness of differentiating mind and hand laid upon the three several musics. Acutely, he applied both when, for example, by choice of pace, division of periods, emphasis of accent, he made Beethoven's stouter-bodied, more amply phrased and fancifully dialogued Minuet sound rather as an anticipation of the composer's later Scherzos than as an imitation of the graceful and often purely formal measures, in such movements, of Haydn and Mozart. The Minuet of the "Surprise" symphony is no more than pretty and deft pattern-weaving. The Minuet of Mozart's symphony in E minor contrasts a flowing trio with sharp-set counterpoint before and behind it. The Minuet-Scherzo of Beethoven's first symphony takes on fuller body, larger voice, freer stride. Again in the slow movement of Beethoven's symphony, Dr. Muck persuaded the music by like imaginative and adept handling into some suggestion of the fashion in which a maturer Beethoven was to dwell upon songful idea and mood in answer upon answer in later Andantes and Adagios. But not even the racing pace, the dancing rhythm and the lightest accents of a flying orchestra could save Beethoven's Finale from commonplace of eighteenth-century practice. An hour before, Haydn in a like Rondo had altogether outdone him in charm of motives, liveliness and freshness of handling.

It was these felicities of discernment and treatment, this sense of the individuality of each symphony that saved the concert from monotony and heightened pleasure to all but those who listen impatiently to any of this elder music. The charm of Haydn is homely, simple, direct—the charm of a natural, a spontaneous music flowing as easily into prescribed form as a river into smooth channel and as lightly flecked by the composer's workmanship as is the same stream by sun and breeze. Even his hearers of 1792—for the eighteenth century did not lack sophistication—may have thought his "crashing" chord in the Andante rather a naive stroke, though the town-gossips — the equivalent of press agents in that day—made much of it. But when he sets to variations upon his theme thus interrupted, he is cunning and melluous beyond time and change to cloy. The animation of his Finale, the smiling progress of his Minuet abide as well as years and the fashions of music. Haydn had Czech blood in him and peasant blood no less. When Czech peasant happens to evolve into composer, his native sense of rhythm only sharpens and sparkles the more.

In contrast with this homely and shadowless charm of Haydn in the usual practice of his calling, with the interesting, agreeable but too rarely individual exercise upon Beethoven "upon the best models." Dr. Muck set the manifold beauty of the chosen symphony by Mozart. The music had not numbered fifty measures before there was a hint of the quality differentiating him from all his fellows. He seemed as songful as Haydn, but where Haydn was merely mellifluous and pleasurable Mozart lifted charm of melody into an ampler, deeper, more touching beauty. Mozart may be as simple as his fellows, but his is an aristocratic and glamorous, not a naive and fluent simplicity. Mozart's music sounds as spontaneous as Haydn's, but it less savors of a happy facility with material method, means than of an imaginative genuity, a very poetry of tonal fa[n]cy. Haydn rounds off the "Surprise" symphony in the ease of an old and ever-ready hand at these Rondo-Finales. Mozart, true to his and the imagination within him, more moody and musical, permits no such routine. Away goes prescription, and the Allegro shapes itself, in flowing form, to a music as truly conditioned by the throb pulse behind, first restless and groping, then subdued to song, as though the symphony were of today. No doubt. The pure genius of music, Mozart's moods and imaginings were as spontaneous as his melodic invention, as fertile as his workmanship. Being real genius, he may taken them for granted; but they exalt into his music and give it a sentiment and a poetry that no pattern-weaving, however lovely, may exhale. Had not Mozart written such, "Figaro's Wedding," "Don Giovanni," "The Magic Flute," perhaps even "Idomeneo" and "La Clemenza di Tito," it would have been impossible for him. Dr. Muck perceives, summons this beauty, but never labors it. Intrinsically Mozart, during his daily stint at Salzburg or Vienna, must seem genius unawares.

Yet sense of all these fine contrasts in adroit discriminations, the whole united yet varied pleasure of the afternoon would have been less with all the conductor's penetration and pains, had not the orchestra been the perfect instrument it is for these eighteenth-century symphonies. With them, perhaps, above any other music it seems an orchestra—to all but Dr. Muck's endlessly exacting ear—of impeccable virtuosi. Where else does it sing with such voice of sustained melody and melodic phrase, with finer euphonies and more sensitive modulations than in these andantes of Haydn and Mozart? Where else it match in fleetness of pace, suppleness of tone, lightness of accent, its seeming sport with Haydn's or Beethoven's Rondo-Finales? Where does it attain to such smooth articulation, bright enunciation, pliancy of modulation and graduation, felicity of contrasting or blended voices as in the half formal, half songful Allegros of these eighteenth-century composers?

Into the unclouded outline of the form flows the clear, bright, changeful stream of the music. The sense of tonal beauty severally and collectively in these virtuosi of strings and reeds and occasional brass is as just as their measure of the sentiment behind it. Usually, they are so swift and light of hand that with all their zest for accent their mere numbers, exacted by the necessities of twentieth century concert rooms, never stays or weights a music written for what would now seem salon performance. Twenty slips may pass unheeded in the intricacies, the manifold stress and colors, the nervously fused and divided voices—confused, some would say—of much music of our time. Yesterday with Mozart, with Haydn, with early Beethoven, the orchestra played a music as clear as crystal—a very mirror for slightest shortcoming. Yet, from end to end of the afternoon the mirror stood speckless.

H. T. P.

RECORD
JAN. 28 18

The Mahler Symphony

The event of the coming week in musical Boston is the production of the Mahler "Resurrection" Symphony at Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening. A great chorus, trained by Stephen Townsend and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mae Peterson and Merle Alcock as solists, will give the work.

The work is in five movements, the first three being purely orchestral. In the first the great theme is that of a funeral march with episodes of consolation. In the second movement the chief theme is a dance tune announced by strings, which one commentator has found as an ironical view of human enjoyment. The third movement, the Scherzo, was suggested to Mahler by St. Anthony of Padua's Sermon to the fishes. "The hero in manhood goes forth into the world and sees how stupidity and vulgarity, like the fishes of the legend, are incorrigible." The fourth movement is short and in this appears the alto voice against the orchestra.

Finally in the fifth and last movement, after the first tormented section, there is reference to the coming "Resurrection" motive. The chorus with soprano solo sings a capella Klopstock's "Resurrection Ode," and also continues with words by Mahler, "Oh, believe, my heart to thee shall naught be lost! Thine is what thou didst long for, thine what thou has loved, for which thou has strived!" Chorus: "With wings that I myself have won, shall I soar upward * * I shall die in order to live! Yes, my heart, thou wilt rise up in a trice. What thou has conquered will beat thee up to God." Mahler himself wrote to Arthur Seidl that he had searched literature to find the liberating word for his finale. He happened to be in Hamburg at the burial ceremony of Hans von Bulow (1894). Klopstock's Ode was then sung. Then did he find the inspiration for the finale of his Second Symphony.

Three in One

Once every two or three years Dr. Muck devotes a program to Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, and these programs are always greeted with enthusiasm by the patrons of the Symphony Concerts. Such an one he has arranged for the coming week, Friday, Jan. 25, and Saturday, Jan. 26. He will play Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, which will be followed by the beautiful G-Minor Symphony by Mozart. Then after intermission will come the First Symphony of Beethoven, that in C-Major.

This program recalls one of Dr. Muck's most famous mots in the season of 1906-07. He arranged this program for Cambridge, and great was the stir there at the idea of putting three symphonies on one program! When a protest was made to him about it he calmly asked where in the world could he play three symphonies on a program if not at Harvard University. He played them with much success.

HERALD
Jan 26, 1917

SYMPHONY GIVES ITS 13TH CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, gave its 13th concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony; Mozart's Symphony in G minor; Beethoven's First Symphony.

No doubt this program was to the passionate disciples of the ultra-modern composers the abomination of desolation. On the other hand the ultra-conservative in the audience rejoiced with an exceeding joy. There were still others, who realize that music which is beautiful is always modern. They welcome it, without regard to the century or the nationality of the composer. They go farther than those who grudgingly admit that Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven were, to use the phrase in Congreve's comedy, like Hannibal, "very pretty fellows in those days." All, of whatever party, yesterday found pleasure in the fine playing of the orchestra, and as the composers are safely dead there was no Chauvinistic scream of protest.

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week.

The program of Friday afternoon, Feb. 8 and Saturday evening, Feb. 9 will be as follows: Wallace, Symphonic Poem, N. 6, "Villon"; Bruch, Concerto for violin, No. 1 (Antin Witek, violinist); Hugo Alven, Symphony in E major, No. 3, op. 23 (first time in Boston). Wallace's music, designed to illustrate moods of Francois Villon as revealed in his poems, was played here under Mr. Fiedler. Alven is a Scandinavian composer. His third symphony was performed for the first time in this country by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. It is a favorite in Chicago, where it has been played several times by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

TRANSCRIPT, JAN. 28, 1918

Brahms's Music in Ears of 1918

Transcript Jan 28

Plain and Unorthodox Speaking from Mr. Huneker About the Composer's Present Hold Upon American Audiences

WHILE the Boston Orchestra, Dr. Muck and Mr. Gabrilowitsche were thrilling hearers last week with their playing of Brahms's concerto in B-flat, Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra were impressing audiences with the composer's second symphony. Reviewing piece and performance in The Press next day, Mr. Huneker manfully breaks a lance for the Brahms that, in spite of the pedants, the pundits and the mathematicians of music, the twentieth century, especially in America is coming to know. "It will always be a mystery to the present generation," he writes, "why Brahms was ever called a pedant, a dry-as-dust musician. He has his dull moments, but what composer has not? He is not dramatic when drama is not called for, and it may be that his choral compositions will outlive his symphonic works—which we beg leave to doubt. Notwithstanding prophecy he is at the present time on the side of the angels: i. e. he stands for all that is lofty, sound, beautiful, as opposed to operatic footlight effects. He is sometimes drab in color, but he is never brilliant in the meretricious sense.

"It was unfortunate for Brahms that, almost at the outset of his career, the famous Dr. Hanslick, a Viennese, a music critic of genuine verve and erudition, should have posed him as the antithesis of Richard Wagner. No doubt it was a tempting contrast. Brahms, the serious symphonist, the reverent follower in the footsteps of Bach and Beethoven; and Wagner, creator of musical pictures, romantic, erotic Wagner. Rubbish! You feel like crying at such false men of straw. Brahms, as his songs, symphonies, piano and violin music prove, was a poetic musician, a romantic one. He would not paint so boldly as Berlioz, but he had something to say, and Berlioz seldom has—beyond his grandiloquent rhetoric, largely manner rather than matter. As for Wagner—he knew as much as Brahms, and was hugely admired by the latter. Von Bulow set the critical pace for Dr. Hanslick, and that witty, malevolent detractor of Liszt, Wagner, Berlioz, indeed, of the entire new movement in art, music and literature, saw his chance and promptly pitted Brahms against Wagner, with the result that an entire generation has labored under the mistaken notion that Brahms was a rusty, musty old pedagogue, with bewhiskered counterpoint and a plentiful lack of melody.

"We know better, nowadays, and since the advent of the nineteenth century Brahms has had his true critical rating. The melodies in the symphony heard yesterday, and by me heard this evening, are a complete denial that he is not a romantic composer. He is. Much of Schumann and Schubert may be overheard in this score; Beethoven principally in the introduction to the last movement. Unhappily, there is no denying that the scoring is occasionally thick, even muddy, and not very effective. The opening of Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," for example, simply cries out to the discriminating ear: Behold! this is true instrumentation. It is. Berlioz was not only a master colorist in his orchestra, but a stylist, in the literary sense. Brahms was neither the one nor the other, preferring to fill classic forms with a romantic content. There has been much nonsense written about Brahms, but nothing so uncritical as to rank him with academic composers. Better the hyperbolic von Bülow and his Trinity of B's—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

Items and Announcements

As indicated in the Concert Calendar of Saturday last, Mahler's symphony of life, death, judgment and resurrection, first heard in Boston last Tuesday, will be repeated next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, with the same forces that originally accomplished it: the Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Townsend's chorus, three hundred strong: Mmes. Peterson and Alcock for the solo parts, and Dr. Muck for eloquent and masterful conductor. However the hearer may measure the music, there is no questioning the power of the choral finale; while such singing as the choir there achieves, alike in quality of tone, in expressiveness, in ease with difficulties, has not been heard in Boston in this generation of the concert-room.

HERALD
JAN. 28, 1918

SYMPHONY GIVES ITS 13TH CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, gave its 13th concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony; Mozart's Symphony in G minor; Beethoven's First Symphony.

No doubt this program was to the passionate disciples of the ultra-modern composers the abomination of desolation. On the other hand the ultra-conservative in the audience rejoiced with an exceeding joy. There were still others, who realize that music which is beautiful is always modern. They welcome it, without regard to the century or the nationality of the composer. They go farther than those who grudgingly admit that Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven were, to use the phrase in Congreve's comedy, like Hannibal, "very pretty fellows in those days." All, of whatever party, yesterday found pleasure in the fine playing of the orchestra, and as the composers are safely dead there was no Chauvinistic scream of protest.

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week.

The program of Friday afternoon, Feb. 8 and Saturday evening, Feb. 9 will be as follows: Wallace, Symphonic Poem, N. 6, "Villon"; Bruch, Concerto for violin, No. 1 (Antin Witek, violinist); Hugo Alven, Symphony in E major, No. 3, op. 23 (first time in Boston). Wallace's music, designed to illustrate moods of Francois Villon as revealed in his poems, was played here under Mr. Fiedler. Alven is a Scandinavian composer. His third symphony was performed for the first time in this country by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. It is a favorite in Chicago, where it has been played several times by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 28, 1918

WEEK-END CONCERTS

NEW IMPRESSIONS FROM THINGS FAMILIAR

Again the Three Eighteenth - Century Symphonies in Succession — As Many Classics of Chamber Music in Novel and Stimulating Voice Under Mr. Kreisler's Leadership — Finally Mme. Gluck in Fresh Discernment and Distinction as a Singer — Mahler and Miss Hempel in Prospect.

DICKENS defines the phrase "the old school" as a remark made by some of us about things which we imagine never to have been as young as ourselves. That human failing, whereby we benignly call the same things "quaint," was well met at the Symphony Concerts of Friday and Saturday by a programme wholly devoted to eighteenth-century music, uninvaded and unantiquated by any composition of the latest seeker after unprecedented sensation. That the three symphonies were novel and radical in their day; in other words, that they were creative and vital outpourings of genius is proved by the single fact that Dr. Muck has succeeded in making them an important and permanent part of his repertory in the twentieth century. There is less significance in the delight of the student on your right, pleased at the opportunity to set the two founders of the symphonic form side by side and watch Beethoven grow out of them, than in the delight of the large lady upon your left who "likes music, though she doesn't know anything about it." She declares herself charmed by the symphony of Haydn, and she is genuinely charmed in the degree of her musical capacity. It is only because the music has a "mass-appeal," a full-blooded, unsophisticated, twentieth-century practicability that it could draw the large audiences and the insistent applause of both afternoon and evening. No faint shadows of a forgotten past, no formal beatings of the air, no merely "educational" music could have passed that test. The three symphonies sounded as fresh and spirited as if they were only just conceived—and Haydn still works his little joke. Confusion to the young moderns who would have them give way to muted brass and divided strings!

As always with programmes of character, when undivided attention is thrown upon a particular music, there came a closer, more discriminate differentiation of it. So the chance was afforded to become saturated with the idiom, the symphonic formula of a period, and to appreciate the more clearly how each of three composers upset orthodoxy, and played havoc with rules. Never did the three symphonies sound more novel, and in the case of Mozart and Beethoven at least, more daring. Even in the case of Haydn, the soft, dissonant chords at the close of the slow movement must have caused reactionary resentment and protest. The delicate humor of the drum part no one could have resisted. But Haydn's playfulness sounded tame against the unshackled and conquering genius of Mozart, richly working and sparkling, at once experimental and triumphantly successful in the modulatory transformations of the superlatively lovely theme of the first movement; the shifting chromatic chords which sounded almost Franckian; the color scheme throughout, the tingling dissonances of the Finale, and the slow movement which in conception would have sounded odd and almost puzzling, had we been hearing it for the first time. As for Beethoven's First Symphony, many of us are wont to belittle it by the consciousness of what came after by the realization of what came before. For once at least, it sounded a dramatic, innovating and potent force, a very considerable advancing stride.

ning alike the "effect" that she can only half-compass with difficulty and the "effect" with no other end than the impression upon her hearers.

In compensation, Mme. Gluck can summon an ascending force of vocal line, a breadth of phrase, an amplitude of style, an intensity of sincere emotion that surprised her hearers yesterday when she undertook the broad measures, the majestic periods, the exalted speech of an old Hebrew air. At the other extreme, she was capable of the sentimental and the tonal delicacies of Massenet's "Twilight," or the merry humors of what seemed a transcribed German folk-tune. True, a music that moves so lightly as Chausson's song of butterflies, discloses a voice that in its nature is none too supple; but, again for compensation, it is only the more capable of the serenely flowing periods of a song out of an opéra-comique by the Dourlens, who wrote such pieces a-plenty in the Paris of a hundred years ago. In such numbers, skill and charm, taste and sensibility unite in Mme. Gluck's singing into a simple, yet artful felicity. A like discretion, a like sense of the intrinsic reticence and the finesse of this elder song distinguished her singing in an air from Pergolesi's old opera of "La Serva Padrona," even if a phrase here and there were hardly as bright or supple as the composer designed.

Again, this simple artfulness—to make a paradox which holds, none the less, of Mme. Gluck's singing—guides her through her cherished folk-songs. By this simplicity she feels the matter, the mood, the progress. By this artfulness, she enhances all three. A negro spiritual, such as those sung yesterday in Mr. Burleigh's arrangements, a Russian tale in tones, a Hungarian jet of melancholy, needs in the concert-room, an instinct for folk-music. Else does it either sound pale or over-elaborate. Mme. Gluck has this natural instinct; she cultivates it with the acquired arts of song. Not before in Boston has she seemed so discerning and so astute a singer as she did on Sunday. Yet she has lost hardly at all the old ingratiating spontaneity. Between both her voice ripens alike in sensuous and expressive beauty.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

HERALD
JAN. 10, 14-12

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:15
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 Singers
MERLE ALCOCK, Solo Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 11-14

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8.15
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 Singers
MERLE ALCOCK, Solo Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

RECORD JAN. 15 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8.15
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 Singers
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Solo Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

- JAN. 16, 1918 -

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:15
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 15

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8.15
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

POST
JAN. 17

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:00
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

American
Jan. 16, 1918 [LIE]

MAHLER'S TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22, AT 8:15
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
BOSTON SYMPHONY (Augmented) Orchestra
Tickets $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50
CHORUS OF 50
Trained by Stephen Townsend
MERLE ALCOCK
SOLO CONTRALTO

Advertiser
1/18/18

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STU. ENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (Met. Op. Co.), Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

TRanscript
Jan. 16, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8.00
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

ADVERTISER
JAN. 21, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow, Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 17.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 17, AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
LAURA LITTLEFIELD
SOLOIST
A limited number of tickets at GEO. H. KENT'S Bookstore and at Theatre evening of concert.
2t(A) ja 16

GLOBE
1/28/18

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Saturday Evening at 8
DR. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST
JAN. 26.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

ADVERTISER
JAN. 24.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30. Saturday Evening at 8. Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

RECORD
JAN. 17, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:00
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00

TRANSCRIPT
JAN 16-17-15-18

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
GABRILOWITSCH, Soloist
4t(A) TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
ja 16

ADVERTISER
17-18

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Aftern'n at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond
GABRILOWITSCH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

HERALD
JAN. 16-17

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 17, AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
LAURA LITTLEFIELD
SOLOIST
A limited number of tickets at GEO. H. KENT'S Bookstore and at Theatre evening of concert.

HERALD
JAN. 21, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow, Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (Met. Op. Co.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 22.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST
JAN. 17

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:15
MAHLER'S
"RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

GLOBE
JAN. 16-18-19

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
GABRILOWITSCH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST
JAN. 18-19

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
GABRILOWITSCH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

RECORD
JAN. 16, 18

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
GABRILOWITSCH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
ja16 18

JAN HERALD
16-17-18-19

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
GABRILOWITSCH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

RECORD
JAN. 16, 17 1918

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 17, AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
LAURA LITTLEFIELD
SOLOIST
A limited number of tickets at GEO. H. KENT'S Bookstore and at Theatre evening of concert.
ja16-2t

HERALD JAN. 24-26
JAN. 27, 1918

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

RECORD
JAN. 23, 26, 25

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
ja23 25 26

POST
JAN. 24

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Transcript
- Dec. 11, 1917 -

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THURSDAY, EVENING, DEC. 13, AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
HOWARD CODING, Pianist
SOLOIST
A limited number of tickets at GEO. H. KENT'S Bookstore and at Theatre evening of concert.
3t(A) d 11

Transcript
Dec. 11, 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
John McCORMACK, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
5t(A) d 11

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 21, 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat, Eve at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
MABEL CARRISON, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
4t(A) n 21

HERALD
DEC. 21-22

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8.
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Sylvian Noack, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Record. Nov. 4. [21c]

THREE GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Mixed Chorus of 350 Voices
Trained by Stephen Townsend

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 20
Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony
SOLOISTS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22
Mahlers' Second Symphony
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 26
Bach's St. Matthew Passion
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced

Season Tickets $3, $4.50, $6, $7.50 Now on Sale

Record
Dec 11, 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
JOHN McCORMACK, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
d11 12 14

ADVERTISER, DEC. 20-

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
SYLVIAN NOACK
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

GLOBE. DEC. 21-22

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. Karl Muck, Cond.
SYLVIAN NOACK
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

GLOBE. NOV. 4, 1917

THREE GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Mixed Chorus of 350 Voices
Trained by Stephen Townsend

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 20
Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony
SOLOISTS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22
Mahler's Second Symphony
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 26
Bach's St. Matthew Passion
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced

Season Tickets $3, $4.50, $6, $7.50 Mail Orders Now Public Sale, Wednesday, Oct. 31

Post. 12/22/

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
SYLVIAN NOACK
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST. DEC. 15

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
John McCormack, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 22, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
This Tues. Evg., at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.
Admission $1.00

HERALD
JAN. 22 - 1918 - JAN. 18 -

SYMPHONY HALL
This Tuesday Evening at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT JAN. 19, 1918 JAN. 17.

NEXT TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22, AT 8 O'CLOCK SHARP
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
Tickets $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, at Symphony Hall.

POST
JAN. 19, 1918

NEXT TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22, AT 8 O'CLOCK SHARP
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A Masterpiece by Bohemia's Lamented Genius"
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR

Record
Jan. 18, 22

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
'A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius'
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.) Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
JOHN MARSHALL, Organist
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50
ja18-2t

Transcript
Jan. 18-22

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
'A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius'
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

GLOBE
JAN. 22-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow (Tues.) Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
'A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius'
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

POST
JAN. 22-18

SYMPHONY HALL
This Tuesday Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (Met. Op. Co.), Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
JOHN MARSHALL, Organist
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

ADVERTISER
JAN. 15,

AMUSEMENTS

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:15
MAHLER'S "RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

HERALD
JAN. 19

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius. CHORUS & ORCHESTRA OF 500.
MAY PETERSON (Met. Op. Co.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

Transcript
- Dec. 11, 1917 -

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THURSDAY, EVENING, DEC. 13, AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
HOWARD CODING, Pianist
SOLOIST
A limited number of tickets at GEO. H. KENT'S Bookstore and at Theatre evening of concert.
3t(A) d 11

Transcript
Dec. 11, 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
John McCORMACK, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
5t(A) d 11

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 21, 1917

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2.30
Sat. Eve at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
MABEL CARRISON, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
4t(A) n 21

HERALD
DEC. 21-22

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8.
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Sylvian Noack, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Record. Nov. 4.

THREE GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Mixed Chorus of 350 Voices
Trained by Stephen Townsend

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 20
Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony
SOLOISTS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22
Mahlers' Second Symphony
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 26
Bach's St. Matthew Passion
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced

Season Tickets $3, $4.50, $6, $7.50 Now on Sale

Record
Dec 11, 1917

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
JOHN McCORMACK, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
d11 12 14

ADVERTISER, DEC. 20-

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
SYLVIAN NOACK
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

GLOBE. DEC. 21-22

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. Karl Muck, Cond.
SYLVIAN NOACK
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

GLOBE. NOV. 4, 1917

THREE GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Mixed Chorus of 350 Voices
Trained by Stephen Townsend

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 20
Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony
SOLOISTS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22
Mahler's Second Symphony
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 26
Bach's St. Matthew Passion
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to be Announced

Season Tickets $3, $4.50, $6, $7.50 Mail Orders Now Public Sale, Wednesday, Oct. 31

POST. 12/22

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
SYLVIAN NOACK
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST. DEC. 15

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft., at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
John McCormack, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

TRANSCRIPT
JAN. 22, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
This Tues. Evg., at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.
Admission $1.00

HERALD
JAN. 22 - 1918 - JAN. 18 -

SYMPHONY HALL
This Tuesday Evening at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT JAN. 19, 1918 JAN. 17.

NEXT TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22, AT 8 O'CLOCK SHARP
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
Tickets $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, at Symphony Hall.

POST
JAN. 19, 1918

NEXT TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22, AT 8 O'CLOCK SHARP
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
"A Masterpiece by Bohemia's Lamented Genius"
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR

Record
Jan. 18, 22

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
'A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius'
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.) Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
JOHN MARSHALL, Organist
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50
ja18-22

Transcript
Jan. 18-22

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
'A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius'
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

GLOBE
JAN. 22 -

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow (Tues.) Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
'A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius'
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (MET. OP. CO.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

POST
JAN. 22 - 18

SYMPHONY HALL
This Tuesday Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (Met. Op. Co.), Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
JOHN MARSHALL, Organist
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

ADVERTISER
JAN. 15,

AMUSEMENTS

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Jan. 22, at 8:15
MAHLER'S "RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY
First Performance in Boston
350 SINGERS
MAY PETERSON, Soprano
MERLE ALCOCK, Contralto
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Seats $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00.

HERALD
JAN. 19

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Tues. Evg., Jan. 22, at 8
FIRST PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON OF
GUSTAV MAHLER'S STUPENDOUS RESURRECTION SYMPHONY
A masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius. CHORUS & ORCHESTRA OF 500.
MAY PETERSON (Met. Op. Co.), SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
JOHN MARSHALL, ORGANIST
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50.

Post. Nov. 26. 1917

[blc]

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DEC. 2, AT 3

The wonderful production of the Ninth Symphony under Doctor Muck on Tuesday last won unstinted praise in all quarters and has brought requests for a repetition from many who would hear it again and from many others who were unable to secure tickets. In response to these requests a second performance of this masterpiece will be given.

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. CARL MUCK, Conductor

Three Hundred and Fifty Singers

Quartet of Distinguished Soloists

And Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 MUSICIANS)

Tickets ready tomorrow (Monday) at Box Office

- HERALD. DEC. 10, 1917 -

SYMPHONY HALL — SPECIAL

NEXT SUNDAY AFT., DEC. 16, AT 3:30

Relief Concert

For the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at

Halifax

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS and

Dr. Karl Muck, CONDUCTOR

Will Give Their Services

Madame Melba — Will Give Her Services

Fritz Kreisler — Will Give His Services

Major H. L. Higginson will give the use of Symphony Hall, and the entire gross receipts for this performance less the advertising bills will be devoted to the relief of stricken inhabitants of the city of Halifax.

Tickets $1, $2, $3 and $5. Sale opens tomorrow, Tuesday. Orders by mail acc. by checks to order C. A. Ellis, Manager, will receive prompt attention.

- AMERICAN. DEC. 10, 1917 -

SYMPHONY HALL — SPECIAL

NEXT SUNDAY AFT., DEC. 16, AT 3:30

Relief Concert

For the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at

Halifax

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS and

Dr. Karl Muck, CONDUCTOR

Will Give Their Services

Madame Melba — Will Give Her Services

Fritz Kreisler — Will Give His Services

Major H. L. Higginson will give the use of Symphony Hall, and the entire gross receipts for this performance, less the advertising bills. will be devoted to the relief of stricken inhabitants of the city of Halifax.

Tickets $1, $2, $3 and $5. Sale opens tomorrow, Tuesday. Orders by mail acc. by checks to order C. A. Ellis, Manager, will receive prompt attention.

Advertiser. Dec. 10, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL — SPECIAL

NEXT SUNDAY AFT., DEC. 16, AT 3:30

Relief Concert

For the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at

Halifax

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS and

Dr. Karl Muck, CONDUCTOR

Will Give Their Services

Madame Melba — Will Give Her Services

Fritz Kreisler — Will Give His Services

Major H. L. Higginson will give the use of Symphony Hall, and the entire gross receipts for this performance, less the advertising bills, will be devoted to the relief of stricken inhabitants of the city of Halifax.

Tickets $1, $2, $3 and $5. Sale opens tomorrow, Tuesday. Orders by mail acc. by checks to order C. A. Ellis, Manager, will receive prompt attention.

-TRANSCRIPT-
- DEC. 10, 1917 -

SYMPHONY HALL — SPECIAL

NEXT SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DEC. 16, AT 3.30

Relief Concert

For the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at

HALIFAX

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS and

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Will Give Their Services

Madame Melba — Will Give Her Services

Fritz Kreisler — Will Give His Services

Major H. L. Higginson will give the use of Symphony Hall, and the entire gross receipts for this performance less the advertising bills will be devoted to the relief of stricken inhabitants of the city of Halifax.

Tickets $1, $2, $3 and $5. Sale opens tomorrow, Tuesday. Orders by mail accompanied by checks to order C. A. Ellis, Manager, will receive prompt attention.

GLOBE, DEC. 10, 1917 -

SYMPHONY HALL — SPECIAL

NEXT SUNDAY AFT., DEC. 16, AT 3:30

Relief Concert

For the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at

Halifax

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS and

Dr. Karl Muck, CONDUCTOR

Will Give Their Services

Madame Melba — Will Give Her Services

Fritz Kreisler — Will Give His Services

Major H. L. Higginson will give the use of Symphony Hall, and the entire gross receipts for this performance less the advertising bills will be devoted to the relief of stricken inhabitants of the city of Halifax.

Tickets $1, $2, $3 and $5. Sale opens tomorrow, Tuesday. Orders by mail acc. by checks to order C. A. Ellis, Manager, will receive prompt attention.

RECORD, DEC. 10, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL — SPECIAL

NEXT SUNDAY AFT., DEC. 16, AT 3:30

Relief Concert

For the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at

Halifax

THE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS and

Dr. Karl Muck, CONDUCTOR

Will Give Their Services

Madame Melba — Will Give Her Services

Fritz Kreisler — Will Give His Services

Major H. L. Higginson will give the use of Symphony Hall, and the entire gross receipts for this performance less the advertising bills will be devoted to the relief of stricken inhabitants of the city of Halifax.

Tickets $1, $2, $3 and $5. Sale opens tomorrow, Tuesday. Orders by mail acc. by checks to order C. A. Ellis, Manager, will receive prompt attention.

Transcript. Nov. 14.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL — Fri. Aft. at 2.30 — Sat. Eve. at 8 — Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

5t(A) — n 13

Record Nov. 16.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL — Fri. Aft. at 2:30 — Sat. Eve. at 8 — Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

n15-2t

Record. Nov. 15

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL — Fri. Aft. at 2:30 — Sat. Eve. at 8 — Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

n15-2t

Post. Nov. 14.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL — Fri. Aft. at 2:30 — Sat. Eve. at 8 — Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

FRANCES NASH, Soloist

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Herald. Nov. 15.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL — Fri. Aft. at 2:30 — Sat. Eve at 8 — Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST. NOV. 4, 1917.

RECORD [copy] NOV. 30.

MONITOR NOV. 27.

THREE GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Mixed Chorus of 350 Voices

Trained by Stephen Townsend

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 20

Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony

SOLOISTS

FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Season Tickets $3 $1.50 $2 $2.50

TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22

Mahler's Second Symphony

Full Orchestra, Chorus

Distinguished Soloists to Be Announced

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 26

Bach's St. Matthew Passion

Full Orchestra, Chorus

Distinguished Soloists to Be Announced

POST. DEC. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL

THIS (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3.30

BEETHOVEN'S Colossal Choral Symphony

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

Boston Symphony Orchestra 100 MUSICIANS

FLORENCE HINKLE
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Admission $1.00

$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

HERALD Dec. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL

THIS (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3:30

BEETHOVEN'S COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

ADMISSION $1.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

100 MUSICIANS

FLORENCE HINKLE
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT. DEC. 1, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3.30

BEETHOVEN'S Colossal Choral Symphony

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS

FLORENCE HINKLE
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

GLOBE, NOV. 24.

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Three Hundred and Fifty Singers

Quartet of Distinguished Soloists

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 MUSICIANS)

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

RECORD. NOV. 30 DEC. 1.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL

Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8

Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

n30-2t

AMERICAN. NOV. 26.

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Three Hundred and Fifty Singers

Quartet of Distinguished Soloists

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 MUSICIANS)

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, Now

n28 30

RECORD. NOV. 27.

SYMPHONY HALL

Next (Sunday) Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, Now

HERALD. NOV. 26.

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Three Hundred and Fifty Singers

Quartet of Distinguished Soloists

Boston Symphony Orchestra

(100 MUSICIANS)

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

ADVERTISER NOV. 27.

AMUSEMENTS

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT NOV. 28-30

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL

Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8

Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

3t(A) n28

GLOBE NOV. 27

SYMPHONY HALL

Next Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS

Seats, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

Transcript, Nov. 27 Nov. 28. 30. 26-

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3

BEETHOVEN'S

Colossal Choral Symphony

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

350 SINGERS

FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass

Boston Symphony Orchestra

100 MUSICIANS

Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50 Now

HERALD NOV. 24-30

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL

Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8

Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

MABEL GARRISON, Soloist

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

GLOBE. DEC. 1.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL

Sat. Eve. at 8

Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST. DEC. 1

Post Amusements Dec

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL

Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8

Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST. NOV. 4, 1917.

THREE GREAT CHORAL CONCERTS — SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

TUESDAY EVENING, NOV. 20
Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony
SOLOISTS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Season Tickets $3 $1.50

Mixed Chorus of 350 Voices
Trained by Stephen Townsend
TUESDAY EVENING, JAN. 22
Mahler's Second Symphony
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to Be Announced
TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 26
Bach's St. Matthew Passion
Full Orchestra, Chorus
Distinguished Soloists to Be Announced

POST. DEC. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3.30
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS

Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
FLORENCE HINKLE
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Admission $1.00
$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

HERALD Dec. 2, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3:30
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
ADMISSION $1.00

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FLORENCE HINKLE
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT. DEC. 1, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3.30
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS

Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
FLORENCE HINKLE
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

GLOBE, NOV. 26.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Three Hundred and Fifty Singers
Quartet of Distinguished Soloists
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 MUSICIANS)
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

RECORD. NOV. 30
DEC. 1.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
n30-2[illegible]

AMERICAN. NOV. 26.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Three Hundred and Fifty Singers
Quartet of Distinguished Soloists
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 MUSICIANS)
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

RECORD. NOV. 30.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

n28 30

RECORD. NOV. 27.

SYMPHONY HALL
Next (Sunday) Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, Now

HERALD. NOV. 26.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Three Hundred and Fifty Singers
Quartet of Distinguished Soloists
Boston Symphony Orchestra
(100 MUSICIANS)
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

ADVERTISER
NOV. 27.

AMUSEMENTS

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 24-30

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
3t(A) n28

MONITOR NOV. 27.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

GLOBE NOV. 27

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
Seats, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

Transcript, Nov. 27
Nov. 28. 30. 26.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 2, at 3
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
FLORENCE HINKLE, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Boston Symphony Orchestra
100 MUSICIANS
Seats $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50 Now

HERALD NOV. 24-30

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
MABEL GARRISON, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

GLOBE. DEC. 1.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

POST. DEC. 1

Amusements Dec.

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

TRANSCRIPT, NOV 22 - 24

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Tonight at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
MABEL GARRISON, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
4t(A) n 21

Globe, Nov. 22.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
MABEL GARRISON, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Herald, Nov. 22-23

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
MABEL GARRISON, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

RECORD, NOV. 20

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
Boston Symphony Orchestra
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets at Box Office. Admission $1.00.

American Nov. 19

American Amusements. Nov. 20

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT NOV. 20, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8.15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets at Box Office. Admission $1.00.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[eee]

GLOBE, NOV. 15-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

POST, NOV.-15-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

HERALD - NOV. 15-17-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

ADVERTISER, NOV. 15

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT. NOV. 14-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8.15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale Box Office Now. $1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

POST, NOV. 14-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale Box Office Now $1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

ADVERTISER
NOV. 17.

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralt
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bas
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

RECORD
NOV. 19, 1917

AMERICAN-
NOV. 17-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 19, 1917.

RECORD. NOV. 14, 1917-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets Now on Sale at Box Office. $1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

HERALD
NOV. 14.

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8.15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office Now $1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

GLOBE, NOV. 15-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

POST, NOV.-15-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

HERALD - NOV. 15-17-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

ADVERTISER, NOV. 15

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT. NOV. 14-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8.15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale Box Office Now.
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

POST. NOV. 14-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale Box Office Now
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

ADVERTISER
NOV. 17.

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bas
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

AMERICAN.
NOV. 17-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

RECORD. NOV. 14, 1917-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets Now on Sale at Box Office.
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

RECORD
NOV. 19, 1917

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
COLOSSAL CHORAL SYMPHONY
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

TRANSCRIPT
NOV. 19, 1917.

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW
Tues. Eve., Nov. 20, at 8.15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
350 SINGERS
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office
NOW ON SALE
$1, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

HERALD
NOV. 14-

SYMPHONY HALL
Tuesday Eve., Nov. 20, at 8:15
BEETHOVEN'S
Colossal Choral Symphony
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
CHORUS OF 350 SINGERS
Trained by Stephen Townsend
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
100 MUSICIANS
FRIEDA HEMPEL, Soprano
MARGARET KEYES, Contralto
ARTHUR HACKETT, Tenor
ARTHUR MIDDLETON, Bass
Tickets on Sale at Box Office Now
$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Post-Oct. 14-1917

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.
Oct. 18—Nov. 15—Dec. 13—Jan. 17
Feb. 21—March 21—April 4
April 25
THE ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS WILL BE
Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska
Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square

Globe Oct. 14

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.
Oct. 18—Nov. 15—Dec. 13—Jan. 17
Feb. 21—March 21—April 4
April 25
THE ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS WILL BE
Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square

American Oct. 14

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.
Oct. 18-Nov. 15-Dec. 13-Jan. 17
Feb. 21-March 21-April 4
April 25
THE ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS WILL BE
Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square

Herald Oct. 14

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.
Oct. 18—Nov. 15—Dec. 13—Jan. 17
Feb. 21—March 21—April 4
April 25
THE ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS WILL BE
Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square

Transcript Oct. 13

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Dr KARL MUCK, Conductor
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.
Oct. 18—Nov. 15—Dec. 13—Jan. 17
Feb. 21—March 21—April 4
April 25
THE ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS WILL BE
Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Square.

Traveler Oct, 16

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.
Oct. 18-Nov. 15; Dec. 13-Jan. 17;
Feb. 21-March 21; Apr. 4-Apr. 25
The assisting solo artists will be Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud.
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's, University Book Store, Harvard Square.

Transcript Oct. 16-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor.
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.,
Oct. 18-Nov. 15; Dec. 13-Jan. 17;
Feb. 21-March 21; Apr. 4-Apr. 25
The assisting solo artists will be Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud.
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's, University Book Store, Harvard Square.
o14

Globe Oct, 17-20

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
EFREM KIMBALIST, Soloist.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Post Oct, 17-18-20

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
EFREM ZIMBALIST, Soloist
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Herald Oct. 18-20

Sanders Theatre, Cambridge
THIS (THURSDAY) EVENING AT 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
A limited number of tickets at Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Sq., and at Theatre tonight.

Transcript Oct. 16-19-18

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
EFREM ZIMBALIST, Soloist.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50
4t(A) o 16

Herald Oct 13-20

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. Karl Muck, Cond.
EFREM ZIMBALIST, Soloist.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Post Oct. 18-

SANDERS THEATRE
(CAMBRIDGE)
This (Thursday) Evening at 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Dr. Karl Muck, Conductor
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
A limited number of tickets at Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Sq., and at Theatre tonight.

Transcript Oct. 13-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THIS (THURSDAY) EVENING AT 8
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor.
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
A limited number of tickets at Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Sq., and at Theatre tonight. (A)

Post Nov 17-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Tickets at Box Office

Herald Nov 14-17-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Globe Nov. 3-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
FRANCES NASH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
Second Balcony Seats for Friday, 25c; War Tax 3c additional.

Herald Oct -31-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
FRANCES NASH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Record Oct, 31-Nov, 2

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
FRANCES NASH. Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
o3in2

Traveler -Oct, 24-26

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Tickets $1.50, $2, $2.50

Record Oct. 17-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor,
Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs.,
Oct. 18-Nov. 15; Dec. 13-Jan. 17;
Feb. 21-March 21; Apr. 4-Apr. 25
The assisting solo artists will be Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud.
Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's, University Book Store, Harvard Square.

Record Oct. 18-

SANDERS THEATRE—CAMBRIDGE
This (Thursday) Evening at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Guiomar Novaes, Soloist
A limited number of tickets at Kent's University Book Store, Harvard Sq., and at Theatre tonight.

Record, Oct. 19-25

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
EFREM ZIMBALIST, Soloist
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Globe, Oct, 24-25-27-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Transcript Nov. 14-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE
THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 15 at 8
Boston Symphony Orchestra
DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor
A limited number of tickets at Kent's University Book Store and Theatre evening of Concert. 2t(A) n 14

Globe Nov. 17-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Transcript Nov. 2-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
FRANCES NASH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
Second Balcony Seats for Friday, 25c; War Tax 3c additional.
4t(A) o 31

Globe, Oct. 27-

Tickets $3.00, $2.00, 50c, Gallery...
Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Transcript Oct, 30-31-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve at 8
Dr KARL MUCK, Cond.
FRANCES NASH, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Record Oct, 26-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
TICKETS
$1.50, $2, $2.50
o25-2t

Post, Oct. 24-26-27

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. Karl Muck, Cond.
Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Transcript, Oct, 19-

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
EFREM ZIMBALIST, Soloist.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50
4t(A) o 16

Transcript Oct, 24-25-26

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50
5t(A) o 23

Herald Oct. 25-26

Boston Symphony Orchestra — SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
Tickets $1.50, $2, $2.50

Transcript Oct-6, 1917

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning Next Friday-Saturday
OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Novaes
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SEASON TICKETS $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

PROGRAM—First Concert Next Fri.-Sat.—Symphony C minor, No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus" (First time at these Concerts), Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

SINGLE TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

[hee]

American Oct 4

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning Next Friday-Saturday
Oct. 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Novaes
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SEASON TICKETS $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

PROGRAM — First Concert Next Fri.-Sat.—Symphony C minor, No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus" (First time at these Concerts), Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

SINGLE TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

Globe Oct. 7

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning Next Friday-Saturday
OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Novaes
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SEASON TICKETS $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

PROGRAM—First Concert Next Fri.-Sat.—Symphony C minor, No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus" (First time at these Concerts), Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

SINGLE TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

Post Oct 7

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning Next Friday-Saturday
OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Novaes
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SEASON TICKETS $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

PROGRAM—First Concert Next Fri.-Sat.—Symphony C minor, No. 5, Beethoven, Overture "King Lear," Berlioz, Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus" (First time at these Concerts), Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

SINGLE TICKETS $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

Herald Oct 15-16-17-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor.

Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs., Oct. 18-Nov 15; Dec. 13-Jan. 17; Feb. 21-March 21; Apr. 4-Apr. 25

The assisting solo artists will be Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud.

Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's, University Book Store, Harvard Square.

Record Oct. 16-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor,

Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs., Oct. 18-Nov. 15; Dec. 13-Jan. 17; Feb. 21-March 21; Apr. 4-Apr. 25

The assisting solo artists will be Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novao, Jacques Thibaud.

Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's, University Book Store, Harvard Square.

Post Oct. 16-17-

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Eight Concerts on Thurs. Evgs., Oct. 18-Nov. 15; Dec. 13-Jan. 17; Feb. 21-March 21; Apr. 4-Apr. 25

The assisting solo artists will be Alice Allen, Howard Goding, Arthur Hackett, Ethel Leginska, Laura Littlefield, Guiomar Novaes, Jacques Thibaud.

Season tickets at Geo. H. Kent's, University Book Store, Harvard Square.

Record Oct. 10-11

Amusements

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.
o10-2t

Christian Science Monitor Oct. 8-9-10

S 9-1 AMUSEMENTS Monitor

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Post Oct 9

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5 Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

Globe

Globe Oct. 8-9-13-11-

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.

Traveler Oct. 6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript Oct 8-9-15-10-11-12-15

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.

Post Oct 8-9-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50

American Oct 8-

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.

Traveler Oct. 8-10-11-12-

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.

Advertiser Oct. 8-10-11

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2.30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.

Herald Oct. 8

Boston Symphony Orchestra SYMPHONY HALL
Fri. Aft. at 2:30
Sat. Eve. at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.

PROGRAM—Symphony C minor No. 5, Beethoven. Overture, "King Lear," Berlioz. Symphonic Poem No. 5, "Prometheus," Liszt. Prelude to "Parsifal," Wagner.

A Few Season Tickets Available.
Single Tickets, $1.50, $2, $2.50.

Post. Sept 20

[see]

Transcript – Sept 29.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall —Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall, Tel. Back Bay 1492.

1917–1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN
MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe Sept 30

Herald, Sept 20

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall, Tel. Back Bay 1492.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN
MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Record - Sept 29

Traveler, Sept 29

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony

ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

Note—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony

ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel Back Bay 1492.

American - Sept 30

1917-1918 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony

ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall.

Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe - Sept Oct 1

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal, Oct 1 - 3

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript Oct 2-3-5-6

Herald Oct - 2 - 4 - 5

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Globe Oct. 3 - 6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post - Oct - 4

SYMPHONY HALL

The SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvian Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Record Oct - 4 - 6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 2t(A) o 1

Post - Oct - 1

SYMPHONY HALL

The SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler Oct - 3 - 6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American Oct - 5

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post. Sept 20

[see]

Transcript – Sept 29.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Noaves, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall, Tel. Back Bay 1492.

1917–1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON, FRITZ KREISLER, ETHEL LEGINSKA, JOHN McCORMACK, JOSEPH MALKIN, MADAME MELBA, FRANCES NASH, SYLVAIN NOACK, GUIOMAR NOVAES, IRMA SEYDEL, HEINRICH WARNKE, ANTON WITEK, EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe Sept 30

Herald, Sept 20

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Noaves, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall, Tel. Back Bay 1492.

American - Sept 30

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Noaves, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall.

Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe – ~~Sept~~ Oct 1

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal, Oct 1-3

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript Oct 2-3-5-6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 3t(A) o3

Record - Sept 29

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Noaves, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

Note—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Traveler, Sept 29

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel Back Bay 1492.

American - Oct 1-4

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald Oct-2-4-5

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Globe Oct. 3-6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post - Oct. 4

SYMPHONY HALL

The SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvian Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post - Oct. 1

SYMPHONY HALL

The SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvian Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler Oct. 3-6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American Oct-5

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post Oct 4

SYMPHONY HALL

The SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Record Oct - 4-6

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 2t(A) o1

Globe, Sept 17-19-22

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript
Sept 17-18-19-20-21

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 5t(A) s17

Advertiser
Sept 17

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s24 29

Herald
Sept 18-19-21

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post
Sept 18-20-22

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American
Sept 17-20-22

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald
Sept 14-21

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s18 21

Monitor
Sept 22

[see]

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th Season
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript
Sept 22

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Traveler, Sept 22
Herald " 23

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Journal
Sept 24

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Monitor Sept. 29

SYMPHONY HALL
The Symphony Concerts
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post, Sept 23

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. Prices $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 23

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 Friday Afternoons
24 Saturday Evenings
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

American, Sept 23

1917-1918 87th SEASON
SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 24.

SYMPHONY HALL
The SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Monitor
Sept 24-26

SYMPHONY HALL
The Symphony Concerts
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post
Sept 25-27-29

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript
Sept 24 to 28 (5T)

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 5t(A) s24

Advertiser
Sept 25-27-29

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s25 27 29

American
Sept 25-26

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald
Sept 24-26

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s18 29

Herald, Sept 24
Traveler Sept 25

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Henrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Advertiser

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 2t(A) o1

Globe, Sept 17-19-22

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript
Sept 17-18-19-20-21

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 5t(A) s 17

American
Sept 17

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s24 29

Herald
Sept 18-19-21

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post
Sept 18-20-22

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American
Sept 17-20-22

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald
Sept 14-21

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s18 21

[9 e]

Monitor
Sept 22

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th Season
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript
Sept 22

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Traveler, Sept 22
Herald " 23

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Journal
Sept 24

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Monitor Sept. 29

SYMPHONY HALL
The Symphony Concerts
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post, Sept 23

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. Prices $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 23

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 Friday Afternoons
24 Saturday Evenings
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

American, Sept 23

1917-1918 87th SEASON
SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
100 Musicians
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Assisting Solo Artists:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall. Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.
NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 24.

SYMPHONY HALL
The SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Monitor
Sept 24-26

SYMPHONY HALL
The Symphony Concerts
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post
Sept 25-27-29

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript
Sept 24 to 28 (5T)

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 5t(A) s 24

American
Sept 25-27-29

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s25 27 29

American
Sept 25-26

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Received
Sept 24-26

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s21 29

Herald, Sept 24
Traveler Sept 25

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Advertiser

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript

SYMPHONY HALL
THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS
Beginning October 12-13
SOLOISTS:
Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.
Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 2t(A) o 1

Post, Sept 16 [Lee]

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Herald, Sept 16

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENING

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Traveler, Sept 15

1917-1918 Trav 15 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript, Sept 15

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Record, Sept 15

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 Friday Afternoons 24 Saturday Evenings

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin

Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves

I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Journal, Sept 17
Advertiser, Sept 17

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Journal, Sept 20-21

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler, Sept 17-20

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Monitor, Sept 17-21

SYMPHONY HALL

The Symphony Concerts

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Globe American, Sept 9

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN
MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES
I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

[See] Record, Sept 8.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 16

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall, Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Post-10-11-12-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript-10-11-12-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 2t(A) s 10

American, Sept 16

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Herald-10-11-12-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler-10-11-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

The Symphony Concerts

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal-10-11-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Record-10-11-13

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Wittek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s10-2t

Globe-10-11-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American, 11-15

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Wittek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s8 11

Journal, Sept 17

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Traveler-10-11

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American-10-11-12-15

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Globe American, Sept 7

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN
MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES
I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Record, Sept 8.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 16

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall, Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Post-10-11-12-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Transcript 10-11-12-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. 2t(A) s 10

Herald-10-11-12-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler-10-11-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

The Symphony Concerts

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal-10-11-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Record-10-11-13

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Wittek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s10-2t

American 11-15

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Wittek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s8 11

Globe-10-11-13-14

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler-10-11

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American-10-11-12-15

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

American, Sept 16

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Journal, Sept 17

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

Mabel Garrison
Fritz Kreisler
Ethel Leginska
John McCormack
Joseph Malkin
Madame Melba
Frances Nash
Sylvain Noack
Guiomar Noaves
I. J. Paderewski
Irma Seydel
Heinrich Warnke
Anton Witek
Efrem Zimbalist

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

[bee]

Transcript Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. (A)

American Sept 4-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald Sept 4-5-6-7

AMUSEMENTS

The Symphony Concerts

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Karnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Record Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal, Sept 8.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Advertiser 8.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Wittek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s8 11

Monitor 8

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th Season

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Traveler Sept 8

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript, Sept 8

1917–1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Herald, Sept 9.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Post, Sept 9.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON
FRITZ KREISLER
ETHEL LEGINSKA
JOHN McCORMACK
JOSEPH MALKIN

MADAME MELBA
FRANCES NASH
SYLVAIN NOACK
GUIOMAR NOVAES

I. J. PADEREWSKI
IRMA SEYDEL
HEINRICH WARNKE
ANTON WITEK
EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

[bee]

Transcript
Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. (A)

American
Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal
Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald
Sept 4-5-6-7

AMUSEMENTS

The Symphony Concerts

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Karnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Record
Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Journal, Sept 8,

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Advertiser 8.

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Wittek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall. s8 11

Monitor 8

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th Season

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets for both series now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript, Sept 8

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	MADAME MELBA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
FRITZ KREISLER	FRANCES NASH	IRMA SEYDEL
ETHEL LEGINSKA	SYLVAIN NOACK	HEINRICH WARNKE
JOHN McCORMACK	GUIOMAR NOVAES	ANTON WITEK
JOSEPH MALKIN		EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript Sept 8

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	MADAME MELBA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
FRITZ KREISLER	FRANCES NASH	IRMA SEYDEL
ETHEL LEGINSKA	SYLVAIN NOACK	HEINRICH WARNKE
JOHN McCORMACK	GUIOMAR NOVAES	ANTON WITEK
JOSEPH MALKIN		EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Herald, Sept 9.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	MADAME MELBA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
FRITZ KREISLER	FRANCES NASH	IRMA SEYDEL
ETHEL LEGINSKA	SYLVAIN NOACK	HEINRICH WARNKE
JOHN McCORMACK	GUIOMAR NOVAES	ANTON WITEK
JOSEPH MALKIN		EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Post, Sept 9.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

Boston Symphony Orchestra

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	MADAME MELBA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
FRITZ KREISLER	FRANCES NASH	IRMA SEYDEL
ETHEL LEGINSKA	SYLVAIN NOACK	HEINRICH WARNKE
JOHN McCORMACK	GUIOMAR NOVAES	ANTON WITEK
JOSEPH MALKIN		EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

[838]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Advertising. 1917-1918.

Transcr, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Record, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Monitor, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th Season

Symphony Concerts

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript. Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
BECINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Advertiser Sept 1-3

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Journal, Sept 1-3

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Globe. Sept 2-3

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Mgr., Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Post — Sept 2

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 27th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

American, Sept 2

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Herald, Sept 2.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 Friday Afternoons 24 Saturday Evenings
Beginning October 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

Note—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe
Sept 4-5-6-7-8

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald
Sept 4-5-6-7-8

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post.
Sept 4-5-6-7-8

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler
Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

[see]

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Advertising. 1917-1918.

Traveler, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Record, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Monitor, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th Season

Symphony Concerts

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noack, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efrem Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript, Sept 1

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Transcript, Sept 1-3

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Tel. Back Bay 1492.

Globe, Sept 2-3

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS
24 SATURDAY EVENINGS

Beginning October 12-13

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA

100 Musicians

Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

Assisting Solo Artists:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guimar Noaves, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Season Tickets now on Sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Mgr., Symphony Hall, Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Post—Sept 2

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

American, Sept 2

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 FRIDAY AFTERNOONS 24 SATURDAY EVENINGS
BEGINNING OCTOBER 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60.

NOTE—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Herald, Sept 2.

1917-1918 SYMPHONY HALL 37th SEASON

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

24 Friday Afternoons 24 Saturday Evenings
Beginning October 12-13

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DR. KARL MUCK, Conductor

ASSISTING SOLO ARTISTS

MABEL GARRISON	SYLVAIN NOACK
FRITZ KREISLER	GUIOMAR NOVAES
ETHEL LEGINSKA	I. J. PADEREWSKI
JOHN McCORMACK	IRMA SEYDEL
JOSEPH MALKIN	HEINRICH WARNKE
MADAME MELBA	ANTON WITEK
FRANCES NASH	EFREM ZIMBALIST

SUBSCRIBE NOW

Season Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall—Prices: $15, $24, $36, $48, $60

Note—Applications for tickets by mail should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Manager, Symphony Hall. Telephone Back Bay 1492.

Globe
Sept 4-5-6-7-8

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Herald
Sept 4-5-6-7-8

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Post.
Sept 4-5-6-7-8

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

Traveler
Sept 4-5-6-7

SYMPHONY HALL

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

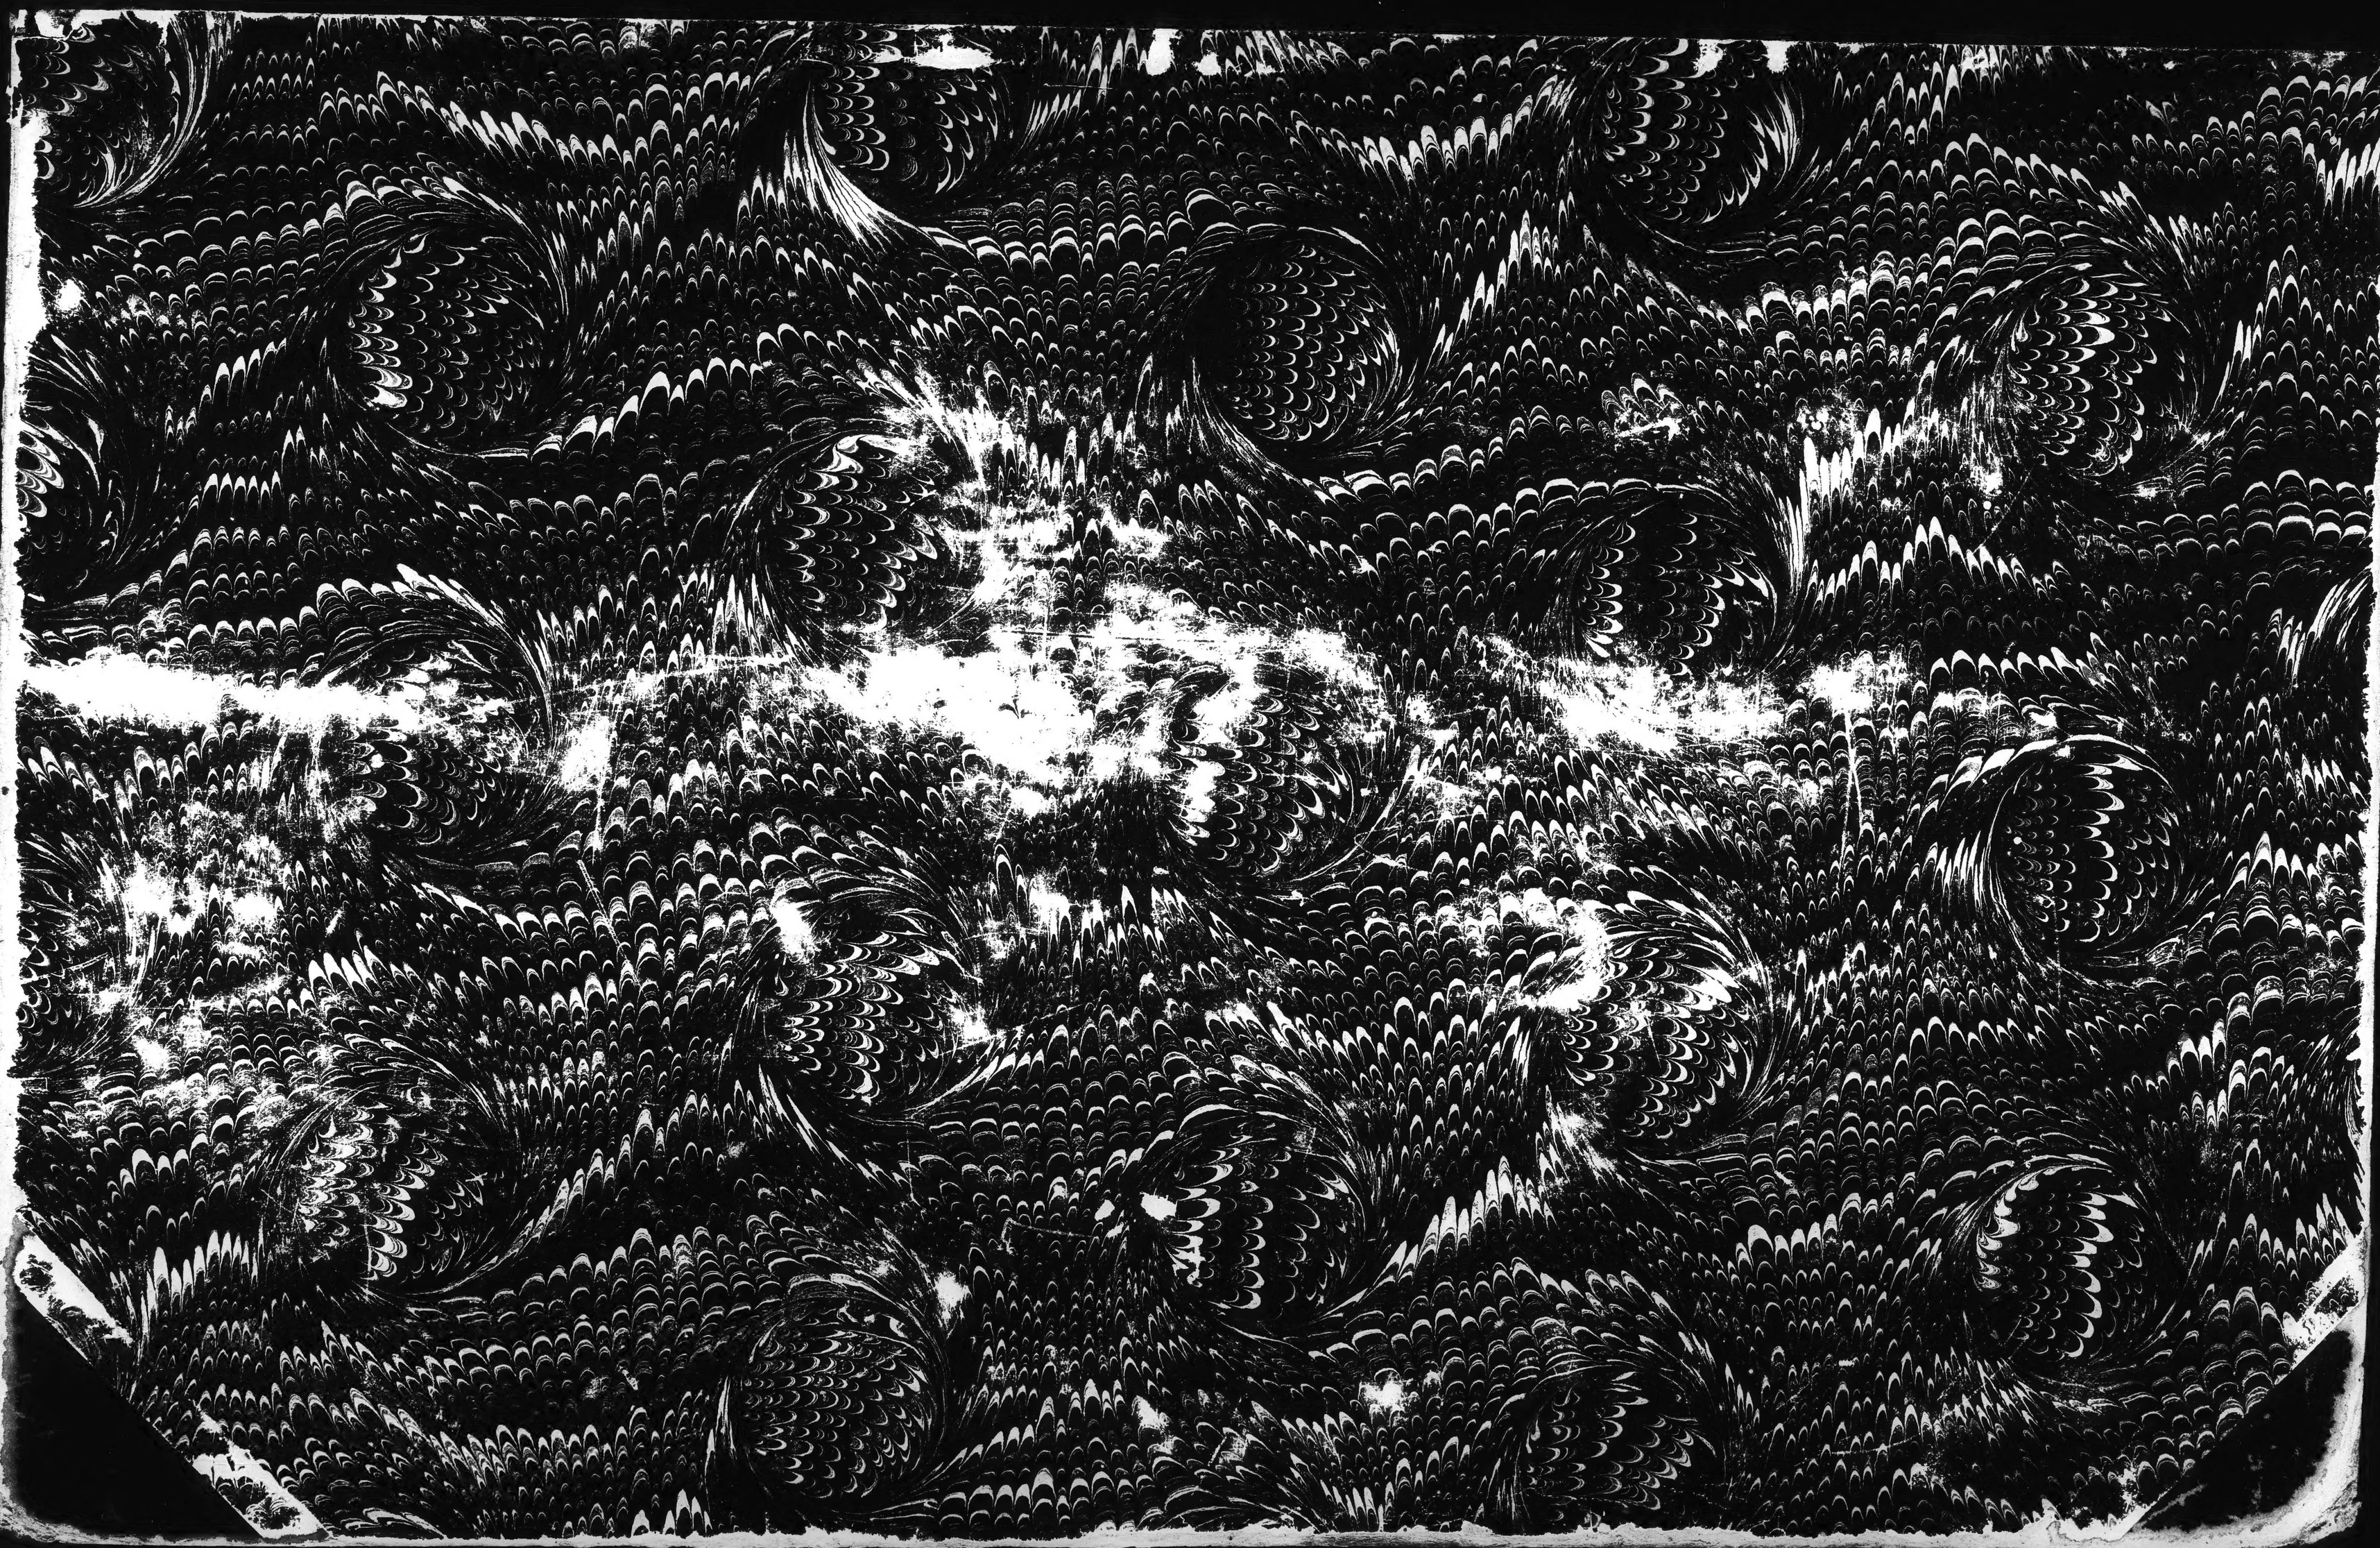
Beginning October 12-13

SOLOISTS:

Mabel Garrison, Fritz Kreisler, Ethel Leginska, John McCormack, Joseph Malkin, Madame Melba, Frances Nash, Sylvain Noak, Guiomar Novaes, I. J. Paderewski, Irma Seydel, Heinrich Warnke, Anton Witek, Efram Zimbalist.

Tickets for both series now on sale at Symphony Hall.

BLANK PAGE



END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE

REWIND